The plaintiff in this action seeks to compel the defendant to specifically perform a certain written contract, alleged to have been duly subscribed and executed by the plaintiff, and duly subscribed and executed on the part of the defendant by one C. Sangalli, thereunto duly authorized by an instrument in writing theretofore duly executed and subscribed by the defendant, by the terms of which the defendant agreed to sell and convey to the plaintiff certain real estate consisting of 160 acres in Ward county. At the time of trial there was another action pending relative to the land in

And a contract existing between a partnership and a steel company, by which the partnership was constituted a selling agent, is terminated by the dissolution of the partnership. Meysenburg v. Littlefield, 185 Fed. 184.

So, an automobile company entering into a contract with a partnership for handling its machines, relying upon the qualifications of one of the partners as a salesman, is entitled to the personal services of such partner, and, upon dissolution of the firm, may abandon its contract. Wheaton v. Cadillac Automobile Co. 143 Mich. 21, 106 N. W. 399.

And a principal employing two persons as joint agents to take charge of a building for a year may terminate the agency before the expiration of that time in case one of the parties becomes incapacitated by reason of an accident. Salisbury v. Brisbane, 61 N. Y. 617.

And a contract to furnish a carriage for a given time, made with one by name, without knowledge that such person had a partner, cannot be enforced for the remainder of the period, where the partnership is dissolved, and the one with whom the contract was made assigns all of his interest to the unknown partner, since the contract is personal. Robson v. Drummond, 2 Barn. & Ad. 303.

The mere change of a firm's name, however, will not annul its authority as agent, where the same persons compose the new firm, Billingsley v. Dawson, 27 Iowa, 210. The court said: "The confidence or trust of agency was reposed in the individuals having the interest and bearing the relation of partners, and not in the name they had assumed. So long as the interest and relation remain unchanged, they might properly exercise the powers conferred by the principal, although they did it under another name. The counterpart of this proposition would be equally true; to wit, that other individuals, although under the same name as that of the agents when constituted such, would not have the authority to bind the principal. To illustrate a little further, A. B. makes John Smith his agent; but the agent, being anxious to obtain a name affording some index to his individuality, procures an act of the legislature or an order of court . . . changing his name to John Short, or any other. Does he thereby lose his powers as agent, or may they be exercised by some other John Smith? We think not."

Where dissolution results from death.

The same result is reached where the dissolution is brought about by the death of a partner.

Thus, the death of one of two partners authorized to receive insurance premiums terminates the relation, and the principal is not bound by the subsequent acts of the surviving member. Martine v. International L. Ins. Soc. 53 N. Y. 339, 13 Am. Rep. 529. The court said: "The death of one member of a firm operates immediately and inevitably as a dissolution. . . . During the existence of a partnership, each member is deemed to be authorized to transact any business for the firm; but upon dissolution this authority ceases, and the only authority of the survivor is to close up the business. He has no right to create new obligations, nor, indeed, to do anything in the name of the firm, except such as is necessary in adjusting and closing its concerns. . . . It is a general rule of the common law that an authority by a principal to two persons to do an act is joint, and the act must be concurred in by both. . . . When a firm is appointed to an agency, this rule would necessarily be modified to the extent that either member of a firm could do any act within the scope of the agency, the same as he could controversy, in which defendant George J. Newman was plaintiff, and Sangalli and plaintiff, Larson, were defendants. They stipulated that the rights of the parties to said action would be determined by the judgment in the case at bar. The trial court made findings, and entered judgment dismissing this action, canceling the contract alleged to have been entered into, and awarding the respondents possession of the real estate in controversy, and ordered $100 attorney fees to be taxed in favor of the respondents and against the plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and demands a review of the entire case in this court. The facts which are material to the determination of the questions involved are as follows: On August 24, 1904, the defendant, who was then, and his heir at law now is, the owner of the real estate in question, listed the same for sale with the firm of C. Sangalli & Company, consisting of three members, real estate agents at Berthold. The listing contract is as follows:

Agent's Authority to Sell Land.

Berthold, N. Dak., August 24, 1904.

I hereby constitute and appoint C. Sangalli & Co., of Berthold, N. D., my exclusive agent to sell the following described lands: The northwest quarter of section 2 in township No. 155 of range No. 86, county of Ward, state of N. Dak. My net price to you on this land is $1,700. I want $1,200 paid down, and will allow the balance to be paid in balance mtge. to be assumed by purchaser, annual payments, with interest at the rate of — per cent per annum, and I hereby agree to pay you a commission of — of said net price, and in case of sale to furnish at my own expense a complete abstract of title, and to convey the above-described premises by a good and sufficient deed or deeds of conveyance. Notify me if perform any other partnership act. By appointing a partnership firm it would be implied that the authority was joint and several. But, upon dissolution of the firm, such an agency would cease. This is the necessary result of the principles alluded to. The principal would not be bound by the act of a surviving member of a firm, because he had never appointed him to act, nor agreed to be responsible for his acts; and the latter could incur no obligation against the deceased member or his representatives."

And likewise a commission of authority to act as insurance agents, issued to two jointly, is terminated by the death of one, and a subagent of the survivor derives no authority from his appointment. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Wilcox, 57 Ill. 180.

So, the estate of one who was a member of a law partnership is not liable for money collected by the surviving partner after deceased's death, since the agency terminated at the member's death. Johnson v. Wilcox, 25 Ind. 182.

And there are dicta in Davidson v. Provost, 35 Ill. App. 126, and Rowe v. Rand, 111 Ind. 206, 12 N. E. 377, that the death of one partner renders the further execution of agency impossible, and therefore terminates it.

Where authority was conferred upon two jointly to place the principal's name on a note as security, and there was no proof of a partnership, the court in Gilman v. Kibler, 5 Humph. 19, said that it would be difficult to maintain that the survivor could execute the power. The question in case a partnership should be established, however, was not determined.

A case is taken out of the general rule where, after the death of one of a firm of two architects, authorized to superintend the construction of a building, the other is recognized as having authority to continue 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the supervision. Davidson v. Provost, 35 Ill. App. 126.

The case of Smith v. Hill, 13 Ark. 178, does not appear to be in entire harmony with the general rule. It was held in this case that a contract with a firm of attorneys for the services of a particular partner at a stipulated fee could not be broken by the client upon such partner's death, without a tender to the survivor of a fair compensation for the services then rendered; and that, if the survivor rendered the full service with ordinary professional skill, he might recover the entire fee. The court said: "When, then, the nature of the attorney's employment is considered, and it is remembered that the engagement of the attorney, with its legal incidents, is the consideration of the contract for the fee . . . that every step thenceforward in the preparation of the cause for trial, either in examination of the law, consultation, or otherwise, is part performance of the contract, and that the firm was legally bound for due professional diligence and skill on the part of the individual partner whose services were contracted for, we are of opinion that, on the death of this partner, after the contract for his services, and before the trial term, it was not competent at that term—as was attempted in this case—for the client to refuse the services of the surviving partner without an actual tender of a fair compensation for the professional engagement made and aid already rendered under the responsibilities of the law; and consequently that the surviving partner, under such circumstances, had a right to tender and to render the services at his own risk, and, if rendered, and they could not be justly assailed for falling below the standard of due professional skill and diligence,—and they have not been thus assailed in this case,—that he would be entitled to the entire fee."

you get offer of $1,600. Gen'l Delivery, Chicago, Ills. 86 acres broken. This authority to remain in force for the period of 2 months from date, and to continue in force thereafter until I shall have served 15 days' notice of cancelation upon C. Sangalli & Co., my herein constituted agent.

George J. Newman.

Mtge. $500, 10 per cent. Due 8—20—08.

Immediately after making the agency contract, defendant left the state, and his residence was unknown to Sangalli & Company until about July 1, 1906, when Sangalli received a letter from him, asking if he had any chance to sell the land, how crops were looking, etc., giving his address as New York city. In the meantime, and before the contract in question for the sale of the land was entered into, the firm of Sangalli & Company was dissolved, and the business was continued by C. Sangalli, which dissolution was unknown to defendant. On the 31st day of August, 1905, and after the dissolution of the firm of C. Sangalli & Company, C. Sangalli, claiming under said contract to be the agent of defendant, entered into a contract with plaintiff, as follows:

Earnest-Money Contract of Sale.

Berthold, N. Dak., August 31, 1905.

Received of Charles G. Larson one hundred dollars (\$100) as earnest money, and in part payment for the purchase of the following described property situated in the county of Ward and state of North Dakota, viz.: The northwest quarter section No. two (N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 2), in township one hundred and fifty-five (155) north, of range eighty-six (86) west. Containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, more or less, according to the United States government survey thereof. Which I, as duly authorized agent of George J. Newman, the owner of the above-described real estate, sold and agreed to convey to said Charles G. Larson for the sum of one thousand and eight hundred dollars (\$1,800), on terms as follows, viz.: One hundred dollars (\$100) in hand paid, as above, and \$1,200 November 30, 1905; \$500 mortgage to be assumed by the purchaser, payable on or before the dates as named above, or as soon thereafter as a warranty deed conveying a good title to said land is tendered, time being considered of the essence of this contract. And it is agreed that if the title to said premises is not good and cannot be made good within one year from date hereof, this agreement shall be void, and the above one hundred dollars (\$100) refunded. But if the title to said premises is now good, in his name, or can be made good within one year, and said purchaser refuses to accept the same, said one hundred dollars (\$100) shall be forfeited to the said C. Sangalli. But it is agreed and understood by all parties to this agreement that said forfeiture shall in no way affect the rights of either party to enforce the specific performance of this contract.

George P. Newman,

By C. Sangalli, Agent. [Seal.]

I hereby agree to purchase the said property for the price and upon the terms above mentioned, and also agree to the conditions of forfeiture and all other conditions therein expressed.

Charles G. Larson. [Seal.]

..... the undersigned, owner of the above-described land, do hereby ratify the above sale and agreement.

..... [Seal.]

On receipt by Mr. Sangalli of the letter hereinbefore mentioned, he sent defendant a copy of the contract of sale, and also a deed for his signature, to which he replied as follows:

New York, July 21, 1906.

Friend Charles:—

In the earnest-money contract it says 190' payable on or before the dates as named above, etc. Now I don't know what that 190' is or what it is for. I had a notary public look at it and he did not understand it. He told me to write and have it explained. Now Charles, I have almost entirely forgotten the conditions of the contract I made with you; I did not think when I made it that you would find a buyer and now it is almost two years ago and the land certainly went up a little in that time. Now Charles, between you and me and the fence post, don't you think we could make Larson come up a little more on the price; he wants the land because it is handy to Parker. Sound him and tell me what you think of it. Now tell me what your commission is, and who pays it, Larson or I. Tell me if Larson is on the place this year. Let me know what taxes I had to pay last year, and if Stevenson has paid my interest to the Second National Bank of Minot. Now Charles, that is asking a good deal of you but I hope you will do it. Remember your commission will be all right. If there is not any other land handy he will come up. All right.

Now Charles, this is between you and me only. I wrote to Stevenson last summer; it looks funny he could not tell you my address. Now you know how land is selling better than I do. If you work for my best interest I will be thankful and a little more.

Yours very truly,

Geo. J. Newman.

Address as before.

At the time of the alleged sale, the land in question was rented for a term which would expire about November 1, 1906. Plaintiff made no payment, and took no possession of said premises, until the fall of 1906, when he put some grain into a granary on the premises. After the commencement of this action a stipulation was entered into between plaintiff and defendant, by the terms of which the plaintiff was to farm the land during the season of 1907 without it interfering with the rights of any of the parties to this action. On or about the 1st day of October, 1906, defendant returned to Berthold, when Sangalli and the plaintiff requested him to execute a deed for the land, which he failed and refused to do. The plaintiff then deposited $1,200 in a bank at Berthold, with instructions to turn it over to defendant upon his executing a sufficient deed of warranty conveying to plaintiff the said land. He also notified defendant in writing of the deposit. After the commencement of this action, defendant died, and upon the trial his administrator, Frank Newman, and his sole heir, Ann Newman, were by stipulation substituted as parties defendant.

Is the contract of sale herein mentioned defendant's contract? It was not signed by him in person. Plaintiff contends that Sangalli had authority, under the written agency contract, to sell, and make an executory contract binding upon defendant, and further claims that he, by his letters to Sangalli dated June 29 and July 21, 1906, and by other actions, ratified the contract of sale made for him by Sangalli to plaintiff. On the other hand, respondent contends that said contract of agency only conferred upon Sangalli & Company the authority ordinarily possessed by real estate brokers, and that it did not empower them to make a written contract which would bind defendant; that even if it did create an agency to sell and contract in defendant's name, the contract executed by Sangalli is not binding on defendant, for whatever power the agency contract conferred was in Sangalli & Company, which was a copartnership composed of three members, and was dissolved before the sale contract herein mentioned was executed between Sangalli and plaintiff, and, further, that the terms of sale stated in the agency contract were $1,200 cash and the assumption of a $500 mortgage which was then on 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the premises; while the contract entered into between Sangalli and plaintiff was for $100 cash and $1,200 payable on the 30th day of November, 1905, which was three months after the contract was made; the plaintiff to assume the $500 mortgage. Appellant cites a large number of cases to sustain his contention that Sangalli under the agency contract hereinbefore mentioned, had power to execute the contract of sale, and that it was valid and binding upon defendant. Under our view of the case it is not necessary to pass upon this contention, as we are agreed that whatever authority was conferred upon Sangalli & Company by the agency contract was terminated upon the dissolution of the copartnership, and Sangalli had no further power under that contract. Martine v. International L. Ins. Soc. 53 N. Y. 339, 13 Am. Rep. 529; Johnson v. Wilcox, 25 Ind. 182. The sale contract was unauthorized, void, and not binding upon the defendant for the reason that the terms of sale therein set forth were materially different from those required by the agency contract, in that the agency contract required the $1,200 to be paid in cash, while the sale contract gave three months' time for the payment of said sum. It also contains some provisions regarding title to the land, the forfeiture of $100 to Sangalli in case the plaintiff refused to accept same, and some other provisions not contained in the agency contract. The sale by an agent on any other terms and conditions than those authorized by the principal is not binding on the latter. De Sollar v. Hanscome, 158 U. S. 216, 39 L. ed. 956, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 816; Holbrook v. McCarthy, 61 Cal. 216; Speer v. Craig, 16 Colo. 478, 27 Pac. 891; Taylor v. White, 44 Iowa, 295; Veeder v. McMurray (Iowa) 23 N. W. 285; Siebold v. Davis, 67 Iowa, 560, 25 N. W. 778; Dayton v. Buford, 18 Minn. 126, Gil. 111; Jackson v. Badger, 35 Minn. 52, 26 N. W. 908; National Iron Armor Co. v. Bruner, 19 N. J. Eq. 331. And, unless defendant ratified the contract of sale entered into between Sangalli and the plaintiff, the judgment of the district court must be affirmed, except as to attorney fees of $100.

Appellant contends that the defendant Newman ratified the contract of sale by his letters to Sangalli dated June 29 and July 21, 1906, hereinbefore referred to, and also by his conversation and conduct after his return to Berthold in the fall of 1906. The letter written to Sangalli by defendant on June 29, 1906, only refers to the land as follows: "Let me know if you had any chance to sell that land and how crops are looking and all the news in general." In answer to this letter, Sangalli sent him a copy of the contract of sale, and also deed for his signature. In reply thereto, defendant wrote the letter in which he stated that he had received the earnest-money contract, part of it he did not understand, and had a notary public look at it, who did not understand it, and asked him to write and have it explained. And then goes on to say: "Now Charles, I have almost entirely forgotten the conditions of the contract I made with you. I did not think when I made it that you would find a buyer, and now it is almost two years ago, and the land certainly went up a little in that time. Now Charles, between you and me and the fence post, don't you think we could make Larson come up a little more on the price; he wants the land because it is handy to Parker. Sound him and tell me what you think of it. Now tell me what your commission is, and who pays it, Larson or I. Tell me if Larson is on the place this year. Let me know what taxes I had to pay last year, and if Stevenson has paid my interest to the Second National Bank of Minot. Now Charles, that is asking a good deal of you, but I hope you will do it. Remember your commission will be all right. Now Charles, this is between you and me only." This letter, which is the one principally relied upon by appellant, is, in our opinion, far from a ratification of the sale contract. It does not state that he will consummate the sale, or that he is satisfied with it, or that Sangalli was authorized to make it; neither did he execute the deed sent him by Sangalli. On his return to Berthold in the fall of 1906 he repudiated the contract, and refused to carry out its terms. True, plaintiff testified that, in a conversation he had with Newman after his return to Berthold, he promised to go to Minot the next day and fix up the deal on the terms of the sale contract. This testimony was seasonably objected to by respondents, and was inadmissible under the statute which deprives a party to an action against the heirs or representatives of a deceased to testify as to conversations or transactions had with the said deceased. Rev. Codes 1905, § 7252; Hutchinson v. Cleary, 3 N. D. 270, 55 N. W. 729; Regan v. Jones, 14 N. D. 591, 105 N. W. 613. The trial court allowed attorney fees at $100. This was error, and that amount must be deducted from the costs taxed in the district court, and the judgment modified to that extent.

The judgment as modified is affirmed.

All concur.

Petition for rehearing denied May 15, 1909.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TEXAS COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS.

EX PARTE FRANK A. SMYTHE.

(— Tex. Crim. App. —, 120 S. W. 200.)

Appropriations — abandoned wife — fine.

1. A statute directing the payment to a wife of a fine imposed upon her husband for abandoning her violates a constitutional provision that no appropriation for private or individual purposes shall be made.

Sentence — suspending — abandoning wife — payments.

2. A constitutional provision that no power of suspending laws shall be exercised except by the legislature is violated by a statute permitting the court to release from custody one convicted of abandoning his wife, upon his entering into a recognizance to pay her a weekly sum.

Jury — abandoning wife — fine.

3. A statute permitting the court, instead of imposing the fine provided for abandoning one's wife, or in addition thereto, to require the husband to pay her a certain sum weekly, deprives him of his constitutional right to trial by jury.

(Ramsey, J., dissents.)

(May 12, 1909.)

A PPEAL by petitioner from an order of the Criminal District Court for Harris County dismissing a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to secure the re-

Case Note. — Constitutionality of statute requiring a husband, upon conviction of abandonment, to provide for support of wife or family.

The unconstitutionality of the statute under consideration in RE SMYTHE was reaffirmed in Burch v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 120 S. W. 206.

It was held in People v. Stickle, 156 Mich. 557, 121 N. W. 497, that the executive pardoning power was not invaded by a statute providing that, upon conviction of a husband who shall desert and abandon his wife or minor children without providing for their necessities, shall be imprisoned, unless he shall enter into a bond conditioned to furnish them with necessary and proper shelter, food, care, and clothing, whereupon the court may suspend sentence, as the jurisdiction thereby conferred upon the court was simply the well-recognized judicial power to suspend sentence. The court said that such power and the power to grant pardons are distinct and different in origin and nature, and that it has never been supposed that the power to suspend sentence is other than a judicial function.

Nor does such statute interfere with or impose conditions upon the judicial power of the court to impose sentence. Ibid.

lease of petitioner from custody to which he had been committed for abandoning his wife. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. K. C. Barkley for appellant.

Mr. F. J. McCord for the State.

Brooks, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Relator was arrested on a capias issued upon an indictment returned into the criminal district court of Harris county, wherein relator was charged, in substance, with unlawfully and wilfully and without cause abandoning his wife. He made application for writ of habeas corpus to Hon. J. K. P. Gillaspie, judge of said court, which having been refused by him, relator filed his petition in this court, seeking release.

We do not deem it necessary to state seriatim the insistences upon which relator predicates his release in this case, but suffice it to say that all of his positions raise the question as to the constitutionality and validity of the abandonment of wife or children statute to be found in Acts 30th Legislature, 1907, chap. 62, p. 133. We hold that said act is totally invalid. It will be seen from an inspection of said act that, after relator is fined under the same, said fine shall be paid into court for the benefit of the wife, or to the guardian or custodian of the minor child or children. Section 6, art. 16, of the state Constitution, reads as follows: "No appropriation for private or individual purposes shall be made." Then the article goes on and provides for a regular statement, under oath, and an account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money. The first clause cited of said section is the one that we hold absolutely invalidates the penal clause in the statute under consideration, since it provides that, when the relator is fined, said fine shall be paid to the wife or the minor child or children. However beneficent the purpose of this legislation, all of which we readily and cheerfully concede, yet we must hold that no penal statute can be passed in this state, in the light of the provision of the Constitution quoted, which statute permits the fine, after collection, to be paid to the individual, whoever that individual may be. It clearly follows that, when the fine is imposed, said fine becomes the money of the state of Texas. Then, for the law to provide that that money must be paid to the party injured by the violation of the law is a direct appropriation of public funds for private or individual purposes. Suppose the legislature had provided that where a man beats another with a stick, or offers him any other unlawful violence other than death, the fine that should be collected for said unlawful act should be turned over to the victim of said assault. Certainly it could not be insisted that this character of law would not infringe the provision of the Constitution cited. Nor would the fact that the husband is under moral and civil liability to support the wife and child render the act less obnoxious to the provision under consideration. The Constitution of this state does not, nor can it be bent to, meet beneficent purposes, however noble the design may be, because to appropriate this money of the state of Texas to support the wife or child would be equally in violation of the letter and spirit of the law as it would be to appropriate money for any other character of fine to the party who was injured by the violation of the law under which the fine was imposed.

The abandonment statute under consideration further provides "that before the trial (with the consent of the defendant), or after conviction, instead of imposing the punishment hereinbefore provided, or in addition thereto, the court, in its discretion, having regarded the circumstances and financial ability of the defendant, shall have the power to pass an order which shall be subject to change by it from time to time, as the circumstances may require, directing the defendant to pay a certain sum weekly to the wife, guardian, or custodian of the minor child or children, and to release the defendant from custody, on probation, during the time of the imprisonment, upon his entering into a recognizance, with two good and sufficient sureties, in double the amount of the fine imposed, payable to the county judge." The condition of the bond, in substance, is that if the defendant shall make his personal appearance in court when ordered to do so by the court during the suspension of imprisonment or probation, and shall further comply with the terms of the order, then the recognizance shall be void; otherwise, in full force and effect. Section 28, art. 1, of the state Constitution, provides: "No power of suspending laws in this state shall be exercised except by the legislature." The clause of the statute under consideration, last cited, clearly authorizes the county judge to suspend the law, in that he suspends the punishment. A law without a punishment, especially a penal law, has no validity or force whatever; and when one suspends the penalty he suspends the law. Therefore we hold that this section of the act in question violates the section of the Constitution last quoted.

Without passing upon the other questions in the other sections of the act, we will say that the bond authorized to be exe-

A regular statement, under oath, and an account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money; shall be published annually in such manner as shall be prescribed by law." There are a number of these cases pending in this court, involving the validity of this statute. For the reason that the question is so clearly presented in the brief filed by relator, and inasmuch as the sole question here presented is the constitutionality of this measure, I have deemed it appropriate to write my views in this case, although cases involving the same matter have been pending in this court before this appeal was filed. I shall discuss all the matters urged why the act is unconstitutional, though somewhat in the reverse order.

(1) It is contended that the act does not define an offense in plain and intelligible language, and therefore is invalid, and relator is entitled to a discharge. If the statement and proposition is correct, the result must follow; but I cannot accede to the contention that the act does not define an offense and provide an appropriate penalty therefor. The act does provide that every person who shall, without good cause, abandon his wife, and neglect and refuse to maintain and provide for her, or any person who shall abandon his or her minor child or children under the age of twelve years, in destitute or necessitous circumstances, and wilfully neglect or refuse to maintain or provide for such child or children, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. This, I think, defines the offense, and such is the uniform holding of all the courts where the question has arisen, so far as I have been able to discover. This precise question came before the supreme court of Missouri in the case of State v. Davis, 70 Mo. 467. The statute construed in that case is, so far as relates to the definition of the offense, almost a literal copy of our statute. It is as follows: "Every husband shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor who shall, without good cause, abandon his wife, and fail, neglect, or refuse to maintain and provide for her, or who shall, without good cause, abandon his child or children under the age of twelve years, born in lawful wedlock, and fail, neglect, or refuse to maintain and provide for such child." In discussing the case, the court says: "The abandonment of a child is a statutory offense, and the language of the statute is sufficient in an indictment to charge the crime. Abandonment does not mean a mere temporary absence from home, or temporary neglect of parental duty. Bouvier defines abandonment thus: 'The act of a husband or wife who leaves his or her consort wilfully, and with an intention of causing perpetual separation.' Webster defines it as 'a total desertion; a state of being forsaken.' Additional words in the indictment would have been but definitions of the term 'abandonment,' in words which perhaps would equally require definitions." This act is very similar in many ways to our statute in reference to negligent homicide, which statute has been sustained almost from the foundation of the government. Articles 683, 684, 685, 686, and 687, Penal Code 1895, are as follows:

"Art. 683. Homicide by negligence is of two kinds: (1) Such as happens in the performance of a lawful act; and (2) that which occurs in the performance of an unlawful act. . . .

"Art. 684. If any person, in the performance of a lawful act, shall, by negligence and carelessness, cause the death of another, he is guilty of negligent homicide of the first degree.

"Art. 685. A 'lawful act' is one not forbidden by the penal law, and which would give no just occasion for a civil action.

"Art. 686. To constitute this offense there must be an apparent danger of causing the death of the person killed, or some other.

"Art. 687. The want of proper care and caution distinguishes this offense from excusable homicide. The degree of care and caution is such as a man of ordinary prudence would use under like circumstances."

It is true that article 687 undertakes to define what is meant by the degree of care and caution, as those words are used in the statute, and it is defined to be such as a man of ordinary prudence would use under like circumstances; but it is not believed that this definition is important as affecting the validity of the statute, or more than a declaration of what would be implied in the law in the absence of such a definition. It will thus be seen by an inspection of these acts that negligent homicide of either the first or second degree is not fully defined, except such homicide as occurs through negligence of the party charged, and as may happen in the performance of a lawful act, or as may occur in the performance of an unlawful act. It is clear that such homicide may occur in any one of a thousand ways, and that no man born of woman has written or would ever be able to write in the statute every circumstance or state of case under which a killing might occur. And so, in construing this statute, the law undertakes to visit punishment upon and create an offense in the act and out of the fact of abandonment of the wife or child without good cause. What is good cause in a case must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case, judged by all the surroundings. It would be impossible, in the nature of things, to define the offense further, nor do we think it essential to its validity that it should be further defined. The grounds and causes of abandonment, the facts and circumstances surrounding such environments, are as various and innumerable as the emotions of men or their shifting environments, and as many-sided and complex as the shades and shadows of life, and as abounding as the "multitudinous laughter of the seas." Again, we think it perhaps correct to say that the statute may be sustained on the proposition and theory suggested by Judge Brooks in the majority opinion, that the term "good cause" is synonymous with the term "lawful cause." If it can in fairness be held that the terms are synonymous, it will not, as I believe, change the rule as to the validity of the statute.

(2) Again, I think the statute is not obnoxious to the claim and contention that it warrants an imprisonment for debt. It no more does this than does any other article of our criminal statute, which provides for the confinement of a defendant on conviction in default of the payment of the fine assessed against him. It may be that some features and provisions of the act are not warranted under our Constitution, and that it should be held that it is not competent to permit the court in its discretion "to pass an order which shall be subject to change by it from time to time, as the circumstances may require, directing the defendant to pay a certain sum weekly to the wife, guardian, or custodian of the minor child or children, and to release the defendant from custody, on probation." It may be that this provision ought to be held obnoxious to and in contravention of article 1, § 28, of the Constitution, depriving the court of the power to suspend the law, and it may be that this provision is not in consonance with the spirit of article 1, § 18, which provides that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate. I am not prepared to agree that the act is in contravention of article 16, § 6, of our Constitution, quoted above. It occurs to me that the intent and purpose of that provision of the Constitution was to prohibit the legislature from making appropriations out of funds raised by public taxes, as gratuities to private individuals, and was not meant to lay an embargo or inhibition on the disposition to be made of mere penalties for the violations of our criminal law. However, this becomes unimportant, for the reason that, if the provisions affecting the remedy and enforcement of the fine provided for in this act are for any reason invalid, these provisions, so far as they contravene the Constitution, must fail. I am inclined to think personally that it is within the power of the legislature to provide that, when the fine is paid into court, the same should be for the benefit of the wife, or, in a proper case, for the benefit of the minor child or children. I am inclined to believe that the fine assessed against relator is subject to the control and disposition of the legislature, and it may make such direction and provision for its disposition as it sees proper. This, as I understand, is the rule both at common law and in this state. Nor is it certain that provision cannot be made by bond or recognizance for the payment of the fine assessed (none other) in instalments, and for security to be taken therefor by an instrument in the nature of a recognizance.

However, I am clear that if, for any or all of the reasons suggested above, the provisions for the collection and payment of the fine should be declared to be unconstitutional, it does not and cannot, in the slightest manner, affect the validity of this act. To my mind it is demonstrably clear that we have a statute in which an offense is defined and in which a penalty is named. This portion of the act is complete and perfect in itself, and if the mere process by which the payment of such fine shall be provided for should be held to be invalid and nugatory, it cannot affect the result. It is the uniform rule that where a part of an act is valid and part invalid, if the valid provisions are separable, the act may be sustained and the invalid portion fail. Such is the rule laid down by Mr. Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations, at pages 209, 210, 211: "It will sometimes be found that an act of the legislature is opposed in some of its provisions to the Constitution, while others, standing by themselves, would be unobjectionable. So the forms observed in passing it may be sufficient for some of the purposes sought to be accomplished by it, but insufficient for others. In any such case the portion which conflicts with the Constitution, or in regard to which the necessary conditions have not been observed, must be treated as a nullity. Whether the other parts of the statute must also be adjudged void because of the association must depend upon a consideration of the object of the law, and in what manner and to what extent the unconstitutional portion affects the remainder. A statute, it has been said, is judicially held to be unconstitutional because it is not within the scope of legislative authority. It may either propose to accomplish something prohibited by the Constitution, or to accomplish some lawful, and even laudable, object by means repugnant to the Constitution of the United States or of the state. A statute may contain some such provisions, and yet the same act, having received the sanction of all branches of the legislature, and being in the form of law, may contain other useful and salutary provisions, not obnoxious to any just constitutional exception. It would be inconsistent with all just principles of constitutional law to adjudge these enactments void because they are associated in the same act, but not connected with or dependent on others which are unconstitutional. Where, therefore, a part of a statute is unconstitutional, that fact does not authorize the courts to declare the remainder void also, unless all the provisions are connected in subject-matter, depending on each other, operating together for the same purpose, or otherwise so connected together in meaning that it cannot be presumed the legislature would have passed the one without the other. The constitutional and unconstitutional provisions may even be contained in the same section, and yet be perfectly distinct and separable, so that the first may stand though the last fall. The point is not whether they are contained in the same section, for the distribution into sections is purely artificial, but whether they are essentially and inseparably connected in substance. If, when the unconstitutional portion is stricken out, that which remains is complete in itself, and capable of being executed in accordance with the apparent legislative intent, wholly independent of that which was rejected, it must be sustained." And such is the holding of this court.

This rule will be recognized by every lawyer. Ought it to be applied, and can it in fairness be applied, to this question? It is undeniable, if my view is correct, that the act defines an offense. It is undeniable that it fixes in definite and clear terms a penalty. If the act had stopped there, it would not be questioned that it would be valid. All that follows is merely directory, and has reference to the manner and means of enforcing the penalty imposed by law. If these regulations fail, the validity of the act is not affected, because, in the absence of such regulations, other provisions of law are provided for the collection of fines and their enforcement. How can it be said that the act would be valid if these matters of detail in reference to the collection of a fine were omitted, and yet invalid because of their insertion? If they fail, it is as if they had not been written in the act. If they had not been written in the act, the court would apply the orderly processes which the law gives for the collection of the penalties. When they do fail, the law will supply and apply the provision, and the same result would ensue. In practically all new offenses created by our legislature, no provision is made for the enforcement of the penalties provided by law. None is required; and if these provisions fail we have a perfect act, and a law from which relator cannot escape punishment because he may object merely to the methods of enforcing the penalties that are denounced by law.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is a well-settled rule that we ought, if possible, to sustain this law, and every law passed by the legislature, unless it is clearly unconstitutional. The main purpose of this law was to discourage wife and child abandonment. These are matters in which the state has an interest. It prevents mendicancy, prostitution, and illiteracy, and the throwing upon the public burdens which husband and parent ought to bear. It is the undoubted purpose of the legislature, in the interest of the helpless women and dependent children of this state, with a view of discouraging vicious and profligate husbands and fathers from abandoning their wives and offspring, to make it an offense, and thus deter and prevent such deplorable conditions, and, if still committed, to visit the offender with appropriate punishment. The incidental fact that, in their zeal, the legislature go beyond the constitutional limits imposed on them as to the mere regulation of the method of payment; and the beneficent intent in its payment, ought not to undo this much-needed legislation,—legislation, to borrow a phrase from my Brother Brooks, as beneficent as the angels ever smiled upon.

I believe the law is valid and ought to be sustained; and, in view of the importance of the question to the public and society at large, I have thus in some detail written out my views.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

TWENTY-SECOND CORPORATION OF CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LAT-TER-DAY SAINTS, Resp't.,

v.

OREGON SHORT LINE RAILROAD, Appt.

(— Utah, —, 103 Pac. 243.)

Eminent domain — damaging property — noise.

1. The operation of trains and engines on tracks lawfully constructed for the purpose of switching and making up trains near a church, the effect of which is to interrupt religious services therein and annoy the speakers, singers, and congregation by the noise, is not a damaging of the property within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring compensation to be made in case property is damaged for public use.

Note. — As to effect of legislative authority upon liability for a private nuisance, see note to Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Lellyett, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, and the subsequent case of Alabama & V. R. Co. v. King, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 603, and the further references in the note appended to that case.

Appeal—theory of case — sustaining judgment.

2. A judgment in favor of a religious society for disturbance of its meetings by the operation of a railroad in the vicinity, which is based on the theory that such operation damaged the property within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring compensation in such cases, cannot be sustained on appeal, on the theory that such operation constituted a nuisance, where the case was neither tried nor submitted to the jury upon any such theory.

Nuisance — noise — operation of railroad.

3. It seems that the noises attendant upon the careful and prudent operation of a railroad switch yard, which affect alike all within hearing distance thereof, cannot be regarded as a private nuisance to a religious society whose services are disturbed and interrupted by them.

(July 6, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's church property, alleged to have been caused by the operation of defendant's trains. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. P. L. Williams, George H. Smith, John G. Willis, and H. B. Thompson for appellant.

Messrs. Moyle & Van Cott and E. C. Ashton, for respondent:

Damages caused by the construction, maintenance, and operation of its line of railway near the plaintiff's premises can be recovered.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Darke, 148 Ill. 226, 35 N. E. 750; Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. v. Nix, 137 Ill. 141, 27 N. E. 81; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Loeb, 118 Ill. 203, 59 Am. Rep. 341, 8 N. E. 460; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. McAuley, 121 Ill. 160, 11 N. E. 67; Hentz v. Long Island R. Co. 13 Barb. 646; Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Lell-yett, 114 Tenn. 368, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, 85 S. W. 881; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 537; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Joyce, Nuisances, pp. 223, 224; Rainey v. Red River, T. & S. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 95; Stockdale v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 28 Utah, 201, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

77 Pac. 849; Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 78 Tex. 169, 9 L.R.A. 298, 22 Am. St. Rep. 42, 14 S. W. 259.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages alleged to have been caused by the operation of appellant's trains to respondent's property used for church and other purposes.

The material facts, briefly stated, are, in substance, as follows: Respondent, in 1890, erected a certain building 40x60 feet, to which it added, in 1900, what is termed "the annex," 40x70 feet. These buildings are used for church purposes; that is, the usual Sunday and week-day services are held in them, and, in connection therewith, Sunday school and other religious exercises were also conducted therein. The buildings were also frequently used for entertainments, theatricals, dances, and other gatherings, so that the buildings were used for religious purposes several times on each Sunday and sometimes one or more times during the week for other purposes. The secular meetings were held mostly on evenings, while on Sundays the religious services were conducted in the forenoons, afternoons, and evenings. Prior to 1890, when the first building was erected, the appellant, or its predecessor in interest, had constructed and operated a certain line of railroad west of and in what is known as Fourth West street, running north and south. When the railroad was first built, but one track was laid. Some years thereafter, the evidence does not disclose when, another track was added. These tracks were west of what we shall, for convenience, term the church property, between 300 and 400 feet. The church property, upon which the buildings in question are located, consists of a parcel of ground 5x15 rods, running north and south, fronting on Third North street, which runs east and west. The westerly side line of this parcel of ground is 15 rods, or 247½ feet, east of the east margin of Fourth West street. From this it will be seen that there was a parcel of ground 15 rods in length between the church property and the street on which the railroad tracks were laid. About the year 1903, appellant obtained a strip of ground, by purchase or otherwise, off the west end of the 15-rod strip aforesaid, and also, by virtue of an ordinance, obtained permission from the mayor and city council of Salt Lake City to construct additional tracks in Fourth West street. These tracks were laid in 1905 or 1906. The evidence disclosed that there were fourteen tracks that were operated by appellant. The nearest of these tracks is 105 feet west from the west side line of the church property, and 115 feet west from the west side of the buildings thereon. The other tracks are all to the west; the farthest being between 300 and 400 feet distant. The station or depot of appellant is some blocks south, while its yards, which are termed "the north yards," repair and car shops, are a half or three quarters of a mile north of said buildings. The additional tracks before referred to were constructed to accommodate the increased railway traffic, and to permit appellant to break up and make up its freight and passenger trains, after arriving, and before departing, in the north yards. In this way many trains, or parts of trains, as well as switch engines, pass north and south over the tracks immediately west of the church buildings each day and night. These engines made noises by ringing the bells and sounding the whistles in passing north and south along First West street, and especially in crossing Third North street, which, as we have said, runs east and west in front of the church buildings. It is alleged that the noises emanating from the engines, as aforesaid, disturbed the meetings and exercises that were conducted in said buildings, and caused great annoyances to the speakers and singers, and at times interfered with the music, and were a great annoyance to those in attendance at the meetings.

To avoid, as far as possible, any misconception with regard to what caused the interferences and annoyances, we shall give the statements of the witnesses in their own language. Mr. Nebeker, who was, perhaps, as familiar with the prevailing conditions as anyone, when asked to state what caused the disturbances and annoyances to the speakers and attendants at the various church and other meetings, said it was "the whistling of engines, the puffing of the engines, and the ringing of bells, and the jostling of the cars, switch engines, switching of the cars, and the noises caused by the momentum of the train passing." This witness gives ten specific instances by giving the dates when either the speakers or singers, or some ceremony, was interrupted by the noises referred to by him. The witness, however, says that the disturbances and annoyances occurred at numerous other times; but he was unable to give any specific dates. Mr. Archer, another witness, could not give specific dates, but said that the disturbances and annoyances were frequent, and were caused by the "passing of trains and the noise consequent thereto, the whistling and puffing of the engines, and the noise of the cars passing." Mrs. Solomon, another witness, said the disturbances were occasioned by "the trains passing and engines whistling; trains making a rumbling noise and puffing." Mr. Holmes said that the disturbances arose from noises from "the movements of the trains, the noise of the trains, the whistling and the running of the engines and the cars." Mr. Morris said the disturbances were caused "by noises made by the frequent passing of the trains and the shrieking of whistles and the ringing of bells. Mr. Beesley, when asked what caused the disturbances and annoyances, said: "It is the passing of railroad trains on the Oregon Short Line tracks, and the noises attendant to the screeching of the whistles and the ringing of bells." The other witnesses, Mr. Blake, Mrs. Davis, Miss Davis, Mr. Paul, Mr. Hardy, Miss Thomas, Mr. Thomas, Mr. and Miss Rees, gave the cause of the disturbances in about the same language. Mr. Rees, however, spoke of trains and engines sometimes stopping at or near Third North street, and whistling for or when signals were given. These witnesses also said that the interruptions would sometimes occur from four to ten times during a meeting lasting two hours, and they said that the average number of interruptions at a meeting would be four or five, and would be from ten, fifteen, or twenty seconds duration. Mr. Nebeker gave one instance when smoke from an engine entered the building through the open windows, and he says "the smoke was very offensive." This, as far as we are able to discover from the record, is the only witness who specially speaks of the smoke. It may have been incidentally mentioned by some others; but, if so, we have failed to discover it. This, for reasons hereafter stated, is, however, not of great importance. The witnesses were, by the trial court, permitted to go into great detail with respect to the ceremonials and other religious exercises that were conducted in the buildings, and the interruptions that took place from the causes and in the manner stated, and they all testified that the noises were very disagreeable and annoying. Some of them characterized them as "humiliating," in view of the sacredness of the ceremonies that were conducted from time to time.

Upon the foregoing facts the court, after telling the jury that no recovery could be had for the use of the two tracks first laid, instructed the jury as follows: "But the defendant is liable for the damages, if any, occasioned by reason of the matters complained of involved in the operation of the additional tracks and yards constructed in 1906; and you are instructed that, although the defendant may have operated its engines and cars engaged in such additional operations as above defined in a careful and prudent manner, which manner of operation is not disputed, it is nevertheless liable for the damage, if any is proven by the evidence, to the plaintiff, resulting from the noises involved in such additional operation, such as the blowing of the whistle of the engines, the discharging of steam, the puffing of engines, and the rumbling and jostling together of cars. No question of negligence is involved in this action." Upon the instructions given, the jury found for the respondent, assessing the damages at $4,000. The court entered judgment on the verdict, and, after refusing a new trial, the case is brought to this court on appeal.

The appellant excepted to the foregoing instruction, and the principal question arising on this appeal relates to the propositions of law contained in said instruction. We remark that appellant excepted to the instruction as a whole. If it were not for the fact that the other parts of the instruction did not contain anything except a restatement of matters also contained in other instructions, and thus what was said by the court was merely introductory to the real proposition of law contained in the foregoing quotation, and that from the entire record it is palpable that the court's attention was specifically directed to the propositions of law contained in that part of the instruction now objected to, and that the court deliberately stated the law applicable to the facts as above indicated, we might be powerless to review the instruction. In view of the foregoing conditions, however, we feel constrained to give the appellant the benefit of the doubt, and shall review the case upon the propositions of law stated in the instruction excepted to.

It will be observed that in this case no question is raised with respect to interruptions of ingress or egress to and from the property alleged to have been damaged; nor is there any claim that there was any physical injury to the buildings or property; nor do the facts make a case where the erection of coal chutes, roundhouses, machine or repair shops, water tanks, or other like structures in close proximity to church buildings, constituting a nuisance, is complained of. The record presents a case where the only interferences and annoyances complained of affect those using the buildings for a special purpose, and the interferences and annoyances arise wholly out of the noises incident to the operation of locomotive engines, trains of cars, and switch engines upon railroad tracks which were lawfully laid. Appellant contends that under those circumstances respondent is simply suffering from the ordinary interferences and annoyances which are incident to the operation of trains over a railroad track or tracks lawfully constructed, and that all these are suffered by all the residents along the railroad track in common with respondent, and hence no recovery can be had. Respondent, however, contends that our Constitution (art. 1, § 22) provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation," and that this provision is broad enough to authorize a recovery, in view of the evidence in this case. Similar provisions are found in the Constitutions of nearly half of the different states of this Union, and have been the subject of frequent and learned discussions by the appellate courts in a great number of cases since the provision was first adopted, in 1870, by the state of Illinois. The leading case in Illinois in which a constitutional provision just like the one quoted above was construed is Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64. In a similar case, entitled Chicago v. Taylor, 125 U. S. 161, 31 L. ed. 638, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820, the construction placed upon the provision contained in the Illinois Constitution in the Rigney Case was upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the Rigney Case it was in effect held that the clause in the Constitution is limited to damages arising from some physical injury to property, or from some physical disturbance or interference with some property right, as contradistinguished from mere annoyance. The extent to which the so-called "damage clause" in the Illinois Constitution is given effect is perhaps best illustrated in a much later case by the supreme court of Illinois, entitled Aldrich v. Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. 195 Ill. 456, 57 L.R.A. 237, 63 N. E. 155, in which it is held, in effect, that interferences like those in question in the case at bar do not give a right to recover in an independent action.

The supreme court of Washington, in a recent case, has had occasion to pass upon the "damage clause" of the Constitution of that state. Smith v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 39 Wash. 355, 361, 362, 70 L.R.A. 1018, 109 Am. St. Rep. 889, 81 Pac. 840, 842. In that case the cases from the different jurisdictions where the damage clause has been construed and passed upon are very ably reviewed and discussed. The court, in passing upon the damage clause and what is included within it, said: "The jarring of the earth of respondents' lots and the casting of soot and cinders thereupon, and the emission of smoke, physically injuring property, are injurious physical effects to the corpus of respondents' property, which, we think, come within the scope of the term 'damaged' as used in the constitutional provision. . . . But the ringing of bells, sounding of whistles, rumbling of trains, and other usual noises, and the emission of smoke, gases, fumes, and odors, are necessarily incidental done. Neither is there any proof or claim that the buildings sustained any physical injury, nor that their use, occupancy, or access thereto was in any way interfered with except by the noises occasioned by the operation of the trains. But it is contended: That, although respondent may not recover damages under the damage clause of the Constitution, it may, nevertheless, recover for any interference or annoyance which is caused by what is termed a "private" as contradistinguished from a "public" nuisance; that neither the state nor the city could legally authorize the appellant to create a private nuisance and permit interference with respondent's rights with impunity. That neither the state nor the city could grant anyone the right to create or maintain a private nuisance with impunity no doubt is sound, and is conceded to be the law. The question, however, is: Does the operation of a railroad by passing of trains, whether few or many, when operated with ordinary care, constitute either a public or a private nuisance? Can the noises that emanate from moving trains be eliminated without preventing the trains from running at all? Moreover, do not such noises affect all who are similarly situated along the line of the railroad? If not in the same degree, do they not affect all to some extent? If this be so, how can it be said that, in a legal sense, such noises constitute a nuisance either public or private? The court of appeals of New York, in a comparatively recent case, namely, Bennett v. Long Island R. Co. 181 N. Y. 431, 74 N. E. 418, in passing upon this point, uses the following language: "The rumble of trains, the clanging of bells, the shriek of whistles, the blowing off of steam, the discordant squeak of wheels in going around the curves, the emission of smoke, soot, and cinders, all of which accompany the operation of steam cars, are undoubtedly nuisances to the neighboring dwellings in the popular sense; but, as they are necessarily incident to the maintenance of the road, they do not constitute nuisances in the legal sense, but are regarded as protected by the legislative authority which created the corporation and legalized its corporate operations. Nor does the legal nature of such annoyances change as traffic increases them in volume and extent." This doctrine is referred to and followed in nearly, if not quite, all of the cases we have herein cited. Nor do the following cases cited by counsel for respondent lay down a different doctrine: Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 213; Duncan v. Hayes, 22 N. J. Eq. 25; Churchill v. Burlington Water Co. 94 Iowa, 89, 62 N. W. 646; Robinson v. New York & E. R. Co. 27 Barb. 513; Blanc v. Murray, 36 La. Ann. 166, 51 Am. Rep. 7; 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Equitable Co-operative Foundry Co. v. Hersee, 103 N. Y. 25, 9 N. E. 487.

These are all cases passing on interferences where the business complained of could as well have been conducted at some other place, or the interferences or annoyances were of that character which could be remedied, and hence it was held that the conduct of the business at the place and in the manner it was conducted constituted a private nuisance which could be abated, or for the maintenance of which the complaining party could recover damages. The case at bar, however, did not proceed upon the theory of either a public or a private nuisance. True, counsel for respondent now contend that the judgment may be sustained upon the theory of a private nuisance; but the contention must fail if for no other reason than the one that the case was neither tried nor submitted to the jury upon any such theory. This is made clear from the instruction quoted from at the beginning of this opinion. Indeed, counsel do not claim that there was any wilful or negligent conduct in operating the trains over appellant's railroad, nor that the noises were excessive or avoidable. If they had relied upon such a state of facts, the question whether the excessive noises constitute a nuisance or not would necessarily have to be determined as a question of fact, and not one of law. Requena v. Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 55; People ex rel. Britton v. Park & O. R. Co. 76 Cal. 156, 18 Pac. 141; People ex rel. Teschemacher v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379.

It is true that, in addition to the foregoing cases, there are some in which the courts have held that noises and other interferences arising from the operation of railroad trains are proper elements of damage when they affect the use and enjoyment of property. Among this class of cases are those which relate to the condemnation of property for public purposes, including railroads, where all the property is not taken, but the property not taken is, nevertheless, affected, or where some easement appurtenant to the property not taken is interfered with so as to affect the salable or usable value thereof. In that class of cases noises and similar interferences which may affect the market value of the property not taken are ordinarily permitted to be shown, not as independent elements of damage, but as elements to be considered in connection with all other things which may depreciate the market value of the property interfered with, but not taken. Weyer v. Chicago, W. & N. R. Co. 68 Wis. 180, 31 N. W. 710, and Omaha Southern R. Co. v. Beeson, 36 Neb. 361, 54 N. W. 557, are cases where the doctrine is illustrated and applied. It is clearly pointed out, however, in those cases, that the interferences from noises and similar agencies cannot be made the subject of independent actions. One of the reasons why such interferences are permitted to be shown in the class of cases referred to is indicated by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lippincott, 116 Pa. 472, 2 Am. St. Rep. 618, 9 Atl. 871. It is there said that in that class of cases consequential damages may be offset by special benefits, and the property owner may thus show all matters specially affecting his property or the enjoyment thereof as an offset, or a partial offset, against supposed special benefits accruing to his property by reason of the contemplated improvement.

It may be noticed that our own statute (subdivisions 3 and 4 of § 3598, Comp. Laws 1907) provides for allowances and offsets of this character; but, as pointed out in the Lippincott Case, while such annoyances are proper to be shown in the class of cases last referred to, they, nevertheless, cannot be made the subject of independent actions for damages. Nor can the owner of property abutting on a street complain because some other street is being interfered with, in which he has no special easement, but only the right of passage in common with the public generally, unless, perhaps, such interference constitutes a public nuisance. Nor would a rule which permitted property owners to recover damages for disturbances from noises arising through the operation of trains either in the public streets (except, perhaps, by an interference with an easement, in front of the owner's property), or upon ground owned by the railroad company, be either just or equitable. If mere annoyances through noises which are necessarily incident to the conduct of a lawful business in its nature public can be made the subject of damage suits, then we can see no point at which a line may be drawn when such actions may not be maintained. If mere annoyances from noises give a right of action for damages, then everyone who is annoyed must be permitted to sue for and recover damages to the extent to which he is affected. The question, therefore, in each case, would depend upon the intensity of the noises and the extent of the annoyance. Everyone who may live within the radius to which the noises may extend would have a right of action, and the amount of recovery would be graduated by the distance one lived from the source of the noise, unless the noise was diminished by some artificial means. No doubt, in this case the interferences and annoyances are considerable and may be said to be out of the ordinary. The mere fact, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

however, that men, women, and children use the building in question for worship, for religious edification, for the inculcation of morals, or for amusement, gives them no higher right as an association to sue for and recover damages than it would an individual whose family is occupying a home in the same vicinity.

In the eye of the law, property rights are the same, by whomsoever occupied or owned. Property dedicated to worship is just as, and no more, sacred than property devoted to any other lawful purpose. An unlawful interference with property or property rights used for one lawful purpose will receive the same consideration and protection as that used for any other. The fact that the degree of interference while attending church services may be greater, nevertheless it is no different in kind from interference from the same cause to the home. If, therefore, it should be held that noises arising out of the present state of industrial pursuits and business activities shall give a right of action, all enterprises from which annoyances arise must be held liable in actions for damages. There is, there can be, no middle ground; and under our theories of government, grounded upon the fundamental principle of equality before the law, all must either suffer some annoyance, or all who cause them must be held liable for damages. The law seeks for practical as well as just results whenever such are obtainable. The practical way, therefore, out of such a difficulty, is that the interferences and annoyances which are common to all,—that is, where all suffer from the same kind of interference and annoyance, and the difference of annoyances as between communities or individuals is one of degree merely, and not of kind, and the annoyance is caused by something which is a necessary part of some lawful enterprise which is in its nature public and cannot be shifted from place to place,—all must bear the annoyance as best they may. If the respondent can show that blowing whistles, ringing bells, and the rumbling of the trains are avoidable without undue interference with the operation and usefulness of the railroad, or that it is unnecessary to blow the whistles and ring the bells, or that these things are done wilfully and for the purpose of interfering with and annoying the persons who are using the buildings for the purposes indicated in the record, then, upon such allegation and proof, the law no doubt will afford some relief. The record, however, simply makes a case where the things complained of emanate from the carrying on of a quasi public enterprise which cannot be shifted from place to place, and where the noises are a mere incident to the business itself, which is conceded to be lawful and carried on with ordinary care.

Respondent has referred us to the case of Stockdale v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 28 Utah, 201, 77 Pac. 849; but there is nothing said in that case which conflicts with, or in fact is not in strict harmony with, what we have said in this case; nor is there anything in San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co. v. Board of Education, 32 Utah, 305, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 645, 90 Pac. 565, which in any way affects any question which is involved in the case at bar. Under the circumstances disclosed by this record, therefore, we cannot see wherein the appellant has violated any duty or has disregarded or invaded any of respondent's rights. It was error, therefore, to give the instruction which we have quoted, and to permit a recovery thereunder.

All the other assignments, except those relating to the admission of certain evidence, although numerous, are sufficiently covered by what we have said. The assignments relating to the admission of evidence, by reason of the conclusions reached, have become wholly immaterial, because they cannot possibly arise in the same way upon a retrial of the case, if one be had.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the District Court to grant a new trial, and to proceed with the case in accordance with the views herein expressed. Appellant to recover costs.

Straup, Ch. J., and McCarty, J., concur.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF R. R. MILLER, Deceased.

DELIA F. MILLER, Appt.,

v.

T. R. ARCHER, Exr., etc., of R. R. Miller, Deceased, et al., Respts.

(— Cal. —, 103 Pac. 842.)

Will — contest — forfeiture.

That an unsuccessful contestant of a will had probable cause for his contest will not avoid a provision in the will forfeiting the share of any beneficiary who makes any contest of the will.

(August 11, 1909.)

APPEAL by Delia F. Miller from so much of a decree of the Superior Court for Note. — See case note to Re Hite, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 953, as to what amounts to a contest within the forfeiture clause in a will.

23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

San Bernardino County as denied her the right to receive a bequest under the will of R. R. Miller, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter M. Campbell, for appellant:

If probable cause existed for the bringing of a contest, a provision for forfeiture is inoperative.

Friend's Estate, 209 Pa. 442, 68 L.R.A. 447, 58 Atl. 853; Chew's Appeal, 45 Pa. 228; Re Owens, 32 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 257; Re Lynn, 31 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 258; Reilly's Estate, 200 Pa. 288, 49 Atl. 939; Jackson v. Westerfield, 61 How. Pr. 399; Rhodes v. Muswell Hill Land Co. 29 Beav. 560; Mallet v. Smith, 6 Rich. Eq. 12, 60 Am. Dec. 107; Fifield v. Van Wyck, 94 Va. 557, 64 Am. St. Rep. 745, 27 S. E. 446; Black v. Herring, 79 Md. 146, 28 Atl. 1063; Lee v. Colston, 5 T. B. Mon. 247; Bryant v. Thompson, 59 Hun, 551, 14 N. Y. Supp. 28; Page, Wills, p. 807; Schouler, Wills, 3d ed. 605; 1 Roper, Legacies, 2 Am. ed. 795.

Mr. T. R. Archer, for respondents:

Probable cause would not suffice to exempt the contestant from the operation of the forfeiture clause.

Cooke v. Turner, 15 Mees. & W. 727; Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 501; Re Garcelon, 104 Cal. 570, 32 L.R.A. 595, 43 Am. St. Rep. 134, 38 Pac. 414; Hoit v. Hoit, 42 N. J. Eq. 388, 59 Am. Rep. 43, 7 Atl. 856; Bradford v. Bradford, 19 Ohio St. 546, 2 Am. Rep. 419; Breithaupt v. Bauskett, 1 Rich. Eq. 465; Thompson v. Gaut, 14 Lea, 310; Smithsonian Inst. v. Meech, 169 U. S. 399, 42 L. ed. 794, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; 1 Roper, Legacies, 2d Am. ed. 795.

Messrs. Gregg & Surr also for respondents.

Angellotti, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by Delia F. Miller from so much of the decree of final distribution in the matter of the estate of deceased as denies her the right to receive a bequest of $1,500, given her by the terms of his last will. The will of deceased, executed the day before his death, disposed of his estate, which was apparently his separate property, as follows:

"I give and bequeath to my wife, Mrs. Delia F. Miller, the sum of fifteen hundred ($1,500) dollars.

"Second. I give, bequeath, and devise to my adopted daughter, Mrs. Florence M. Stevenson, of Los Angeles, California, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, both personal and real property, and wherever situated.

"Third. I further provide that, in case any devisee or legatee under this will make any contest of this will, then the share herein provided for any such legatee or devisee shall not be paid, but the same shall be forfeited and passed to the others under this will."

When the will was offered for probate, said Delia F. Miller instituted a contest thereto on the grounds of incompetency to make a will, and undue influence, alleged to have been exercised by Florence M. Stevenson. An answer to her opposition to the probate was filed, and the issues made were tried by the court, a jury having been waived. The court found against the allegations of Mrs. Miller, and admitted the will to probate. No appeal was ever taken from the judgment of the court in the matter of the contest, and such judgment became final prior to the application for distribution. When the estate was ready for distribution, Florence M. Stevenson presented her petition, asking that the whole of said estate be distributed to her, claiming that, by reason of the contest of the will, made by Mrs. Miller, the latter had forfeited all rights under the same, and that she had become entitled to receive Mrs. Miller's share as well as her own. Mrs. Miller also filed her petition, alleging that she had made the contest believing, and having good reason to believe, that the will was invalid on the grounds stated in her opposition. The trial court found that, at the time of the contest, there was probable cause for the same on the ground of undue influence, but no probable cause for a contest on the ground of incompetency. It concluded that, by reason of the contest, Mrs. Miller had forfeited the legacy of $1,500 given her by the will, and distributed all of the estate to Florence M. Stevenson, the other beneficiary under the will.

The contest provision of the will is clear and unambiguous in its terms, and it cannot be disputed that Mrs. Miller, by reason of the facts hereinbefore set forth, has lost her right to receive the legacy given her by the will, if such provision is valid and is to be enforced according to its terms. The question of the validity of a condition against contests contained in a will is not now an open one in this state. In the recent case of Hite's Estate (Cal.) 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 953, 101 Pac. 443, this question was presented, and the court held, following the principles enunciated in Re Garcelon, 104 Cal. 570, 590, 32 L.R.A. 595, 43 Am. St. Rep. 134, 38 Pac. 414, that such a condition is not against public policy. This ruling was in accord with what is now the universally accepted doctrine. If it be not against public policy, we know of no reason why it must not be enforced according to its terms. A testator has the lawful right to dispose of his property upon whatever condition he desires, as long as the condition is not prohibited by some law or opposed to public policy, such as conditions in restraint of marriage or of lawful trade, "and when a testator declares in his will that his several bequests are made upon the condition that the legatees acquiesce in the provisions of his will, the courts wisely hold that no legatee shall, without compliance with that condition, receive his bounty, or be put in a position to use it in the effort to thwart his expressed purposes." Smithsonian Inst. v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 415, 42 L. ed. 793, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396.

Appellant's principal contention is that there was no forfeiture in this case, for the reason that she had probable ground for contest. A similar question was presented by the briefs in Hite's Estate, supra, but was there dismissed by the court without discussion. No such exception is stated in the contest provision contained in the will, and we know of no principle that authorizes us to declare it. To so do would be to substitute our own views for a clearly expressed intent of the testator to the contrary. We are aware that some text writers have expressed views tending to support appellant's contention in this behalf, and that it is the rule adopted in Pennsylvania (Friend's Estate, 209 Pa. 442, 68 L.R.A. 447, 58 Atl. 853); but we cannot perceive any proper basis upon which to rest such a conclusion. Like the doctrine accepted in many decisions, to the effect that no forfeiture of the legacy results under such a provision when there is no gift over of the legacy in the event of a contest, although a forfeiture of land devised will result under such circumstances without a specific devise over,—a doctrine repudiated by us in Hite's Estate, supra,—it is a mere attempt at an artificial distinction to avoid the force of a plain and unambiguous condition against contests. See Hoit v. Hoit, 42 N. J. Eq. 388, 59 Am. Rep. 43, 7 Atl. 856. See also Bradford v. Bradford, 19 Ohio St. 546, 2 Am. Rep. 419. This point was expressly made in Re Garcelon, supra, and was disposed of in the opinion by a statement to the effect that the views set forth were really conclusive of every question discussed by counsel. This, we think, was necessarily so. If the forfeiture provision, as plainly and unambiguously written, is not against public policy, it must be enforced as written.

The portion of the decree of distribution appealed from must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: Shaw, J.; Sloss, J.; Melvin, J.; Lorigan, J.; Henshaw, J.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

MARY J. HICKLIN et al.

(— Ky. —, 115 S. W. 752.)

Evidence — fire — locomotive — other fires.

1. In an action to hold a railroad company liable for loss of property through fire set out by its locomotive, evidence is admissible that, at times other than that at which the loss occurred, sparks and cinders had escaped from defendant's locomotives and set fire to logs and grass along the right of way.

Railroad — fire — insurance — plaintiff.

2. A railroad company cannot defeat an action for the value of insured property destroyed by its negligence, which is brought by its owner, on the theory that, under a statute requiring every action to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, the action should have been prosecuted by the insurer.

Insurance — wrongful destruction — subrogation.

3. An insurance company which is compelled to pay a loss caused by fire set out by the negligence of a railroad company cannot, after the owner of the property has collected its value from the railroad company, and it has satisfied its liability under the policy, maintain an action against the railroad company to compel it to make good its loss.

(January 27, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Crittenden County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover the value of property destroyed by fire for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. M. Dickinson, with Messrs.

Case Note. — May one who destroys insured property defeat an action by the owner upon the ground that the right of action is in the insurer.

All the authorities are in accord upon the proposition that, in the absence of statutes requiring actions to be brought by the real party in interest, the owner of insured property which has been destroyed by another has a right of action for such destruction, regardless of whether or not he has been reimbursed for his loss by the insurer. Newell v. Norton, 3 Wall. 257, 18 L. ed. 271; Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 584, 28 L. ed. 527, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Inman v. South Carolina R. Co. 129 U. S. 128, 32 L. ed. 612, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 139 U. S. 79, 35 L. ed. 97, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 166 U. S. 468, 41 L. ed. 1081, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Rintoul v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 21 Blatchf. 439, 17 Fed. 905; The Yeager, 4 Woods, 18, 20 Fed. 653; Bennitt v. The Guiding Star, 53 Fed. 936, affirmed in 10 C. C. A. 454, 22 U. S. App. 344, 62 Fed. 407; Over v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 63 Fed. 34; Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Watts, 13 C. C. A. 579, 25 U. S. App. 214, 66 Fed. 460; Judd v. New York & T. S. S. Co. 54 C. C. A. 238, 117 Fed. 206, affirmed on rehearing in 62 C. C. A. 515, 128 Fed. 7; White v. The Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 462, 65 Am. Dec. 523; Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Frost, 37 Ill. 333; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Glenn, 175 Ill. 238, 51 N. E. 896; Dunleavy v. Stockwell, 45 Ill. App. 230; Cunningham v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 102 Ind. 478, 52 Am. Rep. 683, 1 N. E. 800; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Griffin, 8 Ind. App. 47, 52 Am. St. Rep. 465, 35 N. E. 396; Allen v. Barrett, 100 Iowa, 16, 69 N. W. 272; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Blaker, 68 Kan. 244, 64 L.R.A. 81, 75 Pac. 71, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 883; Hanton 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. New Orleans & C. R. Light & P. Co. (La.) 50 So. 544, Rockingham Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Bosher, 39 Me. 253, 63 Am. Dec. 618; Dyer v. Maine C. R. Co. 99 Me. 195, 67 L.R.A. 416, 58 Atl. 994, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 457; Hart v. Western R. Corp. 13 Met. 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Clark v. Wilson, 103 Mass. 219, 4 Am. Rep. 532; Hayward v. Cain, 105 Mass. 213; Perrott v. Shearer, 17 Mich. 48; Peter v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 121 Mich. 324, 46 L.R.A. 224, 80 Am. St. Rep. 500, 80 N. W. 295; Nichols v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 36 Minn. 452, 32 N. W. 176; Brookhaven Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Illinois C. R. Co. 68 Miss. 432, 10 So. 66; Weber v. Morris & E. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 409, 10 Am. Rep. 253, s. c. 36 N. J. L. 213; Carpenter v. Eastern Transp. Co. 71 N. Y. 574; Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. v. Shutt (Okla.) 104 Pac. 51; Gales v. Hailman, 11 Pa. 515; Lindsay v. Bridgewater Gas Co. 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 181; Burnside v. Union S. B. Co. 10 Rich. L. 113; Anderson v. Miller, 96 Tenn. 35, 31 L.R.A. 604, 54 Am. St. Rep. 812, 33 S. W. 615; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Levi, 59 Tex. 674; Cushman & R. Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co. (Vt.) 73 Atl. 1073; E. T. & H. K. Ide v. Boston & M. R. Co. (Vt.) 74 Atl. 401; Allen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 Wis. 93, 68 N. W. 873; Clark v. Blything, 2 Barn. & C. 254; Yates v. Whyte, 4 Bing. N. C. 272; Robinson v. New Brunswick R. Co. 23 N. B. 323.

But under statutes requiring suits to be brought by the real party in interest, it has been held that the insurer must bring the action against the wrongdoer if the whole value of the property has been paid by it, or must be joined with the owner if only part has been paid. Munson v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 32 Misc. 282, 65 N. Y. Supp. 848; Cunningham v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 139 N. C. 427, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 921, 51 S. E. 1029; Pratt v. Radford, 52 Wis. 114, 8 N. W. 606.

Trabue, Doolan, & Cox and Blue & Nunn, for appellant:

Where an insurer of property destroyed by fire through the negligence of another has fully compensated the owner for the loss, the insurer, upon equitable principles of subrogation, is entitled to recover from the wrongdoer, and is the real party in interest in an action brought for that purpose, within the meaning of the Civil Code of Practice.

Kerr, Ins. § 234; Ostrander, Ins. 2d ed. § 126; 2 May, Ins. 4th ed. § 454; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 175 U. S. 96, 44 L. ed. 87, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 166 U. S. 474, 41 L. ed. 1083, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Wager v. Providence Ins. Co. 150 U. S. 108, 37 L. ed. 1017, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 55; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 139 U. S. 223, 35 L. ed. 154, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 462, 32 L. ed. 799, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co. 117 U. S. 320, 29 L. ed. 878, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 750, 1176; Cunningham v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 139 N. C. 427, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 922, 51 S. E. 1029; Stewart v. Price, 64 L.R.A. 616, note; Allen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 Wis. 93, 68 N. W. 873.

In such case an action by the owner, without joining the insurer, must be dismissed.

Newman, Pl. & Pr. 2d ed. § 106; Carpenter v. Miles, 17 B. Mon. 598; Vanbuskirk v. Levy, 3 Met. (Ky.) 134.

The right of subrogation extends to insurance companies, where the insured property is destroyed by fire through the fault or negligence of railroads.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 260.

Evidence of sparks escaping from other engines at other times and places than the fire complained of is not admissible except when direct evidence of condition and management of spark arresters and engines cannot be produced.

Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Falconer, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 152, 97 S. W. 727; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Richardson, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 786, 99 S. W. 642; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Barrow, 89 Ky. 639, 20 S. W. 165; Mills v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 116 Ky. 309, 76 S. W. 29; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Scheible, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1708, 72 S. W. 326.

Messrs. Carl Henderson and A. C. Moore, for appellees:

The wrongdoer has no right to the benefits of the insurance, and cannot rely, either in full or pro tanto, as a defense, on the insurance money received by the owner of the property from his insurance.

Anderson v. Miller, 96 Tenn. 35, 31 L.R.A. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

604, 54 Am. St. Rep. 812, 33 S. W. 615; Perrott v. Shearer, 17 Mich. 48; Hart v. Western R. Corp. 13 Met. 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Mathews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 121 Mo. 298, 25 L.R.A. 161, 24 S. W. 591; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 304; Rockingham Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Bosher, 39 Me. 253, 63 Am. Dec. 618.

Evidence was admissible to show that other trains had permitted live sparks and cinders to escape from their locomotives, and that some of them had set fire to logs and grass along the right of way.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Taylor, 92 Ky. 55, 17 S. W. 198; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Samuel, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 305, 57 S. W. 235; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Scheible, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1710, 72 S. W. 325; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Cecil, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 832, 90 S. W. 585; 2 Thomp. Neg. §§ 2291, 2293.

Clay, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

Charging that their house in Marion, Crittenden county, Kentucky, had been destroyed by the negligence of the Illinois Central Railroad Company in permitting sparks to escape from its engine and alight thereon, plaintiffs, Mary J. Hicklin and others, instituted this action against the railroad company to recover damages in the sum of $1,100. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $650. From the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

A reversal is asked upon two grounds: First, the admission of incompetent evidence; second, error of the court in sustaining a demurrer to the second paragraph of defendant's answer.

1. The incompetent evidence complained of was to the effect that other trains of appellant, at other times than on the night of the fire, had permitted live sparks and cinders to escape from their locomotives and set fire to logs and grass along the right of way. The admissibility of such evidence is no longer an open question. In a long line of decisions this court has held in favor of its admissibility. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Richardson, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 786, 99 S. W. 642; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Falconer, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 152, 97 S. W. 727; Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Barrow, 89 Ky. 638, 20 S. W. 165; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Scheible, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1708, 72 S. W. 325.

2. Appellant's main ground of reversal is the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer to the second paragraph of its answer, which is as follows: "For further answer defendant says that plaintiffs' house was insured in the Citizens' Fire Insurance Company of Missouri for the sum of $700, as it is informed, which was the full value of said house, and that plaintiffs have received pay from said insurance company in the sum of $700 on account of said fire, which sum fully repaid the plaintiffs for any loss they sustained by reason of said fire; and the defendant now says that if said fire was caused by any negligence or carelessness upon the part of defendant for which it is liable, which it denies, said Citizens' Fire Insurance Company is entitled to recover for same, instead of these plaintiffs; and it pleads and relies upon the said payment to the plaintiffs by said insurance company in bar of plaintiffs' right to recover herein." It is the contention of counsel for appellant that, upon the payment of the loss by the insurance company, it was immediately subrogated to the rights of the property holders, and became the real party in interest, and that, under the provisions of § 18 of the Civil Code of Practice, requiring every action to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as provided in § 21, the insurance company, alone, was entitled to recover from the railroad company.

The law is well settled that a wrongdoer has no right to the benefits of the insurance, and cannot rely, either in full or pro tanto, on the defense that the owner of the property had been previously paid by the insurance company. Payment to the owner by an insurance company of the amount of his loss does not bar the right against another originally liable for the loss. The insurance company does not stand in the relation of a joint tortfeasor with the party through whose negligence the property is destroyed. Anderson v. Miller, 96 Tenn. 35, 31 L.R.A. 604, 54 Am. St. Rep. 812, 33 S. W. 615; Perrott v. Shearer, 17 Mich. 48; Hart v. Western R. Corp. 13 Met. 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Mathews v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 121 Mo. 298, 25 L.R.A. 161, 24 S. W. 591; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 304; Rockingham Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Bosher, 39 Me. 253, 63 Am. Dec. 618. In the case of Anderson v. Miller, supra, the rule is thus stated: "The question of who will be entitled to the proceeds of the recovery, the insurer or the insured, is a matter between them, and constitutes no defense to an action for damages caused by the wrong, which, in any event, must be brought in the name of the owner and insured, although it might be for the use of the insurer." Chief Justice Cooley, in discussing the same question in the case of Perrott v. Shearer, supra, said: He (the defendant) is found to be the wrongdoer, and he cannot relieve himself from responsibility to account for the full valuation (of the goods), except by restoring them. "He has no concern with any contract the plaintiff may have with any other party in regard to the goods, and his rights or liabilities can neither be increased or diminished by the fact that such a contract exists. He has no equities, as against the plaintiff, which can entitle him, under any circumstances, to an assignment of the plaintiff's policies of insurance. The accidental destruction of the goods in his hands was one of the risks he ran when the trespass was committed, and we do not see how the law can relieve him from the consequences. If the owner . . . keeps his interest insured, he cannot be held to pay the money expended for that purpose, for the interest of the trespasser. He already has a right of action for the full value of the goods, and he does not give that away by taking a contract of insurance. For the latter he pays an equivalent in the premium, and is therefore entitled to the benefit of it, if any benefit shall result. The trespasser pays nothing for it, and is therefore justly entitled to no return."

As we understand appellant's position, however, it is not that the payment by the insurance company constitutes a defense in favor of appellant, but that appellant was entitled to litigate the question with the insurance company, which was the real party in interest, and that appellant's answer was therefore good as a plea in abatement. The availability of this plea depends altogether upon the question: Who was entitled to sue—the party holding the legal title, or the insurance company, which, upon the payment of the insurance, was subrogated to the rights of the property owner? In 30 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 78, the rule is thus stated: "After some vacillation, the courts of the Code states have very generally rejected or refused to adopt the doctrine that beneficial ownership is necessary for a standing as real party in interest. Without denying that beneficial ownership is sufficient, in connection with the corresponding cause of action, the prevailing view now entertained by these courts recognizes the legal title also as sufficient. The sounder view is, rather, that it is enough to entitle plaintiff to maintain the action, as real party in interest, if he has the legal title to the demand, and defendants will be protected in a payment to or recovery by him. A third person not a party to the action may, it is true, be entitled to claim from plaintiff a portion of the fruits of the action, or all its fruits, as the case may be; but as against the defendant a plaintiff is the real party in interest if he has and shows the complete legal title to the cause of action asserted, so that he can legally discharge the defendant from his obligation." Manley v. Park, 68 Kan. 400, 66 L.R.A. 967, 75 Pac. 557, 1

A. & E. Ann. Cas. 832; Allen v. Brown, 44 N. Y. 228; Eaton v. Alger, 47 N. Y. 345. But defendant's right to object is limited by the purpose of the statute, and its evident purpose is not to allow defendant to demand the adjudication of equities which exist wholly between plaintiff and third persons. Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 651, 40 Pac. 8; Elmquist v. Markoe, 45 Minn. 305, 47 N. W. 970; Allen v. Brown, supra. So far as the defendant is concerned, the purpose of the statute is fully attained if, in the suit as brought, defendant is not shut out from his proper defense and counterclaim and will be fully protected by the judgment, whether for or against plaintiff, in the event of any other claim on the same cause. Los Robles Water Co. v. Stoneman, 146 Cal. 203, 79 Pac. 880; Greene v. McAuley, 70 Kan. 601, 68 L.R.A. 308, 79 Pac. 133.

In the case at bar the defendant did not ask that the insurance company be made a party to the action. It may be that, as between plaintiffs and the insurance company, the latter would be equitably entitled to the damages that plaintiffs recovered. The fact, however, that a third party might be entitled to the damages as between him and plaintiffs, is not sufficient to bar the right of action by the plaintiffs. The legal title to the property destroyed was in the plaintiffs. As between the plaintiffs and the defendant the former were the real parties in interest. It is immaterial to the railroad company what may be the equities between the plaintiffs and the insurance company. All that it can demand is that a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs will be a complete defense to any further action for the same cause. In our opinion the judgment in favor of plaintiffs is conclusive, and no action can now be maintained against the railroad company by the insurance company. Any right of action the insurance company may have is against the plaintiffs. For the reasons given, the trial court did not err in sustaining a demurrer to the second paragraph of defendant's answer.

Judgment affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

ROBERT MCGUIRE, Appt.,

v.

HUGH G. CLARK et al.

(— Neb. —, 122 N. W. 675.)

Deed — delivery — evidence — sufficiency.

On a record showing that the owner of a government homestead, for the purpose of apparently divesting himself of title, in furtherance of a design to pre-empt a tract of government land, signed, acknowledged, and registered a deed to his brother without the latter's knowledge, a finding that there was no delivery of the deed was held proper, where grantor never intended to deliver it, kept it in his own hands, and retained possession of the homestead.

Headnote by ROSE, J.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(September 25, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Custer County dismissing an action brought to quiet title to certain lands. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Robert A. Moore, for appellant:

When the terms used in a deed make an absolute conveyance with all the terms of warranty, it is beyond the power of the court to say, from the construction of the instrument, that the grantor did not intend to convey the entire title.

Struve v. Republican Valley R. Co. 2 Neb. (Unof.) 585, 89 N. W. 604; Horbach v. Boyd, 64 Neb. 129, 89 N. W. 644; Leavitt v. Bell, 55 Neb. 62, 75 N. W. 524; Hagensick v. Castor, 53 Neb. 495, 73 N. W. 932; Wells v. Steckelberg, 52 Neb. 598, 66 Am. St. Rep. 529, 72 N. W. 865; Lyon v. Gombert, 63 Neb. 630, 88 N. W. 774.

The delivery by the grantor of the deed for record, and the grantee's claim of title to the land by virtue of the deed, make the delivery of the deed complete.

Compton v. White, 86 Mich. 635, 48 N. W. 635; Bowman v. Griffith, 35 Neb. 361,

Note. — The effect of the grantor's act in procuring the recording of a deed without the knowledge of the grantee, or previous understanding with him to that effect, is discussed in notes to Munro v. Bowles, 54 L.R.A. 884, and Pentico v. Hayes, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 224. It is apparent from those notes that the foregoing case is in accord with the weight of authority in holding that while the recording of the deed under such circumstances is some evidence of delivery, it is not conclusive, and the finding that there was no intention on the part of the grantor to deliver the deed deprives his act in procuring it to be recorded of any effect as a delivery. It is apparent, however, that the grantor might, under some circumstances, be estopped, as against third persons, to deny a delivery of the deed. As to permitting undelivered deed wrongfully recorded by grantee to remain on record as estoppel of grantor or his successors to deny its delivery as against one purchasing in reliance on the record, see case note to Alabama Coal & Coke Co. v. Gulf Coal & Coke Co. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 712. On the general question as to the validation of undelivered deed by ratification or estoppel of grantor, see case note to Phelps v. Pratt, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 945.

53 N. W. 140; Palmer v. Palmer, 62 Iowa, 204, 17 N. W. 463; Cecil v. Beaver, 28 Iowa, 246, 4 Am. Rep. 174; Issitt v. Dewey, 47 Neb. 196, 66 N. W. 288; Fryer v. Fryer, 77 Neb. 298, 124 Am. St. Rep. 860, 109 N. W. 175; Brown v. Westerfield, 47 Neb. 399, 53 Am. St. Rep. 532, 66 N. W. 439.

Mr. H. M. Sullivan for appellees.

Rose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to quiet plaintiff's title to a quarter section of land in Custer county. Patrick McGuire, a brother of plaintiff, acquired the land as a government homestead, having obtained the final receipt September 10, 1886, and the patent April 11, 1889. Plaintiff's claim to title rests on a warranty deed from Patrick McGuire. It was dated November 1, 1886, and recorded June 19, 1888. The county records show a reconveyance from Robert McGuire to Patrick McGuire December 23, 1889, but plaintiff alleged it was a forgery, and that, in his absence from the state, Patrick McGuire induced someone to impersonate plaintiff, and to execute, acknowledge, and deliver the forged instrument. Plaintiff further averred that Patrick McGuire, on the strength of the apparent title based on the forged deed, borrowed money and mortgaged plaintiff's land to secure the loan; that the mortgage was foreclosed; and that defendants, with full knowledge of the forgery and of plaintiff's ownership, bought the property, and claim title through mesne conveyances from the purchaser at the foreclosure sale. Plaintiff also alleged he first learned of the forgery, of the mortgage, and of the foreclosure proceedings in February, 1906. Defendants denied plaintiff's alleged ownership and title, and averred that Patrick McGuire, without plaintiff's knowledge and without consideration, signed, acknowledged, and registered the deed under which plaintiff claims title. They also alleged that the deed was never delivered; that it was never the intention of Patrick McGuire to deliver it, or by means of it to divest himself of title, or to convey the land to plaintiff; that grantor kept the deed and retained possession of the land; and that the deed was made for the purpose of ostensibly divesting the title of grantor, in furtherance of a design on his part to preempt a tract of government land near his homestead. Defendants also pleaded mesne conveyances from the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, and the defense of adverse possession. In addition they denied knowledge of the alleged forgery. On all the issues raised by the pleadings the trial court found in favor of defendants, and dismissed the suit. Plaintiff appeals.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Thirty-one errors are assigned, but the sum of all of them is that the judgment is not sustained by the evidence. Plaintiff relies on his deed from the patentee, shows he did not reconvey the land, and argues his title has never been divested. To justify the dismissal of the suit, defendants argue that plaintiff's deed was never delivered to him, and that, therefore, he never had any title to the land in controversy. They also rely on adverse possession as a defense, and insist the finding in their favor on that issue is sustained by the evidence. The first question presented by the record, therefore, is: Do the proofs show a delivery of the deed from Patrick McGuire to his brother Robert McGuire? There was no actual delivery or formal acceptance, but plaintiff insists the deed was signed and acknowledged by the grantor, and recorded pursuant to his order. These acts, according to plaintiff's view of the law, amounted to a delivery and transferred to him grantor's title to the land. Delivery was a question of fact for the determination of the trial court, and registration of the deed was prima facie evidence thereof. Gustin v. Michelson, 55 Neb. 22, 75 N. W. 153. On this issue the trial court found: "The said Patrick McGuire on November 1, 1886, made a deed to said premises, and inserted therein the name of his brother Robert McGuire, as the grantee thereof. Whereupon the said Patrick McGuire procured said deed to be recorded in the office of the county clerk of Custer county, Nebraska, ex-officio register of deeds of said county, paid the recording fee therefor, and had said deed returned to him, the said Patrick McGuire, who always thereafter retained the possession of said land. The court finds that said deed was never delivered by the said Patrick McGuire to Robert McGuire; that the said Robert McGuire paid nothing therefor, and that there was no consideration for the same; that the said Patrick McGuire did not intend, when he executed and recorded said deed, to convey the title to said premises to the said Robert McGuire, but supposing that, under the Federal law, he could not remove from the homestead, while the title thereto still remained in him, to a pre-emption, for the purpose alone of apparently vesting the title in his brother, the plaintiff, he executed said deed, and at the same time made said pre-emption entry; that the said Patrick McGuire thereafter, and some time during the years 1894 and 1895, died; that the said Robert McGuire never knew anything of said transaction and never knew anything about said deed or the fact that the same had been made and recorded until long after Patrick McGuire had died, and some time during the year

1898. The court finds that the said Robert McGuire never claimed to own said land, never was in possession thereof, never ratified and approved any conveyance thereof to himself, and never ratified, approved, or accepted said deed of the said Patrick McGuire prior to the year 1906."

In determining whether these conclusions were properly drawn from the evidence, the entire record has been examined. Registration of the deed is the only evidence of delivery. Other proof of an intention on part of grantor to deliver the deed is entirely wanting. There was no evidence that the parties had previously made a contract of sale, or that grantor was indebted to plaintiff, or that the latter's creditors were asserting liens. On the other hand, there is proof that grantee had recently come from Ireland with money furnished by grantor, and that the money had been refunded. Both parties were unmarried. In acquiring the property for himself, grantor had endured the hardships of a frontier life. After registration of the deed, he mortgaged the land to procure funds for his own benefit. The testimony of the grantee himself shows that he never saw the deed; that he did not know it was placed on record, or who caused it to be recorded; that it was not delivered to him personally by his brother or by anyone else; and that he paid his brother nothing for it. There is also testimony that grantor kept the deed in his own possession after it was recorded; that he retained possession of the premises thereafter; and that it was not his intention to convey the premises to his brother. Grantee was never in possession of the land. He did not attempt to encumber or convey it. No creditor of his attempted to subject the property to the payment of debts. In addition, witnesses testified, in effect, that grantor said his purpose was to acquire more land, and not to part with what he already had. This court is committed to the rule that actual delivery and formal acceptance of a deed are not essential to its validity, where grantor placed it on record for the purpose and with the intent of transferring the title, pursuant to a valid agreement between the parties. Fryer v. Fryer, 77 Neb. 298, 124 Am. St. Rep. 850, 109 N. W. 175. In the case cited, and in other cases announcing a similar doctrine, the intention to transfer the title is a material element. In the present case such an intention is entirely wanting. While registration is evidence of delivery, as held in Gustin v. Michelson, supra, the mere recording of an acknowledged deed, without an intention to deliver it, does not operate as a delivery or as a transfer of title to grantee. Samson v. Thornton, 3 Met. 275, 37 Am. Dec. 135; Barns 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Hatch, 3 N. H. 304, 14 Am. Dec. 369; Derry Bank v. Webster, 44 N. H. 264; Wiggins v. Lusk, 12 Ill. 132; Hawkes v. Pike, 105 Mass. 560, 7 Am. Rep. 554; Chess v. Chess, 1 Penr. & W. 32, 21 Am. Dec. 350; Doe ex dem. Herbert v. Herbert, Breese (Ill.) 278, 12 Am. Dec. 192; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 95 Ill. 267, 35 Am. Rep. 166; Babbitt v. Bennett, 68 Minn. 260, 71 N. W. 22; Hooper v. Vanstrum, 92 Minn. 408, 100 N. W. 229; Hogadone v. Grange Mut. F. Ins. Co. 133 Mich. 339, 94 N. W. 1045; Franklin Ins. Co. v. Feist, 31 Ind. App. 390, 68 N. E. 188; Triplett v. Scott, 12 Ill. 137. In holding that a recorded deed, without an intention on part of the grantor to deliver it or to divest himself of title, was not effective as a conveyance, the Supreme Court of the United States, by Mr. Justice Field, said: "The evidence offered, so far as appears by the record, showed that the grantor never parted with its possession, except as may be inferred from the fact of its registry. And the grantee testified that he never knew of its existence until after the death of the grantor, among whose papers it was found, and that he never claimed any interest in the property. Yet the court instructed the jury that, as there was no contest of creditors against the deed, the instrument was binding, whether delivered or not. In this instruction there was also clear error. The delivery of a deed is essential to the transfer of the title. It is the final act, without which all other formalities are ineffectual. To constitute such delivery, the grantor must part with the possession of the deed, or the right to retain it. Its registry by him is entitled to great consideration upon this point, and might, perhaps, justify, in the absence of opposing evidence, a presumption of delivery. But here any such presumption is repelled by the attendant and subsequent circumstances. Here the registry was, of course, made without the assent of the grantee, as he had no knowledge of the existence of the deed, and the property it purported to convey always remained in the possession and under the control of the grantor." Younge v. Guilbeau, 3 Wall. 636, 18 L. ed. 262. That a deed may be inoperative where it was signed, acknowledged, and recorded for a purpose other than to transfer title was announced by the supreme court of New Hampshire in the following language: "It is not now to be questioned that a delivery is essential to the existence of the deed. It is not necessary that the deed be delivered by the grantor into the hands of the grantee; it may be delivered to a third person for the use of the grantee; it may be delivered absolutely or conditionally; but there must be a delivery. . . . And we are of opinion that the sending of the instrument in this case to be recorded, coupled with the declaration that it was made to prevent the land from being taken to pay an unjust debt, does not amount to a delivery. There was nothing said or done in this case which shows a delivery." Barns v. Hatch, supra.

Cases involving the acts of grantors in leaving deeds with magistrates or recording officers for delivery are distinguishable from the present case. In those cases the intention to deliver the deed or to transfer the title is shown by proof or inferred from circumstances. Here a different purpose is fairly established under the rule that delivery is a question of intent, as announced in Brown v. Westerfield, 47 Neb. 399, 53 Am. St. Rep. 532, 66 N. W. 439. In Samson v. Thornton, supra, Chief Justice Shaw said: "A deed takes effect by delivery. An execution and registration of a deed, and a delivery of it to the register for that purpose, do not vest the title in the grantee. Nothing passes by it. Maynard v. Maynard, 10 Mass. 456, 6 Am. Dec. 146. This is distinguishable from the case of Hedge v. Drew, 12 Pick. 141, 22 Am. Dec. 416, where the father proposed to the daughter to execute a deed to her, and to leave it with the register for her use, and she expressed her assent to, and satisfaction with, the arrangement. She thereby made the register her agent to receive the deed."

Under the law applicable to the proofs in the present suit, the deed from Patrick McGuire to Robert McGuire was never delivered, and through it grantee acquired no title to the land in controversy. The trial court was right in so holding, and it follows that plaintiff's suit was properly dismissed. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss the question as to adverse possession.

Affirmed.

Dean, J., having been of counsel below, did not sit.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

F. M. HASBROUCK, Appt.,

v.

ARMOUR & COMPANY et al., Respts.

(— Wis. —, 121 N. W. 157.)

Pleading — conclusion.

1. An averment of joint placing on the market and guaranteeing the quality of an article by manufacturer and retailer is a conclusion, where the pleader has stated that it was manufactured by the one party, and sold and delivered to the other, from whom the plaintiff purchased. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sale — dangerous article — liability of manufacturer.

2. A manufacturer of soap who sells only to the trade is not liable in tort for injury to a consumer by a needle which is in some way embedded in a cake of soap without his knowledge, which cake is sold with others in the usual way to the dealer; and it is immaterial that purity of the product is guaranteed.

Same — retailer — liability.

3. A retail vendor of soap is not liable to a consumer for an injury by a needle embedded in a cake by the manufacturer, where he did not know of its presence, which could not have been ascertained by him in the exercise of ordinary care.

(Dodge and Barnes, JJ., dissent.)

(May 11, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Circuit Court for Winnebago County sustaining separate demurrers to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. B. Jackson, with Messrs. Eaton & Eaton, for appellant:

It is an unlawful act negligently to permit to be concealed within a package of soap a dangerous piece of steel, and then to cause it to be placed in the hands of another, with the invitation to use it, so as to wound him.

Watson v. Augusta Brewing Co. 124 Ga. 121, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1178, 110 Am. St. Rep. 157, 52 S. E. 152; Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. 49 Minn. 331, 15 L.R.A. 818, 32 Am. St. Rep. 559, 51 N. W. 1105; Sherman v. Western Transp. Co. 62 Barb. 150.

Plaintiff was entitled to act on the representation, though made to the public, and not to him personally.

Anderson v. Smith, 104 Minn. 40, 115 N. W. 743; Froeberg v. Smith, 106 Minn. 72, 118 N. W. 57; Bigelow, Torts, 8th ed. § 170, p. 82; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Dixon v. Bell, 5 Maule & S. 198; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298; Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 493; Bishop v. Weber, 139 Mass. 411, 52 Am. Rep. 715, 1 N. E. 154.

The defendant, by its guaranty, took upon itself the risk and hazard.

Cameron v. Mount, 86 Wis. 477, 22 L.R.A. 512, 56 N. W. 1094; Kuehn v. Wilson, 13 Wis. 105.

Note. — The question of the liability of a manufacturer, packer, or vendor to persons not in privity of contract, for injury from defects in article sold, is discussed in the case note to Tomlinson v. Armour & Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 923.

Contractual relations between plaintiff and defendant were unnecessary.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 461, 462; Huset v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 61 L.R.A. 303, 57 C. C. A. 237, 120 Fed. 865; Bright v. Barnett & R. Co. 88 Wis. 299, 26 L.R.A. 524, 60 N. W. 418.

Messrs. Thompsons, Pinkerton, & Jackson, for respondent Armour & Company:

A manufacturer of articles for common use, harmless in themselves, who sells them to a retailer, does not incur a liability in tort to a third person purchasing from the retailer and having no contract relation with the manufacturer, who sustains injuries through a defect in the article sold, the manufacturer not knowing of the defect.

Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109; Bishop v. Weber, 139 Mass. 411, 52 Am. Rep. 715, 1 N. E. 154; 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 478, 479; Huset v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 61 L.R.A. 303, 57 C. C. A. 237, 120 Fed. 866; Lewis v. Terry, 111 Cal. 45, 31 L.R.A. 220, 52 Am. St. Rep. 146, 43 Pac. 398; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Skinn v. Reutter, 135 Mich. 57, 63 L.R.A. 743, 106 Am. St. Rep. 384, 97 N. W. 152; Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. 49 Minn. 331, 15 L.R.A. 818, 32 Am. St. Rep. 559, 51 N. W. 1103; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455; Norton v. Sewall, 106 Mass. 143, 8 Am. Rep. 298; Peters v. Johnson, 50 W. Va. 644, 57 L.R.A. 428, 88 Am. St. Rep. 909, 41 S. E. 190; Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 5 L.R.A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324, 10 S. E. 118; Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 500; Ives v. Welden, 114 Iowa, 476, 54 L.R.A. 854, 89 Am. St. Rep. 379, 87 N. W. 408; Bright v. Barnett & R. Co. 88 Wis. 299, 26 L.R.A. 524, 60 N. W. 418; Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co. 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387; Roddy v. Missouri P. R. Co. 104 Mo. 234, 12 L.R.A. 746, 24 Am. St. Rep. 333, 15 S. W. 1112; Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 503; Zieman v. Kieckhefer Elevator Mfg. Co. 90 Wis. 497, 63 N. W. 1021; Heizer v. Kingsland & D. Mfg. Co. 110 Mo. 605, 15 L.R.A. 821, 33 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 S. W. 630; O'Neill v. James, 138 Mich. 567, 68 L.R.A. 342, 110 Am. St. Rep. 321, 101 N. W. 828, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 177; Nelson v. Armour Packing Co. 76 Ark. 353, 90 S. W. 288, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 237.

Where the instrumentality which is the cause of the injury is not in its nature imminently dangerous; where it does not depend upon fraud, concealment, or implied invitation; and where the plaintiff is not in privity of contract,—an action for negligence cannot be maintained, since the misfortune to the third party cannot be regarded as a natural consequence of the maker's negligence.

McCaffrey v. Mossberg & G. Mfg. Co. 23 R. I. 381, 55 L.R.A. 822, 91 Am. St. Rep. 637, 50 Atl. 651; Daugherty v. Herzog, 145 Ind. 255, 32 L.R.A. 837, 57 Am. St. Rep. 204, 44 N. E. 457; Kuelling v. Roderrick Lean Mfg. Co. 88 App. Div. 309, 84 N. Y. Supp. 622; Carter v. Harden, 78 Me. 529, 7 Atl. 392; Field v. French, 80 Ill. App. 78; Goodlander Mill Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 27 L.R.A. 583, 11 C. C. A. 253, 24 U. S. App. 7, 63 Fed. 400; Bragdon v. Perkins-Campbell Mfg. Co. 66 L.R.A. 924, 30 C. C. A. 567, 58 U. S. App. 91, 87 Fed. 109; Swan v. Jackson, 55 Hun, 194, 7 N. Y. Supp. 821; Salmon v. Libby, McNeil & Libby, 114 Ill. App. 258; Slattery v. Colgate, 25 R. I. 220, 55 Atl. 639.

Messrs. Williams & Williams, for respondent S. Heymann Company:

A seller is not bound to discover latent defects in articles which he sells, even where they are intended for domestic use; and to hold him liable for damages it must be shown that he knew, or had good reason to believe, that the latent defect which caused the injury existed.

Green v. Ashland Water Co. 101 Wis. 258, 43 L.R.A. 117, 70 Am. St. Rep. 911, 77 N. W. 722; Akers v. Overbeck, 18 Misc. 198, 41 N. Y. Supp. 382; Sheffer v. Willoughby, 163 Ill. 518, 34 L.R.A. 464, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483, 45 N. E. 253; McQuaid v. Ross, 85 Wis. 492, 22 L.R.A. 187, 39 Am. St. Rep. 864, 55 N. W. 705; Schubert v. J. R. Clark Co. 49 Minn. 331, 15 L.R.A. 818, 32 Am. St. Rep. 559, 51 N. W. 1103; Losee v. Clute, 51 N. Y. 494, 10 Am. Rep. 638; Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351, 1 Am. Rep. 513; Marvin Safe Co. v. Ward, 46 N. J. L. 19.

Strangers cannot sue for the negligent breach of a contract.

National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, 25 L. ed. 621; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 116-2; Jaggard, Torts, § 260.

The mere allegation that a needle was permitted to be in the soap is not a proper allegation of negligence.

Standard Oil Co. v. Murray, 57 C. C. A. 1, 119 Fed. 572.

Were the action against S. Heymann Company not in tort, but on implied warranty, it could not be sustained.

Green v. Ashland Water Co. 101 Wis. 263, 43 L.R.A. 117, 70 Am. St. Rep. 911, 77 N. W. 722; Lukens v. Freund, 27 Kan. 664, 41 Am. Rep. 429; Salmon v. Libby, McNeil & Libby, 114 Ill. App. 258.

Timlin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint averred that the respondent Armour & Company is a corporation of Illinois, licensed to do business in this state, and the respondent S. Heymann Company is a Wisconsin corporation. The former is engaged in the manufacture and sale throughout this state of toilet soap, and the latter is doing a mercantile business in the city of Oshkosh. Armour & Company make and sell "Armour & Co.'s Toilet Soap No. 175" as a harmless article for the purpose of use in cleaning the face, hands, and body, and hold out to the public that this soap would supply every need for all toilet purposes, and guarantee the purity and harmlessness thereof, and that the soap is free and clear from all harmful ingredients or foreign substances which might injure persons using the same in the ordinary manner. On and prior to September 20, 1906, Armour & Company, its agents, servants, and employees, carelessly and negligently permitted and allowed a cake of the soap so manufactured by it to contain a needle, or small, round, sharp piece of steel, embedded therein. This made the use of said soap dangerous, and was liable to cause injury to persons using the soap in the ordinary and usual manner. Some time prior to September 24, 1906, Armour & Company sold and delivered to S. Heymann Company a quantity of this soap, in which was contained the defective piece or cake above described, in which the needle was so concealed as not to be visible to the naked eye. This was purchased by the latter from the former, to be sold by the latter to the general public, and with the understanding that the soap was harmless and free from all dangerous particles or ingredients which might or which would injure the body of the person using the same for toilet purposes. Both defendants then jointly caused to be placed upon the market and sold to the general public this soap so negligently made, containing this needle; and the plaintiff purchased from S. Heymann Company a quantity of this kind of soap, and received the defective cake or piece above described. While properly using the soap so purchased for toilet purposes, the plaintiff was injured by this needle in the soap entering the palm of his right hand and producing the most serious consequences, including paralysis and disability.

The pleader says this injury was sustained by reason of "want of ordinary care and prudence of the defendants, their agents, servants, and employees, in manufacturing said soap and putting the same on the market for sale for general use, and allowing a sharp piece of needle or steel to become embedded therein, which was liable to injure persons using the same in the ordinary and usual manner."

Each of the defendants demurred: "(1) For that it appears . . . that several causes of action have been improperly united. (2) For that it appears . . . that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant." The pleader, appellant in this court, begins his brief with this statement: "This is an action in tort founded upon negligence alleged in the complaint, set forth at length in the printed case." In the face of this authoritative declaration of the purpose of the pleader, we shall spend no time searching for any other or different intent on his part. The averments of the pleading are appropriate to such declaration.

Before we can determine whether or not two causes of action are improperly united, we must find the two causes of action, and then ascertain whether they are such as may be joined. The complaint avers that both defendants "jointly caused to be placed on the market and to be sold to the general public Armour & Company's toilet soap so carelessly and negligently made, containing said sharp, round piece of steel, or needle." But in the face of express averments in the same pleading, that Armour & Company manufactured the soap, and negligently permitted a cake of soap so manufactured by it to contain this needle; that Armour & Company sold and delivered to its codefendant quantities of its soap, including a box of soap containing this defective piece or cake of soap; and that the plaintiff purchased from S. Heymann Company,—the last-quoted words must be considered a conclusion or inference of the pleader from the specific facts otherwise appearing in the complaint. So with the averment "that the purity and harmlessness (of the soap) was guaranteed by the said defendants, and the same to be free and clear from all foreign substances which might injure the person using the same in the ordinary and usual manner." There being no purchase by the plaintiff from Armour & Company, but the latter having sold to S. Heymann Company, and S. Heymann Company thereafter to the plaintiff, and no joint act of sale or contract by the defendants, and the plaintiff claiming in tort, this averment must also be deemed a legal inference of the pleader from the facts stated; and it must be considered that the soap was offered to the public successively in the usual manner, by each defendant, as a harmless and useful toilet article, or that in each successive sale the vendor so represented the soap to his immediate purchaser.

The first inquiry, therefore, is whether the foregoing pleading states a cause of action for negligence. Negligence in law consists in the omission or inadvertently wrongful exercise of a duty, which omission or exercise is the legal cause of damage to another. This duty may, by operation of law, arise between persons who by contract bring themselves into certain relations as bailor and bailee, carrier and passenger, master and servant, and others. Or the duty may be imposed, independently of contract relations, by statute, ordinance, or rule of the common law, and due only to particular persons or classes of persons, as users of a highway or other way, abutting owners, fellow travelers on the highway, and others. Or the duty may be due to all persons, as the duty to refrain from acts apparently dangerous to life or limb, as when in play "the fool casteth firebrands and arrows;" or where one exercises a conceded right in a manner apparently and unnecessarily dangerous. The duty is, not to never fail, but not to fail under such circumstances that a reasonably prudent person might infer injury, as a natural and ordinary consequence of such failure, to one to whom the duty is due. In each of these relations, legal duty may vary in kind or in the degree of care required, or the act or omission may vary in the obviousness of its consequences; and therefore legal investigation, in order to judge of the quality of the act omitted or improperly performed, frequently inquires in what relation the parties to the action stood as to one another. This relation has been termed "privity;" and in the law of negligence we find cases asserting, and others denying, this requirement of privity between the party injured and the party negligent; but with respect to the breach of a duty due from the defendant to all persons, it must be apparent that no such inquiry is relevant. A manufacturer, dealer, or other person may bring himself, however, into privity with others under exceptional circumstances, and thereby be charged with a duty toward such persons different or greater from that which he owes to all persons, as in the case of a purchase by the vendee from the manufacturer or dealer for the use of a third person specially designated to the manufacturer, or dealer, as in George v. Skivington, L. R. 5 Exch. 1, and Woodward v. Miller, 119 Ga. 618, 64 L.R.A. 932, 100 Am. St. Rep. 188, 46 S. E. 847; and in the case of implied invitation to servants of another master to use a defective appliance furnished to that master for the use of the latter and his servants, as in Bright v. Barnett & R. Co. 88 Wis. 299, 26 L.R.A. 524, 60 N. W. 418; Coughtry v. Globe Woolen Co. 56 N. Y. 124, 15 Am. Rep. 387, and Heaven v. Pender, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 503; and in the case of a caterer furnishing a dinner for the use of the master of the feast 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the guests of the latter, where one of the guests is injured by the negligence of the caterer in failing to properly prepare or select the food (Bishop v. Weber, 139 Mass. 411, 52 Am. Rep. 715, 1 N. E. 154), and in the case of a manufacturer or vendor of remedies who sells to a dealer, but undertakes, by directions or recommendations on or accompanying the package, to communicate directly with the consumer or user (Blood Balm Co. v. Cooper, 83 Ga. 457, 5 L.R.A. 612, 20 Am. St. Rep. 324, 10 S. E. 118). But where the manufacturer or vendor had not, at the time of the injury, brought himself into any privity with the person injured, within the rule of the foregoing cases, or similar and analogous circumstances, the duty which the law imposes in favor of the user or consumer upon a manufacturer or dealer selling at wholesale to dealers generally, but not selling to consumers directly, is identical with the duty imposed by law on all persons with respect to the public generally. There is no privity, no particular relation carrying with it special duties or a special degree of care in such case. Standard Oil Co. v. Murray, 57 C. C. A. 1, 119 Fed. 572; Salmon v. Libby, McNeil & Libby, 114 Ill. App. 258; McCaffrey v. Mossberg & G. Mfg. Co. 23 R. I. 381, 55 L.R.A. 822, 91 Am. St. Rep. 537, 50 Atl. 641; Bragdon v. Perkins-Campbell Co. 66 L.R.A. 924, 30 C. C. A. 567, 58 U. S. App. 91, 87 Fed. 109; Zieman v. Kieckhefer Elevator Mfg. Co. 90 Wis. 497, 63 N. W. 1021; Loop v. Litchfield, 42 N. Y. 351, 1 Am. Rep. 543. The cases are collected in Huset v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. 61 L.R.A. 303, 57 C. C. A. 237, 120 Fed. 865, and the rule well stated from the view point that no duty rests upon the manufacturer and seller to dealers, in favor of the purchaser from the latter, with certain specified exceptions.

The manufacturer or dealer who puts out, sells, and delivers, without notice to others of its dangerous qualities, an article which invites a certain use, and which article is not inherently dangerous, but which, by reason of negligent construction, he knows to be imminently dangerous to life or limb, or is manifestly and apparently dangerous when used as it is intended to be used, is liable to any person who suffers an injury therefrom, which injury might have been reasonably anticipated. So, a manufacturer or vendor putting out and selling articles inherently dangerous, such as explosives or poisons, without notice to others of their dangerous nature or qualities, or with a misleading notice, or negligently in any other way, is liable for any injury to any third person which might have been reasonably foreseen by the manufacturer or dealer in the exercise of ordinary care. So, a manufacturer or vendor making and selling an article intended to preserve or affect human life is liable to third persons who sustain injury caused by his negligence in preparing, compounding, labeling, or directing the use of such articles, if such injury to others might have been reasonably foreseen in the exercise of ordinary care. The reason for these rules is apparent. The manufacturer or vendor should have no immunity from duties common to all, merely because he is a manufacturer or vendor. At the same time, there is in the common law no authority for imposing special duties upon him by reason of any privity between him and the vendee of his vendee, except in the instances mentioned, which may be regarded as occasions of a general duty toward the public to whom the wares are offered, or as exceptions to the rule of nonliability. If a general rule of statute or common law requires him to take precautions to protect the public against a dangerous substance by proper designation of the thing manufactured or sold, he owes a duty to the public so to do, and for failure in that regard he is liable for the consequences reasonably to be anticipated. In Ives v. Welden, 114 Iowa, 478, 54 L.R.A. 854, 89 Am. St. Rep. 379, 87 N. W. 408, this duty was imposed by statute; in Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455, by common law.

We must assume upon this pleading that the needle was not knowingly placed in the soap by the manufacturer, and that the soap was sold by the manufacturer to the dealer without knowledge that it contained this needle. There is in some sense an implied invitation to use the soap for toilet purposes, but no knowledge or reasonable means of knowledge from the ordinary composition of the product, or from anything brought to the notice of the manufacturer, that such use would be dangerous. A guaranty or warranty not knowingly false or fraudulent does not affect the liability in tort for negligence. The unintentional and negligent dropping of a needle into the mixture is a remote possibility, an extraordinary occurrence; and serious injury resulting from such act to persons using the soap for toilet purposes is an unusual and remote consequence of the careless dropping of such needle into the mixture. There are, no doubt, well-authenticated instances of severe illness, and even death, resulting from a puncture or scratch by a needle or a pin; but these are not ordinary consequences of such accidents, but are extraordinary, unusual, and remote consequences, which a person of ordinary prudence and discretion, standing in this relation to the user or purchaser, is not expected to foresee and provide against. "Negligence in law is not mere carelessness, but is careless conduct under such circumstances that an ordinarily prudent person would anticipate some injury to another as a reasonably probable result thereof." Johanson v. Webster Mfg. Co. (Wis.) 120 N. W. 832. Another definition is that "negligence consists in the failure to observe that degree of care which the law requires for the protection of the interests likely to be injuriously affected by the want of it." Kendrick v. Towle, 60 Mich. 363, 367, 1 Am. St. Rep. 526, 27 N. W. 567; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bigham, 90 Tex. 223, 38 S. W. 162; Hope v. Fall Brook Coal Co. 3 App. Div. 70, 38 N. Y. Supp. 1040; Webb's Pollock, Torts, Am. ed. pp. 29, 30, and cases in notes.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

There was, therefore, in the instant case, no breach of a duty imposed by law on the manufacturer for the protection of the public, or for the protection of the vendee of his vendee,—no actionable negligence shown. Consequently the plaintiff has failed to state a cause of action against the defendant Armour & Company.

With reference to the S. Heymann Company, there is no negligence charged in the complaint. The needle was so embedded in the soap as to be invisible to the naked eye. Heymann Company did not know of its presence in the soap. In the exercise of ordinary care, it could not have been ascertained that the needle was in the soap. This needle happened in the soap through no omission or default of theirs. They consequently are not holden to the plaintiff upon any ground of negligence.

The order sustaining the demurrer is affirmed.

Dodge and Barnes, JJ., dissent.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

ANNA AGNES PEREIRA, Resp't.,

v.

FRANK PEREIRA, Appt.

(— Cal. —, 103 Pac. 488.)

Divorce — reconciliation — agreement for recompense.

1. A provision in a contract by persons between whom divorce proceedings are pending because of the husband's misconduct, which is intended to effect a reconciliation and dismissal of the proceedings, to the effect that, in case the husband should so con-

Case Note.—Validity of anticipatory contract making provision for wife in the event of her obtaining divorce for subsequent fault of husband.

An extensive search has brought to light no other case squarely presenting this quesduct himself as to give the wife a new cause of action for divorce, he would pay her a sum which is less than his yearly net income, in full satisfaction of all claims against his estate, is void as contrary to public policy.

Same — separate property — business — interest.

2. In dividing the property in a divorce proceeding, the capital which the husband has invested in business at the time of the marriage is to be regarded as separate estate, and also the profits which have been derived from the business since the marriage which are justly due to the capital invested, which, in case the business is profitable, are at least the usual interest on a long-term investment well secured.

Appeal — divorce — aiding appellee.

3. The wife's share of community property cannot be increased upon the husband's appeal in a divorce proceeding.

Divorce — division of community.

4. Upon reversal of a judgment in a divorce proceeding upon the husband's appeal because of error in classing as community in the division of the property that which was his separate estate, the trial court is at liberty to make a new apportionment of community between the parties in such shares as shall seem just under all the circumstances.

Same — inquiry — necessity.

5. An inquiry with respect to property rights and the custody of children prior to the entry of the final decree in a divorce proceeding is not prevented by statutes which provide that, in actions for divorce, the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases, and if it determines that a divorce ought to be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce, and that one year after the entry of such interlocutory judgment the court may enter a final judgment granting a divorce and such other and further relief as may be necessary to a complete disposition of the action; although other sections speak of the disposition of the community property in case of a dissolution of the marriage, and declare that the court, in ordering a decree of divorce, must make such orders for the disposition of community property as provided by law, and that marriage is dissolved only by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction declaring a divorce.

On rehearing.

Same — interest — capital.

6. In the absence of evidence on the part of the husband against whom a divorce is granted that the capital invested in his business was entitled to more than legal interest out of the profits of the business, that is all that he can claim in fixing the amount of community property to be divided between himself and wife.

Claim — right of wife.

7. Before full legal interest on the capital invested in the business of a man against whom a divorce is sought shall be allowed out of the profits of the business as against the claims of the community, the wife is entitled to an opportunity to show that it earned a smaller proportion of such profits.

(June 30, 1909.)

tion, but Trust Co. of America v. Nash, 50 Misc. 295, 98 N. Y. Supp. 734, was a decision upon the validity of a contract making certain provision for a wife if she should in the future obtain an absolute divorce, where the parties had separated and were living apart when the agreement was entered into. Thus it did not appear whether grounds for divorce existed at that time, but it seems probable that they did. The provision in question was held valid, the court saying: "If this agreement could fairly and reasonably be construed as offering an inducement and advantage to the wife if she would procure a divorce from her husband, it would clearly be contrary to public policy and void. . . . In my opinion, however, it cannot be so construed. It is true that the agreement throughout contains provisions from which it may be inferred that the parties contemplated the possibility of an action for divorce in which the wife would be plaintiff, and provision was made for certain contingencies which might result from such an action if successful. This, however, was not in itself unlawful, so long as no premium was put, by the agreement, upon the procuring of such a divorce."

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It will be noted that the decision in PEREIRA v. PEREIRA was upon the ground of public policy, and it has therefore seemed desirable to call attention to a few cases involving the validity of an agreement by a husband to provide for his wife in the event of such subsequent conduct on his part as to necessitate or result in their separation. Such agreements seem to have been generally upheld. Sommer v. Sommer, 87 App. Div. 434, 84 N. Y. Supp. 444; Reamey v. Bayley, 7 Sadler (Pa.) 239, 11 Atl. 438; Woodruff v. Woodruff, 121 Ky. 784, 90 S. W. 266, 91 S. W. 265. See also Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 264, 73 N. W. 363. And see Darcey v. Darcey (R. I.) post, 886, 71 Atl. 595, where it was held that a husband and wife have power to enter into a contract by which he undertakes to transfer real estate to her in case he resumes relations with a paramour.

But an antenuptial agreement providing that, in case of the separation of the parties for any cause whatsoever, the husband should make certain provision for the wife, was held invalid in Watson v. Watson, 37 Ind. App. 548, 77 N. E. 355.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Alameda County granting plaintiff a divorce. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Arthur J. Dannenbaum and Myer Jacobs, for appellant:

Profits realized by the husband after his marriage, out of separate property owned by him at the time of his marriage, is the separate property of the husband.

Re Higgins, 65 Cal. 407, 4 Pac. 389; Re Granniss, 142 Cal. 1, 75 Pac. 324; Re Bauer, 79 Cal. 310, 21 Pac. 759.

Where property is acquired by funds belonging partly to the separate property of one spouse and partly to the community property, the property so acquired becomes in part the separate property of the spouse who furnishes the funds from his or her separate property, and in part the community of both spouses, in proportion to the separate and community funds invested in it.

Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 695; Re Bauer, 79 Cal. 304, 21 Pac. 759; Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 282, 11 Pac. 719; Loring v. Stuart, 79 Cal. 202, 21 Pac. 651; Heney v. Pesoli, 109 Cal. 53, 41 Pac. 919.

The contract is a valid contract.

Barbour v. Barbour, 49 N. J. Eq. 429, 24 Atl. 227; Adams v. Adams, 91 N. Y. 381, 43 Am. Rep. 675.

The wife cannot ask for the increase of her proportion of the community property, upon the appeal of the husband.

Olmsted v. Russ, 122 Cal. 224, 54 Pac. 745; South San Bernardino Land & Improv. Co. v. San Bernardino Nat. Bank, 127 Cal. 245, 59 Pac. 699; Bates v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 479, 16 L.R.A. 745, 29 Am. St. Rep. 133, 30 Pac. 605; Klauber v. San Diego Street Car Co. 98 Cal. 105, 32 Pac. 876.

Messrs. Charles S. Wheeler, Snook & Church, and J. F. Bowie for respondent.

Shaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff obtained an interlocutory judgment of divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. This judgment also declared that the plaintiff should have three fifths of the community property when the divorce became final, that she should thereafter have custody of her minor child by the marriage, and it provided for temporary alimony to her, and for the custody of the child during the time that would elapse between the interlocutory judgment and the final judgment. The defendant appealed from this interlocutory judgment within sixty days after the rendition thereof. This appeal is presented upon the judgment roll 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and upon a bill of exceptions containing the evidence. It is conceded that the evidence was sufficient to justify the divorce and the award of the custody of the child to plaintiff. The claim of the appellant is that the court erred in the finding as to the amount of the community property, and in excluding evidence relating thereto.

1. The first point to be noticed is the ruling of the court declaring void a contract between the parties, relating to their property and the division thereof, and in refusing to enforce or consider it in that connection. We are of the opinion that the court properly refused to consider this contract on the ground that it was plainly against public policy. The present action was begun on January 21, 1905. A previous action of divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, consisting in large part of the same acts assigned in the present complaint, was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant on September 23, 1904. After that action was begun, the parties became reconciled, resumed marital relations, and on November 1, 1904, the plaintiff dismissed the action. On November 4, 1904, in pursuance of negotiations begun before the dismissal, but after the reconciliation, the contract in question was executed. It was dated November 1st, and it recites that the previous action was then pending. Therein the plaintiff expressly waived the cause for divorce alleged in said complaint, and agreed to dismiss the action. The contract further provided: That none of the relatives of either party should settle in, be invited to, or visit, the home without the consent of both parties; that if the husband should thereafter so conduct himself as to give the wife a new cause of action for divorce, and she should establish the same in a subsequent action against him for divorce or maintenance, the husband should thereupon pay to the wife $10,000, which should be a full satisfaction, settlement, and discharge of all claims of the wife in such action "for alimony, costs, counsel fees, support, maintenance of herself, homestead, homestead right, property, and benefit of every kind and character." It also declared that, "in the event of the institution of such subsequent action, all claims and demands by her on her part in or to any moneys, property rights, or property, community or otherwise, now or hereafter owned or acquired by" the defendant, other than said $10,000, "are hereby forever settled, liquidated, relinquished, released, waived, and abandoned, and no claim, demand, or monetary or property benefit or relief shall ever be claimed, asserted, or sought in, by, or by reason of said subsequent action, should it be instituted, except only to the extent aforesaid."

The Civil Code provides that the husband and wife may enter into any engagement with the other respecting property, which they might enter into if not married, subject to the law as to fiduciary relations in general (§ 158); and that they may agree, in writing, to an immediate separation, and may make provision for the support of either of them and of their children during such separation; but that they cannot, by contract, otherwise alter their legal relations, except as to property (§159). There was in this contract no agreement for separation, and hence the agreement to pay $10,000 cannot be upheld as a provision for the support of the wife on a separation, as provided in § 159. The real effect of the contract to pay the $10,000, so far as the husband is concerned, would be to provide against liability for a contemplated wrong to be subsequently inflicted by him upon his wife, and to liquidate such liability in advance of the commission of the wrong. The evidence and findings show that the defendant was then possessed of property worth about $77,000, was engaged in a very lucrative business, and was receiving an income of about $11,000 a year, which he had every reason to believe would continue. By this contract, if valid, he was left free to inflict upon his wife the most grievous marital wrongs, such as would compel her to obtain a divorce, secure in the protection of his contract that $10,000 would satisfy all her claims against him of a pecuniary nature or in relation to the community property. If he should, after its execution, be moved by evil impulse to commit anew the offenses against his wife which first gave her cause for divorce, or other acts having the same legal effect, the existence of a valid contract of this sort could not but encourage him to yield to his baser inclinations, and inflict the injury. As it was obviously adapted to produce this result, it is to be presumed that this was one of the inducements which made him desire its execution. The law does not countenance such agreements. "Any contract between the parties having for its object the dissolution of the marriage contract, or facilitating that result, . . . is void as contra bonos mores." Loveren v. Loveren, 106 Cal. 512, 39 Pac. 802, quoting Phillips v. Thorp, 10 Or. 494; Beard v. Beard, 65 Cal. 354, 4 Pac. 229; Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 289, 50 L.R.A. 548, 61 Pac. 907. In Seeley's Appeal, 56 Conn. 206, 14 Atl. 291, the court says: "Inasmuch as the state rests upon the family, and is vitally interested in the permanency of a marriage relation once established, it, for the promotion of public welfare, and of private morals as well, makes itself a party to every marriage contract entered into within its jurisdiction, in this sense, that it will not permit the dissolution thereof by the other parties thereto. Its consent in the form of a decree of its court passed after hearing in due process of law is a prerequisite to a divorce. . . . Courts will not enforce any contract which is the price of consent by one party to the marriage relation to the procurement of a divorce by the other." And, in reference to a similar agreement to that in the case at bar, the court in the case just cited said: "Presumably each party saw in that agreement an individual advantage; to him, in that he possibly paid her less thereby than the judgment of the court upon hearing would compel; to her, in that he refrained therefor from answering the allegations of her petition by proof, and thus possibly permitted a divorce which he could have prevented."

Before the contract was made, or its terms agreed to, the parties had made up their former differences and had become reconciled. It shows by its terms that it is not an agreement to settle property rights accruing by reason of a marital offense already perpetrated and complete as a cause for divorce. There is therefore no force in the claim, as applied to this case, that it is competent evidence, or valid as a settlement of such rights, even if it were conceded that such an agreement might under some circumstances be permitted to stand. The court also found that this contract was procured by the husband through undue influence and by fraud. Our conclusions upon the point that it was against public policy make it unnecessary to consider the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain these findings.

2. The court found that the community property of the parties was of the value of $57,664.77. It is claimed that this is not sustained by the evidence.

There is practically no conflict on the subject; there being no witness to that point except the defendant. The findings state that this property consisted of the real estate on which the defendant carried on business, which was of the value of $45,000, and certain money on hand, making up the remainder. The evidence shows that the plaintiff and defendant intermarried on April 19, 1900. At that time the defendant was, and he ever since has been, carrying on a saloon and cigar business, then producing a net income of about $5,000 annually. He owned the cigar and saloon stock and fixtures, worth in all about $15,500, and had, besides, some $6,000 in cash. Soon after the marriage he bought the home wherein the parties afterwards lived, paying $2,700 therefor, and he afterwards expended thereon $2,300 in improving it. This home is adjudged to be his separate property, and plaintiff is given no interest in it. A year and a half after his marriage he bought the property in which he was carrying on business, at the price of $40,000. He paid in cash therefor $5,000, and afterwards, out of his income, he paid the balance of the price, and accumulated the cash on hand at the time of the trial, in addition, amounting to over $12,000. His net income at the time of the trial was about $11,000 a year. From the time of his marriage to the time of trial he allowed his wife $75 a month to run the house, and she made her own clothes. There is an unexplained discrepancy between the total amount of his income less the household expenses, and his total gains. He must have received more than he was willing to disclose, if his net income, over household expenses, amounted to as much as the money which he admits he has received, not allowing anything for his personal expenses.

The court may have believed that he had other property which he had succeeded in concealing. There was some justification for this inference, for he was caught in the act of attempting to conceal $7,761 of the cash on hand, by means of a New York draft, which he had carried in his pocket for the four months preceding the trial. It appears, however, that the decision of the court was made upon the theory that all of his gains received after marriage, from whatever sources, were to be classed as community property, and that no allowance was made in favor of his separate estate on account of interest or profit on the $15,500 invested in the business at the time of the marriage. This capital was undoubtedly his separate estate. The fund remained in the business after marriage and was used by him in carrying it on. The separate property should have been credited with some amount as profit on this capital. It was not a losing business, but a very profitable one. It is true that it is very clearly shown that the principal part of the large income was due to the personal character, energy, ability, and capacity of the husband. This share of the earnings was, of course, community property; but without capital he could not have carried on the business. In the absence of circumstances showing a different result, it is to be presumed that some of the profits were justly due to the capital invested. There is nothing to show that all of it was due to defendant's efforts alone. The probable contribution of the capital to the income should have been determined from all the circumstances of the case, and, as the business was profitable, it would amount at least to the usual interest on a long investment well secured. Bogges v. Richards, 39 W. Va. 576, 26 L.R.A. 537, 45 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Am. St. Rep. 938, 20 S. E. 599; Trapnell v. Conklyn, 37 W. Va. 252, 38 Am. St. Rep. 30, 16 S. E. 570; Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Gratt. 503, 94 Am. Dec. 478; Glidden v. Taylor, 16 Ohio St. 509, 91 Am. Dec. 98. We think the court erred in refusing to increase the proportion of separate property and decrease the community property to the extent of the reasonable gain to the separate estate from the earnings properly allowable on account of the capital invested.

It is true that the disposition of the community property by the superior court, in all particulars, including matters committed to its discretion, is subject to revision in this court on appeal. Civil Code, § 148; Eslinger v. Eslinger, 47 Cal. 64; Brown v. Brown, 60 Cal. 580; Strozynski v. Strozynski, 97 Cal. 192, 31 Pac. 1130. In each of these cases the supreme court increased the wife's share of the community property from one half, as given by the trial court, to three fourths. But the wife has not appealed, and we cannot, upon the husband's appeal, change the judgment by increasing the share of community property given to the wife. The only error, in respect to community property, which we can consider upon this appeal by the husband, is the error in classing as community property that part of the gains which was derived from the "issues and profits" of his separate property (Civil Code, § 163), the amount of which we cannot determine. It will be necessary to remand the case for a retrial of this issue. The court below will be free, upon such new trial, to apportion a larger share of the community property to the plaintiff, or to divide it between the parties in such shares as it shall deem just, under all the circumstances. The present division seems fair in point of fact.

3. The appellant further claims that, under the amendment of 1903 to §§ 131 and 132 of the Civil Code, the court has no power, at or before the time of rendering the interlocutory judgment of divorce, to make any inquiry, finding, or decree with respect to the property rights of the parties, or with respect to any other subject connected with the divorce, except the right of the complainant to a divorce. Section 131 on this point is as follows: "In actions for divorce the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases, and if it determines that no divorce shall be granted, final judgment must thereupon be entered accordingly. If it determines that the divorce ought to be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce." Section 132 provides that, when "one year has expired after the entry of such interlocutory judgment, the court on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter the final judgment granting the divorce, and such final judgment shall restore them to the status of single persons, and permit either to marry after the entry thereof; and such other and further relief as may be necessary to complete disposition of the action. . . . The death of either party after the entry of the interlocutory judgment does not impair the power of the court to enter final judgment as hereinbefore provided; but such entry shall not validate any marriage contracted by either party before the entry of such final judgment, nor constitute any defense of any criminal prosecution made against either." As these provisions were made after the other sections of the Code had been in force for many years, it was to be expected that the new provisions would not in all respects be consistent in language with other sections on the same subject. In § 146 the Code speaks of a disposition of the community property "in case of the dissolution of the marriage." In § 147 the Code declares that "the court in rendering a decree of divorce must make such order for the disposition of the community property and of the homestead as in this chapter provided," and in § 90 it declares that marriage is dissolved only by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction declaring a divorce. From these provisions it is argued by the appellant that the court's power to make a disposition of the property rights of the parties exists only at the time when the divorce judgment becomes final, and that any act attempted to be accomplished before that, in the way of a trial or interlocutory judgment declaring the property rights or the rights to the custody of children, is coram non iudice, and void.

We do not think that the Code provision requires such a narrow construction. When the history of legislation on the subject and the conditions existing at the time of the adoption of the amendment of 1903 are considered, the purpose, meaning, and effect of that amendment are not difficult to discover. While the law deems it necessary to provide that a divorce may be granted when conditions are such as to make the marriage relation intolerable, it is nevertheless true that the policy of the law does not favor the dissolution of marriages. It has been generally believed that many divorces were sought, not in good faith, but because a roving fancy had found another affinity more attractive, and that a dissolution was often desired solely for the purpose of forming a new marital connection. With the design of providing conditions under which it would be understood that ardent passions of this character must perforce have time to cool before a new marriage relation could be actually formed, the legislature, in 1897, enacted a law in effect providing that no marriage should be entered into by any divorced person until at least one year had elapsed after the decree of divorce was rendered. Stat. 1897, chap. 36, p. 34. It had become customary to avoid the provisions of this act by the expedient of going to an adjacent state for the purpose of entering into a new marital relation. This court was compelled to hold that marriages contracted in another state were valid in this state, although they were entered into within less than a year after a divorce had been granted in this state to one of the parties. Re Wood, 137 Cal. 129, 69 Pac. 900. The purpose of the amendment of 1903 was to carry into effect the object attempted to be attained by the statute in 1897. To do this the expedient was adopted of delaying the final judgment in divorce cases for the period of one year after it was judicially ascertained that a divorce should be granted. By thus making the right to a divorce ineffective for the period of one year, it became impossible for the parties to contract a valid new marriage anywhere until at least a year after the trial of the action of divorce had taken place. Except so far as was necessary to accomplish this object, it was not the intent of the statute to change in any respect the practice and procedure in actions for divorce. We do not doubt that the court has the same power now that it has always had to try and determine the issues between the parties in a divorce action with respect to property and custody of children, and that this may, and generally should, be done at the same time as the issues with respect to the cause for divorce are tried and determined. Unquestionably the court would have power under the present law, as it always has had the power under previous laws, to postpone the trial and decision of the property rights and custody of the children to any reasonable time after the rendition of the judgment of divorce, whether interlocutory or final. The amendment has not changed its power in this respect. It is proper in all actions for divorce to try the entire action at the same time as the issues respecting divorce are tried and to give an interlocutory judgment declaring the rights of the parties with respect to property and children.

We commend the action of the court below in this case in declaring, in its interlocutory decree concerning the property, that the rights therein specified should become final at the time the decree of divorce became final. We are not called upon here to determine whether the adjudication of property rights would or would not have been final at the expiration of six months from the time of the entry of the interlocutory decree, if no appeal had been taken, and the parties had, before the expiration of one year and after the expiration of the six months, by mutual consent, procured an order from the court annulling the interlocutory decree of divorce; or whether such annulment would have had the effect of setting aside the decree relating to property rights and children. These questions are not involved in this case, and it will be well to leave them for future disposition in some case where they are directly presented. In the present case the court determined all the issues in one trial, and rendered an interlocutory judgment declaring the rights of the parties upon all the issues, and providing that the same should in all respects become final only at the time when the decree of divorce became final, in the meantime allowing temporary alimony. We see no objection to this practice, and commend it as not only within the power of the court, but as a proper method of the exercise of that power.

The judgment as to the amount and value of the community property and as to the disposition thereof between the parties is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial and judgment upon that issue alone. In all other particulars the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: Angellotti, J.; Sloss, J.; Henshaw, J.; Lorigan, J.; Melvin, J.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following Per Curiam response was handed down July 30, 1909:

Since the filing of the opinion in this case, the plaintiff has asked that, instead of remanding the case for a new trial of the issues as to the property, the judgment be modified in regard thereto, and has filed a written consent that the defendant be allowed, as part of his separate estate, out of the cash on hand, interest at the rate of 7 per cent on the $15,500 found to be the capital invested in his business. This removes the objection to directing a modification of the judgment. The defendant introduced no evidence to show that the capital invested was entitled to a greater return than legal interest, and, in the absence of such evidence, the burden of proof being upon him, that would be the utmost he could claim. The wife would have been entitled to an opportunity to prove, if she could, that it earned a smaller proportion of the profits than legal interest, and, she being the respondent, it was for that reason considered necessary to order a new trial for that purpose. Her consent aforesaid avoids this necessity, and leaves the case in such condition that a modification of the judgment will end the litigation, with justice to both parties. Fox v. Hale & N. Silver Min. Co. 122 Cal. 221, 54 Pac. 731.

Interest at 7 per cent on the $15,500 from April 19, 1900, the date of the marriage, to November 3, 1905, the time of the trial, amounts to $6,012.70. Deducting this from $12,139.03, found to be the cash on hand at the time of the trial, leaves $6,126.33, as the part of the cash belonging to the community. The plaintiff's three fifths of this is $3,675.86, and the defendant's two fifths is $2,450.47.

It is ordered that the judgment be modified by changing the respective statements of the shares of each in the cash on hand therein, so that the part relating to the plaintiff's share shall read as follows: "Second. The sum of three thousand six hundred and seventy-five and 86-100 dollars ($3,675.86) in cash, being three fifths of the sum of $6,126.33 in cash, found by the supreme court to be community property of the plaintiff and defendant; and that no interest in defendant's separate property be awarded to plaintiff." And so that the part relating to the defendant's share shall read as follows: "Second. The sum of two thousand four hundred and fifty and 47-100 dollars ($2,450.47) in cash, being two fifths of the sum found to be community property as aforesaid." And that as so modified the judgment stand affirmed; the plaintiff to recover all costs.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

ELLEN M. DARCEY, Appt.,

v.

PATRICK L. DARCEY.

(— R. I. —, 71 Atl. 595.)

Pleading — demurrer — grounds — sufficiency.

1. Grounds of demurrer to a bill for specific performance of a contract, that the complainant does not state such a case as would entitle him to the relief sought, that the contract is void and of no effect, and that the promise is such that it cannot be enforced, are too general to be considered by the court.

Note. — Thorough searching has disclosed no other decision involving an agreement by a husband to transfer property to his wife in the event of his resuming illicit relations with another woman. As to the validity of a contract making provision for wife in the event of her obtaining divorce for subsequent fault of husband, see Pereira v. Pereira (Cal.) 103 Pac. 488, ante, 880, and accompanying note.

Husband and wife — contract — validity.

2. Under statutory authority to a married woman to make any contract as though she were single, a husband and wife have power to enter into a contract by which he undertakes to transfer real estate to her in case he resumes illicit relations with a paramour.

Contract — consideration — condonation of marital offense.

3. A contract by which a man undertakes to convey real estate to his wife upon resumption of illicit relations with his paramour, in case she condones his past offense and discontinues a proceeding for divorce against him, is supported by a valuable consideration.

Damages — liquidated — penalty.

4. An agreement by a man to convey real estate to his wife in case he resumes illicit relations with his paramour, in case she condones his offense and discontinues divorce proceedings against him, provides for liquidated damages, and not a penalty or forfeiture.

Same — excess — power of court.

5. The court cannot say that a conveyance of one half of a man's real estate to his wife as compensation for past unfaithfulness to his marriage vows is excessive damages for the wrong done her, when the parties have agreed that such compensation is just; nor that his agreement to convey the other half in case of future misconduct provides more than adequate compensation.

(January 13, 1909.)

APPPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties dismissing a bill filed to compel specific performance of a contract to convey real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Hugh J. Carroll, for appellant:

Such contracts between husband and wife are enforceable.

Dakin v. Dakin, 97 Mich. 284, 56 N. W. 562; Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 264, 73 N. W. 363; Chase v. Phillips, 153 Mass. 17, 26 N. E. 136; O'Day v. Meadows, 194 Mo. 588, 112 Am. St. Rep. 542, 92 S. W. 637; Fisher v. Koontz, 110 Iowa, 498, 80 N. W. 551, 81 N. W. 702; Burkholder's Appeal, 105 Pa. 37; Beach, Contr. §§ 1546, 1547; Masterson v. Masterson, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1193, 60 S. W. 301; Sommer v. Sommer, 87 App. Div. 434, 84 N. Y. Supp. 444.

Messrs. Claude J. Farnsworth and Thomas F. Vance for appellee.

Dubois, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the decree of the superior court sustaining the respondent's demurrer and dismissing the complainant's bill in equity.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The bill of complaint was brought by the complainant against the respondent for the purpose of enforcing his specific performance of the following agreement:

This agreement made and entered into the 27th day of November, A. D. 1906, by and between Patrick L. Darcey, known also as Lawrence P. Darcey, and Ellen M. Darcey, his wife, both of Pawtucket, in the county of Providence, state of Rhode Island, witnesseth:

Whereas, the parties hereto have been living apart, and said wife has a suit for divorce now pending in the supreme court of this state against her said husband; and whereas, they are desirous of settling their differences and become reconciled, it is therefore agreed as follows:

I. Said P. L. Darcey, husband as aforesaid, agrees to execute and deliver to his said wife a good and sufficient deed of one-half interest in the real estate owned by said husband on the westerly side of High street, Pawtucket, and land situate and known as the northeasterly side of Broadway, in said Pawtucket (Nos. 86, 88, and 90 Broadway), one half of the land on Osborn street, Providence, Rhode Island, with the buildings and improvements thereon, which said land shall hereafter be owned in common by them, each owning one half.

II. Said Ellen M. Darcey shall also have the rents of the estates which she is at present receiving.

III. Said Patrick L. Darcey further agrees that he shall never again consort with, keep the company of, or support or pay any money or other valuables to, a certain woman known by the name of Hughes, or the child she claims belongs to said Patrick L. Darcey. If said Patrick L. Darcey shall break this agreement concerning said woman, either in letter or spirit, then this condonation shall be void, and said Patrick L. Darcey shall immediately convey to said Ellen M. Darcey his remaining interest in the above-mentioned land; and, in case of his neglect or refusal so to do on the occurrence of such breach of this agreement by him, the superior court of this county is hereby authorized, on the application of said Ellen M. Darcey, to appoint a commissioner to make such conveyance to said Ellen M. Darcey and her heirs.

IV. And the said Ellen M. Darcey hereby agrees to discontinue the said petition for divorce and to condone the matters between herself and her said husband, in consideration of the premises, and to live with said Darcey as his lawful wife, and care for him as such and of their common home and estates.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto do hereunto set their hands and seals, binding themselves and their several and respective heirs, the day and year above written.

Paragraph II. erased before signing.

L. P. Darcey. [Seal.]

Ellen M. Darcey. [Seal.]

In presence of H. J. Carroll.

The demurrer referred to was based upon the following grounds:

"(1) That said complainant does not state such a case as would entitle him to the relief sought.

"(2) That said agreement mentioned in said bill of complaint is void and of no effect.

"(3) That said agreement mentioned in said bill of complaint was given without any consideration whatsoever."

"(4) That said agreement is a voluntary one and cannot be enforced in a court of equity.

"(5) That the promise of the gift of the land in question under the conditions set out in the agreement is such that, under the allegations set out in the bill, cannot be enforced and the respondent compelled to make a transfer thereof.

"(6) That said agreement to make said transfer under the conditions set out in the bill was entered into by the respondent without any valuable consideration.

"(7) That said bill does not set out the whole of said agreement, nor make a copy of the same a part of said bill of complaint.

"(8) That by said bill it appears that said complainant has not kept and performed her part of said agreement."

The reasons given by the superior court for sustaining the demurrer and for dismissing the bill were: "The agreement of which the complainant prays specific performance is plainly in the nature of a penalty agreed upon by the parties for the future breach of said agreement by the respondent. Equity will not lend its aid to enforce a penalty or a forfeiture, and the complainant cannot have in this proceeding the relief which she seeks."

The first, second, and fifth grounds of demurrer are too general to be considered; the seventh and eight specifications are without merit; and the third and fourth grounds add nothing to those contained in the sixth paragraph. Therefore the only questions necessary to be considered are the following: Were the parties capable of entering into the agreement? Second, was the agreement entered into without a valuable consideration? And, third, shall the conveyance promised by the respondent upon breach of his said agreement be regarded as a penalty or forfeiture, or in the nature of liquidated damages?

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

There can be no question but that the complainant and respondent had the right to enter into the agreement. Under the provisions of Pub. Laws, chap. 335, § 1, passed May 14, 1896, Gen. Laws 1896, chap. 194, § 3, was amended so as to read as follows: "Sec. 3. A married woman may make any contract whatsoever the same as if she were single and unmarried, and with the same rights and liabilities." The agreement is based upon a valuable consideration. "A valuable consideration is some legal right acquired by the promisor in consideration of his promise, or forbore by the promisee in consideration of such promise." 1 Page, Contr. § 274, and cases cited. By clause IV. of the agreement the said Ellen M. Darcey agrees to discontinue her petition for divorce, and the bill avers and the demurrer admits that she did discontinue the same. This was clearly a forbearance to prosecute a legal right which she had. Sommer v. Sommer, 87 App. Div. 434, 84 N. Y. Supp. 446; Duffy v. White, 115 Mich. 270, 73 N. W. 363; Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 216, 36 L.R.A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 462, 45 N. E. 737, and cases cited. See also Adams v. Adams, 91 N. Y. 384, 43 Am. Rep. 675, in which the remarks of Rapallo, J., are pertinent: "We are unable to perceive on what ground the arrangement can be regarded as against public policy. It tended to restore peace and harmony between husband and wife, and renew their conjugal relations. Agreements to separate have been regarded as against public policy; but it would be strangely inconsistent if the same policy should condemn agreements to restore marital relations, after a temporary separation had taken place. While the law favors the settlement of controversies between all other persons, it would be a curious policy which should forbid husband and wife to compromise their differences, or preclude either from forgiving a wrong committed by the other." We regard the conveyance to be made by the respondent upon violation of his agreement, in the light of liquidated damages, and not as a penalty or forfeiture.

The bill alleges and the demurrer admits that the respondent has performed that portion of his contract set out in the first paragraph thereof, and that thereby the complainant has become the owner of an undivided one-half part of the real estate and improvements therein mentioned. It is apparent from the agreement that this was regarded by the parties as compensation to the wife for the injury that she had theretofore sustained by reason of the misconduct of her husband. If one half of this real estate was deemed by the parties to be the equivalent of adequate damages for past misconduct, why should we question it? No one claims that the agreement was made with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors. The innocent and injured wife and her guilty husband were also fully competent to fix the amount of damages the wife would sustain in case of the husband's future adultery with his former paramour, in which case the home re-established in pursuance of the agreement would be broken up, in violation thereof; and again the wife would be abandoned for the mistress, and made to suffer as much or more than before. In such circumstances can we say that the other half of the real estate is more than adequate compensation to the petitioner? We think not.

The bill alleges and the demurrer admits that the respondent has violated the essential condition of his agreement. We find, therefore, that the agreement is valid and subsisting, that it is founded on a valuable consideration, that the complainant has performed her part of the agreement, and that the respondent has broken the same. The complainant is entitled to the relief sought.

The decree of the Superior Court is hereby reversed, and the cause is remanded to the Superior Court, with direction to overrule the respondent's demurrer, and for further proceedings in conformity herewith.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS' SAVINGS BANK OF ARISPE, IOWA, Appt.,
v.

ARISPE MERCANTILE COMPANY et al.

(139 Iowa, 246, 117 N. W. 672.)

Pleading — separate counts — renewal note — invalidity.

1. That the indorsement on a renewal note set out in one count of a complaint to recover the amount due proves to be a forgery does not preclude a recovery on the original note, which is set out in another count.

Note — renewal — forgery — original liability.

2. The giving of a renewal note has no effect, in the absence of an agreement therefor, to discharge either the makers or indorsers of the original obligation, if for any reason not chargeable to the wrong or fraud

Note. — See note to Hier v. Harpster, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 204, upon payment of promissory note by maker which proves ineffectual as a satisfaction, as affecting the liability of a surety thereon. And see also note to Bank of Benson v. Jones, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 343, as to whether surety is discharged by obligee's surrender of original obligation and acceptance of another which is defective.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of the holder, the renewal proves to be invalid.

(September 22, 1908.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Union County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. Brown, for appellant:

The defendants, as indorsers, were liable on the first note, after the renewal note proved without value.

Hill v. Aultman, 68 Iowa, 630, 27 N. W. 788; Gamble v. Mullin, 74 Iowa, 99, 36 N. W. 909; Potter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 46 Iowa, 399; Steele v. Crabtree, 130 Iowa, 313, 106 N. W. 753; Ford v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 106 Iowa, 85, 75 N. W. 650; Humboldt State Bank v. Rossing, 95 Iowa, 1, 63 N. W. 351; German Sav. Bank v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 101 Iowa, 530, 63 Am. St. Rep. 399, 70 N. W. 769; Goodrich v. Tracy, 43 Vt. 314, 5 Am. Rep. 281; Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1, 44 N. W. 1123; Stratton v. McMakin, 84 Ky. 641, 4 Am. St. Rep. 215; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 339-341.

Mr. J. H. Macomber also for appellant.
Messrs. Sullivan & Fry for appellees.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun upon a promissory note purporting to have been made by the Arispe Mercantile Company by Burr Forbes, president, and Frank Forbes, secretary, payable to the order of Burr Forbes & Son, and indorsed by that firm to the plaintiff bank. To this claim the defendants Forbes & Son, who are sued as indorsers, answer, denying any indebtedness thereon, and alleging that the note was never delivered to the bank, but placed in its custody for safe-keeping, and was never indorsed by the payee therein named. The mercantile company also pleaded substantially the same matter in defense. After this defense had been raised, the plaintiff amended its petition by adding a second count, alleging that on May 25, 1904, and prior to the making of the note in suit, the Arispe Mercantile Company made to Burr Forbes & Son its promissory note for $1,000, due August 25, 1904, which note was then indorsed to the plaintiff. It is further alleged that this note fell due, and, not being paid, the mercantile company made, and Burr Forbes & Son indorsed to the plaintiff in renewal thereof, the note mentioned in the first count; but said plaintiff further says that, doubts having arisen as to the validity of said renewal note, it asks that, in case it be found not entitled to recover thereon, it may have judgment against the defendants upon the original note, which it alleges has never been paid.

1. It is not material that we consider the evidence bearing upon the genuineness of the indorsement upon the note described in the first count of the petition; for, if its forgery has been established, it does not necessarily defeat the plaintiff's recovery on the second count. The only instruction given by the trial court with reference to the matters pleaded in the second count is in the fifth paragraph of its charge, and the following is the material part thereof: "You are instructed that if the plaintiff has shown and proved by a preponderance of the evidence that the note in question, Exhibit A, was renewal of the note of date May 25, 1904, and that one of the defendants, Burr Forbes or Frank Forbes, delivered said note in question, Exhibit A, to the plaintiff in renewal of the note for $1,000 of date May 25, 1904, and you further find that at the time of the delivery of the note in question, Exhibit A, to plaintiff by one of the defendants, that the indorsement now appearing on said note was then on the note, then you are instructed that this in law would amount to an adoption of the signatures then appearing on said note, and on this issue of the indorsement you should find for the plaintiff and against Burr Forbes & Son. And, in connection herewith, if you find that the defendants Burr Forbes & Son indorsed Exhibit A, then you are instructed that a valuable consideration would be presumed, and plaintiff should recover against the defendants Burr Forbes & Son, unless Burr Forbes & Son show and prove by a preponderance of the evidence that there was no valuable consideration for said note in question, Exhibit A. But, if you find the fact to be that the defendant Burr Forbes & Son received $1,000 for the sale of the first note of date May 25, 1904, and that this note in question, Exhibit A, is a renewal thereof, and you find that the defendants Burr Forbes & Son indorsed Exhibit A as heretofore defined, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and against Burr Forbes & Son. Should you find under the evidence that there was no valuable consideration, or should you find that the defendant did not indorse the note as heretofore defined, then your verdict should be for the defendants Burr Forbes & Son." It will be observed that this instruction gives the jury no authority to find for plaintiff on the second count of its petition, but, at most, authorizes them to look to the original note only as bearing upon the consideration of the note mentioned in the first count. In this we think there was error; for, as we have already said, we may resume the proof of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the alleged forgery to have been complete, yet the right of recovery on the original note would not necessarily be impaired. The giving of a renewal note had no effect, in the absence of an agreement thereof, to discharge either the makers or indorsers of the original obligation, if, for any reason not chargeable to the wrong or fraud of the holder, the renewal proves to be invalid. Indeed, in accordance with a long line of precedents, it is always allowable for the plaintiff to declare in his petition in one count upon a promissory note or other written obligation, and in another upon the original indebtedness or consideration for which the note was given. Kimball v. Bryan, 56 Iowa, 632, 10 N. W. 218. The two claims are not inconsistent, and, where but one recovery is sought, no election is required. O'Conner v. Hurley, 147 Mass. 145, 16 N. E. 764; Rhodes v. Pray, 36 Minn. 392, 32 N. W. 86; Winsted Bank v. Webb, 39 N. Y. 325, 100 Am. Dec. 435. It should be noted, also, in the case before us that the answer to the claim set up on the original note is a mere denial. No want of consideration for said note is pleaded, and, while the plea refers to and incorporates by reference the answer to the first count, there is nothing which by the most liberal construction can be held to constitute a plea to the consideration for the note. A mere denial of indebtedness upon a promissory note or written promise to pay does not put the consideration of the promise in issue. Nelson v. White, 61 Ind. 139; Sharpless v. Giffen, 47 Neb. 146, 66 N. W. 285; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Hague (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 654; University of Des Moines v. Livingston, 57 Iowa, 307, 42 Am. Rep. 42, 10 N. W. 738. We call attention to the condition of the issues principally to emphasize our conclusion that the failure of the court to instruct upon this branch of the law of the case was clearly prejudicial. Moreover, a reading of the record makes it very evident that there was such a manifest failure of justice as requires the granting of a new trial.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the District Court is reversed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIRST CIRCUIT.

BOSTON ELEVATED RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

PAULINE A. SMITH.

(94 C. C. A. 84, 168 Fed. 628.)

Street railway company — injury to passenger — sudden start.

1. The fact that an electric street car will start with more or less of a jerk is one of the risks assumed by passengers, so that the mere facts that a car starts with a sudden movement or jerk, and that a passenger is thrown to the floor and hurt, do not make out a case of negligence which will render the company liable for the injury; but to render it liable the start must be shown to have been unusually sudden and violent.

Same — passenger not seated.

2. Negligence on the part of a street car conductor is not shown by his giving the signal to start the car as soon as a heavy woman passenger is safely inside the vestibule, where there are no extraordinary or exceptional circumstances making it his duty to exercise special care to wait until she is seated before starting.

(March 16, 1909.)

Case Note — Negligence in starting street car with jerk.

This question presupposes that the car was at a standstill when suddenly started with a jerk. Therefore cases of negligence in the sudden acceleration of speed, or jolts caused by sharp curves or defective tracks, are eliminated.

The general rule appears to be, as stated in Boston Elev. R. Co. v. Smith, that the mere facts that a street car started with a jerk, and that a passenger fell and was hurt, do not make out a case of negligence against the company. Jameson v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 193 Mass. 560, 70 N. E. 751; Roehat v. North Hudson County R. Co. 49 N. J. L. 445, 10 Atl. 710; Hayes v. Forty-second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 97 N. Y. 259; Black v. Third Ave. R. Co. 2 App. Div. 387, 37 N. Y. Supp. 830; Hirsch v. Union R. Co. 48 Misc. 527, 96 N. Y. Supp. 333; Normington v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. 43 Misc. 526, 96 N. Y. Supp. 261; Bollinger v. Interurban Street R. Co. 50 Misc. 293, 98 N. Y. Supp. 641.

But in order to establish negligence, the plaintiff must go further, and make it affirmatively appear that the car was started with an extraordinary or unusual jerk. Pryor v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 85 Mo. App. 367.

Mere statements by the witnesses that the start was violent or sudden do not show that the movement differed in any way from that usually attending the starting of a street car, and are not sufficient evidence of negligence. Hayes v. Forty-second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. and Bollinger v. Interurban Street R. Co., supra.

But if it is made to appear that the jerk was sufficient to throw down many of the passengers, this is sufficient to establish the fact that it was an unusual and negligent start. Grötsch v. Steinway R. Co. 19 App. Div. 130, 45 N. Y. Supp. 1075.

In Evansville Street R. Co. v. Meadows, 13 Ind. App. 155, 41 N. E. 398, where it appeared that the driver of a street car left the mules unattended, and was at the other end of the car when they started forward with a jerk, throwing a ten-year-old child 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Massachusetts to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Colt, Putnam, and Lowell, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. M. F. Dickinson and Walter Bates Farr for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Julian C. Woodman, for defendant in error:

Assuming that the conductor has a right to give the signal to start when the passenger has reached the vestibule of the car, it follows that the carrier then owes a duty to such person to so start the car that he

from the car, it was held that actionable negligence was shown.

To establish negligence, it may not be necessary to show that the sudden start of a standing car with a jerk was unusual or violent, if it appears that the passenger at the time was in the act of alighting, and by reason of the jerk was thrown down and injured. Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Bloomer, 77 C. C. A. 146, 146 Fed. 720; Birmingham Union R. Co. v. Hale, 90 Ala. 8, 24 Am. St. Rep. 748, 8 So. 142; Cody v. Market Street R. Co. 148 Cal. 90, 82 Pac. 666; Denver Consol. Tramway Co. v. Rush, 19 Colo. App. 70, 73 Pac. 664; Georgia R. & Electric Co. v. Reeves, 123 Ga. 697, 51 S. E. 610; Chicago City R. Co. v. Dinsmore, 162 Ill. 658, 44 N. E. 887; Paducah Traction Co. v. Baker (Ky.) 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1185, 113 S. W. 449; United R. & Electric Co. v. Beidelman, 95 Md. 480, 52 Atl. 913; United R. & Electric Co. v. Woodbridge, 97 Md. 629, 55 Atl. 444; Bell v. Central Electric R. Co. 125 Mo. App. 660, 103 S. W. 144; Black v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 130 Mo. App. 548, 109 S. W. 86; Martin v. Second Ave. R. Co. 3 App. Div. 448, 38 N. Y. Supp. 220; Gregorio v. New York City R. Co. 49 Misc. 249, 97 N. Y. Supp. 373; Paul v. Salt Lake City R. Co. 30 Utah, 41, 83 Pac. 563, s. c. on subsequent appeal 34 Utah, 1, 95 Pac. 363.

In Kantrowitz v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 63 App. Div. 65, 71 N. Y. Supp. 394, it was held that the company was not liable for negligence, where the sudden starting of a street car was to avoid a collision which seemed imminent, and for which the company was not to blame.

Upon the question of negligence in starting street car before passenger is seated, see note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hale, 42 L.R.A. 294.

As to the applicability of the rule res ipsa loquitur to injuries to passengers on vehicles, caused by jolts or jerks, see case note to Foley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1076.

Upon the general question of presumption of negligence from injury to passenger, see subject note to McGinn v. New Orleans R. & Light Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 601.

will not be thrown down; and if so thrown down, the very act of falling while he was in the exercise of due care, and while in an admittedly safe place, would in itself be some evidence of negligence in the start of the car.

Powelson v. United Traction Co. 204 Pa. 474, 54 Atl. 282; Bainbridge v. Union Traction Co. 206 Pa. 71, 55 Atl. 836; Lacour v. Springfield Street R. Co. 200 Mass. 34, 85 N. E. 868; Dougherty v. Missouri P. R. Co. 9 Mo. App. 478; Cohen v. West Chicago Street R. Co. 9 C. C. A. 229, 238, 18 U. S. App. 593, 60 Fed. 698.

That plaintiff was a large, heavy woman and moved slowly, that she was encumbered at the time of the accident with a hand bag and umbrella in one hand and her skirts in the other, that she was in full view of the conductor throughout, and that he had had but five and a half weeks' experience, were circumstances proper for a jury to consider on the question of negligence in starting the car before she reached a seat.

Hamilton v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 193 Mass. 324, 79 N. E. 734; Gordon v. West End Street R. Co. 175 Mass. 181, 55 N. E. 990; Steeg v. St. Paul City R. Co. 50 Minn. 149, 16 L.R.A. 379, 52 N. W. 393; Holmes v. Allegheny Traction Co. 153 Pa. 152, 25 Atl. 640.

Colt, Circuit Judge delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of tort to recover damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff was a passenger on an electric street car operated by the defendant. She had just boarded the car, when, upon the sudden movement of the car in starting, she fell upon the floor, inflicting the injuries complained of. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

At the close of the evidence the defendant requested the court to rule as follows: "(1) Upon all the evidence in the case the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. (2) There is no evidence in this case sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the plaintiff's injuries were due to the negligence or carelessness of the motorman in the way and manner in which he started the car. (3) Nor is there sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding that the conductor was negligent or careless in giving the signal to start the car when he did, under all the circumstances in this case." These rulings the court declined to make, and the defendant duly excepted. There were also other requests for rulings, which we find it unnecessary to consider.

The material facts are as follows:

On November 15, 1906, about 8 o'clock in the evening, when returning home from her 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

work, the plaintiff boarded one of the defendant's inward-bound cars at the corner of P. and Third streets, South Boston. She was carrying in her hand at the time an umbrella and a small hand bag. The night was stormy. The car had just left the car house, and the only other persons on the car, except the motorman and conductor of the car, were three conductors employed by the defendant, who were returning home after their day's work. The car was a vestibuled closed car, and the threshold of the door leading into the car was 6½ inches above the floor of the platform, and on this threshold were two small projections on which the door runs.

The plaintiff was a German woman, fifty-two years of age, 5 feet 5 inches in height, and weighed about 198 pounds. She was a stout woman in appearance, and she was slow in her movements. She was accustomed to riding on electric cars. According to her story, she had mounted the platform, and was about to enter the car door, with her umbrella and bag in one hand, and holding her dress in the other, when the car was started with a sudden jerk, which threw her to the floor, injuring her leg, abdomen, and arm.

In her testimony the plaintiff says: I got onto the platform, and as I was trying to get inside the car, holding up my dress, the car started with a sudden jerk, unusually quick. I was slightly thrown back and forward before I had a chance to put my foot on the threshold of the door. I came down on my shin on the threshold with my knee. I fell on my shin, and with my left leg I went down on my knee, and I tried to reach forward to catch the door or something to hold myself, but I couldn't. I was thrown forward, and my arm came under me. One of the employees assisted me up. I had my bag and umbrella, which flew half-way in the car.

I was seated on the corner seat on the right-hand side after the accident. One of the car men came and asked my name and asked me if I was badly hurt and I said, "Yes." I could scarcely speak, but I managed to get home, but it was very hard, and I tried to go to work the next morning, but I was unable to work. I went home and sent for the doctor. I stayed home between five and six weeks, and I have not fully recovered to-day. I was out of work between five and six weeks. I was obliged to go to work in order to support myself and my aged sister. There was no trouble about finding a seat in the car. There were five car men inside the car. They sat one near each door and two on each side up above. I had an umbrella and bag in one hand, and lifted up my skirt in order to avoid stepping on it. It was raining; it was snowing; it was a very stormy night. The car windows were covered with snow. I was thrown back a little first, and then forward. When I fell I hit both my shins, both my knees, and landed very heavily on the lower part of my stomach and my arm. The car was on a straight track. My experience is that if a car is on a straight track and starts with a sudden jerk, it will throw a person backward.

Q. You did step on your skirt when you were entering?

A. I did not step on it.

Q. You say that you had got on the platform of the car, and were going inside and putting your foot on the step of the floor of the car, and that is the time the car started?

A. Yes.

Q. Which foot did you put upon the floor?

A. Right foot.

Q. You say that you were thrown back a little?

A. Thrown back a little, and then forward.

Q. How was it you were thrown forward if you didn't step on your dress?

A. The sudden jerk of the car.

Q. Sudden jerk of the car forward you mean?

A. The car started suddenly.

Q. With a jerk?

A. With a jerk, before I had a chance to get inside.

In addition to her own evidence, the plaintiff called as witnesses two physicians, who testified as to her injuries. Dr. Hayes, her attending physician, said that he called on the plaintiff on November 15, 1906; that he found, among other injuries, transverse abrasions of the right shin, about junction of the middle and lower third, with indentation of bone at that site; just above these were two smaller abrasions, similar, but not so pronounced; that the indentation was still to be found at the time of the trial. The plaintiff also called, as a witness, John W. Sullivan, an expert in the operation of electric cars, who testified as to the manner of starting cars gradually and slowly, or with a jerk. This comprises the entire evidence of the plaintiff.

The defendant called as witnesses the conductor and motorman of the car, and the three other conductors who were aboard at the time. All these witnesses testified that the car started in the ordinary way, or with no unusual jerk; and they all, except the motorman, further testified that the plaintiff was inside the car door about 2 feet when the car started, and she fell upon the floor, and that she seemed to fall by reason of tripping on her skirt.

Upon the foregoing facts the question 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of the defendant's negligence involves two inquiries:

(1) Was there any evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the motorman started the car with an unusually sudden jerk?

(2) Was there any evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the conductor was guilty of negligence in giving the starting signal too soon?

1. While the evidence shows that the plaintiff's fall and consequent injuries were caused by the movement of the car in starting, there is no substantial evidence that the car was started with any unusual jerk. The statement of the plaintiff in her declaration, that she "was violently thrown down . . . in starting the car," is not supported by the proofs. While she testifies that the car was "started with a sudden jerk, unusually quick," this is immediately qualified by the statement that she "was slightly thrown back and forward;" and this statement is repeated with a slight change in form: "I was thrown back a little first, and then forward;" and in her cross-examination, although she says "the car started suddenly," this is again qualified by the statement that she "was thrown back a little, and then forward." This evidence is consistent with the ordinary jerk of the car in starting, and is inconsistent with any sudden or violent jerk. Again, according to her own story, her position was such, as she was about stepping from the platform upon the threshold of the car, with her umbrella and bag in one hand and holding her dress in the other, that any ordinary jerk of the car in starting would be likely to throw her down, unless she braced herself in some way against the side of the door.

There is also the evidence that her "bag and umbrella flew halfway in the car," and that there was an indentation in the shin bone caused by her fall. While this evidence has a bearing on the degree of suddenness with which the car started, we do not think it is sufficient to make out a case of negligence, in the absence of other clear evidence that the start was unusually sudden or violent. The bag and umbrella would naturally be thrown from her hand in trying to save herself from falling, while the indentation might be caused by the simple fall of a heavy woman in striking her shin against the projections on the threshold of the car door.

It is well understood by persons accustomed to ride on electric cars, that the cars are liable to start with more or less of a sudden movement or jerk. Since this is one of the known and common incidents of traveling by this mode of conveyance, the ordinary passenger may be said to assume this risk. He expects that the car may start with a greater or less degree of jerk, and he realizes that he must exercise due care to protect himself against such a movement. The mere fact, therefore, that the car started with a sudden movement or jerk, and that the plaintiff was hurt, does not make out a case of negligence in the manner of starting the car, but the proof must go further, and show that the start was unusually sudden or violent.

In McGann v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 199 Mass. 446, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 506, 127 Am. St. Rep. 509, 85 N. E. 570, the plaintiff was thrown from the defendant's car and injured, and the court below refused to direct a verdict for the defendant, or to rule that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the motorman or on the part of the conductor; and the exceptions to these rulings were sustained by the supreme court. There was evidence in that case that the car "made a sudden jump," that the car "gave a jerk," and that the car "started with a sudden jerk or jump." The court in its opinion, which was drawn by Mr. Justice Loring, said: "A plaintiff does not make out a case by proving that an electric car gave a jerk or similar motion, and that he was hurt. . . . The possibility of an electric car giving a jerk is an incident of travel which every passenger must expect. To make out a case of negligence on the part of a defendant railway company in such a case, the plaintiff must go further, and introduce evidence that the jerk in question was due to a defect in the track or to negligence in the operation of the car."

In the earlier and leading case of Byron v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 177 Mass. 303, 305, 58 N. E. 1015, the plaintiff's intestate was on the rear platform of the car when the car, on passing over a switch, gave a sudden swing or jerk, which threw him from the car. In the opinion Mr. Justice Barker, speaking for the court, said: "Upon full consideration of the evidence, we are of opinion that it would not justify a finding that the defendant was negligent. . . . The plaintiff's intestate was thrown to the ground by a swaying, or jolt, or lurch of the car, as it returned to the main track from a siding. Such motions of street cars are of common and frequent occurrence, and are to be expected to a greater or lesser degree whenever the car passes from one track to another, and so are of the class of usual and unavoidable incidents in the use of cars upon the streets. . . . Unless they are unusual in degree, and caused by some defect in the car or the track, or by some unusual or dangerous rate of speed, they furnish no evidence of negligence on the part of the carrier or of its servants. . . . There 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) was no evidence that the jolt was due to any defect in the car or in the track, or that the car was proceeding at an extraordinary speed. . . . The jar felt by the different witnesses was not so great as to be unusual, or as to justify a finding that it was due to negligence of the defendant or of its servants."

In Jameson v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 193 Mass. 560, 562, 79 N. E. 750, 751, there was testimony that the plaintiff's intestate had boarded the car, and that "it started suddenly and threw him his length, and he put his hand in a woman's bandbox up to his elbow." In the opinion in that case the court said: "These statements did not go far enough to show that he was in the exercise of due care, or that the defendant's servants were negligent. All that the plaintiff proved was that in some way her testator, who was feeble on his legs, fell on the defendant's car starting, apparently in the usual way, with something of a jerk."

In Timms v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 183 Mass. 193, 66 N. E. 797, where the plaintiff was standing near the edge of the platform, and was thrown off the car and injured, the court uses the following language: "There is nothing in the evidence to show that there was any defect in the car or in the condition of the rails, and jerks in the motion of street cars are not unusual."

In Sanderson v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 194 Mass. 337, 341, 80 N. E. 515, 517, the plaintiff was thrown off the car and injured, and there was evidence that the car made a "plunge," a "kind of a lurch," a "jar ahead to a considerable extent," a "movement such as you feel when the power is applied." In the opinion Mr. Justice Hammond, speaking for the court, said: "Even if the plaintiff's theory of the accident be adopted, the evidence discloses no negligence of the defendant. There does not appear to have been any evidence of defect in the car or tracks, or of incompetency of the defendant's servants. . . . There may be movements of a car so severe that a mere description of them and their results may justify the inference that they were attributable to some negligence on the part of the carrier, but the movement described in this case is not of that character. It was not due to any defect, and the possibility of such a movement is a thing which everyone who gets upon a street car must be taken to contemplate."

Under these decisions the plaintiff's evidence in the case at bar is clearly insufficient to warrant the finding that the motorman was negligent in the way in which he started the car.

2. The remaining question is whether there was any evidence sufficient to justify a finding that the conductor was negligent in giving the starting signal too soon.

It is settled law in Massachusetts that under ordinary circumstances it is not negligence for a conductor to give the starting signal after the passenger is fully and fairly upon the car. Sauvan v. Citizens' Electric Street R. Co. 197 Mass. 176, 177, 83 N. E. 405. The practical reasons underlying this rule are obvious. The public demands as rapid transportation on street cars as conditions will permit. To this end it is necessary that there should be as little delay as possible in the frequent stopping of the cars to take on passengers. If, therefore, it were the duty of the conductor to wait until each passenger is seated before giving the starting signal, it would result in much delay, and consequently the running time would be much slower; and hence it has become the common practice, under ordinary circumstances, for the conductor to ring the starting bell as soon as the passenger is fully on the car; and it may be said that the ordinary passenger anticipates this as one of the usual incidents in the operation of street cars, and is accordingly on the lookout to protect himself from any serious consequences resulting therefrom.

In the case at bar the plaintiff was fully upon the car when the conductor gave the starting signal. She says: "I got onto the platform, and as I was trying to get inside the car, holding up my dress, the car started . . . before I had a chance to put my foot on the threshold of the door." The conductor must have given the signal to start a moment before this, and therefore the plaintiff had fully boarded the vestibule of the car at the time the signal was given. Nor does it appear that there were any extraordinary or exceptional circumstances in this case, such as might be held to take it out of the general rule laid down in Sauvan v. Citizens' Electric Street R. Co. The plaintiff was a woman of mature years and apparently in good health, and she had had experience in riding upon electric cars. That she was a stout woman, slow in her movements, and carrying a small bag and an umbrella in one hand, does not, in our opinion, take her out of the class of ordinary persons who travel on electric cars. In other words, there was nothing in her appearance of such an unusual or exceptional character as to make it the duty of the conductor to exercise special care in her case by waiting until she was seated in the car before giving the starting signal.

The facts in the Sauvan Case very closely resemble those in the case at bar. In that case the plaintiff was "a large robust woman weighing about 170 pounds," who 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"looked and was in perfect health." She got upon the car at a regular stopping place, when the car was standing still. She was proceeding to her seat when the car started, causing her to fall against the woodwork inside the car. According to her evidence, she had stepped up over the steps into the vestibule, and was fully and fairly on the floor of the vestibule of the car before the conductor rang the starting bell. Her complaint was that the starting bell was rung when she had put one foot on the floor of the car, had thrown her weight onto that foot, and was in the act of bringing the other foot forward; and she contended that on this evidence the jury could have found that the conductor, in giving the signal to start the car when he did, did not use the care which is owed by a common carrier to one of its passengers. In the opinion of the court Mr. Justice Loring said: "If the starting signal was given when the plaintiff contends that it was given, it seems hardly possible that the car could have started before the second foot had reached the car floor, or, at any rate, it might well be contended that the conductor could not have anticipated such an instantaneous response to his signal. But apart from that, it is settled in this commonwealth that under ordinary circumstances it is not negligence for a conductor to give the starting signal after the passenger is fully and fairly on the car." We think the case at bar comes clearly within the Massachusetts rule laid down in the Sauvan Case; and it follows that, the plaintiff being fully and fairly upon the car, the conductor was not guilty of negligence in giving the starting signal.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, the verdict set aside, and the case remanded to that court, with directions to order a new trial; and the plaintiff in error recovers costs in this court.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

W. M. BALL, Appt.,
v.

WILLIAM HUNT PHELAN et al.

(— Miss. —, 49 So. 956.)

Will — implication — construction.

1. A devise by implication in fee in favor of the grandchild, but not in favor of the daughter, exists in a will in which testator creates an estate in favor of his daughter for life, free from the control or debts of her husband, he to have no interest at her death, or by inheritance through their chiltolerate. There are certain principles, it is admitted, which are intended to assist in ascertaining a testator's intention, and which are controlling when that intention is doubtful. They have been invoked to sustain this judgment. Among them are the maxims that the first taker of a legacy is presumed to be the chief object of a testator's bounty; that in doubtful cases legacies are to be held vested rather than contingent, absolute rather than defeasible; that the law favors such a construction as will render estates alienable; and that the primary intent is to be regarded rather than the secondary, if both cannot prevail. But these principles shed no light upon the will now before us. They are only applicable in cases of doubtful construction. They are never allowed to defeat a plain intent expressed. The purposes of the testator in this will are not obscure. That he did not intend Levi Still to have any share of his estate absolutely, that he did not intend to expose any part of it to seizure at the suit of Levi's creditors, and that he did intend a benefit to the children of Charles Still, on the happening of an anticipated contingency, would be very plain to every common mind. It is only when refinement commences that doubts arise."

Note. — As to devise or bequest by implication, see case note to Conner v. Gardner, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 73.

Lord St. Leonards said very strongly in the profoundly considered case of Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. Cas. 68: "I deny that you are not at liberty to look at the whole frame of the will in order to collect the general intention." And in the same case he says again, speaking of a construction in the case of R. v. Melling, 1 Ventr. 230: "Now look at that: Lord Hale tells you that he could not be thought to prefer the youngest son before the issue of the eldest;" and, in his most masterly exposition in that case, he finally says: "I endeavor, and always have endeavored, to keep within those rules; but while I have endeavored to keep within those rules, I have also endeavored, where I could, to make them bend so as properly to meet the justice of the case."

Van Vleet, Vice Chancellor, put it very well in Bishop v. McClelland, 44 N. J. Eq. 450, 1 L.R.A. 551, 16 Atl. 2, 3, where he said: "A bequest may undoubtedly arise from implication, but, to warrant the court in so declaring, there must be something more than conjecture to support its declaration. The implication must be a necessary one. The probability of an intention to make the gift implied must appear to be so strong that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed to have existed in his mind. A construction in favor of a gift by implication should never be adopted, except in cases where, after a careful and full consideration of the whole will, the mind of the judge is convinced that the testator intended to make the gift."

Let us now, in the light of these general principles, come to a particular consideration of the authorities relied upon on both sides, and, first, as to the authorities which support the contention that there is here a remainder in fee to Julia's children by implication. In Frogmorton ex dem. Bramstone v. Holyday, 3 Burr. 1618, the testator, after giving, devising, and bequeathing unto his son David Hasselwood or his heirs forever certain property, devised to his other son, John Hasselwood, a certain piece of real estate, and added: "And if the said John Hasselwood shall happen to die in his minority or before he comes to age, then I give, devise . . . the said . . . [property] unto my three daughters . . . equally, share and share alike." John was of the age of seven years at the time of the making of this will. John entered upon and was seised of the property until the time of his death, which happened in 1762. In the lifetime of John, David died intestate, leaving issue, to wit, David, his eldest son, who, by deed of bargain and sale conveyed the premises away to Stephen Bramstone. It was held that John did not take a mere estate for life, but that the limitation over, only upon the contingency of his dying in his minority, shows that it was intended to give him an absolute estate in fee, which he might dispose of if he came of age, and that unless he lived to be of age, when he might dispose of it, it was meant that it should go over to the daughters named in the will, and the conclusion was that John should have the estate unless he died in his minority, although there were no words about John's leaving issue.

In Newland v. Shepherd, 2 P. Wms. 193. Sir George Newland, whose daughter had married Shepherd and had three children, after making some other dispositions, "devised the residue of his real and personal estate unto trustees . . . to pay and apply the produce and interest thereof for the maintenance and benefit of such of his grandchildren by his said daughter . . . as should be living at the time of his decease, until his said grandchildren should come to the age of twenty-one years, or be married; and he went no further nor made any other disposition of his estate." It was held that the grandchildren on arriving at age were entitled to the entire surplus, both of the real and personal estate.

In Goodtitle ex dem. Hayward v. Whitby, 1 Burr. 228, R. P., one devised his property to trustees in the following language: "In trust that they . . . should lay out . . . and bestow the rents and profits . . . for the maintenance, etc., of Thomas and John Hayward, sons of the testator's sister Elizabeth Hayward, during their minorities, and when and as they should respectively attain their ages of twenty-one, then to the use and behoof of the said sons of his sister Hayward . . . and their heirs equally." Thomas Hayward, the eldest of the testator's two nephews, died under the age of twenty-one without issue. Upon his death, his brother John being then under age, Thomas Whitby, the testator's heir at law, was let into the moiety of the deceased's nephew Thomas Hayward by the trustees. John, the surviving brother, brings the ejectment, and claimed the moiety of his deceased brother, as well as his own proper moiety, and the question was whether this moiety of Thomas, the deceased brother, belonged to John Hayward, either as heir to his brother or as surviving joint tenant, or whether it belonged to Thomas Whitby as his heir at law as an undivided estate; and Lord Mansfield held as follows: "Here, upon the reasoning of the thing, the infant is the object of the testator's bounty; and the testator does not mean to deprive him of it in any event. Now, suppose that this object of the testator's bounty marries and dies before his age of twenty-one, leaving children, could the testator intend in such an event to disinherit him? Certainly he could not." And let it be borne in mind that Julia Phelan, in this case, had children who came of age and married. Lord Mansfield said in the case supra that it was "so plain that it was a shame to cite cases upon it," but he did cite a devise (Tomkins v. Tomkins), where the devise was to his brother in trust for his eldest son, B, until he should attain twenty-one years, and if he should die before twenty-one, then a devise over, in which case the court held the age of twenty-one to be no limitation of B's interest, but only a limitation of the trust during his minority; and that B took the whole by implication; and Lord Mansfield added, "So, here, the property is absolutely given, and the limitation is one of a trust."

In the case of Crowder v. Clowes, 2 Ves. Jr. 449, the testator devised to his niece, Letitia Dawson, the sum of £1,000, to be paid to her immediately after his decease if she should happen to be then married; and then added: "But if my said niece should happen not to be married at the time of my decease, then I direct the interest for her said legacy of £1,000 to be paid to her . . . during . . . her natural life, to be calculated and paid to the day of her death, or till she should be married, . . . and if she should die unmarried, then the principal of the legacy . . . to lapse 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) for the benefit of the person who may be entitled to my real estate." The legatee was unmarried at the time of the testator's death, but married soon afterwards. The bill was filed by her with her husband claiming this legacy, and the master of the rolls said: "There is no doubt that if there are not express words or necessary, and I will say unavoidable, implication from his having given it over if she dies unmarried, I cannot supply it. I cannot dive into his intention, unless it is so expressed as to satisfy me he did mean it. The only question is, whether, upon reading this legacy and coupling it with a codicil [giving £200 more to Letitia] which may have effect upon the word 'addition,' it is not clear he meant to give her this when she married. Is it not the same as to say it shall not lapse if she does marry? I am clearly of opinion it must be raised." And so Letitia took the legacy when she married, though she married after the testator's death.

In Wainwright v. Wainwright, 3 Ves. Jr. 558, the devise was in these words, after giving to his four nephews and his niece each the sum of £300: All the rest of my personal estate not hereinbefore disposed, I give unto my said nephews Robert Wainwright and John Seagrave upon trust that they should convert the property into money and lay it out toward the maintenance of his great-nephew Thomas Wainwright, now placed with my nephew Robert Seagrave, in Nottingham, until he shall attain his age twenty-one years; and added, and in case my said great-nephew shall happen to die before he attains his age twenty-one years, then my trustees shall pay the whole of said surplus of my personal estate, etc., unto and for the benefit of my said nephew Thomas Wainwright. The testator died soon after the execution of this will. His great-nephew Thomas Wainwright, having attained the age of twenty-one, filed a bill praying that he might be declared entitled to the residue of the testator's personal estate, and the master of the rolls held that there was a necessary implication that, if the plaintiff Thomas did live and attain the age of twenty-one, he should have the residue of the personal estate, and significantly said: "Can anyone doubt about it? His death under the age of twenty-one is to give it over to his father; but if he lives to attain that age, then the testator dies intestate—that is impossible. Is it not a necessary inference exactly like that in the case I have cited?"—to wit, the case of Crowder v. Clowes, supra.

In Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Beav. 105, the will was construed as if it read as follows: "And if my son should happen to die before he attains his age of twenty-one years, then in that case I do hereby empower my wife to hold my whole estate during her natural life if she continues my widow. Likewise, I do hereby empower my trustee, at the decease of my wife, to sell my estates, both real and personal, and out of the money I direct them to pay two legacies, and the residue to go amongst my nephews and nieces." The testator died in 1809. His son John attained twenty-one in 1823, and was let into possession. The testator's widow died in 1841, and the testator's son John died in 1856, having devised the estate to Mrs. Pegg. It is true this was not a case of implication, but I cite it to show that the court in holding that the son took the estates upon death of his father, by descent, worked that result out by finding it to be the purpose of the father not to disinherit his son, the court saying: "It is impossible to understand why the testator should have given the property to his son until he was twenty-one, and then take it all away from him and give it to his nephews."

A striking case is Hoskins v. Hoskins, 9 East, 305. There the devise was: "I likewise give and bequeath unto my said son Richard the leasehold premises of Roskief, in St. Allen aforesaid, to hold the same unto my said son Richard until his son Thomas shall attain his age of twenty-one years, and no longer, but in case the said Thomas Hoskins shall die in minority, then my will is and I do hereby give and bequeath the said leasehold premises of Roskief unto John or Richard, sons of the said Richard Hoskins or either of them surviving or attaining the age of twenty-one years as aforesaid. And I desire the said premises of Roskief may be quitted and delivered up, as aforesaid, by my said son Richard Hoskins accordingly." It was held that there was an implication from the words of the will that Thomas should take Roskief in fee when he came of age. Emphasis was laid, it is true, upon the last clause quoted, but the construction was upon the whole frame and scheme of the will.

In Re Donges, 103 Wis. 497, 74 Am. St. Rep. 835, 79 N. W. 786, the devise was: "I give and bequeath to my wife, Clara Donges, all the real estate of which I may die seised, to have and to hold the same until the youngest of my children, if any be born to me, shall attain the age of twenty-one years. In case there are no children living at the time of my decease, my said wife shall be the sole owner of my real estate." The question was what was the intention of the testator if children were born to him and living at the time of his decease after the youngest attained twenty-one years of age. After an elaborate examination of authorities, in the course of a very able opinion, it was held that it was clearly the testator's intention to devise the property to the children on the majority of the youngest, they taking by implication.

Another instance of devise by implication may be profitably studied in the case of Masterson v. Townshend, 123 N. Y. 458, 10 L.R.A. 816, 25 N. E. 928. The case of Clopton v. Davies, L. R. 4 C. P. 159, is very much in point here. There was a devise to trustees to apply the rents to the benefit of the testator's granddaughter, Mary Annie Clark, until she attained the age of twenty-one, and if she should die under that age, then over. It was held that there was a devise of the fee by implication to his granddaughter, Mary Annie Clark, the court saying that to deny the implication would involve the strange consequence that, if the granddaughter die after twenty-one, the estate would go over to the two daughters named, whereas, if the granddaughter attained twenty-one, it would go over to the residuary legatees, who were other persons. The intention, the court said, was not to be imputed to the testator.

One of the strongest cases for the complainant is that of Kinsella v. Caffrey, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 154. There the testator gave £50 a year each to L. and T. for their lives, and on the death of either, leaving children, his annuity to go to such children, but if L. or T. should die leaving no children at his death, his annuity was to go to the survivor for his life, and, if both should die leaving no children, or, leaving children, the said children should die under twenty-one, both annuities were to sink into residue. T. died unmarried, and afterward L. died, leaving children. It was held that L.'s children were entitled by implication to T.'s annuity, the court asking, "Why was the event of their attaining twenty-one introduced, . . . if they were intended to take nothing prior to their attaining twenty-one?" This case squarely decides that where the limitation over to the third person is not only upon the default of children, but upon the event that such child shall die under twenty-one years of age, this last circumstance is sufficient to raise an estate by implication. The decision did not go—that is to say, the devise was not implied—upon the ground that it increased an estate already given, but because the limitation over was upon the death of a child before coming of age. Mr. Jarman prints in his valuable work, Jarman on Wills, vol. 1, p. 557, the inquiry, "Why was the event of their attaining twenty-one introduced if they were entitled to take nothing prior to their attaining twenty-one?" in italics, for the express purpose of showing that this thought was a controlling one.

In Aspy v. Lewis, 162 Ind. 494, 52 N. E. 758, an estate in remainder by implication was held to have been given to the daughter, Maria Louisa, under this provision: "And I direct further that the . . . estate [that is to say, a widowhood estate in his wife, Elizabeth] that is bequeathed to my wife shall be in the full possession of my only daughter, Maria Louisa, at the death or marriage of my wife, provided she shall be living; and if she is not living at the death or marriage of my wife, then the estate to go to the use of my brothers and sisters or their heirs." The controlling thought was that no construction of a will should be accepted unless the purpose was manifest, if that purpose resulted in the disinheritance of a child, and the construction was had so as to vest this remainder in fee by implication in Maria Louisa as carrying out the intent of the testator, although there was an express provision in the will that if Maria Louisa was not living at the death of the widow the estate should go over to the brothers and sisters.

A very important case in considering the construction of this will, not referred to by counsel on either side, is the case of Bentley v. Kaufman, 12 Phila. 435. The testatrix directed all her estate, real and personal, to be sold and the proceeds to be invested by her executors in the best securities, the interest to be paid to her son during his natural life. If her son should die without issue, then the whole investment to be given to the Lincoln Institute. It was held, first, that the words "die without issue" meant a definite failure of issue, and that, consequently, the son did not take an absolute interest in the fund, but only a life interest in the income; and, secondly, that there was a gift by implication of the corpus of the legacy to the son's issue, if he should leave any at his death. Thayer, J., made the following exceedingly strong observations on this case: "The real question, therefore, which is now to be determined is, What interest did Leon Kaufman take under his mother's will? Did he take an absolute estate, or only a life estate? And, as regards the answer to this question, no difference is to be made between that portion of Mrs. Kaufman's estate which was of her own acquisition, and that portion which she derived from her father by her survivorship of her sister Sarah and her brother Joseph; for over both portions alike she had an absolute right of control and disposition, and both alike passed under her will. Now, it must be quite plain to the common understanding that Mrs. Kaufman did not intend to give her son an absolute estate in her property, but only the interest of the proceeds, when invested, during his natural life. In the first place, she said so explicitly in her will. The gift to her son is a gift 'of the interest of my estate,' and it is 'to be paid to my son during his natural life, in half-yearly payments,' and she gives him nothing more. In the second place, she directs that if her son, Leon Kaufman, should die without issue, that the whole of her estate should go to the Lincoln Institute. What is this but a gift of the interest to the son for life, with a remainder (if one may, for convenience, speak of a remainder with reference to personality), by necessary implication, to his children, and, in default of children, a gift over to the objects of her charitable bounty? But, although this may be never so plain to the common understanding, it is asserted by the plaintiff's counsel that the intention is defeated by the application of the rule that when there is a gift of personality for life, followed by a gift over in default of issue, there being no immediate gift to the issue, the gift over is void, and the first taker takes absolutely,—a proposition entirely correct in its terms where there is no intermediate gift to the issue, either expressly or by implication, and where the gift over is dependent upon an indefinite failure of issue. But it has no application whatever in a case where the limitation over is on failure of children only, or on failure of issue within a given time, or where there is an intermediate gift by necessary implication to the issue of the first taker."

In the case of Ranelagh v. Ranelagh, 12 Beav. 200, the devise construed there was this: After giving to his two daughters during their natural lives £4,000, and to his two sons £2,000 each, during their natural lives: "In case of the decease of any of the above parties without issue, their, his or her, proportions to be divided equally amongst the survivors." It was held that "dying without issue" meant issue living at the date of the death of the legatee,—definite failure of issue. It was held further that the issue of the legatees were named in the codicil, only as a description of the contingency on which the legacy was to be given over, and that no express interest was given to the children. The master of the rolls went so far as to say that he thought it extremely probable that the testator did mean a benefit to the children, but "si voluit non dixit," and he denied the implication. He referred expressly to the distinction that might exist between the case where the first devise took for life only, and where he took the fee as to which later.

Another strong case against implication in the case of Den ex dem. Franklin v. Trout, 15 East, 394, decided in 1812 by Lord Ellenborough. Still another very striking case against implication is the case of Dowling v. Dowling, L. R. 1 Eq. 442. The case was first decided by Sir John Stuart, V. C., who held that there was an implied devise, but afterwards it was reversed. See L. R. 1 Ch. 612, decided in 1866, Dowling v. Dowling, and the devise by implication was denied. In this case the testator, R. H. Dowling, after various devises to his daughter, and to his daughter's husband, and his two sons-in-law, finally added this devise: "I also bequeath . . . to each of my sons as follows: [four in number] as also the remainder of my household furniture, and all things appertaining to my household effects, to be equally divided. That my freehold estates and all other property shall be disposed of as my executors may think best, and be added to and invested with my other personal property . . . the interest therefrom to be divided half yearly between my four sons, above named, and at the decease of either without lawful issue, such share to revert to the remainder then living, their child or children." Lord Justice Turner, construing this last provision, said: "The gift to the sons was an unlimited gift of the interest passing the capital. The expression is, 'the interest to be divided half yearly between my four sons, and at the decease of either without lawful issue, such share to revert to the remainder,' which seems to assume that the share of each was considered by the testator to have become vested in the original persons to whom he had given it. There is, therefore, in my opinion an absolute gift to the sons; but this absolute gift is subject to this condition,—that, upon the death of either of them without issue, the share is to revert to the remainder then living, or their child or children. It appears to me, upon the construction of the whole will, that the children are not to take any interest as against their parents. If the parents are out of the way, then the children are to take in their place; but so long as there are parents the children are to take nothing. The testator thought that in that case he had done enough for them, for the parents might provide for their own children." This case is exactly on all fours, in principle, with the case of Halsey v. Gee, 79 Miss. 193, 30 So. 604. That case went upon the ground that the two devisees there took the absolute interest, not a life estate,—an absolute interest, determinable, it is true, upon the contingency named, but nevertheless an absolute interest as distinguished from a life estate.

—3 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the case of Scale v. Rawlings [1892] A. C. 342, the provision was that the testator gave three freehold houses to his nephews, S. and W., upon trust to pay the rents and interest to his niece during her life, for her separate use, and after her death, she leaving no child, he gave one of the houses to S. and the two others to W. After making other bequests, he gave the residue of his whole estate to S. and W. equally. The niece died leaving children, and it was held that the niece took a life interest only, and no estate by implication was allowed to her children. Lord Halsbury said: "The difficulty which I have here is not speculating upon what peradventure may, at some time or other, have been in the testator's mind, but I must find words which are absolute and express. I may be perfectly satisfied that he intended that this lady should have an estate of inheritance in this property. I might be satisfied that that was his intention otherwise than by the words of the will, but I should be compelled to come to the same conclusion as I do now, viz., that that intention is not sufficiently expressed. . . . It is said that he intended to make a gift to the children. . . . I cannot say that he had not the intention, but all I can say is that he has not expressed it, and your lordships cannot put it in words simply because you may have some suspicion that in making his testamentary disposition that was the intention in his mind." This is perhaps as strong a statement as can be found against devise by implication, unless perhaps,—and we close quotation on this topic with the language in this case,—it is the language of Sir H. Cotton, referred to in 1 Jarman on Wills [5th ed. pp. 535, 536], where Mr. Jarman says: "Sir H. Cotton pointed out the fallacy of a proposition urged at the bar in this case, and which sometimes of late has been heard even from the bench,—that, subject to the established rules, the duty of the court was to construe the will as a person of ordinary intelligence would do, and that no such person would doubt that in this case the testator intended the widow to have a life estate. 'Of course,' said the L. J., 'we are bound by the rules which have been established by the courts to enable us to say what the words used do mean. Subject to that, we are bound to construe the will as trained legal minds. And that differs from the mind of an ordinary person in this way, that even persons of ordinary intelligence not so trained are accustomed to jump at the conclusion as to what a person means by the words he uses, by fancying he must have done what they, under similar circumstances, think they would have done. That is conjecture only, and conjecture on an imperfect knowledge of the circumstances; because, although, if the facts before them and in evidence were all the facts, they may think that they would have taken a particular course, yet it does not follow that all the facts known to the testator are in their minds, or in evidence before them, or that the testator's mind was in any way constituted as regards the attention he paid to the rights and claims of the different parties dependent on him as their minds are constituted, or that he would have acted in the same way as they. Therefore, as lawyers, we must construe the will like any other document,' with one difference only, namely, that technical words are unnecessary in a will."

These cases have been selected as the clearest statements of the law for and against devises by implication. A multitude of other cases have been cited by learned counsel on both sides, every one of which has not only been read, but carefully studied. Out of all this mass of learning, the true purpose should be to derive some general principles supported by settled authorities for our guidance in the construction of this will. If any one thing can be evident, after the review of the authorities, it is what Sir William Jones said more than two hundred years ago, that "no will has a brother." Every will must be determined upon considerations pertaining to its own peculiar facts and terms alone. One of the propositions most earnestly insisted on by the appellant is that, where there is a bequest to a person, and if he shall die without having children living at his death, then over, this does not raise an implied gift in the children, but that the parent takes an absolute interest defeasible on his dying without having had, or without leaving, a child, as the case may be. This is quoted from Jarman on Wills, 6th Am. ed. vol. 1, 555, 556. Mr. Jarman states that the reason of this construction is that the rejection of the implication in such a case is not productive of any absurdity, for, says he, "It supposes the testator, by making the interest of the legatee indefeasible on his having or leaving a child, to intend that if there are children he shall have the means of providing for them," and this rule is thus stated in all the text writers; but that is the case of the first taker taking the absolute interest, and not any less interest. It is like the case Dowling v. Dowling, supra, and it is also like the case of Boling v. Miller, 133 Ind. 602, 33 N. E. 354, and the very important case of Baker v. McLeod, 79 Wis. 534, 48 N. W. 657, the opinion 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) ion being by the very learned Judge Cassoday, in the course of which Judge Cassoday gives approval to the following quotation from the opinion of Judge Andrews in Vanderzee v. Slingerland, 103 N. Y. 54, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 249, which we also heartily indorse, to this effect: "It may be safely assumed that, where a will is dictated under the influence of family relations, it would seldom happen that a testator would intentionally cut off the issue of a son or daughter from taking the share of the parent in his estate for the benefit of collateral objects." We think this announcement of Judge Andrews is the announcement of a great and correct legal principle, to which too much heed cannot be given; and in the case of Re New York, L. & W. R. C. 105 N. Y. 89, 59 Am. Rep. 478, 11 N. E. 492, the provision of the will was this: "I direct that in case my daughter Minnie should die without issue, that my real and personal property should be possessed and enjoyed by my husband . . . and my sister . . . during their natural lives, and after their death, the said real and personal property to be divided equally between my [four] brothers [naming them] . . . share and share alike. The devise over to my husband, sister, and brothers to depend upon the contingency of my daughter Minnie dying without issue." The court held that Minnie Van Zandt took under her mother's will a base or conditional fee, defeasible on her dying without leaving issue living at the time of her death; that her issue, should she leave any, would take by inheritance from her, but that a conveyance by her in her lifetime would be effectual as against her children. We call especial attention to this case as being also identical with Halsey v. Gee, 79 Miss. 193, 30 So. 604. Minnie took an absolute interest, defeasible upon the contingency named, not a life estate. In the case of Cassell v. Cooke, 8 Serg. & R. 268, 11 Am. Dec. 610, the testator devised to his son, George Stuart, a plantation as soon as he arrived at the age of twenty-one, not saying what interest he gave, but giving generally, and then adding, "If my son George Stuart be removed by death before he be of age, his part to fall to my two daughters." It was held that George took an absolute interest defeasible upon his dying under twenty-one, and this strong language is used in the opinion of the court: "The whole doctrine of the effect of the words, 'If he should die under twenty-one,' is fully stated." In Frogmorton ex dem. Bramston v. Holyday, 1 W. Bl. 535, 3 Burr. 1618, it clearly appears that the giving over on a dying before twenty-one shows an intention that, if the party attain twenty-one, he shall have a fee simple, and this case is approved in Busby v. Busby, 1 Dall. 226, 1 L. ed. 111, as a leading one, on the general doctrine of a devise by necessary implication: "Let any man ask himself this question: 'What did the testator mean when he said if my son George be removed by death before he be of age, his part to fall to my two daughters?' His answer most assuredly would be, he intended by these words that if he arrived at that age he should have the power of disposing of it as he pleased, and, if he died without disposition, leaving heirs, it should descend to them; that the limitation over depended on one contingency,—his death within age. This is not a construction by conjecture, but one arising from the words themselves on the most necessary implication." The last four cases are of very great importance as settling the point as stated, where the first taker takes an absolute interest; and it is upon the principle announced in these four, supra, that Halsey v. Gee, supra, rests. The interest there given to the first takers was general and absolute, defeasible, however, upon the happening of the contingency named. There was not there any life estate, or any less estate than an absolute one, defeasible, however, as stated. Halsey v. Gee is perfectly sound on that principle, but it is not a case proceeding at all upon the line of decision with the two Tennessee cases, so much relied on by appellant, of Nott v. Fitzgibbon, 107 Tenn. 54, 64 S. W. 26, and Owen v. Hancock, 1 Head, 563.

But in this will, the one thing that stands out clear and distinct and unmistakable—the mountain in the landscape of the will, so to speak,—is the express and positive direction, thrice repeated in the will, that Julia shall not have anything beyond a life estate, either in the half first devised to her, or the half she was subsequently to take from her mother; that one paramount purpose dominates the whole structure of this will, and to that purpose all else must be made to bend, so that it is idle to cite authorities as to what would be the construction had Julia taken an absolute interest. It is perfectly clear that she cannot take under this will, either by descent or by purchase, any fee of any kind. It was the clear purpose of the testator to limit her, at all events, to a life estate. The very reasons urged with so much ingenuity and force by the learned counsel for appellant to show that the testator had an overshadowing fear of Julia's husband ever becoming possessed, in any manner whatever, of any interest whatever in the estate devised to Julia, furnish, themselves, the strongest ground for holding that Julia should have only a life estate, should never take a fee either by descent or by purchase, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and should never have the life estate that she had, enlarged by construction into a fee upon the birth of issue. So to hold would be absolutely to nullify the paramount provision of the will limiting Julia strictly to a life estate. What, then, is the law where the first taker, like Julia, gets only a life estate? Mr. Jarman says, in the passage above quoted, on page 556, in the first volume of his great work, as follows: "And even where the language of the will necessarily confines the interest of the parent to his life, the children will not generally be held to take by implication; it is extremely probable that the testator intended a benefit to them; but si voluit non dixit. But it seems that in such a case the court will lay hold of slight circumstances to raise a gift in the children, and thereby avoid imputing to the testator so extraordinary an intention as that the devisee or legatee over is to become entitled if the first taker have no child, but that the property is not to go to the child, if there be one, or its parent. Thus, where a testator, having by his will bequeathed £1,000 to his niece A by a codicil, reciting that she had married indiscreetly, and that he intended to withdraw the legacy out of her power to dispose of it, and out of the power of her husband so to do, did therefore direct his executors to secure his said niece the interest of the said £1,000 independently of her husband, by placing out that sum in trust for his niece, she to enjoy the interest or dividends during her life, and at her decease, without child or children, the principal and interest to be divided among such of her sisters as should be then living. Sir T. Plumer, V. C., was of the opinion that by the combined effect of the will and codicil he was justified in saying that the children took the legacy by necessary implication." And this rule has been steadily followed in many cases of great consideration; as, for example, in the case of Sturges v. Cargill, 1 Sandf. Ch. 318, where the court held that there the language of the will necessarily confined the interest of the parent to his life. The courts, in construing wills, will lay hold of slight circumstances to raise a gift in the children to avoid imputing to the testator the extraordinary intention of giving the property to the devisee over, and leaving the issue of the tenant for life unprovided for. In that case Cargill, by his will, after providing for his wife, divided his real estate into five equal parts. He gave one of these five parts to his executors in trust for the use of the wife of his son Henry during her life, and on her death the estate was to descend to Henry's children. The other four portions were given for the use of four other children. Now, it happened that Jane, at the date of the will, the wife of Henry Sturges, the son, had a large family of children, and because the will clearly showed the intention to be to deal with all alike, and there was an absence of any reason for cutting off Jane and Henry's children, it was held that the trustees took in trust for Jane for life, with remainder to her children; the court working this intention out of nothing but the mere environment of the parties and the general frame and scheme of the will. This case does not seem to be referred to by either side of the briefs.

The case of Kinsella v. Caffrey, 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 154, is exceedingly strong for the devise by implication, as is the case of Re Vowers, 113 N. Y. 569, 21 N. E. 690, and Aspy v. Lewis, 152 Ind. 594, 52 N. E. 756. The case of Langston v. Langston, 2 Clark & F. 194, is also a case of the strongest sort for the devise by implication.

What, now, are the considerations or circumstances which the court in this case should look to as showing, since Julia's estate was limited strictly to life, a remainder in fee by implication in the children of Julia? Some of them are as follows: First and chiefly, that Julia's interest was limited strictly to her life. This we regard as controlling in the construction of this will. Second, there was an exclusion, by the terms of this will, of all the marital rights of any husband that Julia might have, and especially an exclusion of any right he might have to inherit through the death of any child of his and Julia's. It would have been far more likely, on the doctrine of probabilities, that such husband might inherit from such child if Julia should be held to take a fee in any view, than if she should be limited strictly to a life estate, and the children should only take the fee absolutely after they became of age or married. The father would be much more likely to have died when this latter period came around than while Julia herself might live. Again, the fact that Hunt, by his will, provided that Bettie Hunt Selden, if Julia died without child, or if such child died before marriage or before coming of age, should take the limitation over; and he made the same sort of ulterior limitation as regards Julia Moore Driver, the other ulterior limittee. The carefulness and solicitude and anxiety manifested by Hunt to dispose of his estate, not only for life to Julia, but to provide three ulterior destinations in certain contingencies named, signalize his set purpose not to die intestate as to any part of his estate, and, consequently, his necessarily involved purpose that Julia should never take a fee of any sort of inheritance or purchase from him. And unless there was a limitation by implication to the children of Julia, then upon the coming of age or marrying of any such child, which would cut off the ulterior limitation to others, there would result necessarily an intestacy as to the remainder in fee, and Julia would, of course, take that by descent, and not as a purchaser under the will. This cannot possibly be the proper construction of this will; for in that case there would be nothing to prevent the husband from inheriting from Julia, which was most sedulously and stringently guarded against by this testator. It is said by the learned counsel for appellant that this will must have been drawn by a skillful lawyer, learned in the law of wills. We confess that a most careful study of this will has brought us to the exactly opposite conclusion. We think it is manifest that this testator thought when he wrote the will—it is a holographic will—that Julia's husband would have curtesy somehow or other in the estate she took. He could not have had any curtesy in a life estate, of course, and yet he certainly thought so, and attempted to provide against it. Nor could he have had any curtesy in a determinable fee.

The very essential nature of an estate by curtesy forbids any such view of the law. Again, it is manifest that it was the testator's thought that he could limit the right of the father of the children to take by inheritance from them. This is a thoroughly erroneous view, and yet he entertained it, as witness the provision that he should not inherit through the death of any child, etc. Again, it is impossible to read this will without seeing that it was the manifest purpose of the testator to dispose of his whole estate, and not die intestate as to any part thereof. He did not intend that Julia should take anything by inheritance from him arising out of any partial intestacy. It is to be remembered that the rule laid down by Judge Andrews in 113 N. Y. 569, supra, is strong to show that, where the limitation is over to a third person not related to the testator in blood, it is safely to be assumed that he did intend to preserve his bounty for his own blood, if that construction can reasonably be indulged. If the children of Julia were not intended to take a fee in remainder by implication, manifestly this estate went to strangers to the blood of Hunt, the testator. It must also be kept carefully in mind here that the limitation is not simply over to third persons on the default of children, but on that default plus the other contingency, that such children should die under twenty-one years of age or before they marry,—two contingencies in fact. Less than this was held in Kinsella v. Caffrey to raise the estate by implication.

It is earnestly argued by learned counsel for appellant that under the decisions of the supreme court of Tennessee, to be noted later, there was a devise here by implication, but that that implied devise is not of the remainder in fee to the children, but of a fee to Julia; that is to say, that, upon the birth of issue, Julia's life estate was, by implication, enlarged into a devise in fee. And it is urged, which is true, that the courts will go further in implying a devise of an added interest to one to whom some interest has already been devised, than they will to imply a devise, or, as it is said, create a devise in one to whom nothing had been previously devised. This abstract legal proposition may be conceded, but the complete answer to this line of argument is that if the court is driven, in this case, to imply some devise to Julia, it should most assuredly imply a devise in harmony with the perfectly plain, paramount purpose of limiting Julia strictly to a life estate, which devise would necessarily then be a devise of the remainder to the children of Julia. Assuredly, in the face of the thrice-repeated purpose to limit Julia to a life estate, and in the face of the most anxious purpose to exclude the husband from any possible interest in his estate through the children or through Julia in any manner whatever, it would be a most extraordinary construction, and a most flagrant perversion of the purpose of the testator, to hold that there is an implied devise here to Julia of a fee upon the birth of issue. It must be kept in mind that this will does not stop with giving the estate to Julia for life, and, if she dies without issue, over to Bettie Hunt Selden, but it was essential that the children should die under age, or not marry.

It is earnestly insisted by the learned counsel for appellant that the only mention of Julia's children in this will is by way of prevention of inheritance by Julia's husband of property, either through them or lack of them; and counsel stresses as the great controlling purpose of this will the idea that the husband was never, under any circumstances, to take any interest in any way. It is undoubtedly true that this was a leading purpose of the will, but it is just as clear that the testator's mode of effecting this was to limit Julia's estate to life, and leave the children to take the remainder in fee by implication. The one dominant thought in the will is the limiting of the estate Julia takes to her life strictly. If she should die without children, the husband could not then take, because the fee went over to ulterior limiters most carefully provided for. If Julia had children who arrived at age or married, which was the event which took place in this case, while no express gift is made to these children, it is incredible that the father should intend to strip them of any interest as soon as they should marry or come of age. This cannot be a sound construction. We think the learned counsel for appellant has too much stressed the anxiety of the testator to cut the husband out, in what they have to say about his curtesy in his wife's estate, and about inheriting from his children. These are mere blunders as to what the law was on the part of this testator.

There is a principle of law, as correctly stated by learned counsel for appellant, that the courts will more readily sustain a devise by implication to children upon arriving at age or marriage, where some beneficial interest had been given them during minority, than where no interest of any kind has been given them. Authorities are cited to this principle, and it is a sound principle within proper limitations, but it must be carefully guarded in its application to the terms of each particular will considered. It is very likely to be overstressed in the case of a will where it is plain that the children are mentioned in merely stating a contingency, upon the happening of which the devise over will take effect. Of course, wherever this last sort of provision clearly appears, there cannot possibly be any devise by implication; but where the devise by implication is to be maintained, or not, upon nothing but the naked test whether any interest is express and given to the children during minority, it is a test of exceedingly dangerous and delicate application; and it will be found, on a careful examination of authorities, that a devise by implication to children on arriving at age or marriage is maintained in many cases where there is nothing in the will to show any present interest devised to them, equitable or legal, during minority, such implication in such cases being worked out by the court as the plain result of the whole scheme or frame of the will of the testator.

We have most carefully and anxiously weighed the three expressions in the will from which learned counsel for appellant argue the implication must be derived, if it is derived at all, and, whilst the reasoning is exceedingly ingenious and well supported as to the abstract principles announced, it is clear that, looking to the frame of this will, its manifest scheme and design and purpose as a whole, there is discoverable upon its face the purpose to benefit these children, and there does arise a necessary implication of a remainder in fee in these children. Finally, the learned counsel for appellant most earnestly insist that the intention of this testator must be ascertained from the decisions of the supreme court of Tennessee, the state of the testator's domicile, and the learned counsel for appellees apparently concede this contention in its entirety. The rules of construction and interpretation are very accurately set forth in volume 22 of Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. at pages 1366 et seq. The land in this case is in the state of Mississippi. Nothing can be better settled than that the title to real estate is governed solely by the law of the place where the property is situated, but it is said correctly on page 1367 (b), as follows, touching the particular rule involved: "Where the inquiry is directed solely to the ascertainment of the meaning and intention of the testator from the language employed by him in the will," the lex domicilii controls. In note 3 to this section it is said, referring to the principle that the title to real estate given by will is governed by the law of the place of the situs, that a different rule seems to obtain in Mississippi, since there it was held in Cruso v. Butler, 36 Miss. 173, that "the nature, obligation, and interpretation of the instrument, and the rights and powers arising under it," must be determined by the law of the domicile. This is a just criticism of this case, in so far as the words "rights and powers arising under the will" are concerned, for the court evidently mixed the two rules of construction in that inaccurate language. In volume 30 of Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. at page 662, it is said: "It is also the legal, not necessarily the actual, intention, which governs." This is a confusing and misleading statement, as the authorities cited show. The principal case referred to under this citation is the case of Martindale v. Warner, 15 Pa. 471. That case was just this: The testator made a will by which he devised the remainder of his estate to two brothers as residuary legatees, and they both died before he did, leaving children. At the time of the making of this will the law was that these residuary legacies lapsed, and did not go to the children of the residuary legatees. But the legislature passed an act, after the will was made, on May 6, 1844, changing the rule so that the children would take. The testator lived long after this law was passed. This law on its face provided that it should apply only to wills made after its passage, and the court held, of course, that the law in force at the time of the making of the will governed. The court said, on page 480: "I do not put the case on the actual intention of the testator, but on his legal intention, which is the only safe rule. That the testator permitted his will to stand without alteration for several years, or that he may have known of the act of 1844, is nothing. It is a question of construction, depending on certain fixed principles, which ought not to be varied by fancied speculations as to the knowledge or ignorance of testators, some of whom may, or others may not, know of the statute and its legal construction." It is perfectly obvious that all that the court meant in this case, and that all that the court meant in the Cruso Case, and in the other three Mississippi cases cited, and in all cases announcing this particular principle about the difference between legal intent and actual intent, is, as stated in the passage above cited from volume 22 of Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, that where the inquiry is solely to ascertain the intention of the testator from the language employed by him in the will, what the courts of the state of his domicile have said those words will mean will control. What the courts will concern themselves about, wherever a will is under review, is the ascertainment of the testator's actual intention; what he himself meant, not what the law presumes him to have meant. In strict reasoning, a testator can have but one intent,—his own actual intent. To speak of a testator's legal intent is strictly a solecism; there is no such thing. So that, when it is said that a testator's legal intent is to be gathered from the decisions of the court of his domicile, nothing more is meant than that whatever his actual intent may have been, if he has used in his will certain technical terms to which the courts of his domicile have attached a crystalized and settled judicial meaning which has become a rule of property in that state, then such will, wherever it comes under construction in other states, will have the same meaning given to those technical words which the courts of his domicile gave them. That is absolutely what this phrase "legal intent" means, and this rule about the legal intent being governed by the courts of his domicile means. In truth, we should not speak of anything but the testator's actual intent, for that is all the testator ever had, so far as he is concerned. If that intent violates no law, it stands; if it violates the law, the will fails; unless the legislature has arbitrarily said, or the courts have by long construction said, notwithstanding his actual intent, a certain meaning shall be given to certain technical terms which he has used, which meaning shall save the will, although it may result in a different disposition from that which he intended. This principle finds no better illustration than in the now long-settled rule of construction, flowing from legislative enactment, that the words "children," "heirs," etc., which import at common law an indefinite failure of issue, shall not import an indefinite, but a definite, failure of issue, etc., making the words "issue," etc., mean issue, etc., living at the time of his death. In all such cases the actual intent was to create an estate tail, but the law, to save the purpose of the testator as far as possible, makes the failure of issue definite, and thus prevents an estate tail arising by construction. Now, this legislative declaration, followed by judicial construction, is what all these books mean by the legal intent, but it is plain that the phrase "legal intent" is a misuse of words, and that what is meant by the legal intent of the testator is simply the intent of the law; that is to say, the meaning the law imputes, whether the legislature or the courts, to the technical terms he has used in his will, not knowing their legal effect. In other words, where the testator has an actual intent that the law cannot effectuate, the law, in order to effectuate it as far as possible, gives to technical terms in his will a meaning that should save it so far as possible; but to call this construction of the law a legal intent of the testator is, as stated, purely and simply a solecism. There is no such thing as the testator's legal intent in this sense; so that the rule invoked by learned counsel for appellant means nothing more than that where, in a will, a testator has used certain technical terms, which terms have acquired, in the domicile of the testator, a fixed and unchangeable meaning, thus becoming a rule of property, these terms in such will, in whatever state the will is up for construction, shall be given, in the interpretation of the will, the meaning that would be given them by the courts of his domicile. The United States Supreme Court well said in Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. 68, 8 L. ed. 322: "The construction put upon words in one will has been supposed to furnish a rule for construing the same words in other wills, and thereby to furnish some settled and fixed rules of construction which ought to be respected. We cannot say this principle ought to be totally disregarded, but it should never be carried so far as to defeat the plain intent, if that intent may be carried into execution without violating the rules of law. It has been said truly 'that cases on wills may guide us as to general rules of construction; but unless a case cited be in every respect directly in point, and agree in every circumstance, it will have little or no weight with the court, who always looks upon the intention of the testator, as the Polar Star, to direct them in the construction of wills.'" 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Now, the two cases cited from Tennessee, Owen v. Hancock, 1 Head, 563, and Nott v. Fitzgibbon, 107 Tenn. 54, 64 S. W. 26, do not construe wills at all identical in their terms with the will under review here. What are those cases? Owen v. Hancock was this: A testator devised to his daughter, Mary Cooper, a negro named Celia during her lifetime, and, if she should die without any heirs born of her body, the said negro girl and her increase should return to his estate and be equally divided among the rest of his children. The first thing to be noted is that the words "heirs born of her body" are strictly words of entail, which would, under the old construction, create an estate tail; whereas, the words "children" in this will plainly seem the direct descendants; that is to say, the children only of Julia, and import a definite failure of issue. Second, in that case there was no ulterior limitation over to strangers to the blood of the testator; here, there is. Again, the court in that case expressly held that there was no difference as to raising the implication between the case where the first taker took an absolute interest, and where he took only a life estate. We have shown that this is not sound. The court reached the curious result in that case of first denying that there was any devise by implication of the remainder to the children of Mary Cooper, and yet, in the face of a positive provision that her interest was limited to her life, did raise a devise by implication of the fee to Mary Cooper, in the very face of the express declaration that she was to take only a life estate. However correct the result reached in that case, it seems to us it would have been far sounder, since an implication was to be raised, that there should have been an implication in favor of the children. In the case of Nott v. Fitzgibbon, while following the case of Owen v. Hancock, in another case where the estate was directly given to James Fitzgibbon for his life only, holding that this life estate in the son was enlarged by implication into a fee in the son, the court also proceeded to rest its judgment upon another line, which was this: It quoted from Machell v. Weeding, 8 Sim. 4, a devise to a son for life, and if the son should die without issue, then over, and approved an announcement from that case to this effect: "That whether an estate be given in fee, or for life, or generally without any particular limit as to duration, if it be followed by a devise over in case of the devisee dying without issue, the devisee will take an estate tail;" and the court actually held, as we understand it, that because the devise to James Fitzgibbon provided for a devise over in case he should die without issue, that, therefore, that was the devise of an estate tail, and so it was converted under their statute into an estate in fee in the first taker, James, who might therefore lawfully alien the property, and this, too, although there was at the time a statute in the state of Tennessee like our statute construed in Middlesex Bkg. Co. v. Field, 84 Miss. 646, 37 So. 139, providing that the words "without issue" in such connection would mean without issue living at the time of his death, which legislative construction, of course, prevented the arising of an estate tail under the old rule. It is obvious that this decision, resting upon the old construction and ignoring the statute, can have no influence upon this will, where the limitation over is upon the death of the life tenant "without children, or if the children die unmarried and before the age of twenty-one," which expressions clearly import a definite failure of issue. They are words of purchase, and not of descent. They are not used interchangeably with the word "issue," as was the case in Jordan v. Roach, 32 Miss. 481. It is obvious that in both Owen v. Hancock and Nott v. Fitzgibbon, the Tennessee court held there was no intestacy, and did raise a devise by implication of enlarging the life estate into a fee. In this case it is clear that there is no intestacy from the whole frame of the will, but the implication from all the language in this will is as clear as can be of a remainder in fee by implication to the children. To hold here, on the terms of this will, that the life estate of Julia was enlarged into a fee, is to fly in the face of the positive declaration, thrice iterated by the testator, that Julia was to have only the life estate, and thus to make for the testator a will, instead of construing one that he did make.

One other observation is due to be made about the case of Nott v. Fitzgibbon, supra, which is that that case was not decided until years and years after the death of this testator, and could not possibly have been in his mind at the time of the making of his will; and with respect to Owen v. Hancock, supra, there are one or two very important things to be further said: First, the case of Owen v. Hancock cites 2 Powell on Devises, 602, 12 Law Library, 321. The whole context of this citation has reference to the subject of estate for life, where enlarged into an estate by implication. The author says: "It has long been settled that a devise to a person with a limitation over, in case he die without issue, confers an estate tail. But, according to some early cases, an express estate for life cannot be so enlarged into an estate tail by implication, on the ground that implication can only be admitted in the absence of, but never in contradiction to, an express limitation." Again the author says, to which we call special attention: "It is to be observed that where the terms of the devise over refer to issue living at the death, it has no effect in enlarging a prior estate for life to an estate tail. The only question in such a case would be whether they would raise an estate by implication in the issue living at the death." Now, this is the emphatic declaration of Powell in his work on Devises, in the very sections quoted by the supreme court of Tennessee in the case of Owen v. Hancock. It must be perfectly obvious, therefore, that the supreme court of Tennessee could not have meant to hold that where in a will the failure of issue is definite, and where the first taker is thrice limited to a life estate, such life estate in the first taker is by implication enlarged into a fee. The supreme court of Tennessee never has yet held that, and we do not think ever would. Indeed, in this very case of Owen v. Hancock, the supreme court says, 1 Head, 566: "A devise over after the death of the wife, or the arrival at age of a child, without expressly giving them any estate, would confer, by necessary implication, an estate for life or during minority." It seems clear, therefore, that the Tennessee authorities never have held what learned counsel for appellant claim, where the will made the failure of issue definite. For that reason, and two other reasons, they do not bind us: First, because the terms of the wills construed there are not identical or substantially like the terms of the will here, taking all its terms into view as we must; second, because the only effect of the rule in construing a will made by one domiciled in Tennessee, that we are bound as to the intent of the testator by what the courts of his domicile say, is that we are so bound not as to his actual intent, but as to what the technical terms he may have used in his will mean, where that meaning has been crystallized into a rule of property; whereas, here in this will, taking it as a whole, there is no room for the play of this doctrine of construction of the will from the meaning of technical terms. The actual intent of the testator here is plain that Julia shall take an estate for life only. There is here a manifest definite failure of issue, and there are other provisions of the will, to wit, the ulterior limitations over to strangers to the blood of the testator, and the provision seeking to cut out the husband, which are decisive against the view which is urged by the counsel for appellant.

On the whole case, it is clear from the entire frame of this will, looking at all its parts and giving every word its due force, that this testator intended these children of Julia to take a remainder in fee. The implication is necessary from the whole scheme of the will; no other rational purpose can be assigned to the testator; and this opinion is closed with the exceedingly striking and forcible and apt language of Lord Brougham in Langston v. Langston, 2 Clark & F. 194. In that case the scrivener had, by accident, omitted a line in the will providing an estate for the first son. It was conceded that no estate whatever was given by the terms of the will, and that the court could not reinstate the omitted clause. Lord Brougham, in delivering his opinion giving the eldest son an estate by implication from the construction of the whole will, among other things, said: "The third of the reasons is one which I cannot help feeling to be exceedingly powerful, and which, upon all the views I can take of this subject, presses forcibly upon my mind. The existence of a son is to defeat no less than eight terms raised most carefully, artfully, and anxiously by the persons who penned this instrument; and yet that son, whose existence is to produce such an effect, to create such destruction, to deal about such havoc upon the whole of this will, is not, according to the construction set up by the King's bench and by the appellant, to benefit under it in the slightest degree. My lords, it is monstrous to suppose that any rational person could really intend to make so much depend upon the event of a person coming into existence, which person, nevertheless, was to be of no force, of no effect, of no value in his eyes, except to be used as an instrument of destruction; that he was only to be considered as the means of taking away the benefit of other parts of this instrument, and yet was himself to benefit nothing by that destruction."

This case has been argued with the most consummate ability by learned counsel on both sides. We acknowledge ourselves greatly indebted to them. The result is that, since the action of the court below in overruling the demurrer is in accord with the views herein expressed, the decree of the court below is hereby affirmed, and the cause remanded for an accounting.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM HENRY BELL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF CINCINNATI.

(80 Ohio St. 1, 88 N. E. 128.)

Municipal workhouse — management — governmental function.

I. By ¶ 20, § 1536-100, Rev. Stat. 1908

Headnotes by the COURT.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(§ 7, Municipal Code), a municipal corporation is authorized to establish, maintain, and regulate a workhouse therein; and by § 1536-677, Rev. Stat. (§ 141, Municipal Code), the directors of public service are invested with the management and control of such workhouse in behalf of the corporation, and in so managing and controlling said workhouse, the municipal corporation, through its directors of public service, acts in a governmental capacity, and not in a proprietary or business relation, to the inmates or persons in its employ.

Same — control of prisoners.

2. A person sentenced to the workhouse shall be kept and confined at hard labor therein, or if such labor cannot be furnished therein, such person may be employed elsewhere within the corporate limits, if so authorized by ordinance, and shall there be subject to the rules, regulations, and discipline of the workhouse until discharged, as provided in § 1536-370, Rev. Stat. 1908; and the performance of hard labor in a stone quarry under control of the corporation, within its limits, as an adjunct to the workhouse, is within the provisions of said section.

Same — guards — powers and duties.

3. Under the provisions of § 1536-375, Rev. Stat. 1908, the workhouse guards have such powers of policemen as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of their position, and while in the discharge of such duties are performing service to the public in aid of the enforcement of law and order.

Case Note. — Liability of county or municipal corporation for injury to one employed in or about a jail, prison, or other house of detention maintained by it.

The specific question here offered for discussion is confined to the liability of a municipality for injury to an employee, and does not include the question of liability for injury to an inmate of a jail or prison, whether or not such inmate is also compelled by law to engage in labor (upon that question, see note to Carty v. Winooski, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 95). Upon the precise question presented in this note there is but little authority, but that little is in accord with the conclusion reached in BELL v. CINCINNATI.

Thus, in Hughes v. Monroe County, 147 N. Y. 49, 39 L.R.A. 33, 41 N. E. 407, a county was held not to be liable for injuries received by an employee from a defective machine in an asylum which was maintained by the county in discharge of its duty as a political division of the state to care for its insane.

So, in Nicholson v. Detroit, 129 Mich. 246, 56 L.R.A. 601, 88 N. W. 695, recovery was refused for the death of an employee of a city, due to smallpox, which he had contracted while engaged in the work of tearing down an old pesthouse and erecting a new one in its place, upon the same site.

Same — revenue from labor — effect.

4. Such workhouse is not established, nor can it be legally managed and maintained, merely for profit, but as an agency of the state for the enforcement of its laws and the ordinances of the municipality; and it does not cease to be a public or governmental agency because some revenue is derived from the labor of the inmates, where the revenue is applied, in most part, in payment of the expenses of its maintenance and operation. In such case the revenue is incidental to the main purpose.

Municipal corporation — workhouse — injury to guard — liability.

5. One employed and acting at the time as a guard of prisoners working in a stone quarry within the corporation, and who is injured by explosion while attempting to remove the lid of a box of percussion caps to be used in setting off a blast in the quarry, cannot recover damages of the municipal corporation for injuries sustained by the explosion.

(March 9, 1909.)

ERROR to the General Term of the Superior Court of Cincinnati to review a judgment reversing a judgment of a Special Term in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Price, J.:

The plaintiff in the trial court, who is now plaintiff in error, alleges in his amended petition that on the 22d day of September, 1905, and for a considerable period before that, to wit, since July 6, 1903, he was in the employ of the city of Cincinnati as a guard at its city workhouse, on Colerain avenue, in the city, where he was employed to guard the prisoners that were incarcerated in said workhouse; that the city, through its duly authorized officers and agents, his superiors in command, on the 22d of September, required the plaintiff, as it had previously done, to assist in the employment of explosives at a certain stone quarry owned and worked by the city for profit, near said workhouse, and for some weeks prior to said date required the plaintiff to undertake the care, management, and conduct of explosives in said quarry, about which he had no knowledge or experience as to their composition or use, force, or dangerous qualities, nor did he realize the danger connected therewith, or in the handling or using the same in connection with the blasting of said quarry, where he was placed by the city.

He further complains that, without realizing or knowing the danger connected therewith, and without knowing the manner in which such explosives acted at different times and on different occasions, and without having acquired any knowledge with reference to the same, the plaintiff did as was directed by the defendant, and was present and undertook to comply with the orders of the city in working in said quarry up to, and at the time of, the injuries received, on September 22, 1905; and that the city, through its said officers and agents, had knowledge of the ignorance and inexperience of the plaintiff, and, further, that those whose orders he was bound to obey knew that plaintiff was ignorant of the danger in the use of said explosives, and that they did not warn or advise or instruct the plaintiff as to said dangers, nor did they instruct him how to handle or use the same, although they were well informed on the subject, having previously for a long time had charge of said quarry in excavating stone by blasting and other means, which stone the city sold to dealers and consumers for profit.

He further states that about half-past 1 of September 22, 1905, the plaintiff went down to the house where the city was in the habit of keeping its explosives, and there obtained from the powder house, so called, a box of caps that were used in the causing of explosions in the quarry; "that taking this box of caps, without knowledge as to how they were made, of what they were composed, or how they would act or explode, and in fact being ignorant altogether of the dangerous character of same, this plaintiff, in undertaking to do the work assigned to him to be done by the defendant city, took said box of caps in his hands, and attempted to open it for the purpose of getting therefrom caps to be furnished to the men who were so engaged in said blasting, and thereupon, as he removed the lid, or undertook to remove the lid, from said box of caps, the same exploded in his hands, without any fault or negligence on part of this plaintiff, who tried to remove the cover or lid as he had supposed was the right way to do the same, when said box of caps exploded, there being one hundred caps in said box, and the same exploded simultaneously." The plaintiff then avers the caps were put in the said powder house by the city for the purpose of blasting in the quarry; that plaintiff's duty required of him to go to the powder house to get such box of caps, and remove the lid, and give the caps to those engaged in blasting in the quarry.

The explosion of the caps blew off one hand, lacerated the other, put out one eye, and inflicted other terrible injuries described in the petition, which caused permanent disability and great bodily suffering, for all of which he prays damages in the

of Julia to take a remainder in fee. The implication is necessary from the whole scheme of the will; no other rational purpose can be assigned to the testator; and this opinion is closed with the exceedingly striking and forcible and apt language of Lord Brougham in Langston v. Langston, 2 Clark & F. 194. In that case the scrivener had, by accident, omitted a line in the will providing an estate for the first son. It was conceded that no estate whatever was given by the terms of the will, and that the court could not reinstate the omitted clause. Lord Brougham, in delivering his opinion giving the eldest son an estate by implication from the construction of the whole will, among other things, said: "The third of the reasons is one which I cannot help feeling to be exceedingly powerful, and which, upon all the views I can take of this subject, presses forcibly upon my mind. The existence of a son is to defeat no less than eight terms raised most carefully, artificially, and anxiously by the persons who penned this instrument; and yet that son, whose existence is to produce such an effect, to create such destruction, to deal about such havoc upon the whole of this will, is not, according to the construction set up by the King's bench and by the appellant, to benefit under it in the slightest degree. My lords, it is monstrous to suppose that any rational person could really intend to make so much depend upon the event of a person coming into existence, which person, nevertheless, was to be of no force, of no effect, of no value in his eyes, except to be used as an instrument of destruction; that he was only to be considered as the means of taking away the benefit of other parts of this instrument, and yet was himself to benefit nothing by that destruction."

This case has been argued with the most consummate ability by learned counsel on both sides. We acknowledge ourselves greatly indebted to them. The result is that, since the action of the court below in overruling the demurrer is in accord with the views herein expressed, the decree of the court below is hereby affirmed, and the cause remanded for an accounting.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM HENRY BELL, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CITY OF CINCINNATI.

(80 Ohio St. 1, 88 N. E. 128.)

Municipal workhouse — management — governmental function.

1. By ¶ 20, § 1536-100, Rev. Stat. 1908

Headnotes by the COURT.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(§ 7, Municipal Code), a municipal corporation is authorized to establish, maintain, and regulate a workhouse therein; and by § 1536-677, Rev. Stat. (§ 141, Municipal Code), the directors of public service are invested with the management and control of such workhouse in behalf of the corporation, and in so managing and controlling said workhouse, the municipal corporation, through its directors of public service, acts in a governmental capacity, and not in a proprietary or business relation, to the inmates or persons in its employ.

Same — control of prisoners.

2. A person sentenced to the workhouse shall be kept and confined at hard labor therein, or if such labor cannot be furnished therein, such person may be employed elsewhere within the corporate limits, if so authorized by ordinance, and shall there be subject to the rules, regulations, and discipline of the workhouse until discharged, as provided in § 1536-370, Rev. Stat. 1908; and the performance of hard labor in a stone quarry under control of the corporation, within its limits, as an adjunct to the workhouse, is within the provisions of said section.

Same — guards — powers and duties.

3. Under the provisions of § 1536-375, Rev. Stat. 1908, the workhouse guards have such powers of policemen as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of their position, and while in the discharge of such duties are performing service to the public in aid of the enforcement of law and order.

Case Note. — Liability of county or municipal corporation for injury to one employed in or about a jail, prison, or other house of detention maintained by it.

The specific question here offered for discussion is confined to the liability of a municipality for injury to an employee, and does not include the question of liability for injury to an inmate of a jail or prison. whether or not such inmate is also compelled by law to engage in labor (upon that question, see note to Carty v. Winoski, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 95). Upon the precise question presented in this note there is but little authority, but that little is in accord with the conclusion reached in BELL v. CINCINNATI.

Thus, in Hughes v. Monroe County, 147 N. Y. 49, 39 L.R.A. 33, 41 N. E. 407, a county was held not to be liable for injuries received by an employee from a defective machine in an asylum which was maintained by the county in discharge of its duty as a political division of the state to care for its insane.

So, in Nicholson v. Detroit, 129 Mich. 246, 56 L.R.A. 601, 88 N. W. 695, recovery was refused for the death of an employee of a city, due to smallpox, which he had contracted while engaged in the work of tearing down an old pesthouse and erecting a new one in its place, upon the same site.

Same — revenue from labor — effect.

4. Such workhouse is not established, nor can it be legally managed and maintained, merely for profit, but as an agency of the state for the enforcement of its laws and the ordinances of the municipality; and it does not cease to be a public or governmental agency because some revenue is derived from the labor of the inmates, where the revenue is applied, in most part, in payment of the expenses of its maintenance and operation. In such case the revenue is incidental to the main purpose.

Municipal corporation — workhouse — injury to guard — liability.

5. One employed and acting at the time as a guard of prisoners working in a stone quarry within the corporation, and who is injured by explosion while attempting to remove the lid of a box of percussion caps to be used in setting off a blast in the quarry, cannot recover damages of the municipal corporation for injuries sustained by the explosion.

(March 9, 1909.)

ERROR to the General Term of the Superior Court of Cincinnati to review a judgment reversing a judgment of a Special Term in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

Statement by Price, J.:

The plaintiff in the trial court, who is now plaintiff in error, alleges in his amended petition that on the 22d day of September, 1905, and for a considerable period before that, to wit, since July 6, 1903, he was in the employ of the city of Cincinnati as a guard at its city workhouse, on Colerain avenue, in the city, where he was employed to guard the prisoners that were incarcerated in said workhouse; that the city, through its duly authorized officers and agents, his superiors in command, on the 22d of September, required the plaintiff, as it had previously done, to assist in the employment of explosives at a certain stone quarry owned and worked by the city for profit, near said workhouse, and for some weeks prior to said date required the plaintiff to undertake the care, management, and conduct of explosives in said quarry, about which he had no knowledge or experience as to their composition or use, force, or dangerous qualities, nor did he realize the danger connected therewith, or in the handling or using the same in connection with the blasting of said quarry, where he was placed by the city.

He further complains that, without realizing or knowing the danger connected therewith, and without knowing the manner in which such explosives acted at different times and on different occasions, and without having acquired any knowledge with reference to the same, the plaintiff did as was directed by the defendant, and was present and undertook to comply with the orders of the city in working in said quarry up to, and at the time of, the injuries received, on September 22, 1905; and that the city, through its said officers and agents, had knowledge of the ignorance and inexperience of the plaintiff, and, further, that those whose orders he was bound to obey knew that plaintiff was ignorant of the danger in the use of said explosives, and that they did not warn or advise or instruct the plaintiff as to said dangers, nor did they instruct him how to handle or use the same, although they were well informed on the subject, having previously for a long time had charge of said quarry in excavating stone by blasting and other means, which stone the city sold to dealers and consumers for profit.

He further states that about half-past 1 of September 22, 1905, the plaintiff went down to the house where the city was in the habit of keeping its explosives, and there obtained from the powder house, so called, a box of caps that were used in the causing of explosions in the quarry; "that taking this box of caps, without knowledge as to how they were made, of what they were composed, or how they would act or explode, and in fact being ignorant altogether of the dangerous character of same, this plaintiff, in undertaking to do the work assigned to him to be done by the defendant city, took said box of caps in his hands, and attempted to open it for the purpose of getting therefrom caps to be furnished to the men who were so engaged in said blasting, and thereupon, as he removed the lid, or undertook to remove the lid, from said box of caps, the same exploded in his hands, without any fault or negligence on part of this plaintiff, who tried to remove the cover or lid as he had supposed was the right way to do the same, when said box of caps exploded, there being one hundred caps in said box, and the same exploded simultaneously." The plaintiff then avers the caps were put in the said powder house by the city for the purpose of blasting in the quarry; that plaintiff's duty required of him to go to the power house to get such box of caps, and remove the lid, and give the caps to those engaged in blasting in the quarry.

The explosion of the caps blew off one hand, lacerated the other, put out one eye, and inflicted other terrible injuries described in the petition, which caused permanent disability and great bodily suffering, for all of which he prays damages in the the discussion and weighing of all kinds of testimony found in the record, such as goes to the character and extent of the very serious injuries received by the plaintiff when the box of caps exploded in his hand, the history of his connection with the Cincinnati workhouse, the duties cast upon its different officers and employees, and the subsequent history of plaintiff's wounds. We have not disregarded such evidence, but it is not necessary to a decision that it be made the subject of comment in this opinion. The important question raised in the record is, Who is responsible for the great injuries admittedly sustained? The solution of the question depends on the conduct and acts of Bell himself, attending the explosion, and also upon the capacity in which the city was acting in employing him and assigning to him his duties, in the discharge of which he claims he was injured.

On or about the 6th of July, 1903, he was made a guard in one of the shops of the Cincinnati workhouse. The workhouse is on Colerain avenue. There were various shops connected with it and inside the walls of the workhouse grounds. It was his duty to have charge and control of prisoners placed under his care, and to oversee their conduct at work, report misconduct to the foreman, and perform other duties incident to the position of a workhouse guard. In addition to these workhouse shops the city had control of a stone quarry on Clifton avenue, near Burnet Woods park, and about 2 miles from the city workhouse, but inside the corporate limits of Cincinnati. In about two years after Bell had been made a workhouse guard, and after having served that long in that capacity, he was made sergeant at the stone quarry, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of that office. The keys of the shed, called the powder house, were turned over to him, and he was in charge of the taking of prisoners from the workhouse quarters to the quarry, see that none escaped, and that they performed the tasks set before them, and returned them to prison in the evening.

In order to facilitate the work of quarrying stone, drilling and blasting were resorted to, and this work was under the supervision of Bell, and in the shed for which he held the keys, the powder, dynamite, and other high explosives for use in blasting, were stored. On the 22d of September, 1905, over two months after beginning service as quarry sergeant, he received the injuries complained of, while attempting to open a box of caps at the shed. These caps were to be used in making a blast in the quarry. The plaintiff asserts that he had received no instructions or warnings as to the dangerous and explosive character of these caps, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and had no knowledge or experience on the subject prior to his injury, although the officers of the workhouse over him had such knowledge, which they should have imparted to him.

For the present we will not further consider the position and conduct of the plaintiff, and pass to a consideration of the capacity in which the city acted in employing this sergeant of the quarry, and the legal relation which the city sustained to the workhouse, and of course the quarry which was being used as a part of the workhouse. When plaintiff was employed as quarry sergeant and assigned to duty, was the city acting in a governmental or proprietary capacity? Was the workhouse—its various shops and the quarry on the hills,—being operated by the city government as a part of its governmental work under the statutes of the state—attempting to discharge duties to the public, made so by positive law? Or was it conducting a business for profit, making use of the workshops and the quarry to that end as an ordinary proprietor would do for personal or private gain? If the relation the city bore to the workhouse and quarry was governmental, and their operation and control were the exercise of governmental power, the city is not liable to plaintiff, even if he was injured through the neglect and want of care of some other or superior officer of the institution, where the statute creates no such liability. This has been held in numerous cases, such as Western College v. Cleveland, 12 Ohio St. 375; Wheeler v. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St. 19, 2 Am. Rep. 368; Cincinnati v. Cameron, 33 Ohio St. 336; Robinson v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 625, 51 Am. Rep. 857; Frederick v. Columbus, 58 Ohio St. 538, 51 N. E. 35. We therefore proceed to learn the legal attitude of the city towards its workhouse and its prisoners, and this we gather from several sections of the Revised Statutes. Paragraph 20, § 7, Municipal Code (Rev. Stat. 1908, § 1536-100), invests municipal corporations with authority "to establish, erect, maintain, and regulate jails, morgues, houses of refuge and correction, workhouses, station houses, prisons, and farm schools," and the last clause of § 7 provides: "All municipal corporations shall have the following general powers (those named in ¶ 20 included), and council may provide, by ordinance or resolution, for the exercise and enforcement of the same."

The maintenance and control of workhouses devolve upon the directors of public service, as provided in § 141, Municipal Code, or Rev. Stat. 1908, § 1536-677. Section 1536-369 defines the persons who may be committed to a workhouse, and the following section provides that a person so sentenced "shall be received into the workhouse, and kept at hard labor therein, or if such labor cannot be furnished therein, then such person may be employed at hard labor elsewhere within the limits of the corporation where such employment shall be authorized by ordinance, and shall be subject to the rules, regulations, and discipline thereof, until the expiration of his sentence, when such person shall be discharged. . . ." Section 1536-371 provides for a cumulative sentence for second offenses by one having served a workhouse sentence, and § 1536-373 authorizes the board of public service to discharge a prisoner for good and sufficient cause. It also authorizes the board to establish rules and regulations as to parole of prisoners, their recapture and return to workhouse, etc. The next section prescribes the punishment for escape, or attempt to escape. There are other provisions of the statute directing the management and control of such institutions, but they are not essential to a decision of our question. Section 1536-375 provides that "the superintendent, assistant superintendent, and guards of the workhouse shall have such powers of policemen as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of their position."

These workhouse institutions, being under the control and management of the board of public service, are public institutions of the city; for the board of service is a branch of the municipal government, whose powers and functions are defined by the same sovereign legislative power that creates and limits the authority of the executive and legislative departments of a city government. In the execution of the powers conferred as to workhouses, and the performance of the duties imposed in caring for persons sentenced to perform labor therein, the municipal corporation is an agency of the sovereign state, in aid of the preservation of order and the punishment of offenders against the laws of the state and the ordinances of the corporation. Through such agency and others the state seeks to carry on its system of government, and enforce the laws, and to this end it has liberally parceled out its powers to municipal corporations as the most successful means of securing good government to the people. Applying these statutory provisions, and keeping in view their evident purpose, how stands the case at bar? The workhouse is one of the penal institutions of the state, and subject to its laws. The plaintiff, Bell, was an officer of that institution; and while he, as sergeant of the quarry, was there injured 2 miles from the workhouse proper, yet he was injured in the scope of the workhouse, for the quarry was being used for 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) workhouse purposes. His claim is not stronger than it would be had he been injured in opening a box of caps within the walls of the institution down in the city. On this ground the city defends.

However, plaintiff in error would take this case out of the above rule and parry the force of such defense by the claim, as he asserts, that the quarrying of stone was a commercial or business enterprise; that the city owned and operated the quarry for profit; sold stone for macadam to contractors for building purposes in competition with other quarrymen, putting the profits in the city treasury, and for that purpose availed itself of the labor of workhouse prisoners in blasting and getting out the stone. The brief for plaintiff in error makes the very broad statement that "in operating this quarry, the city of Cincinnati not only provided work for inmates of the workhouse, but it sold the product of the quarry, namely, building stone that was gotten out, and also broken stone of various sizes, and all sold by the city to contractors for building and macadam, and, as to the smaller product, for surfacing streets. At the same time the city was leveling off some of its rough, hilly ground adjacent to one of its parks," etc. In support of such sweeping statement we would expect the facts to appear in the record with reasonable clearness; for the city denies ownership of the quarry, and the nature and extent of its title thereto we are unable to find in the evidence. The brief cites but two pages of the record as containing the facts on the subject,—pages 51 and 52. We have diligently searched the record for additional evidence to support the claim, and have failed to find any.

Turning to those pages, we find the examination of Mr. Bell, the plaintiff below, as follows:

Q. Mr. Bell, at this quarry, from the time you went there on the 5th of July, I wish you would tell these gentlemen what it was they got out of that quarry.

A. The quarried rock and the building rock was sold to the various builders, and the small rock was hauled down to the prison sheds, and the prisoners that was unable to walk to the hill, such as cripples, one-legged fellows, and one-armed fellows,—they were broken,—they hauled the rock down there for them.

Q. Broken up into what?

A. Broken up into four different sizes, very small size, little larger,—there was four different sizes of them. The largest size was rock macadam; were sold to people for driveways, and the smaller lots were pads—I don't know what they could use them for—driveways?

ERROR to the District Court for Love County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Smith & Hastings, for plaintiff in error:

Where the application warrants the statements therein to be full, complete, and true, and the policy recites that it is issued in consideration of the warranties in the application, which is referred to and made a part of the contract, such statements and agreements become warranties.

3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, pp. 1935, 1936; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. France, 91 U. S. 510, 23 L. ed. 401; Hoffman v. Supreme Council, A. L. H. 35 Fed. 252; Brady v. United L. Ins. Asso. 9 C. C. A. 252, 20 U. S. App. 337, 60 Fed. 727; Kelley v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 75 Fed. 637; Hubbard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 40 C. C. A. 665, 100 Fed. 719; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 52 C. C. A. 154, 114 Fed. 268; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Sale, 61 L.R.A. 337, 57 C. C. A. 418, 121 Fed. 664; Foley v. Royal Arcahum, 78 Hun, 222, 28 N. Y. Supp. 952, affirmed in 151 N. Y. 198, 56 Am. St. Rep. 621, 45 N. E. 456; Commercial Mut. Acci. Co. v. Bates, 176 Ill. 194, 52 N. E. 49, affirming 74 Ill. App. 335; Kelly v. Life Ins. Clearing Co. 113 Ala. 453, 21 So. 361; Cobb v. Covenant Mut. Ben. Asso. 153 Mass. 176, 10 L.R.A. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 619, 26 N. E. 230.

If a matter is specifically inquired about in an application for life insurance, the answers of the insured thereto are generally regarded as equivalent to an agreement that the matter is material; and a misrepresentation in such answers will avoid the policy, though they may not have been, in fact, material to the risk in that particular case.

3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, p. 1953; May, Ins. ¶ 185; Brignac v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 112 La. 574, 66 L.R.A. 322, 36 So. 595; Cuthbertson v. North Carolina

applicant as affecting his desirability as a risk, and is not meant to include mere trivial ailments not affecting his general health.

Thus, in Rupert v. Supreme Court U. O. F. 94 Minn. 293, 102 N. W. 715, the charge of the trial court was upheld, which in reference to the spitting of blood and other interrogatories as to disease, stated that when the questions propounded to an applicant as to her physical condition were in such terms as to include trivial ailments and injuries unconnected with any specific disease they should be interpreted as referring only to such ailments and injuries as affect the risk, unless they were in words to preclude such interpretation. "The presumption is that trivial ailments and injuries are not within the contemplation of the parties, and the words directing attention to them are not asked with a view or purpose of ascertaining the existence of the same, but what is the general condition of the health of the applicant." The defendant contended that the words should be given their broadest import, which the supreme court said led to folly and demanded the impossible, adding that under such a construction of the question as to spitting blood there could be no recovery, unless the applicant had enumerated the number of teeth she had had pulled.

And in Dreier v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 670, in which it appeared that the applicant stated that he had never had the complaint of spitting or raising of blood, it was held that there was no warranty that he never had spitting or raising of blood, but only that he had not had the complaint of spitting or raising of blood; that is, a warranty that he had not had blood spitting in such form as to be called a disease, disorder, or constitutional vice.

And in Peterson v. Des Moines Life Asso. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

115 Iowa, 668, 87 N. W. 397, it was held that the question whether the applicant had had any spitting or coughing of blood must be given a reasonable construction, which would limit it to such spitting or coughing of blood as a reasonable person might suppose to indicate some ill health or physical condition affecting the desirability of the applicant to the risk. "It would surely not be expected that the applicant should answer as to spitting of blood by reason of the extraction of a tooth or accidental biting of the tongue."

So, in Campbell v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 381, the court said that the mere raising of a small quantity of blood with a cough in a single instance was not necessarily an indication of disease or a material circumstance, so that such an occurrence, however slight, during the previous life of the applicant, would make his negative answer a misrepresentation as a matter of law.

And in Singleton v. St. Louis Mut. Ins. Co. 66 Mo. 63, 27 Am. Rep. 321, the court said that there was something ambiguous in the term "spitting of blood," as used in applications for insurance, and therefore there was room for interpretation. "Literally, the meaning is spitting blood, whether from the teeth, gums, or lungs, but it would be absurd to hold that it was used in that sense in the application,"—and added that no court would hold that spitting of blood in consequence of a drawn tooth or a cut on the gums was contemplated.

In Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge K. H. 76 Mich. 428, 43 N. W. 373, the court did not think the defense well taken that the assured represented that he had never spit blood, when it was shown that, some eleven years before he applied for the insurance, he had had lung trouble, and had then spit Home Ins. Co. 96 N. C. 480, 2 S. E. 258; Fame Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 10 Ill. App. 545.

Mr. Robert E. Lee also for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. H. C. Potterf and E. A. Walker, for defendant in error:

The answers merely constitute representations which are no part of the contract of insurance.

Home L. Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 188 U. S. 726, 47 L. ed. 667, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380; Moulou v. American L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 335, 28 L. ed. 447, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Haney, 10 Kan. 525; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co. 112 U. S. 250, 28 L. ed. 708, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 798; Higbee v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 66 Barb. 463; Boehm v. Commercial L. Ins. Co. 70 N. Y. S. R. 881, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1103.

Warranties are statements in the policy, which, if untrue, will prevent the policy from attaching as the contract of the insurer. A representation is an oral or written statement, made by the insured to the insurer, of certain facts or conditions tending to induce the insurer to assume the risk by diminishing the estimate he would otherwise have formed of it. Warranties are always a part of the completed contract, while representations precede, are collateral to, and are not necessarily a part of, the contract.

Ætna Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 49 Neb. 811, 69 N. W. 125; Indiana Farmers' Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Byrket, 9 Ind. App. 443, 36 N. E. 779; Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Monninger, 18 Ind. 352; Hearn v. Equitable Safety Ins. Co. 4 Cliff. 192, Fed. Cas. No. 6,300; Hazard v. New England M. Ins. Co. 8 Pet. 557, 8 L. ed. 1043.

A misrepresentation operates merely on the ground of fraud; and if the representations are substantially true, it is sufficient. Statements made without intent to deceive will not, though false, avoid the policy.

Jefferson Ins. Co. v. Cotheal, 7 Wend. 72, 22 Am. Dec. 567; Wheaton v. North British & M. Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 415, 9 Am. St. Rep.

blood. The authority of this case upon this point, however, is weakened by the fact that the medical examiner of the defendant was also the assured's family physician, and knew of the assured's condition, and assumed to write out the answer to the question upon his own knowledge of the facts, which the court held placed the defendant in such a position that it could not claim that the assured's answers were untrue.

But in Smith v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 49 N. Y. 215, it was held that where it appeared that the assured had, some two years before making application for insurance, raised blood and consulted a physician about it, the fact that he answered "no" as to the question as to spitting of blood was a good defense to an action on the policy.

And in Foot v. Ætna L. Ins. Co. 4 Daly, 285, reversed on other grounds in 61 N. Y. 571, a policy of insurance was held to be avoided where the assured stated that he had never had spitting of blood, and it appeared that, about thirteen months before he applied for the insurance, he had had a slight hemorrhage which lasted, on and off, for two days, and that, four months thereafter, he had another hemorrhage, which lasted nearly ten days, during which he raised blood twice a day.

In Smith v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 196 Pa. 314, 46 Atl. 426, the question was, "Have you had the disease or disorder of spitting or raising blood?" and it appeared that a year prior to his application the assured had had a hemorrhage which caused him to consult a physician. It was held that, though he may have really believed that he had not had the disease or disorder, and that it might not have been at the time a disease with him as popularly understood, it was at least a disorder, and 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) he was bound to give a full, true, and complete answer to the question.

And in Arnold v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 61, a policy of insurance was held to be avoided by the representations that the assured never had spitting or raising of blood, where it appeared that, shortly before the policy was issued, he consulted a physician about spitting blood, though the spitting of blood may have resulted from the breaking of his ribs.

And in Geach v. Ingall, 14 Mees. & W. 95, one of the judges said that by the expression "spitting of blood" was no doubt meant the disorder so called, whether proceeding from the lungs, stomach, or any other part of the body, and that one single act of spitting of blood would be sufficient to put one on inquiry as to the cause of it. Another judge said that by "spitting of blood" must be understood a spitting of blood as a symptom of disease tending to shorten life, adding that "the mere fact is nothing,—a man could not have a tooth pulled out without spitting blood;" while the third judge said that if a man had spit blood from his lungs, no matter how small a quantity, or even had spit blood from an ulcerated sore throat, he would be bound to state it.

This language from the case just cited was approved in Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 39 Ind. 475, and it was held that, whether the hemorrhage proceeded from one cause or another, the applicant was bound to disclose it.

In March v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 186 Pa. 629, 65 Am. St. Rep. 887, 40 Atl. 1100, it was held that an expectoration of blood which was so great as to amount to a hemorrhage could not be properly excluded from the meaning and operation of the general question, "Have you ever had spitting of blood?"

216, 18 Pac. 758; Hazard v. New England M. Ins. Co. supra; Gardner v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Cranch, C. C. 473, Fed. Cas. No. 5,224; Behrens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 64 Iowa, 19, 19 N. W. 838.

Hayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a policy of life insurance, in which defendant in error, plaintiff below, is the beneficiary. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount of the policy, plaintiff in error, defendant below, brings this proceeding in error. The policy was taken out by Elizabeth Prater, plaintiff's mother, on the 19th day of December, 1905, who died on the 17th day of February, 1906. The insurance order by its answer admits the execution and delivery of the policy and the death of the insured, but denies liability under the policy upon several grounds. Under the state of the record in this case it will only be necessary to mention and consider two of the questions raised in defendant's answer as defenses. It alleges, first, that Mrs. Prater, in her application for the policy, had stated that she had never had hemorrhage or inflammation of the lungs, spitting of blood, and had never been seriously sick, nor attended by any physician during any such serious sickness; that such statements were, by her application and the contract of insurance, made her warranties upon which the policy was issued; and that such statements were untrue. Second. That she had made the misrepresentations aforesaid, knowing them to be untrue; that they were material, and were relied upon by defendant when it issued the policy. The trial was to the court without a jury, who made a general finding for plaintiff. Under our view of this case it will be necessary for us to investigate the facts and the law to determine only whether there was a breach of warranty by the insured.

Some of the alleged misrepresentations complained of by defendant are in the application of the insured; others are in her answers to questions in the worthy physician's report on the reverse side of the application. There is no contention by plaintiff that the statements made in the application are not, by the provisions of the application and the policy, made warranties of the applicant; and we shall first ascertain whether there was any breach of warranty by reason of false statements made in the application. The following questions and answers occur in the application: "Q. Give date of last serious illness, month and year. A. Was never seriously ill. Q. What was it? A. Nothing. Q. Name and address of attending physician. A. None." In the month of August, 1904, deceased became ill one afternoon, and suffered from hemorrhage. She spit up much blood. A physician was called, and the physician who attended her testified at the trial that deceased was at that time very sick; that she bled profusely from the lungs; that her pulse ceased beating, and that she became cold and clammy; that life was almost gone; and that she coughed up blood at almost every breath. Other witnesses corroborate the attending physician's statement that decedent had a profuse hemorrhage at that time, and that her condition was alarming, and there is evidence that she continued in a state of impaired health from that date up till the time of her death, and that, subsequent to this illness, she was under the treatment of a Christian Scientist; but the evidence as to the severity of this illness is conflicting. Plaintiff testified that his mother recovered immediately and entirely after this illness. There is also evidence from other witnesses who lived at that time as neighbors of the deceased, who did not see her when she had the hemorrhage, but who saw her within a day or to thereafter, to the effect that she appeared to be in good health, and that in her appearance she bore no evidence of having suffered from a serious illness. There is further evidence to the effect that her health after this illness was better than usual until she was attacked by her last illness. On the other hand, there is evidence that, at the time of the hemorrhage, deceased was afflicted with consumption; that she continued to be so afflicted until her death; that her death was due to this disease; but this evidence is controverted.

On the conflicting state of the evidence as to whether the illness of the deceased during August, 1904, was a serious illness, it was for the jury or court to whom the case was submitted to decide. The question propounded to applicant did not require her to give information as to the last illness she had suffered, but the last serious illness. Not every illness is serious. An illness may be alarming at the time, or thought to be serious by the one afflicted, and yet not be serious in the sense of that term as used in insurance contracts. An illness that is temporary in its duration, and entirely passes away, and is not attended, nor likely to be attended, by a permanent or material impairment of the health or constitution, is not a serious illness. It is not sufficient that the illness was thought serious at the time it occurred, or that it might have resulted in permanently impairing the health. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 222, 20 L. ed. 617. A cold may be, and sometimes is, followed by pneumonia, pleurisy, abscess of the lungs, and consumption; to hold that, because a cold may be attended or followed by such consequences, it is a serious illness, and that a failure to mention such in response to an inquiry in an application for insurance as to the nature and character of any serious illness the applicant has suffered is a misrepresentation, would result in invalidating almost all contracts of insurance, the covenants of which are based upon the statements in the application as warranties; for, if a careful investigation should be made in the lives of persons insured, in almost every life there would be found some incident of illness of such ordinary occurrence and insignificance in its effect, yet of possible seriousness, which the applicant, without careful scrutiny and accurate recollections of his past life, has overlooked to mention. "A serious illness is a grave, important, weighty trouble." Brown v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 300, 8 Am. St. Rep. 894, 32 N. W. 610. In the Century Dictionary it is defined to be "an illness attended by danger, giving rise to apprehension." In Caruthers v. Kansas Mut. L. Ins. Co. (C. C.) 108 Fed. 487 a negative answer of the applicant to the question as to whether he had ever had "any serious illness, constitutional disease or surgical operation" was held not a false representation which would avoid the policy as a breach of warranty because applicant once broke his leg, which was set and attended by a physician. "A sickness may be very bad and very sad, and yet not serious. Any permanent or material impairment of health" is a serious illness. Drakeford v. Supreme Conclave K. D. 61 S. C. 338, 39 S. E. 523; Illinois Masons' Benev. Soc. v. Winthrop, 85 Ill. 537. Upon the conflicting evidence as to deceased's condition within a day or two after the hemorrhage, and as to the condition of her health thereafter until her last illness, and the entire absence of any evidence that such loss of blood as occurred to her on that day was likely to result in permanent or material impairment of her health, the general finding of the trial court in favor of the plaintiff is conclusive against defendant as to the nature of that illness. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, supra; Hockaday v. Jones, 8 Okla. 156, 56 Pac. 1054.

The insured's answer that she was not attended by any physician was not false, for this question had reference to the physician who attended her during a serious illness, and was not intended to elicit from her information as to the name and address of the attending physician at the time of any other illness than inquired about by the preceding questions. That such was the intention of the parties is indicated by a subsequent question in the application, which reads as follows: "When did you last consult a physician, and for what?" On the reverse side of the application were the statements of the worthy physician who made the examination of the insured for the company, together with certain questions propounded by him to the insured, and her answers thereto. Among such questions and answers are the following: "Q. Have you ever had spitting or coughing of blood? A. No." That the answer to this question is untrue and inaccurate is shown by preceding statements herein as to the evidence in this case. Plaintiff, who testified in his own behalf, has not denied, but admits, that in August, 1904, a little more than a year before the application was made for the policy of insurance, his mother suffered from an attack of illness during which she spit up blood. Nor is there any controversy in the evidence that her coughing of blood at that time was in considerable quantity. The attending physician described her condition resulting from the hemorrhage as being dangerous and without hope of recovery; that the loss of blood "was sufficient to render the vessels of the extremity without any current," and "life was almost gone, and blood was being coughed up with every breath." This testimony of the physician is corroborated by other witnesses who were present, and plaintiff admits the coughing of blood, and that it was in sufficient quantity that he and the members of the family and the neighbors were greatly excited; that a physician was called; but, when asked as to the exhausted and weakened condition his mother was reduced to by the loss of blood, he stated that he did not remember. Counsel for plaintiff insists that the insured made said answer to the physician without intent to deceive, and that since the court, by a general finding, has found that the insured, at the time of her application and the issuance of the policy, was in sound, insurable health, the untruthfulness of this answer, if it is untruthful, is only immaterial misrepresentation. Plaintiff cites and relies principally upon the following cases to support his contention: Home L. Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 188 U. S. 726, 47 L. ed. 667, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 380; Moulou v. American L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 335, 28 L. ed. 447, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 466; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co. 112 U. S. 250, 28 L. ed. 708, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Haney, 10 Kan. 525. An examination of the facts upon which those cases are based will clearly distinguish them from the case at bar, and will show that they are not in point.

In Home L. Ins. Co. v. Fisher the statements to the medical examiner were not made a part of the application, and the warranties of the application and the policy did not extend to them, but the trial court instructed the jury in language which was equivalent to holding that such statements in the medical examination were the warranties of the insured, and the jury found against the company upon the alleged breach of warranties. The following language is used by Mr. Justice Holmes: "The jury were instructed that, if they found 'either one to be true that, before Maclean made application, he drank liquors either freely or to excess, or at the time that he made the application he had a habit of drinking liquor,' they were to find for the defendant; the declaration to the medical examiner thus being put upon the same footing as the application. The jury found for the plaintiff. Therefore they must be taken to have found categorically that no one of the supposed facts was true; or, in other words, that all of the above-recited answers were correct. If so, it does not matter whether they were warranties or not. There is a suggestion, to be sure, that in the latter case the defendant would have had to prove only the 'literal' falsity of the statement, whereas, in the other, proof of its substantial falsity was required. . . . But the plain question of fact was put to the jury with no such niceties of discrimination. They found a plain answer, and the distinction comes too late now."

In Moulton v. American L. Ins. Co. the company defended against the policy on the ground that the insured had in his application stated that he had never been afflicted with scrofula, asthma, or consumption prior to the making thereof. There was evidence tending to show that the insured had been afflicted with those diseases, or some of them, prior to that time; but there was also evidence showing that he did not know or believe that he had ever been afflicted with them in a sensible or appreciable form. The application contains a stipulation that the insured declared and warranted that his answers therein were fair and true, and acknowledged and agreed that the application should form a part of the contract of insurance, and, if there was any answer therein made by him untrue or evasive, or any misrepresentation or concealment of fact therein, the policy granted upon the application should be null and void. The policy of insurance purported to have been issued upon the basis of the representations and answers in the application. The two instruments of writing, to wit, the application and the policy, did not treat the statements of the insured in the applications in the same manner. In the application they were treated as warranties; in the policy they were treated as his representations, and the court, discussing this condition of the contract, used the following language: "It is true that the word 'warranted' is in the application; and, although a contract might be so framed as to impose upon the insured the obligations of a strict warranty, without introducing into it that particular word, yet it is a fact, not without some significance, that that word was not carried forward into the policy, the terms of which control when there is a conflict between its provisions and those of the application. The policy upon its face characterizes the statements of the insured as representations. Thus we have one part of the contract apparently stipulating for a warranty, while another part describes the statements of the assured as representations. The doubt as to the intention of the parties must, according to the settled doctrines of the law of insurance recognized in all the adjudged cases, be resolved against the party whose language it becomes necessary to interpret. The construction must therefore prevail which protects the insured against the obligations arising from a strict warranty."

In Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Haney the insured was relieved from the strict warranties of his application by language in the application which fixed the measure of truthfulness required. The application in that case required the applicant to answer such questions only "to the best of his knowledge and belief," briefly and explicitly, and provided "that any wilfully untrue or fraudulent answer" shall avoid the policy. No such expressions are to be found either in the policy or in the application involved in this case. The court said in that case: "If the application propounds certain questions, and indicates in what manner they must be answered, it is enough that they are answered in that manner; and when the policy is based upon the statements and declarations of the application, it is based upon them made in the manner and under the rules laid down by the company in the application."

Warranties in insurance policies are not favored in law; and where the language used by the parties to an insurance contract prepared by the insurance company is susceptible of two constructions, the courts favor that construction which makes a given statement a representation rather than a warranty, and strictly construes the policy against the company. Warranties will not be made by construction, and statements of the insured will be held warranties only when they necessarily result from the nature of the contract, or appear on the face of the policy or in its body. Declarations made by the insured to the medical examiner of an insurance company are not made warranties by the provision of the application, which warrants these statements in the application to be true, full, and complete, where such medical examination is not part of the application, either by being embodied therein, or by reference thereto. Higbee v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. 66 Barb. 462. But in the case at bar the application begins with the following sentence. "I hereby make application for beneficial membership, and warrant the following statements and the answers to the 'Worthy Physician' on the reverse side hereof to be true and accurate, and agree that they shall constitute the basis for the covenants." The answer of the applicant to the worthy physician, which defendant claims to be false, was among her answers to the physician, and contained on the reverse side of the application. The policy of insurance provides: "This covenant is executed in consideration of the warranties made in the application of this guest, and of compliance on the part of this guest with the constitution and by-laws of this fraternity, now existing or as hereafter legally amended, all of which and the application of this guest are a part of this covenant."

What were the warranties made by the applicant in her application? They were, first, that the statements therein made were true and accurate; second, that her answers to the worthy physician were true and accurate. These are the warranties made by the insured which it is stipulated in the policy is the consideration of the covenant. If no reference had been made in the application to her answers to the worthy physician, or no stipulation had been placed therein by which such answers were warranted to be true and correct, and were to be the basis of the covenant, the medical examination having been separate from the application, the case would then have fallen within the rule of Higbee v. Guardian Mut. L. Ins. Co. supra. But the parties to this contract have, by specific stipulation which is not ambiguous, agreed in the application that applicant's answers to the worthy physician, as well as her statements in the application, should be her warranties, and should be the basis of the covenant; and the policy expressly stipulates, in language that is unequivocal and requires no construction, that the consideration of the execution of the covenant is the warranties made by the applicant in her application, and that the application is a part of the contract. The insured stipulates in the application that both the statements in the application and her answers in the worthy physician's report on the reverse side thereof are true and accurate, and shall be her warranties, and shall form the basis of the covenant.

By reference in her application to answers made on the reverse side thereof to the worthy physician, and by agreeing in the application that such answers should constitute the basis of the covenant, insured made them a part of her application; and by the terms of the policy, and the acceptance thereof by her, they become part of the contract of insurance, and she thereby warranted that her answer to the question whether she had ever spit or coughed up blood was "true and accurate." In Cooley's Briefs on Insurance (vol. 3, p. 1935) the general rule is said to be: "It has been the generally accepted doctrine that, where the application warrants the answers and statements therein to be full, complete, and true, and the policy recites that it is issued in consideration of the statements, agreements, and warranties in the application, which is referred to and made a part of the contract, such statements and agreements become warranties." In 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 798, the same rule is expressed in somewhat similar language, as follows: "To create a warranty or condition precedent, the statement relied on must be made a part of the contract by incorporating into the policy either the statement itself or an appropriate reference thereto. If the application is not made a part of the contract by reference in the policy, a warranty in the application alone, as to the truth of the statements made therein, is not a part of the contract in such sense that error or mistake in such statements will avoid the policy without regard to their materiality as representations."

The application specifically warrants the answers of applicant to the physician, and specifically agrees that such answers shall form the basis of the covenant, and the policy makes the application a part thereof. It is unnecessary for us to discuss whether the untrue answers to the questions of the worthy physician in controversy are material or immaterial, for the contract had made the applicant's answers her warranties. A statement warranted to be "true and accurate," if untrue, will prevent the policy from attaching as a contract of insurance, without regard to whether the statement is material or immaterial; and where there has been a breach of a warranty, the policy is void, though the statement upon which the breach of a warranty is predicated is in no way material to the risk. Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, p. 1950; Hoover v. Royal Neighbors, 65 Kan. 616, 70 Pac. 595;

Cobb v. Covenant Mut. Ben. Asso. 153 Mass. 176, 10 L.R.A. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 619, 26 N. E. 230; Kelly v. Life Ins. Clearing Co. 113 Ala. 453, 21 So. 361. That which might have been immaterial has been made material; that which might have been unimportant has by stipulation of the parties been raised to importance. It has not been left to the jury or to the court to determine whether the insured's answers to the physician were material, and became the basis of the insurance company's contract, for the parties have settled this question by stipulation in the contract.

Plaintiff insists that there is some controversy in the evidence as to whether deceased had ever had spitting of blood in the sense that he contends it was used in the worthy physician's report. He contends that these terms have reference only to hemorrhage from the lungs, and there is some conflict in the evidence as to whether the spitting of blood that occurred in August, 1904, was from the lungs or from the stomach. We do not think that the language used in the contract can be limited to mean only blood from the lungs. The exact language is "spitting or coughing of blood." It is unnecessary for us to determine whether this language would include any spitting of blood, however small in quantity and unimportant, such as might come from a wound of the gums, or the removal of a tooth, or the biting of the tongue, for that question is not involved under the facts in this case, but it would include the disorder by that name called, whether the blood came from the stomach or from the lungs, when it had assumed such proportions as to be a disease. There is evidence that the insured coughed and spit up blood at other times before the issuance of the policy than at the time during the month of August, 1904, and such evidence is not controverted. There is evidence on the part of some of the witnesses who testified that they never knew of her having done so, but such evidence is rather as to the negative knowledge of the witnesses than a denial that such fact existed. It is unnecessary for us to consider the intentions of applicant in giving an untrue answer to the question, for whether it was intentional or an oversight is immaterial so far as it affects the contract. The falsity of the answer, irrespective of her intention in giving it, avoided the policy, since, by her warranty, the truthfulness and accuracy of her answers were made prerequisite to the existence of the contract.

The judgment of the lower court is reversed, and the cause remanded.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

SARAH S. FALL, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ELIZABETH EASTIN.

(215 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. —, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3.)

Courts — chancery power to affect foreign property — full faith and credit.

A deed to land situated in Nebraska, made by a commissioner under a decree of a court of another state in an action of divorce, in which, in determining the equities of the parties conformably to the practice in that state, the land was set apart to the wife as her own separate property, need not be recognized in Nebraska, under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution.

(Harlan and Brewer, Justices, dissent.)

(November 1, 1909.)

Case Note. — Jurisdiction of equity over suits affecting real property in another state or country.

This subject was treated exhaustively in a note to Proctor v. Proctor, 69 L.R.A. 673. The present note includes only the cases since the preparation of that note. The present note is confined, as was the earlier one, to cases involving the jurisdiction of equity over suits the avowed purpose of which is to affect real property beyond the territorial jurisdiction, either directly by a decree in rem, or indirectly by a decree in personam. It will be observed that this limitation excludes from the note cases involving the effect of a decree establishing one's status, upon real property in another state, e. g., the effect of a divorce rendered in one state upon the right of dower in real property in another (see note to Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 181), or the effect of a decree rendered in one state removing the disability of infancy, upon a conveyance of real property in another (see Beauchamp v. Bertig [Ark.] ante, 659, 119 S. W. 75). For similar reasons, cases dealing with the effect of a decree rendered in one state admitting a will to probate, revoking probate, or construing or determining the validity of a will, are also omitted.

The general principle formulated at page 674 of the earlier note, that, when a case otherwise properly cognizable in equity is presented, a court of equity having personal jurisdiction of the parties may, in the exercise of its discretion, assume jurisdiction although land in another state may be affected, if it can grant effective relief by a decree acting solely upon the person whose title or interest in the land is to be affected, as distinguished from a decree acting directly upon the land,—is sustained by the later cases, as well as by the cases cited in that note.

Thus, the court in Steele v. Bryant (Ky.)

ERROR to the Nebraska Supreme Court to review a decree reversing a decree of the District Court for Hamilton County quieting title to certain real property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles J. Greene, Ralph W. Breckenridge, and Thomas H. Matters, for plaintiff in error:

The suggestion of the Nebraska supreme court, that the full faith and credit provision of the Federal Constitution establishes a rule of evidence, rather than of jurisdiction, did not give the Nebraska court the right to disregard the evidence of the wife's equities in the land, established by the decree of the Washington court.

Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 535, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242; Wisconsin v. Pelli-

can Ins. Co. 127 U. S. 265, 32 L. ed. 239, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1370.

When judgments of one state are duly pleaded and proved in the courts of another, they have the effect of being not merely prima facie evidence, but conclusive proof of the rights thereby adjudicated; and a refusal to give them the force and effect, in this respect, which they had in the state in which they were rendered, denies to the party a right secured to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 684, 36 L. ed. 1133, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604.

Where a court of equity, clothed with full power not only to dissolve the marriage, but to dissolve the property interest, however in-116 S. W. 755, while conceding that the courts of Illinois cannot affect by their judgment the title to land in Kentucky, nevertheless held that a deed to land in Kentucky executed by the trustee in whom the legal title was vested pursuant to a decree of a court of Illinois having personal jurisdiction of the parties was effectual to pass the title to the Kentucky land.

In Grant v. Cobre Grande Copper Co. 193 N. Y. 306, 86 N. E. 34, holding that the allegations of a complaint in an action seeking to have a foreign corporation adjudged to be the holder of certain mining property in Mexico in trust and to compel it and others to account for the income and proceeds arising from the working of said mines, were sufficient to sustain an order for the publication of process,—it seems to have been assumed that the court of New York would have jurisdiction, notwithstanding the property was located beyond the territorial jurisdiction.

See earlier note, page 678, for other cases as to enforcement of trusts with respect to lands in other states.

So, the power of a court having personal jurisdiction of the parties to grant a decree for the specific performance of a contract in relation to real property in another state is sustained in Wilhite v. Skelton, 78 C. C. A. 635, 149 Fed. 67.

And upon the same principle the court in White Star Min. Co. v. Hultberg, 220 Ill. 578, 77 N. E. 327, upheld the jurisdiction of a court of equity of Illinois having personal jurisdiction of the parties to enforce specific performance of an award with reference to land in another state.

For other cases sustaining such jurisdiction in respect to specific performance, see earlier note, page 681.

Of course, the fact that a suit in one state for an accounting has reference to the profits derived from the purchase and resale of land in another state does not defeat the jurisdiction. MacDonald v. Dexter, 234 Ill. 517, 85 N. E. 209.

So, a court of the District of Columbia having personal jurisdiction of the parties may entertain a suit for a partnership account.

counting in respect of land in another jurisdiction, and may, as a part of the relief, require the defendant to convey to the plaintiff, by a proper deed of conveyance, an undivided interest in such land. Stone v. Fowlkes, 29 App. D. C. 379.

For other cases as to such jurisdiction with respect to accounting, and incidental relief by requisition of conveyance, see earlier note, page 691.

In Deschamps v. Miller [1908] 1 Ch. 856, Parker, J., however, held that an English court, although having personal jurisdiction of the necessary parties, should not take jurisdiction of a suit the purpose of which was to establish, in favor of a wife's estate, and by virtue of her marital rights, an interest in land in India which the husband had acquired subsequently to the marriage, and had conveyed to trustees upon a trust for his life, with remainder over to a third person. The decision is upon the ground that the determination of the rights of the parties would involve an examination of the law of India as to the right of the wife to assert a title or interest in land acquired in that country by the husband subsequently to the marriage. The learned justice remarked that the general rule is that the court will not adjudicate on questions relating to the title to or the right to possession of immovable property out of the jurisdiction; that the exceptions to the rule depend on the existence between the parties of some personal obligation arising out of contract or implied contract, fiduciary relationship, or other conduct which, in the view of an English court of equity, would be unconscionable, and do not depend for their existence on the law of the locus as to the immovable property; and that in the case at bar the whole question was whether or not, according to the law of the locus, the claim of title set up by one party, whether a legal or equitable claim in the sense of those words as used in English law, would be preferred to the claim of another party.

As pointed out in the earlier note (69 L.R.A. 678) to warrant the exercise of the peculiar jurisdiction here under consideravolved or wherever located, makes a decree based upon the application of both parties, separating their joint rights and equities in their property, such decree should, by every rule and principle, receive full faith and credit in the courts of this country.

Dunlap v. Byers, 110 Mich. 109, 67 N. W. 1067; Shanks v. Klein, 104 U. S. 19, 26 L. ed. 635; Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 36 L.R.A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452, 45 N. E. 737.

No appearance for defendant in error.

McKenna, Justice, delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in this case is whether a deed to land situate in Nebraska, made by a commissioner under the decree of a court of the state of Washington in an action for divorce, must be recognized in Nebraska under the due faith and credit clause of the Constitution of the United States.

The action was begun in Hamilton county, Nebraska, in 1897, to quiet title to the land and to cancel a certain mortgage thereon, given by E. W. Fall to W. H. Fall, and to cancel a deed executed therefor to defendant in error, Elizabeth Eastin.

Plaintiff alleged the following facts: She and E. W. Fall, who was a defendant in the trial court, were married in Indiana in 1876. Subsequently they went to Nebraska, and, while living there, "by their joint efforts, accumulations, and earnings, acquired jointly and by the same conveyance" the land in controversy. In 1889 they removed to the state of Washington, and continued to reside there as husband and wife until January, 1895, when they separated. On the 27th of February, 1895, her husband, she and he then being residents of King county, Washington, brought suit against her for divorce in the superior court of that county. He alleged in his complaint that he and plaintiff were bona fide residents of King county, and that he was the owner of the land in controversy, it being, as he alleged, "his separate property, purchased by money received from his parents." He prayed for a divorce and "for a just and equitable division of the property."

Plaintiff appeared in the action by answer and cross complaint, in which she denied the allegations of the complaint, and alleged that the property was community property, and "was purchased by and with the money and proceeds of the joint labor" of herself and husband after their marriage. She prayed that a divorce be denied him, and that the property be set apart to her as separate property, subject only to a mortgage of $1,000, which she alleged was given tion, the case must be one which, even apart from the location of the property beyond the equitable jurisdiction, is a proper one for equitable intervention; and the jurisdiction does not extend to a suit which involves merely the title to or possession of land beyond the territorial jurisdiction.

So, in Sutton v. Archer (Miss.) 46 So. 705, the court said that if the decree of dismissal entered by the court below in the suit (which was in form a bill to cancel the defendant's claim of title to land) was based on a finding that the land contended for was in Arkansas the decision was correct, since in that event the court of Mississippi was without jurisdiction. The court said that the case was merely one of a contested title, the parties fighting at arms length, and that if the Mississippi courts may take jurisdiction in such a case they may in any case involving a controversy as to the right to land in any other state, when they have the parties before them; and that there was in this case no question of specific performance of contract, enforcement of trust, fraud, accounting, or the doing of any acts which from previous dealings are binding on the conscience of the party.

And, apparently for a similar reason, the court in Higgins v. Vandever (Neb.) 122 N. W. 843, held that a decree rendered by a court of Nebraska having jurisdiction of the parties, purporting to revoke the probate of a will, and to decree that the husband of the decedent was seised of an estate of curtesy in a tract of land part of which was in Nebraska and part in South Dakota, was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and an absolute nullity so far as is related to the South Dakota land.

So, in Columbia Nat. Sand Dredging Co. v. Morton, 28 App. D. C. 288, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114, it was held that equity had no jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin acts of trespass on lands in another state, where the principal fact involved, and upon which the right to exercise the restraint depended, was that of title to the land, even though the necessary parties were properly before the court. See note to this case (7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114), as to the jurisdiction to enjoin acts with respect to real property in another state.

It will be observed that the ground of the decision rendered by the Nebraska supreme court on the rehearing in Fall v. Fall, 75 Neb. 120, 121 Am. St. Rep. 767, 113 N. W. 175, as well as the ground on which that decision was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in FALL v. EASTIN, was not that the Washington court did not have jurisdiction to render the decree in question, but that that decree was ineffectual without a conveyance by the holder of the title pursuant to the requisition of the decree; and that the conveyance by the commissioner appointed by the Washington court was ineffectual. This position is sustained by the weight of authority, as shown in the earlier note (69 L.R.A. page 694).

In McCune v. Goodwillie, 204 Mo. 306, 102 S. W. 997, however, the Missouri court by him and her. In a reply to her answer and cross complaint, he denied that she was the "owner as a member of the community in conjunction" with him of the property, and repeated the prayer of his complaint.

Plaintiff also alleges that the Code of Washington contained the following provision:

"Sec. 2007. In granting a divorce, the court shall also make such disposition of the property of the parties as shall appear just and equitable, having regard to the respective merits of the parties and to the condition in which they will be left by such divorce, and to the party through whom the property was acquired, and to the burdens imposed upon it for the benefit of the children, and shall make provision for the guardianship, custody, and support and education of the minor children of such marriage."

She further alleges that that provision had been construed by the supreme court of the state, requiring of the parties to an action for divorce to bring into court all of "their property, and a complete showing must be made," and that it was decided that § 2007 conferred upon the court "the power, in its discretion, to make a division of the separate property of the wife or husband."

held that a decree rendered by a court of Ohio having personal jurisdiction of the parties, setting aside a deed to land in Missouri from testatrix to her daughter, and directing the minor son of the grantee (the grantee having died) to execute a reconveyance to the devisees in the will as soon as he attained his majority, while it could not directly affect the bare legal title to the land yet could and did conclude all the parties on every issue in that case, and could and did bind the conscience of the minor to reconvey when he attained his majority. The grantee's son does not appear to have executed a formal conveyance pursuant to the Ohio decree, but he did participate in a domestic partition among the heirs and devisees of the testatrix by which the parties accepted deeds in severalty. The court said that any contention that the son was a minor and was not bound by those conveyances was without avail, because he purged his conscience by adopting and ratifying the partition conveyances when he attained his majority, and thereby became bound.

See also in this connection the case of Burnley v. Stevenson, 24 Ohio St. 474, 15 Am. Rep. 624, which is set out at p. 695 of the earlier note and also discussed in the opinion in FALL v. EASTIN.

In Byrne v. Jones, 90 C. C. A. 101, 159 Fed. 321, it was held that a Federal court sitting in Arkansas having jurisdiction of the person of a trustee appointed by a contract made in Arkansas concerning a tract of land in Arkansas and Texas might law- 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

She further alleges that a decree was entered, granting her a divorce, and setting apart to her the land in controversy as her own separate property forever, free and unencumbered from any claim of the plaintiff thereto, and that he was ordered and directed by the court to convey all his right, title, and interest in and to the land within five days from the date of the decree.

She also alleges the execution of the deed to her by the commissioner appointed by the court, the execution and recording of the mortgage to W. H. Fall, and the deed to defendant; that the deed and mortgage were each made without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding her, and that they cast a cloud upon her title derived by her under the decree of divorce and the commissioner's deed. She prays that her title be quieted, and that the deed and mortgage be declared null and void.

W. H. Fall disclaimed any interest in the premises, and executed a release of the mortgage made to him by E. W. Fall. Defendant answered, putting in issue the legal sufficiency of the complaint, and, in addition, set forth the fact of the loan of $1,000 to E. W. Fall, the taking of a note therefor signed by him and William H. Fall, the giving of an indemnity mortgage to the latter, and the execution subsequently of a deed by E.

fully require him to make a sale and conveyance as trustee, or appoint its master in his place who should be trustee pro hac vice. The fact that the holder of the legal title in this case was the trustee, and not the beneficial owner, is doubtless sufficient to distinguish this case from FALL v. EASTIN, and most of the other cases holding that the deed in order to be effectual must be executed by the very person whose title or interest is to be affected, and not by a person appointed by the court for that purpose.

In Roller v. Murray, 107 Va. 527, 59 S. E. 421 (an action primarily relating to land in Virginia), the court in answer to a contention that, as there had been a conveyance of a certain portion of the lands lying in West Virginia, the deed for which was afterwards returned, the court should retain jurisdiction and grant relief as to that portion of the land, said that the court could not decree the sale of land lying in West Virginia, even if such relief would be proper under the other facts of the case. It is apparent that this statement is in accord with the authorities, so far as it holds that the court of Virginia could not render a decree for the sale of land in West Virginia, which, ex proprio vigore, would affect the title to such land, and it is not clear from the opinion whether the proper parties were before the court so that it could have worked out substantially the same result by a decree in personam requiring a conveyance, if such relief had otherwise been proper.

under it, except by the person in whom the title is vested, can operate beyond the jurisdiction of the court."

See also Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 148, 3 L. ed. 181, and Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. 237, 248, 249, 17 L. ed. 827, 829, 830.

In Corbett v. Nutt, 10 Wall. 464, 475, 19 L. ed. 976, 979, the doctrine was repeated that a court of equity, acting upon the person of the defendant, may decree a conveyance of land situated in another jurisdiction, and even in a foreign country, and enforce the execution of the decree by process against the defendant; but, it was said: "Neither its decree nor any conveyance under it, except by the party to whom the title is vested, is of any efficacy beyond the jurisdiction of the court." This, the court declared, was familiar law, citing Watkins v. Holman, supra. See also Brine v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 96 U. S. 627, 635, 24 L. ed. 858, 861; Phelps v. McDonald, 99 U. S. at page 308, 25 L. ed. at page 476.

In Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 177, 245, 9 L. ed. 388, 412, it is said that a commissioner is in no sense an agent of the party, but is an officer of the court, and acts strictly under its authority.

Later cases assert the same doctrine. In Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 105, 35 L. ed. 640, 647, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 960, 966, a court of New York had declared a deed for real estate situate in Tennessee null and void. This court said to concede such power would be "to attribute to that decree the force and effect of a judgment in rem by a court having no jurisdiction over the res." And, explaining the power of a court of equity, said that, "by means of its power over the person of a party, a court of equity may, in a proper case, compel him to act in relation to property not within its jurisdiction; its decree does not operate directly upon the property nor affect the title, but is made effectual through the coercion of the defendant; as, for instance, by directing a deed to be executed or canceled by or on behalf of the party. The court 'has no inherent power, by the mere force of its decree, to annul a deed or to establish a title.' Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 155, 28 L. ed. 101, 103, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586."

Whether the doctrine that a decree of a court rendered in consummation of equities, or the deed of a master under it, will not convey title, and that the deed of a party coerced by the decree will have such effect, is illogical or inconsequent, we need not inquire, nor consider whether the other view would not more completely fulfil the Constitution of the United States, and that whatever may be done between the parties in one state may be adjudged to be done by the courts of another, and that the decree might 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

be regarded to have the same legal effect as the act of the party which was ordered to be done. The policy of a state would not be violated. Besides, this court found no impediment in the policy of a state in the way of enforcing, under the due faith and credit clause of the Constitution of the United States, a judgment obtained in Missouri, sued upon in Mississippi. The defense was that the cause of action arose in Mississippi, and was one that the courts of the state, under its laws, were forbidden to enforce. The defense was adjudged good by the supreme court of Mississippi, and its judgment was reversed by this court. Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 52 L. ed. 1039, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641.

In Hart v. Sansom, supra, it was directly recognized that it was within the power of the state in which the land lies to provide, by statute, that, if the defendant is not found within the jurisdiction, or refuses to perform, performance in his behalf may be had by a trustee appointed by the court for that purpose.

In Dull v. Blackman, 169 U. S. 243, 246, 247, 42 L. ed. 733, 734, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333, 334, while recognizing that litigation in regard to the title of land belongs to the courts of the state where the land is so located, it was said: "Although, if all the parties interested in the land were brought personally before a court of another state, its decree would be conclusive upon them, and thus, in effect, determine the title."

But, however plausibly the contrary view may be sustained, we think that the doctrine that the court, not having jurisdiction of the res, cannot affect it by its decree, nor by a deed made by a master in accordance with the decree, is firmly established. The embarrassment which sometimes results from it has been obviated by legislation in many states. In some states the decree is made to operate per se as a source of title. This operation is given a decree in Nebraska. In other states, power is given to certain officers to carry the decree into effect. Such power is given in Washington to commissioners appointed by the court. It was in pursuance of this power that the deed in the suit at bar was executed. But this legislation does not affect the doctrine which we have expressed, which rests, as we have said, on the well-recognized principle that, when the subject-matter of a suit in a court of equity is within another state or country, but the parties within the jurisdiction of the court, the suit may be maintained and remedies granted which may directly affect and operate upon the person of the defendant, and not upon the subject-matter, although the subject-matter is referred to in the decree, and the defendant is ordered to do or refrain from certain acts toward it, and it is thus ultimately but indirectly affected by the relief granted. In such case, the decree is not of itself legal title, nor does it transfer the legal title. It must be executed by the party, and obedience is compelled by proceedings in the nature of contempt, attachment, or sequestration. On the other hand, where the suit is strictly local, the subject-matter is specific property, and the relief, when granted, is such that it must act directly upon the subject-matter, and not upon the person of the defendant, the jurisdiction must be exercised in the state where the subject-matter is situated. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 1317, 1318, and notes.

This doctrine is entirely consistent with the provision of the Constitution of the United States, which requires a judgment in any state to be given full faith and credit in the courts of every other state. This provision does not extend the jurisdiction of the courts of one state to property situated in another, but only makes the judgment rendered conclusive on the merits of the claim or subject-matter of the suit. "It does not carry with it into another state the efficacy of a judgment upon property or persons, to be enforced by execution. To give it the force of a judgment in another state, it must be made a judgment there; and can only be executed in the latter as its laws may permit." M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 10 L. ed. 177.

Plaintiff seems to contend for a greater efficacy for a decree in equity affecting real property than is given to a judgment at law for the recovery of money simply. The case of Burnley v. Stevenson, 24 Ohio St. 474, 15 Am. Rep. 621, in a sense sustains her. The action was brought in one of the courts of Ohio for the recovery of the possession of certain lands. The defendant set up in defense a conveyance of the same lands, made by a master commissioner, in accordance with a decree of a court in Kentucky, in a suit for specific performance of a contract concerning the lands. The defendant in Burnley v. Stevenson claimed title under the master's deed. The court declared the principle that a court of equity, having the parties before it, could enforce specific performance of a contract for lands situate in another jurisdiction by compelling the parties to make a conveyance of them, but said that it did not follow that the court could "make its own decree operate as such conveyance." And it was decided that the decree could not have such effect, and, as it could not, it was "clear that a deed executed by a master, under the direction of the court," could "have no greater effect." Watts v. Waddle, 6 Pet. 389, 8 L. ed. 437, and Page v. McKee, 3 Bush, 135, 96 Am. Dec. 201, were cited, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and the master's deed, the court said, "must, therefore, be regarded as a nullity." But the court decided that the "decree was in personam, and bound the consciences of those against whom it was rendered." It became, it was in effect said, a record of the equities which preceded it, and of the fact that it had become, and it was, the duty of the defendants in the suit to convey the legal title to the plaintiff. This duty, it was further said, could have been enforced "by attachment as for contempt; and the fact that the conveyance was not made in pursuance of the order does not affect the validity of the decree, in so far as it determined the equitable rights of the parties in the land in controversy. In our judgment, the parties, and those holding under them with notice, are still bound thereby."

The court proceeded to say that it might be admitted that the decree would not constitute a good defense at law, but that it was a good defense in equity, as, under the Code of Ohio, equitable as well as legal defenses might be set up in an action for the recovery of land, and from this, and the other propositions that were expressed, concluded that, as the decree had the effect in Kentucky of determining the equities of the parties to the land in Ohio, the courts of the latter state "must accord to it the same effect," in obedience to the due faith and credit clause of the Constitution of the United States. "True," the court observed, "the courts of this state cannot enforce the performance of that decree, by compelling the conveyance through its process of attachment; but, when pleaded in our courts as a cause of action, or as a ground of defense, it must be regarded as conclusive of all the rights and equities which were adjudicated and settled therein, unless it be impeached for fraud. See cases supra; also Davis v. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115; Brown v. Lexington & D. R. Co. 13 N. J. Eq. 191; Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156, 62 Am. Dec. 152; Bank of United States v. Merchants' Bank, 7 Gill, 415."

It may be doubted if the cases cited by the learned court sustain its conclusion. But we will not stop to review them, or to trace their accordance with or their distinction from the cases which we have cited. The latter certainly accord with the weight of authority. There is, however, much temptation in the facts of this case to follow the ruling of the supreme court of Ohio. As we have seen, the husband of the plaintiff brought suit against her in Washington for divorce, and, attempting to avail himself of the laws of Washington, prayed also that the land now in controversy be awarded to him. She appeared in the action, and, submitting to the jurisdiction which he had invoked, made counter charges and prayers for relief. She established her charges, she was granted a divorce, and the land decreed to her. He, then, to defeat the decree, and in fraud of her rights, conveyed the land to the defendant in this suit. This is the finding of the trial court. It is not questioned by the supreme court; but, as the ruling of the latter court, that the decree in Washington gave no such equities as could be recognized in Nebraska as justifying an action to quiet title, does not offend the Constitution of the United States, we are constrained to affirm its judgment.

So ordered.

Holmes, Justice, concurring specially:

I am not prepared to dissent from the judgment of the court, but my reasons are different from those that have been stated.

The real question concerns the effect of the Washington decree. As between the parties to it, that decree established in Washington a personal obligation of the husband to convey to his former wife. A personal obligation goes with the person. If the husband had made a contract, valid by the law of Washington, to do the same thing, I think there is no doubt that the contract would have been binding in Nebraska. Ex parte Pollard, 4 Deacon, Bankr. 27, 40; Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 36 L.R.A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452, 45 N. E. 737. So I conceive that a Washington decree for the specific performance of such a contract would be entitled to full faith and credit as between the parties in Nebraska. But it does not matter to its constitutional effect what the ground of the decree may be, whether a contract or something else. Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 52 L. ed. 1039, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641. (In this case it may have been that the wife contributed equally to the accumulation of the property, and so had an equitable claim.) A personal decree is equally within the jurisdiction of a court having the person within its power, whatever its ground and whatever it orders the defendant to do. Therefore I think that this decree was entitled to full faith and credit in Nebraska.

But the Nebraska court carefully avoids saying that the decree would not be binding between the original parties, had the husband been before the court. The ground on which it goes is that to allow the judgment to affect the conscience of purchasers would be giving it an effect in rem. It treats the case as standing on the same footing as that of an innocent purchaser. Now, if the court saw fit to deny the effect of a judgment upon privies in title, or if it considered the defendant an innocent purchaser,

I do not see what we have to do with its decision, however wrong. I do not see why it is not within the power of the state to do away with equity or with the equitable doctrine as to purchasers with notice if it sees fit. Still less do I see how a mistake as to notice could give us jurisdiction. If the judgment binds the defendant, it is not by its own operation, even with the Constitution behind it, but by the obligation imposed by equity upon a purchaser with notice. The ground of decision below was that there was no such obligation. The decision, even if wrong, did not deny to the Washington decree its full effect. Bagley v. General Fire Extinguisher Co. 212 U. S. 477, 480, 53 L. ed. 605, 613, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341.

Harlan and Brewer, Justices, dissent.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp't.,

v.

HEZEKIAH W. BARNES, Appt.

(— Wash. —, 103 Pac. 792.)

Former jeopardy — discharge of jury.

1. The discharge of the jury in a criminal case without the consent of accused, after they had deliberated more than forty-three hours and announced that they were not able to agree unless given an instruction as to the possible future disposition of accused, to which they were not entitled, is not an acquittal, which will prevent his retrial on the same charge.

Trial — instructions — disposition of accused.

2. To aid the jury in reaching a conclusion in a murder case, the judge cannot instruct them as to the disposition which will be made of accused if he is found to be insane.

Jury — competence — statutory requirements.

3. Where a competent, impartial, and honest jury is secured in a murder case, a conviction will not be reversed because of some inadvertent failure to comply with every directory provision of the jury law, in the absence of any showing of prejudice against accused.

Same — challenge.

4. A challenge to the array is not necessary to secure the retirement, at a second trial of an accused, of jurors who served at the first trial.

(August 25, 1909.)

Note. — Upon the question, How long shall a jury be permitted to deliberate before a mistrial may be ordered in a criminal case, see case note to State v. Harris, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 178.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Walla Walla County convicting him of murder. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. F. Barker, Oscar Cain, and E. C. Mills, for appellant:

The discharge of a jury in a criminal case upon a valid indictment, not called for by imperious necessity and without the consent of the defendant, operates as an acquittal, and bars further trial.

McCorkle v. State, 14 Ind. 40; State v. Wamire, 16 Ind. 357; Com. v. Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 1 L.R.A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757, 15 Atl. 466; State v. McKee, 1 Bail. L. 651, 21 Am. Dec. 499; Conklin v. State, 25 Neb. 784, 41 N. W. 788; People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488, 108 N. W. 999; Hines v. State, 24 Ohio St. 134; State v. Klauer, 70 Kan. 384, 78 Pac. 802; State v. Allen, 59 Kan. 758, 54 Pac. 1060; State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322, 37 Pac. 174.

Messrs. Otto B. Rupp, Herbert C. Bryson, and Thomas Phelps Gose, for respondent:

The discharge of the jury where, after full consideration, they fail to agree, is not a bar to another trial, on the ground that such condition of affairs constitutes absolute and urgent necessity, and justifies the court in discharging them.

12 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 273; United States v. Perez, 9 Wheat. 579, 6 L. ed. 165; Simmons v. United States, 142 U. S. 148, 35 L. ed. 968, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171; Winsor v. R. L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 390, 6 Best & S. 143, 7 Best & S. 490; Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 429, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Thompson v. United States, 155 U. S. 271, 39 L. ed. 146, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 73; Dreyer v. People, 188 Ill. 40, 58 L.R.A. 869, 58 N. E. 622, 59 N. E. 424, affirmed in 187 U. S. 71, 47 L. ed. 79, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; 2 Graham & W. New Trials, p. 122; United States v. Jim Lee, 123 Fed. 741; State v. Costello, 29 Wash. 366, 69 Pac. 1099; State v. Harris, 119 La. 297, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 178, 44 So. 22; Penn v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 140, 35 S. W. 973; Ex parte McLaughlin, 41 Cal. 211, 10 Am. Rep. 272; Com. v. Purchase, 2 Pick. 521, 13 Am. Dec. 452; State v. Stephenson, 54 S. C. 234, 32 S. E. 305; State v. Keerl, 33 Mont. 501, 85 Pac. 862; State v. Trueman, 34 Mont. 249, 85 Pac. 1024; State v. Crump, 5 Idaho, 166, 47 Pac. 814; State v. Nelson, 26 Ind. 366; State v. Wilson, 50 Ind. 487, 19 Am. Rep. 719; State v. Leach, 120 Ind. 124, 22 N. E. 111; Varnes v. State, 20 Tex. App. 109; Schindler v. State, 17 Tex. App. 412; Brady v. State, 21 Tex. App. 659, 1 S. W. 462; Smith v. State, 22 Tex. App. 196, 2 S. W. 542; Com. v. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Townsend, 5 Allen, 216; Re Allison, 13 Colo. 525, 10 L.R.A. 790, 16 Am. St. Rep. 224, 22 Pac. 820; Whitten v. State, 61 Miss. 717; Teat v. State, 53 Miss. 439, 24 Am. Rep. 708; Helm v. State, 66 Miss. 537, 6 So. 322; Hoffman v. State, 20 Md. 432; Anderson v. State, 86 Md. 479, 38 Atl. 937; Yarbrough v. Com. 89 Ky. 151, 25 Am. St. Rep. 524, 12 S. W. 143.

The plea of jeopardy is a special defense, and the burden of establishing it clearly and satisfactorily rests upon the defendant, and, in the absence of any objection or exception to a discharge of the jury, defendant must be held to have consented thereto.

O'Connor v. State, 28 Tex. App. 288, 13 S. W. 14; Kingen v. State, 46 Ind. 132; People v. Gardner, 62 Mich. 307, 29 N. W. 19; State v. Ellsworth, 131 N. C. 773, 92 Am. St. Rep. 790, 42 S. E. 699; Penn v. State, supra; State v. Greer, 11 Wash. 244, 39 Pac. 874.

Crow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant, Hezekiah W. Barnes, having been charged with the crime of murder in the first degree and convicted, judgment and sentence were entered, and he has appealed.

By his first assignment of error appellant contends that his plea of former acquittal should have been sustained, and that he should have been discharged by the trial court. The record shows that on May 22, 1908, an information was filed charging him with the crime of murder in the first degree; that the case was first called for trial in June, 1908; that on June 13th it was submitted to the jury; that, about 10 o'clock A. M. on June 15th, the jury were called into court, when the following proceedings were had:

The court: Gentlemen, have you agreed upon a verdict?

Foreman: Your honor, we fail to agree.

The court: What appears to be the difficulty?

Foreman: The gentlemen appear to have a difference of opinion.

The court: Do your difficulties arise with regard to the whole case or to some particular branch of it?

Foreman: The insanity part.

The court: Do you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime was committed by the defendant?

Foreman: The crime has been committed.

The court: The question with you is whether the defendant—

Foreman: —was sane or insane.

The court: At the time of its commission?

Foreman: Yes, sir. . . .

The court: Gentlemen, you may retire, and I will formulate some further instructions in regard to that branch of the case, and try to explain to you what I think possibly you may have overlooked, and will call you in again later. (The jury retire.)

Mr. Garrecht (attorney for appellant): We will ask for an objection to any further instructions, where the jury has not asked for any further instructions.

The court: Call in the jury. (The jury return to the court room.)

The court: Gentlemen of the jury, I will ask you whether you wish me to instruct you any further. If not, if you fully understand my former instructions, I will not instruct you any further.

The foreman: I will state, Judge, that the difference of opinion comes up in regard to the incarceration of the prisoner, in the case of insanity, for life,—life punishment; whether there's any chance of him being restored to liberty after he is incarcerated for a short time, or whether the committing of the crime will carry with it the life sentence.

The court: I cannot give you what the law is in regard to it now. I have got to give it to you in writing. That is the only point upon which you wish me to instruct you?

Foreman: I think, that being solved, we can come to an agreement. With those instructions we are perfectly willing to retire and wait.

Mr. Cain (attorney for appellant): We have no objections to the court's instructing them on that point orally. You can read to them the section of the statute that covers it.

The court: I won't unless I am given full liberty, because I might say something that you might construe into something else.

Foreman: We would rather have them in writing.

The court: I can't give them to you to read. I will have to read them to you. (Jury retire. Jury are recalled.)

The court: Gentlemen, as I understand your foreman, you have agreed that the defendant committed the crime charged in the information, but you have not agreed as to whether he was sane or insane at the time of its commission; and I further understand from him that your finding upon that question depends upon whether the defendant can be imprisoned for life or whether he can be discharged at any time. Is that the state of the case?

Foreman: That is the case.

The court: And without that knowledge, as to whether he can be incarcerated for life or whether he can be discharged at any time, you think that you are unable to agree upon a verdict, and will be unable to agree? You think that there will be no reasonable prospect of an agreement?

Foreman: No, sir.

The court: I feel constrained, in view of these statements of yours, to discharge you from further consideration of the case. The fact that you are making your verdict in this case dependent upon the punishment, or what might be done with this defendant after this trial, satisfies me that you should not consider this case at all. It is not a matter for your consideration whether he would be discharged or not discharged. The law is, however, that he, upon certain contingencies, may be discharged at any time after he is restored to sanity, if you should find him to be insane,—upon doing certain things or upon certain things happening, that he could be restored to his liberty. But that ought not to enter into your consideration at all. It has nothing to do with the question of whether he was sane or insane at the time he committed this act. It goes to his punishment; and, in other words, to be plain and curt with you, it is none of your business. It is the business of the law. And I, therefore, seeing that you cannot agree without taking that matter into consideration (which is entirely improper to take into consideration), feel that I would be doing the prisoner and the public both a great injustice to allow you to determine his guilt or innocence upon a question of that kind; and I therefore discharge you from further consideration of the case.

The case was again called for trial on June 24, 1908. The appellant then filed a plea of former jeopardy, in which he claimed that the discharge of the jury amounted to an acquittal. The state answered, the appellant demurred, the demurrer was overruled, and the appellant replied. Upon the second trial it was agreed that the plea of former jeopardy should be submitted to the jury. Two verdicts were returned,—one finding the appellant guilty of murder in the first degree, and the other finding that he had not been placed in jeopardy or acquitted.

Appellant concedes that in a criminal case a trial court may, when necessary, discharge a jury that has failed to agree, without effecting an acquittal. He contends, however, that no such necessity arose in this cause, that the discharge was not demanded by imperious necessity, that it was made without his consent, and that it operated as an acquittal, barring further trial. To support this contention he cites the following authorities: McCorkle v. State, 14 Ind. 39; State v. Wamire, 16 Ind. 357; Com. v.

Fitzpatrick, 121 Pa. 109, 1 L.R.A. 451, 6 Am. St. Rep. 757, 15 Atl. 466; State v. McKee, 1 Bail. L. 651, 21 Am. Dec. 499; Conklin v. State, 25 Neb. 784, 41 N. W. 788; People v. Parker, 145 Mich. 488, 108 N. W. 999; Hines v. State, 24 Ohio St. 134; State v. Klauer, 70 Kan. 384, 78 Pac. 802; State v. Allen, 59 Kan. 758, 54 Pac. 1060; State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 42 Am. St. Rep. 322, 37 Pac. 174. These authorities, in so far as they tend to support the appellant's contention, are the outgrowth of the rule adopted in criminal cases by the early English courts, to the effect that a jury sworn and charged in a case of life or member cannot be discharged by the court or any other, but that they ought to give a verdict. At an early date the courts of this country refused to adopt or follow this rule, but held that, when the jury could not agree on a verdict, the court had discretionary power to discharge them, and that the prisoner might be put on his trial before another jury. Com. v. Purchase, 2 Pick. 521, 13 Am. Dec. 452. There is, however, some conflict of authority in American courts on the question as to whether, on their failure to agree, the discharge of the jury without the consent of the defendant will, in a criminal case, bar another trial. The courts of a few states hold that a bar will result, and the most pertinent cases cited by the appellant are from such courts. Most of the American authorities have announced the rule that the power to discharge the jury is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, and that his exercise of such discretion will not be reviewed by the appellate courts, unless its clear abuse appears. State v. Costello, 29 Wash. 366, 69 Pac. 1099; United States v. Perez, 9 Wheat. 579, 6 L. ed. 165; Re Allison, 13 Colo. 525, 10 L.R.A. 790, 16 Am. St. Rep. 224, 22 Pac. 820; State v. Harris, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 178, and note (119 La. 297, 44 So. 22); Simmons v. United States, 142 U. S. 148, 35 L. ed. 968, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171; Thompson v. United States, 155 U. S. 271, 39 L. ed. 146, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 73; Dreyer v. People, 188 Ill. 40, 58 L.R.A. 869, 58 N. E. 620, 59 N. E. 424; Penn. v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 140, 35 S. W. 973; Anderson v. State, 86 Md. 479, 38 Atl. 937; State v. Crump, 5 Idaho, 166, 47 Pac. 814; United States v. Jim Lee (D. C.) 123 Fed. 741; State v. Keerl, 33 Mont. 501, 85 Pac. 862. In State v. Costello, supra, the jury had deliberated from 1:40 P. M. on Tuesday until 9:30 A. M. on Wednesday, when they were called into court, reported they had not agreed, that there seemed to be no prospect of agreement, and were discharged. This court, in discussing the plea of former jeopardy interposed on a subsequent trial, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

said: "The statute provides (Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 5006 [Pierce's Code, § 620]): 'The jury may be discharged by the court . . . by consent of both parties, or after they have been kept together until it satisfactorily appears that there is no probability of their agreeing.' By this section the lower court is invested with a discretion to discharge a jury after it has been kept together until it satisfactorily appears that there is no probability of their agreeing. This discretion must be based upon substantial grounds and is subject to review like any other legal discretion. It appears here that the jury had been considering the case for more than nineteen hours, and that, when asked by the court if there was any prospect for an agreement, answered, 'It seems not,' and stated, 'We have stood one way for twelve hours.' While in the question put by the court the word 'probability' is not used, still we think the question and the answer clearly indicate that there was no reasonable probability of an agreement, and that, under the conditions existing, the court did not abuse his discretion in discharging the jury." In Simmons v. United States, supra, the court said: "The general rule of law upon the power of the court to discharge the jury in a criminal case before verdict was laid down by this court more than sixty years ago, in a case presenting the question whether a man charged with a capital crime was entitled to be discharged because the jury, being unable to agree, had been discharged without his consent, from giving any verdict upon the indictment. The court, speaking by Mr. Justice Story, said: 'We are of opinion that the facts constitute no legal bar to a future trial. The prisoner has not been convicted or acquitted, and may again be put upon his defense. We think that, in all cases of this nature, the law has invested courts of justice with the authority to discharge a jury from giving any verdict whenever in their opinion, taking all the circumstances into consideration, there is a manifest necessity for the act, or the ends of public justice would otherwise be defeated. They are to exercise a sound discretion on the subject; and it is impossible to define all the circumstances which would render it proper to interfere. To be sure, the power ought to be used with the greatest caution, under urgent circumstances, and for very plain and obvious causes; and, in capital cases especially, courts should be extremely careful how they interfere with any of the chances of life in favor of the prisoner. But, after all, they have the right to order the discharge; and the security which the public have for the faithful, sound, and conscientious exercise of this ditional estate, where the common-law doctrine of livery of seisin is abolished by a statute authorizing the conveyance of land whether held in possession or not, and such conditional estate may therefore be terminated by a subsequent deed to a stranger executed by the conditional grantor.

(Hart, J., dissents.)

(July 12, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Phillips County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover possession of certain lands. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John I. Moore for appellant.

Messrs. W. H. H. Miller and Augustin Boice, with Messrs. Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell, & Loughborough for appellees.

Messrs. Julian Laughlin, Murphy, Coleman, & Lewis, and John B. Jones, amici curiæ.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action instituted by plaintiffs, Alberta J. Sharpe and Augustine Boice, against J. R. B. Moore in the circuit court of Phillips county, to recover possession of 40 acres of land situated in that county. The plaintiffs recovered judgment below, and the defendant appealed.

Each party derails title from the same

Case Note. — Necessity of entry or formal declaration of forfeiture as a condition of maintaining action, other than for damages based on breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold.

This subject is fully considered in the case note to Mash v. Bloom, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1189, where many cases are collected, this note being intended as merely supplemental thereto.

The following cases hold that the breach of a condition subsequent in a conveyance does not ipso facto revert the estate, that being accomplished only by a re-entry on the part of the grantor or of those entitled to assert a forfeiture. Lewis v. Lewis, 74 Conn. 630, 92 Am. St. Rep. 240, 51 Atl. 854; Wadley Lumber Co. v. Lott, 130 Ga. 135, 60 S. E. 836; Bonniwell v. Madison, 107 Iowa, 85, 77 N. W. 530; Griffith v. Owensboro & N. R. Co. 15 Ky. L. Rep. 271; Rannels v. Rowe, 74 C. C. A. 376, 145 Fed. 296.

It was held in Strothers v. Woodcox (Iowa) 121 N. W. 51, that upon a breach of a condition subsequent a grantor could not maintain an action of ejectment to recover the possession of the property without a re-entry for the breach, or that which would be an equivalent thereto. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

source, viz., from Edmund McGehee, who owned the land at the time of his death, during the year 1865, under a patent from the state of Arkansas. The plaintiff's claim title to the lands under a deed executed in 1881 by the widow and devisees of Edmund McGehee. The defendant claims title under a deed executed in 1873 by the executors, including the widow, of Edmund McGehee, to the St. Louis & Memphis Railroad Company. This deed purported to convey a large body of land including the tract in controversy, all of which was wild, timbered land, without any clearing or habitation on it. The will of Edmund McGehee conferred no power upon the executors to execute the deed, and it was executed pursuant to an order of a Mississippi court, and no order was made by the Arkansas probate court. It is conceded that on this account the deed was ineffectual as a conveyance of the testator's title, and conveyed nothing except the undivided interest of the widow as one of the devisees under the will.

The deed was executed on the condition, expressed therein, that the grantee should build and complete a railroad within three years from the date thereof. Whether this was a condition precedent or subsequent we need not now decide, since conceding it to have been a condition subsequent, which is essential to the strength of defendant's claim of title under the deed, the conclusion we have reached on another controlling

It was said in Rannels v. Rowe, supra, that upon the breach of a condition subsequent the estate continues in the grantee until the proper step has been taken to consummate a forfeiture, which requires a re-entry or some act that may be considered as a lawful substitute therefor. This is not a mere matter of form which may be dispensed with, but is regarded as being of substance because intended to destroy an estate; and, whenever acts or words are relied upon as a substitute for a re-entry upon land, they must be of such a character as distinctly to admonish the grantee that thenceforth there is no waiver of his breach of the condition, and that his title is at an end; and an intention to forfeit formed in the mind but undeclared is ineffectual.

It was held in Rannels v. Rowe, supra, that the statute under consideration in MOORE v. SHARPE was not intended to change the rule requiring re-entry or an equivalent act in order to forfeit an estate upon the breach of a condition subsequent. The court said that such provisions are common in the legislation of the states, and their purpose is to abrogate an ancient rule of the common law which has no relevancy to the subject under consideration.

question is adverse to the defendant. The condition of the deed, treating it as a condition subsequent, was not performed. No considerable amount of work in building the railroad was done, and, after the condition was broken, the grantor, without re-entering upon the land or by any other overt act declaring a forfeiture, subsequently executed the deed under which plaintiffs claim title. The question we propose to decide is, then, whether or not re-entry upon the land, suit, or declaration of forfeiture by the grantor, before conveying the land to a third party, was essential in order to effect a forfeiture, and whether any interest or estate was conveyed by the subsequent deed, under which the plaintiffs claim title. We pretermit a discussion of the numerous other questions presented and argued in the case.

The doctrine of estates upon condition is of feudal origin, of which system the doctrine of title by livery of seisin formed an essential part, on account of the condition of real property at that time, and the only practical method of conveying it. This was, then, a doctrine of necessity, for in that day no system of registration of conveyance existed. Indeed, lands were not generally conveyed by writings, and the only practical method of giving notice of a change of title was either by actual delivery of possession or by symbolic delivery in sight of the land. At common law, the only method whereby a forfeiture could be effected for breach of condition was by re-entry upon the premises or by a public attempt to re-enter, with a declaration of forfeiture. This, too, grew out of the doctrine of livery of seisin, the reason being that the forfeiture for condition broken must be accomplished by acts of equal dignity and notoriety with those which created the condition, viz., delivery, either actual or symbolic. "As by the old common law a freehold could be created only by the ceremony of livery of seisin, the corresponding ceremony of re-entry was necessary in order to determine it, or, as Coke has it, 'an estate of freehold cannot begin nor end without ceremony.'" 1 Jones, Real Prop. in Conveyancing, § 715. "The entry, moreover, in the language of the Touchstone, should be 'an open and notorious act, equivalent to investiture of land by livery of seisin, that notoriety might be given to the change of title.' It is not necessary, however, that the party entering should declare at the time for what purpose he enters. The act speaks for itself." Id. § 716. In his recent work on Real Property, Professor Minor (vol. 1, p. 532) says: "It is an established rule of the common law that, if the conditional estate be a freehold, the mere occurrence of the event which constitutes the violation of the condition does not defeat the estate, because as a freehold can at common law only be created by livery of seisin, there is needed a corresponding notoriety in order to determine it. This corresponding notoriety is the re-entry of the grantor or his heirs. . . . No actual re-entry is necessary to determine an estate for years on condition; 'for, as a term of years may begin without ceremony, so it may end without ceremony.'"

It must also be conceded that at common law the right of re-entry for condition broken was not assignable, and could only be exercised by the grantor who created the condition, or by his privies in blood. It could not be exercised by one who was only the grantor's privy in estate. This, under the maxim that, in order to discourage maintenance, "nothing which lies in action, entry, or re-entry can be granted." The same rule prohibited the conveyance of lands held adversely, or any interest therein. This rule was created under the English statute (Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. chap. 9) against selling pretended titles, and Sir Edward Coke states the reason therefor as follows: "[To prevent] maintenance, suppression of right, and stirring up of suits; and therefore nothing in action, entrie, or re-entrie can be granted over; for so, under color thereof, pretended titles might be granted to great men, whereby right might be trodden down and the weak oppressed, which the common law forbiddeth." 2 Co. Litt. 214-a. In many of the states of the American Union, this English statute against the sale of pretended titles to lands not in possession has been re-enacted, and in a few states the doctrine has been recognized and enforced as a part of the common law. But this court in Lytle v. State, 17 Ark. 674, held that "the provisions of these statutes, upon which so much of the law of maintenance and champerty rests for support in the English law, so far from having been re-enacted in this state, have been met here by directly conflicting legislation in the several provisions touching the sale of real estate held in adverse possession, whereby the right of 'alienation and purchase' of every interest, title, and estate therein has been enlarged almost to an unlimited extent."

This rule has long since been changed in England by statute. By the wills act of 1837 (Stat. 1 Vict. chap. 26, § 3) all rights of entry for condition broken were made devisable, and in 1844 another statute (Stat. 7 & 8 Vict. chap. 76, § 5) made them assignable. At common law there was a distinctive reason for the rule of inhibition against the assignment of a grantor's rights before and after breach of condition. Judge

Hare, in his note to Dumpor's Case, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. p. 140, says: "When it is said, in general terms, that a condition cannot be taken advantage of, save by the grantor and his heirs, and is consequently insusceptible of assignment, two distinct points of law, resting on different reasons, are involved in the assertion. Before breach, the reason why an assignee cannot take advantage of a condition really depends upon the inherent incapacity of the condition itself. But after breach the condition itself is gone, and there arises in its stead, whatever may be its terms, in the case of freehold estates, at all events when created by a common-law conveyance, a right or title of entry, which is as little capable of assignment as the condition, although the obstacle to its assignment is of a different nature, arising out of the policy of the common law and the provisions of the statute of maintenance, which forbade the sale or transfer of claims or demands unsustained by possession, and resting solely in entry or action." However, the same learned author states his opinion to be that the abrogation of the rule or statute against maintenance does not alter the rule as to the nonassignability of the grantor's right before re-entry. On that subject he says: "It does not necessarily follow that the right to enforce the forfeiture of a condition is equally susceptible of assignment. The right to enter for a breach of condition is a bare right or remedy, which differs essentially from the right to clothe the title to land with possession by expelling a disseisor or intruder; for, while the right of property and right of possession belong in the one case to the person who enters, they are vested in the other, in him on whom the entry is made, and continue in full force, although liable to be defeated, down to the last moment before that at which the grantor . . . [enters]."

The contrary view was expressed by the New Jersey court of errors and appeals, in a learned and exhaustive opinion in which all the judges concurred. Bouvier v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 67 N. J. L. 281, 60 L.R.A. 750, 51 Atl. 781. In the opinion in that case it was said: "A distinction not always clearly made, should, however, be borne in mind. Before breach, as in case of any determinable fee, there is in the grantor only a possibility of reverter. 4 Kent, Com. 11n; Nicoll v. New York & E. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 121. After breach there is a vested right." At another place in the opinion, after referring to the statute of that state declaring the assignability of estates in expectancy, it is said: "It is suggested, also, that the proviso in the act that no chose in action shall thereby be made assignable at law excepts rights of entry after breach, from its operation; but I do not take that view. Some judges have spoken of the right after breach as a mere chose in action, but the designation is inaccurate. A right of entry is an interest in land. . . . But, although it may be that the statute only authorizes a transfer before breach, I think a transfer after breach is also valid, for the reason that moved the superior court of Pennsylvania to a like decision. I would not say, as did that court, that a right of entry can be levied on and sold in execution, but I think that in this state it may be transferred at the will of the holder."

The Pennsylvania supreme court in McKissick v. Pickle, 16 Pa. 140, where, under a deed which created a condition subsequent, and the grantor reserved therein for himself, his heirs, and assigns, the right of re-entry, the question was whether or not a purchaser of the grantor's interest at execution sale could exercise the right, said: "The law against maintenance has never been adopted in this state. The reason assigned why a condition in England could not be assigned is because no title could be made to land held by another adversely, as that was against the law, which forbids maintenance. And hence the rule that none but the grantor or his heirs can enter for condition broken. This reason does not apply here, where the grantor expressly reserves the right (citing authorities). In the last case Chief Justice Gibson says none but the feoffor or his heirs can enter, and the reason why a right of entry cannot be assigned is that a contrary doctrine would favor maintenance and promote litigation. This is a fair case for the application of the maxim, Cessante ratione cessat ipsa lex."

We perceive no distinction by reason of the grantor having expressly reserved the right of re-entry to his assignee. The common-law doctrine of livery of seisin, and the law against maintenance or the sale of pretended titles, have never found lodgment in this state. The former is contrary to our whole scheme of laws, and especially the system of registration of land titles, which has existed in this state from the beginning. Before the statute was passed (December 9, 1837) putting in force in this state the common law of England so far as applicable to our form of government, the following statute was passed, which undoubtedly worked an entire change and swept away every vestige of the feudal doctrine concerning alienation of real estate and interests therein: "Any person claiming title to any real estate may, notwithstanding there may be an adverse possession thereof, sell and convey his interest in the same manner and with like effect as if he was in the actual possession thereof. The term 'real estate' as used in this act, shall be construed as coextensive in meaning with 'lands, tenements, and hereditaments,' and as embracing all chattels real." Kirby's Dig. §§ 736, 737. Of this statute the court, in Cloyes v. Beebe, 14 Ark. 489, said: "It is true that at common law, if a man had in him only the right of possession of property, he could not convey it to another, lest, in the language of the ancient law, 'pretended titles might be granted to great men, whereby justice might be trodden down and the weak oppressed.' But this was for the feudal reason that possession was an indispensable element of alienation. . . . But every vestige of this feudal doctrine, which thus restrained the alienation of real estate, has been swept off by our statute, which enacts that 'any person claiming title to any real estate may, notwithstanding there may be an adverse possession thereof, sell and convey his interest in the same manner and with like effect as if he was in the actual possession thereof.'"

It is insisted by learned counsel for appellant that the statute accomplished no more than an abrogation of the rule against maintenance, and that, notwithstanding the statute, the title does not revert to the grantor nor his heirs until after re-entry, and that without entry neither he nor they have anything to convey. Conceding, as they contend, that the statute only abrogates the rule against maintenance, that, in our opinion, is sufficient. For we conceive the rule, stated by the New Jersey and Pennsylvania courts, to be correct that, after condition broken, the grantor or his heirs have a vested right or interest, which is assignable. But the statute accomplishes more than a mere abrogation of the rule against maintenance. It declares that the grantor, notwithstanding an adverse possession, may sell his interest in the real estate, and gives the broadest definition to the term "real estate." Of this part of the statute our court has said, quoting from Sir Edward Coke, that the word "hereditaments" "is by far the largest and most comprehensive expression, because it included not only lands and tenements, but whatever may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed." Proceeding further, the court said: "And thus it appears that, although at common law there were certain rights to, and interests in, real estate, that for want of possession, either actual or constructive, could not be alienated to a stranger, although they could be released or devised by will, or would pass to the heir or executor as contingencies and mere possibilities, such is the comprehensiveness of our statute in embracing hereditaments in the term 'real estate' that that distinction is also annihilated, and therefore in this state whatever interest in real estate may be inherited may be bargained, sold, and conveyed." Cloyes v. Beebe, supra.

There is very little conflict, if any, among the text writers and lexicographers as to the meaning of the word "hereditaments." It is "anything that may be inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal, or mixed. The word is almost as comprehensive as 'property.'" Anderson's Law Dict.; 1 Coke, Inst. 6; 3 Kent, Com. 401. "Whatsoever may be inherited is an hereditament. . . . In other words, when a right is of such a nature that on the death of its owner intestate it descends to his heir, it is a hereditament. The term includes a few rights unconnected with land, but it is generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds." Rapalje & L. Law Dict. We do not deem it necessary, however, to resort to any technical meaning of the word "hereditaments," for it is obvious that the legislature, by the first section quoted above, intended to make interests of every kind whatever in lands alienable. This court has placed the same construction on the statute in another class of cases not differing, we think, in principle from the present case. Bagley v. Fletcher, 44 Ark. 153. In that case the question was as to the right of a minor to disaffirm by the execution of a quitclaim deed, without having re-entered or manifested a disaffirmance by any other overt act. The court held that the infant's deed vested in the grantee a defeasible estate in fee, subject to be defeated by disaffirmance, and that the execution of the quitclaim deed was effectual for the purpose of conveying the minor's interest, and was of such a hostile character to the original deed as amounted to a revocation of the former grant. That decision was rendered by a divided court, but there was no disagreement among the judges on the point which is pertinent here. Judge Eakin, dissenting, conceded that a deed with covenants of warranty, executed by a quondam infant, would operate as a disaffirmance and revocation of the former deed; but he held that a similar effect should not be given to a quitclaim deed. In his dissenting opinion he said: "In other states, as here, where lands adversely held may be transferred by the owners, the entry is dispensed with as an overt and solemn act of disaffirmance, and the deed, if incompatible with any supposed recognition of the outstanding title, is taken as a manifestation of an intention to do what would under the common law have been actually necessary." The decision in Bagley v. Fletcher was recently followed in the case of Beauchamp v. Bertig (Ala.) ante, 659, 119 S. W. 75, where the land conveyed by the minor was held adversely by his original grantee. So it may be said here with equal force, as in the case just cited, that the grantor in a conditional deed, by the execution of another deed to a third person after breach of the condition, manifests, in the most unmistakable manner, his intention of declaring a forfeiture. It is equivalent to an actual re-entry or a declaration of forfeiture. The execution of his subsequent deed, being in hostility to his former grant, necessarily works a forfeiture. The executed registration of the deed is an act of the highest degree of hostility, and one which the original grantee on condition must take notice of, because it is in the line of his title. The statement of a condition in the deed puts the grantee and those in privity with him on notice as to any subsequent deed executed by the grantor in hostility to the title thereby conveyed.

The Virginia statute (Code 1904, § 2418) declares that "any interest in or claim to real estate may be disposed of by deed or will." It was held under this provision that a right of action for land in the adverse possession of another, or a right of entry thereon after condition broken, by analogy to contingent remainders and conditional limitations, which are also mere possibilities, may be assigned by deed or will. Carrington v. Goddin, 13 Gratt. 587; Young v. Young, 89 Va. 675, 23 L.R.A. 642, 17 S. E. 470; Wilson v. Langhorne, 102 Va. 639, 47 S. E. 872. In Wilson v. Langhorne, supra, the court, referring to a former decision construing the statute, said: "The court in that case indulges in no refinement of construction. It is content to give to plain words their usual and everyday meaning, and the interpretation there placed upon the statute did away forever with the niceties by which the devolution of property had theretofore been embarrassed and hindered, and made capable of disposition by deed or will any interest in or claim to real estate." Kentucky has a statute identical in language with the Virginia statute, and the court of appeals of Kentucky in construing it said: "The effect of this enactment is to obviate at once all the difficulties growing out of the distinctions which had been established by judicial construction between such estates as were alienable and such as were not. It will not be doubted, we suppose, that under this statute every conceivable interest in, or claim to, real estate, whether present or future, vested or contingent, and however acquired, may be disposed of by deed or will." Nutter v. Russell, 3 Met. (Ky.) 163. In 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kenner v. American Contr. Co. 9 Bush, 202, the Kentucky court held that the right to enter for condition broken could be devised. The Supreme Court of the United States in Schlesinger v. Kansas City & S. R. Co. 152 U. S. 453, 38 L. ed. 510, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, said: "In the case of a private grant an entry by the grantor, or any act equivalent thereto, showing a purpose to take advantage of the breach of condition subsequent and to reclaim the estate forfeited by such breach, is all that is required." In that case the forfeiture was declared in a subsequent conveyance to another grantee, and the court said that the grantor had manifested his intention to forfeit the former grant. Reliance is placed by learned counsel on New York cases, principally Upington v. Corrigan, 79 Hun, 488, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1002, a decision by the appellate division of the supreme court of that state. That decision leaves out of account the distinction between the rights of a grantor before and after condition broken. But in that case (which was one concerning the effect of a devise of lands previously granted away by deed on condition subsequent) the devise was made before breach of the condition. The effect of that decision was merely to hold that before condition broken the grantor had no interest which could be devised by will.

We think it clear, both upon reason and authority, that where, as in this state, the common-law doctrine of livery of seisin is abolished by a statute authorizing a conveyance of land whether held in possession or not, a subsequent deed executed by an original grantor on condition is equivalent to re-entry, and is effectual for the purpose of declaring a forfeiture, and vesting the title in the subsequent grantee. A hostile deed after condition broken serves to divest the defeasible title out of the grantee on condition, and to convey the title. This is, as said by the Pennsylvania court, a proper application of the maxim that, the reason of the law ceasing, the law itself ceases.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore affirmed.

Hart, J., dissenting:

I dissent in this case. For the reason that a dissenting opinion is of little or no practical value, I shall not attempt an exhaustive discussion and review of the numerous adjudicated cases bearing upon the principles involved in the action. Suffice it to say that I have read and considered the cases cited by the able attorneys who have filed briefs in behalf of all parties interested in the decision, and their briefs, as I believe, exhaust the subject.

The opinion of the court does not decide whether the condition of the deed in question is precedent or subsequent; I think it a condition subsequent. It is necessary for me to state my conclusion on this point. If I thought it was a condition precedent, I would concur in the judgment, and not dissent. "Conditions precedent are, as the term implies, such as must happen before the estate dependent upon them can arise or be enlarged; while conditions subsequent are such as, when they do happen, defeat an estate already vested." Cooper v. Green, 28 Ark. at page 54. This is but a reiteration of the rule announced by Washburn, Blackstone, and Coke. It will be borne in mind that the opinion of the court has treated the condition in the deed as a condition subsequent. That is to hold that the estate was vested in the railway company by the execution of the deed. It is a rule of the common law that none may take advantage of a condition but grantors and their privies in blood, or, in the case of corporations, their successors. The right to forfeit an estate for breach of condition subsequent is confined to the grantor and his heirs, and cannot be transferred by alienation. 4 Am. Dig. Century ed. p. 1142; Note to Cross v. Carson, 44 Am. Dec. 742; authorities cited in the brief of Murphy, Coleman, & Lewis, amici curiæ. This proposition has been so long established, both by the text writers and by adjudicated cases, that there is no quarrel or dispute between my brother judges and myself as to it. They have decided that this rule has been changed by our statute, and that our former decisions have recognized the change. I maintain the contrary view. They declare that §§ 736 and 737 change the common-law rule.

Section 736 reads as follows: "Any person claiming title to any real estate may, notwithstanding there may be an adverse possession thereof, sell and convey his interest in the same manner and with like effect as if he was in the actual possession thereof." At common law the owner of land could not convey it unless it was in his possession. To obviate this difficulty the statute in question was passed. The statute simply means that, if A and B both claim title to land, and B is in possession thereof, A may convey his claim of title, and his grantee may bring suit to recover the land. I think that was the only issue involved in the case of Cloyes v. Beebe, 14 Ark. 493, cited by the court to maintain its position that the statute has changed the rule of the common law on the subject. I think the court has confused the right of entry, or bringing suit for possession, of one who has been unlawfully dispossessed of his real estate, with the right of entry, or taking advantage of a condition in a deed which has been broken. The statute was enacted for the purpose of enabling the claimant of real estate who has been unlawfully deprived of his possession to convey it. It is essentially different from the right to take advantage of a forfeiture or breach of a condition. In the latter case the title is vested in the grantee, and the grantor has no claim of title, but only the right to claim a forfeiture or breach of condition. This is not a claim of title, but only a right or personal privilege which the grantor may either waive or assert. As we have already seen by the rules of the common law, in a condition subsequent the title is vested in the grantee by the execution of the deed. This is the difference between a condition precedent and a condition subsequent. See Cooper v. Green, supra. It is plain that if the title is vested by the execution of the deed, it must be re-vested in the grantor in some way before he can be one "claiming title," as expressed in §§ 736 and 737 of Kirby's Dig. supra. If I am correct in the views I have expressed, the case of Lytle v. State, 17 Ark. 608, only holds that the common-law doctrine of maintenance is not in force in this state as applied to the case of one "claiming title to any real estate," and that such person may convey whatever title thereto he may possess.

I think a careful reading of the opinion in the case will show that this was the only issue raised by the pleadings and the evidence, and, if so, it is all that was decided. Section 737 reads as follows: "The term 'real estate' as used in this act shall be construed as coextensive in meaning with 'lands, tenements, and hereditaments,' and as embracing all chattels real." Obviously this refers to the preceding section; and, if my construction of the preceding section is right, § 737 only means that one claiming title to a hereditament which is held adversely by another may convey it. In short, if § 736 has no reference to a conveyance of right to re-enter or take advantage of a breach of a condition, the word "hereditament" as used in § 737 has no reference thereto. The difference between a right of entry of one unlawfully dispossessed of his real estate and the right of entry for breach of condition is clearly explained in the case of Bangor v. Warren, 34 Me. 324, 56 Am. Dec. 657, and the distinction is recognized in the case of Hooper v. Cummings, 45 Me. 359. In the state of New Jersey previous to the passage of the act of March 14, 1851 (P. L. p. 282), a right for a condition broken was not assignable, and the condition of a deed could only be taken advantage of by a party to the deed, or by his privies in blood, or by his personal representatives. The case of Den ex dem. Southard v. Central R. Co. 26 N. J. L. 13, holds that it takes an express statutory en-as they deem fit may be expended in the erection of a monument to the memory of the deceased. It is held merely that the erection of a public building is not within the intent of the testator as expressed in his will."

For the aforesaid reasons, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter its judgment in accordance with the foregoing.

We concur: Lorigan, J.; Angellotti, J.; Melvin, J.

I dissent: Beatty, Ch. J.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

FORT WAYNE COOPERAGE COMPANY,
Appt.,
v.

CHARLES PAGE.

(170 Ind. 585, 84 N. E. 145.)

Nuisance — frightening horse.

1. The owner of a factory who on his own land discharges waste steam in large quantities and with a puffing noise, at a point

Case Note. — Liability for discharge of steam near street or highway so as to frighten horses.

This note is expressly confined to the question of liability where a horse takes fright at steam emitted from a steam engine or locomotive located or standing near, but not upon, a public street or highway, or a railway crossing.

As to the liability of a railroad company where a horse takes fright at a locomotive or cars standing on a highway, see the case note to Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Gee, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 111.

It must be borne in mind that, in order that one may recover for injuries received in consequence of a horse becoming frightened at escaping steam, he must be free from contributory negligence. This rule is common to all the cases herein cited.

The emission of steam from a mill situated near a public highway, in a manner calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, is such a public nuisance as will render the owner liable for an injury sustained by one whose horse is frightened by it. Crocker v. McGregor, 76 Me. 282, 49 Am. Rep. 611.

So, negligence may be found by the jury where a load of stone was dumped upon the wooden platform of a stone crusher and at the same moment steam was let off from the boiler thereof by the employees of a city, frightening a horse that was being driven along a roadway 25 feet distant and which was within their sight. Butman v. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

located near the highway and at about the height from the ground of a horse's head, in such manner as to be calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, without regard to the presence upon the highway of horses which might be frightened thereby, may be held liable for injury to a traveler whose horse is so frightened.

Placing — nuisance — facts.

2. One who states in his complaint against a person operating a nuisance near a highway, for injuries caused by the frightening of his horse thereby, facts showing defendant's omission of duty to him, is not bound to characterize the thing causing the injury as a public nuisance, to render his complaint good.

Highway — negligence of driver.

3. That one driving a horse along a highway knew of the existence of a pipe near it from which steam might be discharged in such manner as to frighten a horse does not render him negligent in attempting to drive past it, if, as he approaches it, he sees no steam escaping.

Trial — interrogatories — definite answers — materiality.

4. Refusal by the court to require, in an action by one injured while driving along a highway, against a factory owner who discharged steam from a vent in such manner as to frighten the horse, a definite answer to an interrogatory as to whether or not a passenger offered to help hold the Newton, 179 Mass. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 349, 60 N. E. 401.

The questions of negligence and contributory negligence are for the jury where the evidence tends to show that a horse was frightened at the escape of steam from a heating apparatus for passenger cars situated at or near a street crossing, the steam from which, by reason of the damp and foggy atmosphere, hung about that point in a greater degree than usual. Mendenhall v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 202 Pa. 427, 51 Atl. 1028.

A city will be liable where steam from the cylinder cocks of the engine of a municipal lighting plant, which is blown into a pipe passing under a street, arises upon both sides thereof, and frightens a horse being driven in the nighttime by one, unfamiliar with the street, so that, by reason of the lack of a guard rail, it backs off the road. Taylor v. Ballard, 24 Wash. 191, 64 Pac. 143.

But it was said in Curry v. Luzerne, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 514, that a municipality will not be liable for an injury due to the fright of a horse at escaping steam from an engine located near a street, as it has no power to compel the removal of the engine far enough from the street to prevent frightening horses.

Steam from locomotives; in general.

The use of steam by a railway company is lawful, and there is no liability for frightening horses by the necessary and horse, is not error, since that fact is immaterial to plaintiff's right to recover.

Same — effect on general verdict.

5. There is no error in refusing to compel a definite answer to an interrogatory, if the answer most favorable to the losing party that could have been returned would not have controlled the general verdict.

Same — refusal — evidence.

6. Interrogatories to the jury which call for evidence, and not material facts, are properly refused.

(April 3, 1908.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Court affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Miami County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to usual escape of steam from a locomotive if used in the usual and ordinary manner, any damage resulting therefrom being damnum absque injuria. Coleman v. Wrightsville & T. R. Co. 114 Ga. 386, 40 S. E. 247; Billman v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. 76 Ind. 174, 40 Am. Rep. 230; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Gaines, 104 Ind. 526, 54 Am. Rep. 334, 4 N. E. 34, 5 N. E. 746; Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Boettcher, 131 Ind. 82, 28 N. E. 551; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 147 Ind. 638, 46 N. E. 344; Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 1038; Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 17 Kan. 475; Boothby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 90 Me. 313, 38 Atl. 155; Duvall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 73 Md. 516, 21 Atl. 496; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Burkhardt, 83 Md. 516, 34 Atl. 1010; Riley v. New York, P. & N. R. Co. 90 Md. 53, 44 Atl. 994; Lindem v. Northern P. R. Co. 85 Minn. 391, 89 N. W. 64; Brown v. Missouri P. R. Co. 89 Mo. App. 192; Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clark, 35 Neb. 867, 23 L.R.A. 504, 53 N. W. 970, s. c. on second appeal, 39 Neb. 65, 23 L.R.A. 507, 57 N. W. 545; Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Brady, 39 Neb. 27, 57 N. W. 767; Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 122 S. W. 895; Petersburg R. Co. v. Hite, 81 Va. 767; Cahoon v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 85 Wis. 570, 55 N. W. 900; Crowley v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 122 Wis. 287, 99 N. W. 1016.

Whether the escape of steam from a locomotive is the result of a prudent operation of a railroad or its appliances is to be determined from the circumstances and facts of the case. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Brady, supra.

—where street or highway parallels railway track.

It was said in Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co. supra, that the letting off of steam from a locomotive with its attendant noises is not per se an act of negligence or evidence of wrongful conduct; but that, where one is driving a horse along a public road near a railway track, the railway company and recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Vesey & Vesey, Loveland & Loveland, and Barrett & Morris for appellant.

Messrs. J. S. Branyan, Milo Feightner, Lesh & Lesh, and Bailey & Cole for appellee.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

About 1 mile east of the town of Roanoke, at the south side of a public highway running east and west, and about 200 feet east of a point where the Wabash Railroad, running north and south, crosses said highway, the traveler are each rightfully thereon, and the former must not heedlessly or negligently, or with a wanton or criminal intent to do wrong, allow the escape of steam without necessity therefor. To the same effect, see Brown v. Missouri P. R. Co. 89 Mo. App. 192, and St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Lewis, 60 Ark. 409, 30 S. W. 765, 1135.

But a railway company will not be liable for causing the fright of a mule by steam necessarily permitted to escape from a locomotive, when rounding a sharp curve, in order to slacken the speed of a train, providing it was not greater than was usual, and was reasonably incident to the control of the engine at the time, or was not recklessly or wantonly permitted to escape. Oxford Lake Lime Co. v. Stedham, 101 Ala. 376, 13 So. 553.

And it was held in Proctor v. Southern R. Co. 61 S. C. 170, 39 S. E. 351, that a recovery based upon ordinary negligence would not be permitted under a complaint alleging in substance that an injury was due to steam "wilfully, wantonly, and recklessly" emitted from a locomotive and to the blowing of the whistle thereof, with intent to frighten a mule which the plaintiff was driving upon an adjoining highway.

But the unnecessary escape of steam from a locomotive when being operated on a track parallel with and adjacent to a street or highway constitutes such negligence as will render a railway company liable for an injury caused by a horse of ordinary gentleness taking fright therefrom, and which was seen or might have been seen by those in charge of the locomotive. This doctrine has been applied under such circumstances where an engineer unnecessarily opened the cylinder cocks of a locomotive (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 94, 69 S. W. 227; Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 122 S. W. 895; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Lewis, supra); where steam was permitted to escape in a careless, negligent, or heedless manner without necessity therefor (Culp v. Atchison & N. R. Co. supra; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Syfan [Tex. Civ. App.] 43 S.

appellant, in August, 1904, maintained a stove and heading factory, operated by steam power. As a part of its plant, and as constituting the eastern structure thereof, was a steaming house, 67 feet long, 10 feet high, and 10 feet wide, parallel with, and 9 feet south of the highway, in which house were located nine vats for the steaming of the timber, preparatory to its being manufactured. The power and machinery house was located a few feet west and south of the steaming house. The vats were supplied from the waste steam of the engine, which was conveyed from the latter by a 4-inch iron pipe laid on the ground parallel with, and within a foot of, the north line of the steaming house to the northeast corner of said house, at which point it terminated in an upright stem 7 inches in diameter, standing 6 feet above the ground, and within 8 feet of the public highway, from the top of which stem the exhaust steam from the pipe escaped at all times when not being used for the filling of the steam vats. The escape of the steam was in large volumes, and was attended with a loud puffing noise, and when the wind was in a southerly direction would float in clouds across the highway, frequently totally obstructing vision along the road. In August, 1904, appellee, having in the buggy with him one Druley, was driving eastward on said highway by said heading factory. The horse was three and one-half years old, ordinarily gentle and well broke for driving on the public highways, though he had not been driven in the presence of engines or by

W. 551), where a locomotive was negligently started, accompanied by a sudden escape of steam (Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 654, 49 S. W. 1055); where a horse was suddenly enveloped in a cloud of steam permitted to escape with extraordinary noise from a locomotive which apparently was lifeless (Brown v. Missouri P. R. Co. supra); where there was an unnecessary emission of a loud blast of steam, which was not the usual noise made by "popping" off steam (Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Jones [Tex. Civ. App.] 88 S. W. 445); where it was alleged that an engineer might have checked the unnecessary discharge of steam from a new locomotive which he was running back and forth for the purpose of "limbering" (Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Doyle, 56 Ill. App. 78); where, after the usual station signals had been given, an engineer saw the plaintiff, and gave ten or twelve quite sharp blasts of the whistle and let off a large volume of steam (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hamilton [Tex. Civ. App.] 66 S. W. 797); where it was alleged that the whistle was sounded and steam was negligently and wilfully permitted to escape from a locomotive, purposely and deliberately, in order to frighten a horse (Earl v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 84 Ark. 507, 106 S. W. 675).

It was said in Chicago, R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Jones, supra, that the unnecessary emission of a loud blast of steam would constitute negligence where those in charge of a locomotive must have known that the adjoining highway was frequently used by the public.

It was held in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Steckman, 224 Ill. 500, 79 N. E. 602, to be a question for the jury whether it was negligence to blow the whistle and permit the escape of steam from the cylinder cocks of a locomotive, which noises frightened a horse upon an adjoining city street, when forbidden by ordinance except for three revolutions of the driving wheels in starting a locomotive.

It is not contributory negligence, as a matter of law, for the rider of a mule of average docility and gentleness not to dismount upon observing the approach of a train upon a near-by track, where he controlled the mule's signs of uneasiness until the emission from the locomotive, when opposite him, of a large quantity of steam which was accompanied by unusual and extraordinary noises. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hamilton, supra.

So, it is not contributory negligence for the rider of a horse not to dismount upon the approach of a train, where the animal did not exhibit signs of fright until the unnecessary escape of steam from the cylinder cocks of the locomotive. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Kennedy, supra.

And where steam from a locomotive is intentionally thrown upon the animal one is riding, he cannot be charged with contributory negligence because he acted imprudently in riding in a private lane where he knew a locomotive might be encountered. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Syfan, supra.

—where locomotive stands near public crossing.

Attention is called to the fact that cases where a horse is frightened by the escape of steam from a locomotive which is standing in a public street or upon a highway crossing are excluded from this note.

It is the duty of a railway company to anticipate that travelers with horses may, at any time, approach a crossing leading over the railway company's property, which it permits the public to use, and be mindful of the danger to such travelers from the sudden escape of steam at high pressure from a locomotive standing near the crossing. Boothby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 90 Me. 313, 38 Atl. 155.

And it is the duty of those in charge of a locomotive standing near a highway crossing, when aware of the presence of one driving a horse, to exercise ordinary care to prevent any unusual, extraordinary, or sudden noises or movements which would appear to a man of ordinary prudence to be likely to frighten the horse and cause injury to the driver. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Belt, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 281, 59

the heading factory before. After crossing the railroad, he trotted along at the rate of 7 miles an hour. When he arrived opposite the west end of the mill, he became somewhat frightened by the noise of the saws and other machinery, shied to the north side of the road, but was pulled back into the road and urged along; and when he had gone 25 or 30 feet farther east, a cloud of steam suddenly burst from the top of said stem and floated across the road. At this the horse instantly became frightened and unmanageable, and broke away to the side of the road, inflicting severe injuries upon appellee.

In addition to the foregoing facts, it is charged in the first paragraph of the complaint that said clouds of escaping steam and said great noise were calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness driven by persons along the highway, which fact was well known to the defendant; that the defendant wrongfully, unlawfully, and negligently maintained said steaming house and steam pipe "at the place and in the manner before set forth." It is further alleged in this paragraph that the plaintiff was driving a quiet and gentle horse along the highway, and driving in a careful and prudent manner, and without knowing of or apprehending any danger, and when within 30 feet of said upright steam pipe a large cloud of steam suddenly burst forth from said pipe with a loud and frightful noise, and floated over the highway immediately in front of plain-

S. W. 607, s. c. first appeal (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 362.

In order to render a railway company liable for injuries caused by a horse taking fright at the escape of steam from the valves of a locomotive standing near a public crossing, it must appear not only that escape of steam was unnecessary, but also that it was permitted under such circumstances and surroundings, as to time, place, and the situation of the parties, as to imply neglect to exercise that degree of care which a reasonable man would have exercised under the circumstances. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clark, 35 Neb. 867, 23 L.R.A. 504, 53 N. W. 970, s. c. on second appeal, 39 Neb. 65, 23 L.R.A. 507, 57 N. W. 545.

A complaint is sufficient which alleges in substance that those in charge of a locomotive which stood near a public crossing carelessly and negligently managed it by blowing its whistle and causing or suffering the blowing off of steam so as to make a loud and unusual noise, with knowledge of the plaintiff's presence, which so frightened his horse that it ran away and inflicted an injury. Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Boettcher, 131 Ind. 82, 28 N. E. 551.

Negligence is shown where a horse, when upon a public crossing, is frightened by the starting of a locomotive, accompanied by the sudden emission of a cloud of steam with unusual, unnecessary, and unreasonable noises, calculated to frighten horses. Crowder v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. 39 Tex. Civ. App. 314, 87 S. W. 166.

Likewise, negligence is shown where the engineer of a locomotive which was standing near a crossing observed the plaintiff's approach, and that his horse was restless and afraid of the engine, and, when upon the track, it was frightened by the negligent and malicious escape of steam therefrom, as it was the engineer's duty, under such circumstances, to use all necessary precaution to prevent such an accident. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Harmon, 47 Ill. 298, 95 Am. Dec. 489.

So, there is evidence of negligence sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff, where a locomotive which has been stopped 25 or 30 feet from a crossing, in order to let several vehicles pass, is suddenly started, and the ringing of the bell and the escape of steam frightens a horse when upon the track. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 658.

And a railway company will be liable where a horse, when upon the track, is frightened by the sudden and unexpected starting of a locomotive, which is accompanied by unnecessary noise caused by escaping steam. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Belt, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 281, 59 S. W. 607.

It was held in Rademacher v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. (Mich.) 123 N. W. 45, to be a question for the jury whether it was negligence to start a locomotive which stood some distance from a public crossing with the gates open, and to permit the escape of steam from the cylinder cocks just as a horse was driven upon the crossing, with nothing in the situation to appraise the driver of the fact that the locomotive was about to move.

As it is the duty of a railway company to use reasonable care to prevent injury from the noises made by escaping steam, if sufficient to frighten a horse of ordinary gentleness, the question whether it is negligence to permit the escape of steam from a locomotive standing near a public highway, as well as whether reasonable care required that warning thereof should be given one who approaches the crossing driving a horse of ordinary gentleness, is for the jury. Lewis v. Eastern R. Co. 60 N. H. 187.

So, a railway company will be liable for causing the fright of a team by the escape of steam from a locomotive standing near a highway, if due and proper care in the management thereof is not exercised and the noise thereby made is liable to frighten horses, both of which questions are to be determined by the jury. Gordon v. Boston & M. R. Co. 58 N. H. 396.

And it was held in Presby v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 66 N. H. 615, 22 Atl. 554, that a case should be submitted to the jury where a horse was frightened by the noise of steam escaping from the safety valve of tiff's horse, whereby said horse became frightened and beyond the plaintiff's control.

In addition to the facts averred in the first paragraph, it is alleged in the second paragraph that, "when 30 feet west of said steam pipe, a great quantity of steam was, by the defendant, suddenly, carelessly, and negligently emitted from said pipe with a puffing sound, and formed a dense cloud of steam which was carried over said highway by the wind immediately in front of the plaintiff's horse, which caused the horse to take fright." It is averred in this paragraph that the facts alleged constitute a public nuisance.

The first paragraph seems to be based on the negligent construction and maintenance of the steam pipe adjacent to the public highway, and the second on the theory that the construction, maintenance, and operation of the steam pipe in the position and manner set forth constituted a public nuisance, from which the plaintiff had suffered special damages. The two theories being ruled, in the main, by the same general principles, we have deemed it proper to consider the paragraphs together. The chief objection presented is that there is no averment that either the location or manner of operation of the upright steam pipe constituted a nuisance, and no averments from which a nuisance can be inferred. This position is not maintainable. It is true that the business described is a proper and lawful business, and, being located on appellant's own premises, its operation cannot be a a locomotive which stood near a crossing, at a point where the driver's view of the track was obstructed, and he had no notice of the close proximity of the engine.

So, a case should be submitted to the jury where the evidence tends to prove negligence not only in causing or permitting the escape of steam from a locomotive, but also from keeping it for more than eight hours during the business portion of the day, upon a side track immediately adjoining a public street. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 124 N. C. 252, 32 S. E. 711.

And it is immaterial whether steam escapes through an automatic safety valve or is blown off by those in charge of the locomotive, as either might constitute negligence. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. supra, reversed, however, upon another point upon second appeal, in 126 N. C. 343, 35 S. E. 606.

And this is true notwithstanding the use of a safety valve was necessary in order to prevent an explosion of the boiler, as it might not be necessary to keep up, for so long a time, a head of steam sufficient to operate the valve. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. supra; Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 1038.

And this doctrine was applied in Boothby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 90 Me. 313, 38 Atl. 155, where it appeared that the escape of steam from the safety valve could have been prevented by watchfulness upon the part of those in charge of the locomotive, and it appeared it was unnecessary to maintain a high pressure of steam at the time.

And this doctrine was applied in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Traub (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 282, where a railway company had instructed its employees not to permit the unnecessary escape of steam from the safety valve when standing near stations or public crossings, and it also appeared that, at the time, the escape of steam was not necessary in the operation of the locomotive.

And it is immaterial that those in charge of the locomotive had no control over the pop or safety valve, which was set to relieve the pressure at a given point, where 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

it appeared that the quantity of steam might be controlled by regulating the fire. Presby v. Grand Trunk R. Co. supra.

In Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains, supra, it appeared that the pressure of steam might have been reduced by three methods other than the use of the safety valve, through which it escaped.

See also Keech v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 35 N. Y. S. R. 902, 13 N. Y. Supp. 149, infra, cited in the following subdivision, holding that a railway company will be liable where an engineer informs one that it is safe to drive across the track, and his horse is frightened by the sudden escape of steam from the safety valve, over which the engineer had no control.

But it has been held that there will be no liability where a horse takes fright at the escape of steam from the automatic safety valve of a locomotive, over which those in charge thereof have no control, and it appears that a full pressure of steam was necessary in order that the engine might perform its duty. Duvall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 73 Md. 516, 21 Atl. 496; Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, 39 Neb. 65, 23 L.R.A. 507, 57 N. W. 545.

So, negligence cannot be predicated because the safety valve of a locomotive performs its proper function of permitting steam to escape in order to prevent a dangerous pressure. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, supra.

And this doctrine is not affected by the fact that, at the time of the accident, there was no one upon the locomotive. Duvall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra.

And it cannot be shown that there are appliances in general use on railroads which, to a certain extent, suppress the noise caused by the escape of steam through the safety valve, which were not used by the defendant. Ibid.

And it was held in Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Burkhardt, 83 Md. 516, 34 Atl. 1010, that a verdict should be directed for the defendant where the noise caused by the escape of steam from a locomotive standing near a street crossing was not unusual or unnecessary, nor due to any neglect source of damages to a traveler on the highway, unless it is shown that the structures or business, or some part of one or the other, was being maintained in an improper place or conducted in an improper manner. One may not always conduct a lawful business on his own premises as he pleases. The law requires that everyone, in the use and enjoyment of his property, shall have regard for the rights of others, and will not allow him to set up or prosecute a business on his own land in a way that is calculated to, or in fact does, materially or injuriously affect the rights of adjoining owners, or that substantially or harmfully interferes with or injures those rightfully traveling on an adjoining highway. Wright v. Compton, 53 Ind. 337; Island Coal Co. v. Clemmitt, 19 Ind. App.

21, 49 N. E. 38. In the Wright-Compton Case appellant was engaged in quarrying stone near the highway by the use of gunpowder. Compton, in passing by on the highway at the time a blast was exploded, was hit by flying rock and injured. In upholding Compton's recovery of damages this court said: "Every person must so use his property and exercise his rights as not to injure the property or restrict the rights of others. In this case the defendants could not lawfully so use their stone quarry as to embarrass the rights of travelers along the public highway. The public travel must not be endangered to accommodate the private rights of an individual." The principle here involved is also well illustrated by the facts and ruling in the Coal Company-Clemmitt of duty in the position or management thereof.

And under similar circumstances this doctrine was applied in Powers v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 78 Vt. 436, 63 Atl. 139, where it did not appear that the escape of steam which frightened plaintiff's horse was unnecessary, nor that the engineer did not see the horse and stop the escape of steam, as soon as he should have done.

But it was said in Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, supra, that if it appeared that an engine has been permitted to stand for a long time near a crossing with an unnecessarily high pressure of steam, it might be that such facts, followed by an escape of steam from the pop valve, would justify an inference of negligence.

There will be no liability where, after one has driven over a railway crossing, his horse, while standing at a near-by watering trough, was frightened at a locomotive whistle and the escape of steam from its cylinder cocks, necessarily emitted in starting its train, where the engineer did not see the plaintiff or his horse. St. John v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 79 S. W. 603.

It cannot be said that the driver of a horse is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, where, upon approaching a railway track in a city, the gates were open with an engine standing some distance from the crossing, with nothing in the situation to give warning of danger of the emission of steam therefrom, or that the locomotive would be suddenly started. Rademacher v. Detroit, G. H. & N. R. Co. (Mich.) 123 N. W. 45.

So, it is not negligence per se to drive a horse of ordinary gentleness, which will not take fright at the usual noises made by a locomotive, across a railroad track at a much-frequented public crossing, near which an engine is standing, as the driver may rightfully assume that it will emit only the usual and necessary amount of steam with its attendant noises, against which he might be prepared to protect himself. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Belt, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

24 Tex. Civ. App. 281, 59 S. W. 607, s. c. first appeal (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 362.

When directed to cross track by railway employees.

Where a flagman invites a person to cross a track, the railway company will be liable where his team is frightened by the sudden escape of steam from a locomotive standing near the street, as under such circumstances he may rightfully assume that there will be no increase or dangerous change as to the quantity of steam being emitted, or noise being made, by the locomotive. Borst v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 4 Hun, 346, affirmed without opinion in 66 N. Y. 639.

So, where, upon a signal from a flagman at a public crossing, one attempts to drive across a track and his horse is frightened at the sudden escape of steam upon the starting of a locomotive, the railway company will be liable where it appears that the engineer, a few moments before, saw the plaintiff drive up near the crossing and his horse take fright at a similar escape of steam, as such facts would warrant an inference that the engineer knew that the animal was subject to fright from such cause, and therefore under the circumstances his conduct disclosed want of reasonable care. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Abrahams (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 1034.

Where the plaintiff is assured by an engineer of a locomotive standing near a much-frequented public crossing that it is safe to cross, a railway company will be liable where the plaintiff's horse is frightened at the escape of steam therefrom, which could have been prevented by the exercise of due care. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 147 Ind. 638, 46 N. E. 344, s. c. on first appeal, 134 Ind. 16, 33 N. E. 774.

So, where one was informed by the engineer of a locomotive which stood near a public highway that he might cross, a railway company will be liable where his horse was frightened by the blowing of the whistle and the escape of steam from the pop safety valve, notwithstanding it worked tiff's horse, whereby said horse became frightened and beyond the plaintiff's control.

In addition to the facts averred in the first paragraph, it is alleged in the second paragraph that, "when 30 feet west of said steam pipe, a great quantity of steam was, by the defendant, suddenly, carelessly, and negligently emitted from said pipe with a puffing sound, and formed a dense cloud of steam which was carried over said highway by the wind immediately in front of the plaintiff's horse, which caused the horse to take fright." It is averred in this paragraph that the facts alleged constitute a public nuisance.

The first paragraph seems to be based on the negligent construction and maintenance of the steam pipe adjacent to the public highway, and the second on the theory that the construction, maintenance, and operation of the steam pipe in the position and manner set forth constituted a public nuisance, from which the plaintiff had suffered special damages. The two theories being ruled, in the main, by the same general principles, we have deemed it proper to consider the paragraphs together. The chief objection presented is that there is no averment that either the location or manner of operation of the upright steam pipe constituted a nuisance, and no averments from which a nuisance can be inferred. This position is not maintainable. It is true that the business described is a proper and lawful business, and, being located on appellant's own premises, its operation cannot be a a locomotive which stood near a crossing, at a point where the driver's view of the track was obstructed, and he had no notice of the close proximity of the engine.

So, a case should be submitted to the jury where the evidence tends to prove negligence not only in causing or permitting the escape of steam from a locomotive, but also from keeping it for more than eight hours during the business portion of the day, upon a side track immediately adjoining a public street. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 124 N. C. 252, 32 S. E. 711.

And it is immaterial whether steam escapes through an automatic safety valve or is blown off by those in charge of the locomotive, as either might constitute negligence. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. supra, reversed, however, upon another point upon second appeal, in 126 N. C. 343, 35 S. E. 606.

And this is true notwithstanding the use of a safety valve was necessary in order to prevent an explosion of the boiler, as it might not be necessary to keep up, for so long a time, a head of steam sufficient to operate the valve. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. supra; Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 1038.

And this doctrine was applied in Boothby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 90 Me. 313, 38 Atl. 155, where it appeared that the escape of steam from the safety valve could have been prevented by watchfulness upon the part of those in charge of the locomotive, and it appeared it was unnecessary to maintain a high pressure of steam at the time.

And this doctrine was applied in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Traub (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 282, where a railway company had instructed its employees not to permit the unnecessary escape of steam from the safety valve when standing near stations or public crossings, and it also appeared that, at the time, the escape of steam was not necessary in the operation of the locomotive.

And it is immaterial that those in charge of the locomotive had no control over the pop or safety valve, which was set to relieve the pressure at a given point, where 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

it appeared that the quantity of steam might be controlled by regulating the fire. Presby v. Grand Trunk R. Co. supra.

In Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains, supra, it appeared that the pressure of steam might have been reduced by three methods other than the use of the safety valve, through which it escaped.

See also Keech v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 35 N. Y. S. R. 902, 13 N. Y. Supp. 149, infra, cited in the following subdivision, holding that a railway company will be liable where an engineer informs one that it is safe to drive across the track, and his horse is frightened by the sudden escape of steam from the safety valve, over which the engineer had no control.

But it has been held that there will be no liability where a horse takes fright at the escape of steam from the automatic safety valve of a locomotive, over which those in charge thereof have no control, and it appears that a full pressure of steam was necessary in order that the engine might perform its duty. Duvall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 73 Md. 516, 21 Atl. 496; Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, 39 Neb. 65, 23 L.R.A. 507, 57 N. W. 545.

So, negligence cannot be predicated because the safety valve of a locomotive performs its proper function of permitting steam to escape in order to prevent a dangerous pressure. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, supra.

And this doctrine is not affected by the fact that, at the time of the accident, there was no one upon the locomotive. Duvall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra.

And it cannot be shown that there are appliances in general use on railroads which, to a certain extent, suppress the noise caused by the escape of steam through the safety valve, which were not used by the defendant. Ibid.

And it was held in Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Burkhardt, 83 Md. 516, 34 Atl. 1010, that a verdict should be directed for the defendant where the noise caused by the escape of steam from a locomotive standing near a street crossing was not unusual or unnecessary, nor due to any neglect source of damages to a traveler on the highway, unless it is shown that the structures or business, or some part of one or the other, was being maintained in an improper place or conducted in an improper manner. One may not always conduct a lawful business on his own premises as he pleases. The law requires that everyone, in the use and enjoyment of his property, shall have regard for the rights of others, and will not allow him to set up or prosecute a business on his own land in a way that is calculated to, or in fact does, materially or injuriously affect the rights of adjoining owners, or that substantially or harmfully interferes with or injures those rightfully traveling on an adjoining highway. Wright v. Compton, 53 Ind. 337; Island Coal Co. v. Clemmitt, 19 Ind. App.

21, 49 N. E. 38. In the Wright-Compton Case appellant was engaged in quarrying stone near the highway by the use of gunpowder. Compton, in passing by on the highway at the time a blast was exploded, was hit by flying rock and injured. In upholding Compton's recovery of damages this court said: "Every person must so use his property and exercise his rights as not to injure the property or restrict the rights of others. In this case the defendants could not lawfully so use their stone quarry as to embarrass the rights of travelers along the public highway. The public travel must not be endangered to accommodate the private rights of an individual." The principle here involved is also well illustrated by the facts and ruling in the Coal Company-Clemmitt of duty in the position or management thereof.

And under similar circumstances this doctrine was applied in Powers v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 78 Vt. 436, 63 Atl. 139, where it did not appear that the escape of steam which frightened plaintiff's horse was unnecessary, nor that the engineer did not see the horse and stop the escape of steam, as soon as he should have done.

But it was said in Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, supra, that if it appeared that an engine has been permitted to stand for a long time near a crossing with an unnecessarily high pressure of steam, it might be that such facts, followed by an escape of steam from the pop valve, would justify an inference of negligence.

There will be no liability where, after one has driven over a railway crossing, his horse, while standing at a near-by watering trough, was frightened at a locomotive whistle and the escape of steam from its cylinder cocks, necessarily emitted in starting its train, where the engineer did not see the plaintiff or his horse. St. John v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 79 S. W. 603.

It cannot be said that the driver of a horse is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, where, upon approaching a railway track in a city, the gates were open with an engine standing some distance from the crossing, with nothing in the situation to give warning of danger of the emission of steam therefrom, or that the locomotive would be suddenly started. Rademacher v. Detroit, G. H. & N. R. Co. (Mich.) 123 N. W. 45.

So, it is not negligence per se to drive a horse of ordinary gentleness, which will not take fright at the usual noises made by a locomotive, across a railroad track at a much-frequented public crossing, near which an engine is standing, as the driver may rightfully assume that it will emit only the usual and necessary amount of steam with its attendant noises, against which he might be prepared to protect himself. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Belt, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

24 Tex. Civ. App. 281, 59 S. W. 607, s. c. first appeal (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 362.

When directed to cross track by railway employees.

Where a flagman invites a person to cross a track, the railway company will be liable where his team is frightened by the sudden escape of steam from a locomotive standing near the street, as under such circumstances he may rightfully assume that there will be no increase or dangerous change as to the quantity of steam being emitted, or noise being made, by the locomotive. Borst v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 4 Hun, 346, affirmed without opinion in 66 N. Y. 639.

So, where, upon a signal from a flagman at a public crossing, one attempts to drive across a track and his horse is frightened at the sudden escape of steam upon the starting of a locomotive, the railway company will be liable where it appears that the engineer, a few moments before, saw the plaintiff drive up near the crossing and his horse take fright at a similar escape of steam, as such facts would warrant an inference that the engineer knew that the animal was subject to fright from such cause, and therefore under the circumstances his conduct disclosed want of reasonable care. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Abrahams (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 1034.

Where the plaintiff is assured by an engineer of a locomotive standing near a much-frequented public crossing that it is safe to cross, a railway company will be liable where the plaintiff's horse is frightened at the escape of steam therefrom, which could have been prevented by the exercise of due care. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 147 Ind. 638, 46 N. E. 344, s. c. on first appeal, 134 Ind. 16, 33 N. E. 774.

So, where one was informed by the engineer of a locomotive which stood near a public highway that he might cross, a railway company will be liable where his horse was frightened by the blowing of the whistle and the escape of steam from the pop safety valve, notwithstanding it worked

Case, supra. In that case the company, in disposing of its slack and refuse from its mine, piled the same on its own premises, but adjoining a highway. The refuse took fire by spontaneous combustion, and, burning, slid down the heap and frightened the plaintiff's horse. In commenting upon the facts as constituting a cause of action for damages the court said: "The entire pleading shows that the appellant was negligent in producing a condition of things through which as a natural result the appellee suffered the injury charged. If the appellant's wrong which caused the particular injury which forms the basis of the action may not be called, strictly speaking, the maintenance of a nuisance, and if the cause of action should more properly be said to be based upon negligence, we think that, though the meaning is not made as clear as desirable, it is sufficiently shown that there was a want of due care for the safety of persons rightfully using the highway, and a negligent exposure of such persons to peril from the cause through which the appellee was injured."

To erect and maintain a pipe 7 inches in diameter in an upright position, standing 6 feet from the ground, out and apart from the building, and within 8 feet of a public highway, from the top of which to discharge a large volume of waste steam with a loud puffing noise to be wafted across the highway on about the level of the heads of passing horses, is an unusual and indiscreet construction and operation of the pipe to say the least of it, especially when it is obvious that, if the waste had been placed on the south side of the building, its escape would not only have been unobserved from the road, but its floating over the same on so low a level would have been effectually prevented. But it cannot be said that the construction and operation of the pipe in the particular place and manner alleged was necessarily of itself either a nuisance or negligence. If appellant had kept a watch over the highway, and, on the approach of driven animals, had stopped the operation of the mill until the danger of their taking fright had been passed, or if it had adopted any other means by which all appreciable danger of giving fright from escaping steam had passed, then there would appear no just or sufficient reason for disturbing appellant in the exercise and enjoyment of its property rights. In automatically and was not under the engineer's control; as the latter's assurance of safety was made without reservation and implied that it was safe to cross as he had control over his engine and its instruments of alarming sound. Keech v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 35 N. Y. S. R. 902, 13 N. Y. Supp. 149.

But it was held in Riley v. New York, P. & N. R. Co. 90 Md. 53, 44 Atl. 994, that there would be no liability where an engineer informed one that it was safe to cross a track, and his horse became frightened at the sudden discharge of steam from a locomotive, unless it appears that the escape thereof and its accompanying noise was unusual and unnecessary.

Necessity of knowledge of proximity of horse.

Where a horse is frightened by the unnecessary escape of steam from a locomotive, it is not necessary, in order to sustain a recovery by the plaintiff, that those in charge of the engine should have been aware of his close proximity. Boothby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 90 Me. 313, 38 Atl. 155; Brown v. Missouri P. R. Co. 89 Mo. App. 192; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Traub (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 282; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Belt, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 281, 59 S. W. 607; Adams v. International & G. N. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 122 S. W. 895.

It was said in San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Belt, supra, that where a locomotive stands near a much-frequented public crossing, it is the duty of the engineer, although he may not know of the close proximity of a person who is driving a horse, before suddenly putting the engine in motion, with its attendant noises and escape of steam, to look out for horses near or likely to be near the crossing, and to exercise ordinary care to avoid frightening them in such manner.

In order to charge a railway company with liability it is unnecessary that those in charge of a locomotive should be actually aware of the close proximity of a horse, where an engine from which steam is unnecessarily permitted to escape from the pop safety valve in a manner calculated to frighten horses not accustomed to it, where it appears that a railway company had issued instructions not to unnecessarily permit the escape of steam from the pop valve when standing near the depots or highway crossings. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Traub, supra.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 94, 69 S. W. 227, the court observed that "it was not essential to plaintiff's right of recovery that defendant's employees should have seen his actual peril. If a reasonably prudent person would have anticipated that the opening of the cylinder cocks, thus causing volumes of steam to be thrown in the direction of plaintiff's horse, accompanied by loud and unusual noise, would have frightened the horse and probably have caused plaintiff to be injured, such acts on the part of the appellant's employees, being unnecessary in the proper operation of the engine, would constitute negligence and would render appellant liable for the injuries thereby caused."

other words, it is not a nuisance to operate a stove factory and discharge waste steam in close proximity to a public highway, if done in such a careful manner that it will not interfere with travelers in the free and safe exercise of their rights to travel the highway. The law will not intervene if the operator so conducts his factory as to avoid the creation of new dangers or difficulties to travelers on the road. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 198, 60 Am. Rep. 696, 12 N. E. 296; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 147 Ind. 638, 46 N. E. 344.

Now let us apply these principles to the facts of this case. It is alleged that appellant knew that the discharge of the steam in the place and manner described was calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness; that while carefully driving a gentle horse along the highway, when the horse had arrived at a point 25 or 30 feet from the waste pipe, the defendant suddenly let the steam go with a loud puffing noise, which steam formed a great cloud and floated across the road in front of the horse, causing him to take fright and inflict serious injury upon the plaintiff. These averments show that appellant operated on its own premises a structure which, from location or the manner in which it was conducted, imparted a new danger to those rightfully using the highway; and whether appellant at the time of appellee's accident was operating his factory with a degree of care for the safety of travelers commensurate with the danger it had created in the highway was a question very properly submitted to the jury. It would not have strengthened the complaint in terms to characterize the location or conduct of the factory as a public nuisance. It was sufficient for the plaintiff to show that he was injured by appellant's omission of a duty owing to him, namely, to protect him against injury from a peril the company had erected by the roadside in the prosecution of its own private business. We think it sufficiently appears that the highway was a public highway, and that each paragraph of the complaint states a cause of action.

It was not error to overrule appellant's motion for judgment in its favor on the answers to interrogatories, notwithstanding the general verdict. The answers referred to concerning the location and operation of appellant's factory establish the facts substantially as set forth in the introductory part of this opinion. Further, it is shown that appellee knew the location of the steam pipe, that steam at the time was floating across the highway, and, that when at a point 110 feet west of the pipe, the pipe was in the plain view of appellee from the center of the highway, and from that point he could have seen steam floating across the highway, if there was at that time any steam so floating. The horse did not become uneasy and nervous in approaching appellant's factory after crossing the railroad track, and appellee did not see any steam from the waste pipe floating across the highway after he crossed the railroad and before his horse shied at the sawmill. Both appellant and appellee at the time knew that such a horse as was being driven by appellee was likely to take fright at steam floating across the highway, so near the ground. In the large number of answers there is no fact found that is inconsistent with the general verdict that necessarily finds the existence of negligence on the part of appellant, and the nonexistence of contributory negligence on the part of appellee. The facts found, strengthened by the presumptions that may be invoked in support of the general verdict, very clearly bring the case within the oft-repeated rule of this court as defined in Jeffersonville v. Gray, 165 Ind. 26, 29, 74 N. E. 611, and cases cited.

In support of its motion for a new trial, appellant insists that the court erred in overruling its motion to require the jury to return more definite and certain answers to divers interrogatories. Under the statute (Burns's Anno. Stat. 1901, § 555) it is made the duty of the court, upon the request of either party, to instruct the jury to find specially upon any particular question of fact stated to them in an interrogatory on any issue in the case. The facts that must be found are such facts as are material to some issue in the case. The first answer assailed as too indefinite was to the following interrogatory: "No. 50. Did said Druley, while on or approaching said crossing, say to the plaintiff, in substance, 'You had better let me help you hold him'?" Answer. Not definite." The court doubtless took the view that the question and answer were immaterial because, if answered positively, and either affirmatively or negatively, the answer would not have affected the general verdict. Druley was riding in the buggy with the plaintiff when the horse took fright. If he did offer to assist in holding the horse, a rejection of the proffered assistance might, under the circumstances shown, have been counted as due care on the part of the plaintiff. It is clear that no answer that might have been returned would have changed the result. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Hedges, 105 Ind. 398, 7 N. E. 801. Besides, the interrogatory called for a mere item of evidence, and not for a material fact, and should have been rejected. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Hubbard, 116 Ind. 193, 18 N. E. 611; Gates v. Scott, 123 Ind. 459, 24 N. E. 257. The answers to interrogatories 62 and 66 come within the same rule. No. 59 reads as follows: "Was the steam discharging from the mill onto and across the highway while the plaintiff was approaching from a point west of the railroad?" Answer. "At the side of the highway. At times blew across." The evidence showed that the steam being discharged at a point 8 feet from the side of the highway responded to the shifting of the wind, and in one instant was carried across the road and in the next in another direction. It is not perceived how the jury, under the evidence, could have answered the interrogatory differently, and yet accurately. The court did not err in overruling the motion. Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Cregor, 150 Ind. 625, 628, 50 N. E. 760. Interrogatory 63 was as follows: "Was there something in the actions of the horse while on or approaching the railroad tracks that would indicate to an ordinarily prudent person that said horse was nervous and excited at the time?" Answer. "I think not." Ninety-eight and one half falls within the same rule. If the most favorable answer possible for appellant had been returned to these interrogatories, they would not have controlled the general verdict, and the court did not err in overruling appellant's motion.

The refusal of the court to submit to the jury certain interrogatories is complained of. Interrogatory 41 reads thus: "Was it reasonably probable that a colt of ordinary gentleness, three and one half years old, which had never been driven near a steam engine, would become frightened when brought for the first time into proximity with a steam engine in operation?" This called for evidence, and not a material fact, and was properly refused. The same is true of interrogatories 64 and 76. Ninety-five inquired if an ordinarily prudent man would have known that such a horse three and one half years old, would be likely to become frightened when passing defendant's factory as it was being operated on that day. This might have been answered either way, and be entirely consistent with the general verdict. The same is true of 96, 97, and 98, and they were all rightly withheld from the jury.

There was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding established the negligence averred in the complaint.

We find no error. Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

HARRY THOMAS, Resp't.,
v.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

(— Minn. —, 122 N. W. 456.)

Master — place of work — independent contractor.

1. Where a master places upon his premises, in the immediate vicinity where his servants are engaged at work, an independent contractor for a specific purpose, still retaining the general control of the premises, and continuing the conduct of his own business, his legal obligation to provide his servants with a safe place in which to perform their duties requires of him the exercise of reasonable care to protect them from the negligence of the independent contractor.

Same — bounds.

2. The obligation of the master to provide his servants a safe place extends to the portion of his premises on which they are required to work, and such other places thereon as they are expressly or impliedly invited and permitted to use.

Same — duty — noon hour.

3. The relation of master and servant, in so far as involves the obligation of the master to protect his servant while rightfully upon his premises, is not suspended during the noon hour, when the master expects, and expressly or by fair implication invites, the servant to remain upon the premises, in the immediate vicinity of the work.

(July 23, 1909.)

Headnotes by BROWN, J.

Case Note. — Does relationship of master and servant still exist where servant goes on master's premises before, after, or between hours of actual labor.

The earlier cases upon this subject are collected and discussed in a case note to Taylor v. Bush, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 853, and this note is merely supplementary thereto.

Riding to and from work.

The majority of the cases of this character involve the relationship existing between the employer and an employee while the latter is riding to or from his work, and there is a sharp conflict of authority as to what that relation is.

The following cases hold that while a servant is riding to or from his work, upon the master's trains or cars, the relationship of master and servant still exists, and the servant is entitled to all the duty from the master and must bear all of the obligations incident to that relationship: Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stuber, 54 L.R.A. 696, 48 C. C. A. 149, 108 Fed. 934. writ of certiorari

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Crassweller & Crassweller, for appellant:

The duty of the master to furnish his servant with a reasonably safe place in which to work is limited to the part of the premises where the employee is required to be for the purpose of his employment, and does not extend to his protection upon private excursions outside of those limits, taken solely upon his own account.

denied in 183 U. S. 698, 46 L. ed. 395, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935; Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Sawyer (Ala.) 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 717, 47 So. 67; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Harmon, 85 Ark. 503, 109 S. W. 295; Self v. Adel Lumber Co. 5 Ga. App. 846, 64 S. E. 112; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Messick, 35 Ind. App. 676, 74 N. E. 1097; Dobson v. New Orleans & W. R. Co. 52 La. Ann. 1127, 27 So. 670; Kilduff v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 195 Mass. 307, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 873, 81 N. E. 191; Streets v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 76 App. Div. 480, 78 N. Y. Supp. 729, affirmed in 178 N. Y. 553, 70 N. E. 1109; Sanderson v. Panther Lumber Co. 50 W. Va. 42, 55 L.R.A. 908, 88 Am. St. Rep. 841, 40 S. E. 368.

So, in Riccio v. International R. Co. 63 Misc. 588, 117 N. Y. Supp. 720, it was held that where a person in the employ of a railroad company travels back and forth from his home to the place where his services are rendered, upon the cars of the company, and his transportation, free of charge, constitutes part of the contract of service, while so traveling he is an employee, not a passenger; and for an injury to him through the negligence of a coemployee the company is not liable.

And in Tanner v. Frank Hitch Lumber Co. 140 N. C. 475, 53 S. E. 287, it was held that, inasmuch as it was the master's duty (he having undertaken it according to the plaintiff's contention) to furnish his laborers transportation on his log train to and from the "quarters," it was his further duty to see that such transportation was rendered as reasonably safe as the character of it would admit. While the plaintiff assumed the risks incident to riding on loaded log cars, he did not assume any risk resulting from a defective car.

So, in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Brock (Ala.) 49 So. 453, the court said: "The servant who is employed to go to a certain place and do a certain work, who is transferred to and from said place by the employer (his pay being continued all the time), is employed in and about that work from the time he leaves until he returns."

An employee is, while being moved from 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Labatt, Mast. & S. § 625, p. 1845; 3 Elliot, Railroads, §§ 1248-1250; 2 Jaggard, Torts, § 258, p. 890; Dresser, Employers' Liability, §§ 103, 104; Hyatt v. Murray, 101 Minn. 507, 112 N. W. 881; Schreiner v. Great Northern R. Co. 86 Minn. 245, 58 L.R.A. 75, 90 N. W. 490; Ratte v. Dawson, 50 Minn. 450, 52 N. W. 965; Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 637, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153, 52 Pac. 33; Wright v. Rawson, 52 Iowa, 329, 35 Am. Rep. 275, 3 N. W. 106; Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Talley, 152 Ala. 162, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 861, 43 So. 800; Shadoan v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 828, 82 S. W. 567; Belford v. Canada Shipping Co. 35 Hun, 347; Morrison v. Burgess Sulphite Fibre Co. 70 N. H. 406, 85 Am. St. Rep. 634, 47 Atl. 412; Lenk v.

place to place in the work of his employment, in the car furnished by the company for him to live in, in the service of the master as much as when actively engaged in his work. Southern R. Co. v. West, 4 Ga. App. 672, 62 S. E. 141.

A pumper in the employ of the defendant, who was expected and required to ride between pumping stations on the trains of the defendant, and had a pass for that purpose, was held in Kunza v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Wis.) 123 N. W. 403, to be serving the company as fully while riding from one station to the other as when he was actually operating the pumps.

A switch cleaner while riding on the defendant's cars to reach a switch, having given the conductor an employee's ticket, is an employee, rather than a passenger, and cannot recover if injured by the negligence of a fellow servant. Shannon v. Union R. Co. 27 R. I. 475, 63 Atl. 488.

Where a railroad company provides hand cars for the transportation of its employees from the place where they have been working to a point convenient to their homes, even if the journey is commenced after the usual work of the day has ceased, it was held in Cicalese v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 75 N. J. L. 897, 69 Atl. 166, that the relation of master and servant continues until the employee has reached the destination to which he is being carried by or with the consent of the company, and the company is not relieved of its duty to furnish a reasonably safe machine and appliances for that purpose while such relation continues to exist.

On the contrary, it has been held in some cases that under such circumstances the employee is a passenger, or at least he is entitled to the same degree of care as a passenger. Carswell v. Macon, D. & S. R. Co. 118 Ga. 826, 45 S. E. 695; Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Romans, 40 Ind. App. 184, 79 N. E. 1068; Simmons v. Oregon R. Co. 41 Or. 151, 69 Pac. 440, rehearing denied in 41 Or. 166, 69 Pac. 1022; Enos v. Rhode Island Suburban R. Co. 28 R. I. 291, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 244, 67 Atl. 5; Harris

(N.S.) 853, 66 Atl. 884; Pioneer Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Talley, 152 Ala. 162, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 863, 43 So. 800; Parkinson Sugar Co. v. Riley, 50 Kan. 401, 34 Am. St. Rep. 123, 31 Pac. 1090; Ryan v. Fowler, 24 N. Y. 410, 82 Am. Dec. 315.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action to recover for personal injuries, in which plaintiff had a verdict, and defendant appealed from an order denying its alternative motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or a new trial. The trial court granted a new trial, but denied that part of the motion demanding a final judgment for defendant. The only question presented on this appeal is, therefore, whether in any view of the evidence plaintiff has a cause of action against defendant.

The facts are as follows: Defendant is a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the state of Wisconsin, and as such operates a line of railroad from Chicago, through Wisconsin, to Duluth and other points in this state. At the time of the accident here complained of, it was engaged in constructing certain shops and yards at South Superior, in the state of Wisconsin. The buildings were located near the railway tracks, and were being constructed by a firm of independent contractors, who employed in and about the work some fifty or more men. Defendant in its own behalf was engaged in the same locality in grading and excavating for its roadbed, and also employed about fifty men. One Roberts was engaged, as an independent contractor, in sinking a well within one of the buildings, and employed in his work an old engine and boiler, which, as will presently be mentioned, exploded, killing several of defendant's employees. Plaintiff, with other of defendant's servants, was engaged in excavating a roadway immediately adjacent to the building in which the well was located, on the east side thereof, and by means of wheelbarrows conveyed the excavated material to a point northwest from the building, a distance of about 75 feet. The boiler used by Roberts in sinking the well was located on the west side of this building, and was under his exclusive control; at least, the evidence does not show that defendant exercised any supervision in respect to its operation. However, defendant had not surrendered control of its premises to Roberts, or the other contractors engaged in the construction of the buildings, but remained in possession thereof, and with its employees was engaged in the track work heretofore mentioned. Roberts was upon the premises solely for the purposes of the work intrusted to him. The railroad employees were under the control of a general foreman in charge of the track work, and were subject to his orders and directions. The men were given but a half hour for a midday intermission, and were expected to, and did, take their luncheon with them, and eat it upon the premises, in the immediate vicinity of their work. The ground upon which the work was being carried forward was swampy or marshy, and at the noon hour the employees found a convenient dry knoll or spot of ground upon which to kindle a small fire for the purpose of heating their coffee, and upon which to rest while partaking of their lunch. Though the foreman testified that a railroad car had been provided for this purpose, he also testified that it was not used by all the men, who, with his knowledge, were in the habit of going upon the premises wherever a dry place could be found, instead of going to the car. Plaintiff testified that he knew nothing about the car, and was not informed that it had been furnished for the convenience of the men. Roberts' boiler, used in the well-digging operations, was located upon the only dry spot of ground to the west of the building, and on the day of the injury to plaintiff he and other employees of defendant repaired to that place for lunch. Before they had finished, the boiler exploded, killing several of the men, and severely injuring plaintiff.

Plaintiff's theory of the action at the trial was that defendant was under legal obligations to provide its employees, including plaintiff, with a reasonably safe place in which to do their work, and to protect them from dangers unknown to them while rightly upon its premises, and that it failed in the performance of this duty, and is liable for all injuries sustained in consequence of its failure. The trial court sent the case to the jury upon this theory, and they found generally in plaintiff's favor. It is contended by defendant (1) that the evidence conclusively shows that Roberts, the well digger, was an independent contractor, over whom it had no control, either respecting the manner of doing his work or the instrumentalities used; and (2) that plaintiff, in going upon the spot of ground where the boiler was located, did so for his own convenience, without any express or implied invitation from defendant, and was not then a servant of defendant, but a mere licensee, and that defendant owed him no active vigilance for his protection.

1. We are unable to sustain either of these contentions. Defendant was under legal obligation to provide plaintiff, its servant, a reasonably safe place in which to do his work, or, as more accurately expressed, to exercise reasonable care to so provide. This necessarily included protection from unknown danger while rightfully upon defendant's premises, and such as reasonable prudence on defendant's part would have guarded against. It could not avoid the performance of that duty by delegating it to others, nor shield itself by sending upon its premises, still under its general control, and where its servants were employed, an independent contractor, with authority to set up and operate in the vicinity of its own workmen dangerous instrumentalities. In such case the performance of the master's obligations to his servants requires that he exercise reasonable care in reference to the work of the independent contractor, to the end that the place provided for his own servants may not become unsafe or dangerous. Akin v. Lake Superior Consol. Iron Mines, 103 Minn. 204, 114 N. W. 654, 837; Aldritt v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. 85 Minn. 206, 88 N. W. 741; Rait v. New England Furniture & Carpet Co. 66 Minn. 76, 68 N. W. 729; Klages v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co. 86 Minn. 458, 90 N. W. 1116; Toomey v. Donovan, 158 Mass. 232, 33 N. E. 396. As remarked by the court in The Magdaline (D. C.) 91 Fed. 798; "A master may not place his servant at work made dangerous by the work of other servants, or persons performing work under contract, without due effort to furnish adequate protection, and, when injury arises, escape upon the plea that, but for the negligence of a co-servant or third person employed on the premises, the injury would not have happened. A servant may expect that his master will not surround him with dangerous agencies, . . . whether they are in charge of the master's servants or of an independent contractor." See also Burnes v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 129 Mo. 41, 31 S. W. 347; Sackewitz v. American Biscuit Mfg. Co. 78 Mo. App. 144; Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co. 149 Mass. 335, 4 L.R.A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427, 21 N. E. 482. The duty to provide a safe place to work is absolute, non-delegable; and it is clear that in a case like that at bar the master cannot shield himself by the plea that the place provided by him was made dangerous and unsafe by his independent contractor. In a situation like the present, installing an independent contractor for a certain specific purpose to be performed in and about the place provided for his own servants, still retaining the general control over his premises, the master must either suspend his own work, or take active measures to protect his servants from the negligence of the independent contractor. In no other way can he perform his duty to his own servants respecting the obligation to furnish them a reasonably safe place to work. The authorities may be somewhat conflicting upon this proposition; but the views expressed are, it seems to us, sustained by the plainest principles of the law of master and servant.

It is further urged in this connection that there is no evidence that defendant knew or had reason to believe that the contractor's boiler was unsafe or defective. But this clearly is no answer to the charge of neglect of duty. Had this particular boiler been operated by defendant, its obligation to plaintiff would have required an inspection thereof, and an exercise of reasonable care to keep it in condition suitable for its work. 4 Thomp. Neg. 3296. Though the boiler was not an instrumentality furnished by defendant for use by its employees, it permitted it to be placed upon its premises, where its servants were at work, thus, in its defective condition, rendering the place of work unsafe, and the duty of inspection existed. The evidence shows that the boiler was old and out of repair, extremely dangerous to the life and limbs of those working in its vicinity, and that a casual inspection thereof would have disclosed this condition to defendant. There is no claim that defendant ever attempted to inspect it, or otherwise protect its servants from danger of injury from that source. The evidence made this a question for the jury.

2. But it is further claimed that plaintiff was not at the place provided for the performance of his work, but, on the contrary, was at the boiler for his own convenience; that he was not a servant of defendant at the time, but a mere licensee, and entitled to no protection as a servant. A large number of cases are cited in support of this contention, and, if sound, it disposes of the case adversely to plaintiff's right of action. The position, however, does not meet with our view of the law. The authorities are hopelessly at variance upon this point, though, as we believe, the weight of reason is opposed to the view of defendant. The authorities are collected in a note to Taylor v. George W. Bush & Sons Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 853. In the case at bar it appears that defendant's employees were given a half hour for the noon rest; that each employee brought his luncheon with him, and ate it upon defendant's premises, in the vicinity of the work; that the men were expected to remain upon the premises, and did so remain with the knowledge, consent, and upon the implied invitation of defendant, picking out such dry places upon the premises as could be found, lighting a small fire, heating their coffee, and partaking of their lunch. These facts appear not only from the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, but also from the testimony of defendant's foreman in charge of this particular work. Under such circumstances a majority of the courts hold that tiff's horse, whereby said horse became frightened and beyond the plaintiff's control.

In addition to the facts averred in the first paragraph, it is alleged in the second paragraph that, "when 30 feet west of said steam pipe, a great quantity of steam was, by the defendant, suddenly, carelessly, and negligently emitted from said pipe with a puffing sound, and formed a dense cloud of steam which was carried over said highway by the wind immediately in front of the plaintiff's horse, which caused the horse to take fright." It is averred in this paragraph that the facts alleged constitute a public nuisance.

The first paragraph seems to be based on the negligent construction and maintenance of the steam pipe adjacent to the public highway, and the second on the theory that the construction, maintenance, and operation of the steam pipe in the position and manner set forth constituted a public nuisance, from which the plaintiff had suffered special damages. The two theories being ruled, in the main, by the same general principles, we have deemed it proper to consider the paragraphs together. The chief objection presented is that there is no averment that either the location or manner of operation of the upright steam pipe constituted a nuisance, and no averments from which a nuisance can be inferred. This position is not maintainable. It is true that the business described is a proper and lawful business, and, being located on appellant's own premises, its operation cannot be a a locomotive which stood near a crossing, at a point where the driver's view of the track was obstructed, and he had no notice of the close proximity of the engine.

So, a case should be submitted to the jury where the evidence tends to prove negligence not only in causing or permitting the escape of steam from a locomotive, but also from keeping it for more than eight hours during the business portion of the day, upon a side track immediately adjoining a public street. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 124 N. C. 252, 32 S. E. 711.

And it is immaterial whether steam escapes through an automatic safety valve or is blown off by those in charge of the locomotive, as either might constitute negligence. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. supra, reversed, however, upon another point upon second appeal, in 126 N. C. 343, 35 S. E. 606.

And this is true notwithstanding the use of a safety valve was necessary in order to prevent an explosion of the boiler, as it might not be necessary to keep up, for so long a time, a head of steam sufficient to operate the valve. Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. supra; Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains (Ind. App.) 85 N. E. 1038.

And this doctrine was applied in Boothby v. Boston & M. R. Co. 90 Me. 313, 38 Atl. 155, where it appeared that the escape of steam from the safety valve could have been prevented by watchfulness upon the part of those in charge of the locomotive, and it appeared it was unnecessary to maintain a high pressure of steam at the time.

And this doctrine was applied in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Traub (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 282, where a railway company had instructed its employees not to permit the unnecessary escape of steam from the safety valve when standing near stations or public crossings, and it also appeared that, at the time, the escape of steam was not necessary in the operation of the locomotive.

And it is immaterial that those in charge of the locomotive had no control over the pop or safety valve, which was set to relieve the pressure at a given point, where 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

it appeared that the quantity of steam might be controlled by regulating the fire. Presby v. Grand Trunk R. Co. supra.

In Vandalia R. Co. v. McMains, supra, it appeared that the pressure of steam might have been reduced by three methods other than the use of the safety valve, through which it escaped.

See also Keech v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co. 35 N. Y. S. R. 902, 13 N. Y. Supp. 149, infra, cited in the following subdivision, holding that a railway company will be liable where an engineer informs one that it is safe to drive across the track, and his horse is frightened by the sudden escape of steam from the safety valve, over which the engineer had no control.

But it has been held that there will be no liability where a horse takes fright at the escape of steam from the automatic safety valve of a locomotive, over which those in charge thereof have no control, and it appears that a full pressure of steam was necessary in order that the engine might perform its duty. Duvall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 73 Md. 516, 21 Atl. 496; Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, 39 Neb. 65, 23 L.R.A. 507, 57 N. W. 545.

So, negligence cannot be predicated because the safety valve of a locomotive performs its proper function of permitting steam to escape in order to prevent a dangerous pressure. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, supra.

And this doctrine is not affected by the fact that, at the time of the accident, there was no one upon the locomotive. Duvall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra.

And it cannot be shown that there are appliances in general use on railroads which, to a certain extent, suppress the noise caused by the escape of steam through the safety valve, which were not used by the defendant. Ibid.

And it was held in Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Burkhardt, 83 Md. 516, 34 Atl. 1010, that a verdict should be directed for the defendant where the noise caused by the escape of steam from a locomotive standing near a street crossing was not unusual or unnecessary, nor due to any neglect source of damages to a traveler on the highway, unless it is shown that the structures or business, or some part of one or the other, was being maintained in an improper place or conducted in an improper manner. One may not always conduct a lawful business on his own premises as he pleases. The law requires that everyone, in the use and enjoyment of his property, shall have regard for the rights of others, and will not allow him to set up or prosecute a business on his own land in a way that is calculated to, or in fact does, materially or injuriously affect the rights of adjoining owners, or that substantially or harmfully interferes with or injures those rightfully traveling on an adjoining highway. Wright v. Compton, 53 Ind. 337; Island Coal Co. v. Clemmitt, 19 Ind. App.

of duty in the position or management thereof.

And under similar circumstances this doctrine was applied in Powers v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 78 Vt. 436, 63 Atl. 139, where it did not appear that the escape of steam which frightened plaintiff's horse was unnecessary, nor that the engineer did not see the horse and stop the escape of steam, as soon as he should have done.

But it was said in Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, supra, that if it appeared that an engine has been permitted to stand for a long time near a crossing with an unnecessarily high pressure of steam, it might be that such facts, followed by an escape of steam from the pop valve, would justify an inference of negligence.

There will be no liability where, after one has driven over a railway crossing, his horse, while standing at a near-by watering trough, was frightened at a locomotive whistle and the escape of steam from its cylinder cocks, necessarily emitted in starting its train, where the engineer did not see the plaintiff or his horse. St. John v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 79 S. W. 603.

It cannot be said that the driver of a horse is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, where, upon approaching a railway track in a city, the gates were open with an engine standing some distance from the crossing, with nothing in the situation to give warning of danger of the emission of steam therefrom, or that the locomotive would be suddenly started. Rademacher v. Detroit, G. H. & N. R. Co. (Mich.) 123 N. W. 45.

So, it is not negligence per se to drive a horse of ordinary gentleness, which will not take fright at the usual noises made by a locomotive, across a railroad track at a much-frequented public crossing, near which an engine is standing, as the driver may rightfully assume that it will emit only the usual and necessary amount of steam with its attendant noises, against which he might be prepared to protect himself. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Belt, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

21, 49 N. E. 38. In the Wright-Compton Case appellant was engaged in quarrying stone near the highway by the use of gunpowder. Compton, in passing by on the highway at the time a blast was exploded, was hit by flying rock and injured. In upholding Compton's recovery of damages this court said: "Every person must so use his property and exercise his rights as not to injure the property or restrict the rights of others. In this case the defendants could not lawfully so use their stone quarry as to embarrass the rights of travelers along the public highway. The public travel must not be endangered to accommodate the private rights of an individual." The principle here involved is also well illustrated by the facts and ruling in the Coal Company-Clemmitt

24 Tex. Civ. App. 281, 59 S. W. 607, s. c. first appeal (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 362.

When directed to cross track by railway employees.

Where a flagman invites a person to cross a track, the railway company will be liable where his team is frightened by the sudden escape of steam from a locomotive standing near the street, as under such circumstances he may rightfully assume that there will be no increase or dangerous change as to the quantity of steam being emitted, or noise being made, by the locomotive. Borst v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 4 Hun, 346, affirmed without opinion in 66 N. Y. 639.

So, where, upon a signal from a flagman at a public crossing, one attempts to drive across a track and his horse is frightened at the sudden escape of steam upon the starting of a locomotive, the railway company will be liable where it appears that the engineer, a few moments before, saw the plaintiff drive up near the crossing and his horse take fright at a similar escape of steam, as such facts would warrant an inference that the engineer knew that the animal was subject to fright from such cause, and therefore under the circumstances his conduct disclosed want of reasonable care. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Abrahams (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 1034.

Where the plaintiff is assured by an engineer of a locomotive standing near a much-frequented public crossing that it is safe to cross, a railway company will be liable where the plaintiff's horse is frightened at the escape of steam therefrom, which could have been prevented by the exercise of due care. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 147 Ind. 633, 46 N. E. 344, s. c. on first appeal, 134 Ind. 16, 33 N. E. 774.

So, where one was informed by the engineer of a locomotive which stood near a public highway that he might cross, a railway company will be liable where his horse was frightened by the blowing of the whistle and the escape of steam from the pop safety valve, notwithstanding it worked hour. His hours were from 10:45 A. M. to 12:45 P. M., and from 5:15 P. M. to a late hour of the night. On the morning of the day of the accident he went to the defendant's car barn, and applied to Mr. Butterfield, who was there in charge, to be relieved from work on that day, and after some talk it was arranged between them that one Bushee, a spare man or substitute, should run the forenoon trips of Gooch, the deceased, and that Gooch should either run an extra car in the afternoon or himself find a substitute to do so. Gooch thereupon left the car barn, and rode on a car of the defendant to a waiting room at Market square. On the way thither, in conversation with the conductor of that car, he stated that he was not working, but would have to run an extra car "if he could not find a fellow named Follansbee." Then Gooch went into the telephone booth in the defendant's waiting room at Market square, and soon after was found there dead.

Upon these facts it is impossible to distinguish the case at bar from Dickinson v. West End Street R. Co. 177 Mass. 365, 52 L.R.A. 326, 83 Am. St. Rep. 284, 59 N. E. 60. In that case a motorman in the general employ of the defendant, going home to dinner after his morning's work, was injured while riding on the front platform of one of the defendant's cars. He was being carried free of fare under a rule of the company allowing this privilege to its employees in uniform. His injury was due to negligence of the motorman who was operating the car; but it was held that he was not then in the employ of the defendant, and accordingly was not a fellow servant of the motorman of that car. Here, as in that case, the regular work assigned to Gooch consisted of a certain number of trips at fixed and regular times each day. Here, as there, he was not on actual duty. His time was his own, until some time in the afternoon. His pay had stopped. He was discharged until a fixed hour in the afternoon. He rode on the defendant's car to Market square, and went into the telephone booth at that station, not in the line of his duty in the course of his employment, but for his own purposes. See the cases cited in Dickinson v. West End Street R. Co. ubi supra, on page 368, 177 Mass.

The circumstances here are very different from those of Boyle v. Columbian Fire Proofing Co. 182 Mass. 93, 64 N. E. 726, or Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. McCue, 17 Wall. 508, 21 L. ed. 705. Gooch had left the defendant's premises and had become his own man. He was a passenger on the defendant's car, not a mere servant. For the same reasons, such cases as Walbert v. Trexler, 156 Pa. 112, 27 Atl. 65, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and Broderick v. Detroit Union R. Station & Depot Co. 56 Mich. 261, 56 Am. Rep. 332, 22 N. W. 802, do not help this plaintiff. This case resembles more nearly Wink v. Weiler, 41 Ill. App. 336. Nor was Gooch leaving the defendant's premises by the means of exit provided for that purpose. Feneff v. Boston & M. R. Co. 196 Mass. 575, 577, 82 N. E. 705.

Nor can the plaintiff be helped by the suggestion made in her behalf that Gooch was using or intending to use the telephone in completing arrangements that had been partially made with reference to his being relieved from duty in the afternoon, and so was really acting in the service of the defendant when he was killed. In the first place, this is mere conjecture. McGee v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 187 Mass. 569, 73 N. E. 657; Donaldson v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 188 Mass. 484, 74 N. E. 915; Lizotte v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 196 Mass. 519, 83 N. E. 362. In the next place, it was for Gooch himself, if he wished to have his leave of absence run through the afternoon, to make the arrangement with some substitute. So it was for him to ascertain, if he needed further information, whether the extra car was to be run that afternoon. All these arrangements, as the matter had been left, were his individual concern, rather than that of the company. There is nothing to show that Gooch was in any way acting in the service of the company in attempting to use the telephone, or to answer it if he heard a ringing from it.

It follows from what has been said that the jury were not warranted in finding that the plaintiff's intestate was in the employ of the defendant at the time of the accident which caused his death; and the defendant's first, second, and eighth requests for instructions should have been given. The other questions raised in the case become immaterial, and need not be considered.

Exceptions sustained.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOHN MOORE.

(92 C. C. A. 357, 166 Fed. 663.)

Trial — jury — common knowledge — applicability.

1. In trials by jury, the jurors are not restricted to a consideration of the facts directly proven, but may give effect to such inferences as reasonably may be drawn from them. Nor are they expected to lay aside matters of common knowledge or their own observation and experience of the affairs of life, but, on the contrary, to apply them to the evidence or facts in hand, to the end that their action may be intelligent and their conclusions correct.

Headnotes by VAN DEVANTER, Circuit Judge.

Same — expert opinion — necessity for.

2. In respect of questions upon which men of ordinary observation and experience have some practical knowledge and are not incapable of forming opinions of their own, jurors are not dependent upon the opinions of experts, even though they would be assisted by them.

Reasonable care — test — practice of others.

3. The ultimate and controlling test of the exercise of reasonable care is not what has been the practice of others in like situations, but what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in such a situation; and the practice of others is evidence, but not the sole evidence, of that test.

(January 7, 1909.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn and Van Devanter, Circuit Judges, and Amidon, District Judge.

Messrs. M. B. Webber and Edward Lees, for plaintiff in error:

It is not sufficient for the employee to show that the employer may have been guilty of negligence; the evidence must point to the fact that he was.

The Baron Innerdale, 93 Fed. 492; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 67 C. C. A. 421, 132 Fed. 593; Northern P. R. Co. v. Dixon, 71 C. C. A. 555, 139 Fed. 737; Edgens v. Gaffney Mfg. Co. 69 S. C. 529, 48 S. E. 538; Davidson v. Davidson, 46 Minn. 117, 48 N. W. 560; Bowen v. Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co. 95 Mo. 268, 8 S. W. 230; Breen v. St. Louis Cooperage Co. 50 Mo. App. 202; Dobbins v. Brown, 119 N. Y. 188, 23 N. E. 537; Case v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 64 Iowa, 762, 21 N. W. 30; Brownfield v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 107 Iowa, 254, 77 N. W. 1038; Whittaker's Smith, Neg. pp. 419-421; Morrison v. Phillips & C. Constr. Co. 44 Wis. 405, 28 Am. Rep. 599; DeVau v. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal

& R. Co. 130 N. Y. 632, 28 N. E. 532; Murphy v. Hays, 68 Hun, 450, 23 N. Y. Supp. 70; State use of Barnard v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 60 Md. 555.

The jury should not have been permitted to indulge in speculation as to the adequacy of the machine or any parts thereof, no evidence having been given touching thereon.

Hart v. Hudson River Bridge Co. 84 N. Y. 56; Bellinger v. New York C. R. Co. 23 N. Y. 42; Sheldon v. Booth, 50 Iowa, 209; Scattergood v. Wood, 79 N. Y. 263, 35 Am. Rep. 515; James v. Hodsdon, 47 Vt. 127; Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall. 726, 19 L. ed. 769; Tinney v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 5 Lans. 507; Hussey v. Ryan, 64 Md. 426, 54 Am. Rep. 772, 2 Atl. 729; Bemis v. Central Vermont R. Co. 58 Vt. 636, 3 Atl. 531.

Messrs. L. L. Brown, W. D. Abbott, and S. H. Somsen, for defendant in error:

If the evidence relative to the material facts is contradictory, or if, from the admitted or established facts, the unprejudiced minds of reasonable men may well draw different conclusions, it is the duty of the court to submit the issues to the jury.

Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Price, 38 C. C. A. 239, 97 Fed. 423; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 417, 36 L. ed. 489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Union P. R. Co. v. Jarvi, 3 C. C. A. 433, 10 U. S. App. 439, 53 Fed. 70; Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Danielson, 6 C. C. A. 636, 12 U. S. App. 688, 57 Fed. 915; Laclede Fire-Brick Mfg. Co. v. Hartford Steam-Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co. 9 C. C. A. 1, 19 U. S. App. 510, 60 Fed. 351; Motey v. Pickle Marble & Granite Co. 20 C. C. A. 366, 36 U. S. App. 682, 74 Fed. 157; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Belliwith, 28 C. C. A. 358, 55 U. S. App. 113, 83 Fed. 437; Railway Officials' & Employees' Acci. Asso. v. Wilson, 40 C. C. A. 411, 100 Fed. 370; McCullen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 49 L.R.A. 642, 41 C. C. A. 365, 101 Fed. 71; Clark v. Zarniko, 45 C. C. A. 494, 106 Fed. 607; Brady v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co. 57 L.R.A. 712, 52 C. C. A. 48, 114 Fed. 104; Cole v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 63 L.R.A. 416, 59 C. C. A. 593, 124 Fed. 123; Gilbert v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 63 C. C. A. 27, 128 Fed. 529; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Roddy, 65 C. C. A. 470, 131 Fed. 712; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Van Elderen, 70 C. C. A. 255, 137 Fed. 569; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Baker, 72 C. C. A. 870, 140 Fed. 319; Woodward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 75 C. C. A. 591, 145 Fed. 578; Crookston Lumber Co. v. Boutin, 79 C. C. A. 368, 149 Fed. 685; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Dewees, 82 C. C. A. 190, 153 Fed. 56; Teis v. Smuggler Min. Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 893, 85 C. C. A. 478, 158 Fed. 269.

Note. — The question whether a master has discharged his duty by furnishing for his servant an appliance in general use will be found discussed in the case note to Wiita v. Interstate Iron Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 128, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

them. Nor are they expected to lay aside matters of common knowledge or their own observation and experience of the affairs of life, but, on the contrary, to apply them to the evidence or facts in hand, to the end that their action may be intelligent and their conclusions correct. Thayer's Treatise on Evidence, 194, 263, 277, 296; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 663, 664, 21 L. ed. 745, 749; Head v. Hargrave, 105 U. S. 45, 49, 26 L. ed. 1028, 1030; The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 131, 41 L. ed. 937, 946, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510; Bank of Kentucky v. Adams Exp. Co. 93 U. S. 174, 185, 23 L. ed. 872, 876; Phillips v. Detroit, 111 U. S. 604, 606, 28 L. ed. 532, 533, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 30, 49 L. ed. 643, 651, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 765; New Mexico ex rel. McLean v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 203 U. S. 38, 51, 51 L. ed. 78, 86, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Illinois ex rel. McNichols v. Pease, 207 U. S. 100, 111, 52 L. ed. 121, 126, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58; Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 33, 47 C. C. A. 367, 371, 108 Fed. 335; Nyback v. Champagne Lumber Co. 48 C. C. A. 632, 638, 109 Fed. 732; Baker v. F. A. Duncombe Mfg. Co. 77 C. C. A. 234, 146 Fed. 744; R. v. Aspinall, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 48, 61; Patterson v. Boston, 20 Pick. 159, 166; Com. v. Peckham, 2 Gray, 514; Bradford v. Cunard S. S. Co. 147 Mass. 55, 16 N. E. 719; McGarrahan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 171 Mass. 211, 217, 220, 50 N. E. 610; Kitzinger v. Sanborn, 70 Ill. 146, 149; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Warner, 108 Ill. 538, 546; Stevens v. Minneapolis, 42 Minn. 136, 140, 43 N. W. 842; Taylor v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 101 Minn. 72, 77, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 92, 118 Am. St. Rep. 606, 111 N. W. 919, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 260; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274, 292; Lillibridge v. McCann, 117 Mich. 84, 41 L.R.A. 381, 72 Am. St. Rep. 553, 75 N. W. 288; White v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 83 Me. 279, 22 Atl. 167; State v. Maine C. R. Co. 86 Me. 309, 312, 29 Atl. 1086; Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 555, 563, 12 L.R.A. 652, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 613, 28 N. E. 76; Baker v. Hope, 49 Cal. 598; Swain v. Fourteenth Street R. Co. 93 Cal. 179, 28 Pac. 829; Post v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 121 Mo. App. 562, 97 S. W. 233; Ayer & L. Tie Co. v. Keown, 122 Ky. 588, 93 S. W. 590. As has been seen, the boom and the load which it was designed to lift were exceedingly heavy, and the boom was supported in its oblique position solely by the guy rod, whose downward inclination toward the mast was about 35 degrees from the horizontal. Therefore, the uplift of the rod at its connection with the mast must have been pronounced, and 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

must have subjected the pin, by which the rod was held in place upon the spindle, to a corresponding strain. As the derrick was constructed, the hole in the spindle was made $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch in diameter, and that gave rise to a permissible inference that it was designed that the pin should be of substantially that size. The nail used as a pin, but "not supposed" to be so used, was only one half the diameter of the hole, and its strength was affected accordingly. Besides, it was made of a soft quality of steel, which materially increased its susceptibility to the cutting or grinding action incident to the uplift and movement of the rod. True, no mechanical expert gave his opinion upon the character of pin required, the strength of the nail used, or the amount of strain to which it was subjected, but upon those questions the jurors were not incapable of forming opinions of their own. Being men of ordinary observation and experience, they must have possessed some practical knowledge of the law of gravitation, of the elementary principles of mechanics, of the common use of pins in holding the wheels of various vehicles in place upon their spindles and in holding together different parts of other appliances and machinery, of the quality, strength, and size of those pins, and of the relative quality, strength, and size of twenty-penny wire nails. Doubtless they would have been assisted by the opinions of competent experts, but they were not wholly dependent upon them (Head v. Hargrave, The Conqueror; Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen; Nyback v. Champagne Lumber Co.; McGarrahan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. and Stevens v. Minneapolis,—supra), and so it cannot be said that there was no substantial evidence from which the jury could find that the nail, so used as a pin, was insufficient in strength and size.

But it is urged that the evidence made such a finding inadmissible, because it conclusively proved that the nail had been used as a pin for seven or eight months, during which it was shown to be quite adequate to the strain put upon it. The record does not sustain the contention. How long the nail had been used as a pin was not shown, save as its rusty condition may have warranted an inference that it had been in the spindle, with the incident exposure to the weather, for some time. At most that would have been only a permissible inference to be drawn by the jury, and not a necessary or conclusive one, because the nail may have been rusty when it was placed in the spindle. And for another reason the asserted proof of demonstrated adequacy was not conclusive. It consisted of statements that the derrick was used "off and on" from early in March until late in October following, that it was taken out on the road at times and then returned, that it was not in use all the time, but only occasionally, and that the extent of its use from early in June until late in October, so far as known by one of the crew, was seven or eight days. But there was no proof that, during the periods of use, whatever they may have been, the nail was not appreciably yielding to the cutting or grinding action, indicated by the ends of its severed parts, which was incident to the uplift of the guy rod and the swinging of the boom from side to side when the derrick was in use.

It is also urged that such a finding was inadmissible because there was no evidence of what pins were used by other owners and operators of like derricks. The contention must fail, because it proceeds upon a theory which gives undue and controlling influence to the conduct of others. Without question, it would have been permissible to show what pins were used by other owners and operators of like derricks, for that would have been some evidence of what could have been, and ought to have been, done by the defendant; but evidence of that character was not indispensable, because the ultimate and controlling test of the exercise of reasonable care is not what has been the practice of others in like situations, but what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in such a situation. The law is not so unreasonable as to afford no test where there has been no practice by others with which the conduct in question can be compared; nor does it permit common sense and reason to lose their sway because, through ignorance, inattention, or selfishness, an unreasonable practice has prevailed. Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. McDonough, 88 C. C. A. 517, 161 Fed. 657, 665, and authorities there cited; Nyback v. Champagne Lumber Co. supra; Dawson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 52 C. C. A. 286, 288, 114 Fed. 870; Gilbert v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 63 C. C. A. 27, 32, 128 Fed. 529; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 50.

Exceptions were taken to portions of the charge in respect of the assessment of damages and other matters, but none of them affords any ground for a reversal. Some were addressed to excerpts which, standing alone, might be subject to criticism, but taken with the context, and as they must have been understood by the jury, were unobjectionable; some were rendered immaterial by the jury's answer to the special interrogatory; and the others were plainly without merit.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, concurring:

This case involves the liability of the master for the breach of its duty to its servant to exercise ordinary care and prudence in the selection, arrangement, and care of a simple machine which it furnished. In my opinion this liability is measured by the following rules of law, which I think have been established by decisions of the Supreme Court and of this court.

The limit of the duty and of the liability of the master is the exercise of ordinary care to furnish and keep in repair reasonably safe machinery. That duty is discharged and that liability ceases when the master has exercised ordinary care to furnish such machinery and appliances as persons of ordinary intelligence, prudence, and caution commonly supply under like circumstances. Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 570, 34 L. ed. 235, 241, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044; Southern P. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 153, 38 L. ed. 391, 395, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 179 U. S. 658, 664, 45 L. ed. 361, 364, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275; Mississippi River Logging Co. v. Schneider, 20 C. C. A. 390, 393, 34 U. S. App. 743, 74 Fed. 195, 198; H. D. Williams Cooperage Co. v. Headrick, 86 C. C. A. 548, 550, 159 Fed. 680, 682. "The defendant was not a guarantor of the safety of its machinery, and was only bound to use ordinary care and prudence in the selection and arrangement and care thereof, and had a right to use and employ such as the experience of trade and manufacture sanctioned. . . . Neither individuals nor corporations are bound as employers to insure the absolute safety of the machinery or mechanical appliances which they provide for the use of their employees, nor are they bound to supply the best and safest or newest of those appliances, for the purpose of securing the safety of those who are thus employed." Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 569, 570, 34 L. ed. 235, 240, 241, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044, 1049.

The true test of ordinary care is that degree of care which persons of ordinary intelligence and prudence commonly exercise under similar circumstances. If the care used in a given case rises to or above that standard, there is no actionable negligence; if it falls below it, there is such negligence. Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels (Union P. R. Co. v. Snyder) 152 U. S. 684, 691, 38 L. ed. 597, 601, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 756; Southern P. Co. v. Hetzer, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 288, 68 C. C. A. 28, 35, 135 Fed. 272, 281; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Egan, 86 C. C. A. 230, 235, 159 Fed. 40, 45; H. D. Williams Cooperage Co. v. Headrick, 86 C. C. A. 548, 550, 159 Fed. 680, 682; Grand Trunk R. Co.

v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 416, 417, 36 L. ed. 485, 488, 489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Washington & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 569, 34 L. ed. 235, 240, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1044; Choctaw O. & G. R. Co. v. Holloway, 191 U. S. 334, 338, 48 L. ed. 207, 210, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 67, 48 L. ed. 96, 100, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24; Charnock v. Texas & P. R. Co. 194 U. S. 432, 437, 48 L. ed. 1057, 1059, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671. In Union P. R. Co. v. Daniels, supra, a case which involved the duty to exercise care to furnish reasonably safe machinery for the servant, the Supreme Court sustained this charge: "The duty of the defendant towards him was the exercise of reasonable care in furnishing and keeping its machinery and appliances about which he is required to perform his work, in a reasonably safe condition. It was the defendant's duty, also, to use like ordinary care in selecting competent fellow servants and in a sufficient number to insure that the work would be safely done; and this duty was discharged by the defendant, if the care disclosed by it in these several matters, accorded with that reasonable skill and prudence and care which careful, prudent men engaged in the same kind of business ordinarily exercise."

I do not assent to any direct or indirect departure from these rules. While it may be theoretically true that the measure of care required of a master is that which an ordinarily prudent man would have used under like circumstances, the best evidence what that degree of care was and the true standard of its measurement is the degree of care which ordinarily prudent, cautious, and rational employers ordinarily exercise under like circumstances. Where there is substantial and undisputed evidence what degree of care such employers commonly exercised in similar circumstances, and no evidence that the master failed to exercise that degree of care, it is not in my opinion permissible for the jury to speculate or opine that a reasonably prudent man would have exercised a higher degree of care than such men actually did exercise, and to charge the defendant with damages because he failed to reach such a speculative, variant, and uncertain standard. Southern P. Co. v. Hetzer, supra; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Egan, 86 C. C. A. 230, 159 Fed. 40, 45.

In the case at bar, however, there was no evidence what degree of care ordinarily cautious, prudent, and rational employers commonly exercise in the selection and care of such a machine as that in use at the time of the accident; and upon the ground that, in the absence of such evidence, and in view of the proof of the size of the pin and of the size of the hole in which it was placed, of the character of the machine and of its work, I do not dissent from the conclusion that it was permissible for the jury in this case to find what degree of care an ordinarily prudent man would have exercised under like circumstances, and that the defendant failed to use that care.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

MAGGIE McELROY, App't.,
v.
METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

(— Neb. —, 122 N. W. 27.)

Insurance — contract — situs.

1. Where the parties to an insurance contract are in different jurisdictions, the place where the last act is done which is necessary to the validity of the contract is the place where the contract is entered into.

Same — foreign company — laws of foreign state — effect.

2. Insurance business transacted in this state by New York insurance companies without any provision that the New York laws shall govern is not subject to the provision of the New York statute requiring a notice to be mailed to the policy holder in that state as a condition of forfeiture for non-payment of premiums.

Same — contract — express terms — waiver by agent.

3. The agent of an insurance company cannot, by oral contract with the assured, waive the express terms of the policy and extend the time for a premium, when the policy provides that none of its terms can be varied nor modified, nor any forfeiture waived, nor premiums in arrears received, except by agreement in writing signed by the president, vice president, secretary, or assistant secretary.

(June 25, 1909.)

Headnotes by CALKINS, C.

Case Note. — Conflict of laws as to insurance contracts.

The earlier cases on this subject are covered in a note to Johnson v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 63 L.R.A. 833. The present note, which is confined to the subsequent cases, adheres to the same scope, and follows, as nearly as may be, the same classification as the earlier note.

Where contract deemed to have been made — policy mailed to insured or his agent.

As shown in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 837 et seq.), if the local agent's authority is limited to receiving and forwarding applications to the home office of the insurer for acceptance or rejection, the contract

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Cass County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover a sum alleged to be due on a life insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. A. N. Sullivan, for appellant:

By the terms of the contract, the place of performance was New York, and the rights of the parties must be determined by the laws of that state.

9 Cyc. Law & Proc. § 2, p. 669; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Hine, 49 Conn. 236; Lewis v. McCabe, 49 Conn. 141, 44 Am. Rep. 217; Medbury v. Hopkins, 3 Conn. 472; Smith v. Mead, 3 Conn. 253, 8 Am. Dec. 183; Champion v. Wilson, 64 Ga. 184; Dunn v.

Welsh, 62 Ga. 241; Stricker v. Tinkham, 35 Ga. 176, 89 Am. Dec. 280; Herschfeld v. Dixel, 12 Ga. 582; Mason v. Dousay, 35 Ill. 424, 85 Am. Dec. 368; Strawbridge v. Robinson, 10 Ill. 470, 50 Am. Dec. 420; Lewis v. Headley, 36 Ill. 433, 87 Am. Dec. 227; Sherman v. Gassett, 9 Ill. 521; McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412; Boyd v. Ellis, 11 Iowa, 97; Young v. Harris, 14 B. Mon. 556, 61 Am. Dec. 170; Goddin v. Shipley, 7 B. Mon. 575; Beirne v. Patton, 17 La. 589; Maguire v. Pingree, 30 Me. 508; White v. Perley, 15 Me. 470; Larrabee v. Talbott, 5 Gill, 426, 46 Am. Dec. 637; De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 Harr. & J. 191, 3 Am. Dec. 535; Culver v. Benedict, 13 Gray, 7; Penobscot & K. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 12 Gray, 244, 71 Am. Dec. 753; Wyse of insurance will be deemed to have been made at the home office, when a policy in substantial conformity to the application is mailed directly from the home office of the insurer to the insured or his agent in another state, if no conditions precedent to its taking effect are expressly imposed, and there is nothing in the transaction indicating that the contract was intended to be left open until the receipt of the policy by the insured. To the same effect is Tuttle v. Iowa Traveling Men's Asso. 132 Iowa, 652, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 223, 104 N. W. 1131.

And the same rule was applied in Presbyterian Ministers' Fund v. Thomas, 126 Wis. 281, 110 Am. St. Rep. 919, 105 N. W. 801, notwithstanding that the insured, after receiving the policy through the mail, executed and mailed to the insurer a note for the first premium. The court seems to have assumed that the note itself as a contract was made in the state in which it was mailed by the insured, though it was of the opinion that even the note was governed by the law of the other state, as the place of performance.

So, in Orient Ins. Co. v. Rudolph, 69 N. J. Eq. 570, 61 Atl. 26, where a policy of insurance issued by a Connecticut corporation on property in New York provided that it should not be valid until countersigned by the agent of the company in New York, the contract was deemed to have been made in the latter state, it appearing that, after being countersigned in that state, it was mailed directly to the insured at his residence in New Jersey.

In Swing v. Dayton, 124 App. Div. 58, 108 N. Y. Supp. 155, however, where the contract of insurance was mailed from Ohio to the insured in Pennsylvania, the contract was deemed to have been made in the latter state; but the contract in this instance expressly provided that it should become a mutual agreement upon its acceptance. (See, to same effect, cases cited at p. 838 of the earlier note.)

In Swing v. Wellington (Ind. App.) 89 N. E. 514, also, the decision that policies mailed from Ohio to the insured in Indiana were Indiana contracts and governed by the 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

law of that state was apparently upon the ground that the contracts were not to become executed until received and inspected by the insured in Indiana.

So, in Supreme Lodge, K. P. v. Meyer, 198 U. S. 508, 49 L. ed. 1146, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754, it was held that a certificate of insurance issued in Illinois to a resident of New York, which by its terms was first to take effect as a binding obligation when the insured should execute the agreement indorsed thereon, to accept it "subject to all the conditions therein contained," was a New York, and not an Illinois, contract, the agreement having been executed in New York. It does not appear in this case whether the certificate was mailed to the insured or delivered to him by an agent of the insurer; but it is clear that the decision would have been the same whatever the fact in that respect.

—policy mailed to local agent of insurer.

The rule stated in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 840), to the effect that where an application is accepted at the home office of the company in one state and the policy is mailed to the local agent of the insurer in another, to be by him delivered to the insured, but expressly stipulates that it shall not be valid, or that it shall not take effect, until countersigned by such agent, the contract is regarded as made in the state in which the policy is so countersigned, is also supported by the later cases. Orient Ins. Co. v. Rudolph, supra; Hardiman v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 212 Pa. 383, 61 Atl. 990.

So, Dolan v. Supreme Council (Mich.) 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 424, 113 N. W. 10 (overruled on rehearing on another point in 152 Mich. 266, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 555, 116 N. W. 363) held that the contract evidenced by a mutual benefit certificate issued by an association organized in another state, but countersigned as required by the laws of the order, by the officers of the local branch in Michigan, and presumably delivered in that state, was a Michigan contract. See also Orient Ins. Co. v. Rudolph, supra.

v. Dandridge, 35 Miss. 672, 72 Am. Dec. 149; Brown Bros. v. Freeland, 34 Miss. 181; Dalton v. Murphy, 30 Miss. 59; Wooten v. Miller, 7 Smedes & M. 380; Bliss v. Houghton, 16 N. H. 90; Lee v. Selleck, 32 Barb. 522, 20 How. Pr. 275; Pomeroy v. Ainsworth, 22 Barb. 118; Merchants' Bank v. Spalding, 12 Barb. 302; Bowen v. Bradley, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. 395; Dickinson v. Edwards, 58 How. Pr. 24; Connecticut Mut. Life Assur. Co. v. Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. 23 How. Pr. 180; Bank of Commerce v. Rutland & W. R. Co. 10 How. Pr. 1; Thompson v. Ketcham, 4 Johns. 285; Smith v. Smith, 2 Johns. 235, 3 Am. Dec. 410; Kanaga v. Taylor, 7 Ohio St. 134, 70 Am. Dec. 62; Curtis v. Hutchinson, 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 471; Waverly Nat. Bank v. Hall, 150 Pa. 466, 30 Am. St. Rep. 823, 24 Atl. 665; Correll v. Georgia Constr. & Invest. Co. 37 S. C. 444, 16 S. E. 156; M'Candlish v. Oruger, 2 Bay, 377; Baxter v. Wiley, 9 Vt. 276, 31 Am. Dec. 623; Warder v. Arell, 2 Wash. (Va.) 282, 1 Am. Dec. 488; Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. 38 W. Va. 390, 23 L.R.A. 120, 45 Am. St. Rep. 872, 18 S. E. 456; Kennedy v. Knight, 21 Wis. 340, 94 Am. Dec. 543; Fisher v. Otis, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 83; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 115, 35 L. ed. 956, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Brabston v. Gibson, 9 How. 263, 13 L. ed. 131; Bell v. Bruen, 1 How. 169, 11 L. ed. 89; Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet. 65, 10 L. ed. 61; Cox v. United States, 6 Pet. 172, 8 L. ed. 359;

The rule stated in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 841), to the effect that where the contract expressly stipulates that it is not to take effect until the payment of the first premium, or until the payment of the first premium and delivery of the policy, and the first premium does not accompany the application, but the company sends the policy to its own agent, who delivers the same to the insured upon the receipt of the first premium from the latter, the contract will be deemed to have been made in the state where the policy was so delivered and the premium paid, and not in the state where the application was accepted and the policy issued, is sustained by McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co.; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 98 Tex. 230, 68 L.R.A. 509, 82 S. W. 1031 (reversing [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 367); Pool v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 123 App. Div. 885, 108 N. Y. Supp. 431.

So, in Grevenig v. Washington L. Ins. Co. 112 La. 879, 104 Am. St. Rep. 474, 36 So. 790, where the policy merely provided that it should not be binding until the first premium should be received by the company or some authorized agent, and did not expressly require delivery, the contract was deemed to have been made in Louisiana upon its delivery there by the local agent of the insurer and his receipt of the first premium, although it was issued by a New York company.

In Summitt v. United States L. Ins. Co. 123 Iowa, 681, 99 N. W. 563, a contract evidenced by a policy of insurance issued to a resident of Iowa by a New York company was found to have been made, executed, and delivered in New York, although it expressly provided that it was to take effect upon delivery to the assured; but in this case it appeared that the policy was signed in New York, and nothing was shown regarding the place of actual delivery.

In Harrigan v. Home L. Ins. Co. 128 Cal. 531, 58 Pac. 180, 61 Pac. 99, where the application provided that the policy should not become binding upon the company until the first premium was received by the company in the lifetime of the assured, the contract was deemed to have been consummated in New York upon the acceptance of the application in that state and the transmission of the policy to the local agency in California for delivery to the insured; but in this case the insured gave his note for the first premium at the time he signed the application, and received a receipt therefor, which provided that, in the event of the acceptance of the application, the policy should be in force from the date of acceptance. It was further found by the court that there was no rule of the company, condition in the policy or application, nor any instruction to the agents, which prohibited payment by notes or which rendered the policy inoperative until payment in money was made or duly waived.

So, in Rose v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 240 Ill. 45, 88 N. E. 204, where the question seems to have been as to the time, rather than the place, where the contract was made, there being a provision in the application that the insurance should not take effect until the first premium should have been paid and the policy issued, but no provision as to delivery, it was held that an actual delivery was not essential and that the contract was completed by an unqualified acceptance of the application and the placing of the policy, which acknowledged the receipt of the first premium, in the hands of an agent for delivery.

It is stated in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 843) that the real difficulty in determining the place where the contract is made, when the policy is mailed to an agent of the insurer and by him delivered to the insured, arises when no conditions are expressly imposed upon the contract's taking effect; but that in such case the weight of authority, while not without conflict, appears to be to the effect that the contract will be deemed to have been made at the home office if the first premium accompanied the application; otherwise at the place where the premium is paid; thus impliedly holding that delivery in itself, in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect, is not an implied condition of the consummation of the contract, but that the payment of the first premium

Martin v. Roberts, 36 Fed. 217; Howenstein v. Barnes, 5 Dill. 482, Fed. Cas. No. 6,786; Payson v. Withers, 5 Biss. 269, Fed. Cas. No. 10,864; Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Story, 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274; York v. Wistar, Fed. Cas. No. 18,141; Chatenay v. Brazilian Submarine Teleg. Co. [1891] 1 Q. B. 82, 60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 295, 63 L. T. N. S. 739, 39 Week. Rep. 65; Sands v. Smith, 1 Neb. 108, 93 Am. Dec. 331; Richards, Ins. p. 50.

Mr. J. B. Strode, for appellee:

A contract of insurance is deemed to be executed at the place where the last act is done which is necessary to make the contract binding on the parties, and if the policy does not become binding until delivery, the place of delivery is the place of contract.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1349; 1 Joyce, Ins. § 225; 1 May, Ins. 4th ed. § 66; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 748; 3 Page, Contr. § 1718; Antes v. State Ins. Co. 61 Neb. 55, 84 N. W. 412; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Russell, 23 C. C. A. 43, 40 U. S. App. 530, 77 Fed. 100; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 179 U. S. 262-270, 45 L. ed. 181-186, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements (Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Pettis) 140 U. S. 226, 232, 35 L. ed. 497, 500, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 193 U. S. 551-556, 48 L. ed. 788-792, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 98 Tex. 230, 68 L.R.A. 509, 82 S. W. 1031; Gravenig

is (page 847). See also the two cases last above cited.

In Lake Charles v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 114 La. 836, 38 So. 578, in which it is stated that the contract of insurance is completed at the place where the policy is delivered and the first premium collected, it does not appear whether or not there was an express stipulation making delivery or payment of premium a condition precedent to the contract's taking effect.

In Cowen v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 37 Tex. Civ. App. 430, 84 S. W. 404, the court was apparently of the opinion that a policy issued by a New York company, and sent by it to its agent in Texas, and there delivered to the insured, must be deemed to be a Texas contract, notwithstanding that it did not appear to have been sent to be delivered subject to the payment of the first premium or the note therefor. As a matter of fact, however, the court was of the opinion that the notice of the second premium, which was the point in controversy, was sufficiently addressed to answer the requirements of the New York statute, if that were held applicable.

Choice of laws—general principles of commercial law.

In the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 850) attention is called to the fact that the Federal courts may decide questions of general commercial law relating to insurance contracts, with reference to their own precedents, and without reference to the decisions of the courts of the state whose law, if statutory, would concededly govern. This principle was recognized, though not applied, in McCue v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 167 Fed. 435. The court, in considering the question whether recovery might be had on an insurance policy on the life of a person who was legally executed for crime, said that, in the case of contracts of insurance general in character and governed by the rules of commercial law, the Federal court must, regardless of state decisions (in view of the decision in Burt v. Union C. L. Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 362, 47 L. ed. 216, 23 Sup. Ct. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rep. 139), hold that a policy of life insurance "does not insure against the legal execution of the insured for crime;" but that, in special contracts not governed by the rules of commercial law, but provided for by special legislation of a state, conferring special rights and vested interest enforceable alone under such state legislation, the Federal courts must (under the ruling in Whitfield v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 205 U. S. 489, 51 L. ed. 895, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578), be governed by the law of that state. It was accordingly held that, since, by the rule of public policy established by the supreme court of Wisconsin, the manner of the insured's death does not avoid the policy where third persons are beneficiaries, in the absence of any provision in the policy to that effect, the legal execution of the insured for crime did not avoid a policy issued by a Wisconsin corporation created under a special act under which the persons insured are members of the corporation during the time they remain insured, the policy showing upon its face that it was executed at the home office of the company in Wisconsin, and being by its express terms payable there. It should be observed that this note does not purport to cover the question as to whether the Federal courts are bound to follow the decisions of the local state courts in relation to insurance contracts,—that question being left for consideration in a future note covering the general subject of the duty of the Federal courts to follow the decisions of the state courts on questions of general commercial law. The point is referred to in this connection merely for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that a decision of a Federal court sitting in one state, with reference to a contract which, under general principles of private international law, should be governed by the law of another state, does not necessarily involve a repudiation of that general principle, although it applies a rule of law contrary to that established by the decisions of the courts of that state, since the result may be referable to the principle already stated, that a Federal court is not bound to follow a decision of the state court on questions of general

v. Washington L. Ins. Co. 104 Am. St. Rep. 483, note; Johnson v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 63 L.R.A. 841, note; Millard v. Brayton, 177 Mass. 533, 52 L.R.A. 117, 83 Am. St. Rep. 294, 59 N. E. 436; Cravens v. New York L. Ins. Co. 148 Mo. 583, 53 L.R.A. 305, 71 Am. St. Rep. 628, 50 S. W. 519, 178 U. S. 389, 44 L. ed. 1116, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962; Albro v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 119 Fed. 629; Perry v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 67 N. H. 291, 68 Am. St. Rep. 668, 33 Atl. 731; Grevenig v. Washington L. Ins. Co. 112 La. 879, 104 Am. St. Rep. 474, 36 So. 790; Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. v. American Credit Indemnity Co. 59 C. C. A. 545, 124 Fed. 27; Horton v. New York L. Ins. Co. 151 Mo. 604, 52 S. W. 356; Moore v. Northwestern L. Ins. Co. 112 Mo.

App. 696, 87 S. W. 988; Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Glover, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1327, 78 S. W. 147; Cowen v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 37 Tex. Civ. App. 430, 84 S. W. 404; Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. v. Harris, 94 Tex. 25, 86 Am. St. Rep. 813, 57 S. W. 635; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Robison, 54 Fed. 580, 22 L.R.A. 325, 7 C. C. A. 444, 19 U. S. App. 266, 58 Fed. 723; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Elliott, 7 Sawy. 17, 5 Fed. 225; Ford v. Buckeye State Ins. Co. 6 Bush, 133, 99 Am. Dec. 663.

If the policy is a New York contract, a premium notice was not required as such notice did not apply to nonresident policy holders.

Napier v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 51 Misc.

commercial law; and this principle, of course, applies equally, if not a fortiori, to the decisions of a court of a state other than that in which the Federal court is sitting, as to those of the courts of the latter state. In such a situation (as is pointed out in notes to Root v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 212, and Southern Exp. Co. v. Gibbs, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 880) there is, from the point of view of the Federal court, no question of conflict of laws at all, since the rule established by the Federal precedents is equally the rule for both states, so far as the Federal courts are concerned.

—express stipulation as to governing law; public policy.

It is stated in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 848) that, when by an express stipulation in the contract the parties have designated the governing law, the question as to what law governs is answered, and that any inquiry as to the place where the contract was made, or as to whether the law of that or of some other place should govern, is unnecessary; and that the only inquiry is as to whether in a particular case it is contrary to the public policy of the forum to apply the law so designated, or to refrain from applying the law of the forum to the particular point in question. Cases in support of that statement are there cited.

So, a stipulation as to the place of a contract of insurance, and the provisions by which it shall be governed and construed, are controlling on both parties. A different principle applies only where the stipulations of the parties or the express provisions of the contract impair the obligation of a contract or conflict with the laws of the state where the contract was made. Polk v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 137 Fed. 273.

In Williams v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 145 N. C. 128, 58 S. E. 802, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 51, involving a contract made before the passage of the North Carolina statute providing that all contracts of insurance, application for which is taken within the state, shall be deemed to have been made within this state and subject to 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the laws thereof, it was held that a policy which was issued by a New York company to a resident of North Carolina was, by its express terms, made a New York contract, it being expressly provided in the contract that it should be governed by the laws of the state of New York, and the place of the contract being expressly agreed to be the home office of the association, in the city of New York.

In New York L. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 139 Ala. 303, 35 So. 1004, it appeared that the application for insurance stipulated that the contract should be "construed according to the laws of the state of New York," but the court said that the question at issue must be determined without reference to the New York statutes relied upon, since they were not proved in the case, and judicial notice could not be taken thereof.

In Russell v. Grigsby, 168 Fed. 577, the court said that the provision in the insurance contract that the place of the contract should be in the state of Pennsylvania was an obligatory term, and the contract of insurance should be construed according to the law of Pennsylvania, but that that provision did not affect the contract of assignment of the policy, which was a different contract.

As pointed out in the earlier note (pages 849 et seq.), the law of the state which, according to the general principles, should govern the contract, or even the law of the state which the parties have expressly stipulated to be the governing law of a contract, will not be applied if contrary to the public policy of the forum. The application of that exception is shown in the later subdivisions of the note, in connection with the specific questions involved. So, a fortiori, an express statutory provision of the state in which the action is brought, like that referred to in Williams v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. supra, will govern contracts made subsequent to its passage. It is so held in Owen v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. (S. C.) 66 S. E. 290, under a statute to such effect, notwithstanding an express stipulation in the contract that it should be subject to the laws of New York.

284, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1075; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 98 Tex. 230, 68 L.R.A. 509, 82 S. W. 1031.

Under policies in which waivers are not only required to be in writing, but are forbidden altogether except by certain designated persons, the restriction on the authority of agents to waive is binding.

Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Landfare, 63 Neb. 562, 88 N. W. 779; German Ins. Co. v. Heiduk, 30 Neb. 296, 27 Am. St. Rep. 402, 46 N. W. 481; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 104 Va. 572, 52 S. E. 345; Collins v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 32 Mont. 329, 108 Am. St. Rep. 578, 80 Pac. 609, 1092; May, Ins. § 137; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 861; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Hook, 62 Ohio St. 256, 56 N. E. 906; Russell v. Prudential

Ins. Co. 176 N. Y. 178, 98 Am. St. Rep. 656, 68 N. E. 252; Porter v. United States L. Ins. Co. 160 Mass. 183, 35 N. E. 678; Mal-lory v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 97 Mich. 416, 56 N. W. 773; Iowa L. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 187 U. S. 335, 47 L. ed. 204, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133; Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 527, 8 Am. St. Rep. 908, 32 N. W. 660; Iverson v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 151 Cal. 746, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 866, 91 Pac. 609; Cayford v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 5 Cal. App. 715, 91 Pac. 266.

Calkins, C., filed the following opinion.

This was an action upon a policy of life insurance issued by the defendant upon

The application made by the later cases of the rule with reference to express stipulations as to the governing law, as well as the exception based on public policy, is shown in the subsequent subdivisions.

Laws of state of incorporation as limitation upon powers of insurance company.

See also earlier note, 63 L.R.A. 853.

In so far as the laws of the state in which an insurance company is incorporated are limitations upon its powers to contract, they, of course, apply wherever the contract may have been made or wherever it may, by its terms, be performable; and a provision in the charter of the corporation is, of course, such a limitation upon its powers. Thus, in Supreme Lodge, N. E. O. O. P. v. Hine (Conn.) 73 Atl. 791, involving a question as to beneficiaries under a certificate issued by a mutual benefit association, a Massachusetts corporation, the court said that the contract was to be construed in accordance with the laws of Massachusetts and the charter and general laws of the corporation.

As pointed out in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 853), some of the cases have taken the position that every statute relating to insurance enacted in the state in which the insurer is incorporated is a limitation upon its powers which accompanies it wherever it may contract; but, as there shown, this position is contrary to the great weight of authority. The dicta to that effect in Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. v. Harris, 94 Tex. 25, 86 Am. St. Rep. 813, 57 S. W. 635 (cited in the earlier note), were expressly repudiated in the subsequent case of Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 98 Tex. 230, 68 L.R.A. 509, 82 S. W. 1031 (reversing [Tex. Civ. App.] 79 S. W. 367). To the same effect is Grevenig v. Washington L. Ins. Co. 112 La. 879, 104 Am. St. Rep. 474, 36 So. 790. In both cases the contract having been consummated outside of New York, the New York statute with respect to notice as a condition of forfeiture for non-payment of premiums was held inapplicable.

So, in Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Mullan, 107 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Md. 457, 69 Atl. 385, where the question was whether an untrue statement in an application for life insurance avoided the policy irrespective of its materiality to the risk, the court repudiated the contention that the contract of insurance must be construed in accordance with the laws of the state where the company was created and agreeably to its charter, in order to preserve the scheme of mutuality; Distinguishing Supreme Council, R. A. v. Brashears, 89 Md. 624, 73 Am. St. Rep. 244, 48 Atl. 866, on the ground that in that case the insurer was a mutual benefit association, which is not controlled by the ordinary rules of life insurance, whereas in the case at bar there was nothing to show that the insurer was a mutual company except the inference to be drawn from the word "mutual" in its corporate name.

—place of performance.

It was suggested in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 854) that (in view of the general principles deduced from cases dealing with other classes of contracts, which, prima facie at least, and in the absence of indications of a contrary intention, refer many of the essential elements to the law of the place of performance as such) too little attention has been paid to the claims of the law of the place of performance as such in respect of insurance contracts. This suggestion is also applicable to most of the later cases, which, like most of those cited in the earlier note, in the absence of an express stipulation as to the governing law, refer the contract to the law of the place where it was found to have been made, i. e., consummated, without reference to the law of the place of performance as such; unless, indeed, they decline to apply the law of that state for reasons of public policy peculiar to the law of the forum as such.

However, in Banco de Sonora v. Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. 124 Iowa, 576, 104 Am. St. Rep. 367, 100 N. W. 532, it was held that the question whether a person who mailed a package of money was an adult within the meaning of a contract insuring a the life of one Julia McElroy, in which policy the plaintiff was named as beneficiary. The defense was that the policy had been forfeited for nonpayment of a semiannual premium which fell due December 28, 1906, and remained unpaid at the time of the death of the assured, which took place February 27, 1907. There was a trial to a jury, upon which the court directed a verdict for the defendant, and, from a judgment entered thereon, the plaintiff appeals.

1. It is conceded that, if the contract is to be considered as made in and construed by the laws of this state, the policy was by its express terms forfeited by the failure to pay the premium in question, unless the time of such payment was extended or such forfeiture waived. The defendant is bank against the loss of currency in the mails, which required the packing and sealing of the packages containing the money to be witnessed by two adults, one of whom should have charge of the same until deposited and registered at the postoffice, since it related to the performance of the contract, was to be determined by the law of the place where this particular part of the contract was to be performed; and, it appearing that the parties contemplated that the money would be prepared for shipment in Mexico, that portion of the contract was to be performed there, and the question was therefore to be determined by the law of Mexico, notwithstanding that the package, which was lost, was registered from one point in Arizona to another. A similar decision in the same case was rendered in (Iowa) 95 N. W. 232 (referred to in the earlier note, page 855). While the policy in this case was issued by a Mexican corporation and the contract was consummated in Mexico, the decision, as already intimated, was put upon the ground that Mexico was the place of the performance of the particular part of the contract in question.

But in J. W. Matthews & Co. v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 127 App. Div. 195, 111 N. Y. Supp. 76 (affirmed without opinion in 195 N. Y. 593), it was held that the question of larceny, for the purposes of a fidelity policy of insurance, should be determined by the law of New York, where the policy was delivered and the insured resided, and not by the law of Connecticut, where the money was collected and misappropriated.

In Michaelsen v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. 160 Fed. 224 (reversed on another point in 83 C. C. A. 334, 154 Fed. 356, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 37), the court, in referring to the law of New York the question as to the right or remedy of the insured in case of an anticipatory breach of a policy issued by a New York company, said in effect that there was no dispute but that New York was the place of performance; but, as the policy in this instance expressly stipulated that it should be governed by and construed according to the laws of New York, there 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a New York corporation, and there was in force in that state at the time of the issuance of the policy in question a statute regulating the business of life insurance, which, amongst other things, provided that "no life insurance company doing business in this state will, within one year after the default in payment of any premium, instalment, or interest, declare forfeited or lapsed any policy hereafter issued, . . . unless a written or printed notice stating the amount of such premium . . . due on such policy, the place where it shall be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall have been duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is insured, . . . at his or her last known postoffice address in this state. . . . The notice would seem to be no question but that the law of that state should govern, unless, as was contended, the law of Pennsylvania, as the law of the forum, should apply.

In Cudahy Packing Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 132 Fed. 623, the question as to the rate of interest to be allowed upon a claim arising under a policy of indemnity insurance was referred to the law of New York, apparently for the reason that the policy was to be paid in that state, although it is also stated that the evidence shows that the contract was both executed and countersigned in New York, and, by inference, was delivered in Nebraska.

So, in Napier v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 51 Misc. 283, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1072, where it was held that the law of New York governed with respect to notice of nonpayment of premiums, the opinion intimated that the decision was not upon the ground that the law of the place where the contract is made as such governs, but that, when the contract is silent as to the place of performance, the place of making is presumed to be the place of performance. Other instances in which the law of the place of performance as such has been impliedly adopted or rejected will be found in the subsequent subdivisions.

—the law of state of insured's residence as such.

As pointed out in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 855), where an action is brought upon a contract of insurance in the state in which the property is situated, the court will, of course, apply a statute of that state which, either expressly or by construction, extends to all contracts of insurance upon property within the state, although the contract may have been made and the loss may be payable in another state.

An analogous principle is applied in Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Miazza (Miss.) 46 So. 817, with respect to a policy of insurance on the life of a resident of the state, it being there held that the provision of the Mississippi statute that "all contracts of insurance on property, lives, or interest in this shall also state that, unless such premium . . . shall be paid . . . by or before the day it falls due, the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void." [N. Y. Laws, 1897, chap. 218, p. 92]. There was an attempt to give the notice required by this statute, but it is claimed it was so imperfect as not to amount to a compliance with the above-quoted provisions. The question is therefore presented whether the rights of the parties under the policy sued on are to be determined by the laws of this state or those of New York. It is a general principle that, if the parties to an insurance contract are in different jurisdictions, the place where the last act is done which is necessary to give validity to the contract is the place where the contract is entered into. Antes v. State Ins. Co. 61 Neb. 55, 84 N. W. 412; Bascom v. Zediker, 48 Neb. 380, 67 N. W. 148; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 179 U. S. 262, 45 L. ed. 181, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106. In the body of the policy sued on, it is provided that no obligation is assumed by the company until the first premium has been paid, nor unless, upon the delivery of the policy, the assured is living and in sound health; and in the application, which is a part of the policy, there is inserted the stipulation: "I further agree that the company shall incur no liability under this application until it has been received, approved, and the policy issued and delivered, and the premium has actually been paid to and accepted by the company during my lifetime and while I state, shall be deemed to be made therein," cannot be changed by the contract of the parties. See also Owen v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. supra.

So, in Presbyterian Ministers' Fund v. Thomas, 126 Wis. 281, 110 Am. St. Rep. 919, 105 N. W. 801, an action by a Pennsylvania corporation to recover on a note given for the first premium on a policy on the life of a resident of Wisconsin, the court, notwithstanding that it was of the opinion that the contract of insurance was made in Pennsylvania and that the note sued on, being payable in Pennsylvania, would ordinarily be governed by the law of that state, held that there could be no recovery, because of the Wisconsin statute providing that no corporation or individual shall do any business of insurance with any resident of the state, except in accordance with certain conditions and restrictions, which had not been complied with.

—construction and interpretation of language of policy, generally.

See also earlier note in 63 L.R.A. 856, and the previous heading in this note "Law of place of performance."

In Supreme Council, A. L. H. v. Getz, 50 C. C. A. 153, 112 Fed. 119, it was said that the contract, being a Pennsylvania contract, must be construed according to its laws. So far as appears, however, there was no occasion for making any choice between the laws of different states in that case.

In Northwestern S. S. Co. v. Maritime Ins. Co. 161 Fed. 166, an action on a policy of marine insurance, the court said that, the policy having been issued in England and delivered to the brokers there, and the premium being paid there through the brokers, it was an English contract, to be construed and enforced according to the English law, although the insurance was procured by a corporation doing business at San Francisco, acting as agent for the owner.

In Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Morrell, 84 Ark. 511, 106 S. W. 680, involving the question whether the beneficiary had a vested interest in the certificate, it was held that the contract, being an Illinois contract, must be construed according to the laws of that state; but in that case the contract was executed in Illinois, and the insurance society was domiciled in that state, and the member also resided there at the time the policy was issued, so that the law of Illinois was both the lex loci contractus and the lex loci solutionis, and as the question clearly related to the substance of the contract, and not to the remedy merely, it was clear that the law of Illinois must govern.

In Progresso S. S. Co. v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 146 Cal. 279, 79 Pac. 967, involving a policy of marine insurance upon two steamboats about to be towed from a point in Michigan to a point in Alaska, the court, without making any reference to the place where the contract was made, held that the construction of the phrases in the policy, "warranted free from all average and salvage," and "actual total loss," should be construed according to the law of California, as the contract provided for performance in San Francisco, that being the place where the policy was payable.

In Ætna Ins. Co. v. Mount, 90 Miss. 642, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 471, 44 So. 162, 45 So. 835, it was held that, the contract of insurance being a Louisiana contract, merely brought into Mississippi for the purposes of suit, the question as to whether the violation of the iron-safe clause invalidated the policy as to fixtures as well as goods covered by it should be determined by the law of Louisiana. It is apparent, however, that this case cannot be regarded as authority for anything more than the elimination of the law of the forum as such as the governing law.

In Hardiman v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 212 Pa. 383, 61 Atl. 990, the court apparently assumed that the place where the contract was made would determine whether the law of New Jersey or the law of Pennsylvania should govern in determining the question whether the property became vacant or unoccupied within the meaning of the policy; and, having found that the policy, which was apparently issued by a waiting until the agent called at the house to collect the premium. It appears that the company issued in this locality a kind of policy called the industrial, in amounts of $50 to $200, upon which the premiums were paid by weekly instalments. By the express terms of these industrial policies, the agents of the company were required to go to the home of the assured and collect the premium; and the evidence established that the custom was not to strictly enforce the rule requiring the premiums the day they became due, the assistant superintendent having authority to extend the time, provided that he saw the assured personally and found him in good health. No such custom nor practice was established in reference to the class of policies sued upon, and the policy under consideration contained the provision that none of its terms could be varied or modified, nor any forfeiture waived, or premiums in arrears received, except by agreement in writing signed by either the president, vice president, secretary, or assistant secretary, whose authority for that purpose was not to be delegated. The evidence shows that all the premiums paid on the policy were paid to agents of the defendant by Frank McElroy, the father of the assured, at his place of business in Plattsmouth. Only two premiums were ever paid, and one of these was that paid at the time the policy was delivered. There was no promise on the part of the agent to waive the forfeiture or postpone the payment, unless the same 98 Mo. App. 153, 71 S. W. 1071; Dennis v. Modern Brotherhood, 119 Mo. App. 210, 95 S. W. 967; Pauley v. Modern Woodmen, 113 Mo. App. 473, 87 S. W. 990. The question, however, considered in these cases, as to the conditions necessary to entitle the foreign association to the benefit of the peculiar privileges and exemptions extended to local fraternal benefit associations, is not deemed to be within the scope of this note.

Assignment.

The general principle stated in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 855), that an assignment of the policy of insurance is a contract distinct and separate from the original contract of insurance, and is governed by the law of the place where it (the assignment) is made, without reference to the law of the place where the original contract of insurance was made, or to the law governing that contract, is further supported by Russell v. Grigsby, 168 Fed. 577, and Miller v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 110 La. 651, 34 So. 723.

So, in Colburn's Appeal, 74 Conn. 463, 92 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 Atl. 139, where the policy was made and to be performed in New York and the assignment by the insured to his wife was delivered to the company in that state, it was held that whether the assignment invested her with the legal title depended on the laws of New York, but that, as both were domiciled in Massachusetts, the question whether a full title passed as between them depended on the laws of Massachusetts regulating the marriage relation, and also on the effect of the want of delivery to her of either the policy or the assignment.

As to notice; forfeiture; extended insurance.

As shown in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 862 et seq.), there is considerable variation among the cases as to the governing law with respect to notice as a condition of forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums, though those variations are due in a large measure to the differences in the facts. As there 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

shown, in the absence of any express stipulation upon the subject, the governing law in that respect is, according to the weight of authority, the law of the state where the contract is consummated, and not the law of the state in which the insurer is incorporated. That is substantially the position taken in McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co.

In Cowen v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 37 Tex. Civ. App. 430, 84 S. W. 404, the court also expressed an opinion to the effect that the New York statute prohibiting forfeitures for nonpayment of premiums, unless written notice shall have been duly addressed to the insured, would not apply to a policy of insurance issued by a New York corporation, it having been found that the contract was consummated in Texas, although, as a matter of fact, the court was of the opinion that in any event the notice of the premium in this instance was sufficient to answer the requirements of the New York statute.

So, in Nall v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 54 S. W. 109, where, to use the language of the court, "the policy shows on its face that it was executed in the city of New York," it was held that the New York statute as to notice, in force at the time the policy was issued, became a part of the contract and governed its provisions. Here, again, the court apparently assumed that the policy became a contract in New York, although from the recital of the policy it appears that the insured was a resident of Alabama.

The assumption in Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Peetz (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 687, that the New York statute with respect to notice would govern, may, like some of the cases cited in the earlier note, be accounted for by an express stipulation in the application, that New York was the place of the contract.

In Harrigan v. Home L. Ins. Co. 128 Cal. 531, 58 Pac. 180, 61 Pac. 99, however, the court said that the insurance company was located in the state of New York, and it was agreed that the policy was a contract which was to be performed in that state, might be inferred from the testimony of Frank McElroy, which shows that, in the latter part of January or first of February, he had a conversation with Mr. Davies, the agent of the defendant, in which he said, when asked what Mr. Davies's exact words were: "The way I understood it when I spoke to him about it, he said it would be all right to keep the other money and give it to him altogether. Afterwards he came to the shop, and said he didn't know about that, and he asked me for my daughter's address, and I told him I didn't have it. I told him then, if he insisted on the money to go up and see my wife, as it was no benefit to me anyhow. She had money." It appears that it was the practice of the company to send receipts to its local agents before a premium became due, and that the agent was authorized to deliver such receipt upon payment of the premium at any time within thirty days of the date upon which the same had become due. In case of non-payment of the premium within that period, the agent was required to immediately return the receipt to the home office, and was without any authority to accept the premium thereafter without further instructions. The date of the above conversation is not very definite, but we will assume that it was before the expiration of the thirty-day period. The evidence does not seem to us sufficient to sustain a finding that the agent did agree to give the time beyond the expiration of this period for the payment of the premium. Whether he did or and seems to have assumed that that in itself would have been sufficient to subject the contract to the law of New York with respect to notice, and that an express waiver of notice was ineffectual. The opinion considered at length the question whether the contract was consummated in New York or California, and finally decided that it was consummated in New York; but this point seems to have been considered in passing upon the question whether the policy was to be considered as a "writing executed out of this state," for the purposes of the California statute of limitations.

As shown in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 863), it was held in Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 193 U. S. 551, 48 L. ed. 788, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538, that, even assuming that a general declaration in a contract of life insurance that it was to be held and construed to have been made in New York would, if there was nothing else, make controlling all the applicable statutes of that state with respect to notice, its effect, so far as notice was concerned, was overcome by another stipulation in the contract, which amounted to an admission by the insured of the receipt of every notice in respect of payment of premiums which could be implied from any other part of the policy or required by statute. This doctrine was followed by the Texas supreme court in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 98 Tex. 230, 68 L.R.A. 509, 82 S. W. 1031, although, so far as appears, there was not an express stipulation in the policy in that case referring it to the law of New York, and the contract was made in Texas. The doctrine, however, was invoked by the court in answer to the contention that the law of New York, as the law of the place of performance of the contract, should govern.

So, in Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Minehart, 72 Ark. 630, 83 S. W. 323, the effect of an express stipulation in a contract of life insurance consummated in New York, that it should be governed by and construed according to the laws of New York, was held to be counteracted, so far as the New York statute with reference to notice was concerned, by a special and express provision on the subject of notice.

It will be observed that, both in the Bradley Case and in McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., the contract was deemed to have been consummated, outside of New York, in the first case in Texas, and in the latter Nebraska. Nor, so far as appears, was there in either case an express stipulation declaring New York to be the place of the contract, or providing that the contract should be governed by the law of New York; while the stipulation to that effect in Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, supra, was counteracted by other provisions already referred to.

It may perhaps be questioned whether the point made in these cases (which is supported by the decision in Napier v. Bankers' L. Ins. Co. 51 Misc. 284, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1075), to the effect that the New York statute in respect of notice, by its terms or by construction of the courts of that state, is inapplicable to persons not having a postoffice address in that state, would necessarily lead to the conclusion that the provisions of that statute would be inapplicable in case of a contract (containing no inconsistent provision) expressly stipulating that the law of New York shall govern even though the insured was a resident of another state and had no postoffice address in New York, since it would be at least possible to take the view in such a case that the parties had expressly adopted the provisions of the statute in respect of notice as a part of their contract, irrespective of the fact that the statute as such might be inapplicable to such a situation. In any event, the point as to restricted application of the New York statute, even if it were to be conceded to apply to the case just supposed, would not militate against the general proposition that the law of New York should govern, but would merely bear on the question what the law of New York as applied to the particular situation is. In other words, when, under the operation of the general principles of private international law, the contract is referred to the law of New York and the law of that state is consulted on the point in question, it might be found that that law Missouri, where the insured apparently resided, held that the law of the latter state precluding the defense of suicide under such circumstances was inapplicable.

The reason given in the last subdivision for excluding cases like Pauley v. Modern Woodmen, supra, applies equally to cases like Herzberg v. Modern Brotherhood, 110 Mo. App. 328, 85 S. W. 986, and Dennis v. Modern Brotherhood, 119 Mo. App. 210, 95 S. W. 967, passing upon the question whether the Missouri statute, applicable to contracts of life insurance generally, which precludes the defense of suicide, unless insured contemplated suicide at the time of taking out the policy, or the special statute which permits such defense to fraternal benefit societies which answer to the description of such societies given in the Missouri statute—applied to contracts of foreign insurance associations which had complied with the conditions of doing business in Missouri. Here again it will be observed the question is not whether the law of Missouri or some other state governs, but which of two rules of law in Missouri is applicable.

As to the governing law with respect to the right of the beneficiaries to recover under an insurance policy where the insured was legally executed for crime, see McCue v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 167 Fed. 436, supra.

Necessity of attaching application or copy thereof to policy.

See earlier note in 63 L.R.A. 867 et seq.

The case of Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Hadley, 43 C. C. A. 25, 102 Fed. 856 (writ of certiorari denied in 179 U. S. 686, 45 L. ed. 386, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 919), cited in the earlier note (63 L.R.A. 867), was followed in Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Albro, 62 C. C. A. 213, 127 Fed. 281 (writ of certiorari denied in 194 U. S. 633, 48 L. ed. 1159, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857), holding that the Massachusetts statute providing in effect that, unless a correct copy of the application is attached to the policy, it shall not be considered a part of the policy or received in evidence, applied in an action in Massachusetts to recover from a New York life insurance company upon an insurance contract completed in Massachusetts.

Contractual limitation.

See also earlier note in 63 L.R.A. 868.

In Roberts v. Modern Woodmen, 133 Mo. App. 207, 113 S. W. 726, where a policy was issued by a fraternal benefit association of Illinois, to a person then a resident of Illinois, the certificate being delivered in that state, the validity of the stipulation in the certificate limiting the time for bringing an action thereon was held to be governed by the law of Illinois, and not by the law of Missouri, although the action was brought in the latter state and the association in question was authorized to do business therein as a fraternal beneficiary association.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Remedy for anticipatory breach.

In Michaelsen v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. 150 Fed. 224 (an action in a Federal court sitting in Pennsylvania), where the contract expressly stipulated that it should be governed and construed according to the laws of New York, it was held that the law of New York would govern with respect to the remedy of the insured in case of an anticipatory breach of the contract by the company; and that, if the law of New York in such a case requires the plaintiff to file a bill to compel the insurance company to continue the contract, then the plaintiff is bound by that law, notwithstanding that the suit was brought in another state. The court conceded that such matters as the bringing of suit, admissibility of evidence, and statute of limitations, which are merely matters of remedy, depend on the law of the forum, but apparently regarded the question as to the nature of the remedy as pertaining to the substantive rights of the parties, and not to the remedy in the sense in which the law of the forum governs as to matters of remedy. This case was reversed (83 C. C. A. 334, 154 Fed. 356, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 37) upon the ground that law of New York permitted an action for damages under such circumstances.

NEW MEXICO SUPREME COURT.

ANNA JASPER

v.

MIRA M. WILSON et al., Appts.

(— N. M. —, 94 Pac. 951.)

Sale — contract — agent's authority.

1. Power to make a binding contract for sale of real estate is conferred on a broker by an owner residing in a foreign country, who intrusts to his discretion the subject-matter of the amount to be paid for the property, requesting him to do the best he can, and receive the purchase money and apply it in satisfaction of the grantor's debts.

Same — extent of power.

2. Authority conferred on a real estate broker to make a binding contract for the sale of land includes power to bind the Case Note. — Power of real estate broker to make a contract of sale.

A full discussion of this question may be found in a case note to Weatherhead v. Ettinger, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 210.

As was said in that note and supported by a number of cases, since it is generally conceded that the only duty of a real estate broker is to find a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms specified, the overwhelming weight of authority is that the intention on the part of an owner of property to empower a real estate broker to make a binding contract of sale is not inferred except from the use of grantor to execute covenants of general warranty and furnish an abstract of title.

Same — exceeding authority — waiver — enforcement.

3. Although a broker for sale of real estate exceeds his authority in contracting to furnish a warranty deed and abstract of title, the grantees may waive such requirements, and enforce the contract as one providing for a bare transfer of title.

Same — privity — enforcement.

4. Persons who purchase real estate, with notice of a binding contract on the part of the grantor to convey to another, may be compelled to honor the former contract.

Contract — receipt — mutuality.

5. A contract for sale of real estate, embodied in a receipt reciting payment of a portion of the purchase money, and the amount and time of payment of the balance, is not unenforceable against the grantor, as lacking in mutuality.

(February 26, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the District Court for Bernalillo County enforcing specific performance of a contract to sell real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Neill B. Field, for appellants:

The broker had no authority to bind his principal to furnish an abstract of title at his own cost.

Balkena v. Searle, 116 Iowa, 374, 89 N. W. 1087; Staten v. Hammer, 121 Iowa, 499, 96 N. W. 964.

Written authority to a real estate broker to sell and receive a deposit thereon does not authorize the broker to execute a contract which will bind his principal.

Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616, 18 Pac. 758; McCullough v. Hitchcock, 71 Conn. 404, 42 Atl. 81; Carstens v. McReavy, 1 Wash.

unequivocal expressions to that effect; and that the employment of a real estate broker as such, or the mere listing of property with him, or the direct instruction to find a purchaser, or any communication from the owner to the broker with respect to the sale of land, will be regarded as giving the agent only the authority to find a purchaser, and that no wider power than that is necessarily indicated by the words "to sell," or "make a sale." Among the cases decided since the date of that note, the following also support the above rule: Ross v. Craven (Neb.) 121 N. W. 451 (letter merely stating terms of sale); Lichty v. Daggett (S. D.) 121 N. W. 862 (letter stating that property was for sale and giving terms); Hutchins v. Wertheimer, 51 Wash. 539, 99 Pac. 577 (answer, upon inquiry, that owner was willing to dispose of property at the price stated); Hardinger v. Columbia, 50 Wash. 405, 97 Pac. 445; Lawson v. King (Wash.) 104 Pac. 1118 (letter stating price and time allowed for selling).

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

359, 25 Pac. 471; Sullivant v. Jahren, 71 Kan. 127, 79 Pac. 1071; Helling v. Darby, 71 Kan. 107, 79 Pac. 1073; Cadigan v. Crabtree, 186 Mass. 7, 66 L.R.A. 982, 104 Am. St. Rep. 543, 70 N. E. 1033; Gestrung v. Fisher, 46 Mo. App. 603; Ingold v. Symonds, 125 Iowa, 82, 99 N. W. 713; Stillman v. Fitzgerald, 37 Minn. 180, 33 N. W. 564; Keim v. O'Reilly, 54 N. J. Eq. 418, 34 Atl. 1073.

Defendants Walker, Lester, and Jackson were guilty of no inequitable conduct, and therefore could not be held to have taken title as trustees for the plaintiff.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1053; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 187; Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122, 32 L. ed. 878, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447; Huxley v. Rice, 40 Mich. 73; Ware v. Egmont, 4 DeG. M. & G. 473; Trinidad v. Milwaukee & T. Smelting & Ref. Co. 11 C. C. A. 479, 27 U. S. App. 469, 63 Fed. 887; Wilson v. Miller, 16 Iowa, 115; Bugbee's Appeal, 110 Pa. 338, 1 Atl. 273; Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 511, 27 L. ed. 1014, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

A proper case for relief by a judgment for specific performance is not established.

Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. 566, 19 L. ed. 503; Hennessey v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 442, 32 L. ed. 501, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Merritt v. Wassenich, 49 Fed. 788; Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 317, 41 Am. Rep. 365; Mansfield v. Sherman, 81 Me. 370, 17 Atl. 300; Burkhalter v. Jones, 32 Kan. 5, 3 Pac. 563.

The contract was lacking in mutuality.

Norris v. Fox, 45 Fed. 406; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955; Duff v. Hopkins, 33 Fed. 599; Borel v. Mead, 3 N. M. 39, 2 Pac. 222; Couch v. McCoy, 138 Fed. 696.

This was also recognized in Watters v. Dancy (S. D.) 122 N. W. 430, and Flegel v. Dowling (Or.) 102 Pac. 178.

However, in Bacon v. Davis, 9 Cal. App. 83, 98 Pac. 71, it was held that a contract with a firm of real estate brokers, containing such phrases as to sell "for me," "in my name," and "I agree to sell and convey by a good and sufficient grant, bargain, and sale deed, and give the usual covenants therein to any purchaser obtained by said company," with other various circumstances, indicated an intention on the part of the property owners to empower the real estate brokers to make a binding contract of sale.

In Wiggins v. Wilson, 55 Fla. 346, 45 So. 1011, it was held that a letter promising a payment of commissions upon the condition that brokers should close a sale of the lands at the price and upon the terms particularly specified therein made out a contract for the sale of the property, and not merely a contract to find a purchaser.

Messrs. Klock & Owen, for appellee:

The broker was authorized to execute a valid contract, to deliver it, and to receive the purchase price.

Haydock v. Stow, 40 N. Y. 363; Story, Agency, §§ 210, 211, 217; Moore v. Moore, 5 N. Y. 256, affirming 4 Sandf. Ch. 37; Torrey v. Bank of Orleans, 9 Paige, 649, affirmed in 7 Hill, 260; Smith v. Allen, 86 Mo. 178; Stewart v. Wood, 63 Mo. 256; Lyon v. Pollock, 99 U. S. 668, 25 L. ed. 265; Johnson v. Dodge, 17 Ill. 441; Lawrence v. Taylor, 5 Hill, 107; Hawkins v. Chace, 19 Pick. 502; Pringle v. Spaulding, 53 Barb. 17; 2 Parsons, Contr. 291; Winch v. Edmunds, 34 Colo. 359, 83 Pac. 632; McNeil v. Shirley, 33 Cal. 202; Johnson v. McGruder, 15 Mo. 365; West v. Mills, 83 App. Div. 629, 82 N. Y. Supp. 473; McCarty v. Stanfill, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 612, 41 S. W. 278; Weaver v. Snively, 73 Neb. 35, 102 N. W. 77.

The authority conferred by the letter included the right on the part of the broker to bind the owner to give a deed of warranty and abstract of title, as agreed in the contract.

Schultz v. Griffin, 121 N. Y. 294, 18 Am. St. Rep. 825, 24 N. E. 480; LeRoy v. Beard, 8 How. 451, 12 L. ed. 1151; Peters v. Farnsworth, 15 Vt. 155, 40 Am. Dec. 671; Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh, 293, 19 Am. Dec. 92; Taggart v. Stanbery, 2 McLean, 543, Fed. Cas. No. 13,724; Rawle, Covenants, § 20, note.

The contract was valid.

Borel v. Mead, 3 N. M. 39, 2 Pac. 222; Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229, 55 Am. Dec. 330; Re Hunter, 1 Edw. Ch. 5; Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493, 1 Am. Rep. 576; Tripp v. Bishop, 56 Pa. 424; Smith's Appeal, 69 Pa. 474; Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 587, 67 Am. Dec. 89.

The plaintiff was entitled to the decree of specific performance.

Losee v. Morey, 57 Barb. 564; Willard, Eq. Jur. 279, 280; Story Eq. §§ 746, 751; Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. Jr. 608; Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. Jr. 400; Seymour v. Delancy, 3 Cow. 445, 15 Am. Dec. 270; Bowen v. Irish Presby. Congregation, 6 Bosw. 245; Best v. Stow, 2 Sandf. Ch. 298; Brown v. Haff, 5 Paige, 235, 28 Am. Dec. 425; Phylfe v. Wardell, 5 Paige, 268, 28 Am. Dec. 430; Crary v. Smith, 2 N. Y. 60; 4 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 1402, p. 2761.

The defendant Walker could not have demanded of the owner the specific performance of any contract for the sale of the lots, even if one binding on the owner had been made, as the defendant Walker entered into a contract and took the property with 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

notice of the right and equity of the plaintiff.

Atcherley v. Vernon, 10 Mod. 518; Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. Jr. 249; Mack v. McIntosh, 181 Ill. 633, 54 N. E. 1019; Ash v. Hare, 73 Me. 401; Conniham v. Thompson, 111 Mass. 270; Hayward v. Kane, 110 Mass. 273; Page v. Martin, 46 N. J. Eq. 585, 20 Atl. 46.

A vendee or assignee who takes with notice of prior equities will be required to perform the contract of his vendor or assignor.

Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 551, Fed. Cas. No. 4,847; White v. Mooers, 86 Me. 62, 29 Atl. 936; Mansfield v. Hodgdon, 147 Mass. 304, 17 N. E. 544; Palmer v. Palmer, 114 Mich. 509, 72 N. W. 322; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 1063, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 239; Tuttle v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 213, 21 Am. Dec. 306; Whitbread v. Boulnois, 1 Younge & C. Exch. 303; United States v. San Pedro & C. & del A. Co. 4 N. M. 590, 17 Pac. 337.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate. The contract is in the following form:

Albuquerque, N. M., Nov. 16, 1904.

Received from Mrs. W. V. Jasper the sum of \$100 as part payment on the west ninety-four and two-thirds (94 $\frac{2}{3}$) of lots 10, 11, and 12 in block 44 of the Huning's Highland addition to the city of Albuquerque, New Mexico, the purchase price to be eight hundred dollars (\$800), the balance to be paid on the delivery of a good and sufficient warranty deed and abstract of title.

A. Fleischer,

Agent for Mrs. Mira M. Wilson.

Fleischer was a real estate broker in the city of Albuquerque, and wrote the defendant Wilson as follows:

October 19th, 1904.

Mrs. M. M. Wilson,
Salazar, State of Mexico, Mexico.
Dear Madam:—

I have an offer of $700.00 for your lots on the northeast corner of Railroad avenue and High street. This is a cash proposition. Kindly let me know at once whether you will be willing to accept that offer. While this is not as much as you had expected to get, I would urge you strongly to accept the amount in view of the fact that there is a likelihood of cement walks being ordered before long on both sides, which would mean an expenditure of about $250.00. Please let me hear from you without delay and oblige.

Yours respectfully.

The defendant Wilson replied as follows:

Salazar, State of Mexico,
October 23d, 1904.

Mr. A. Fleischer,
Albuq., N. M.

Dear Sir:—

Your favor of the 19th inst. just at hand. I am at a loss what to reply. I could have got $1,000 cash less commission when I was at Albuq., but I asked $1,000 net. And if the little lot brought $500.00, it seems to me the big one should be worth at least $1,000.00. But if it is going to be necessary to put down cement walk at a cost of $250.00, I suppose it would be best to sell before then. The Moore Real Estate Co. had a customer for them, and I thought there would have been a sale before now. If the walks are to be ordered, and you cannot get more than $700.00, I expect it will be best to accept it. Yet it looks like giving them away. However, do the best you can for me. If you sell, apply the money on the Rosenwald debt. Send the new interest notes to me for signature, and fix all other matters as you think best. Thanking you in advance for your attention advice, I remain.

Very respt'ly,
Mira M. Wilson.

After receiving the letter of October 23, 1904, from the defendant Wilson, Fleischer negotiated a sale of the property in question, and executed the contract above set out. On the same day he wrote the defendant Wilson as follows:

Albuquerque, N. M., Nov. 16th, 1904.

Mrs. Mira M. Wilson,
Salazar, Mexico.

Dear Madam:—

. . . I herewith inclose warranty deed for the R. R. Ave. lots, which you will please have properly signed by yourself and husband before a U. S. commissioner of deeds. You may then return it to me or to the bank, with proper instructions. You will have to pay the first half of the 1904 taxes and also furnish an abstract. You will notice that I got $100.00 more for it than I offered you in my last letter. I turned the other party down and tried it again with the above result. My commission will be $40. We will have to apply most of the proceeds on the mortgage, so that I can get a release. Hoping that this is satisfactory to you and that you will give this matter 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

your prompt attention, I am, with kind regards,

Very respectfully yours.

To this letter the defendant Wilson replied as follows on November 22d:

Salazar, State of Mexico,
November 22d, 1904.

Mr. A. Fleischer,
212½ S. 2d St.,
Albuquerque, N. M.

Dear Sir:—

Your favor of the 16th inst. with inclosure just received. I had just started a letter to you, which explains itself. Am sorry you are short of money for taxes. Of course, take amount from proceeds of sale. Hope, however, you will be able to collect soon and get in better tenants. I cannot understand why you send this deed for my signature, and so will hold it to hear from you again. When you sold the other lot the deed and transfer was made by Rosenwalds, who held it by deed of trust, the same as they still hold this one. Had you not overlooked that fact? You remember all I done was to pay for the recording of the satisfaction of mortgage or release. I would go on and sign the deed anyway, but it would cost me $40.00 to do so. Mr. Wilson would have to lay off and lose so much time, which together with our expenses would be no small amount. As I did not sign a deed for the other transfer, and as Rosenwalds do hold deeds of trust for the property, I thought perhaps it would be unnecessary to do so, and I now await your further instructions. I will attend to it at once if necessary. I am sorry you could not realize more on the lots, but hope all will come out right any way. Apply what you need to on the mortgage. I suppose you can apply $700.00. Pay taxes 1st ½ 1904 $31.25, your commission $40.00, pay for abstract and what little is left deposit to my credit. Have new notes for interest drawn and send to me for signature. And if you will kindly tell me if you think it advisable to put the remaining debt into the building and loan, or lease it as it is? Trusting that I make you no unnecessary delay by not signing the deed before asking questions, I remain,

Very respt'ly,
Mira M. Wilson.

1. Counsel for defendants earnestly insists that these letters did not authorize the agent Fleischer to bind the defendant Wilson by a contract to sell her land. Under the view which we take of the scope of the power conferred upon the agent Fleischer by the correspondence above quoted, it becomes unnecessary for us to define the exact limits of the power of an ordinary real estate broker. Whether the ordinary power to sell is a power merely to find a purchaser and bring him to the principal, or whether it includes a power to make a binding contract of sale, it is not necessary to decide; but we do hold that the power conferred upon the agent in this case was an enlarged power, and a power sufficient to enable him to make a binding contract of sale. This clearly appears from the circumstances in which the parties were situated, the terms employed in the letters, and all the facts surrounding the transaction. The owner was a resident of Mexico, a long distance from the city of Albuquerque. She intrusted the subject-matter of the amount to be paid for the property to the discretion of her agent. She requested him to do the best he could for her, to receive the money, and to apply it to the payment of her debts. At the time she conferred the power she intended to surrender all further dominion over the property, and believed that she had clothed the agent with ample power, not only to contract for the sale of the property, but even to pass the title to the purchaser. Under such circumstances the power conferred is an enlarged power, and much beyond that ordinarily conferred upon a real estate broker, and is sufficient to authorize the agent to contract for the sale of the land. Lyon v. Pollock, 99 U. S. 668, 25 L. ed. 265; Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213; Smith v. Allen, 86 Mo. 178; Weaver v. Snively, 73 Neb. 35, 102 N. W. 77. We therefore hold that the agent in this case was clothed with the power to make a binding contract of sale.

2. Conceding that the agent was clothed with power to make a binding contract upon his principal to convey her title to the plaintiff, still it is urged by counsel for the defendants that the power did not include the power to contract for a deed with covenants of general warranty and for an abstract of title. Proof of custom or usage was relied upon by plaintiff to supplement the power directly conferred, and thus sustain the power to contract for general warranty of title and abstract of title. We have examined the record and must say that the proof of custom or usage is very unsatisfactory, and whether the same was established is very doubtful. But, assuming that there was no sufficient proof of custom or usage, or, assuming that usage or custom was inadmissible as supplementing the power, still we believe that the great weight of authority is to the effect that a power to sell and make a binding contract of sale implies a power to contract for a conveyance 23 L.R.A. (N.S.).

with general warranty. 2 Page, Contr. § 963; Vanada v. Hopkins, 1 J. J. Marsh. 285, 19 Am. Dec. 92; Le Roy v. Beard, 8 How. 451, 12 L. ed. 1151; Mechem, Agency, § 322. But, assuming that the power conferred upon the agent in this case did not include the power to contract for abstract of title and conveyance by deed with general warranty, there is another principle, it seems to us, which is controlling in this case. It is a well-recognized principle of equity that a vendee, in an action brought by him for specific performance of a contract, may waive the performance on the part of the vendor of portions of his contract, and may elect to take a partial performance, if he himself is willing to fully perform. This doctrine has been most frequently applied in those cases where the vendor has found himself unable to fully comply as to the amount of land contracted for, or as to the land being free from encumbrances. We can see no reason, however, why the doctrine should not likewise be applied to a case like this one, where, assuming the agent has exceeded his power, the vendee elects to take partial performance. The vendee, plaintiff in this case, has taken a decree of the court below divesting the title of the vendor, and vesting it in plaintiff. It is to be assumed that the vendee took this decree without objection, and it must be held in this court to amount to an election or waiver of full performance by the vendor. The only case we have been able to find in which this principle has been specifically applied to a state of facts like those in the case under consideration is the case of Vanada v. Hopkins, above cited. See also Hammond v. Michigan State Bank, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 214. A similar doctrine is often applied. Thus, a purchaser may elect to take a defective title; or he may elect to take a part of the land less a homestead; or he may elect to take subject to a mortgage, and take decree so as to protect against it. See 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 83, § 3; Lancaster v. Roberts, 144 Ill. 225, 33 N. E. 27; Hill v. Ressegieu, 17 Barb. 162; Townsend v. Blanchard, 117 Iowa, 36, 90 N. W. 519; Peters v. Delaplaine, 49 N. Y. 368; Bull v. Bell, 4 Wis. 54. See Pom. Spec. Perf. of Contracts, §§ 438, 439, and note. It is a familiar principle that, where a part of the acts are within, and a part without, the power, the former are valid. Mechem, Agency, §§ 414, 416. A contrary doctrine was announced in Dellet v. Whitner, Cheves, Eq. 213.

3. It is urged by counsel for defendants that the defendants Arthur E. Walker, Raymond H. Lester, and Benton S. Jackson, who are the purchasers from the defendant Wilson, have been guilty of no inequitable conduct against the plaintiff, but have simply been diligent, and succeeded in getting a conveyance from the defendant Wilson, notwithstanding her contract with the plaintiff in this case. It appears, however, that these defendants were fully advised, before they opened up negotiations with the defendant Wilson, of the fact that the agent Fleischer had contracted with the plaintiff for the purchase of this land. They, therefore, bought with notice of the plaintiff's rights, and cannot complain if those rights are enforced by the court. Pom. Spec. Perf. of Contr. § 465. It is further urged that the contract is lacking in mutuality, and therefore not enforceable. It is unnecessary to go further than to cite the case of Borel v. Mead, 3 N. M. 39, 2 Pac. 222, as decisive of the doctrine that a contract of this kind is enforceable by a decree for specific performance, and this seems to be the settled doctrine of the courts.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Mills, Ch. J., and McFie, Pope, and Mann, JJ., concur. Abbott, J., having tried the case below, did not participate in this decision.

Petition for rehearing denied

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

C. P. DORR, Appt.,

v.

A. MIDEUBURG.

(— W. Va. —, 65 S. E. 97.)

Deed — conditional delivery — parol evidence.

1. If a deed for land, absolute and complete on its face, be delivered by grantor to grantee, as an escrow, to take effect in any event, the condition is void and the deed becomes absolute, and the title passes immediately to the grantee on the delivery thereof, and the condition of the delivery of the deed cannot be shown by parol evidence thereof, so as to defeat the deed.

Executed land contract — defect in title — rescission.

2. No question of identity of the subject-matter of the contract being involved, a Headnotes by MILLER, P.

Note. — The effect of the delivery of a deed to the grantee therein named, subject to a future extrinsic condition, is discussed in the case note to Wipfler v. Wipfler, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 941.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court of equity will not, at the suit of the vendor, set aside or rescind in its entirety an executed contract of sale of several lots of land simply because it turns out that the vendor had no title to one or more of the lots conveyed. In such case, the vendee may elect to affirm the contract as to the lots to which the vendor had title, and recover a proper proportion of the purchase money paid for the lot or lots of land lost for want of title of the vendor.

(June 11, 1909.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Kanawha County dismissing a bill filed to enjoin the prosecution of an action brought to recover a portion of the purchase price of certain lands sold and conveyed, and to have the deed thereof set aside either in part or in toto. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Linn, Byrne, & Oato for appellant.

Mr. W. S. Laidley, for appellee:

A deed cannot be delivered to the grantee, to take effect upon conditions not appearing on its face.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 337 c; Towner v. Lucas, 13 Gratt. 705; Miller v. Fletcher, 27 Gratt. 403, 21 Am. Rep. 356; Stevens v. Cooper, 1 Johns. Ch. 425, 7 Am. Dec. 499; American Buttonhole Overseaming Sewing Mach. Co. v. Burlack, 35 W. Va. 657, 14 S. E. 319; Holston Salt & Plaster Co. v. Campbell, 89 Va. 396, 16 S. E. 274; Lyttle v. Cozad, 21 W. Va. 183.

There can be no evidence by parol to prove that a deed complete and perfect on its face was delivered to the grantee upon a condition.

Hukill v. Guffey, 37 W. Va. 425, 16 S. E. 544; Blair v. Security Bank, 103 Va. 762, 50 S. E. 262; Owens v. Boyd Land Co. 95 Va. 560, 28 S. E. 950; Peyton v. Stuart, 88 Va. 50, 13 S. E. 408, 16 S. E. 160; Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Dunlop, 86 Va. 346, 10 S. E. 239; Tait v. Central Lunatic Asylum, 84 Va. 271, 4 S. E. 697; Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. 733; Watson v. Hurt, 6 Gratt. 633; Towner v. Lucas, supra; Woodward v. Foster, 18 Gratt. 200; Ward v. Churn, 18 Gratt. 801, 98 Am. Dec. 749; Southard v. Curley, 134 N. Y. 148, 16 L.R.A. 561, 30 Am. St. Rep. 642, 31 N. E. 330; Maxwell Land-Grant Case, 121 U. S. 381, 30 L. ed. 959, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015; Sangston v. Gordon, 22 Gratt. 755; Miller v. Fletcher, supra; Colhoun v. Wilson, 27 Gratt. 639; Southern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Yates, 28 Gratt. 585; Nash v. Fugate, 32 Gratt. 595, 34 Am. Rep. 780.

Miller, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, on June 20, 1905, in Webster county, where he resided, made and delivered to defendant, residing at Charleston, in Kanawha county, a deed of general warranty for lot 15, in block K, and lots 13, 16, 17, 18, and 19 in block L, of the Ruffner addition to said city, the consideration being $2,200, $1,000 in cash and the balance in two equal annual payments, represented by notes of $600 each. At the time he received the deed, defendant gave plaintiff his check for $1,000 on a Charleston bank for the cash payment, and executed and delivered to him also his two notes for the deferred payments, for which a vendor's lien was reserved in the deed. At the same time, at the request of defendant, plaintiff gave him two separate memorandums in writing, as follows: The first:

Webster Springs, W. Va., June 20, 1905.

I have this day sold to A. Middelburg certain lots in the town of Ruffner, Kanawha county, W. Va., and executed to him a deed for same. Now I agree to execute any further deed or deeds that he may wish for said six lots in Ruffner addition, Charleston, W. Va.

C. P. Dorr.

The second:

There is no mortgage or deed of trust given by me or Duffy on any of these lots. I hold all the judgments against P. F. Duffy, the former owner of the six lots. I refer to the deed made to A. Middelburg, June 20th, 1905.

C. P. Derr.

Plaintiff says he placed the check in bank, directing the cashier not to send it forward for collection for a week or so; but it was in fact forwarded for collection, and was paid by the Charleston bank on June 26th, after defendant had reached his home in Charleston, June 23, 1905. The following day, June 24th, defendant, after consulting his attorney, and, as he claims, had had him examine the title for liens only, had him also prepare a new deed for the lots, antedating it to correspond with the date of the original deed, with more accurate description of the lots, and containing also, in addition to the covenants of general warranty, covenants against "all encumbrances." This deed defendant forwarded to plaintiff by mail at Webster Springs, with a letter saying:

Inclosed please find another deed for six lots you sold me, kindly sign yourself and wife, and have acknowledged and return by 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) registered letter to Charleston. By so doing you will oblige,

Yours truly,
A. Middelburg.

Plaintiff, being absent from home, did not receive this letter, and the deed inclosed, until July 10, 1905, when he and his wife signed, acknowledged, and returned it to defendant, who received it on July 12, 1905, and notwithstanding he had learned between the date of forwarding the new deed to plaintiff and the date of its return to him, if not before, that Dorr had, more than a year before, conveyed said lot No. 13 to Mrs. Petty, who had built a house upon it and was occupying the same as a residence, he at once, without notice to Dorr, placed the deed on record, and then notified Dorr and demanded of him repayment of one sixth of the purchase money, which plaintiff refused, but offered to return to defendant his money and notes on a reconveyance of the lots. Defendant, declining this proposition, brought suit against Dorr to recover the value of lot No. 13. Whereupon plaintiff filed his bill in the circuit court against defendant to enjoin the prosecution of said action at law, and seeking in the alternative, either to have his deed set aside and annulled so far as it relates to said lot No. 13, or, if the defendant should prefer, that it be wholly set aside, for general relief.

The grounds for the relief alleged are substantially these: That before and at the time of making the original deed, he met defendant at Webster Springs, who inquired if he did not own some lots in Charleston, and he answering that he did, defendant inquired how many, and that he answered that he did not remember, that he had sold one lot to the city of Charleston and another to O. A. Pelly; that he did not know the location of the lots except in a general way; that he finally found his tax receipts for taxes paid upon the lots owned by him for the year 1904, which covered said lot No. 13, but that he explained to the defendant that he did not know whether or not he owned all the lots covered by the tax receipts, but that defendant appeared to be well acquainted with the property, and knew what lots plaintiff owned, and proposed to pay him a price which he declined, but finally agreed to sell defendant all the lots he owned at the price agreed,—$2,200; that he executed and delivered the deed to defendant for the lots which he supposed he owned, with the understanding and agreement that defendant should, upon his return to Charleston, see W. E. R. Byrne, plaintiff's attorney and agent, examine the records, and ascertain just what lots plaintiff did own, and if the deed executed was correct and included only the lots which plaintiff owned, and was otherwise satisfactory, the same should be considered as delivered, and might be put to record; but if such investigation should show that the deed included more or less property than plaintiff owned, or was otherwise unsatisfactory, defendant should have a new deed prepared according to the facts found to exist, conveying just what property plaintiff did own, and sent to plaintiff to be executed; that it was further agreed that if, upon such investigation, it should be found that plaintiff did not own as many lots as was supposed, or, if what he did own were not desirably located, on being so advised by defendant, plaintiff should refund to defendant the money paid and surrender to him his notes, and that the deed or contract should be declared at an end; that on receiving from defendant the deed prepared by his attorneys in lieu of the original deed, and believing that the same had been prepared in accordance with said contract, and after consulting with said Byrne, so as to convey all the lots owned by plaintiff, and no more, he executed, acknowledged, and returned it to defendant. It is furthermore charged in the bill that, without consulting said Byrne, and after having ascertained from the record that plaintiff had previously conveyed and did not then own said lot No 13, and with intent to wrong, cheat, and defraud him, defendant caused said deed to be prepared, forwarded, and executed by plaintiff and returned to him for recordation, and that plaintiff was thereby induced by mistake on his part and fraud on the part of defendant to execute and deliver said deed including said lot No. 13; that immediately on learning of the mistake on his part and fraud of defendant, plaintiff offered to refund defendant his money and return to him his notes, and requested a reconveyance of said lots.

The defendant demurred to plaintiff's bill, which was overruled, and also answered, putting in issue all the material allegations of the bill, and upon final hearing, October 12, 1907, upon bill, answer, and depositions taken, the court below pronounced the decree appealed from, dissolving the injunction and dismissing the bill.

Briefly, the grounds for relief relied on by plaintiff are: First, that the delivery of his original deed to defendant was conditional, and as an escrow, not to be effective unless, upon consulting with Byrne and the examination of the title, everything should be found satisfactory; second, that by failing to comply with the condition on which said deed was delivered, and by promising plaintiff to prepare the second deed, as alleged, defendant had perpetrated a fraud on him, entitling him to the relief prayed for.

On the first proposition, plaintiff and defendant, the only witnesses to the transaction, in their evidence, are in direct conflict, defendant swearing positively that the only contract or memorandum had with plaintiff, outside of the deed itself, is contained in said two memorandums. But what could it avail plaintiff if we should assume the fact to be as alleged and proven by him? He admits that he actually made and delivered the deed to defendant, though upon condition, and not to become effective until conditions fulfilled. The question is thus presented: Can a deed for land, absolute on its face, be delivered by grantor to grantee as an escrow or upon a parol condition? The general rule, founded on the ancient common-law definition of an escrow, is that it cannot be so delivered; that such a condition is void, and that the title passes absolutely to the grantee. 16 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 571; Miller v. Fletcher, 27 Gratt. 403, 405, 21 Am. Rep. 356; Hicks v. Goode, 12 Leigh, 479, 490, 37 Am. Dec. 677; Lyttle v. Cozad, 21 W. Va. 183, 200, 201; Whitney v. Dewey, 10 Idaho, 633, 69 L.R.A. 572, 581, 80 Pac. 1117; 16 Am. Dig. Century ed. 3124, cols. 153-155, and many cases there cited; 1 Devlin, Deeds, 3314. In 16 Am. Dig. supra, our own case of Newlin v. Beard, 6 W. Va. 110, is cited for the contrary doctrine; and in Lyttle v. Cozad, supra, Judge Green, at page 201, referring to the views of Judge Staples, as expressed in Miller v. Fletcher, supra, says: "But, nevertheless, these views cannot, perhaps, be easily reconciled, if at all, with the decisions in Stuart v. Livesay, 4 W. Va. 45, and Newlin v. Beard, supra." The cases cited, and, indeed, all the cases in which the question is presented, draw the distinction more or less clearly, between a delivery in escrow or a conditional delivery to the grantee, and cases where the grantee has in some way obtained manual possession of the deed, but there has been no intentional delivery of the deed for any purpose; for, as some of our cases hold, delivery is always a question of intention of the parties, and if there has been no intention to deliver, if the minds of the parties have never met on the subject of delivery, there is no delivery, no intention to pass the title on any terms or conditions, hence no contract, no deed. Adams v. Baker, 50 W. Va. 249, 40 S. E. 356, citing Delaplain v. Grubb, 44 W. Va. 612, 67 Am. St. Rep. 788, 30 S. E. 201; Glade Coal Min. Co. v. Harris (W. Va.) 63 S. E. 873. "But where it is the intention of the parties for the title to pass upon any contingency or in any event from the grantor to the grantee, and the deed is delivered to the grantee, absolute on its face, then the vesting of title becomes a question of law, and must date from the delivery; and, since the grantee cannot act as the agent of both himself and the grantor for the purpose of a second delivery, title must necessarily have passed upon the original delivery." Whitney v. Dewey, supra. The Idaho court says in the same connection: "This rule is very clearly stated by the New York court in Braman v. Bingham, 26 N. Y. 492, where it was said: 'The reason given for the rule excluding parol evidence of a conditional delivery to the grantee applies to all cases where the delivery is designed to give effect to the deed in any event, without the further act of the grantor.'" We do not regard Stuart v. Livesay and Newlin v. Beard, supra, as opposed to the general rule laid down in these authorities, any more than Miller v. Fletcher and other Virginia cases cited therein may be regarded in conflict therewith, for in neither of these cases was a deed for land, delivered to a grantee, in any way involved. In the first two cases the actions were upon bonds conditioned for the payment of money, and pleas by defendants of non est factum. This was also the character of the action in Miller v. Fletcher. In the latter case, however, Judge Staples, in the syllabus, does state the rule broadly, as follows: "A deed, perfect on its face, cannot be delivered as an escrow to the grantee or obligee, upon a condition upon which it is said to be a valid deed. In all such cases the condition is void, and the deed is at once operative;" and "Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a deed, perfect on its face, was delivered to the grantee on a condition." In Nash v. Fugate, 32 Gratt. 595, 605, 34 Am. Rep. 780, twice before the Virginia court of appeals, and reported the first time in 24 Gratt. 202, 18 Am. Rep. 640, the doctrine of Miller v. Fletcher was relied on, but Judge Staples, who also wrote the opinion in the latter case, says: "Counsel insist that there is no substantial distinction between a delivery directly to the obligee by all the parties signing the paper, and a delivery by part of them to the principal obligor, and by the latter to the obligee. In either case the delivery is absolute and the condition void. A moment's reflection will, however, show there is a wide distinction between the two cases. A deed cannot be delivered as an escrow to the party on whose behalf it is made; no matter what may be the form of the words used, the delivery is absolute, and the deed takes effect immediately. An escrow, on the other hand, ex vi termini, is a deed delivered to some third person, a stranger, to be by him delivered to the grantee, upon the performance of some condition. When the books speak of the delivery to a stranger as an essential to an escrow, it is in contradistinction to a delivery to the party in whose behalf the deed is made." As in Miller v. Fletcher, the instrument involved in Nash v. Fugate was a bond for the payment of money, not a deed for land. The precise points presented by two pleas and instructions to the jury based thereon and decided were, first, that a bond containing a number of scrolls for signing below the names of sureties who signed it, but in other respects complete and perfect on its face, and signed and delivered by the sureties to the principal obligor on condition that he should obtain additional sureties to execute it before delivery to the obligee, but delivered by him without having complied with the condition, was binding on the sureties, unless the obligee had notice of the unfulfilled condition, the additional scrolls not being sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the authority to deliver the bond; and, second, that a bond so signed by principal and sureties may be avoided by parol proof, clear and satisfactory, that the obligee had notice at the time he received the bond from the principal of the condition on which the bond had been delivered to the principal. The distinction here sought to be maintained is the distinction between a deed delivered as an escrow to a party to the deed, and one that is delivered to a stranger. As observed by Judge Staples in Miller v. Fletcher, Judge Cabell, in Hicks v. Goode, supra, 12 Leigh, at page 490, 37 Am. Dec. 677, says: "I am not disposed to controvert the distinction between a deed delivered as an escrow to the party to the deed, and one that is delivered to a stranger. While it is universally conceded that where a deed is sealed and delivered to a stranger, as an escrow, until certain conditions are performed, and then to be delivered to him to whom the deed is made, to take effect as the deed of him who sealed it, such deed, even although the other party get it into his possession, is as inoperative, until the conditions are performed, as if it had never been delivered at all; yet it seems to be settled, also, that if a deed be sealed and delivered to the party himself to whom it is made, as an escrow, but to become the deed of him who sealed it on certain conditions, in such case, let the form of the words be what it may, the delivery is absolute, and the deed shall take effect presently as his deed, and the party is not bound to perform the conditions." And after referring to the authorities and the reasons given by them for this doctrine, Judge Cabell further says: "As already observed, I shall not controvert the propriety of this distinction. But I must say that the reasoning on which it is founded is not only very technical, but it is unsatisfactory to my mind; for it is not every tradition, or passing of a deed from the hands of one to the hands of another, that will constitute a legal delivery of it as a deed. Something, at least, is due to the intention with which the tradition is made, and such intention, on such an occasion, is generally gathered from our words rather than from our actions. Therefore I am not disposed to carry the doctrine farther than it has already been carried by the adjudged cases."

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Humphreys v. Richmond & M. R. Co. 88 Va. 431, 13 S. E. 985, 992, 993, the instrument involved was a contract for a right of way, made, executed, and delivered to the president of the railroad company, on condition that it should not be used unless the withholding of it would defeat the building of the road, or the board of directors of the road should make compensation for the right of way. But, in disregard of the condition of delivery, after the road was completed, though there had been no necessity for using the contract, and although no compensation had been made by the directors, the president turned the contract over to the right-of-way agent of the road, who had knowledge of the conditions on which it was delivered to the president, and it was held "that the contract was void, and that the owner might recover the damages for his land." In this case it is to be observed that the delivery of the deed was not directly to the company, but to the president, in escrow, and the agent of both parties. The Virginia court; in this case, among other cases, cites our case of Newlin v. Beard, supra, for the proposition that the knowledge of the right-of-way agent must be attributed to the company of which he was agent. After carefully considering all these authorities, I confess that I am left in some confusion as to which is the true doctrine on the subject; but I think it may safely be deduced from them that, in the case of a deed for land, absolute and complete on its face, if it be made, executed and delivered by the grantor to the grantee, to take effect upon any condition, the condition is void and the deed becomes absolute, and the title passes immediately on the delivery thereof, and the condition cannot be shown by parol evidence so as to defeat the deed. It may be well to observe, also, that the theory on which parol evidence is often admitted to defeat a deed or bond delivered as an escrow, or on condition, is not that it is competent thereby to vary or contradict the terms of a valid instrument, but to show that in fact there has been no delivery, that the minds of the parties have never met on the fact of delivery, so as to create a valid and binding contract. Nash v. Fugate, supra, 32 Gratt. 608, 34 Am. Rep. 780; Ware v. Allen, 128 U. S. 597, 32 L. ed. 565, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174. We have extended the consideration of this subject further, perhaps, than has been necessary or profitable, in view of the real question involved, and we will pursue it no further.

The second and only other question calling for decision is, Did defendant fraudulently obtain execution of either of said deeds, as alleged, or was there such mistake in the property intended to be conveyed as to render the deed void in whole or in part, at the election of the grantor? So far as the question of the conditional delivery of the deeds, or either of them, is concerned, affirmed by plaintiff and denied by defendant, may be regarded as an element entering into this question, the decree of the court below must be regarded as a finding on conflicting evidence, in favor of defendant, which, on well-recognized rules of practice, we cannot disturb. The same thing is true as to the question of fraud raised by the pleadings and proofs. This question of fraud as presented is one of fact, and not of law, which the decree appealed from has settled in favor of defendant on conflicting evidence, and we cannot disturb this finding.

But may the plaintiff rescind because of his mistake in attempting to convey lot No. 13, previously granted, and to which he had at the time no title? There can be no doubt but that plaintiff intended to sell and defendant intended to buy this lot along with the other lots conveyed. No question of identity of the subject-matter of the contract, therefore, is involved. We have cases holding that where there has been a mutual mistake as to the subject-matter of the contract, and the deed does not convey the property which the seller intended to sell and pointed out to the buyer, and which the buyer intended to buy, a court of equity, at the suit of either party, may rescind the contract. Baxter v. Tanner, 35 W. Va. 60, 12 S. E. 1094; Pratt v. Bowman, 37 W. Va. 715, 17 S. E. 210; Silliman v. Gillespie, 48 W. Va. 374, 37 S. E. 669; and Fearon Lumber & Veneer Co. v. Wilson, 51 W. Va. 30, 41 S. E. 137. See also Thompson v. Jackson, 3 Rand. (Va.) 504, 15 Am. Dec. 721; Leas v. Eidson, 9 Gratt. 278; Glassell v. Thomas, 3 Leigh, 128; 1 Sugden, Vend. & P. 378, and cases cited in note (f). But the exact question we have for decision here is, Will a court of equity, at the suit of the vendor, set aside or rescind in its entirety an executed contract of sale of lots simply because it turns out that he had not title to one of the lots sold and purchased, no question of identity of the subject-matter of the contract being involved? The authorities we think clearly hold that where the subject-matter of the contract and the consideration are single, the vendee may rescind the contract, for partial rescission of an entire contract cannot be had. 1 Page, Contr. § 138; Hearne v. New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. 20 Wall. 491, 22 L. ed. 397; Dunsmore v. Lyle, 87 Va. 391, 12 S. E. 610. And the decisions seem equally clear that where there has been a sale of several parcels of land, and the vendor has title to only a part, the vendee is entitled to have a conveyance of that part if he will pay the price therefor and accept it in full satisfaction of that part. White v. Dobson, 17 Gratt. 262; Dunsmore v. Lyle, supra; Van Eps v. Schenectady, 12 Johns. 436, 7 Am. Dec. 330. In the last case, where several lots were sold and purchased for separate considerations, it was held that failure of title to one of the lots constituted no defense to a suit for the purchase money due for the lots to which the vendee got good title. And 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 669, says: "On the sale of separate lots, however, the failure of title to some of the lots is no ground for rescinding the sale of the others." Citing Van Eps v. Schenectady, supra; Stoddard v. Smith, 5 Binn. 355. The general rule is that "when the contract is entire, it will not be rescinded in part and affirmed as to the rest, but it must be rescinded in toto. But where it is severable, one part alone may be rescinded and the remainder affirmed." 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 675, and notes 8 and 9, and cases cited, including our case of Worthington v. Collins, 39 W. Va. 406, 19 S. E. 527; Hearne v. New England Mut. M. Ins. Co. 20 Wall. 488, 491, 22 L. ed. 395, 397. We have here, then, a simple case of failure of title to one of the lots conveyed, and where the vendee has elected to take those to which the vendor had good title, and is suing to recover back the money paid, or an equitable proportion thereof to cover the value of the lot to which plaintiff had no title. This, we think, he has the right to do. Butcher v. Peterson, 26 W. Va. 452, 53 Am. Rep. 89. We therefore affirm the decree below.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

TUSKEGEE LAND & SECURITY COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

BIRMINGHAM REALTY COMPANY.

(— Ala. —, 49 So. 378.)

Covenant — breach — railroad in street.

1. No breach of covenant of seisin or right to convey is shown by the existence of a railroad in the abutting street, where the deed conveys only to the edge of the street.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — encumbrance.

2. The existence of a railroad in a street, damages for the construction of which to the property conveyed have been released by the grantor, is a breach of covenant against encumbrances in a grant of property abutting on the street, although the deed purports to convey only to the line of the street.

(April 8, 1909.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the City Court of Birmingham in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of covenants in a deed to certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. W. C. Ward, for appellant:

The abutting owner has in the street easements of access, light, and air, which are property rights as inviolable as the property in the lots themselves, on which recovery may be had of the railroad.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 712; Adams v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 39 Minn. 286, 1 L.R.A. 493, 12 Am. St. Rep. 644, 39 N. W. 629; Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Witherow, 82 Ala. 190, 3 So. 23; Sheffield & T. Street R. Co. v. Moore, 83 Ala. 294, 3 So. 68; New & Old Decatur Belt & Terminal R. Co. v. Karcher, 112 Ala. 676, 21 So. 825.

The fact that defendant, before the execution of its deed of conveyance to plaintiff, had consented in writing that the railway company might construct tracks along Avenue A, and did release the railway from all damages, etc., constituted a breach of the covenant against encumbrance.

11 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1116, note 45; Copeland v. McAdory, 100 Ala. 553, 13 So. 645; Moore v. Johnston, 108 Ala. 326, 18 So. 825; 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 123, note 1; Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 8 Dana, 289, 33 Am. Dec. 497; Flynn v. White Breast Coal Co. 72 Iowa, 738, 32 N. W. 471.

Plaintiff could not recover from the railway, as one claiming title under one who is estopped is also bound by the estoppel, unless it is fraudulent.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 188; McCravey v. Remson, 19 Ala. 430, 54 Am. Dec. 194; Pool v. Harrison, 18 Ala. 514.

Note. — The above decision seems to be one of first impression upon the question whether the right of a public-service corporation to use a street is an encumbrance upon abutting property, and therefore a breach of covenants in a deed conveying such property, as an extensive search has failed to disclose any other case in which that question was considered.

When a railroad occupies a right of way by its tracks, cars, and trains, and operates them over the track, that is exclusive possession, and constitutes eviction of all others.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 117, 123; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 680; Moore v. Vail, 17 Ill. 185; Tennessee & C. R. Co. v. East Alabama R. Co. 75 Ala. 516, 51 Am. Rep. 475; Electric Lighting Co. v. Mobile & S. H. R. Co. 109 Ala. 193, 55 Am. St. Rep. 927, 19 So. 721; Purifoy v. Lamar, 112 Ala. 132, 20 So. 975; Farley v. Bay Shell Road Co. 125 Ala. 196, 27 So. 770; 11 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 128, note 92.

Mr. O. S. Welch also for appellant.

Messrs. London & Fitts, for appellee:

The owner of the lot at the time of the construction of a railroad in front of it is the only one who can maintain a suit to recover damages for the additional servitude imposed upon the highway.

Evans v. Savannah & W. R. Co. 90 Ala. 54, 7 So. 758; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hill, 115 Ala. 334, 22 So. 163; Huntsville v. Ewing, 116 Ala. 576, 22 So. 984.

No conveyance of any interest in the street could impair the defendant's right to grant and convey to the plaintiff a fee-simple title to the land abutting on the street.

Demopolis v. Webb, 87 Ala. 659, 6 So. 408; Chambers v. Talladega Real Estate & L. Asso. 126 Ala. 296, 28 So. 636.

Mayfield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee, on the 1st day of December, 1902, sold and conveyed to appellant three certain lots in the city of Birmingham, Alabama. The deed contains covenants as to seisin, good right to convey, and against encumbrances, except a certain mortgage deed named, and contains a warrant of title against the claims of all persons, etc. The three lots were described as a whole, and not separately, and, as described, formed a parallelogram, the corresponding sides of which were, respectively, 100 feet and 140 feet. The northern boundary of the lots was described as the southern boundary of Avenue A, the eastern boundary as the western boundary line of Seventeenth street of such city, the southern boundary as the northern margin line of a "20-foot alley," and the western boundary described as a straight line 140 feet long, and parallel with the eastern boundary and Seventeenth street. It will be observed that this property abuts Avenue A on the north, Seventeenth street on the east, and an alley on the south, but extends no farther than the southern margin of Avenue A, the western margin of Seventeenth street, nor the northern margin of the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) alley,—thus rebutting what might otherwise be a presumption that the deed passed the fee, subject to the public easement of right of way, to the center of the avenue, street, and alley, which were named as three of the boundaries of the property. While the avenue, street, and alley constitute three of the four boundaries, there is no presumption in this case, because of these recitals, that it was contemplated or intended to pass title to any part of the soil of such thoroughfares.

It also appears that on the 10th day of June, 1902, six months and nine days prior to the conveyance by appellee to appellant, above referred to, the appellee, for a valuable consideration, executed and delivered a contract to the Birmingham & Atlanta Air Line Railway, its successors and assigns, the right to lay railway tracks along Avenue A, in front of the lots described in appellee's deed to appellant, and to operate cars and trains thereon, and released the railway from all damages to said lots by reason of the laying of said tracks and operation of said railway. On the 30th day of April, 1902, 7 months and 1 day before appellee conveyed to appellant, and 1 year, 1 month, and 11 days before appellee conveyed or attempted to convey to the railway company the right to build its tracks on Avenue A, and released it from damages, on that account, for injury to the property in question, the city authorized the railway company to build, construct, and operate a steam and commercial railroad along said Avenue A, in front of this property; and it is alleged that the said railway did, on the 10th day of June, 1902, take possession of said avenue, in front of said property, and construct a double-track railroad along said avenue, in front of the property in question, one of which tracks is between the center of said avenue and plaintiff's property. The width of this avenue does not appear. The appellant, grantee, sues upon the covenants and warranties of appellee's deed to him.

The complaint, as last amended, contains five counts. The first is as for breach of covenant of seisin. The second is for breach of right to convey, in that a part of the property was in Avenue A, a public thoroughfare of the city of Birmingham. The third, fourth, and fifth counts as for breach of covenant against encumbrances. The defendant demurred to each count, separately, as originally filed and as subsequently amended. The court sustained the demurrer in each instance. The plaintiff then declined to plead further, and suffered a final judgment, from which he appeals, assigning as error the various rulings of the court in sustaining defendant's demurrer.

The trial court was clearly correct in sustaining the demurrers to counts 1 and 2, which relied on breach of covenants of seisin and good right to convey, in that the counts do not show either a breach as to seisin or as to good right to convey; but they affirmatively show that there was no attempt to convey any part of the avenues, and in no wise show or attempt to show the property conveyed was not owned in fee by appellee, nor that it had not a good right to grant the whole of the land conveyed or attempted to be conveyed. But we are constrained to hold that counts 3, 4, and 5, which sought to recover as for breach of covenants and warranties against encumbrances, are each good, and were not subject to appellee's demurrer. The amendments go only to the extent, and not to the right, of recovery. While, as stated above, there was no attempt by the appellee to convey to appellant any part of the avenues, and herein any prior conveyance by appellee to the railroad company of any part of the avenues would be no breach of the covenants of seisin, fee, or right to convey, yet it is alleged that a part of the conveyance of appellee to the railroad company was a release of the company from any damages to this property, subsequently conveyed to appellant, by reason of the construction or operation of their railroad along the avenue in front of appellant's property. While this was not a conveyance of any part of appellant's property, nor a conveyance or grant of any right of way over or across any part thereof, it was, however, an encumbrance thereon, which might, and which is alleged did, damage plaintiff and render his property less valuable than it would have been without such encumbrance.

It is claimed by counsel for appellee that the alleged grant, conveyance, covenant, or permit, as it is variously alleged that the appellee made or extended to the railroad company, was void, and therefore it could not be a breach of the covenants. True, this grant by appellee could not alone authorize the railroad company to construct or operate its road along a public thoroughfare of a municipal corporation,—such corporation, or the legislature, alone, could do that,—yet it is proper, and within the power of property owners along a public highway, street, or avenue, to convey to a railroad company the right to construct and operate its roads along or over such highways, and for a consideration to release such railroad company, its successors or assigns, from all damages or liabilities as to the property abutting such highways, by so constructing or operating such roads; and such contracts would certainly be valid, so far as they relate to damages or injury to such abutting property by reason of constructing or operating the road on a public highway, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) no matter whether the title to the fee in the highway be in the abutting owners, in the city, or even in the railroad company itself, or in a stranger. This, of course, might be limited to those damages not the result of the negligence of the railroad company; but, as to this, it is unnecessary now to decide. If this grant or contract which the appellee is alleged to have made to or with the railroad company to build and operate its railroad along Avenue A, in front of the property in question, and which, for a valuable consideration, released the railroad company for damages to the property on that account, constituted an "encumbrance" upon the property subsequently conveyed to appellant with covenants against encumbrances, then there was a breach, which was sufficiently alleged to constitute a cause of action. If this was not an encumbrance, then, of course, there was no breach or cause of action alleged.

We are of the opinion that, under the definitions and authorities, this constituted an encumbrance within the covenant of the deed. An "encumbrance" is defined as "any right to or interest in land, which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistently with the passing of the fee. Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 627, 629, 3 Am. Dec. 246 (citing 2 Greenl. Ev. 242)." This definition has been accepted and adopted by nearly all the courts, and all text writers, since it was announced. See cases collected in Words & Phrases, pp. 3519, 3520. It will be noticed that one of the elements of this definition is that the right or interest which constitutes the encumbrance shall be consistent with the passage of the fee. Mr. Rawle, in his valuable and comprehensive work on Covenants of Title, says that the word "encumbrance" has no technical meaning; that it is not one of the "terms of the law," and hence no definition of it will be found in the old books; that it has been defined within the last century. See 5th ed. § 75. It is also said to be a weight on the land which must lessen its value, and is also stated to be "any right existing in another to use the land, or whereby the use by the owner is restricted." Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 18 L.R.A. 543, 32 N. E. 976. Again, it is said to be "any claim which charges, burdens, obstructs, or impairs the use of the land, or prevents its transfer." Anonymous, 2 Abb. N. C. 56, 62.

An encumbrance, within the meaning of the law relating to covenants and warranties, does not depend for existence upon the extent or amount of the diminution in value, but extends to cases in which, by reason of the burden, claim, or right, the owner does not acquire complete dominion over the land which the grant apparently gives. Mackey v. Harmon, 34 Minn. 168, 24 N. W. 702; Demars v. Koehler, 62 N. J. L. 203, 72 Am. St. Rep. 642, 41 Atl. 720. An easement in or over the land or any part conveyed is undoubtedly an encumbrance. The right of a third party to use water from a brook running through the land, and easements as to light and air, have been held to be within the term. The filing of a map by the department of parks, under a statute which provided that, on the final opening of a street, no compensation should be allowed for any building erected thereon after the filing of the map, was held to be an encumbrance. Forster v. Scott, supra. The right of a city to open a street without paying damages for buildings erected in the bed thereof after the street was laid and platted was held to be an encumbrance. Evans v. Taylor, 177 Pa. 286, 69 L.R.A. 790, 35 Atl. 635. Water or gas rents past due, which are a charge upon the property, are encumbrances. Wood's Estate, 41 Phila. Leg. Int. 225; Re Gerry (D. C.) 112 Fed. 958. An encumbrance is held to exist upon property which is subject to easements for widening a street or for building a sewer. Blackie v. Hudson, 117 Mass. 181; Cadmus v. Fagan, 47 N. J. L. 549, 4 Atl. 323; Barth v. Ward, 63 App. Div. 193, 71 N. Y. Supp. 340; Warvelle, Vend. & P. 2d ed. 971 et seq. These same definitions and doctrines are announced, and these and many other cases cited, by the text writers on the subject. See 3 Sutherland, Damages, 3d ed. §§ 620-630; Rawle, Covenants, 5th ed. chap. 5, §§ 70-90.

A covenant against encumbrances, usually expressed in American conveyances as a separate and independent covenant, is a covenant in presenti, broken, if at all, when made, by the existence of the encumbrance, without regard to future or ultimate disturbance or damage, and does not run with the land; but, if coupled to the covenant for quiet enjoyment, as is usually the case in England, it is then a covenant in futuro, and runs with the land until a breach. Rawle, Covenants, § 70. In the case at bar it is in presenti.

It is conceded by the learned counsel for appellee, in his able brief in this case, that "the owner of lots abutting on a street or avenue in a city has an easement in such street or avenue, nor is it denied that the construction of any railroad, other than a street railroad, in such street or avenue, in front of the lots of the abutting owner, is an additional servitude, for which the owner of the lots is entitled to compensation; and it is further conceded that the existence of a public highway over land sold to another is a breach of a covenant against encumbrance, and gives a cause of action to the grantee, although he may have had knowledge of the highway." But it is contended by counsel that when a street, such as the one in question, becomes dedicated and accepted by the city, only an easement remains in the property owner or his vendee, and that thereafter conveyance by the abutting owner of any rights or title to the street, inconsistent with the rights of the public, is absolutely null and void, and is, therefore, not the subject of an encumbrance. In this we cannot agree with counsel to the full extent of his argument. It may be void as against the city, or as to a third party who owns the fee to the street. It might not, alone, authorize a railroad company to construct its road upon the street, though the grantor own the fee thereto; but, in connection with the authority from the city or the legislature, it will authorize the construction and operation of the railroad upon the street, and in that case it alone might prevent the present owner, the grantor, or his successors in interest, from recovering damages for injury to the property abutting upon the street by reason of constructing or operating the railroad. To this extent we hold that it is an encumbrance which will prevent the grantee, or his subsequent grantee, from recovering damages against the railroad company, its grantee or successor, for injuries or damages suffered as to the abutting property described in the encumbrance, consequent upon the construction or operation of the railroad in accordance with the grant.

It is true, as contended by counsel, that only the owner of the land at the time of the construction of the railroad in front of it can maintain a suit to recover damages for the additional servitude imposed upon the highway; but in the case at bar he (appellant here) cannot and never could maintain it, in this case, for the sole reason that his grantor, the former owner of the land, had permitted or induced the road to do the very thing of which he complains, and had thereby released or exempted it from any liability for injury to this property, by reason of constructing or operating the railroad upon this street which the property abuts. This is a charge upon this particular land described. It allowed the obstruction of ingress to and egress from this property by way of this avenue. It authorized the railroad company to envelop and cover this property with smoke, to throw upon it cinders and dust, and, by its proximity, to cause or make great noise (all such matters being necessarily or usually incident to the operation of steam commercial railroads, and frequently the occasion of great inconvenience and other results disagreeable to people residing near the tracks), to build main lines and side tracks upon the avenue, to fill these tracks with cars and trains, which would impede travel by other modes, and might thereby greatly inconvenience plaintiff in the proper use of his property, and might greatly diminish the value of his property, render it less salable and desirable; for all of which he would be without remedy in damages, because of the conveyance by his grantor to the railroad company.

Of course, it may be shown on the trial that the railroad, as constructed and operated, is of no detriment; that the property is not fitted for residence property or retail business, but only for wholesale stores, coal, cotton, iron, or other warehouses, yards, etc., which would render the railroad track at that place an advantage, rather than a detriment. This, however, would go only to the amount, and not to the right, of damages. Plaintiff might be entitled to recover nominal damages only, because no actual damages were or could be shown, if there was certainly shown a breach of the covenant, as alleged.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Dowdell, Ch. J., and Simpson and Denison, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied May 11, 1909.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

E. G. SUELL, Admr., etc., Appt.,
v.

FRED DERRICOTT et al.

(— Ala. —, 49 So. 895.)

Death — action — defenses — availability.

1. In an action for wrongful death under a statute authorizing the action when the intestate could have maintained an action for the same act if death had not ensued, all defenses are available to defendant which would have been available had the action been brought by the person injured.

Evidence — burden of proof — wrongful death.

2. In an action for wrongful death by intentionally killing plaintiff's intestate, where self-defense is pleaded, plaintiff must first establish his case by proper and sufficient proof, and defendant then has the burden of establishing his justification or excuse.

Death — defense — prevention of crime.

3. That the killing was in self-defense or 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to effect an arrest for felony is a good defense in an action for wrongful death under a statute giving the personal representative a cause of action when the intestate could have maintained an action for the same act had death not ensued.

Evidence — death — burglary.

4. Upon trial of an action for damages for wrongful death, where the defense is that the killing was in making an arrest for burglary, evidence is admissible that the building into which deceased was attempting to break contained a safe with money in it.

Trial — direction of verdict — evidence.

5. The court should not direct a verdict against an issue which there is evidence to support.

Appeal — misleading instructions.

6. The giving of abstract and misleading instructions is not necessarily reversible error.

Case Note. — Justifiable killing as a defense in an action for death intentionally inflicted.

The conclusion reached in the above case, that it is a good defense to a civil action for death intentionally inflicted, that the killing was justifiable, is supported by all the authorities. Morgan v. Barnhill, 55 C. C. A. 1, 118 Fed. 24; Rutherford v. Foster, 60 C. C. A. 129, 125 Fed. 187; Cobb v. Owen, 150 Ala. 410, 43 So. 826; Richards v. Burgin (Ala.) 49 So. 294; Brooks v. Haslam, 65 Cal. 421, 4 Pac. 399; Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75; McKinney v. Carmack, 119 Ga. 467, 46 S. E. 719; Forbes v. Snyder, 94 Ill. 374; Locher v. Kluga, 97 Ill. App. 518; Head v. Martin, 85 Ky. 480, 3 S. W. 622; McClurg v. Igleheart, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 913, 33 S. W. 80; Tucker v. State, 89 Md. 471, 46 L.R.A. 181, 43 Atl. 778, 44 Atl. 1004; White v. Maxcy, 64 Mo. 552; Morgan v. Durfee, 69 Mo. 469, 3 Am. Rep. 508; Nichols v. Winfrey, 79 Mo. 544, 90 Mo. 403, 2 S. W. 305; Vawter v. Hultz, 112 Mo. 633, 20 S. W. 689; Besenecker v. Sale, 8 Mo. App. 211; Pierce v. Myrick, 12 N. C. (Dev. L.) 345; Darling v. Williams, 35 Ohio St. 58; Marks v. Borum, 1 Baxt. 87, 2 Am. Rep. 764; Jenkins v. Hankins, 98 Tenn. 545, 41 S. W. 1028; March v. Walker, 48 Tex. 372; Wallace v. Stevens, 74 Tex. 559, 12 S. W. 283; Garcia v. Sanders, 90 Tex. 103, 37 S. W. 314; Croft v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 51 S. W. 1089; Gray v. Phillips (Tex. Civ. App.) 117 S. W. 870.

In most of these cases the point was assumed, the question discussed being whether the killing in the particular case was in fact justifiable; but that is a question which depends upon principles equally applicable to criminal prosecutions, and is not within the scope of this note.

As to liability of sureties on the bond of a peace officer for the death of a person due to the act or default of the principal or one of his deputies, see case note to Growharger v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 758.

Same — findings — evidence — disturbance.

7. The findings of a jury which there is evidence to support should not be disturbed on appeal unless they are so palpably wrong as to shock the conscience of the court.

(May 13, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Bibb County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover statutory damages for the intentional killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Logan, Vandegraaff, & Fuller for appellant.

Messrs. John T. Ellison, Daniel Collier, and Percy & Benners for appellees.

Mayfield, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is by the appellant, as administrator, against the defendants (appellees), brought under § 27 of the Code of 1896, known as the "homicide act," to recover damages for the wrongful death of his son, who is alleged to have been killed by the defendants by unlawfully and intentionally shooting him with a gun or a pistol.

While this court has passed upon a great number of appeals in cases brought under this statute, this is one of the few in which the court is called upon to review a case in which the wrongful death complained of was the result of the intentional killing with a deadly weapon, and which, if without justification, would be murder. While we are not wholly without precedent in this or other states and jurisdictions, the cases are far less numerous than those in which the death was the result of negligence, simple, gross, or wanton. This court has construed this statute to be punitive in its nature and purpose, and not compensatory, and to provide that the damages recoverable be distributed under the laws of distribution as other personal property of the deceased, and that they are not liable to the payment of debts of the deceased. Statutes like ours were clearly intended to correct what was deemed a defect of the common law, that the right of action based on a tort or injury to the person died with the person. Our statute, as it now exists, was evidently in a large degree modeled after the English act of Parliament known as "Lord Campbell's act," passed in the year 1846. It must be observed that the right of action is only given under this statute to the personal representative when the intestate could have maintained an action for the same act had it failed to produce death. A corollary of this is that, if the wrongful act complained of had not produced death, but only an injury, and the person injured could not have maintained an action, then the personal representative cannot maintain an action under the statute when death results. It would therefore seem to follow that all defenses available to the defendant if the action had been brought by the person injured when death did not result are available to the defendant in an action brought by the administrator of the person injured for the wrongful death; that the burden of proof and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence would be the same in both cases.

It is too well settled in this state to need citation of authority that contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is available as a defense where the injury is the result of simple negligence, and that it is not available as a defense when the injury is the result of wanton negligence or wilful injury. A case decided by this court, something like the one in question, is that of King v. Henkie, 80 Ala. 505, 60 Am. Rep. 119, in which the court, through Somerville, J., decided that the action could not be maintained under the statute against a saloon keeper who sells or gives intoxicating liquors to a man of known intemperate habits who is helplessly drunk at the time, though the drinking of the intoxicant caused his death almost immediately. The reason assigned by the court was that, if death had not resulted, the person drinking could not have maintained an action for the wrongful act on the part of the defendant complained of, and that death and the injury were the result of drinking the intoxicant, and not the result of the sale or delivery to the person intoxicated. In fact, the court in that case held that the plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence which resulted in the injury. In this the court was probably in error (though it is not necessary to be decided, and we do not decide the point). The wrongful act there complained of was a wilful and intentional one, and the contributory negligence, if it existed, would have been no defense. We only cite or refer to this case on the proposition that the action can only be maintained by the administrator when the action could have been maintained by his intestate if death had not resulted. We have been unable to find any case, in this or any other court, in which the facts constituting the killing were similar to the facts in this case. While some of the defenses interposed in this case have been interposed in others, we have found no case in which all the defenses of this were so interposed.

For a clear understanding of the legal questions involved in this appeal, it may be well to state the substance of the evidence. While the evidence is not wholly undisputed, and different inferences therefrom might be drawn, the substance of the evidence showed, almost without conflict, that, on the night of the killing, the intestate and one Ed Riley had either broken into, or were attempting to break into, a storehouse, at Hargrove, Alabama, containing goods, wares, merchandise, etc., which store belonged to the Cahaba Southern Mining Company, a corporation. The defendant Derricott was superintendent of the company, and had charge of the building referred to. The other defendant, Franklin, was the agent of the Southern Railway Company at the same place. Hargrove was a mining camp. The store referred to was a commissary. On the night of intestate's death, the defendant Franklin was awakened by his wife, about 12 or 1 o'clock, and told by her that she heard a noise like someone breaking into the store. Franklin got up, procured a pistol, went around to the commissary, and saw two men, as he said, trying to break into the store. He fired his pistol twice into the air to frighten them away, but they did not leave. He then went to Derricott's house and told him of the circumstances. Derricott dressed and went with him to the store, as some of the evidence tended to show, with the intention of capturing or arresting the men. They carried a lantern, and, turning the corner, in sight of the store, they saw a man standing near the wall of the store, with an object in his hand, said by the witnesses to look like a gun as best they could see. They also heard sounds, as they approached the store, like the ripping off of planks. As they so turned the corner of the store and saw the man, they called to him to stop. The man turned, bringing the object in his hand (said by them to resemble a gun) to point in the direction of the defendants, whereupon both of them fired, and the man fell dead. The deceased, on examination, proved to be plaintiff's intestate. It was soon perceived that another man was under the store, who, on being called to and assured that no harm would be done him, came out, proving to be Ed Riley. Riley was examined on the trial in behalf of the plaintiff. The substance of Riley's testimony was that he and the deceased had been drinking heavily, that they went to the store with an iron bar, and that deceased was breaking into the store, or had been attempting to break into it, with the iron bar; that when Franklin fired the first two shots they ran under the store, and that Suell only came out immediately before he was shot. It appeared that planks had been pulled off the store, and that through the cellar door a hole had been broken, as large as a man's head, and (inferentially, at least) that this was done with the iron bar Suell had in his hand at the time he was shot,—the object which, as they say, defendants thought to be a gun. Neither of the defendants recognized Riley or deceased before the shooting or before the killing.

The complaint contained several counts charging, in different words, the unlawful and intentional killing of plaintiff's intestate, by shooting him with a gun or pistol. Demurrers to the complaint were interposed, but were finally withdrawn, and no question is raised as to the sufficiency of the complaint. To the complaint, the defendants filed the plea of the general issue, and a great number of special pleas of justification. Demurrers were sustained to all the pleas except 9, 10, 12, and 15, and were overruled as to these; consequently, these are the only pleas necessary to be considered on this appeal. Plea No. 9 in effect alleged that, at the time of the killing, defendants were in the act of arresting intestate for the commission of a felony, and that they used no more force than was necessary. Plea No. 10 is substantially the same, except in alleging that they had reasonable cause to believe that intestate had committed a felony, instead of that he had actually committed it. Plea No. 12 alleged that the killing was necessary in order to arrest intestate and in order to prevent great bodily harm being done to defendants, and that, at the time they killed intestate, he was attempting to commit burglary in the presence of the defendants; while plea No. 15 set out the facts fully, averring that at the time they shot intestate they honestly believed that the iron bar which he had in his hand was a gun or rifle, that the motion he made towards them was a hostile one, that it was necessary to shoot, and that they did so to protect themselves, under the honest or reasonable apprehension of great bodily harm at the hands of intestate. So the defense relied upon, and the issues upon which the cause was tried, were, in short, self-defense, and second, that the killing was necessary to arrest a felon and to prevent the commission of a felony.

The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendants, from which the plaintiff appeals, here assigning as error the rulings of the court overruling his demurrers to the 9th, 10th, 12th, and 15th pleas, several rulings upon the evidence which were adverse to plaintiff, the giving of certain charges requested in writing by the defendants, and the refusal of the court to give certain charges requested in writing by the plaintiff. We have been greatly aided, in our examination of the new and important questions involved on this appeal, by the full and able briefs filed by the learned counsel on the respective sides.

It has been held by high authority that the law of self-defense in civil actions brought for wrongful death is the same as in criminal prosecutions for homicide, except that the burden does not rest upon the plaintiff of proving the cause beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the plea of self-defense does not cause the burden to shift, though as to this last proposition we do not decide, because not necessary. See Tiffany, Death by Wrongful Act, § 64; Cobb v. Owen, 150 Ala. 410, 43 So. 826. In this case, as in all similar ones under this statute, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish his case, and, as a part of it, to show that the killing was wrongful. If plaintiff's own evidence should show that, although his intestate was killed, the act complained of was done in justifiable exercise of the right of self-defense, or that it was justifiable or necessary for any other reason, then, of course, he would not have proven his case. We also think the true rule to be that, in cases like the one at bar, where the death is caused by intentional shooting, the case should be tried in the same manner and governed by the same principles of law as if the intestate had not died of his injuries, and as if he were suing to recover damages for the wrongful act. We think the better rule to be that the burden of proof, in cases like this, is on the plaintiff, as in other civil cases, to first establish his case by proper and sufficient proof, and that, having done this, the burden of proof is then on the defendant to show justification or excuse, which he sets up in his special pleas. March v. Walker, 48 Tex. 377; Brooks v. Haslam, 65 Cal. 421, 4 Pac. 399; Darling v. Williams, 35 Ohio St. 58; Tucker v. State, 89 Md. 471, 46 L.R.A. 181, 43 Atl. 778, 44 Atl. 1004.

The first question of importance for us to determine is whether or not the special pleas to which demurrers were overruled presented a good defense. Homicides committed for the prevention of any forcible or atrocious crimes are justifiable by the law of nature, and also by the law of England as it stood so early as the time of Bracton, and as it was declared by statute (24 Hen. VIII, chap. 5; 4 Bl. Com. 213). If any person attempts robbery or murder of another, or attempts to break open a house in the nighttime (which extends also to an attempt to burn it), and is killed in such attempt, the slayer shall be acquitted and discharged. Blackstone, supra; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 115. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

These same questions have been frequently decided in this court relative to criminal trials of homicide. It was said by Chief Justice Dargan (in Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587), that "the law will justify the taking of life when it is done from necessity, to prevent the commission of a felony." A similar rule was declared, also, in the cases of Dill v. State, 25 Ala. 15; Noles v. State, 26 Ala. 31, 62 Am. Dec. 711; Simpson v. State, 59 Ala. 1, 31 Am. Rep. 1; and Storey v. State, 71 Ala. 329; and these same propositions and the same authorities were reaffirmed and quoted by Chief Justice Stone in the case of Bostic v. State, 94 Ala. 45, 10 So. 602, from which we have nearly literally quoted.

Somerville, J., in Storey's Case, 71 Ala. 336, in speaking of the rule that the defendant must decline or offer to decline the combat by retreat, if he can do so with safety, but who is justified in setting up self-defense, says: "Where, however, the assault is manifestly felonious in its purpose and forcible in its nature, as in murder, rape, robbery, burglary, and the like, as distinguished from secret felonies like mere larceny from the person or the picking of one's pocket, the party attacked is under no obligation to retreat. But he may, if necessary, stand his ground and kill his adversary." This is taken literally from 2 Bishop on Criminal Law, § 553. Mr. Bishop says that the general doctrine is that, however complete the right of self-defense may be, yet it is founded on necessity, and cannot extend beyond that foundation; in other words, it cannot be exercised in any case or to any degree which is not necessary. He also says that no man may lawfully deprive another of life merely because he prefers his own life to the other's. And, again, that no exact rule can be laid down to determine under what circumstances a man may stand upon his own rights, to the destruction of the life of him who comes to take them away. Where only an assault is intended, the right of perfect defense to the extent of taking life does not exist, yet he may repel force by force and give blow for blow; but where the attack is made with murderous intent, the person attacked is under no obligation to flee; he may stand his ground, and, if need be, kill his adversary. This has been many times decided by this court.

Mr. East has said that a man may repel force by force in defense of his person, habitation, or property, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony, such as murder, rape, robbery, arson, burglary, and the like, upon either. In this case he is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself against all danger; and if he kill him in so doing, it is called justifiable self-defense.

Mr. Bishop states the doctrine of self-defense as follows [1 Crim. Law, 7th ed. § 865]: "If the individual[person] assaulted, being himself without fault, reasonably apprehends death or great bodily harm to himself unless he kills the assailant, the killing is justifiable." In the rule of self-defense of one's person or of his property, there are exceptions to the general proposition, the same as in every department of knowledge; but these exceptions are intended to reach the same result that is aimed at by the rule, rather than to depart from the rule; consequently the exception should keep us within the meaning of the rule, rather than lead us from the rule.

As to the right to kill in making arrests or to prevent an escape, the rule may be stated as follows: "When, as a general proposition, one refuses to submit to arrest after he has been touched by the officer, or endeavors to break away after the arrest is effected, he may be lawfully killed, provided this extreme measure is necessary.

. . . In cases of felony, the killing is justifiable before an actual arrest is made, if in no other way the escaping felon can be taken. . . . In cases of felony, if the felon flee from justice . . . it is the duty of every man to use his best endeavors for preventing an escape; and if, in the pursuit, the felon be killed, where he cannot be otherwise overtaken, the homicide is justifiable . . . but if he may be taken in any case without such severity, it is at least manslaughter in him who kills him, and the jury ought to inquire whether it was done of necessity or not." [2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 7th ed. §§ 647, 648.] Justification, however, happening in cases of persons charged with misdemeanors or breaches of the peace, is subject to a different rule from that as to felony. Generally speaking, in misdemeanors, it will be murder to kill the party accused, when fleeing from arrest, though he cannot otherwise be taken; but, under some circumstances, it might be manslaughter, if it appeared that death was not intended.

There is another rule of law, well settled, applicable to homicides, and that is, that whatever one may do for himself he may do for another. That is to say, a guest in the house may defend the house, or the occupant may assemble his neighbors for its defense. There is also a rule of law that, in cases of self-defense, the party is not required to know the real fact, but he may act upon a reasonable and well-founded appearance and apprehension; and, whenever a man exercises the right of self-defense, he is understood to act on the facts as they reasonably appeared to him, or as they would appear to a reasonable man, similarly situated; and if, without fault or carelessness on his part, he is misled concerning the facts, and defends himself according to what he reasonably supposes the facts to be, he is justifiable, though in truth the facts as they were reasonably supposed did not exist, and in fact he had no occasion for the extreme measure. Mr. Wharton has stated the law applicable to this case as follows [Homicide, 3d ed. § 514]: A man may repel force by force in the defense of his person, habitation, or property against one or many who manifestly intend or endeavor, by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony on either. In such cases he is not obliged to retreat, but may pursue his adversary until he finds himself out of danger, and if, in the conflict between them, he happeneth to kill, such killing is justifiable. "The right of self-defense in [such] cases," says the author, "is founded on the law of nature, and is not, nor can be superseded by any law of society. Where a known felony is attempted upon the person, be it to rob or murder, the party assaulted may repel force by force, and even his servant attendant on him or any other person present may interpose for [the purpose of] preventing mischief, and, if death ensue, the party so interposing will be justified." [Old ed. § 532.] The author cites a number of cases,—one, where the landlord was awakened by his servant and told that she heard thieves breaking open the door, and the landlord, rising suddenly and running down the stairs with a drawn sword, came upon the deceased (another servant), who had secreted herself in the buttery, but was now observed by the wife of the landlord, who cried out, "Here they be that would undo us," and the landlord thereupon thrust his sword into the servant and killed her; and it was held to be misadventure. Another case he cites was where an English nobleman, being weary of life and willing to be rid of it by the hand of another, having first blamed his keeper or tenant for suffering his deer to be destroyed, commanded him to execute the law; then went into his own park at night as if with intent to steal the deer, and being questioned by the keeper, who knew him not, the nobleman refused to stand or answer, and was shot by the keeper; this, says Lord Hale, "was holden excusable homicide."

It will be observed that a distinction is made between felonies and misdemeanors, as to the amount of force that may be used to prevent the one or the other, or that may be employed to arrest persons, or to prevent the escape of persons who have committed the one or the other. It is not only the right of all persons to prevent felonies in certain cases, but at common law it was made the duty, and was made a misdemeanor or known as misprision, for any person seeing a felony attempted, not to prevent it by force if necessary, and one who failed to discharge such duty was guilty of the misdemeanor called misprision of felony. Carpenter v. State, 62 Ark. 286, 36 S. W. 906.

Mr. Bishop says that the doctrine of misprision may be stated as follows [1 Criminal Law, §§ 720, 721]: A man cannot be liable for a crime which another commits, unless his own will in some degree concurs in and contributes to it; but when such crime is a treason or felony, and he stands by while it is done, without using the means in his power to prevent it, though his will does not concur in it, or when he knows of such crime, though in his absence it is committed, and makes no disclosure of it to the authorities, nor does anything to bring the offender to justice, the law holds him guilty of a breach of that duty which every man owes to the community wherein he dwells and the government which protects him.

Lord Coke said: If any be present when a man is slain, and omit to apprehend the slayer, it is a misprision. Misprision of a felony is a criminal neglect either to prevent the felony being committed by another, or to bring to justice the person known to be guilty of the felony. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 507.

A man's house is his castle for purposes of defense only, and, as has been said by this court, it cannot be turned into an arsenal of offense. While one's house formerly meant his home, his dwelling, the rule has also been extended to one's place of business or his place of refuge; consequently a man's place of business must be regarded pro hac vice his dwelling. He has the same right to defend it against intrusion, and he is under no more necessity of retreating from the one than from the other; his duty to defend one is the same as the other. Jones v. State, 76 Ala. 8; Cary v. State, 76 Ala. 78; Lee v. State, 92 Ala. 15, 25 Am. St. Rep. 17, 9 So. 407.

By statute in this state a private person is authorized to arrest for any public offense committed in his presence, or where the felony has been committed, though not in his presence, by the person arrested, or where a felony has been committed, and he has reasonable cause to believe that the person arrested committed it; and he may make the arrest for a felony on any day and at any time. Code 1907, § 6273; Cary v. State, supra.

An arrest may be made under our law 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

without a warrant by an officer or by a private person in certain specified cases. It is the issue of the warrant without oath or affirmation that is forbidden by the Constitution, and not the arrest without a warrant. Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 41.

Under our statutes it is made the duty of every private citizen, when required by an officer, to assist him in making an arrest, and a refusal so to do is a misdemeanor. Code 1907, § 6271; Dougherty v. State, 106 Ala. 63, 17 So. 393; Watson v. State, 83 Ala. 60, 3 So. 441.

The rights and powers of a private citizen in making an arrest for an offense, and on the times and occasions provided for by the statute, are the same as those of an officer, and consequently, in making arrests in the cases, and on the times and occasions so provided by statute, he is entitled to the same justification and defense as the officer. It is the settled law of this state that life may be taken if necessary to prevent the commission of a felony, or if necessary to arrest a felon after it has been committed. Clements v. State, 50 Ala. 117; Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 41.

But an officer is not justified in taking the life of one charged only with a misdemeanor. Handley v. State, 96 Ala. 60, 38 Am. St. Rep. 81, 11 So. 322. Neither an officer nor a private citizen is ever authorized to use any more force than is necessary to effect the arrest.

As a general rule, at common law an arrest could not be made without a warrant, but if the felony or breach of the peace threatened or committed within the view of an officer authorized an arrest, it was his duty to arrest without warrant, or, if a felony had been committed, and there was probable cause to believe that the particular person was the offender, he could be arrested without a warrant; but the matter of arrest is now in this state largely the subject of statutory regulation, which, in some degree, is an affirmation of the rules at common law. Of course, an officer or a private citizen, under the statute, cannot justify an arrest upon the ground that he had reasonable cause to believe the person arrested had committed a felony, unless he has information of facts derived from credible sources, or from persons reasonably presumed to know them, which, if submitted to the judge or the magistrate having jurisdiction, would require the issue of a warrant of arrest. Cunningham v. Baker, 104 Ala. 171, 53 Am. St. Rep. 27, 16 So. 68.

Applying these principles of law above announced to the special pleas 9, 10, 12, and 15, to which demurrers were overruled, we cannot say that the trial court committed reversible error in overruling the plaintiff's Injunction — discharged servant — trespass.

7. Under such circumstances, there was no error in granting an injunction against the employee, who was alleged to be insolvent, continually trespassing, and causing damage of such a character as not to be capable of computation or of being satisfied by an ordinary suit at law.

Same — mandatory.

8. The essential nature of the interlocutory injunction granted being to restrain such a continuing trespass, it was not subject to objection as being mandatory in character, although it included a restraint against the servant from keeping his goods on the master's premises.

Appeal — harmless error — evidence — exclusion.

9. If there was any error at all in excluding from evidence an affidavit made by the master on the day after the discharge of the servant, for the purpose of causing a warrant to issue to dispossess the latter as a tenant by sufferance, a reversal will not be required where the making of such affidavit was proved by other evidence without objection or conflict, and no injury could have probably arisen therefrom, the injunction being nevertheless fully authorized.

(March 10, 1909.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Habersham County to review a judgment enjoining defendant from remaining on certain premises and from interfering with the plaintiffs' peaceful possession thereof. Affirmed.

Statement by Lumpkin, J.:

Mrs. Louisa P. Minis was the owner of a tract of land called the "Rockwood Place," where she had a summer home. On it was a residence, a gardener's house, servant's quarters, stables, a greenhouse, barn, and other improvements suitable for a well-furnished and convenient summer home. J. F. Minis, her husband, acted as her agent and representative in connection with the property. He employed Mackenzie under the following written agreement:

Mr. J. F. Minis agrees to employ John Mackenzie as his head gardener to take charge of his place at Clarkesville, Habersham county, Georgia. Mackenzie pays his way and that of his niece to New York, the passage-money to be refunded him on his arrival. Mr. Minis pays the railroad fare of Mackenzie and niece from New York to Clarkesville. The engagement is to be at least for three years if Mackenzie proves himself competent and satisfactory. Mr. J. F. Minis agrees to pay Mackenzie the first year £80 per year, the second year £100 per year, the third year £130 per year; to provide him a house near Mr. Minis's residence free, and fuel (wood) and vegetables free; also milk as long as the cows are in milk, Mackenzie looking out that all the cows are not dry at the same time; Mackenzie agreeing to look carefully after the cows, fruit trees, flowers, grapes, and greenhouses, and perform all duties incumbent on a first-class gardener and manager, to Mr. Minis's satisfaction, his niece to look after the milk and butter whenever Mr. [and] Mrs. Minis are absent.

[Signed] J. F. Minis.

[Signed] John Mackenzie.

London, June 26th, 1906.

Mackenzie went upon the place under this contract, and commenced work. In December, 1908, Minis gave to him the following written notice of discharge:

Habersham County, Georgia.

To John Mackenzie:

You are hereby notified that you are this day discharged from my employment; and you are directed to remove yourself, together with all your effects, from my premises and that of Mrs. L. P. Minis, the farm known as Rockwood Place, not later than 6 o'clock P. M. on the 8th day of December, 1908. This December, 1908.

[Signed] J. F. Minis, for Himself and as Agent for Mrs. L. P. Minis.

Mackenzie claimed that there was no right to discharge him on the part of Minis or his wife, and continued to live in the house on the land where he had been prior to the discharge, and to go upon the land. Mr. and Mrs. Minis filed an equitable petition, alleging the foregoing facts, and also, in substance, as follows: Mackenzie had not proved himself satisfactory, and had not performed the duties incumbent upon him under the agreement, to the satisfaction of Minis or of his wife. They had the right to discharge him, and had done so. He refused to leave the place, taking his belongings with him, and persisted in remaining on it, in walking over it, and in using it just as if he had a right to be there, insisting that he could not be discharged until three years after the date of the contract. His relations with them had become such that it was impossible to have anything further to do with him, or to have him on the place; and it was necessary for them to employ another gardener in order to provide for the crops, etc., for the coming year. They needed the gardener's house, and could not get another gardener as long as Mackenzie insisted upon remaining on the place and in possession of the house. There was a great deal of personal property on the place, in addition to the live stock; and the vegetables, flowers, fruit, garden, and the place generally, need attention. Mackenzie was no longer in their employment, and his presence made it impossible for them to enjoy their home or prepare it for their use in the summer time, or to secure a gardener. They were unwilling to leave their property in possession of Mackenzie or subject to his control. He was insolvent and unable to respond in damages, if he should be sued; and the damages would be irreparable, being of such special and peculiar character, that they could not be determined or compensated in money. Mackenzie was remaining on the property and using it without their consent and in defiance of their rights and demands. They had not violated the contract; but, if so, they were amply able to respond in damages. They prayed that Mackenzie, "his agents and representatives, be enjoined and restrained from remaining on the premises hereinbefore mentioned, and from keeping his property or effects thereon, and from using the same in any way, or walking over or on the same, and from doing anything in defiance or in violation of the rights of your petitioners as owners and possessors of said property." The defendant in his answer admitted that Minis was the agent of his wife, and that Mrs. Minis herself exercised some acts of control, that the place was improved as plaintiffs alleged, and that the contract was made as set out above. He denied the other allegations. By way of cross action he alleged that the plaintiffs were indebted to him in the sum of $462.56, on which were allowed credits for certain articles of personalty, such as shingles, blocks, old fence posts, old lumber, window sash, barbed wire, piping, and guttering, aggregating $16.15, and leaving a balance of $446.41, for which he prayed judgment. On the hearing the presiding judge granted an injunction providing that the defendant, "his servants, agents, and representatives, be and they are hereby restrained and enjoined from remaining on the premises mentioned in the petition, or any part thereof, and from going on the same and keeping their goods thereon, and from interfering with the possession or rights of plaintiffs as to said premises." The defendant excepted.

Messrs. Robert McMillan and H. H. Dean for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. J. C. Edwards, Adams & Adams, and A. L. Alexander for defendants in error.

Lumpkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

According to the contention of the defendants in error, in whose favor the presiding judge found in granting the interlocutory injunction, Minis, acting for himself and his wife, lawfully discharged Mackenzie, who was employed as a gardener and manager, and in connection with his employment was living on the land of Mrs. Minis; but the employee claimed that he could not be discharged, refused to leave the place, with his belongings, and persisted in walking over it and using it as if he had a right to be there. The plaintiffs invoked the aid of the court to prevent his continuing to do so. The written contract of employment provided that the engagement should be for at least three years "if Mackenzie proves himself competent and satisfactory," and that he should perform all duties incumbent on a first-class gardener and manager, "to Mr. Minis's satisfaction." Whether wisely or unwisely, he saw fit to make the "satisfaction" of Minis the test of the performance, not whether he discharged his duties properly or diligently as a matter of fact, or in such manner as to satisfy the judge or the jury.

1. Parties who labor under no disabilities may make contracts on their own terms, and if there is no fraud or mistake, and the terms are not illegal or contrary to public policy, they must abide the contract. That it may be unwise or disadvantageous to one party furnishes no reason for disregarding it. Suppose that a man who desired a watch should write to a dealer in New York that he had seen a picture of one in the jeweler's catalogue, but was unwilling to buy it on mere description or representation; that, unless he liked it or was satisfied with it on inspection, he would be unwilling to buy it, whether or not it was like the description, and regardless of whether it was in fact a good watch, or whether other people liked it or not; that he must be the judge of whether he was satisfied, and, if he was so, he would take it, otherwise not. If, on these terms, the dealer should ship the watch, and upon examination the proposed purchaser should not be satisfied with it and should refuse to take it, certainly the dealer could not recover against him on the ground that the watch was of good quality and workmanship, and he ought to have been satisfied. To a suit for such a purpose the conclusive answer would be that the seller contracted to make the satisfaction of the intended purchaser the test. If the thing ordered were a coat instead of a watch, with the same stipulations, would the case be different? The illustration hypothesizes a more elaborate agreement than that under consideration. But it will serve to show that there is nothing illegal or extraordinary in undertaking to do a thing or furnish an article the acceptance of which shall depend on the satisfaction of the other contracting party. Where the fancy, taste, sensibility, or judgment of the promisor is involved, there is practical unanimity that, if one agrees to accept and pay if he is satisfied with a thing, he cannot be compelled to do so on proof that other people are satisfied with it, or that he ought to be. Where the question is one of operative fitness or mechanical utility, there is not perfect unanimity of opinion on the subject; but the great weight of authority applies the same principle. 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 618, 623. In Tyler v. Ames, 6 Lans. 280, it was held that a contract to employ an agent for a year, if he "could fill the place satisfactorily" might be terminated by the employer, when, in his judgment, the agent failed to meet that requirement of the contract. In the opinion of Mullin, P. J., it was said: "If he [the employer] is required to prove facts and circumstances that would justify him in feeling dissatisfied with the manner plaintiff filled his office, it would be annulling this clause of the contract, as, without such a clause, he would have the right to dismiss the plaintiff if he did not properly perform his duties." In Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 291, 56 Am. Rep. 207, 2 Atl. 230, it was held that, where an agreement was to make and furnish an article to the satisfaction of a person for whom it was to be made, it was not a compliance with the contract to prove that he ought to be satisfied. In McCarren v. McNulty, 7 Gray, 139, it was said that "an action for work and labor in making a bookcase which the plaintiff has agreed in writing to construct for the defendants of a certain kind and dimensions, 'in a good, strong, and workmanlike manner, to the satisfaction of' one of the defendants, is not maintained by proof that . . . [the bookcase] was constructed according to the terms of the agreement, without also proving that it was satisfactory to or accepted by that defendant." See also Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136, 18 Am. Rep. 463; Zaleski v. Clark, 44 Conn. 218, 26 Am. Rep. 446; Hart v. Hart, 22 Barb. 606; Moore v. Robinson, 92 Ill. 491. In the case of Zaleski v. Clark, supra, the plaintiff on the second trial obtained a judgment, and it was affirmed in 45 Conn. 397. But the apparent inconsistency is explained by the fact that on the last hearing the question considered was whether the finding of facts on the first trial was res judicata on the second trial, and it was held that the grant of a new trial reopened the entire case for a rehearing on the evidence; there having been no separate finding of facts on the second trial. The presumption was that sufficient facts were shown to sustain the judgment. See also 21 Alb. L. J. 465; 22 Id. 20; Allen v. Mutual Compress Co. 101 Ala. 574, 14 So. 362; Gwynne v. Hitchner, 66 N. J. L. 97, 48 Atl. 571; John- son v. Bindseil, 15 Daly, 492, 8 N. Y. Supp. 485; Kendall v. West, 196 Ill. 221, 89 Am. St. Rep. 317, 63 N. E. 683; Tennant v. Fawcett, 94 Tex. 111, 58 S. W. 824; Rossiter v. Cooper, 23 Vt. 522; Crawford v. Mail & Exp. Pub. Co. 163 N. Y. 404, 57 N. E. 616; Harder v. Marion County, 27 Ind. 455; Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496, 54 N. W. 157; Singerly v. Thayer, 108 Pa. 291, 56 Am. Rep. 207, 2 Atl. 230; Church v. Shanklin, 17 L.R.A. 207, and note (95 Cal. 626, 30 Pac. 789).

2. The promisor whose satisfaction is thus made the test must act honestly and in good faith. His dissatisfaction must be real, not merely pretended. Thus, if a suit of clothes were agreed to be made to the satisfaction of the purchaser at a fixed price, if they were in fact satisfactory to him, he could not feign dissatisfaction in order to get out of the contract merely because another similar suit was offered to him at a less price. This would not be dissatisfaction; it would be fraud. Some courts have held that, if a test of a reasonable character is necessary to determine fitness, the person to be satisfied must make such test or allow it to be made. So, if an employer should agree to pay for the services of an employee at a given rate, if they were satisfactory to him, he should give the employee a trial. Some of the decisions which are apparently in conflict with the ruling above stated may be distinguished by reason of the particular facts involved in them. Some may be reconciled with the general rule by taking into consideration the element of good faith or mere pretense of dissatisfaction. A few are in direct conflict with it. 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 624. The rule is tacitly recognized in Baldwin Fertilizer Co. v. Cope, 110 Ga. 325, 35 S. E. 316.

3. Were it necessary for the master to have some reasonable ground for dissatisfaction, there are indications in the defendant's answer and affidavit that, while acting as manager and head gardener for the plaintiffs, he sold to himself and carried to his own place certain wire, guttering, piping, etc. He stated in his affidavit that these things were of no use to his employers, and were of use to him, and that Minis had authorized him to sell, and had ratified the sale of some like useless articles by accepting pay therefor, and he entered these things as a credit upon the amount which he claimed to be due him by the plaintiffs. It also appeared from his affidavit that he borrowed a few tools, such as a saw, a hammer, a square, a plane, etc., with which to do some repairing on a place which he himself had bought, and that Minis had sworn out criminal warrants against him, alleging larceny on his part, and a possessory warrant to recover the alleged stolen goods, but the trial of the latter had resulted in favor of the defendant. Whether these acts were criminal, or furnished a proper basis for a possessory warrant or not, an agent with authority to sell property for his principal is not generally authorized to buy it for himself without the assent of the principal; and whether the borrowing of an employer's tools for use on work of his own would authorize the action taken by the employer or not, these things might furnish a very reasonable ground for dissatisfaction on the part of one who by the contract was to be satisfied. Without intimating any opinion, therefore, as to the merits of the cases arising under the warrants, we hold that there was no error on the part of the presiding judge under the evidence as to this feature of the present case.

4-6. The next question which arises is whether the employee occupied the premises of the employer, or a portion of them, as a tenant, so that he could decline to relinquish possession or to stay off of the property, after being discharged. Where a servant occupies a dwelling house belonging to the master, free of rent, as incidental to and connected with the performance of his duties as such servant, if he quits the service of the master before the expiration of the term, or is discharged by the master, his right to the possession of the dwelling house ceases, and he must surrender it. In such cases, in the eye of the law, the master has never parted with possession of the premises, the servant's possession being regarded as that of the master. Hence the master may enter and use such reasonable force as may be necessary to expel the servant. It has been said that, "when a servant is discharged, the master's right in this respect does not depend upon the question whether the servant is rightfully or wrongfully discharged, but exists in the one case as well as in the other, the master incurring the peril of paying damages for a breach of the contract if the discharge is wrongful; but the right to expel the servant from the house exists whether he had good cause therefor or not." Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. §§ 155, pp. 304 et seq. It is possible for one to be a servant, and at the same time a tenant of his master. He may have a contract of employment, and also a contract to rent a dwelling or parcel of land. If so, his right to retain possession of the premises, or to require a proceeding to remove him as a tenant, depends on the contract involved. It has been said: "If the occupation is connected with the service, or if it is required, expressly or impliedly, by the employer, for the necessary or better performance of the service, then it is for his benefit, and he continues in possession.' The question is whether it is subservient and necessary to the service." Id. 308; Haywood v. Miller, 3 Hill, 90; People ex rel. Hubbard v. Annis, 45 Barb. 304; R. ex rel. Astley v. Spurrell, L. R. 1 Q. B. 74; R. v. Kelstern, 5 Maule & S. 136. "In such case a tenancy at will or at sufferance does not spring up immediately upon the termination of the service. To have that effect, the subsequent occupancy must be sufficiently long to warrant an inference of consent to a different holding." Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 221, 19 Am. Rep. 158. The termination of service there was by a discharge.

In the case before us Minis, with the knowledge, consent, and approbation of his wife, who owned the property, contracted with Mackenzie to employ the latter as head gardener to take charge of the place. The engagement was to be for at least three years "if Mackenzie proves himself competent and satisfactory," and also that he should "perform all duties incumbent on a first-class gardener and manager, to Minis's satisfaction." The employer agreed to pay him a certain stipulated amount per annum, to provide him free a house near the main residence on the land, and also fuel and vegetables. The employee was to look after the cows, fruit trees, flowers, grapes, and greenhouses. He was also to have milk as long as the cows were giving it, and his niece was to look after the milk and butter when he was absent. It is evident from the reading of the contract that the furnishing of the house upon the place to the manager and head gardener was an incident to the service, and for the purpose of aiding in its discharge, and was not a letting of any part of the property to him as a tenant of the owner. The occupancy of the house was directly connected with the service to be rendered, and for the better performance thereof. In law, therefore, the employer did not resign possession to the employee as to a tenant, but the possession of the employee was in effect that of the master. When the employee was discharged, it was his duty to resign possession and to leave the premises. He had no right to persist in remaining on the place, walking over it, and using it as if he had not been discharged. Nor could he do this because he insisted that he could not legally be discharged for three years from the date of the contract. If in any case an action at law for a breach of contract, brought by a discharged employee against his employer, would not furnish a sufficient remedy if the discharge were wrongful, this is not such a case. There was no contention that the plaintiffs were not solvent and able to respond in damages if any should be recovered against them, and there was nothing to show that irreparable damages would accrue to him. The employee was not invoking the aid of the court, but seeking to compel the continuance of the contract of employment, or at least the retention of some of its benefits, after his discharge, by merely insisting on remaining on the place, and dealing with the property as if he had not been discharged.

7. It was contended that an application for injunction was not the proper remedy. In 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 36, it is said: "Where a servant has been discharged and ordered to leave the master's house or premises, and remains, he is a trespasser whether the discharge was rightful or not, and the master may eject him, using as much force as is necessary, but not more, and may remove the servant's goods from the house or premises." See also Champion v. Hartshorne, 9 Conn. 508; Foye v. Sewell, 21 Abb. N. C. 15; Haywood v. Miller, supra; Perret v. Sanchez, 12 La. Ann. 687; Kerrains v. People, supra. If the discharged employee was a trespasser, and the employer had the right to remove him and his goods from the property, and even to use such reasonable force as might have been necessary for that purpose, but not more, was he obliged to resort to the use of such force, which might involve a personal conflict and serious consequences, for the purpose of asserting his rights, rather than to appeal to the law for their enforcement? In Stamford v. Stamford Horse R. Co. 56 Conn. 381, 1 L.R.A. 375, 15 Atl. 749, an injunction was asked by a borough to restrain the company from laying down its track in a street. The right of the borough to forcibly remove the track was insisted upon as a ground for questioning the jurisdiction of a court of equity. But the court sustained the injunction, adding: "And none the less so because of its right to remove the track by force. As a rule, injunctions are denied to those who have adequate remedy at law. Where the choice is between the ordinary and the extraordinary processes of law, and the former are sufficient, the rule will not permit the use of the latter. In some cases of nuisance and in some cases of trespass the law permits an individual to abate the one and prevent the other by force, because such permission is necessary to the complete protection of property and person. When the choice is between redress or prevention of injury by force and by peaceful process, the law is well pleased if the individual will consent to waive his right to the use of force and await its action. Therefore, as between force and the extraordinary writ of injunction, the rule will permit the latter." This statement was quoted with approval by the Supreme Court of the United States in Re 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 582, 39 L. ed. 1092, 1101, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900, 905, and in the opinion Mr. Justice Brewer said: "Grant that any public nuisance may be forcibly abated, either at the instance of the authorities or by any individual suffering private damage therefrom, the existence of this right of forcible abatement is not inconsistent with, nor does it destroy, the right of appeal in an orderly way to the courts for a judicial determination, and an exercise of their powers by writ of injunction and otherwise to accomplish the same result." It cannot be successfully contended that, because the plaintiffs might have used reasonable force for the purpose of removing the defendant and his effects, they were compelled to use such force rather than to apply to the court for relief. This becomes specially evident when it is remembered that the owner of the property and the substantial employer is a woman, and the employee is a man.

Did the plaintiffs have any other legal remedy which would afford them adequate relief? A criminal prosecution would not do so. Such a case, though instituted by a prosecutor, would be a proceeding between the state of Georgia on the one part and the accused on the other to punish a violation of the criminal law, if one has taken place. It would not be a civil remedy for the purpose of enforcing the rights of the employer. A proceeding under Civil Code 1895, § 4823, alleging forcible entry or detainer, would not lie, because the controversy has not reached the point of using force so as to bring it within that statute (Curry v. Hendry, 46 Ga. 631; Coker v. McKinney, 68 Ga. 289), and we have just shown that the employer is not compelled to press it to that condition before appealing to the court for relief. A summary proceeding against the discharged employee, as an intruder, under Civil Code 1895, § 4808, would not furnish a sufficient remedy, for two reasons: First. To be an intruder, within the meaning of the statute, the original entry must have been unlawful. Murdock v. Miller, 21 Ga. 368; Thompson v. Glover, 120 Ga. 440, 47 S. E. 935. The element of good faith in claiming a right of possession is also involved, the Code section cited requiring that the affidavit made in order to commence the proceeding shall state that the person against whom it is directed "does not in good faith claim a right to such possession, and yet refuses to abandon the same." Second. The person claimed to be an intruder may tender a counter affidavit, and make an issue for trial. No bond is required of him; and, if the plaintiffs in this case were compelled to proceed against the defendant in the manner so provided, the discharged employee could accomplish his purpose, and remain upon the land of his employers by simply making a counter affidavit denying that he was such an intruder. A proceeding to evict him as a tenant at sufferance would not suffice, because, as we have already seen, he is not a tenant. An action for damages against him as a trespasser would not furnish adequate relief, because the trespass does not consist of a single act, but is continuing in its character, which might involve multiplicity of suits; and it is also charged that the defendant is insolvent, and a recovery against him would be of no value. We do not know of any remedy at law which would furnish complete and adequate relief to the plaintiffs. If, therefore, the discharged employee has no right to insist upon entering and remaining upon the premises and dealing with them as if he were still employed there, and, if against his trespasses so committed, the plaintiffs are entitled to relief, it follows that they may apply to a court of equity; and, the only sufficient remedy which can be furnished being by the writ of injunction, that writ is available to them. If the defendant could insist on remaining upon the land until the end of a common-law proceeding adjudicating him to be a trespasser, which we have shown he is, then through "the law's delay,"—that is, the necessary time which would elapse before the final adjudication—he would have accomplished the very thing which we hold to be illegal. Under such circumstances, the plaintiffs are entitled to present relief. See Scott v. Scott, 33 Ga. 102. The defendant in this case did not demur to the proceeding in equity by the plaintiffs, but denied the substantial allegations of the petition, and set up a counterclaim to recover judgment for what he asserted was due to him. Had he demurred to the petition for want of equity, it is apparent from what has been said above that his objection would not have been sustainable.

8. It was contended that, as the defendant had already entered on the land, and his personal chattels were there, a court of equity would not by injunction compel their removal; that this would be in the nature of a mandatory injunction, which a court of equity will not grant in this state. We recognize the general rule that an injunction can only restrain, and cannot compel, performance. Civil Code 1895, § 4922. "While under the Code an injunction which is purely mandatory in its nature cannot be granted, the court may grant an order the essential nature of which is to restrain, although in yielding obedience to the restraint the defendant may incidentally be compelled to perform some act." Goodrich v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 115 Ga. 340, 41 S. E. 659. An interlocutory injunction cannot be used where the real, substantial purpose is to obtain affirmative relief by compelling the performance of some act. But where the essential nature and purpose of the injunction is not to compel the performance of an act, but to restrain, this may, and sometimes does, incidentally involve some affirmative action, in order to make the restraint effective, and not a mere mockery. No precise line can be established mathematically and absolutely dividing the one condition from the other, but the actual difference is substantial, and nearly always palpable. To illustrate: An interlocutory injunction could not properly be granted to compel specific performance of a contract of sale, although it were shaped so as nominally to restrain the defendant from refusing to convey. There the real purpose would be to compel affirmative action. On the other hand, if an insolvent trespasser should enter upon land and begin cutting down the timber upon it, or tearing down and destroying the houses or other valuable improvements there located, he could be enjoined from further trespassing, although obedience to the order might involve affirmatively the removal of his tools and vehicles with which he intended to haul away the wood when cut. Against such an injunction, it would be no valid objection to say that he had already set foot upon the land before the injunction was granted, or that he had already begun to cut the trees, or had already driven his wagons upon the premises. The main, substantial purpose of the order would be to restrain, although incidentally some affirmative action on the part of the defendant might be necessary in order to yield obedience to the injunction. Very commonly the intention to do an irreparable injury is not so clearly manifested as to furnish ground for an injunction, until the wrong has been commenced; but it will not oust the court of its jurisdiction for the wrongdoer to say that he has reached the property and begun the commission of the wrong before the plaintiff can reach him with an injunction. In Russell v. Mohr-Weil Lumber Co. 102 Ga. 563, 29 S. E. 271, and in Vaughn v. Yawn, 103 Ga. 557, 29 S. E. 759, the right of possession of land was in controversy between two parties, and it was held that the writ of injunction could not be used to oust one of them from the actual possession and admit the other into possession of the premises. This is very different from the case at bar, where the employee has no claim of title or right of possession adverse to his employers. Here, too, the main, substantial relief sought was to restrain the continuing trespass by the discharged employee, who was alleged to be insolvent, upon the premises of the employers. It was alleged that the vegetables, flowers, fruit, garden, and the place generally, needed immediate attention; that, while the defendant persisted in his conduct, the plaintiffs could neither enjoy their home, nor prepare it for their use in the summer time, nor secure another gardener. His conduct gives legitimate ground for injunction. If this should be held otherwise, every cook who might be discharged, although rightfully, might insist upon entering and remaining in the kitchen and using the utensils, by claiming that the discharge was unlawful. Every housemaid, when discharged, might continue to enter the house and rooms of her former employer, and to handle the furniture or other articles of personalty, by refusing to recognize the discharge. Every coachman, after being discharged, might insist upon entering the stables and handling the horses, because he claimed that his discharge was improper. In fact every servant could refuse to be discharged, or to recognize the discharge, and insist on continuing to act as if there had been none, and the employer would be helpless.

9. The defendant offered in evidence an affidavit which had been made by Minis for the purpose of dispossessing him on the day after he was discharged. This affidavit proceeded on the theory that the discharge made Mackenzie a tenant at sufferance, and subject to be dispossessed as such. We have already seen that this was an erroneous view. Had there been a considerable lapse of time or other circumstances which rendered it a legitimate subject of controversy whether Mackenzie was a tenant or a servant occupying a portion of his master's premises, this affidavit would have been admissible to throw light on that subject, as an admission on the part of the person making it. But where it was evidently made merely under a mistaken idea of the correct mode of enforcing the right of the master, and was later followed by a proper proceeding, its rejection furnishes no ground for reversing the judgment or refusing the grant of the injunction. It may also be stated that the affidavit which was excluded was not accompanied by any warrant or other record or proof that the proceeding was still pending, or that there had been an adjudication when the equitable petition was filed, and that the affidavit of Mackenzie, which was introduced in evidence without objection, stated that Minis swore out a dispossessory warrant against him, alleging that he was a tenant at sufferance, so that the fact to show which the affidavit could have been introduced was otherwise proved. This was not a case of election between one of two remedies which were open to the plaintiff; but 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) an error in selecting a remedy which would not lie, and the subsequent enforcing of one which was proper.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE HUFFMAN

v.

MARCY MUTUAL TELEPHONE COMPANY,
NY, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 121 N. W. 1033.)

Telephone—abuse of privilege—discontinuance.

A telephone company which has established no rules as to abuse by patrons of the privileges of the service cannot discontinue the service of a customer two months after he has been warned for using profane and indecent language over the line and interfering with its use by other patrons, where he heeded the warning, and his misconduct ceased from that time.

(June 30, 1909.)

Case Note.—Right to withdraw telephone service because of abuse of privilege.

Cases are not lacking on the right of a telephone company to remove the instrument or discontinue the service because of nonpayment of telephone rentals or tolls at the time required by the contract or regulations of the company; but there is but little authority on the specific question involved in HUFFMAN v. MARCY MUT. TELEPH. CO., as to the right of the telephone company to remove the instrument or discontinue the service because of the subscriber's abuse of the privilege.

The case most resembling HUFFMAN v. MARCY MUT. TELEPH. CO. is Pugh v. City & Suburban Teleph. Asso. 8 Ohio Dec. Reprint. 644 (affirmed without opinion in 13 Ohio L. J. 190), holding that a rule of the telephone company, embodied in its contract with the patron, to the effect that the use of the instrument for the transmission of "profane or improper language" will be held sufficient cause for the cancellation of the contract and the removal of the instrument, was a reasonable and valid regulation; and the majority were of the opinion that under this regulation the telephone company was authorized in removing the telephone because of the subscriber's use of the word "damn" upon an occasion when he was having difficulty in getting connections. There was a conflict in the evidence as to the context in which that word was used; but the majority were apparently of the opinion that even the subscriber's own version of his remarks: "If you can't get the party granting a writ or mandamus compelling it to restore a telephone and service therefor to plaintiff's residence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ganoë & Ganoë, for appellant:

A telephone company has the right to prescribe all such rules and regulations for its convenience and security as are reasonable and just, and to refuse to furnish telephonic communications to any subscriber in its territorial jurisdiction who refuses to comply with such reasonable rules and regulations.

American Waterworks Co. v. State, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L.R.A. 447, 50 Am. St. Rep. 610, 64 N. W. 711; Williams v. Mutual Gas Co. 52 Mich. 499, 50 Am. Rep. 266, 18 N. W. 236; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. p. 242, § 250; Pugh v. Telephone Co. 27 Alb. L. J. 163.

The commission of the wrongful acts after the management of the telephone company had warned plaintiff to desist therefrom gave the company a right to refuse further service to plaintiff and to remove the telephone from his residence.

People ex rel. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Hudson River Teleph. Co. 19 Abb. N. C. 466; Gardner v. Providence Teleph. Co. 23 R. I. 262, 55 L.R.A. 113, 49 Atl. 1004; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. §§ 250, 251; Nye v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 104 Fed. 630; Pugh v. Telephone Co. supra.

I want, you can shut up your damn old telephone," was sufficient to justify the telephone company in discontinuing the service. There was a dissenting opinion apparently inspired by a doubt whether the word "damn" was to be regarded as a profane or even improper remark under the circumstances.

A different question as to the abuse of the privilege was presented in Gardner v. Providence Teleph. Co. 23 R. I. 262, 55 L.R.A. 113, 49 Atl. 1004, holding that a telephone company was justified in withdrawing the service from a subscriber upon the latter's refusal to discontinue the use of extension instruments not furnished by the company, but obtained by him from other sources. The majority opinion, however, declares that the right of the telephone company to prohibit the use of extension sets not provided by it is subject to the obligation that the company itself shall be able and willing to furnish extension sets as efficient and convenient as the state of the art affords, upon reasonable terms; and that if the company neglects its duty to the public, and is not provided with the means to secure the accommodation of its customers, or, having at its command such appliances, refuses to furnish them except at exorbitant rates, the customer may supplement the imperfect service of the company with ap-patrons to use obscene, slanderous, or defamatory language over its lines concerning another of its patrons or subscribers, and if, with knowledge of such fact, it continues to render service to a subscriber who uses it for such purpose, the company will become a publisher of such matter, and will be liable for damages therefor.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Peterson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 65 Minn. 18, 33 L.R.A. 302, 67 N. W. 646; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. § 250.

One must so use his own property as not to injure another.

Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. § 251; State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 124, 24 L. ed. 83; Anderson's Law Dict. p. 1076; 1 Bl. Com. 306; 2 Kent, Com. 340.

The company had a right to believe that the offending subscriber and his family would, in the future, use the phone as he and they had used it in the past, and to remove his phone and refuse him further service.

Ellis v. State, 138 Wis. 513, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 444, 119 N. W. 1110; Blackburn v. State, 23 Ohio St. 146; Farr v. Payne, 40 Vt. 615; Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, 4 Am. Rep. 655; Metzger v. Schultz, 16 Ind. App. 454, 59 Am. St. Rep. 323, 43 N. E. 886, 45 N. E. 619; 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. p. 62.

proved appliances procured elsewhere, provided that such appliances can be used in connection with the company's circuits without detriment to their harmonious operation. The Chief Justice, while agreeing with the general statements of law in the majority opinion, dissented from the conclusion therein in favor of the telephone company, for the reason that in his opinion the company's charge for the extension service was exorbitant, and the case, therefore, fell within the exception or limitation of the general rule. In this connection it appeared that the subscriber had been receiving for $82 per year a satisfactory service by using long distance extension sets purchased by him in connection with a grounded telephone circuit, whereas the company refused to permit the use of long distance extension sets except in connection with a metallic service, the rate for that service being $220 per annum, although it offered to annex to the subscriber's grounded circuit, for a reasonable price, such an extension set as was appropriate for that circuit and which it contended would give satisfactory service. In a per curiam response to a petition for rehearing, it was remarked that there was no evidence that the company's charge for a metallic circuit, combined with a long distance set, was exorbitant.

Messrs. Whitaker & Snell, for appellee:

It is the duty of defendant to furnish its telephone service to plaintiff and the public generally upon tender of the price of its service, under reasonable terms, rules, and regulations.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1021; Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Hobart, 89 Miss. 252, 119 Am. St. Rep. 702, 42 So. 349; Kirby v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 4 S. D. 105, 30 L.R.A. 612, 46 Am. St. Rep. 765, 55 N. W. 759.

The defendant cannot discriminate, but must furnish all its subscribers and patrons like service, upon like terms and under like conditions.

State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237; State ex rel. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. 61 S. C. 83, 55 L.R.A. 139, 85 Am. St. Rep. 870, 39 S. E. 257; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. §§ 243, 246.

A past breach of contract, if shown, is insufficient excuse for refusal to furnish service, upon tender of the price of service and compliance with reasonable rules and regulations of the company.

Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. § 251; State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co.; State ex rel. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co.; and Cumberland Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Hobart,—supra.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant company operates a telephone system in Ogden with twenty-three lines extending therefrom into the surrounding country. One of these lines extended to the residence of plaintiff and had six patrons. He was one of these until November 8, 1907, when the company removed the telephone, and refused further service. Thereupon he paid what was owing it, tendered customary advance charges for putting in an instrument and making connections, and demanded that the service be restored. This was refused, on the ground that plaintiff had forfeited the right thereto by the use of profane, vulgar, and indecent language over the line, and by interfering, and permitting members of his family to interfere, with the use thereof by others. No question is raised but that telephone companies are, to a limited extent, and yet in a strict sense, common carriers of intelligence and news, and are bound to afford equal facilities to all in like situations. They must supply all alike who are alike, and cannot discriminate against anyone. State ex rel. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. 61 S. C. 83, 55 L.R.A. 139, 85 Am. St. Rep. 870, 39 S. E. 257; State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237; 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Gardner v. Providence Teleph. Co. 23 R. I. 262, 55 L.R.A. 113, 49 Atl. 1004; Godwin v. Carolina Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 136 N. C. 258, 67 L.R.A. 251, 103 Am. St. Rep. 941, 48 S. E. 636, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 203; Missouri ex rel. Baltimore & O. Teleg. Co. v. Bell Teleph. Co. (C. C.) 23 Fed. 539; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. §§ 243, 246; 26 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 375; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 1021. Though a patron may have been delinquent, this will furnish no excuse for refusal to restore the service if he shall pay the amount for which he is delinquent, and tender the price of service, with compliance with the reasonable rules and regulations of the company. State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. and State ex rel. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. supra; Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. § 251. The remedy in event of refusal is by writ of mandamus. Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. § 254, and cases cited above. As said, these propositions are not controverted. The sole issue on which the cause is submitted is whether the right to telephone service had been forfeited by plaintiff. As there was but a single line, and each patron was indicated by particular rings of the bell, others than those talking innocently in ascertaining whether the line were in use, or as eavesdroppers, might hear conversations in progress, or expressions directed to them. At one time when plaintiff was conversing over the line, he was disturbed by someone, as he testified, by putting the receiver over the transmitter and whistling, and he remarked: "That sounds nice; it sounds like it might be a 'chippy.'" According to several witnesses to whom he related the incident, he said it might be an old "chippy," and the manager of the company testified that he had told him that he had said: "It is the G—d—chippies on the line." There was evidence that at another time he called up one of the patrons, toward whom he entertained ill feelings, and blatted like a sheep in the telephone, though he denied this. His daughter was proven to have taken down the receiver, on one occasion, listened, and then rattled the receiver holder and trilled in the transmitter. Patrons of the line, as well as those in charge of the switch board, testified that there had been much disturbance on the line by way of interrupting conversations by talking in the telephone or in ringing the bell, all of which ceased upon terminating service for plaintiff. On the other hand, plaintiff denied having caused such disturbance, as did his wife, and both to having properly instructed their children. He admitted having employed the word "chippy," but explained that this was to ascertain who was interfering, and that no profanity accompanied it. In the latter part of August, or fore part of September, when plaintiff told the manager of the use of such word, and inquired if there had been complaints of his disturbing the line, he was answered in the affirmative. He then inquired if this came from two families named, and the manager warned him that such language over the line could not be tolerated, and that unless he quit disturbing the line he would take out his telephone. There was no evidence of improper language or of any disturbance after this time, though the manager testified that a complaint came in later, and that he was notified by one patron that, unless the service for plaintiff was discontinued, he might remove the telephone from his residence.

No one can well defend the language employed by plaintiff. As a witness he admitted its impropriety. And though not chargeable with all the disturbance on the line, we entertain no doubt but that both he, and one of his children at least, had abused the privileges accorded them, and so far ignored the golden rule as to have made use of the line as a vehicle of petty spite toward two of his neighbors. But it does not appear that they persisted upon being warned that such conduct would not be tolerated, nor that they were guilty of any impropriety thereafter during the two months intervening between such warning and the removal of the telephone. Much is said in argument of the right of such a company to adopt reasonable rules and regulations for the transaction of its business. That it might have established such rules is not open to debate. Cedar Rapids Gaslight Co. v. Cedar Rapids (Iowa) 120 N. W. 906. But we have discovered none in the record before us, and it would scarcely seem necessary to prescribe in advance a rule prohibiting the employment of profane, vulgar, or indecent language over a telephone line, especially when this is likely to be heard by third persons, or prohibiting interference with the use of the line by others. Such a line, when used in common, enters many family circles, and the proprietor is warranted in assuming, at least until the contrary appears, that its patrons will have regard for the ordinary amenities of life, and observe the courtesies common to civilized society. Upon discovery that in this it has been mistaken as to any subscriber, and that, notwithstanding being duly warned, he persists in the use of improper language over the line, or purposely interferes in conversations between other patrons of the system, in order to annoy or interrupt their conversations, or force them to yield the line for his own convenience, and this is persisted in after being duly warned to desist therefrom, there would seem to be but one adequate remedy, and that is to withdraw the service from such person. Jones, Teleg. & Teleph. Cos. § 250. Otherwise the efficiency of the enterprise would be impaired or destroyed, and the proprietor fail in furnishing the character of service impliedly promised. The very nature of the service undertaken exacts control to this extent, for without the power to withdraw it under the circumstances mentioned, there could be no assurance of its character or efficiency. A single patron by meddling and discourtesy might deprive his neighbors of the benefits of a convenient invention, and destroy the value of the property devoted to the public service. This power to regulate is essential in order to enable the defendant to perform such service, and is clearly to be implied from the nature of the enterprise. But it ought never to be arbitrarily exercised. Reasonable caution must be taken lest injustice be done. Some allowance is to be made for the infirmities of human nature. Local customs are not to be ignored. Habit sometimes excuses, if it does not justify, the use of objectionable language. Early environment, more often than an evil spirit, is responsible for bad manners. Undisclosed emergencies may extenuate lapses from propriety. So that, when rules to guide patrons have not been promulgated in advance, it is not unreasonable that any patron misusing his privileges be duly warned thereof by the telephone company, and given an opportunity to mend his ways, before being finally deprived of this most convenient means of business and social communication. Such was the course pursued by defendant, with the result that, in so far as appears, the objectionable conduct ceased, and apparently the telephone was removed two months later owing to the threat of another patron, rather than because of any persistent interference with the service by plaintiff. The decree directing the restoration of the telephone and connections has our approval.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

NELSON-BETHEL CLOTHING COMPA-NY, Appt.,

v.

EDNA MAY PITTS.

(— Ky. —, 114 S. W. 331.)

Master — dangerous appliance — belt.

1. A belt by which a sewing machine is connected with a shaft by means of which the power is applied to it is not a dangerous instrument which will render the master liable for injury to an employee through getting caught therein, merely because it is put together with hooks.

Same — instruction — risk.

2. A master is not liable for injury to the operator of a sewing machine whose hair is caught in the belt which she is attempting to connect with the shaft furnishing power to the machine, merely because her superior, to whom she complained that the belt was not fit, told her it was all right, and that there was no danger in her putting it back on the machine, where neither had in mind the danger of her getting caught in it, and she understood such risk as well as he did.

(December 18, 1908.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch, Second Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Case Note. — Assurance of safety by master or vice principal.

This question is discussed in the note to McKee v. Tourtellotte, 43 L.R.A. 542, in which the earlier cases will be found collected.

The general rule of law to be gathered from the authorities reviewed in that note, as well as from those herein cited, may be stated thus: Where a servant undertakes certain work, or continues to perform work, relying upon the assurance of his master or the latter's representative that such work may be performed in safety, the mere fact that, before such assurance was given, the fears of the servant as to the possibility of injury had been excited by circumstances that had come to his knowledge, will not, as a matter of law, charge him with contributory negligence or with an assumption of the risks involved in the work, unless the danger was so obvious that no man of ordinary prudence would incur it. Labatt, Mast. & S. §§ 446-454; Harder & H. Coal Min. Co. v. Schmidt, 43 C. C. A. 532, 104 Fed. 282; Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. v. Pouch, 61 C. C. A. 40, 124 Fed. 148; Allen v. Gilman, 127 Fed. 609; Reiter-Connolly Mfg. Co. v. Hamlin, 144 Ala. 192, 197, 40 So. 280; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Spotts, 77 Ark. 458, 92 S. W. 249; Warren Vehicle Stock Co. v. Siggs (Ark.) 120 S. W. 412; Starr v. Kreuzberger, 129 Cal. 123, 79 Am. St. Rep. 92, 61 Pac. 787; Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 81 Pac. 521; McIntyre v. Empire Printing Co. 103 Ga. 288, 29 S. E. 923; Bush v. West Yellow Pine Co. 2 Ga. App. 295, 58 S. E. 529; Watson Cut Stone Co. v. Small, 181 Ill. 366, 54 N. E. 995; Gundlach v. Schott, 192 Ill. 509, 85 Am. St. Rep. 348, 61 N. E. 332; Chicago Screw Co. v. Weiss, 203 Ill. 536, 68 N. E. 54; Chicago, W. & V. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mr. J. T. O'Neal, with Mr. Fred Forcht, Jr., for appellant:

The particular danger or defect as to which an assurance is given must be the proximate cause of the injury.

Shemwell v. Owensboro & N. R. Co. 117 Ky. 556, 78 S. W. 448; Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Liehe, 17 Colo. 280, 29 Pac. 175; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Turner, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 487, 23 S. W. 146; Showalter v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. 88 Wis. 376, 60 N. W. 257; Hilje v. Hettich, 95 Tex. 321, 67 S. W. 90; Illinois Steel Co. v. Mann, 197 Ill. 186, 64 N. E. 328; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. 1184; Lowcock v. Franklin Paper Co. 169 Mass. 313, 47 N. E. 1000.

The servant assumed the risk.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. 589; Wilson v. Chess & W. Co. 117 Ky. 567, 78 S. W. 453; Kelly v. Barber Asphalt Co. 93 Ky. 363, 20 S. W. 271; McCormick Harvesting M. Co. v. Liter, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2154, 66 S. W. 761; Mellott v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 101 Ky. 212, 40 S. W. 696; McGhee v. Bell, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 267, 39 S. W. 823; Duncan v. Gernert Bros. Lumber Co. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1039, 87 S. W.

Coal Co. v. Moran, 210 Ill. 9, 71 N. E. 38; Springfield Boiler & Mfg. Co. v. Parks, 123 Ill. App. 503, affirmed in 222 Ill. 355, 78 N. E. 809; Walter v. Fisher, 96 Ill. App. 590; Harte v. Fraser, 104 Ill. App. 201; Fletcher Bros. Co. v. Hyde, 36 Ind. App. 96, 75 N. E. 9; Purcell Mill & Elevator Co. v. Kirkland, 2 Ind. Terr. 169, 47 S. W. 311; Stomnie v. Hanford Produce Co. 108 Iowa, 137, 78 N. W. 841; Lasch v. Stratton, 101 Kv. 672, 42 S. W. 756; Wake v. Price, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 696, 58 S. W. 519; East Jellico Coal Co. v. Stewart, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 420, 68 S. W. 624; Dryden v. Pogue Distillery Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 528, 82 S. W. 262; Keen v. Keystone Crescent Lumber Co. (Ky.) 118 S. W. 355; McHenry Coal Co. v. Phelps (Ky.) 122 S. W. 829; Burgess v. Davis Sulphur Ore Co. 165 Mass. 71, 42 N. E. 501; O'Brien v. Nute-Hallett Co. 177 Mass. 422, 59 N. E. 65; Lord v. Wakefield, 185 Mass. 214, 70 N. E. 123; McKinnon v. Ritter-Conley Mfg. Co. 186 Mass. 155, 71 N. E. 296; Dunphy v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 192 Mass. 415, 78 N. E. 479; Berube v. Horton, 199 Mass. 421, 85 N. E. 474; Carriere v. Merrick Lumber Co. (Mass.) 89 N. E. 544; Shadford v. Ann Arbor Street R. Co. 121 Mich. 224, 80 N. W. 30; Brown v. Lennane, 155 Mich. 686, 118 N. W. 581; Anderson v. Pitt Iron Min. Co. 103 Minn. 252, 114 N. W. 955; Duerst v. St. Louis Stamping Co. 163 Mo. 607, 63 S. W. 827; Connolly v. St. Joseph Press Printing Co. 166 Mo. 447, 66 S. W. 268; Bane v. Irwin, 172 Mo. 306, 72 S. W. 522; Curtis v. McNair, 173 Mo. 270, 73 S. W. 167; Cole v. St. Louis Transit Co. 183 Mo. 81, 81 S. W. 1138; Burkard v. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co. 217 Mo. 466, 117 S. W. 35; Stalze v. Jacob Dold Packing Co. 84 Mo. App. 565; Haworth v. Mineral Belt Teleph. Co. 105 Mo. App. 161, 79 S. W. 727; Carter v. Bald-

762; Anderson v. H. C. Akeley Lumber Co. 47 Minn. 128, 49 N. W. 664; Hayden v. Smithville Mfg. Co. 29 Conn. 548; Jones v. Manufacturing & Invest. Co. 92 Me. 565, 69 Am. St. Rep. 535, 43 Atl. 512; Rooney v. Sewall & D. Cordage Co. 161 Mass. 153, 36 N. E. 789; Goodes v. Boston & A. R. Co. 162 Mass. 288, 38 N. E. 500; Daniels v. New England Cotton Yarn Co. 188 Mass. 260, 74 N. E. 332; Reis v. Struck, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1113, 64 S. W. 729; Lindsay v. Hollerbach & M. Contract Co. 29 Ky. L. Rep. 70, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 830, 92 S. W. 294.

Messrs. Ray Blizot and Edwards, Ogden, & Peak, for appellee:

By complaining of her fear of being hurt in putting on the belt, the plaintiff availed herself of the benefit of the assurance of safety.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Vestal, 105 Ky. 402, 49 S. W. 204; Lasch v. Stratton, 101 Ky. 672, 42 S. W. 756; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Foley, 94 Ky. 220, 21 S. W. 866; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Shively, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 903, 18 S. W. 944; Quaid v. Cornwall, 13 Bush, 601.

win, 107 Mo. App. 217, 81 S. W. 204; Roberti v. Anderson, 27 Nev. 396, 76 Pac. 30; Burnham v. Concord R. Co. 69 N. H. 280, 45 Atl. 563; Siedentop v. Buse, 21 App. Div. 592, 47 N. Y. Supp. 809; Hannigan v. Smith, 28 App. Div. 176, 50 N. Y. Supp. 845; Schmit v. Gillen, 41 App. Div. 302, 58 N. Y. Supp. 458; Pilkey v. Harrower, 59 App. Div. 378, 69 N. Y. Supp. 243; Wolf v. Devitt, 83 App. Div. 42, 82 N. Y. Supp. 189, affirmed without opinion in 179 N. Y. 569, 72 N. E. 1152; McDougald v. Lumber-ton, 129 N. C. 200, 39 S. E. 826; Hughes v. Fayette Mfg. Co. 214 Pa. 282, 63 Atl. 692; Faulkner v. Mammoth Min. Co. 23 Utah, 437, 66 Pac. 799.

Thus, in Merriweather v. Sayre Min. & Mfg. Co. (Ala.) 49 So. 916, it was held that the servant had the right to rely on the assurance of the master as to the safety of the machinery, appliances, and places to work, where the attention of the master had been called to them, unless the danger was so obvious that no prudent man would use such machinery or appliance, or would work at such a place.

And in Milby & D. Coal & Min. Co. v. Balla, 7 Ind. Terr. 629, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 695, 104 S. W. 860, it was held that where the servant received an assurance from the master that a particular tool or appliance was safe, he might rely upon such assurance, if it appeared that the master had the greater knowledge or means of knowledge concerning it, and might continue in the master's employment, unless he knew, or, by the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety must necessarily have known, of the defects and of the danger incident to the use of such tool or appliance.

And in Burnside v. Novelty Mfg. Co. 121 Mich. 115, 79 N. W. 1108, it was held not to be negligence for an employee who was in 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The plaintiff did not assume the risk incident to the employment in continuing in the work.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Langan, 116 Ky. 318, 76 S. W. 32; 4 Thomp. Neg. § 4664; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Harp, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 909, 90 S. W. 980; Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Metzger, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1024, 97 S. W. 35; Mergenthaler-Horton Basket Mach. Co. v. Lyon, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 471, 89 S. W. 522.

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Nelson-Bethel Clothing Company is a manufacturer of pants in Louisville. Edna May Pitts was in its service as the operator of a sewing machine. There were some forty or fifty sewing machines in two rows, the ordinary Singer sewing machines, except that, instead of being operated by a pedal, the belt was passed over a wheel setting upon a shaft which ran under all of the sewing machines, and was turned by an electric motor. The belts operating the sewing machines were the usual sewing machine doubt about the safety of the place where he was sent to work to defer to the opinions and assurances of his employer or the latter's representative, who were supposed to know, and who, from their positions, were bound to have special knowledge as to whether it was safe or not.

And in Ohio Copper Min. Co. v. Hutchings, 172 Fed. 201, it was held that a servant who knew that the place where he was sent to work was dangerous if unprotected, and who also knew that employees of another branch of the service were especially charged with the duty of safeguarding it, was entitled to rely upon the representation of the performance of that duty, made by a superior who spoke for his employer, unless its untruthfulness was manifest, and that it was not incumbent upon the servant to make an effort or to take care to discover whether the assurance of safe condition given him was true, if the insufficiency of the precautions adopted was not so patent as to be readily observed by him.

So, the rule was stated in Levy v. Rosenblatt, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 543, to be that, if the master gave the servant to understand that he did not consider the risk one which a prudent person should refuse to undertake, the servant had a right to rely upon his master's judgment, unless his own was so clearly opposed thereto that in fact he did not rely upon his master's opinion.

And in Industrial Lumber Co. v. Bivens (Tex. Civ. App.) 105 S. W. 831, it was held that a servant who had been assured by his foreman that there was no danger, and who was ordered by him to go back to work, had the right to rely upon the superior knowledge of his foreman, unless the danger was so patent that no one of ordinary experience and observation would have under-and, when they would break, would be repaired with hooks. Begley furnished the hooks to the girls, and they put them on. When he furnished Miss Pitts that morning three hooks, she borrowed some pincers from a girl near her, and had put the belt together with the hooks just before she attempted to put it on, when she was hurt. The belt at this time differed from an ordinary sewing machine belt only in this: that it consisted of more pieces and had more hooks in it than a belt usually has, and she had put the hooks in herself. Begley says that he offered to put the belt on for her, and she declined his assistance. She denies this, and says he declined to put it on for her. The proof for the defendant was to the effect that her hair was not put up; that a short time before the forelady had called her attention to her hair being down, and directed her to tie it up, and she had agreed to do so, but had not in fact done it; and that this was the cause of her hair being caught. The belt was on the machine when the machinery was stopped, and was all right, and her hair was found wound around the shaft. It is insisted for the defendant that the court should have instructed the jury peremptorily to find for it, because the assurance of Begley that the belt was all right had referred to the sufficiency of the belt for running the machine, and not to any danger of her getting her hair caught in it; that she knew of the danger of her hair being caught as well as Begley, and, being an experienced operator, she understood the situation as well as he did, and no warning or caution of danger was required. The proof for the plaintiff was that she was working by the piece, and that, when the belt would break, she would lose the time taken in repairing it. She had lost a good deal of time that morning by reason of having to put the belt on seven times. It was for this reason that she took the belt to Pat Begley, and insisted on his giving her a new belt, telling him that it was rotten. When he said to her that the belt was all right, he simply meant that the belt was not rotten, and would do if put together, and so he gave her three hooks and told her to go back and fix her belt. Evidently what he thought was that the belt had not been hooked together right. She took the hooks, put the belt together herself, and, in attempting to put it on the machine, her hair was caught, and she received a frightful injury. But, although she was terribly injured, the master is not responsible to her in damages unless at fault, and by reason of his fault she was hurt. She had operated sewing machines for years, and knew as much about the belts as Pat Begley did. All belts for sewing machines 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) are put together with hooks, and whether they have two or more hooks does not render the sewing machine belt a dangerous instrumentality. She had often put this belt on. She understood that it was a part of her duty, and that she was hurt in putting it on was an accident which none of the parties anticipated, or had any reason to anticipate.

In 4 Thompson on Negligence, § 4067, the rule is thus stated: "Such a promise on the part of the master does not, of course, relieve the servant of the duty of continuing to exercise reasonable care for his own safety; nor will the promise, when it has no relation to the danger which the servant in fact incurs, be available to lay the foundation of an action against the master." This principle was recognized by this court in Shemwell v. Owensboro & N. R. Co. 117 Ky. 556, 78 S. W. 448, where the keeper of a pumping station complained that the roof was defective, and the master promised to repair it. A few days afterward the roof took fire, and Shemwell went upon it to put out the fire. The roof fell and he was injured. The court, in refusing a recovery, said: "In the instant case, appellant, as has been suggested, probably notified his superior of the defects in the roof only as affecting its purpose as a roof. If appellant had been injured by the roof falling in upon him (and that danger had not been a patent one), or by reason of its leaky condition, he would have been protected against the damages. But it is not shown or claimed that he notified his superior that the roof was so rotten as to be unsafe to get upon, and therefore there was no promise or undertaking by the superintendent to repair such a defect, or to take the consequences upon the employer meantime. The promise to repair, and the assumption of consequences during repairs for a reasonable time, necessarily are referred to the particular defects which the parties were discussing." In Kelly v. Barber Asphalt Co. 93 Ky. 363, 20 S. W. 271, Kelley was bending over a revolving shaft in order to draw up buckets, and in doing this his shirt was caught by the revolving shaft, and he was painfully injured. It was held that he could not recover, upon the ground that he was bound to know that, if his clothes were caught by the revolving shaft, he would get hurt, and that it was incumbent on him to keep out of the way of it. The same rule was applied in Daniels v. New England Cotton Yarn Co. 188 Mass. 260, 74 N. E. 332, where a girl, as here, had her scalp torn off by a braid of her hair becoming caught around a roller of a machine at which she was working. See, also, McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Liter, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2154, 66 S. W. 761. The only thing in this case to distinguish it from those cited is the testimony of the plaintiff as to what Pat Begley said to her. It is true that, after telling just what did take place between her and Begley, she says that she thought there was no danger in such a thing when Pat Begley told her there was not, and also says that Pat Begley said to her that she could not get hurt when she told him to put it on. But she knew as well as Begley that, if her hair got caught, she would get hurt. Neither she nor Begley had in mind her getting her hair caught. She had often put that belt on before. She had put it on seven times that morning, and she understood the whole matter as well as anybody. No rule is better settled than that the servant cannot recover on account of an assurance of the master when he understood the risk as well as the master, and, in fact, did not rely upon the superior knowledge of the person making the assurance. The thing that was under discussion between her and Begley was the sufficiency of the belt to run the sewing machine. Neither of them, at any time, had in mind that the belt itself was a source of danger.

Under all the evidence, the court should have instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE ATHLETIC CLUB et al.,
Appts.,
v.

GEORGE NOLAN.

(— Ky. —, 119 S. W. 800.)

Nuisance — prize fight — right to interfere.

A private citizen cannot enjoin a prize fight which constitutes a public nuisance, unless he suffers some special injury from it.

(June 4, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Branch, First Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, permanently enjoining the holding of prize fights on certain premises. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. O'Neal & O'Neal for appellants.
Messrs. Greene & Tilford for appellee.

Note.—A careful search has failed to disclose other cases on the right of a private citizen to maintain a suit to enjoin a prize fight.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

George Nolan brought this suit against the Louisville Athletic Club and James Norton. He alleged in his petition that Norton is the owner of a building in Louisville on the north side of Broadway between Eighth and Ninth streets; that he resides on Broadway between Seventh and Eighth streets, about a square from the Norton building, and on the same side of the street; that Norton has leased to the Louisville Athletic Club a hall on the third floor of his building for the purpose of its holding there a series of prize fights, the first to be held on December 18, 1908; that the prize fights will be brutal and demoralizing, corrupting the morals and disturbing the peace of the neighborhood; that crowds will be congregated in and about the building, and a large number of disorderly persons who will be noisy and vicious, emitting loud cries during the progress of the fight; that, by reason of the proximity of his property, he and his family will be brought into contact with a large number of disorderly persons, and disturbed by the noises from the building; that thereby the peace and happiness of his home will be destroyed, his rest at night disturbed, and the value of his property decreased. An answer was filed, putting in issue the allegations of the petition, proof was taken, a temporary injunction was granted, and this on final hearing was perpetuated. The athletic club and Norton appeal.

The case has been briefed entirely upon the question whether the contests which the athletic club proposes to give will be prize fights under the statute. But there is another question in the case which must be determined before we reach that question. It will be observed that the injunction is aimed at an anticipated nuisance. At the time the petition was filed no prize fight had come off, no crowd had gathered, and no noise had been made. Ordinarily the chancellor will not grant an injunction to restrain an anticipated nuisance unless the proof shows that substantial injury will be done the plaintiff if the injunction is not granted. Nolan is the only witness who is introduced on the question. He testifies that prize fights are brutal and demoralizing; that a good many disreputable people attend them, and are very noisy sometimes.

Being asked what effect the prize fights held there would have upon his family and the enjoyment of his home, he says:

A. They would have no effect—only the crowd going there and coming back, inclined to be, some disreputable characters raising a noise, and I don't know what other trouble. I only know there is a great many disreputable people. We don't know what trouble they might cause. They create a good deal of noise.

Q. As I understand it, you live on the same side of the street as this building is on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Within a square?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many brothers in your family?

A. Three.

Q. And your mother lives there with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you consider that you would be injured by the holding of this prize fight?

A. I believe I would.

Q. And you object, do you?

A. Yes, sir.

This is the only evidence to show that Nolan will be injured in any way by the proposed prize fight. It is insufficient to warrant an injunction. Although the prize fight may be a public nuisance, still a private citizen cannot maintain an action to enjoin it unless he suffers some special injury. It does not appear that the value of Nolan's property will be in any way depreciated, or that the peace or quiet of his home will be disturbed. The persons who attend the prize fight may not pass his house, and whether or not a sufficient noise will be made to disturb anybody at his house is wholly a matter of conjecture. We held in Com. v. McGovern, 116 Ky. 212, 66 L.R.A. 280, 75 S. W. 261, that the state may maintain a petition in equity to enjoin a prize fight; but a private citizen cannot do so unless he suffers some special injury therefrom.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment dismissing the petition.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

STATE OF MAINE

v.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS, MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Claimant.

(Seven cases.)

(104 Me. 463, 72 Atl. 331.)

Intoxicating liquors — interstate commerce — constructive delivery.

Intoxicating liquors shipped from another state to fictitious consignees, or to local merchants who did not order and do not claim them, cannot, although they had been placed by the carrier in its warehouse and remained there twenty-four days, be regarded as constructively delivered, so as to lose their character as articles of interstate commerce, and become subject to local seizure.

(December 1, 1908.)

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

R EPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Androscoggin County for the opinion of the full bench of proceedings of search and seizure in which certain intoxicating liquors were seized and in which the Maine Central Railroad Company appeared as claimant, alleging that the liquors had been unlawfully seized by the state. Judgment for claimant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank A. Morey for the State.

Messrs. White & Carter, for claimant:

The liquors had not been delivered, and had not lost their character as articles of interstate commerce.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 1096, 1107; Whitehead v. Anderson, 9 Mees. & W. 518; Farrell v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 102 N. C. 390, 3 L.R.A. 647, 11 Am. St. Rep. 760, 9 S. E. 302; Harding Paper Co. v. Allen, 65 Wis. 584, 27 N. W. 329; McFetridge v. Piper, 40 Iowa, 627; Alsberg v. Latta, 30 Iowa, 442; O'Neil v. Garrett, 6 Iowa, 480; Brewer Lumber Co. v. Boston & A. R. Co. 179 Mass. 228, 54 L.R.A. 435, 88 Am. St. Rep. 375, 60 N. E. 548; Calahan v. Babcock, Case Note. — What is sufficient to terminate interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors.

This question is discussed in the case note to State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 550. As there shown, the final interpretation placed by the United States Supreme Court upon the words, "upon arrival in such state," found in the act of Congress of August 8th, 1890, chap. 728, 26 Stat. at L. 313, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3177, was that delivery of an interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors to the consignee was essential to constitute arrival in the state, and this interpretation has been applied in the following cases: Vernon v. State (Ala.) 50 So. 57; Com. v. People's Exp. Co. 201 Mass. 564, 88 N. E. 420; Schwedes v. State (Okla.) 99 Pac. 804; High v. State (Okla. Crim. App.) 101 Pac. 115; Moreland v. State (Okla. Crim. App.) 101 Pac. 138; Hudson v. State (Okla. Crim. App.) 101 Pac. 275; McCord v. State (Okla. Crim. App.) 101 Pac. 280; State v. Eighteen Casks of Beer (Okla.) 104 Pac. 1093; State v. Kenney, 62 W. Va. 284, 57 S. E. 823; State v. United States Exp. Co. 63 W. Va. 299, 60 S. E. 144.

But, in State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 104 Me. 502, 71 Atl. 758, it was held under the United States "pure food law," approved June 30, 1906, prohibiting the introduction into one state from another state or country of any liquors misbranded or adulterated within the meaning of the act, that, as to such liquors, the statute removed the Federal barrier to the operation of the police power of the state upon them, and, having been brought into the state in violation of the act of Congress, they became subject to the laws of the state the moment they came within its limits.

21 Ohio St. 281, 8 Am. Rep. 63; Jeffris v. Fitchburg R. Co. 93 Wis. 250, 33 L.R.A. 351, 57 Am. St. Rep. 919, 67 N. W. 424; Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. v. Koontz, 61 Ohio St. 551, 76 Am. St. Rep. 435, 56 N. E. 471; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 136, 51 L. ed. 991, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Seven cases are considered in this opinion, each involving the single question of constructive delivery of intoxicating liquors by a common carrier, under the so-called Wilson act (act Aug. 8, 1890, chap. 728, 26 Stat. at L. 313, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3177). No other question is raised either by the state or claimant of the liquors seized. The facts disclose that certain intoxicating liquors were shipped from different points without the state, arriving at different times by way of the Maine Central Railroad at its freight station in the city of Lewiston. All the goods were shipped in the names of local firms, who did not order or claim them, or to fictitious names, persons to the railroad company unknown. The various invoices, upon their arrival, were placed in the freight shed of the defendant company, and from time to time thereafter were seized upon proper warrants charging the liquors to be deposited within the state for the purpose of illegal sale. The warrants were served, the seizures made, the liquors libeled, the claimant appeared, a hearing was had, the liquors were declared forfeited, and the claimant appealed. The fact that a portion of these liquors finally declared forfeited had been once seized and ordered returned on the ground that they came within the protection of the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution becomes immaterial in the consideration of the one issue involved. The longest time any package was in the custody of the railroad company, after its arrival at Lewiston, before seizure, was a period of twenty-four days. The element of time makes this case the strongest for the state, as all the other elements are common to all the cases.

No question is raised that the goods seized were moving in interstate commerce, unless they had been constructively delivered to the consignees. Heyman v. Southern R. Co. 203 U. S. 270, 51 L. ed. 178, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1130; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 102 Me. 385, 120 Am. St. Rep. 504, 67 Atl. 312.

In the Heyman Case, the court intimate what facts may be regarded as sufficient to establish constructive delivery in cases of this kind. They say: "Of course, we are not called upon in this case and do not decide if goods of the character referred to in the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Wilson act, moving in interstate commerce, arrive at the point of destination, and, after notice and full opportunity to receive them, are designedly left in the hands of the carrier for an unreasonable time, that such conduct on the part of the consignee might not justify, if affirmatively alleged and proven, the holding that goods so dealt with have come under the operation of the Wilson act, because constructively delivered." In this paragraph the court seems to have undertaken to state, but not to decide, the three essential elements of constructive delivery to be notice to the consignee of the arrival of the goods, a reasonable time on his part after notice to receive them, and a mutual design or arrangement with the carrier to hold them for the consignee. The only evidence of constructive delivery in the case at bar is found in the fact that the goods were retained by the railroad company without actual delivery for a space of twenty-four days (giving the state the benefit of the strongest case), and that the consignees were represented by fictitious names and were to the claimant unknown.

In specifying the elements above named, the court uses a phrase which seems to have peculiar significance in its application to the class of cases now under consideration; namely, "designedly left in the hands of the carrier for an unreasonable time." This phrase was undoubtedly intended to allude to a passive or silent understanding between the shippers of liquors, the carriers, and the consignees with reference to those transactions which operate to enable an evasion of the law, and assist consignees in obtaining a safe delivery of their contraband goods. Yet, notwithstanding this interpretation of the phrase, if a correct one, and sufficient to authorize the inference of constructive delivery, we are unable to find any evidence in the statement of facts which warrants us in declaring that the goods in question were constructively delivered. It will be observed by a reading of the above paragraph that the conduct which might be sufficient for the predication of constructive delivery is ascribed to the acts of the consignee, and not to the acts of the carrier. But in the case at bar it is not the consignee, but the carrier, who is the claimant. Therefore it appears that the elements of constructive delivery referred to in the Heyman Case as applicable to consignees are not found at all in the case at bar against the carrier, as the consignees were fictitious.

The essential elements of constructive delivery are well defined in law. The rule is well established that a constructive delivery can be effected only by an agreement between the carrier or middleman and the buyer or person claiming under him, whereby the former agrees to hold goods for the latter for some purpose other than that of carriage to and delivery at their original destination. In the absence of an agreement with the buyer to the contrary, the carrier will be presumed to hold the goods in his original capacity. The carrier cannot constitute himself the buyer's agent for the custody of the goods, nor can the buyer make the carrier his agent for custody without the carrier's consent. 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1096, and cases cited. See also Harding Paper Co. v. Allen, 65 Wis. 584, 27 N. W. 329; Jeffris v. Fitchburg R. Co. 93 Wis. 260, 33 L.R.A. 351, 57 Am. St. Rep. 919, 67 N. W. 424; Brewer Lumber Co. v. Boston & A. R. Co. 179 Mass. 228, 54 L.R.A. 435, 88 Am. St. Rep. 375, 60 N. E. 548.

The last case involved the replevin of lumber sold by the plaintiff to George A. Paul, and claimed by right of stoppage in transitu.

It appears that the car of lumber was shipped January 31, 1908, and arrived at the yard of the defendant in Boston on February 19th, and Paul was notified by an agent of the defendant. On March 4th the defendant stored the lumber in one of its sheds and notified Paul of this fact. On April 9th Paul made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and on April 16th the plaintiff notified the defendant not to deliver the lumber to Paul, claiming the right of stoppage in transitu. The court held that the transit of the lumber was not ended when the plaintiff asserted his right to it, and that it made no difference whether the goods were in the hands of the carrier as carrier, or whether the carrier, at the journey's end, put them in a warehouse, laying down this rule: "While the position of the carrier may be changed to that of bailee or agent for the purchaser of the goods, yet this is a question of an agreement between the carrier and the purchaser." In this case it will be seen that the goods were in the hands of the carrier about two months before they were claimed by stoppage in transitu, yet the court held that there was no constructive delivery.

The relation of carrier to the shipper, the consignee, and the goods is originally fixed by law and by a contract between the parties, which is that the carrier shall safely carry the goods to their place of destination and there deliver them to the consignee. This contract, once existing, can be changed only by the operation of law or by an agreement between the parties. When the goods arrive at their journey's end, it is the duty of the carrier to store them. This duty is imposed by law. When stored, they are still in the possession and custody of the carrier, and the only change in his relation to the goods is the extent of his liability. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The goods are still in transit. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, supra. The contract is still binding upon the carrier to deliver the goods to the consignee, and this obligation can be terminated only by actual or constructive delivery, or by a new contract with the consignee in the place of the contract of carriage. As already seen, in the case before us, no actual delivery of the goods was made, and no evidence is found adequate to establish proof of constructive delivery. Therefore the various packages of goods seized must be held at the time of their seizure to have still been in transit as interstate commerce in the hands of the carrier.

In accordance with the stipulation in the report, the entry must be, in Nos. 19 to 25, inclusive: Judgment for the claimant. Liquors ordered to be returned.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

ANNA MARY ROCKWELL

v.

PATRICK MCGOVERN.

(202 Mass. 6, 88 N. E. 436.)

Evidence — res ipsa loquitur — sinking walk.

1. The sudden sinking of a sidewalk under the weight of a pedestrian, to his injury, is, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, evidence of negligence on the part of a contractor who, in the execution of public work, took up and relaid the walk.

Case Note. — Applicability of maxim, Res ipsa loquitur, to caving in or sinking of surface of street.

In Cunningham v. Dady, 191 N. Y. 152, 83 N. E. 689, plaintiff, a pedestrian, was injured by the caving in of a street pavement at a place where a water pipe had been laid two months and twenty days prior to the injury, during which time the street had been subjected to common use. The action was brought against the city as well as the contractor. At the trial, the judge applied the maxim, Res ipsa loquitur, and judgment was had against the contractor. The court of appeals, reversing the judgment on the ground that the maxim had no application, and that the trial court erred in so charging the jury, called attention to the facts that the suit was against the city as well as the contractor; that the street was under the care, custody, and control of the city, which was charged with the duty of keeping it in repair; that the city had its inspectors upon the job, watching the manner in which the trench was filled, and that there was no evidence tending to show that the pavement was out of repair, or that the city had knowledge of the defect. It will be observed that in ROCKWELL v. MCGOVERN the city was not joined as a defendant.

Same — other accident.

2. In an action for injury to a pedestrian by the sinking of a sidewalk, against a contractor for public work who had, in the execution of his contract, taken it up and relaid it, evidence is admissible of a previous cave-in, as tending to show the nature of the soil and the degree of care required of defendant in refilling the excavation made by him.

(May 19, 1909.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Overruled.

Plaintiff, a pedestrian on a public street of Boston, was injured by the sudden sinking under her weight of a portion of a sidewalk which had been taken up and relaid by defendant, a contractor, in the execution of public work.

Further facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. M. O. Garner for defendant.

Mr. George P. Beckford for plaintiff.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There was evidence warranting a finding that the plaintiff was in the exercise of due care. She was a traveler upon the highway with nothing in the apparent condition of the sidewalk to call for anything more than ordinary care on her part, and it could be found and must have been found that she was exercising the degree of care required of her.

There was also evidence which warranted a finding that the accident was caused by the negligent manner in which the defendant had refilled the excavation and in which he had relaid the brick. There was evidence warranting the jury in finding that, if the excavation had been properly filled and the brick properly laid, the accident would not have happened. The case was especially one for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. For a statement of the doctrine, see Thomas v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 193 Mass. 438, 440, 79 N. E. 749. Evidence of the "slide" or "cave-in" which occurred in the summer was admissible as tending to show the nature of the soil, and as bearing in that way upon the degree of care required in refilling the excavation.

We do not construe the declaration as alleging that the defendant was engaged in the work of excavation at the time of the accident, but as meaning that at some time he had been so engaged, and had so negligently carried on the work as to permit the sidewalk to drop, and that the plaintiff fell into the hole thereby caused. So construed, there was no variance between the pleadings and the proof.

Exceptions overruled.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES PUMPHREY, Plff. in Err.,
 v.

STATE OF NEBRASKA.

(— Neb. —, 122 N. W. 19.)

Criminal law — selection of jury — harmless error.

1. A judgment of conviction will not be set aside because of alleged error in overruling defendant's challenges for cause to veniremen, where none of said persons sat upon the jury, and it does not affirmatively appear that they were peremptorily challenged by him.

Same — review.

2. The trial court is vested with great discretion in excluding veniremen or talesmen from a jury, and its rulings in that Headnotes by Root, J.

Case Note. — Religious belief as qualification of witness.

The earlier cases upon this subject are collected and discussed in an exhaustive note to State v. Washington; 42 L.R.A. 553, and this note deals with the later cases only.

It appears from an examination of the cases as set forth in the earlier note that in the majority of the jurisdictions no religious belief is required to render a witness competent, and in some states even an atheist may be a competent witness. On the other hand, the rule still prevails in numerous jurisdictions that a belief in Divine punishment is necessary in order to render a witness competent, and in a number of states the credibility of a witness may be attacked upon the ground of his religious belief or disbelief.

The rigid requirement of the common law that a witness must believe in a Supreme Being and Divine punishment, in order to be competent as a witness, has been modified by statute or constitutional provision in many jurisdictions, and in some, by express constitutional provision, a witness cannot be questioned as to his religious belief. In consequence of these statutory and constitutional enactments the recent cases are not very numerous, at least as compared with those arising under the common law.

A witness who believed in God and that "all the punishment a man gets is in this world," but who did not believe in rewards and punishments after death, was held to be competent as a witness in Beeson v. Moore, 132 Ala. 391, 31 So. 456. The court particular are not subject to review unless a fair jury was not obtained.

Homicide in commission of robbery — malice.

3. Homicide committed in the perpetration of a robbery is murder in the first degree, and in such a case the turpitude of the act supplies the element of deliberate and premeditated malice.

Criminal law — opening statement — harmless error.

4. In a prosecution for the alleged commission of a crime, the defendant may waive his opening statement to the jury, but if the court compels counsel, over their objections, to make that statement, the error is without prejudice, unless it affirmatively appears from the record that defendant suffered some disadvantage thereby.

Japanese witness — obligation of oath.

5. An adult citizen of the Empire of Japan is prima facie competent to take an oath and testify in the court of this state. If a litigant conceives that such a witness said that it was not necessary to declare what the ruling would be had it been shown that the proposed witness did not believe in Divine punishment, either in this world or the next.

A witness who believed in God, but not in a future state of rewards and punishments dependent upon conduct on earth, was held properly rejected in Bell v. Bell, 34 N. B. 615.

Where two Chinamen gave in general, unmistakable evidence of a belief in the existence of the Godhead and that God was the avenger of falsehood, it was held in Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Jung (Ala.) 49 So. 434, that it was not erroneous to hold such witnesses competent to take the oath, although they evinced in some particulars crude, and perhaps absurd, ideas with respect to their belief of the source of the Godhead.

Section 7 of the Bill of Rights embodied in the state Constitution of Kansas provides that no person shall be incompetent to testify on account of religious belief; and it was consequently held in Dickinson v. Beal, 10 Kan. App. 233, 62 Pac. 724, that it was immaterial what a witness believed or did not believe in respect to the existence of God, and his belief or disbelief could not be used to impair his testimony.

So, in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mayes, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 197, 80 S. W. 1096, the court quoted with approval the following from Bush v. Com. 80 Ky. 244: "We think that this provision of the Constitution not only permits persons to testify without regard to religious belief or disbelief, but that it was intended to prevent any inquiry into that belief for the purpose of affecting credibility."

And in Brink v. Stratton, 176 N. Y. 150, 63 L.R.A. 182, 68 N. E. 148, it was held that a witness cannot be questioned as to his belief in a Supreme Being, who would punish him for false swearing, for the purpose of affecting his credibility, under constitutional provisions that no person shall be incompetent to be a witness on account of his religious belief, which provisions also abrogated all disqualification from civil rights on account of such belief.

And in Clinton v. State, 53 Fla. 43, 30 312, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 150, it was held that the common-law rule had been changed in Florida by the Constitution, and that neither a belief in a Supreme Being nor in Divine punishment is requisite to the competency of a witness. And it was held that a boy fourteen years of age, apparently not possessed of a high order of intelligence, was not necessarily incompetent because he had no knowledge of the Bible or of God, or of any punishment for telling a lie except what would be inflicted by the person with whom he lived.

Where the statute provides as the only qualification of a witness in a criminal trial that "he shall be a person of proper understanding," it was held in State v. Williams, 111 La. 179, 35 So. 505, that the competency of a witness in such a trial is not affected by his ignorance of or contempt for the 9th Commandment.

Whether a child's religious training has been so developed that he comprehends his responsibility to God for lying was held in Bright v. Com. 120 Ky. 298, 117 Am. St. Rep. 590, 86 S. W. 527, to be immaterial as affecting his competency, and the question is one of credibility only.

Whether or not young children or persons of weak intelligence are competent as witnesses is, of course, another question.

In Du Puy v. Transportation & Terminal Co. 82 Md. 408, 33 Atl. 889, 34 Atl. 910, in a separate opinion by Judge Bryan, it is stated that the 36th article of the Declaration of Rights makes it necessary for the qualification of a witness that he shall believe in the existence of God, and that under His dispensation he will be morally accountable for his acts, and be rewarded or punished therefor in this world or in the world to come; and a witness is severely criticized who, upon being asked as to his belief in God, gave no answer. This point is apparently overlooked, however, by the majority of the court.

The exclusion of Chinese as witnesses, under the act of Congress, to prove the fact that a Chinaman claiming the right as a merchant to re-enter the United States had been engaged as such for a year before his departure, was held in Li Sing v. United States, 180 U. S. 486, 45 L. ed. 634, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 449, not to be violative of constitutional guaranties. The court said that the enforcement of acts providing for the exclusion of Chinese from this country was often attended with great difficulty, arising from the loose notions entertained by witnesses of the obligation of an oath, and Congress was justified in requiring the testimony of at least one "white" witness.

does not understand, or will not give heed to, the oath administered, he may interrogate the witness before he is sworn, or prove his incompetence by other relevant evidence. If he fails to do so, the relevant testimony of the witness should be received.

Criminal law — examination of witness — discretion of court — review.

6. The trial judge in his discretion may refuse to permit a witness to testify in narrative form; and his ruling will not be reviewed unless that discretion was clearly abused.

Same — sufficiency of evidence — review.

7. It is the province of a jury in a criminal case to try the issue joined by a plea of not guilty, and, if the evidence of the state uncontradicted will support a conviction, this court will not ordinarily interfere with a verdict against the defendant.

(June 11, 1909.)

ERROR to the District Court for Douglas County to review a judgment convicting defendant of murder in the perpetration of a robbery. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John O. Yeiser and Carl E. Herring for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. W. T. Thompson, Attorney General, and Grant G. Martin, for defendant in error:

The burden of proving an alien witness incompetent is on the party objecting to him, for every person living in a Christian community is presumed to have the requisite amount of religious faith.

30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 938; R. v. Pah-Mah-Gay, 20 U. C. Q. B. 195.

Root, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff in error was convicted of committing murder while in the perpetration of a robbery, and, from a sentence of imprisonment in the state penitentiary for life, has appealed to this court.

1. The first error argued is that the court should not have overruled defendant's challenges for cause to various veniremen, because thereby he was compelled to exhaust his peremptory challenges. The bill of exceptions discloses the challenges and the court's rulings, but none of those veniremen were sworn or acted as jurors in the case. Whether they were eventually excluded by the court on its own motion by agreement of the state and defendant, upon a subsequent challenge of the state, or peremptorily by defendant, does not appear. The record, therefore, does not support the contention of defendant, and the error assigned will be resolved against him. Shumway v. State, 82 Neb. 165, 119 N. W. 517; Kennison v. State (Neb.) 119 N. W. 768.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. Defendant also claims that the court should not have excused the veniremen London, Thomas, Schmidt, and Winans. The first-named individual was excused because his answers indicated that he did not possess sufficient intelligence to perform the duties of a juror. The answers were contradictory, and the court did not err in dismissing this man from the jury. Defendant was being tried for murdering a Chinaman, and the answers of Thomas, Schmidt, and Winans indicated that because of the nationality of the deceased they would not be inclined to convict defendant. Other veniremen were excused because they had conscientious scruples against inflicting the death penalty. There is nothing in the record to indicate that twelve impartial men were not secured to act as jurors in the case, and the court ruled wisely and justly in excusing the men first referred to. Richards v. State, 36 Neb. 17, 53 N. W. 1027; State v. Miller, 29 Kan. 43. The veniremen whose voir dire examination disclosed that they were prejudiced against inflicting the death penalty were also properly excluded from the jury. Rhea v. State, 63 Neb. 461, 476, 88 N. W. 789.

3. An assault is made upon the information and the statute under which it was drawn, but the questions presented, as we understand them, have been set at rest in Morgan v. State, 51 Neb. 672, 71 N. W. 788, and Rhea v. State, supra, and will not be further considered.

4. After the jurors were sworn, the county attorney made his opening statement of the case. Defendant's counsel thereupon requested permission to waive a statement at the close of the state's evidence. To this the county attorney objected, and the court directed defendant's counsel to state the defense, although they desired to waive that statement. It has been held in other jurisdictions, in construing statutes as mandatory as § 478 of the Criminal Code, that the prosecution may introduce evidence without a preliminary opening statement. Holsey v. State, 24 Tex. App. 35, 5 S. W. 523; People v. Stoll, 143 Cal. 689, 77 Pac. 818; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 336, 86 Pac. 671. Much stronger reasons exist for permitting a defendant to waive his statement of defense, and, if he is content to rest upon his plea of not guilty, the court ought to permit him to do so. On the other hand, there is nothing in the record to indicate what statements defendant's counsel made, nor that he was prejudiced thereby. The error was without prejudice.

5. One Jack Naoi was called as a witness by the prosecution, and upon the county attorney's statement that the witness was a citizen of Japan, and could not speak the English language, an interpreter was produced. Defendant's counsel objected to the witness being sworn, for the alleged reason that Japan is a heathen country, that prima facie the witness was not qualified to take an oath, and that the state ought to remove that presumption before the oath was administered. The objection was overruled, the witness sworn, and his testimony given through the medium of an interpreter. Counsel for defendant cites Speer v. See Yup Co. 13 Cal. 73, but that case is not in point. The opinion therein was controlled by a statute absolutely disqualifying Indians as witnesses, and in People v. Hall, 4 Cal. 399, the same court had construed the word "Indian" as including the Mongolian race. Section 328 of the Civil Code (Cobbey's Anno. Stat. 1907, § 1313) provides that every human being, with certain named exceptions, of sufficient capacity to understand the obligations of an oath, is a competent witness in all cases, civil and criminal. Among the exceptions are "Indians and negroes who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them intelligently and truly." We are not inclined to adopt the reasoning of the California court that the legislature intended to include the Japanese in the foregoing exception; but, if such were the case, the answers of the witness to the questions propounded through the interpreter clearly take him without the exception. Section 365 of the Code (Cobbey's Anno. Stat. 1907, § 1350) provides: "Before testifying the witness shall be sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. The mode of administering an oath shall be such as is most binding upon the conscience of the witness." It is urged that the witness was an idolater, and would not be bound by an appeal to the "invisible God" of the Christians. In Priest v. State, 10 Neb. 393, 399, 6 N. W. 468, 469, we approved Bouvier's definition of an oath as "an outward pledge given by the person taking it, that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God." In that case an Indian was held to be incompetent to testify. The Japanese, however, are a civilized people, and have at least three recognized religions—Buddhism, Shintoism, and Christianity. No efforts were made by defendant's counsel to prove that the witness was not a Christian, nor did they examine him to ascertain whether he understood the obligations of the oath that was thereafter administered to him. The rule seems to be well established that, unless an adult witness comes within some exception to the general rule, the presumption is that he is competent to testify, and the burden is upon the objecting party to establish the contrary. This may properly be done by preliminary questions propounded to the proposed witness, or by any other of the known methods of establishing a fact. The issue will then be determined by the court. 2 Elliott, Ev. § 778; Arnd v. Amling, 53 Md. 192, 197; Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463, 506; Territory v. Yee Shun, 3 N. M. 100, 2 Pac. 84. Counsel for defendant not having established that the oath administered was not in form to bind the conscience or awaken the apprehension of the witness, this assignment of error must be overruled.

6. Defendant testified in his own behalf. His counsel, after leading him up to the assault upon Ham Pack, the deceased, requested witness to go on and relate the transaction. The county attorney objected to an answer in narrative form, and the court compelled defendant's counsel to proceed by questions and defendant by answers thereto, and error is assigned upon this ruling of the court. The subject was one within the court's discretion, and it had authority to compel the investigation to continue by questions and answers, so that the county attorney might exclude incompetent and irrelevant testimony by interposing objections to questions, rather than to break in upon a long statement of fact to object to irrelevant, immaterial, or incompetent testimony voluntarily stated by the witness. The trial judge must be permitted to exercise an almost unfettered judgment in controlling this element of practice, and its action, unless plainly a gross abuse of discretion prejudicial to the complaining litigant, will not be reviewed in this court. Clark v. Field, 42 Mich. 342, 4 N. W. 19. In the instant case the witness gave his version of the crime clearly and succinctly, and he was not in any manner prejudiced by an orderly course of trial.

7. The instructions given were fair. Those requested by defendant and not given were properly refused, and the modification of instruction numbered 5, requested by defendant, was proper. Although we have not specifically mentioned every error assigned in the petition in error, we have examined all of them, and find that none of those not referred to in detail in this opinion present any serious question for consideration.

8. It is urged that the probabilities are entirely favorable to defendant's innocence. The testimony is in hopeless conflict. That Ham Pack was murdered and robbed in the county of Douglas during the night of July 10, 1907, is established by the evidence of defendant and that of the witness Mullin. Each accuses the other of committing the crime. There is considerable evidence in the record corroborating defendant, but there are also facts and circumstances shown by the evidence that corroborated Mullin's testimony. It is unfortunate that defendant's impeaching witnesses were all inmates of the state penitentiary, although he was not responsible for their duress, and probably none others were available for his purpose. If the jurors believed Mullin, as they had a right to, they could not conscientiously do otherwise than to find defendant guilty. The questions of fact having been determined by the tribunal whose solemn duty it was to ascertain them, and there being sufficient competent evidence to sustain the verdict, we cannot interfere. The rulings of the court were not favorable to defendant, but were not prejudicially erroneous.

The defendant has received a fair trial within the meaning of the law, and the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

—

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND CIRCUIT.

LEEDS & CATLIN COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE COMPANY et al.

(83 C. C. A. 170, 154 Fed. 58.)

Patent — combination — unpatented element — infringement.

One who manufactures and sells unpatented disks for use in a talking machine in which such disks are one element of the patented combination for the production of sound infringes the combination patent as soon as the disk is used in the combination.

(Wallace, Circuit Judge, dissents.)

(May 2, 1907.)

Case Note. — Manufacture and sale of a part which in itself is unpatented, as infringement of a combination patent of which such part is an essential element.

The decision of the court in the above case was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in 213 U. S. 325, 53 L. ed. 816, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503. In affirming this decision the Supreme Court enunciated a doctrine apparently equally applicable to the right to repair, replace, or reconstruct one part or element in a patented combination. The decision is of more than ordinary importance,—especially in view of the fact that the doctrine enunciated limits, to a great extent, the right to produce an element in a combination, either for repair or replacement, as such right was formerly enunciated and supposed to exist.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review judgment imposing a fine upon defendant for violating an injunction against the infringement of a patent. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Argued before Wallace and Coxe, Circuit Judges, and Hough, District Judge.

Mr. Louis Hicks for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Horace Pettitt for defendants in error.

Hough, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendants in error, having brought suit against the plaintiff in error, alleging infringement of the Berliner Gramophone patent (No. 534,543), procured an injunction restraining the manufacture, use, or sale of sound reproducing apparatus or devices embodying the subject-matter specified in claims 5 and 35 of said patent, and also the use or employment in any way of the method set forth in claim 5 thereof (reported [C. C.] 146 Fed. 534, affirmed by this court in 79 C. C. A. 536, 148 Fed. 1022). The claims protected by such adjudications are "a sound reproducing apparatus consisting of (1) a traveling tablet having a sound record formed thereon, and (2) a reproducing stylus shaped for engagement with said record and free to be vibrated and propelled by the same, substantially as described" (No. 35); and the "method of reproducing sounds from a record of the same," consisting in "(1) vibrating a stylus, and (2) propelling the same along the record by and in accordance with the said record substantially as described" (No. 5); the "record" being identical with the "traveling tablet" above mentioned. In other words, the invention under consideration is the Victor Talking Machine, and the feature thereof here important is that its reproduction of sound depends upon the record groove cut in

Here the contention was made that a person who had purchased a patented combination from the patentee had the right to replace an unpatented element of the combination, and for such purpose to purchase such element from another than the patentee or his licensee. It was also contended that where an inventor so arranges the parts of his patented combination that it cannot satisfactorily, successfully, or usefully be continued in use without the successive replacement of one of its elements, the replacement of such element, if unpatented, by the purchaser of the combination from the patentee, is in accordance with the intention of the patentee, and not a reconstruction of the patented combination; and hence is an act within the rights of the purchaser.

These contentions were supported by prior statements of the law, both by the the traveling tablet (or disk record), compelling the movement of the stylus across the face of the record by the horizontal revolution of the record itself. The reproducer of which the stylus is an integral part is covered by claims of the Berliner patent, not now in question; but of the combination protected by claims 5 and 35 thereof the stylus alone (or rather the machine of which it forms a part) is itself patented, while the traveling tablet, sound record, or disk record, is an unpatented article.

The Leeds & Catlin Company is a manufacturer of disk records, and, since the decision of this court above referred to, asserts that it has become a dealer in another talking machine known as the "feed-device machine," which for the purposes of this cause may be regarded as not infringing any of the rights of the Victor Company under the Berliner patent. The Leeds & Catlin disk records are equally suitable for the feed-device machine and for that of the defendant in error.

Plaintiff in error was found to have sold disk records forming an essential part of the sound reproducing apparatus and devices covered by the above-mentioned claims of the Berliner patent, and was fined for such violation of injunction. This writ of error is to review the order imposing said fine.

On ample evidence, the court below found that most of the sales of Leeds & Catlin records were knowingly made by the plaintiff in error to enable the owners of Victor talking machines to reproduce such musi-

Supreme Court and the inferior Federal courts, although, such statements were not made when considering the question as it was directly presented in the case under consideration. These earlier decisions will hereafter be more specifically referred to.

In this case, however, these decisions were either distinguished or ignored. In denying or holding inapplicable the contentions referred to, the court said that the question thereby presented was single and direct, and its discussion could be brought to a narrow compass, its solution being dependent upon the application of some rudimentary principles of patent law, and added: "A combination is a composition of elements, some of which may be old and others new, or all old or all new. It is, however, the combination that is the invention, and is as much a unit, in contemplation of law, as a single or noncomposite instrument. Whoever uses it without permission is an infringer of it. Whoever contributes to such use is an infringer of it. It may be well here to get rid of a misleading consideration. It can make no difference as to the infringement or noninfringement of a combination, that one of its elements or all of its elements are unpatented. For instance, in the case at bar the issue between the parties would be exactly the same, even if the record disk were a patented article which petitioner had a license to use, or to which respondent had no rights independent of his right to its use in the combination. In other words, the fact that the disk sold by petitioner is unpatented does not affect the question involved, except to give an appearance of a limitation of the rights of an owner of a Victor machine other than those which attach to him as a purchaser. The question is, What is the relation of the purchaser to the Victor Company? What rights does he derive from it? To use the machine, of course, but it is the concession of the argument of petitioner that he may not reconstruct it. Has he a license to repair deterioration, and when does repair become reconstruction? It would seem that, on principle, when deterioration of an element has reached the point of unfitness, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

there is a destruction of the combination, and a renewal of the element is a reconstruction of the combination. And it would also seem, on principle, that there could be no license implied from difference in the durability of the elements, or periodicity in their use." In referring to the contention that it was not an infringement, because the purpose in producing the element in question was to increase the purchaser's repertory of tunes, the court said that "the right of substitution or 'resupply' of an element depends upon the same test. The license granted to a purchaser of a patented combination is to preserve its fitness for use so far as it may be affected by wear or breakage. Beyond this there is no license."

As already suggested, the doctrine enunciated in this case apparently limits the doctrine as formerly enunciated by that court as well as by the inferior Federal courts. But to just what extent, if at all, the court intended to limit the rule formerly applied, is in doubt. Indeed, this must necessarily be true, owing to the nature of the question,—it depending so much upon the facts in the particular case. The language of the court to the effect "that, on principle, when deterioration of an element has reached the point of unfitness, there is a destruction of the combination, and a renewal of the element is a reconstruction of the combination," if taken literally, would, however, seem to be in conflict with many earlier decisions on the subject.

In this connection a review of the earlier decisions may be of value. The general doctrine is that a purchaser of a patented article may use it until it is worn out, and may at his pleasure repair and improve it. Wilson v. Simpson, 9 How. 109, 13 L. ed. 66; Chaffee v. Boston Belting Co. 22 How. 217, 16 L. ed. 240; American Cotton-Tie Co. v. Simmons, 106 U. S. 89, 27 L. ed. 79, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52.

He cannot, however, under the guise of repairing and improving a patented article, practically reconstruct it. Shickle, H. & H. Iron Co. v. St. Louis Car-Coupler Co. 23 C. C. A. 433, 40 U. S. App. 728, 77 Fed. 739;

cal pieces as they wished by the combination of the Leeds & Catlin record with said machines; that the Leeds & Catlin Company made no effort to restrict the use to which their records might be put until after motion to punish for contempt had been made; that the only effort at such restriction ever made was to insert upon the face of the records a notice to the effect that such record was intended and sold for use with the "feed-device machine;" that the records sold by plaintiff in error were far more frequently bought to increase the repertory of the purchaser's Victor machine than to replace worn-out or broken records. In our opinion it is also established by the evidence that the "feed-device machine," above referred to, was not, at or before the time of beginning this proceeding, a practically or commercially known reproducer of musical or spoken sound, whereas the Victor machine, embodying the claims of the Berliner patent here under consideration, was at such times widely known and generally used, and that the plaintiff in error knew, and sold its records with the knowledge, that if its output was to be used at all by the public it would be used with the Victor machine and in the combination protected by the claims of the Berliner patent above referred to. Upon these facts it is clear that the Leeds & Catlin Company have made and sold a single element of the claims of the Berliner patent, with the intent that it should be united to the other element and complete the combination; and

Mitchell v. Hawley, 16 Wall. 544, 21 L. ed. 322.

But where any element of a combination is temporary in its relation to the whole combination, it is not infringement for a purchaser to procure or manufacture such temporary part, where the nature and characteristics of the part, in its physical relation to the combination, are such as to indicate that the inventor must have contemplated that such part would very frequently be replaced during the natural lifetime of the combination as a whole. Wilson v. Simpson and Chaffee v. Boston Belting Co. supra; Farrington v. Water Comrs. 4 Fisher, Pat. Cas. 216, Fed. Cas. No. 4,687; Goodyear Shoe Machinery Co. v. Jackson, 55 L.R.A. 692, 50 C. C. A. 159, 112 Fed. 146; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Kelsey Electric R. Specialty Co. 22 C. C. A. 1, 45 U. S. App. 95, 75 Fed. 1005; Alaska Packers Assn. v. Pacific Steam Whaling Co. 93 Fed. 672; O'Rourke Engineering Constr. Co. v. McMullen, 150 Fed. 338.

The mere fact, however, that the part in question must be more frequently renewed than other parts of the combination is not, of itself, sufficient to indicate an intention on the part of the inventor that purchasers should replace such part at their pleasure; and, generally, the substitution of an important part or element in the combination, intended to be permanent, in place of the corresponding member, is reconstruction, and is clearly distinguishable from replacing or repairing a fragile member whose life is necessarily short. American Graphophone Co. v. Amet, 74 Fed. 789.

Shickle, H. & H. Iron Co. v. St. Louis Car-Coupler Co. supra, apparently extends this doctrine to the extent that the purchaser of the patented combination, one element or part of which is more apt to break in use than the other parts, may replace such part whenever necessary because of breakage, although it is one of the essential elements in the combination, providing the remaining elements of the combination remain intact and serviceable. The right to manufacture, however, was expressly limited to this purpose.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A valuable case on this question, which contains a general summary of the law, is Morrin v. Robert White Engineering Works, 138 Fed. 68. Modified and affirmed in 74 C. C. A. 466, 143 Fed. 519. In holding that this doctrine did not extend to a vital element of the combination, the court thus stated the rules governing the right of a purchaser of a patented combination to replace parts thereof on his own authority: 1. When its consumption is the very purpose of the device. 2. When its use upon external objects must work its early destruction. 3. When it is intended to be destroyed, and is destroyed, after a single use, and becomes waste material. 4. When, in the arrangement of an element not the chief element, it is so fashioned and placed as to be specially subjected to external forces that make it peculiarly liable to breakage and wear. 5. When it is not the chief part of the combination. 6. When it is an ordinary working part, like the cam in actuating machinery, although specially adapted for the proper operation of the device, even though the cam is the most essential element in the combination. The court, however, added that a part of a combination could not be replaced by the purchaser when it is a vital element of the combination in fact and in regard to patentability,—especially when it is not intended to be of short life because of the action of external forces thereon. The foregoing summary indicates the position of the courts on the subject up to the time of that decision. A comparison of it with the doctrine enunciated by the United States Supreme Court in Leeds & C. Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co. will show a limitation on the rights of purchasers of a patented combination to repair or replace an element therein. It is to be noted, however, that it is pointed out in this case that there was no claim made that the manufacture of the disks in question was to replace broken ones or those worn out in use, and it is specifically found that the infringing disks were made to be used in connection with the patented combination to increase the purchaser's repertory of tunes.

this is infringement (Heaton-Peninsular Button-Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co. 35 L.R.A. 728, 25 C. C. A. 267, 47 U. S. App. 146, 77 Fed. 288) adopted by this court (Cortelyou v. Lowe, 49 C. C. A. 671, 111 Fed. 1005).

The facts above recited are scarcely controverted, nor is it denied that the above inference should ordinarily be drawn; but plaintiff in error seeks to avoid that result by asserting that the records under consideration are but temporary, perishable, and unpatented parts of the patented combination; and therefore under Morgan Envelope Co. v. Albany Perforated Wrapping Paper Co. 152 U. S. 425, 38 L. ed. 500, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627, free to be manufactured and sold by anyone. This contention is not supported by the evidence. Disk records are fragile (i. e., brittle and easily broken), but they are not perishable (i. e., subject to decay by their inherent qualities, or consumed by few uses or a single one). Neither are they temporary, i. e., not intended to endure; on the contrary, we find them capable of remaining useful for an indefinite period, and believe that they usually last as long as does the vogue of the sounds they record. A rifle bullet, lost by a single discharge, is a perishable and temporary part of the combination of rifle and ammunition, and probably a cartridge shell, though capable of reloading and use several times, may also be so regarded; but the missile of a toy gun, picked up and used again and again in its original form, is in no proper sense of the words either "perishable" or "temporary," though it may by repeated use wear out sooner than does the gun with which it is repeatedly combined.

Again, it is urged, inasmuch as disk records are unpatented articles of commerce, which may be used upon the feed-device machine or lawfully exported to foreign countries, that no infringement can be alleged against the maker and seller thereof, because his product may be or is in fact used by purchasers as one element of a patented combination. This argument disregards the facts established herein. It is true that the doctrine of contributory infringement has never been applied to a case where the thing contributed is one of general use, or suitable to a variety of other uses,—especially where

In holding that the manufacture of disks for this purpose was infringement the court applied the general doctrine that it is infringement to make one element in a combination with intent to bring about its use in the protected combination. This general doctrine was recognized and applied in the following cases: Schneider v. Pountney, 21 Fed. 399; Traverse v. Beyer, 23 Blatchf. 423, 26 Fed. 450; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. American-Zylonite Co. 35 Fed. 417; Schneider v. Missouri Glass Co. 36 Fed. 582; White v. Hunter, 47 Fed. 819; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co. 26 C. C. A. 107, 54 U. S. App. 1, 80 Fed. 712; Red Jacket Mfg. Co. v. Davis, 27 C. C. A. 204, 53 U. S. App. 478, 82 Fed. 432; American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds, 87 Fed. 873; Wilkins Shoe-Button Fastener Co. v. Webb, 89 Fed. 996; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Dayton Fan & Motor Co. 106 Fed. 724, affirmed in 55 C. C. A. 390, 118 Fed. 562; Canda v. Michigan Malleable Iron Co. 61 C. C. A. 194, 124 Fed. 486; Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co. v. Union Electric Mfg. Co. 147 Fed. 266; Wallace v. Holmes, 9 Blatchf. 65, Fed. Cas. No. 17,100.

Where the article claimed to be an infringement can be used only in a patented combination, the inference of the intention of the maker and seller to infringe is certain. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Ohio Brass Co. supra.

This is especially true where the infringing part is an essential element in a combination and is of no practical value or utility except as used in the combination. Traverse v. Beyer and Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Dayton Fan & Motor Co. supra.

This doctrine does not apply where the article in question is useful when not used in connection with, or as an element of, the patented combination. In such case, in order to make out a case of infringement, it must also be shown that the manufacturer knew the article was to be used in the combination. Snyder v. Bunnell, 29 Fed. 47; Robbins v. Aurora Watch Co. 43 Fed. 521; Stearns v. Phillips, 43 Fed. 792; Lane v. Park, 49 Fed. 454; Robbins v. Columbus Watch Co. 50 Fed. 545; Cary Mfg. Co. v. Standard Metal Strap Co. 57 C. C. A. 23, 120 Fed. 945; Saxe v. Hammond, Holmes 456, Fed. Cas. No. 12,411; Keystone Bridge Co. v. Phoenix Iron Co. 5 Fisher, Pat. Cas. 468, Fed. Cas. No. 7,751.

It has been held that, even though the right to repair, replace, or substitute an element does not exist because the element in question is unbroken and in perfect condition, yet where it is not the vital element in the combination the purchaser of the combination may replace such part with one of a different manufacture which is an improvement thereon, without rendering himself or the manufacturer of such part guilty of infringement, but the manufacture and use thereof must be confined strictly to the purpose mentioned. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Kelsey Electric R. Specialty Co. 22 C. C. A. 1, 45 U. S. App. 95, 75 Fed. 1005.

The right to improve is also limited to the purchaser of the combination. It is confined to his use thereof. He cannot replace an element in the patented combination, even though an improvement thereon, and place it on the market for sale as the original article improved. National Phonograph Co. v. Fletcher, 117 Fed. 149.

there is no definite purpose that the thing sold shall be employed with others to infringe a patent right. Rumford Chemical Works v. Hygienic Chemical Co. (C. C.) 148 Fed. 866, and cases cited. But this plaintiff in error is shown to have manufactured and sold records for the express purpose of supplying the users of Victor machines. Nor are such records staple articles of commerce (Cortelyou v. Charles E. Johnson & Co. 76 C. C. A. 455, 145 Fed. 935); on the contrary, they cannot be practically used within the United States except with the Victor reproducer; for we regard the feed-device machine either as a curiosity or a pretense, while the foreign trade of plaintiff in error is not interfered with by the injunction, nor affected by the order under review.

It is further contended that those who purchase the patented combination in question without restriction have a lawful right to provide themselves with unpatented records made by any person whatever, by way of replacement and repair. We perceive no substantial difference in the meaning of these words. To return to use something injured or lost, or substitute for something defaced or destroyed another thing substantially identical, is to repair. The right of general repairing has not been questioned; but what plaintiff in error has done is not to mend or better broken or other records, nor even to furnish new records identical with those originally offered by the Victor Company, but to place upon new disks such other sound records as are thought to command a market, and to induce users of the patented machine not to replace, but to increase, their stock of recorded words and music. The right of repair is measured by the right of the owner of the patented article, and such owner, when doing what is above outlined, is no more repairing his machine than is one repairing a stereopticon by changing the pictures therein to suit the whim of the person gazing through it.

The final contention against the order below admits that the record actuating the stylus is a vital part of the combination claims of the patent in question, but declares that any purchaser of the patented article may immediately substitute for even an essential element therein any other element which he conceives better suited to his purpose, and, of course, if this be true, such preferred elements may be freely manufactured and sold. We think this contention disposed of by Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Kelsey Electric R. Specialty Co. 22 C. C. A. 1, 45 U. S. App. 95, 75 Fed. 1005; for the right of substitution there recognized was specifically restricted so as 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to refuse "authority to reconstruct or rebuild a combination which has been sold by the complainant," and, whenever a Leeds & Catlin record is placed in a Victor machine, the patented combination is instantly reconstructed. The right of substitution rests upon the right to improve, pointed out by Clifford, J., in Chaffee v. Boston Belting Co. 22 How. 223, 16 L. ed. 242, and is different from the right to repair. But there is here no true substitution, and improvement is scarcely pretended. From a legal standpoint the disks of both parties are identical, because the grooving capable of actuating the reproducer is the same. What is substituted is but music or words, and what is improved, either price or novelty, is sound. These are but accidents, and no more important than the color of the disk. The true inquiry is whether the owner of a patented combination, the elements of which are durable, unbroken, and in good repair, may buy from the patentee one specimen of a single element, from an outsider an indefinite number of identical specimens of the same element, and keep and use them all, under cover of the word "substitution;" it further appearing that the element so procured and used is useful and commercially known only in respect of the said combination.

We think this cannot lawfully be done, and affirm the order below.

Wallace, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

In considering the question of infringement, claim 5 may be laid out of view, as it covers merely the function of the machine or combination of claim 35. It is more than doubtful whether the claim is not void upon its face, but assuming it to be valid, as must be done for present purposes, it is not infringed except by using the combination or machine of claim 35. A sound record is one of the parts enumerated in claim 35. It is, however, only a subsidiary part of the machine. Its relation to the machine proper is analogous to that of the sheet of paper in a typewriting machine, or the stalks of corn in a corn cutter. It is the thing which is to be operated on by the machine proper. The invention of the claim consisted in substituting a universal joint, or swinging arm, in lieu of a feed screw device, and thereby producing a new form of reproducing stylus for engaging with the record; and everything else in the machine was old. This clearly appears by the opinion in the suit in which the validity of the patent was established. Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. American Graphophone Co. (C. C.) 140 Fed. 860.

It is not questioned, and cannot be, that the plaintiffs in error were at complete liberty to make and sell such sound records as they did, provided they did not sell them to purchasers who had no right to use them in combination with the other devices enumerated in claim 35. They have been adjudged guilty of contempt because they have sold them, or threatened to sell them, to users of the so-called "Victor" machine, which embodies the combination, and who purchased their machines from the Victor Talking Machine Company, the owner of the patent. If these purchasers were at liberty to remove a sound record which originally accompanied the machine, and substitute for it a sound record sold by the plaintiffs in error, they were not infringers; and plainly the plaintiffs in error could not be infringers by assisting the purchasers to do that which they had a right to do. The real question in the case, therefore, is whether the purchasers of the Victor machines infringe the patent by using in their machines the sound records manufactured by the plaintiffs in error.

The purchaser of a patented machine from the owner of the patent acquires the right to do what he may choose with the particular machine, or any of its parts, as freely as he could if it, or none of its parts, had ever been patented. Undoubtedly he cannot, after his machine has practically ceased to exist for any useful purpose, reconstruct it by reparation, nor can he then reconstruct it by disorganizing it and substituting as new parts the dominating and vital features of the patented invention. But no question of this kind is involved in the present controversy. The only question is whether he can discard a part he does not care to use, and substitute another. When such a part is not the fundamental invention in the patented machine, I cannot doubt he is at liberty to do so. This was so decided by this court in the "trolley stand" case (Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Kelsey Electric R. Specialty Co. 22 C. C. A. 1, 45 U. S. App. 95, 75 Fed. 1005), and is not an open question in this court, unless it is proposed to reconsider and overrule that decision. He is not under any implied promise to maintain the machine as an entity, and may do whatever he chooses with any of its parts, as fully as if there had not been a patent.

Let us consider from a practical standpoint what any other rule would lead to in a case like the present. The purchaser here has bought with his machine a sound record, or half a dozen sound records, each having the necessary grooves cut in it to enable him to reproduce for his own pleasure a particular piece of music. The record is a fragile thing which is to be inserted into the machine by the user, and must be adjusted accurately to the vibrating parts, and is to be removed when he wants to reproduce a different piece of music. Any slip of the hand will destroy it. Not only is this so, but its sound reproducing qualities are lost by the contact of the needle which is vibrated in its grooves, long before the machine proper is worn out, and generally early in its normal life. Whenever either of these things happens, a machine, which costs at least $17, is disabled unless a record like one which has been sold with it at the price of 35 cents, and which anybody and everybody has a right to make, may be replaced in the machine in lieu of the useless one. If the owner of the patent stops manufacturing records, or no longer has in the market a record grooved like the one which has been destroyed, what is the purchaser to do if he has not the right to replace a record without the permission of the patent owner? The purchasers of the Victor machine cannot require the Victor Talking Machine Company to supply them with records, and can only procure them from it on such terms as it pleases to exact. If they are not at liberty to procure them elsewhere, the company can dictate how long they are to enjoy the use of their machines.

Such a rule of infringement as is adopted by the majority opinion, not only extends the monopoly of the patent owner to an unprecedented extent, but is subversive of the right of a purchaser of the patented thing to realize its fair measure of usefulness by making necessary reparations or changes by way of improvement.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States, April 19, 1909, 213 U. S. 301, 53 L. ed. 805, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

FREDA RICHARDS.

(— Okla. —, 102 Pac. 92.)

Invalid release — action — restoration of consideration.

1. Where personal injuries have been suffered, for which a liability exists, and a release therefor has been fraudulently procured for a grossly inadequate sum, an action for damages may be maintained without first obtaining a decree to rescind or to cancel the release; and the plaintiff is not precluded from attacking a release so obtained, when it is set up as a defense, because he has not restored or tendered back the amount received by him at the time the release was obtained.

Headnotes by DUNN, J.

Note. — As to right, in action at law, to attack release for fraud. see case note to Olston v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 915.

Action — condition precedent — tender of performance.

2. When, in an action at law, the tender of performance of an act is necessary to the establishment of any right against another party, such tender or offer to perform is waived or becomes unnecessary when it is reasonably certain that the offer will be refused.

Fraudulent release — evidence — sufficiency.

3. Plaintiff was injured while traveling on one of defendant's passenger trains. On the following day, while she was in bed at the railway company's hospital, away from friends or acquaintances, and still suffering from the effects of injuries sustained, the extent of which she did not know, and apparently not in a position to ascertain, she was visited by a claim agent and physician in the employ of the defendant. The agent desired to effect a settlement and release of the damages and liability, and, in order to induce plaintiff to sign such release for a grossly inadequate sum, he and the physician represented to her that her injuries were slight and temporary, when in fact they were serious and dangerous, which fact the physician knew, or should have known, had he exercised the proper care. Plaintiff believed the representations, and acted thereon by signing the release, which she would not have done had she been advised of her true condition. Held, that such facts sustained the averments of plaintiff's reply, which alleged that the release was procured by fraud, and a verdict based thereon will not be set aside on the ground that it is not sustained by sufficient evidence.

Appeal — verdict — excessiveness.

4. In an action for damages for personal injuries, where the evidence shows that plaintiff had always theretofore been well and able to make a living for herself and two children by washing, and also by running a boarding house, keeping from twelve to fifteen boarders, with the same number of rooms, in which she did all the work herself, making thereby on an average of from $65 to $75 per month, and which shows that since her injury, a period of about two and one-half years, she had been unable to earn anything, but had been compelled to pay out a great deal of money for physicians' services, suffering intense pains and agony at times as a result of her injuries, which were probably permanent, we are not able to say that a judgment for $6,300 is excessive, or shows by its amount to have been rendered as a result of passion or prejudice.

(February 23, 1909.)

ERROR to the District Court for Comanche County to review a judgment 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Flynn & Ames for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Stevens & Myers and Horace Speed for defendant in error.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error, who will be hereafter denominated "plaintiff," on the 8th day of September, 1904, began her action in the district court of Comanche county against plaintiff in error, who will hereafter be denominated "defendant," to recover damages in the sum of $10,000 for and on account of injuries received by her in a wreck while she was traveling on one of the trains of defendant. To this petition the defendant filed an answer containing a general denial and a plea of accord and satisfaction, in that plaintiff had, for a valuable consideration, discharged and released the defendant of any and all claims for damages occasioned and growing out of her alleged injury. The release thus pleaded was proven on the trial, and is as follows:

Whereas, I, Freda Richards, of Lawton, of the county of Comanche, Oklahoma territory, was injured on the 9th day of April, 1904, on a line of railroad owned or operated by the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, while a passenger on train 408, which was wrecked near Seneca, Missouri, April 9, 1904, under circumstances which I claim rendered such company liable in damages, although such liability is denied by such railroad company, and the undersigned being desirous to compromise, adjust, and settle the entire matter: Now, therefore, in consideration of the sum of one hundred and no-100 dollars ($100) to me this day paid by the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, in behalf of itself and other companies whose lines are owned or operated by it, I do hereby compromise said claim, and do release and forever discharge the said St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, and all companies whose lines are leased or operated by it, their agents and employees, from any and all liability for all claims for all injuries, including those that may hereafter develop, as well as those now apparent, and also do release, and discharge them of all suits, actions, causes of action, and claims for injuries and damages which I have or might have, arising out of the injuries above referred to, either to my person or property; and do hereby acknowledge full satisfaction of all such liability and causes of action. I further represent and covenant that, at the time of receiving said payment and signing and sealing this release, I am of lawful age and legally competent to execute it, and that, before signing and sealing it, I have fully informed myself of its contents and executed it with full knowledge thereof.

Given under my hand and seal this 9th day of April, A. D. 1904.

Freda Richards. [Seal.]

To this answer and release, plaintiff replied generally: That, owing to her injuries, she was greatly shocked and mentally disturbed; that immediately after the wreck she was taken to the defendant's hospital at Springfield, Missouri, where the agents of the defendant examined her the same day and within a short time after her arrival, and, for the purpose of obtaining the same and of inveigling and deceiving her into executing it, the physician and the claim agent of the defendant stated to plaintiff that she was but slightly injured and would recover her health in a short time, and that her injuries consisted only of slight bruises and the shock and jar inflicted at the time of the wreck. This is followed by a statement that the representations were false and untrue, that the plaintiff relied upon and believed the representations, and was induced thereby to sign the release, and that, had she known that they were false, she would not have signed it. On the case coming on for trial before a jury, counsel for plaintiff made his opening statement, in which he stated facts supporting the petition and reply, whereupon counsel for defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings and statement of counsel for plaintiff for the reason that the same failed to state facts sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff, and that they did show facts which entitled defendant to a judgment. This was overruled and the ruling excepted to. Whereupon counsel for defendant made his statement to the jury, in which he admitted the wreck and that plaintiff was a passenger on the train. He denied, however, that there was any negligence on the part of the company causing the wreck, but that the same came from unforeseen causes.

In reference to the release signed by plaintiff, counsel stated that, "after the wreck, and while Mrs. Richards was in full possession of all of her faculties, she entered into a contract with the plaintiff, by which her claim was compromised and settled in full, and by virtue of that compromise and settlement she received $100, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

which she still retains. The contract was entered into, was in writing, and signed by her. We think the evidence will show that the release was fairly entered into. She was not induced by fraud to execute it, and that is a full, complete discharge and settlement of the claim now brought forward." On the offering of evidence, counsel for defendant again objected to any evidence in support of the pleadings, and exception to the overruling of this motion was properly reserved. Practically the same questions were raised again by counsel for defendant on the conclusion of the evidence for plaintiff. A demurrer lodged thereto, alleging its insufficiency to support plaintiff's claim, was overruled and exception saved. Plaintiff received the $100 in the manner as stated, on the signing of the release. No mention of the same was made in her petition. The release was pleaded as a complete defense in the answer of defendant and relied upon on the trial, and is almost the sole reliance in this court. Its inadequacy, on account of the alleged fraudulent manner in which it was procured, was set up in the reply, and no tender, either in the pleading or elsewhere, by the plaintiff to the defendant, was made of the money received. The court, after informing the jury that if it found the defendant was liable to plaintiff by reason of the wreck, and that the contract or release offered in evidence by the defendant was fraudulent and therefore void, then instructed it that "you should then further consider the evidence in this case to determine what, if any, damage the plaintiff is entitled to recover for, and, if you find from the evidence that the $100 received by the plaintiff at the time of the execution of contract or release was equal or greater than the damage that she sustained, your verdict should be for the defendant." Verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $6,200. Judgment was entered thereon, to reverse which proceedings in error were begun in the supreme court of the territory of Oklahoma, and the case is now before us for our consideration and review by virtue of our succession to the duties and jurisdiction of that court.

Several questions were presented by counsel on the foregoing facts. The principal one, however, grows out of the release, the conditions under which it is alleged to have been secured, and the fact that the consideration received was not returned, or offered to be returned, prior to the institution of the action. The position of counsel for defendant on this matter will probably be best stated by quoting from their brief. "In cases involving contracts which are attacked because of fraud, there is a fundamental distinction between that fraud which enters into the execution of the contract, and that which enters into its procurement. By fraud in the execution is meant that fraud which induces a person to sign an agreement which they do not really intend to make, such as signing a release by representing that it is not a release, but only a receipt for doctor's bills, or some other instrument. By fraud in the procurement is meant those false representations by which a person is induced to sign an instrument, the contents of which they understand perfectly, but which they would not sign but for false representations as to collateral matters. The courts hold that, where the fraud enters into the execution of the contract, there is no contract, because the minds of parties have not met, and that, consequently, the consideration need not be returned; but where the fraud does not affect the execution of the instrument, but only collateral matters inducing the party to sign it, the consideration must be returned." In support of this we are cited a great many authorities so holding, and to Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. (Okla.), 1903, §§ 825-827, on rescission. Section 827, supra, provides: "Rescission, when not effected by consent, can be accomplished only by the use, on the part of the party rescinding, of reasonable diligence to comply with the following rules: First: He must rescind promptly, upon discovering the facts which entitle him to rescind, if he is free from duress, menace, undue influence, or disability, and is aware of his right to rescind; and second: He must restore to the other party everything of value which he has received from him under the contract; or must offer to restore the same, upon condition that such party shall do likewise, unless the latter is unable or positively refuses to do so."

The foregoing quotation from counsel's brief, the provisions of the statute, and the numerous authorities presented by each side, all of which we are called on to consider and apply to the facts in this case, present an invitation to enter a field of legal exploration, of which a commentator thereon (8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. p. 179) says: "The authorities are in hopeless conflict on the question of the necessity for the releasor to return or tender the consideration upon repudiating a release of damages for personal injuries, procured from him by fraud. It has been held, on the one hand, that the releasor cannot maintain an action of damages for the injuries sustained until he has had the release rescinded in an equitable proceeding instituted for that purpose. On the other hand, it has been held that the releasor may repudiate the release and bring an action for the injuries without returning or tendering back the money paid him as a consideration for executing the release. Between these extreme views a number of different and conflicting rules have been laid down by the courts." Counsel for plaintiff take the position that neither the equitable suit mentioned nor the return of or the tender of the money received is necessary, and cite numerous authorities to sustain the same. To endeavor to reconcile the conflicting opinions rendered by the different courts on this proposition would be to assume a task in which there is no promise or prospect of accomplishment. In this situation, it of necessity follows that we are driven to elect which, in our judgment, is the correct rule; nor in this are we aided by any previous decision of this jurisdiction.

In our judgment the rule which should govern the procedure in this class of cases is laid down in the following authorities, as there is absolutely nothing involved on the one hand but the money consideration paid, and, on the other, the privilege of asserting a right which plaintiff contends she was induced to apparently waive by the fraudulent representations of the other party, and we can see no good reason why, rights of third parties not being involved nor endangered, and the action being between the immediate actors, a court of law, under the procedure as administered in the Code states to-day, is not vested with power to give full and ample relief: Olston v. Oregon Water Power & R. Co. (Or.) 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 915, 96 Pac. 1095; Wagner v. National L. Ins. Co. 33 C. C. A. 121, 61 U. S. App. 601, 90 Fed. 395; Baird v. Howard, 51 Ohio St. 57, 22 L.R.A. 846, 46 Am. St. Rep. 550, 36 N. E. 732; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Goodholm, 61 Kan. 758, 60 Pac. 1066; Sanford v. Royal Ins. Co. 11 Wash. 653, 40 Pac. 609; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Smith, 82 Ark. 105, 100 S. W. 884; Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Buzis, 213 Ill. 341, 72 N. E. 1060; Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Cade (Tex. Civ. App.) 93 S. W. 124; Pawnee Coal Co. v. Royce, 184 Ill. 402, 56 N. E. 621; Girard v. St. Louis Car Wheel Co. 123 Mo. 358, 25 L.R.A. 514, 45 Am. St. Rep. 556, 27 S. W. 648; 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 95. Some of the cases which we have cited, it will be noted, are those where there was, as some of the authorities say (Cutler v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co. 128 N. C. 477, 39 S. E. 30), fraud in the factum, and others where the fraud was in the treaty. Counsel for defendant concede in the former class of cases it is not necessary to go into equity to have the release set aside, but insist that in the latter class of cases it is necessary. The and did this by improper methods. The release would not be held invalid for fraud where this is not the case. And, third, the jury found the release was fraudulent, and the defendant owed plaintiff more money than this amount at the time it was paid, and has given credit for it on its verdict, so, in either event, the plaintiff would be entitled to keep the consideration, and in either event the defendant is not injured. The plaintiff, when she brought her suit, submitted for the determination of the court the entire controversy; first, whether the release was void as to her, and, second, whether the company was liable for her damage, and it was not necessary, in order that she might have these things determined by the court in this action, that she either tender or plead a tender of the amount received by her, for, as is said in the case of Knappen v. Freeman, 47 Minn. 491, 50 N. W. 533, from the supreme court of Minnesota, written by Mr. Chief Justice Gilfillan: "The willingness of the party to perform those terms which the court may think it right to impose as the price of any relief is sufficiently shown by his submitting his cause to the court, which has the power to impose the proper terms." The facts out of which that case arose are substantially as follows: The defendant, Freeman, for certain considerations, including the note in suit, was induced, by false and fraudulent representations as to its character, to purchase certain land. The suit being brought to enforce payment of the note, defendant set these matters up in the answer, and in a separate count set out a counterclaim for money paid for taxes, and interest on a certain loan secured by mortgage on the land, assumed by the defendant, and also interest paid on the note then in suit, prior to the ascertainment of the fraud. No tender or reconveyance was pleaded therein, and judgment was asked for the various sums paid, with interest. It was claimed that the defendant's position was untenable because there was no allegation of a tender or disaffirmance, nor any demand for a rescission of the transaction. In denying the contention of plaintiff, the learned chief justice said: "All that is required to justify a rescission by the court is that the contract is one that a court of equity will cancel or rescind on the ground alleged, that such ground of rescission exists, and that the plaintiff has not lost his right to a rescission by affirmance, laches, or otherwise. It was one of the rules of pleading in courts of equity, in suits where the court might impose conditions on the plaintiff, or give the defendant affirmative relief, as in suits for specific performance, cancellation of instruments, rescission of contracts, or for accounting, that the plaintiff in his bill should offer to do whatever the court might deem equitable. This was upon the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity. But, although at one time a bill was demurrable if it omitted this offer, the requirement was in its nature formal. The offer was not one of the facts constituting the cause of action, any more than was the prayer for process. It may be doubted that the rule referred to still exists in courts where equity forms of pleading are retained. Columbian Government v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. 94; Wells v. Strange, 5 Ga. 22. These were suits for accounting. Jervis v. Berridge, L. R. 8 Ch. 351, was a suit for cancellation or rescission, and the offer in the bill was held not necessary. However it may be where equity forms of pleading are retained, it cannot be so under the code system, which requires a complaint to contain only a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action and the prayer for relief. See Coolbaugh v. Roemer, 32 Minn. 445, 21 N. W. 472. The willingness of the party to perform those terms which the court may think it right to impose as the price of any relief is sufficiently shown by his submitting his cause to the court, which has the power to impose the proper terms."

Nor should it be forgotten or overlooked in the consideration of this class of cases that they are not strictly actions brought for rescission. Hence the statute cited does apply. The contract or release is a mere incident to the suit. The cause of action grows out of an independent antecedent fact, and the release is simply a matter of evidence in defense to the plaintiff's claim of right to prosecute. Nor does it matter that plaintiff, in the release itself, waived, for a consideration, the right to maintain a suit for damages inflicted, if in fact the release was procured through fraud, for no contract is made except the parties thereto retain within themselves the right to assail it on the ground of fraud. Even a stipulation to the effect that any false and fraudulent representations inducing the other to enter into it should not affect its validity would of itself be of no validity. The law will not give effect to a stipulation, if fraudulently entered into, that would grant immunity to iniquity and fraud. 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 474.

In addition to this, to our mind, the entire record shows defendant relied upon the validity of this release, and would have refused a tender had one been made. The release is pleaded in its answer. In the opening statement to the jury, counsel recited it and stated: "The release was fairly entered into, that she was not induced by fraud to execute it, and that it is a full and complete discharge and settlement of the claim now brought forward." The release was taken from plaintiff by the defendant for the purpose of settling the damage and of pleading it in bar of an action, should releasor bring one. We find that she brought such a suit. We find the release pleaded and urged, insisted and relied upon throughout the entire proceeding, and from the record we are forced to the conclusion, and we believe that we are safe in saying and finding, as did the supreme court of Missouri in the case of Girard v. St. Louis Car Wheel Co. 123 Mo. 358-371, 25 L.R.A. 514, 45 Am. St. Rep. 556, 27 S. W. 648, which was similar to the one at bar, where the defendant had taken a release and had been sued, and plaintiff had not paid or offered to tender back, that "the attitude of the defendant throughout, as well as before, the litigation, its plea of release, its setting aside in an envelope the wages of plaintiff each week, all indicate that any tender by plaintiff of repayment for the medical services would have been useless. Since the execution of that paper, defendant has continuously asserted and relied upon its validity, and still asserts it. It has been decisively held in other cases that no preliminary tender can be insisted upon as a bar to legal action, where the facts show that the tender would have been rejected. Deichmann v. Deichmann (1871) 49 Mo. 107; Westlake v. St. Louis (1882) 77 Mo. 47, 46 Am. Rep. 4. In such a state of the facts, a tender would be what Mr. Bigelow calls an idle ceremony. Bigelow, Fr. (1888) p. 424." Other authorities supporting this same principle are as follows: Hunt, Tender, § 52; Hills v. National Albany Exch. Bank, 105 U. S. 319, 26 L. ed. 1052; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; United States v. Edmondston, 181 U. S. 500-508, 45 L. ed. 971-976, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718; Chinn v. Bretches, 42 Kan. 316-319, 22 Pac. 426; Herberger v. Husman, 90 Cal. 583, 27 Pac. 428; Pierce v. Lukens, 144 Cal. 397, 77 Pac. 996; Williams v. Patrick, 177 Mass. 160, 58 N. E. 583; Ashley v. Rocky Mountain Bell Teleph. Co. 25 Mont. 286, 64 Pac. 766; Brock v. Hidy, 13 Ohio St. 306; Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254-276; Merrill v. Pike, 94 Minn. 186, 102 N. W. 393; 1 Elliott, Gen. Pr. § 323.

In the case of Brock v. Hidy, supra, the court says of the necessity of making a tender that "where the vendor claims to have rescinded, repudiates, and denies the obligation of the contract, placing himself in such a position that it appears that, if the tender were made, its acceptance would be 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) refused, then no tender need be made by the vendee. To this effect, the authorities are very full,"—citing authorities.

In the case of Webster v. French, supra, from the supreme court of the state of Illinois, the court says: "A party filing a bill submits to everything that is required of him; and the practice of the court is not to require the party to make a formal tender; whereas, in this case, from the facts stated in the bill, or from the evidence, it appears the tender would have been a mere form, and that the party to whom it was made would have refused to accept the money."

In the case of Hills v. National Albany Exch. Bank, supra, from the Supreme Court of the United States, the court, in the syllabus, laid down, in our judgment, the rule that should govern in all cases of this character, that "when the tender of performance of an act is necessary to the establishment of any right against another party, such tender or offer to perform is waived or becomes unnecessary when it is reasonably certain that the offer will be refused."

The case of Merrill v. Pike, supra, from the supreme court of Minnesota, was one where, as in the case at bar, a release was given for personal injuries. Suit was brought by the injured party, the money was not tendered nor returned. Under the facts whereby the release was secured, the court held that the contract was voidable, though not void, and on the question of the necessity of plaintiff returning or tendering the return of the money the court said: "Plaintiff was not required to repudiate the contract nor return the money after being notified of the claim of settlement by service of the answer. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58. From the nature of the defense pleaded, it is evident that defendants intended to hold plaintiff to the contract, if possible, and that they would have refused a tender of the money; and plaintiff was not required to do an unnecessary thing."

We therefore believe, with the record before us, we take no hazard in saying that it is as reasonably certain as a thing may well be that any offer made by plaintiff would have been refused. We believe counsel for defendant will concede it. If so, then why return this case for another trial that an empty, vain ceremony may be performed? And this conclusion ought not, as suggested by District Judge Hanford in the case of Hill v. Northern P. R. Co. (C. C.) 104 Fed. 754, work to the detriment of future settlements of this character. It should, however, induce people having them to be less speedy, and to enter into them with injured persons only in the presence of some representative of theirs, so that all parties will be more nearly on an equal footing. This would bring about equitable settlements. They would not then be attacked; but, if they are, the defendant would be thrice armed in the contest, and the plaintiff, and not the defendant, would more often be shown to be in the wrong. To hurry a claim agent to the bedside of a bruised and broken human being, still suffering from shock, dazed by the horror of the accident, stupefied by opiates or stimulants, alone except for those in the employ of the party liable, produces, almost without exception, a settlement in which the proponent dictates the terms, and produces a situation which is almost an invitation for a contest. When reason returns to the injured, and the harm inflicted is discovered, then the asserted wrong, whether true or not, done at the settlement, is made clearly apparent. If the settlement is unfair, an additional burden is likely to be placed upon the defendant to that actually due it, while, if the settlement is honest and fair, and the injured party really received all he was entitled to, the surroundings at the time of the settlement are generally sufficient to defeat and destroy it. So that, as we have seen, in the final analysis, all of such settlements, in practice and in fact, depend for their vitality and conclusiveness upon the subsequent acquiescence of the releasor, and the releasee should, from the highest promptings and motives of self-interest, see to it that they are above suspicion, so that, when assailed, the very circumstances under which they are secured do not, irrespective of merit, defeat them.

Three additional questions are discussed by counsel for defendant. The first of these is that the evidence did not sustain the theory of plaintiff, that the release was secured by fraud. The second is that plaintiff had failed to show that her injuries were the result of the wreck. The third is that the damages allowed were excessive, in that they appeared to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. In order to properly discuss these questions, it will be necessary to review the evidence, and this we shall briefly do: The wreck occurred on the 9th of April, 1904, in the Indian territory. The plaintiff at the time was riding in one of the passenger coaches of the company which was turned over on its side; she being struck by a seat and perhaps by some of the passengers falling on her. She fainted at the time of the accident. When consciousness returned she was lying under a seat amidst the glass from the windows. On being carried out of the coach, and placed on some cushions on the ground, she remained there with the other passengers from 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening, the time of the wreck, until about 3 o'clock in the morning, at which time she was placed upon a relief train and taken to the company's hospital at Springfield, Missouri, where she arrived somewhere between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning. While lying on the ground at the scene of the accident, she was given a hypodermic injection and some whisky, as she remembers it, something like three times. At the hospital, after drinking some coffee, she was visited by the physician and claim agent of the company. The physician examined her to ascertain the extent of her injuries, and she testifies that the doctor told her that she was not hurt at all, that her injuries consisted of slight bruises and the shock only, and that she was frightened and nervous and would get over it in a few days, probably a week. That, after he examined her and told her there was nothing the matter, she asked him why it was her side hurt her so, and he told her that it was just from the fall, and that in a week or two she would be all right, and not to worry. After he was there she was given another hypodermic injection to relieve the pain which was coming back on her. Something like an hour or so, the claim agent returned and proposed a settlement, informing her, as did the physician, that she was frightened, and that her hurt consisted of bruises and the shock. She informed him that she would be willing to settle, but, if she knew she was injured, that she would not, that she was a widow and had children to support. The claim agent thereupon told her that, if a settlement was made, it had to be right away, because he had to leave on some business. That she had no other physician make an examination of her excepting the company's physician. That at the time she signed the release she believed the statements of the claim agent and the physician, and, had they not been made, she would not have signed it. The injury of which plaintiff complained was prolapsus of the uterus, with other bruises and injuries of an internal and external character.

A case which seems to us to be apparently fully in point on this situation of the evidence is that of Jones v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 32 Tex. Civ. App. 198, 73 S. W. 1082, written by Chief Justice Garrett. It was a suit for personal injuries to plaintiff's wife. Demurrer was sustained to the petition, which set up: "That defendant's servants, to wit, Drs. Peeples, Phillips, and H. Waters, and defendant's claim agent, Evans, examined plaintiff's wife as to the extent of her injuries within a short time after said collision, and before the signing of the release, each of whom recognizing and knowing defendant's liability to plaintiff for said injuries; that for the purpose of obtaining a release from plaintiff for the damages aforesaid, and for the purpose of deceiving plaintiff, and inveigling him to execute a release for said injuries, the said physicians and claim agent, acting for and representing said defendant, stated to plaintiff that his wife was only slightly injured, and that she would be well in a few weeks, and would be able to do and perform her usual duties; that she was not severely hurt, that she had not sustained any injuries except those apparent upon her person, which consisted of slight bruises and the shake-up attending the sudden jar at the time of the collision, which statements and representations were untrue, and known to be untrue to said physicians at the time. If they were not so known, they should have been known to them at the time, and could have been known by their skill as physicians. That plaintiff believed said representations to be true at the time, and acted upon them and each of them in making and executing the release hereinafter referred to. That said statements and representations were untrue, and made for the sole purpose to induce him to sign said release. That plaintiff did not know of their falsity, and had no means of knowing the extent of said injury except through said physicians, who were acting as the agents of the defendant. That he believed the statements of the physicians and claim agent at the time he executed said release. That he would not have signed said release if he had known the falsity of said statements, made as aforesaid. That he relied solely upon the truthfulness of the representations made by defendant's physicians. That his wife was and is permanently injured to the extent of $15,000." The holding of the court on this matter was as follows: "Where the averments of plaintiff's petition showed that the claim agent and three physicians in the employ of the defendant company made false representations to plaintiff and his wife as to the extent of her injuries, for the fraudulent purpose of procuring a release of damages, when they knew or should have known of the severity of the injuries, it was error for the court to sustain a demurrer to the pleading. Where one states a fact which is or should be within his knowledge, intending that it be believed and acted on as true, he should not ordinarily be heard to say that the other party ought not to have believed him; there being nothing to show to such other the falsity of the representations."

Upon the proposition as to whether or not the injuries suffered by plaintiff were the result of the wreck, the evidence is somewhat conflicting, but plaintiff testified affirmatively thereto, and there was some corroborative proof. The jury evidently accepted this evidence. In such a case, the familiar rule obtains that "where a cause is tried to a jury, and a general verdict returned and judgment rendered on the verdict, and the evidence is conflicting and contradictory, and there is competent evidence to sustain the verdict, this court will not undertake to weigh the evidence or to determine the preponderance, but will sustain the verdict of the jury." Kuhl v. Supreme Lodge S. K. & L. 18 Okla. 383, 89 Pac. 1126. In our judgment, there is sufficient competent evidence to sustain the verdict.

The last question to which counsel for defendant address themselves, and to which our attention is invited, is that the magnitude of the judgment is evidence of the fact that it was given under the influence of passion and prejudice. The amount of injury received by the plaintiff and the amount of money redress defendant, if liable, should pay therefor, is practically altogether a matter of judgment, the exercise of which is peculiarly the province of a jury. A court should interfere only when it can say from the facts proven in the case that this power has been clearly erroneously exercised, and that the judgment is of such amount that there is a deficiency of evidence to sustain it. The facts in the case at bar show: That, prior to the accident, the plaintiff had always been well, that she had made a living for herself and two children by washing and running a boarding house, where she had from twelve to fifteen boarders, with the same number of rooms, and did all the work herself. That in this occupation she made from $65 to $75 per month, and since her injuries she had not been able to earn anything at all. That she left the hospital for St. Louis on the same day that she signed the release, being put into a berth and informed that a physician was next to her if she required help. That she remained in St. Louis about three weeks, returned to Lawton, still sick, being confined to her bed from the injuries. That she was constantly under the treatment of a physician until the December following, when she went to St. Louis again, remaining there one month, returning to Lawton, and then left for Arizona, where she remained a year and eight months, taking treatment for her lungs, which had not troubled her prior to the injuries received in the wreck. While there, she was in the hospital for over four months, paying $60 a month for nurse and doctor bills. That she had paid to the physician in Arizona $270, and yet owed him $100. That to another physician she had paid altogether $95 for treatment of the prolapsus, on account of which she had, since the time of the injury, suffered intense pains, suffering agony at times. Under these circumstances, we are asked to say that the verdict is excessive. We cannot do so. Other courts have had similar cases before them with the same question, and reference is here made to a few of them to show that our conclusion is not without precedent. Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Doan, 93 Ill. App. 247; Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Banfill, 107 Ill. App. 254; Wynn v. Central Park, N. & E. R. Co. 38 N. Y. S. R. 181, 14 N. Y. Supp. 172; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. McDonnell, 91 Ill. App. 488; O'Neill v. Kansas City, 178 Mo. 91, 77 S. W. 64. Many other cases might be cited, but the measure of damages sustained in these, and the discussion in connection therewith, justify us in holding valid, and not excessive, the returns made here.

The language of Chief Justice Horton of the supreme court of Kansas is entirely applicable (Union P. R. Co. v. Young, 19 Kan. 488-493): "The trial court, whose imperative duty it was to set aside the verdict, or reduce its amount, if the jury erred from prejudice or other cause, has approved the same, and added its sanction to the award. The question was one peculiarly proper for the jury to determine; and, although the verdict is large,—larger, perhaps, than any member of this court would, as a juror, have returned,—we cannot, in view of all the circumstances, say that such damages are so excessive as to strike the mind at first blush as being the result of bias or prejudice. To interfere, we must say that the jury acted under some improper influence or bias in the matter. This we cannot say. . . . The trial judge had some opportunity to determine from the defendant in error while on the witness stand as to his capacity for business, and his general intelligence, which is denied to us; and, considering all the facts in the case, we do not feel at liberty of saying that the verdict of the jury is so flagrant, or outrageously unjust, as to require of us, as a reviewing court, to set it aside and grant a new trial solely for excessive damages."

The judgment of the trial court is accordingly affirmed.

Kane, Ch. J., and Turner, Williams, and Hayes, JJ., concur.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following Per Curiam response was handed down June 1, 1909:

The petition filed for a rehearing in this case resulted in further oral argument on the part of both parties, and the filing of a 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

number of additional briefs, in which many of the authorities pro and con were again collated, considered, and discussed. No proposition was raised, however, that had not previously received the attention and consideration of the court in its original opinion. The primary contention that plaintiff could not maintain her suit without refunding or tendering to defendant the $100 received by her at the time of the executing of the release is again insisted upon. The matter has again had our careful consideration, and, while we agree with counsel for defendant that there are a number of authorities—perhaps the greater in number—sustaining their claims, yet the procedure adopted in the trial of this cause has received recognition and sanction at the hands of eminent courts, and we believe substantial justice will usually be effected thereby. It would be futile to attempt in this or any other case of similar character to so decide it that it would be in harmony with all the adjudications.

In the argument on rehearing, counsel for defendant again insisted that the Oklahoma statute on rescission controlled, and cited us to a number of authorities of California where analogous questions had, as was claimed, been before that court under a statute like this one, and been determined in conformity with their contention. Some of the cases cited, to our mind, were not applicable, while the declarations of the court in the case of Hammond v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 522, 20 Am. St. Rep. 239, 24 Pac. 837, met with the dissent of Justice Works and Chief Justice Beatty, and another one of the cases on which counsel relied (Marten v. Paul O. Burns Wine Co. 99 Cal. 355, 33 Pac. 1107) was repudiated and overruled by the highest court of that state, in the case of Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 82 Pac. 436. No case where the facts were like those in this case was referred to. The case which, in our judgment, most nearly meets defendant's claims of those cited, is that of Westerfeld v. New York L. Ins. Co. 129 Cal. 68, 58 Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667. The original opinion in that case was written by Commissioner Britt, and concurred in by one other commissioner. The facts in that case were, briefly, as follows: Plaintiffs were executors of the last will of William Westerfeld. The defendant was an insurance company. In 1890, the defendant issued to plaintiffs' testator a policy of insurance upon his life in the sum of $10,000. Thereafter negotiations were entered into by the insured with the agent of the company to exchange this policy for another one of the same amount on a cheaper plan. The proposed policy was delivered to the deceased with, it was claimed, the intention of having the earned cash value of the first policy applied on the premiums of the second one. Decedent was in possession of both policies at the time of his death. His executors demanded payment of the amount of the second policy, which was refused on the ground that the same never was in effect, that it had been delivered to the decedent for examination only, that he never accepted it or paid any premium thereon, and that the first policy had become void because of decedent's failure to pay the fifth annual premium, which, had an exchange been effected, as contemplated, and the new policy legally delivered and accepted, would have been covered by the earned value of such surrendered first policy. The executors were induced to deliver both policies to the company upon the payment of approximately one fourth of the face value of the one sued on. After receiving this money, plaintiffs brought suit, alleging that they were induced to accept the money and surrender the policy by the false and fraudulent representations of the defendant. Suit was brought on the second policy, setting up these facts. Defendant answered, admitting making the representations alleged by plaintiffs, denied their falsity, averred that they were true, and relied upon the force and effect of the release secured. It was also contended on the part of defendant, as in the case at bar, that the action could not be maintained without rescinding the contract or compromise, and restoring, or offering to restore, the money they had received as the fruits thereof. Trial was had, and plaintiffs were given judgment. The case was appealed, and, under the decision of Commissioner Britt, the judgment of the trial court was reversed, with the statement: "Admitting that there is some conflict of authority, we are yet satisfied that the conclusion we have reached accords with the strong preponderance of adjudication, both in this state and elsewhere." When the case was heard by the supreme court, the rehearing was granted, as stated by Temple, Justice, "solely because it was thought by some members of the court that the complaint stated a cause of action for damages for deceit; it having been held in the department opinion that it did not." The supreme court concurred in the conclusion reached by the commissioners, that plaintiffs could not maintain their action, except that they first make restitution or tender before suit, but it also found and held that the representations upon which plaintiffs relied for recovery, to wit, that the policy in question was never delivered to the decedent, and that it was merely given to him to be finally delivered if he approved it and paid the premium, which he did not do, and that the deceased did not accept it, were not fraudulent, but true. The defendant also defended on an additional ground, which was likewise sustained by the court, to wit, that the agent who made the contract with the assured was without authority to do so, and that the same had not been ratified by the company. The court found as true both of these defenses, which amounted to a complete refutation of any right or claim in plaintiffs, and, it seems to us, rendered unnecessary and superfluous the passing on the question of whether or not it was necessary to make a tender. Indeed, the court says: "The facts proven do not show fraud, and plaintiffs could not recover in any form of action."

In the case at bar, under the instructions of the court, it was necessary, to recover, for the jury to find there was fraud in the procurement of the release, and for the court, in overruling the motion for new trial, to confirm this finding, and we have held in this court that the evidence reasonably tended to sustain this conclusion. In this view of the situation, in our judgment, the force of the case is, to a considerable extent, broken. Moreover, in later cases, that court, in dealing with the same statute, has, we believe, properly announced exceptions to it which are so broad and sweeping as to embrace and recognize as proper the procedure adopted in this case. One of the cases of this character is that of California Farm & Fruit Co. v. Schiappa-Pietra, 151 Cal. 732, 91 Pac. 593, in which the court, quoting approvingly from the case of Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 47 Pac. 369, 52 Pac. 797, said: "There are exceptional cases where restoration, or an offer to restore, before suit brought, is not necessary. As, for instance, where the thing received by the plaintiff is of no value whatever to either of the parties; or where the plaintiff has merely received the individual promissory note of the defendant; or where the contract is absolutely void; or where it clearly appears that the defendant could not possibly have been injuriously affected by a failure to restore; or where, without any fault of plaintiff, there have been peculiar complications which make it impossible for plaintiff to offer full restoration, although the circumstances are such that a court of chancery may, by a final decree, fully adjust the equities between the parties;—and it will be found that such instances, or others similar to them in principle, are those to which the authorities cited by appellants generally relate."

The list of authorities cited and quoted in the original opinion could be much extended, but we call attention to the cases of Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Rosenfield, 37 C. C. A. 96, 95 Fed. 358; The Oriental v. Barclay, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 193, 41 S.

W. 117; and Union P. R. Co. v. Harris, 158 U. S. 326, 39 L. ed. 1003, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843. In the case of Union P. R. Co. v. Harris, supra, from the Supreme Court of the United States, the practice which was adopted in the case at bar, of making an allowance on the recovery of the amount received for the release, was sanctioned. It was a matter of debate in that case whether or not the release was deliberately entered into. This question was left to the jury, with the charge that, if they made an allowance to plaintiff, they should deduct from it what he had received. The same question was elaborately treated in the case of The Oriental v. Barclay, supra, in which Justice Finley, for the court of civil appeals of Texas, said: "The plaintiff's case here is a suit at law for damages flowing from an alleged tort. There are no allegations in her pleadings which invoke the exercise of the equitable powers of the court. She attacks the release pleaded in bar of her right of recovery as being without consideration, fraudulent, and void. The truth of these allegations a court of law has jurisdiction to determine, and when found to be true, will disregard the instrument, as being without legal effect. It is also true that courts with equity powers will protect the equitable rights of the defendant arising upon his answer, regardless of the nature of the relief sought by the plaintiff, and will make all necessary orders to that end, and may require a tender for that purpose. Pom. Eq. Jur. § 388. In a suit for rescission, the rule is that the admitted consideration received must be tendered back, to the end that all parties may be protected. Where such tender appears not to be necessary for the protection of all parties, the reason for its requirement ceases, and it will not be enforced by the courts. State v. Snyder, 66 Tex. 698, 18 S. W. 106; Terrill v. Dewitt, 20 Tex. 260; McCarty v. Moor, 50 Tex. 287; Clay v. Hart, 49 Tex. 436. In cases where equitable rights arise out of the defenses urged by the defendants, and where the subject-matter of the litigation is such that the court, by its final judgment, may give full protection without the requirement of a tender, no good reason is perceived for the making of such requirement. In this case, as has already been seen, no money was received and appropriated by the plaintiff. The value of the board, lodging, nursing, medical attention, etc., claimed by defendant as a part of the consideration, under the circumstances of this case, were elements of damage arising out of the injuries inflicted; and the court was able, in its final judgment, to protect the defendant in the expense it had incurred for the benefit of the plaintiff, and did so, by having the amount of such expenditures deducted from the amount of damages found by the jury to have been sustained by the plaintiff. This practice is approved in the following cases: Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58; Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 120; Mateer v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Mo.) 15 S. W. 970; Union P. R. Co. v. Harris, 158 U. S. 330-333, 39 L. ed. 1004, 1005, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 843. See cases cited. Under plaintiff's theory of the matter, she was never bound by the terms of the release; and as the court could fully protect the rights of the defendants in case it were found that their contention was true in relation to the board, etc., being part of the consideration agreed upon, we think the plaintiff was entitled to a judicial determination of her rights, without being embarrassed by a requirement of tender. The court did not err, therefore, in refusing to charge the jury in accordance with the contention of appellant as to a tender of the alleged consideration of the release."

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is conceded on the part of counsel for defendant that, where a release of this character is secured by a representation to the party making it that it is an instrument of an altogether different nature, so that the fraud is in the fact of the document itself, then plaintiff would be entitled to ignore it and begin action without making tender, being merely required to account for the amount received in any judgment recovered; but they contend that, where the overreaching fraud is perpetrated by a different species of deception on the part of the defendant, then plaintiff cannot be heard to prosecute an action on the original liability until rescission has been accomplished, either by restoring the money or making a tender of it. This same distinction was presented to the circuit court of appeals of the sixth circuit, in which the question was whether or not, in a suit at law, plaintiff might meet a plea of release by replication that a release was obtained by fraud, and this whether the fraud was in the execution or in misrepresentations which induced the execution, where the question was solely between the parties. Judge Taft, speaking for the court in the case of Wagner v. National L. Ins. Co. 33 C. C. A. 121, 61 U. S. App. 691, 90 Fed. 395, sweeps aside this artificial distinction with the following language: "Our conclusion is, therefore, that it is proper in a suit at law for the plaintiff to meet a plea of release by a replication that the release was obtained by fraud, whether the fraud is in the execution, or in misrepresentation as to material facts inducing execution. We are glad to come to this conclusion, because it avoids circuity of action and thus facilitates the administration of justice. Of course, cases may be conceived where the avoiding of a release may concern the rights of others not parties, or may involve the application of peculiarly equitable doctrines of confidential relations and the like, and thus present issues which only a chancellor, with his flexible procedure and careful discrimination, can properly adjust and decide. In such cases the parties can be remitted to equity; but, where the issue is simply one of fraudulent misrepresentation, it may be as well tried to a jury as to a court of equity, for fraud is an issue of which courts of law and equity, from time immemorial, have had concurrent jurisdiction." The court, in the syllabus, held as follows: "It is proper, in a suit at law, for the plaintiff to meet a plea of release by a replication that the release was obtained by fraud, whether the fraud is in the execution or in misrepresentation as to material facts inducing execution, where the issue involves simply a question of fraud between the parties."

To our mind, the reasoning of this case on the question of procedure is unassailable; and why should it not apply with equal force to the entire question of fraud when the controversy is, as was stated and limited by that case, confined solely to a dispute between the parties? Nor, in our judgment, did it add anything to the force of the release that it contained a proviso releasing and discharging all suits, actions, and causes of action or claims growing out of the alleged injury, because the same facts which would render it invalid against plaintiff in one particular would render it equally invalid as to the other. A party fraudulently induced to waive a right to assert a right is no more bound by that kind of an agreement than by an agreement fraudulently obtained to waive any other right.

It clearly appearing to our minds that the defendant could not possibly have been injuriously affected by plaintiff's failure to restore or make tender of the sum received, the original conclusion reached is therefore adhered to.

The petition for rehearing is denied, and the mandate is directed to issue.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS D. TYLER

v.

SUPERIOR COURT FOR PROVIDENCE AND BRISTOL COUNTIES.

(— R. I. —, 73 Atl. 467.)

Assignment — action for tort.

1. An assignment before judgment of an action for assault and battery and false imprisonment is void, as against public policy. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Attorney — charging lien — settlement.

2. An attorney has no charging lien for services upon his client's right of action for assault and battery and false imprisonment before judgment, which will prevent the client from settling the case against his will.

Execution — judgment on settled claim.

3. Execution cannot be issued in favor of an attorney to whom a cause of action for personal tort was assigned before judgment, to secure his fees for services, where, before the judgment was entered, the client settled the suit and released defendant from further liability.

(Sweetland, J., dissents.)

(July 7, 1909.)

PETITION for a writ of certiorari to quash the record of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties in issuing execution upon a judgment in an action for assault and battery and false imprisonment against petitioner. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gardner, Pirce, & Thornley, and Hugh B. Baker, for petitioner:

In the absence of a special statute protecting an attorney, the parties in a case may settle and compromise the case before judgment is entered, regardless of the interests of the attorney, unless the settlement is collusive, and for the purpose of depriving the attorney of his fees.

Averill v. Longfellow, 66 Me. 237; Kusterer v. Beaver Dam, 56 Wis. 471, 43 Am. Rep. 725, 14 N. W. 617; Tillman v. Reynolds, 48 Ala. 365; Connor v. Boyd, 73 Ala. 385; Gregory v. Gregory, 32 N. J. Eq. 424; Heister v. Den, 17 N. J. L. 438; Mosely v. Jamison, 71 Miss. 456, 14 So. 529; Wright v. Hake, 38 Mich. 531; Swanson v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 35 Fed. 638; Weeks, Attorneys at Law, 2d ed. § 382; 4

Note. — As to assignability of cause of action for personal injury, see note to North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Ackley, 44 L.R.A. 177.

As to lien of attorney on cause of action for tort, see case note to Boogren v. St. Paul City R. Co. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 379.

As to dismissal of suit to defeat attorney's lien or claim to compensation, see case note to Jackson v. Stearns, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 390.

As to power of court to protect an attorney who has taken case on contingent fee against voluntary dismissal by client without his consent, see case note to Stearns v. Wollenberg, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1095.

As to validity of provision in contract for contingent fee, forbidding client to settle the claim without attorney's consent, see case note to Re Snyder, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1101.

Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1019; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 465.

At common law, an attorney had no charging lien for his fees and disbursements on a judgment obtained by him in favor of his client.

Jones, Liens, 1st ed. §§ 155-157; Baker v. Cook, 11 Mass. 236; Hill v. Brinkley, 10 Ind. 102; Hogan v. Black, 66 Cal. 41, 4 Pac. 943; Mansfield v. Dorland, 2 Cal. 507; Horton v. Champlin, 12 R. I. 550, 34 Am. Rep. 722.

An attorney in Rhode Island has no fixed lien on a judgment, but only an equitable right, which the court, after examining all the facts of the case, will protect or not, at its discretion.

Horton v. Champlin, supra; Jones, Liens, § 164.

Messrs. James Harris and Irving Champlin, for respondent:

While an attorney's lien may be waived by the transaction between the attorney and his client, showing an intention to rely upon some other security, the lien will continue unless such an intention manifestly appears.

1 Jones, Liens, § 12, p. 151.

The true principle to be applied in determining whether an attorney has a lien for his fees on the judgment he has recovered for his client is that the lien exists unless a manifest intention that it shall not exist appears.

Renick v. Ludington, 16 W. Va. 378; Adams v. Fox, 40 Barb. 442; Goodrich v. McDonald, 41 Hun, 235; Smith v. Goode, 29 Ga. 185; Horton v. Champlin, 12 R. I. 550, 34 Am. Rep. 722; Burns v. Allen, 15 R. I. 32, 2 Am. St. Rep. 844, 23 Atl. 35; Windsor v. Brown, 15 R. I. 182, 2 Am. St. Rep. 892, 9 Atl. 135.

Blodgett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner seeks a writ of certiorari to quash the record of the superior court in issuing an execution against the petitioner for the sum of $312.95, in the name of Patrick Concannon, plaintiff in an action for assault and battery and false imprisonment in said court, $212.95 thereof to the use of Irving Champlin, and $100 thereof to the use of James Harris, in satisfaction of their respective claims for services as counsel for said Concannon, who, pending the hearing on exceptions after verdict in his favor on June 18, 1906, for $375.83 and costs, thereafter, on July 12, 1906, executed a release under seal to petitioner in payment of the sum of $100, and signed an agreement that the case might be entered "settled," both of which acts were done without the knowledge of his counsel, the said Champlin and

Harris. The release and agreement of settlement were not filed in the superior court until May 31, 1907, two days after the decision of this court overruling the exceptions of the petitioner and directing the entry of judgment for Concannon on the verdict on May 29, 1907, as of the date of said verdict on June 18, 1906.

The counsel for Concannon, alleging that his settlement of the action with Tyler without their knowledge was collusive and for the purpose of depriving them of their fees, and claiming a charging lien in that behalf upon the judgment in Concannon v. Tyler, have respectively reduced their claims for services to judgment as against Concannon, and on their motion the superior court has ordered execution to issue against Tyler, as above set forth, after the alleged settlement by the parties, who severally deny all collusion, and one of whom, Tyler, the petitioner here, has instituted this proceeding, and avers that the superior court is without jurisdiction to order execution to issue in the premises as aforesaid. The question so presented is whether counsel have a charging lien against the petitioner for their services upon these facts.

It is important to note in the first place that, unlike many other states, we have no statute regulating this matter. It is also necessary to say that on February 12, 1906, and before trial in the superior court, Mr. Champlin took an assignment of Concannon's right of action or any judgment which might be rendered in said action for assault in favor of his client, Concannon, and against Tyler, now petitioner here, as security for his fees, and gave notice thereof to Tyler. In Rice v. Stone, 1 Allen, 566, it was held that an assignment for damages for an injury to the person was void at common law, even after verdict, on grounds of public policy. It was there said by Chapman, J. (page 568): "No case is cited where it has been held that an assignment of a claim for damages for an injury to the person has been held good, when the assignment was made before judgment in an action for the tort. Such claims were not assignable at common law. On the contrary, a possibility, right of entry, thing in action, cause of suit, or title for condition broken, could not be granted or assigned over at common law. . . . But in respect to all claims for personal injuries the questions put by Lord Abinger in Howard v. Crowther, 8 Mees. & W. 603, are applicable. 'Has it ever been contended that the assignees of a bankrupt can recover for his wife's adultery, or for an assault? How can they represent his aggravated feelings?' And we may add the broader inquiry: Has any court of law or equity ever sanctioned a claim by an assignee to compensation for wounded feelings, injured reputation, or bodily pain, suffered by an assignor? There were two principal reasons why the assignments above mentioned were held to be invalid at common law. One was to avoid maintenance. In earlier times maintenance was regarded as an evil principally because it would enable the rich and powerful to oppress the poor. This reason has in modern times lost much, but not the whole, of its force. It would still be in the power of litigious persons, whether rich or poor, to harass and annoy others, if they were allowed to purchase claims for pain and suffering and prosecute them in courts as assignees; and as there are no counterbalancing reasons in favor of such purchases, growing out of the convenience of business, there is no good ground for a change of the law in respect to such claims. . . . A claim to damages for a personal tort, before it is established by agreement or adjudication, has no value that can be so estimated as to form a proper consideration for a sale. Until it is thus established, it has no elements of property sufficient to make it the subject of a grant or assignment. The considerations which are urged to a jury in behalf of one whose reputation or domestic peace has been destroyed, whose feelings have been outraged, or who has suffered bodily pain and danger, are of a nature so strictly personal that an assignee cannot urge them with any force. The character of this class of claims is not changed in this respect by a verdict before judgment. It must be made the subject of a definite judgment before it is assignable,—a judgment upon which a suit may be brought. Stone v. Boston & M. R. Co. 7 Gray, 539. It is said in Langford v. Ellis, 14 East, 203, note, that the moment the verdict comes the damages are liquidated. This was an action of slander. But the principal case of Re Charles, 14 East, 198, in which the other was cited, is regarded as overturning it. Buss v. Gilbert, 2 Maule & S. 70. And these cases hold that neither an action for breach of promise of marriage nor for seduction passes to an assignee in bankruptcy before judgment. In our practice, where the points in controversy are seldom raised by the pleading, but are brought out in later stages of the case, the claim remains in great uncertainty till the judgment is rendered. And the case of Stone v. Boston & M. R. Co. cited above, follows the ancient case of Benson v. Flower, W. Jones, 215, where it was held that an action of the case is not assignable till after judgment, when it is reduced to a certainty. . . . In view of these and many other authorities to which we have referred, we are of opinion that the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ancient doctrine of the common law on this subject is still in force, and that the reasons on which it was originally founded are still valid. As an assignment of a claim for a personal injury is void, though it is made after verdict in an action to recover damages for the injury, the claim of the defendant Perrin cannot prevail." And this decision was affirmed in the recent case of Flynn v. Butler (1905), 189 Mass. 377, 75 N. E. 730. And see Linton v. Hurley, 104 Mass. 353; Bennett v. Sweet, 171 Mass. 601, 51 N. E. 183.

So, in Weller v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. (1905), 68 N. J. Eq. 659, 662, 61 Atl. 459, 460, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 442, it was said by Gummere, Ch. J.: "A right of action for personal injuries cannot be made the subject of assignment before judgment, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary." And see cases cited. And in Hanna v. Island Coal Co. 5 Ind. App. 163, 167, 51 Am. St. Rep. 246, 31 N. E. 846, 848, it is said: "Ordinarily, however, an attorney acquires no lien for fees until after judgment. Therefore, until after judgment, the client may settle and compromise and release the cause of action in any manner he pleases without consulting his attorney, and the attorney has no power to prevent it. Simmons v. Almy, 103 Mass. 33; Parker v. Blighton, 32 Mich. 266; Pulver v. Harris, 52 N. Y. 73; Roberts v. Doty, 31 Hun, 128; Connor v. Boyd, 73 Ala. 385; Swanston v. Morning Star Min. Co. 4 McCrary, 241, 13 Fed. 215; Young v. Dearborn, 27 N. H. 324. In such a case a lien cannot be acquired before judgment, even by agreement between the attorney and client, that will prevent the client from compromising and releasing the cause of action without the consent of the attorney, although the defendant may have notice of the agreement. Coughlin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 443, 27 Am. Rep. 75; Kusterer v. Beaver Dam, 56 Wis. 471, 43 Am. Rep. 725, 14 N. W. 617; Pulver v. Harris, supra. If the cause of action is one for unliquidated damages, and is not assignable, the client cannot give his attorney any lien upon it that will prevent a settlement or compromise by the parties before judgment, even if the amount is definitely fixed, and an agreement made that the same shall become a lien, and the adverse party notified of the fact. Jones, Liens, §§ 206, 207. Actions for slander and libel, assault and battery, personal injuries resulting from the negligent conduct of others, are within the rule. . . . The charge of fraudulent collusion in the second paragraph of the complaint in no wise aids the appellant. Characterizing a transaction as fraudulent does not make it so in law, unless it is so in fact. Therefore, the plaintiff insists that he had an attorney's lien on the claim for damages which could not be defeated by the act of his client." The supreme court of Illinois said (page 140): "The counsel for appellant also insists that he had an attorney's lien on the claim for damages which could not be defeated by the act of his client, and which gave him a right to prosecute the suit to judgment. The extent of an attorney's lien is not very well defined, and the cases in the New York Reports are especially conflicting. We are not, however, inclined to hold that the lien attaches to a claim for unliquidated damages prior to the judgment. In Getchell v. Clark, 5 Mass. 309, on an application similar to the present, the court, refusing the motion, said: 'Before judgment it was very clear the plaintiff might settle the action and discharge the defendant, without or against the consent of his attorney, who had no lien on the cause for his fees.' A similar rule is laid down in Foot v. Tewksbury, 2 Vt. 97, Shank v. Shoemaker, 18 N. Y. 489, and Sweet v. Bartlett, 4 Sandf. 661, and we regard it as by far the sounder principle. To hold that the lien attaches to a claim for unliquidated damages before judgment would embarrass parties in all attempts to settle their suits amicably, and thereby greatly tend to prevent a result always held to be desirable. Especially would this be the case under a system of practice like ours, where the compensation of attorneys is not fixed by law. Under such a rule, attorneys, by making a demand for unreasonable fees, would be able to prevent a settlement whenever they should desire. Highly as we think of our profession, we do not deem it desirable that they should thus be able to control the most important interests of their clients, independently of the wishes of the latter. It is better that clients should be at liberty to adjust their difficulties if they can. In the particular case before us we have no doubt it would be most equitable to allow the lien. But we cannot establish the rule in reference to the merits of a particular case. 'Hard cases make bad law.' We think such an application of the lien as is here asked would be against the current of authorities and the general interests of society."

In Alexander v. Grand Ave. R. Co. 54 Mo. App. 66, the plaintiff settled with the defendant an action for personal injuries sustained while a passenger on one of its cable street cars, and did so while the action was pending, and without the knowledge of her counsel, and after notice from her counsel to the defendant company that "said attorneys, for their services in said cause, have taken an interest in whatever judgment or compromise may be obtained." The court refused to set aside the order of dismissal, made later upon the plaintiff's own motion, one of the grounds for which was "that the settlement was in violation of the rights of plaintiff's attorneys, of which defendant had notice," saying (page 73): "The claim to which these papers refer must have for its foundation either a lien in favor of the attorneys or an assignment of a part of the claim. That an attorney has no lien for his services on a judgment obtained by him was long since determined in this state. Frissell v. Haile, 18 Mo. 18; Roberts v. Nelson, 22 Mo. App. 28. And it could scarcely be pretended that an attorney, merely as such, would have a lien on the claim before it became a judgment, in the absence of a statute conferring such a lien, as the attorney can have no lien on the suit. Parker v. Blighton, supra; Coughlin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 448, 27 Am. Rep. 75; Henchey v. Chicago, supra. Though there seems to have been a rule or practice adopted arbitrarily by some of the courts enforcing such liens. The court said in the foregoing case from New York that 'the courts invented this practice and assumed this extraordinary power to defeat attempts to cheat the attorneys out of their costs.' But, as stated in that case and in the case cited from 18 Mo. 18, attorneys' fees in those jurisdictions were 'fixed sums, easily determined by taxation,' and this power was exercised to secure them their fees."

In the recent case of Boogren v. St. Paul City R. Co. (1906) 97 Minn. 51, 52, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 379, 114 Am. St. Rep. 691, 106 N. W. 104, 105, the facts present some similarity to the facts in the case at bar: "This is an appeal by the attorney for the plaintiff from an order discharging an order to show cause why the attorney should not be permitted to continue the action for the purpose of determining and enforcing his alleged interest therein. Some time prior to July, 1904, the plaintiff, Charles L. Boogren, claimed to have a cause of action against the St. Paul City Railway Company for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the company. On July 15, 1904, Boogren entered into a contract with the petitioner, Joel E. Gregory, an attorney at law, by the terms of which Gregory agreed to prosecute the action as the plaintiff's attorney, and to pay all expenses of the suit, and in consideration therefor Boogren agreed to pay said party of the second part [Gregory], after the expenses of said suit and other expenses have been paid, 50 per cent of all moneys received from the St. Paul City Railway Company by party of the first part as compensation for said injuries in said case of Charles L. Boogren v. St. Paul City Railway Company. An action to recover damages in the sum of $10,350 was thereafter brought in Ramsey county. On the trial the jury disagreed, and the case was continued to the January, 1905, term. On the defendant's motion the case was continued till the February term, and set for trial on February 14th. When the case was called for trial, the plaintiff did not appear, and his attorney stated that he was not able to find his client. The defendant's attorney stated to the court that the defendant had its witnesses subpoenaed and in court ready for the trial, but that he would consent to a continuance of the case until the April term of court. It was subsequently continued to the May term of court, and then to the June term, by agreement of the attorneys. On the call of the calendar on June 5th, the defendant objected to any further continuance, and the case was set for trial on June 9th. On June 8th the defendant filed a written dismissal of the action on the merits. This instrument bore date of January 24, 1905, and was signed by the plaintiff and defendant's attorneys. When the case was called for trial on June, 9th, the defendant informed the court that the action had been settled and that a dismissal had been filed. The petitioner then stated to the court that he knew nothing of said dismissal, and asked that the action be held open to allow him to present a petition to be allowed to continue the action for the purpose of recovering his attorney's fees and expenses. This petition was granted, and petitioner thereafter made the petition herein, and the same came on for hearing on an order to show cause. The petition stated that the settlement between the defendant and plaintiff was made with the full notice and knowledge of the lien and rights of the petitioner, and for the purpose of defrauding and cheating him out of his attorney's fees and expenditures; that his expenditures were $328.75, that the plaintiff's damages were $5,000, and that plaintiff was insolvent. The defendant moved to dismiss the petition upon the grounds (1) that it did not state facts sufficient to warrant the court in granting the petitioner the relief prayed for; (2) because the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. The appeal is from an order dismissing the petition. . . . The petitioner bases his right to continue the action for the protection of his alleged interests upon the theory (1) that he has a lien which it is the duty of the court to protect, and (2) that he is the equitable assignee of an interest in the cause of action by reason of the contract between him and the plaintiff. The order of the trial court was correct. The breach of professional ethics involved cannot affect the legal rights of the parties. The petitioner had no lien upon the cause of action. He had acquired no statutory attorney's lien (Forbush v. Leonard, 8 Minn. 303, Gil. 287; Nielsen v. Albert Lea, 91 Minn. 388, 98 N. W. 195), and it is the settled law of this state that a lien cannot be created by such a contract upon a right of action arising out of personal tort. As said in Hammons v. Great Northern R. Co. 53 Minn. 249, 54 N. W. 1108: "The plaintiff had no lien—could not have any—on the cause of action. A cause of action for a personal tort is strictly personal. It is not in the nature of property, in the sense that anyone but the injured party can have any right in it. . . . See also Anderson v. Itasca Lumber Co. 86 Minn. 480, 91 N. W. 12, 291, and Nielsen v. Albert Lea, supra. . . . It has been said that the court will protect the attorney of a party to an action against a collusive settlement in fraud of his rights. This rule applies when the attorney has acquired a lien. Weicher v. Cargill, 86 Minn. 271, 90 N. W. 402. The language used in the New York and Georgia cases must be construed in the light of the statutes of those states, which give the attorney a lien upon the client's cause of action. 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed., p. 468. There are also serious practical difficulties in the way of such a procedure when the action is to recover unliquidated damages. The power to arrest or rescind the effect of a settlement is cautiously exercised in respect to suits for debts actually owing; and the power would be more cautiously applied to actions for torts, where it would be impracticable for the court, upon the opposing representations of the parties, and without hearing the proofs, to ascertain whether there was a just cause of action, or whether there was ground to distrust the justness of the settlement. The whole case would have to be tried before the court could pronounce that the suit was properly instituted and that it afforded prima facie ground for the award of costs. . . . The policy of the law favors the adjustment of claims and the termination of litigation, and the courts are not disposed to limit the right of parties in this respect. This practice may occasionally work a hardship upon attorneys, but it is nevertheless a salutary rule. An attorney whose rights are prejudiced must look to his client for relief, or, in a proper case, proceed directly against the party by whose fraudulent conduct he has been injured. The order appealed from is affirmed."

Likewise, in Lamont v. Washington & G. R.

Co. 2 Mackey, 502, 47 Am. Rep. 268, the facts closely resemble the case at bar and are as follows: "This case, as is very well known, was an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff in being forcibly and wrongfully expelled from the cars of the defendant. The case was tried three times, and on the last trial the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $15,000. The case came, in the usual form, before this court on a motion for a new trial on bills of exceptions. It was argued by counsel, and while under advisement the defendant settled with the plaintiff by paying him $2,000, and received from him a release of all claims and demands, and an order to the clerk of this court to enter the case dismissed. This was done without the knowledge of the plaintiff's attorneys. After this was done, the court rendered its opinion, setting aside the verdict in the case below and ordering a new trial, and then this order to dismiss was filed, and after that the attorneys for the plaintiff came into court and moved the court to set the case down for trial, notwithstanding the paper filed by the defendant, purporting to be an acknowledgment that the case had been settled, on the ground that said pretended settlement between the plaintiff and the defendant was collusive, and with knowledge on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff's attorneys were interested in the case to the extent of their fees for services, and that knowledge of such settlement was being concealed from them by the plaintiff. The motion was accompanied with an affidavit showing that the plaintiff had agreed to pay his attorney, Mr. McPherson, a contingent fee of 33 per cent of the amount that should be recovered. The court thereupon passed a peremptory order that the defendant should pay to plaintiff's attorneys one third of the sum of $2,000, and that, in default thereof, the entry of dismissal should be struck out and the case set down for trial. That order was appealed from, and that appeal has been the subject of discussion before us. In the argument here it was claimed, on the part of the attorneys for the plaintiff, that they had a lien on the cause of action, and that the court could enforce it by allowing the suit to proceed to trial for the benefit of the attorneys, where it had been adjusted between the parties collusively, with a view to cheat the attorneys out of their compensation. Upon the other hand, it was claimed by the defendant that, before judgment, the parties to a pending suit have entire control of the subject-matter, and may settle it between themselves, without preference to either the wishes or the interests of the attorneys. The common law recognizes the lien of an attorney upon moneys of his client in his hands, and also upon papers and documents in his hands, whether they be muniments of title, or causes of action, or evidence; but there is no such thing as the lien of an attorney upon a mere claim or cause of action which his client has against a third person, apart from the tangible vouchers of the claim which may be in the attorney's possession. The very essence of the common-law lien is possession. The party who has a lien loses it the moment he surrenders possession; and possession cannot be predicated of a mere abstract right in another person. It is conceded on all hands that the parties, before judgment, may compromise and settle between themselves without reference to the attorney, which could not be the case if the attorney could be regarded as having possession of his client's cause of action. . . . This present case illustrates the distinction particularly. Here is a claim for unliquidated damages, which is, in its very nature, incapable of being assigned in whole or in part to the attorney; and, in fact, the agreement which is relied upon here does not purport to assign it in any part, but is simply an engagement on the part of the plaintiff to pay his attorney a contingent fee of 33 per cent of the amount of the recovery; that is, he agrees that, in case of recovery, he personally will pay to his counsel a sum equivalent to 33 per cent of the amount recovered. It is clear, therefore, that he might as well agree to pay a gross sum of $1,000, or any other gross sum, or to convey a house and lot in case of success in the suit. Now, in no sense can that collateral engagement of the client to his attorney be said to be involved in this suit. Here is an action for damages suffered by the client. It is not a suit to recover money stipulated in a collateral agreement to be paid by client to attorney, but it is to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered by the client, and quoad that the attorney cannot be interested as a party in the suit. It might as well be said that, where the client had agreed to do some collateral thing in case of the recovery of judgment, to convey a house and lot, for example, the court could, after this settlement, hold the defendant responsible for the plaintiff's engagement to convey that house and lot to his attorney. You could maintain that proposition with as much reason as that the court could compel the defendant to pay to the attorney of the plaintiff the moneys or considerations which the client had collaterally engaged to pay to his attorney. The courts will not enforce such a claim in that way. They leave the attorney to his common-law remedy on the contract. We think the whole course of the authorities is in that direction. The law is stated in the first place in Parsons on Contracts, vol. 1, p. 116, as follows: 'He [the attorney] has no claim for unliquidated damages in court until after judgment.' The case of Wood v. Anders, 5 Bush, 601, is cited, which fully sustains this proposition. Again, in Parsons (vol. 3, p. 269): 'But the lien on the cause for his fees does not attach until the judgment is rendered. Therefore, where, in a case reserved, after the opinion of the court was pronounced in favor of the plaintiff, he forthwith assigned his interest in the judgment, and the defendant, during the term, and before the judgment was actually entered, paid the whole amount to the assignee, it was held that the attorney's lien was thereby defeated.' In support of this several cases are cited, all of which fully sustain the position in the text. . . . 'It is therefore beyond dispute that the plaintiff's attorney had neither a legal nor an equitable interest by way of assignment or lien on the cause of action. The defendant was not asking any favor of the court. It was in court simply insisting upon its settlement with the plaintiff as a defense to his cause of action. Therefore, if the attorneys are entitled to the protection they now seek, it is only by the exercise of the extraordinary power of the court, to which I have first above alluded, and I am prepared to say that such power should not be exercised in a case like this. It has not been conferred upon the courts by statute, usage, or common law. Its exercise to secure to an attorney the statutory fees, small in amount and easily ascertainable, was just and proper, and could lead to no abuse. But to exercise it so far as to enforce all contracts between clients and attorneys, however extraordinary, is quite another thing. Here the attorneys were contractors. They took the job to carry this suit through, and to furnish all the labor and money needed for that purpose, and they are no more entitled to the protection which they now seek than any other person, not a lawyer, would have been if he had taken the same contract. When a party has the whole legal and equitable title to a cause of action, public policy and private right are best subserved by permitting him to settle and discharge that, if he desires to, without the intervention of his attorneys' [quoted from People ex rel. Stanton v. Tioga C. P. 19 Wend. 73, Cowen, J.] . . . But enough has been said to show that all the cases held uniformly that the court will not interfere to enforce in a summary way, through the original suit, the collateral engagements of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) a client for the compensation of his attorney. We are certainly as desirous as any court could be to protect the members of the bar in their relations with their clients; but it clearly seems to be, if not beyond the power of the court, certainly a practice not sustained by any authority or precedent, to enforce an engagement of this character in a summary way. The court will leave the attorney to his common-law remedy, and therefore we are compelled to reverse the order of the court below, and to allow the order of settlement to stand.'

Again, in Swanston v. Morning Star Min. Co. 4 McCrary, 241, 13 Fed. 215, an action to recover damages for a personal injury was settled by the plaintiff without the knowledge of his counsel, and the court held, upon the motion to dismiss the action, as follows (page 242): "The motion to dismiss upon this agreement is resisted not by the plaintiff himself, but by his attorneys, who say that they had a contract with the plaintiff whereby, in the event of their success in this suit, they were to receive as their compensation for services one third of the amount which might be recovered. The question is made as to whether this is a champertous agreement, but we are not disposed to go into that question. It is one, perhaps, of some difficulty, and about which there is a considerable conflict of authority. It would undoubtedly be champertous if either of the attorneys had agreed to pay the costs of the proceeding; but whether a mere contract for a contingent fee of one third of the amount recovered is champertous is a question not entirely settled. We do not think it necessary, at all events, to pass upon it in this case. It is, perhaps, not improper to remark, however, that it is not a contract which commends itself very much to the favor of the courts, and this court would not be disposed to go any further than the law requires to uphold it. But, even assuming that it is a valid contract as between the plaintiff and his attorneys, the question arises, How can we, by any order of ours, continue this case and carry it on to judgment, after the plaintiff himself has sold the cause of action, and received a sum which, he says, is in full satisfaction? The attorneys are not parties to the record. No judgment could be rendered in their favor, and, if we were to go on to trial, I do not see how it is possible that any judgment at all could be rendered upon the record in the face of this dismissal, this acknowledgment of payment in full by the plaintiff himself. If the counsel for the plaintiff had any lien upon anything, the court would protect them, perhaps, by some form of proceeding in this case; that is to say, the counsel might, perhaps, be allowed under your statute to intervene, if you have a statute authorizing such a proceeding as that, and to assert their rights in this suit. But it is very clear that the attorneys of the plaintiff have no lien upon anything in a case of this character. I believe it is well settled that an attorney has no lien even upon a judgment recovered by him for his client in an action, unless the statute gives it. It has never been claimed that an attorney would have a lien upon a claim for unliquidated damages, and there can be no foundation for a lien of any kind or description upon anything in controversy here. If the attorneys had in their hands a contract, a promissory note, or instrument of any description that could be called property, and had rendered services in prosecuting a suit upon it, perhaps they might, by proper proceeding, be allowed to enforce a claim or lien upon it. It is enough to say that there is no doubt of the right of the plaintiff to settle the suit without the consent of his attorneys, and that, having done so, the controversy must be regarded as at an end, and the suit must be dismissed. If the attorneys have any claim against the parties who have made the settlement, they must assert it in some other mode of proceeding. It is not open for consideration here. The doctrine I have announced is supported by the cases of Coughlin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 443, 27 Am. Rep. 75, and Hooper v. Welch, 43 Vt. 169, 5 Am. Rep. 267."

In Wood v. Anders, 5 Bush, 601, the court of appeals of Kentucky says (page 602): "The lien secured by the act of 1866 to attorneys is upon claims arising on contracts, either express or implied, which are put in their hands for collection, and on 'judgments' recovered in actions prosecuted by attorneys, without regard to the nature of the claim on which the action was prosecuted. But we do not understand the statute as going to the extent that, for a claim for unliquidated damage in cases of tort, before judgment is obtained, the defendant or defendants are to be made liable for the fee of the attorney of the plaintiff, where the parties compromise and adjust their litigation before judgment. Such cases are not embraced by the letter of the act certainly, nor does it appear from the language that such was the intention of the legislature; and courts should not give to it a meaning and operation more comprehensive than was intended. Such an interpretation would discourage compromises, and conflict with the Divine precept, to 'agree with thine adversary quickly, while thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge,' etc. [Matt. 5:25]. Nor do we understand the common law as authorizing the relief sought. Wherefore the judgment is affirmed." See also Voigt Brewery Co. v. Donovan, 103 Mich. 190, 61 N. W. 343; Randall v. Van Wagenen, 115 N. Y. 527, 12 Am. St. Rep. 828, 22 N. E. 361; Frissell v. Haile, 18 Mo. 18; Paulson v. Lyson, 12 N. D. 354, 97 N. W. 533, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 245; Shank v. Shoemaker, 18 N. Y. 489; Mosely v. Jamison, 71 Miss. 456, 14 So. 529.

In Kusterer v. Beaver Dam, 56 Wis. 471, 43 Am. Rep. 725, 14 N. W. 617, which was an action for damages for personal injuries suffered by reason of a defective sidewalk, the plaintiff settled with the defendant pending the trial and without the knowledge of her counsel, and the court dismissed the action, although the plaintiff had made an agreement with her counsel "to give to them one half of the damages recovered in said action, and all the taxable attorneys' fees, and to pay all his own costs, and, further, that said attorneys should be at no court costs whatever, and the plaintiff further agreed not to discontinue the action nor settle the same without the consent of said attorneys." A copy of this agreement had been served on the mayor of the city before the day assigned for the trial and before the settlement by the parties, and the supreme court of Wisconsin held, following the rule laid down by the court of appeals of New York, that "a party having a cause of action in its nature not assignable cannot, by an agreement before judgment or a verdict thereon, give his attorney any interest therein," saying (page 477 of 56 Wis.): "For the reasons given, we adopt and follow the rule above quoted from 71 N. Y. 443. The question above put must, therefore, be answered in the affirmative. Impressed with the equity of the claim on the part of the attorneys for the plaintiff, we have carefully reviewed many decisions, with the view, if possible, to protect them, at least to the extent of the taxable costs; but as the cause of action was not assignable, and hence remained, prior to judgment, under the absolute control of the plaintiff, and since costs were merely incident to recovery upon the cause of action, it logically follows that the attorneys had no vested interest, even in such costs, which could survive the settlement of the cause of action. Whatever claim they had for services was against their client on their contract with him."

In Tillman v. Reynolds, 48 Ala. 365, which was a suit on a promissory note, a settlement was made by the parties pending the action, and without the knowledge of the plaintiff's attorney, who claimed a lien for his services, which was denied by the supreme court of Alabama, which held (page 367): "It is presumed that the purpose of the proceeding in the court below was to compel the defendant to pay the plaintiff's attorney's fee for instituting the suit out of the plaintiff's debt in his hands, before he paid the plaintiff the amount of the note in suit, or to make him liable for the fee, if he failed or refused to do so, because the attorney had a 'claim or lien' on the note in his possession, and the plaintiff herself was insolvent. In such a case as this, such a principle would make the defendant, in the event the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment at least to the amount of the fee due the attorney for the institution of the suit, security of the plaintiff for the payment of the fee. I am not aware of any principle governing the relation of client and attorney that goes so far. The defendant's liability is discharged when he pays the debt he owes to the plaintiff; and, whether this be done before or after the institution of the suit, its effect is the same, except as to costs of suit. Payment of the debt in suit, in either instance, is a good defense. If the payment is made before action brought, it is a good plea in bar of the action and the costs. If it is made after action brought and before judgment, it is also a good plea in bar of the action, except costs up to the plea pleaded, as a plea puis darrien continuance. 1 Chitty, Pl. 657, 658, marg.; 7 Bacon Abr. (Bouvier) p. 685; Rev. Code 1867, §§ 2651, 2685. The proofs in this case show that the debt had been paid before the trial, but after suit brought. This being admitted, the court was bound to charge the jury to find for the defendant. Besides, the attorney for the plaintiff is not a party to the record in the court below. No judgment could be rendered in his favor, except a judgment by confession. His lien, when he has a lien, cannot be enforced in this way by an involuntary judgment against the defendant in a court of law. McCaa v. Grant, 43 Ala. 262." See also Connor v. Boyd, 73 Ala. 385.

In Weller v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. 66 N. J. Eq. 11, 19, 57 Atl. 730, 733, it was said by Chancellor Magie: "But the contention on the part of complainants is that the attorney holding such an agreement or assignment of a share of the damages received may, by giving notice thereof to the tortfeasor, impose on the latter an obligation to account to him for such share of the compensation for such injuries as may be agreed upon between him and the person he has injured. To give such effect to a notice of such assignment would obviously operate to practically prohibit any composition between a tortfeasor and the person he has wronged, when the composition consists of a cash payment to the latter for a release.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It would introduce into the negotiation for settlement on the basis of a present payment to the injured person, the claim of one who was not injured, and whose only interest in the claim is what Lord Tenterden, in dealing with actions prosecuted in forma pauperis, called the spes spoli. Nor will such assignment fall within the reason of the doctrine respecting equitable assignments of choses in action under the circumstances disclosed in this bill. Such assignments admittedly operate only where some fund or property comes into existence arising out of a previous possibility. He who holds such a fund may then be liable to account to the assignee thereof. Where a composition is made between the tortfeasor and the person wronged, on the basis of a payment for a release, the fund does not come into existence until the payments and the release are simultaneously exchanged. Then the fund thus created is in the hands of the releasor, and the assignee may follow it there; but it never existed in the hands of the releasee."

In construing the Maine statute in Potter v. Mayo, 3 Me. 34, 37, 14 Am. Dec. 211, Mellen, Ch. J., thus stated the policy of the law in this behalf: "According to the language of the statute, then, it appears that an attorneys' lien does not exist until judgment. The lien is upon that, and on the execution issued on such judgment. If we attend to the design and object of the provision, we shall arrive at the same conclusion. As we have above stated, the intention of the legislature was to protect the attorney's interests from the control of his client. It was to give to him the security of the judgment debtor, in addition to the original responsibility of his client. Now it is perfectly clear that, until a judgment is rendered, such additional security cannot exist, because until then no coercive power is given to the creditor, and it was against this power that the statute provision was intended as a guard."

We have thus reviewed at considerable length the decisions of the courts in other jurisdictions that the nature and extent of the rights of counsel in this behalf might the more clearly appear. We therefore hold that the assignment of this cause of action was void as against public policy, and that Concannon could not grant, nor could his counsel receive, any interest therein, legal or equitable, by any form of contract or agreement between them in relation to an action for a personal tort before the entry of judgment; that the ruling of the justice of the superior court in issuing the execution, in which, conceding the invalidity of such assignment, he held that it was nevertheless valid as notice of a right which the law does not permit to exist, was erroneous; that the so-called charging lien of an attorney extends, as was heretofore determined in the case of Horton v. Champlin, 12 R. I. 550, 34 Am. Rep. 722, only to his taxable fees and taxable disbursements, and does not extend to his general claim for compensation; and that such lien does not attach until after judgment entered. Whether it may properly and wisely be extended is a question for the consideration of the lawmaking body. Our duty is to declare the law as it exists. Since there had been no judgment entered at the time of the settlement of the case by the parties, no lien had then attached, and it is not necessary to consider whether the settlement was or was not collusion. All collusion is denied by affidavits of both Concannon and Tyler; nor does either of them seek to avoid the settlement thus made. Having been made at a time when they were lawfully competent to make it, and when no lien of counsel had attached, the settlement should stand and must stand as the parties have agreed. It is the duty and the purpose of this court to protect and enforce the rights of counsel in all cases before it, but in so doing we cannot detract from the rights of their clients, nor give to counsel rights which the law does not confer. The petitioner here may well object to being burdened with these judgments, and may well contend that Concannon's counsel should not be allowed to visit upon the petitioner, who owed Concannon's counsel no duty, the consequences of Concannon's failure to inform his own counsel of the settlement he had made with the petitioner. Neither should he be allowed to impose upon the petitioner the payment of a sum which is not only in excess of the sum for which Concannon was and still is satisfied to release the petitioner from all liability, but is also a sum which is in excess of the entire judgment in the cause when the payment in settlement is considered.

The record of the Superior Court ordering the issue of the execution is therefore ordered to be quashed.

Sweetland, J., dissents.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

EMMA JANIE CAMPBELL et al., Respts.
v.

SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY, Appt.

(— S. C. —, 65 S. E. 628.)

Carrier — wrong station — punitive damage.

1. The right of a passenger to punitive damages must be submitted to the jury.

where, after having been put off the train at the wrong station, the train goes off and leaves him, notwithstanding his notice to train employees and signals from the station agent.

Master — Pullman porter — liability for act.

2. A railroad company is liable for the act of a porter of a Pullman car in putting off a passenger at the wrong station, where it relies upon him to notify sleeping passengers of the approach of the train to their stations.

(October 2, 1909.)

Case Note. — Liability of railroad company for acts of employee of sleeping or Pullman car company toward passengers.

Cases involving relations between railroad companies and employees of Pullman or sleeping-car companies where the liability of the railroad company for their acts toward passengers is not involved, as, for example, cases involving the right of such employees to recover in an action against the railroad company, are not included in this note.

The recognized doctrine upon which the solution of the question under annotation depends is aptly stated in Calhoun v. Pullman Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 575, 86 C. C. A. 387, 159 Fed. 387, where, in discussing the respective relations of the sleeping-car company and the railroad company to the passenger, the court said: "The railroad company is the carrier and is the party with whom the passenger contracts for his transportation. Among other things, it contracts to supply him with the usual conveniences for his comfort while being transported. The parlor or sleeping-car company's business is to provide the passenger with certain conveniences and comforts which are in addition to those contracted for by the railroad company. Those duties to the passenger which are incident to the carrier's contract for transportation continue to rest upon the railroad company, notwithstanding he may have another contract with the sleeping-car company for special accommodations. The use of the car for carrying the passenger is a matter for arrangement between the companies. The railroad company retains the power of control and management of its trains, including the sleeping cars as to all matters except those which are peculiarly incident to the other company's special contract with the passenger. The duties of the sleeping-car company to the passenger are coextensive with the nature of its contract. It does not undertake those which belong to the railroad company. The compass of the duties which belong to each company is defined by this demarcation."

The case of CAMPBELL v. SEABOARD AIR LINE R. Co. and that of Taber v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 81 S. C. 317, 62 S. E. 311, which is discussed at length in the former, APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Bamberg County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for discharging plaintiff Emma Janie Campbell from defendant's train at the wrong place. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. G. Mayfield, J. A. Wyman, and Lyles & Lyles for appellant.

Messrs. George Bell Timmerman, J. W. Thurmond, and J. F. Carter, for respondents:

The porter was a servant of the railway company.

Brown v. Smith, 86 Ga. 274, 22 Am. St. Rep. 461, 12 S. E. 411; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Athon, 6 Ind. App. 295, 51 Am. St. Rep. 309, 33 N. E. 469; Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319; Thorpe v. New York C. & H. R.

R. Co. 76 N. Y. 402, 32 Am. Rep. 325; Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 40 La. Ann. 417, 8 Am. St. Rep. 538, 4 So. 85.

Whether the plaintiff could have avoided exposure by waiting until she received proper wraps, and whether the injury resulting therefrom, and the injury she suffered by being exposed to the cold weather, was caused by her own act as a direct and proximate cause, were questions for the jury to decide, and were properly submitted to the jury.

Bickley v. Commercial Bank, 43 S. C. 529, 21 S. E. 886; Norris v. Clinkscales, 44 S. C. 315, 22 S. E. 1; Jacobs v. Gilreath, 45 S. C. 46, 22 S. E. 757; Littlejohn v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 45 S. C. 181, 22 S. E. 789; Springs v. South Bound R. Co. 46 S. C. 104, 24 S. E. 166; Girardeau v. Southern Exp. Co. 48 S. C. 421, 26 S. E. 711; Beckham v. Southern R. Co. 50 S. C. 25, 27 S. E. 611; Jenkins v. Charleston Street R. Co. 58 S. C.

seem to indicate the proper demarcation between cases in which the railroad company is liable for acts of Pullman or sleeping-car employees, and those cases in which it is not liable. The rule may be broadly stated as follows: The railroad company is generally held liable for all breaches of duty by such employees which appertain to the carrying out of the railroad company's contract of carriage, but is not liable for breaches of duty appertaining peculiarly to the contract of the Pullman or sleeping-car company, in the absence of evidence connecting it with the special contract of such company. This rule, however, while supported in the main by the following cases, cannot be regarded as one of universal acceptance. In connection with the Taber Case see subsequent appeal thereof reported in 66 S. E. 292.

In Thorpe v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 76 N. Y. 402, 32 Am. Rep. 325, which is a leading case, in holding the railroad company liable for the assault of a drawing-room-car porter upon defendant's passenger, who, upon finding no vacant seat in the ordinary coaches, had taken a seat in a drawing-room car, for which he refused to pay extra, but which he offered to vacate provided a seat was found for him in the ordinary cars owned by defendant, the court said: "The general principle is well settled, that to make one person responsible for the negligent or tortious act of another, the relation of principle and agent, or master and servant, must be shown to have existed at the time, and in respect to the transaction between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be charged. . . . The defendant relies upon the absence of this relation between the porter and the company as conclusive against its liability for his act. But we are of opinion that this defense is not available to the defendant, or rather, that the persons in charge of the drawing-room car are to be regarded and treated, in respect of their dealings with passengers, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) as the servants of the defendant, and that the defendant is responsible for their acts to the same extent as if they were directly employed by the company. . . . The public interest, and due protection to the rights of passengers, require that the railroad company, which is exercising the franchise of operating the road for the carriage of passengers, should be charged with and responsible for the management of the train, and that all persons employed thereon should, as to passengers, be deemed to be the servants of the corporation."

And in Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319, another much-cited case upon this question, it was held that the porter of a sleeping or drawing-room car which forms a part of the train of a railroad company under a contract with its owner, who sells separate tickets for privileges upon such cars, and who furnishes his own servants to collect tickets and assist passengers, is a servant of the railroad company, for whose acts (an assault) done in the performance of a contract to carry a passenger, it is responsible, notwithstanding any agreement which may be made upon the subject between the company and the owner of the car.

So, in Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141, in holding the railroad company liable for injuries caused by the falling of a berth of a sleeping car attached to defendant's train, in which plaintiff was, at the time, riding, Mr. Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In view of its obligation to use only cars that were adequate for safe conveyance, the sleeping-car company, its conductor and porter, were, in law, the servants and employees of the railroad company. Their negligence, or the negligence of either of them, as to any matters involving the safety or security of passengers while being conveyed, was the negligence of the railroad company. The law will not permit a railroad company, 373, 36 S. E. 703; Wallingford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 60 S. C. 201, 38 S. E. 443, 629.

The conductor knew that the plaintiff was put off at the wrong station, and failed and refused to stop the train to allow her to re-enter, for which acts the defendant is liable for exemplary damages.

Wade v. Columbia Electric Street R. Light & P. Co. 51 S. C. 296, 64 Am. St. Rep. 676, 29 S. E. 233; Gillman v. Florida, C. & P. R. Co. 53 S. C. 210, 31 S. E. 224; Glover v. Charleston & S. R. Co. 57 S. C. 228, 35 S. E. 510; Lewis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 57 S. C. 325, 35 S. E. 556; Watts v. South Bound R. Co. 60 S. C. 67, 38 S. E. 240; Reeves v. Southern R. Co. 68 S. C. 89, 46 S. E. 543; Dagnall v. Southern R. Co. 69 S. C. 110, 48 S. E. 97.

Woods, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case are substantially the same as those in Entzminger v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 79 S. C. 151, 60 S. E. 441. The testimony on the part of the plaintiff tended to prove the following facts: Mrs.

engaged in business of carrying persons for hire, through any device or arrangement with a sleeping-car company whose cars are used by the railroad company, and constitute a part of its train, to evade the duty of providing proper means for the safe conveyance of those whom it has agreed to convey."

Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Walrath, 38 Ohio St. 461, 43 Am. Rep. 433 is to the same effect.

And in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ray, 101 Tenn. 1, 46 S. W. 554, an action for alleged assault, the court laid down the broad rule that the conductor or porter of a sleeping car is a servant of the company of whose trains his car is, for the time being, a part, in all matters relating to the safety of defendant's passengers.

In Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Athon, 6 Ind. App. 295, 51 Am. St. Rep. 303, 33 N. E. 469, a Pullman conductor who negligently directed a person who had assisted a sick person to board a Pullman car attached to defendant's train, as to when he should alight, was held the servant of the railroad company.

And in Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Raine (Ky.) 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 753, 113 S. W. 495, it was held that where a sleeping-car conductor undertakes, in the presence of the train conductor, to put a lady holding a railroad ticket on the right Pullman car, and tells her to remain in his car until the desired car arrives, the railroad company is liable for his neglect to do so.

In Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Lipscomb, 90 Va. 137, 20 L.R.A. 817, 17 S. E. 809, a railroad company was held liable for the negligence and misdirection of a sleeping-car conductor, by reason of which plaintiff

Campbell boarded the passenger train of the defendant, Seaboard Air Line Railway, on the night of 24th December, 1906, at Jacksonville, Florida, and took a berth on the Pullman sleeping car. Knowing that the train would reach Denmark, her destination, in the early morning, Mrs. Campbell asked the conductor of the train, as well as of the Pullman car, to wake her in time to dress and leave the car at Denmark. She was awakened by the porter of the Pullman car very early in the morning, while it was still dark, and was told that Denmark was the next station, and, when the train stopped, she was put off at Govan, a station 7 miles from Denmark. Mrs. Campbell perceived the mistake just as the train was moving off, and gave the alarm to a fellow passenger, Entzminger, who was in the same predicament. He rushed forward, and cried out to the porter, standing on the steps, to stop the train. W. A. Hays, who was acting as station agent, with his lantern tried to stop the train by signal. The Pullman conductor perceived the situation, and tried to stop it by pulling the bell cord, and the Pullman porter and a sick child were left in a sleeper upon a siding, late at night, while the plaintiff's baggage, including medicine, was carried off upon the train.

In Gannon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. post, 1061, it was held that a passenger in a Pullman car may rely on the porter for assistance and guidance as to his conduct in entering or alighting from such cars, as a representative of the railroad company.

In Airey v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 50 La. Ann. 648, 23 So. 512, it was held that the negligence of the porter or conductor of the parlor car attached to defendant's train, in which plaintiff was riding as a passenger, in not arousing her on arrival at her destination, beyond which she was carried, was the negligence of the defendant railroad company.

In Pullman Co. v. Hoyle (Tex. Civ. App.) 115 S. W. 315, where a Pullman passenger was negligently put off from a car attached to defendant's train before it reached the station, a judgment was upheld against the railroad company, on the ground that it was at least passively negligent.

Pullman Co. v. Norton (Tex. Civ. App.) 91 S. W. 841, where a sleeping-car passenger was injured while passing from one Pullman car to another by having his fingers caught between the vestibules of the two cars, which place should have been covered by a curtain, but, owing to the negligence of the Pullman company's servants, was not so covered, is to the same effect, and is based upon almost identical reasoning.

In Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 508, 52 S. W. 124, the railway company was held liable in damages for mental suffering by a female passenger in a sleeping car attached to defendant's told the conductor of the train of the mistake as soon as he could get to him, when the train had gone about three quarters of a mile. Being thus left at Govan, Mrs. Campbell and Entzminger hired a conveyance and drove through the country to Denmark. The day was very cold, and Mrs. Campbell was made sick by the exposure. The action is for actual and punitive damages resulting from her sickness and suffering. The verdict and judgment was for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

On the call of the cause for trial, defendant's counsel moved to strike the cause from the calendar on the ground that the complaint does not contain the proper indorsement, in that the nature of the issue, and the docket upon which the same should be placed, is not indorsed thereon. The exception alleging error in the refusal of this motion cannot be considered, for the reason that there is nothing in the record to show that the complaint was not properly indorsed.

The refusal of the circuit judge to withdraw from the jury the cause of action for punitive damages by ordering a nonsuit or directing a verdict was in accordance with the opinion and judgment of this court in Entzminger v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. supra, on similar facts, and the point needs no further consideration. It is important to observe, however, that in that case the liability of the defendant for compensatory damages was admitted.

There was no error in refusing to instruct the jury that the recovery must be limited to $2, the sum paid by the plaintiff for the conveyance from Govan to Denmark. It is true the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover damages for the suffering resulting from the drive through the country, if, by the exercise of due care, she could have reached her destination without the exposure. Carter v. Southern R. Co. 75 S. C. 355, 55 S. E. 771; Jones v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 75 S. C. 208, 55 S. E. 318; Key v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 76 S. C. 301, 56 S. E. 962; Berley v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 83 S. C. 411, 65 S. E. 456; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 741; Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Birney, 71 Ill. 391; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Eskew, 86 train, caused by the language of drunken persons who were permitted by the Pullman conductor to enter and remain in such car at night, after she had retired.

In Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 40 La. Ann. 417, 8 Am. St. Rep. 538, 4 So. 85, the railway company was held liable for the wilful assault by the porter of a palace car upon a passenger of one of the common coaches, who entered the palace car, and asked permission to use the wash basin therein.

In Goodloe v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 107 Ala. 233, 29 L.R.A. 729, 54 Am. St. Rep. 67, 18 So. 166, it was held that the railroad company was not liable for injuries received by a passenger from an accidental blow by a Pullman conductor while making a playful attempt to strike another employee. This decision, however, was based upon the ground that the act was not within the scope of the conductor's employment; and it was seemingly assumed that, had the act complained of been within the scope of such employment, the railroad company would have been liable.

A railroad company cannot escape liability for injuries inflicted upon a passenger by acts of a Pullman porter in allowing a table to fall on her hand, upon the ground that they were sustained in a sleeping car owned by another company, which furnished its own servants, notwithstanding the passenger paid an additional fare to the sleeping-car company for the privilege of riding in one of its cars, when such car forms a part of one of the railroad company's trains, since, as the railroad company undertakes safely to transport the plaintiff, the law will assume, in the absence of proof to show that the porter employed and assigned by the Pullman company to control the interior of the sleeping car in which the passenger was riding was not a servant of the railroad company, that he exercised such control with the assent of the company. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Church, 155 Ala. 329, 46 So. 457.

In Taber v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 81 S. C. 317, 62 S. E. 311, it was held that the railway company was not liable for injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligent and wilful refusal of the sleeping-car porter to make down a berth for which the passenger had paid the sleeping-car company, since that was a breach of duty appertaining peculiarly to the special contract of the Pullman company.

This holding is further supported by the case of Pullman Co. v. Haight, 81 C. C. A. 287, 151 Fed. 1009, where a sleeping-car passenger was injured by having a train employee stumble over his broken leg, and in which it was held that if the injury grew out of acts relating to the operation of trains and the transportation of plaintiff, the railroad company alone would be responsible; but that, if the injury grew out of matters within the scope of the particular employment of the Pullman porter as such, the Pullman company would then alone be liable.

In Paddock v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 4 L.R.A. 231, 37 Fed. 841, it was held that the railroad company was not liable for the wrongful expulsion of a passenger from a Pullman car attached to defendant's train by the officers of the Pullman company. This decision, however, because of lack of discussion, is of little value.

Ga. 641, 22 Am. St. Rep. 490, 12 S. E. 1061; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Addison, 100 Tex. 241, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 880, 97 S. W. 1037. Had the defendant requested a charge to that effect, it would have been error to refuse it. Indeed, it is by no means clear that there was any evidence tending to show that the plaintiff was warranted in incurring the exposure of the long ride on a bitter cold day, without sufficient wraps. There was a lodging house at Govan where she might have waited for the next train, or at least until she could have procured wraps to protect her from the cold. But, if it be assumed that the exposure was unnecessary and taken without due care, in view of the admission of damages to the amount of $2, and of the evidence warranting a recovery for punitive damages, the circuit judge could not properly instruct the jury, as requested by defendant's counsel, that the recovery must be limited to $2. The plaintiff under the evidence had a right to have submitted to the jury the question of punitive damages in connection with the admitted damages.

The remaining question made by the objections to the testimony, by motion for nonsuit, and by the request to charge, is whether the Pullman company was solely liable for all damages suffered by the plaintiff, to the exemption of the defendant railway company. A railroad company is not relieved of any of the duties which it owes to a passenger by reason of the passenger making a separate contract with a sleeping-car company for special accommodations. The sleeping-car company may by its contract impose upon itself also some of the obligations that the railroad company undertakes in its contract of carriage, but that does not release the railroad company. The only effect of such a contract is to give the passenger the benefit of the care and protection and liability of both companies. There is, it is true, at least one duty ordinarily undertaken by sleeping-car companies, not embraced in the railroad's usual contract of carriage,—the duty of providing a sleeping berth. Accordingly, in Taber v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 81 S. C. 317, 62 S. E. 311, it was held that a railroad company, under its ordinary contract of carriage, is not liable for the failure of the porter of a sleeping-car company to make down a berth for which the passenger had paid the sleeping-car company. The court says: "Conceding that the porter was negligent, or even wilfully disregarding of plaintiff's request in this matter, the defendant company is not liable, in the absence of evidence connecting it with the special contract of the Pullman company. The delict, if any, was a breach of duty by the Pullman company, since it appertained peculiarly to the contract of that company to furnish berth accommodations, as distinguished from the defendant's contract of safe and comfortable transportation." This case is sound because it rests upon a very broad and obvious distinction as to a special comfort for the passenger, furnished by a separate company, which the fare for carriage paid to the railroad company does not cover. But there is no ground whatever for the position that a passenger, by going into a Pullman car and taking a berth, releases the railroad company from any of its duties as a carrier. The railroad company carries Pullman cars in connection with its own, and in this and in other ways shows that, so far from objecting to their use, it means to encourage and invite its passengers to use them. When, in pursuance of such invitation, the passenger takes the Pullman car, he is still entitled to the service of the railroad employees in all matters which relate to his safe and comfortable transportation to his destination. Obviously, the railroad company cannot lawfully withdraw its own employees from this service, and substitute and rely upon the employees of another company to perform the service, as persons acting apart from itself. On the contrary, it is quite plain that when it relies on such persons to perform its own public duties, it adopts them as its agents, and is responsible for their failure to perform the service to which the passenger is entitled as a part of his contract of carriage. Hence, with respect to those matters embraced in the contract of carriage which the railroad company depends upon the employees of the Pullman company to perform, such employees are agents of the railroad company. This conclusion is in accord with the current of authority. Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141; Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319; Airey v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 50 La. Ann. 648, 23 So. 512; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ray, 101 Tenn. 1, 46 S. W. 554; Pullman Co. v. Hoyle (Tex. Civ. App.) 115 S. W. 315; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Church, 155 Ala. 329, 46 So. 457; Calhoun v. Pullman Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 575, 86 C. C. A. 387, 159 Fed. 387; Pullman Co. v. Lutz, 154 Ala. 517, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 907, 45 So. 675. One of the duties embraced in the contract of carriage is to give the passenger reasonable notice of arrival at his destination. Ford v. Southern R. Co. 75 S. C. 286, 55 S. E. 448. Ordinarily, this is sufficiently done by calling out the stations as the train approaches them. But where a passenger takes a berth to sleep, with the knowledge and consent of the carrier, it would be absurd to hold a call on the passenger coach reasonable notice to him. In such case the railroad company, when it relies on the conductor and porter of the sleeping car to give reasonable notice, adopts them as its agents, and is liable for their default. It follows that when the porter of the Pullman car assured the plaintiff that she had arrived at Denmark, her destination, and induced her to leave the car at Govan, the railroad company was responsible for any legal damages which resulted from this breach of duty to the plaintiff.

This conclusion disposes of the point under discussion, but there is another view, equally conclusive. The plaintiff's case depended mainly, not on the mere mistake of having the plaintiff to leave the car at Govan, but on the evidence tending to show a wilful failure to stop the train and allow her to get on again after the discovery of the mistake. As the train was in the control of the agents of the defendant, for any breach of duty in this respect the defendant was liable. For this reason, if there was no other, the motions for a nonsuit and for the direction of a verdict for defendant were properly refused.

There is no foundation for the seventh exception. The circuit judge explicitly charged that there could be no recovery for mental suffering unaccompanied by bodily pain or injury.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

Hydrick, J., disqualified.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

M. V. GANNON, Admr., etc., of Patrick Joseph Kiley, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

(— Iowa —, 117 N. W. 966.)

Carrier — passenger — temporary absence — duty.

1. A railroad company which, with knowledge that a passenger has alighted from the train for exercise at the station, starts the train without reasonable warning and opportunity for him safely to re-enter the train, is liable for injuries inflicted upon him in consequence of such act.

Same — contributory negligence.

2. A passenger who, having alighted from the train for exercise, attempts to re-enter it, with the aid of the Pullman porter, after

Note. — As to the liability of a railroad company for acts of employee of sleeping or Pullman car company toward passengers, see Campbell v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. ante, 1056, and case note appended thereto. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) it has started, is not per se negligent, although the statute makes it a crime for one not employed on the train to get upon a car while it is in motion, without the consent of the one having the same in charge.

Evidence — judicial notice — authority of Pullman porters.

3. The court will take judicial notice that Pullman car porters have authority from the railroad company to assist passengers in entering and leaving the trains.

Carrier — Pullman porter — authority.

4. A passenger in a Pullman car may rely on the porter for assistance and guidance as to his conduct, as the representative of the railroad company.

(October 24, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Scott County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

Statement by McClain, J.:

Plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of one Kiley, instituted this action to recover damages to decedent's estate resulting from the death of decedent from injuries received through the negligence of defendant's employees while deceased was a passenger, attempting to get on board the train of defendant on which he was entitled to transportation. At the conclusion of the evidence, the court sustained a motion to direct a verdict for the defendant, and judgment for the defendant was entered accordingly. From the ruling on the motion, and from the judgment entered, the plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. M. V. Gannon and Lane & Waterman, for appellant:

Deceased and his wife were still passengers and entitled to protection as such, while they were temporarily on the depot platform for exercise.

Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Coggins, 32 C. C. A. 1, 60 U. S. App. 140, 88 Fed. 455; Parsons v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 113 N. Y. 362, 3 L.R.A. 683, 10 Am. St. Rep. 450, 21 N. E. 145.

It is not negligence, as a matter of law, for a passenger to attempt to board or alight from a moving train,—especially if he acts under the advice or with the encouragement of a trainman.

3 Thomp. Neg. §§ 2931, 2932; Pence v. Wabash R. Co. 116 Iowa, 279, 90 N. W. 59; Galloway v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 87 Iowa, 458, 54 N. W. 447.

Section 4811, Code, which imposes a penalty upon one who gets off or on a moving train, does not apply where such act is done with the consent of the person in charge of the train; and a car porter is a person so in charge.

Galloway v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. supra.

Messrs. Carroll Wright, J. L. Parrish, J. H. Johnson, and Cook & Dodge for appellee.

McClain, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is evidence in the record from which the jurors might have found, if the case had been left to their determination, that decedent and his wife, being passengers on a train of defendant, and riding in a Pullman car, dismounted from the train at Davenport for the purpose of resting themselves by walking on the platform during such time as the train might be stopped there, having the assurance of the Pullman conductor that there would be a stop of at least ten minutes; that, at the expiration of five minutes, the train was started without such signal or warning as to enable them with reasonable diligence to get up the steps of their car before the train was in motion; that Mrs. Kiley mounted the steps in safety, and the Pullman porter mounted after her, while the decedent, holding on the hand-hold with his left hand, ran along with the train, attempting to mount with the assistance of the porter; and that, after thus running for 25 or 30 feet, deceased lost his footing, and was dragged still further, when his body struck against the girder of a bridge over a street crossing, and he received injuries which resulted in his death. While decedent was thus being dragged along, Mrs. Kiley appealed to the Pullman porter to stop the train, and, after a second appeal from her, he did so by pulling the cord operating the air brakes; but, before the train stopped in response to this action of the porter, the injuries to deceased had occurred. The only questions we need consider in determining the correctness of the action of the court in directing a verdict for the defendant are whether there was any evidence of negligence on the part of defendant's servants or employees causing the injury to deceased, and whether there was any evidence that deceased was not guilty of contributory negligence.

1. Deceased continued to be a passenger while temporarily on the station platform, intending to continue his journey on the train, having descended from the train for a temporary and proper purpose, that of exercise and relief from the fatigue of travel while the train should be stopped. Parsons v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 113 N. Y. 355, 3 L.R.A. 683, 10 Am. St. Rep. 450, 21 N. E. 145; Dodge v. Boston & B. S. S. Co. 148 Mass. 207, 2 L.R.A. 83, 12 Am. St. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rep. 541, 19 N. E. 373. "We think the weight of authority, reason, and custom all require us to hold that where a passenger, without objection by the company or its agents, alights at an intermediate station, which is a station for the discharge and reception of passengers, for any reasonable and usual purpose, like that of refreshment, of the sending or receipt of telegrams, or of exercise by walking up and down the platform, or the like, he does not cease to be a passenger, and is justified in the belief that the company is exercising due care for his safety." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Coggins, 32 C. C. A. 1, 60 U. S. App. 140, 88 Fed. 455, 458. If, with knowledge that the passenger thus on the platform is intending to continue his journey on the train, it is started without reasonable warning and opportunity for him to safely re-enter the car, the carrier is negligent in performing its contract of transportation, and is liable for the natural consequences of such negligence, unless the passenger has contributed to his injuries so as to defeat his right of recovery.

2. The attempt of deceased to mount the steps of the car after the train was in motion was not per se and necessarily contributory negligence on his part. It is true that by statute it is a crime for anyone not employed on the train, or not an officer of the law in the discharge of his duty, to get upon or off a car of any railroad company while the same is in motion, without the consent of the person having the same in charge (Code, § 4811); but such act is not conclusively negligent if done with the consent, approval, or assistance of the conductor or brakeman or other employee authorized to act with reference to the transportation of the passenger on the car in question. Pence v. Wabash R. Co. 116 Iowa, 279, 90 N. W. 59; Galloway v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 87 Iowa, 458, 54 N. W. 447. That the porter of a Pullman car is an employee of the railway company engaged in the transportation of the passengers riding in such car, in the same sense that a brakeman of a train is such employee, is well settled. Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141; Williams v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 40 La. Ann. 417, 8 Am. St. Rep. 538, 4 So. 85; Dwinelle v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 117, 8 L.R.A. 224, 17 Am. St. Rep. 611, 24 N. E. 319. The cases relied upon as to this point by appellee are not pertinent. They involve the relations between the railway company and the porter of a Pullman car, as involving the right of the porter to recover in an action against the railway company. See McDer- mon v. Southern P. Co. (C. C.) 122 Fed. 669; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler, 215 Ill. 525, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 674, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 74 N. E. 705, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 42; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 44 L. ed. 560, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385.

It is argued for appellee that there is no evidence in the record as to the authority of the Pullman porter; but we can certainly take judicial notice of the fact that the porters on Pullman cars, with the consent of the railway company, usually assist passengers in alighting from and entering such cars, in the same way that brakemen render like assistance to persons riding in the ordinary passenger coaches, and that a passenger is justified in assuming that the Pullman porter is an employee of the railway company in such sense that he may be relied on by the passenger for such assistance or guidance as to his conduct. If the act of deceased in attempting to mount the steps of the car after it was in motion was not in itself conclusively negligent, then there was not such evidence of contributory negligence as to justify the court in taking the case from the jury on the ground of the negligence of the deceased. It does not appear just how fast the car was moving at the time when plaintiff took hold of the hand rail, and attempted, with the assistance of the porter, to mount the steps; and there is no conclusive evidence that he was negligent in not desisting from his effort after he lost his footing and was being dragged along the platform, for under such circumstances danger might have reasonably been anticipated from releasing his hold and dropping to the platform near the wheels. It does not appear from any conclusive evidence that deceased was aware of the danger from the girder toward which he was being carried. The cases relied upon in this respect for appellee are cases where a passenger was shown without question to have been aware of such danger. See Hunter v. Cooperstown & S. Valley R. Co. 126 N. Y. 18, 12 L.R.A. 429, 26 N. E. 958; Knight v. Pontchartrain R. Co. 23 La. Ann. 462. Other cases relied on for appellee, involving a finding of negligence in an attempt to get on or off a car while in motion, lack the element which is present in this case of the approval and assistance of an employee in charge of the car.

The trial court was not justified in directing a verdict for the defendant, and its ruling in that respect and in entering judgment for the defendant is reversed.

Petition for rehearing denied.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF VERMONT

v.

GEORGE McCLELLAN.

(— Vt. —, 73 Atl. 993.)

Larceny — unindorsed check — value.

Under a statute making checks the subject of larceny, an unindorsed check payable to order is so subject; and its value, for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime, is its face value.

(September 9, 1909.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Chittenden County Court made during the trial of an information which resulted in a verdict convicting him of grand larceny. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. J. Enright and Brown & Hopkins, for defendant:

If the check had any other than a nominal value, it was its fair market value at the time and place and in the condition in which it was found when the larceny was committed.

State v. Smith, 48 Iowa, 595; Martinez v. State, 16 Tex. App. 122; Clark v. State, 23 Tex. App. 612, 5 S. W. 178; People v. Cole, 54 Mich. 238, 19 N. W. 968.

The check having been drawn to the order of Mrs. E. O. Webb, it could have no actual market value until indorsed by her, and, except by statute, was not the subject of larceny.

State v. Musgang, 51 Minn. 556, 53 N. W. 874; State v. Hill, Houst. Crim. Rep. (Del.) 420; Whalen v. Com. 90 Va. 544, 19 S. E. 182.

Mr. John G. Sargent, Attorney General, and Mr. Henry B. Shaw, for the State:

The transfer, without indorsement, of negotiable paper payable to order, constitutes Case Note. — Valuation of commercial paper for purposes of graduating offense of larceny.

At common law, commercial paper was not considered the subject of larceny, for the reason, as it was said, that it had no intrinsic value. The common-law rule has been abrogated in most jurisdictions by statutes making commercial paper the subject of larceny. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 515.

It is not intended here to go into the question of whether commercial paper is the subject of larceny. That is to say, this note does not include cases holding, under statutes, or otherwise, that paper of this sort has "some value" so as to be the subject of larceny. The cases considered are those in which it is held that the paper is a subject of larceny, and in which the the holder the equitable assignee of the paper; and the check has a value.

7 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 818; Bigelow, Bills & Notes, 1893, p. 62; Huffcut, Elements of Business Law, p. 186; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 2d ed. §§ 741, 744; Whistler v. Forster, 14 C. B. N. S. 248; Osgood v. Artt, 17 Fed. 575; Lyon, P. & Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 29 C. C. A. 45, 55 U. S. App. 747, 85 Fed. 120; First Nat. Bank v. Moore, 70 C. C. A. 89, 137 Fed. 505; Clark v. Whitaker, 50 N. H. 474, 9 Am. Rep. 286; Minor v. Bewick, 55 Mich. 491, 22 N. W. 12; Jones v. Witter, 13 Mass. 304; Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. 261, 34 Am. Dec. 319; Lancaster Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 100 Mass. 18, 1 Am. Rep. 71, 97 Am. Dec. 70; First Nat. Bank v. McCullough, 50 Or. 508, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1105, 126 Am. St. Rep. 758, 93 Pac. 366; O'Connor v. Slatter, 48 Wash. 493, 93 Pac. 1078; Freund v. Importers' & T. Nat. Bank, 76 N. Y. 352; Meuer v. Phenix Nat. Bank, 42 Misc. 341, 86 N. Y. Supp. 701, affirmed in 94 App. Div. 331, 88 N. Y. Supp. 83, 183 N. Y. 511, 76 N. E. 1100.

Munson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent is charged with the larceny of a private mail bag and of a bank check for $875, signed by J. P. Morgan & Company, payable to the order of E. O. Webb, and not indorsed. The respondent excepted to the admission of evidence offered to show that there were funds to meet the check, and to the charge submitting the question of value to the jury. It is contended that the check had only a nominal value, and that, if the value was more, it was its fair market value at the time and place of the larceny, while unindorsed.

Property of this class is made the subject of larceny by P. S. 5755, but without any provision regarding its valuation. No case standing like this has been brought to our attention. In State v. Hill, Houst. Crim. Rep. (Del.) 420, there was no statute applicable to the paper taken. In State v. Musgang, 51 Minn. 556, 53 N. W. 874, the statute required the instrument to be "completed and ready to be issued or delivered," and those taken lacked, among other things, a necessary signature. The charge in Whalen v. Com. 90 Va. 544, 19 S. E. 182, was the larceny of a check, which appears from the evidence recited in the opinion to have been unindorsed; but the statute provided that the amount due on or secured by the writing and remaining unsatisfied should be deemed its value. It will be well to mention a few other cases. In Phelps v. People, 72 N. Y. 334, the statute provided that the money due on the writing or secured thereby and remaining unsatisfied, or which in any contingency might be collected thereon, should be deemed its value. The writing taken was a draft which had not been indorsed by the official to whom it was made payable by the last indorser, and the defense argued that this could not be larceny, because the instrument was not effective and operative when taken; but the court said that, inasmuch as the indorsements transferred the power to use the draft to obtain the money which it called for, it was a legal and operative instrument at the time it was taken. In State v. Wade, 7 Baxt. 22, the respondent was charged with stealing cer-question is: What value is to be given to it, or what is the rule or criterion for determining such value?

Cases involving treasury notes, bank bills, or bank notes are not included herein, as they seem to rest on different principles, being in the nature of currency or money.

In some jurisdictions the measure of value of commercial paper is prescribed by statutes. The few cases presenting the question in other jurisdictions throw very little light on the question.

In Burrows v. State, 137 Ind. 474, 45 Am. St. Rep. 210, 37 N. E. 271, it was held that the value of a stolen check, for the purpose of determining the degree of larceny, was purely a question for the jury.

It was held in State v. Murphy, 141 Mo. 267, 42 S. W. 936, that mere proof of the amount for which a check was drawn, without showing the date or the name of the drawer or of the drawee bank, was too indefinite to be taken into consideration in determining the value of the check for the purpose of sustaining a charge of grand larceny.

In Crossland v. State, 77 Ark. 544, 92 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

S. W. 776, it was held merely that the stealing of a check for $15 would constitute grand larceny, under a statute which made the taking of articles valued at more than $10 grand larceny.

In People v. Silbertrust, 236 Ill. 144, 86 N. E. 203, the court seemed to think that the value of a bill of exchange as a statutory subject of larceny was its market value.

As previously stated, this question in some cases has been governed by statutes providing that the value of stolen commercial paper of specified kinds shall be the amount due thereon or secured thereby, which remains unsatisfied. State v. Pierson, 59 Iowa, 271, 13 N. W. 291; McDowell v. State, 74 Miss. 373, 20 So. 864; Phelps v. People, 72 N. Y. 334; People v. Fletcher, 110 App. Div. 231, 97 N. Y. Supp. 62; People v. Geyer, 132 App. Div. 790, 117 N. Y. Supp. 662; Whalen v. Com. 90 Va. 544, 19 S. E. 182.

In Missouri the statute provides that the amount due shall be only prima facie evidence of the value of the instrument. State v. O'Connell, 144 Mo. 387, 46 S. W. 175.

tain coupons of the bonds of the state, and the court treated them as coupons that had been paid, but considered them valuable to the state as vouchers, and therefore the subject of larceny. This was under a statute which covered "any instrument of writing whereby any demand, right, or obligation is created, ascertained, increased, extinguished, or diminished, or any other valuable paper writing." In State v. Allen, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 518, the court declared it to be the holding of that state that, on an indictment for stealing a bank note, the note must be shown to have been genuine, but sustained a conviction without evidence of genuineness, on the following reasoning: "Stealing a counterfeit bill is certainly not larceny, as a general rule, because the thing stolen must be of some value. But it is not necessary that the subject-matter of the larceny should be of value to third persons, if valuable to the owner. The prosecutor, having received these bills from the bank whose notes they purported to be, . . . could have made such corporation pay specie for them, whether genuine or not, and they were therefore of the same value to him."

The respondent argues that the value of stolen property is to be determined by its condition when taken; that a check payable to order is an incomplete instrument as long as it remains undorsed; that no one could have drawn the money on the check in question,—not even the payee,—and that consequently it was only of nominal value. This argument is opposed by several considerations. It is evident that this check was property in the hands of Mrs. Webb, of a value equal to the amount for which it was drawn. The respondent took this property from her constructive possession, with the intention of converting it to his own use. The fact that he found the property in such a condition that he could not convert it to his own use at the time he deprived the owner of it ought not to determine its value in his favor when he is called to account for his criminal act. As regards its lawful owner and holder, it was a completed paper. It gave Mrs. Webb the control of an amount of currency equal to the face of it, with the power of transferring that control by indorsement to anyone who might become the bearer. But she could have realized the substantial value of the check without indorsing it, for an indorsement was not essential to the value of the check in the hands of an honest holder. The owner of a negotiable instrument payable to his order can transfer it by a formal assignment, instead of an indorsement, or by parol with manual delivery. Freund v. Importers' & T. Nat. Bank, 76 N. Y. 352. Such an assignment will be complete and effectual, as between the assignor and assignee, without notice to the debtor; and with notice it will secure the assignee the entire interest, subject to any existing defenses. The holder of a paper thus transferred can enforce his right, by a suit in equity in his own name or by a suit at law in the name of the payee. All these considerations point to the conclusion that this check as it existed at the time of the taking was of substantial, and not nominal, value. Moreover, the law treats it as something more than a paper of nominal value in the hands of a wrong giver. If the respondent were sued for it in trover, he could not say that its value was merely nominal. He would be held for its actual value to the lawful owner, which prima facie would be the amount due on it. See Robbins v. Packard, 31 Vt. 570, 76 Am. Dec. 134. This view is certainly consistent with our statute, and is perhaps required by it. In the eye of the common law a check is but a token, representing property located elsewhere, but valueless in itself, and therefore not a subject of larceny. The statute changes this, making the instrument a subject of larceny: in other words, treating it as a thing of value in itself. And if the instrument is to be valued as a check, and not as a piece of paper, what is its value? Obviously the amount it represents if the check is good. This method of valuation is practically required by the nature of the change effected by the statute. The fact that the statutory list includes documents which afford no basis for a valuation of this character does not discredit the rule as applied to writings which furnish the basis.

Judgment that there is no error in the proceedings, and that the respondent take nothing by his exceptions.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

PHILIP MILLER et al., Respts.,
v.

PETER WHEELER, JR., Admr., etc., of Peter Wheeler, Deceased, et al., Appts.

(— Wash. —, 103 Pac. 641.)

Water — appropriation — supply rights.

1. One who brings water into a watershed for his own use, after another has made an appropriation from the stream flowing therein, may impound the overflow

Case Note.—Rights, as against other appropriators, of one who adds water to natural flow of a stream.

It seems to be the universal rule that where a person by his own exertions increases the available supply of water in a stream,—that is, adds water to a stream or waste upon his own land for use on other land, although it is thereby prevented from finding its way into the stream to the benefit of the prior appropriator.

Same — abandonment.

2. To effect an abandonment of water brought upon a tract of land for purposes of irrigation, intent to abandon, and an actual relinquishment, must concur.

Same — presumption — rebuttal.

3. The fact that water which had been brought onto property for purposes of irrigation had been devoted to other uses for a period of eleven years, and had been made the subject of conveyance, rebuts a presumption of abandonment.

Trial — burden of proof — abandonment of water.

4. The burden of showing abandonment of water which has been brought on land for the purpose of irrigation, which rests upon one claiming a right thereto resting upon the fact of abandonment, is not shifted by the fact that the surplus was allowed to run into a natural water course.

Water — conveyance in stream.

5. An owner of water may use the bed of an existing water course to convey it to the place where he intends to use it, without losing his right to it.

Same — spring — statutory rights.

6. A statutory provision that the person on whose lands spring water first rises shall have a prior right to it, if capable of being used upon his lands, does not apply to springs which form the fountain heads of living water courses.

Same — prescriptive right.

7. No prescriptive right to water in a which would not otherwise have flowed there,—he, as against other appropriators, has the right to appropriate and use such water to the extent of the increase, whether such water is obtained from underground sources or from other watersheds. Hoffman v. Stone, 7 Cal. 46; Butte Canal & Ditch Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 143, 70 Am. Dec. 769 (water from a different watershed); Burnett v. Whitesides, 15 Cal. 35; Wilcox v. Hausch, 64 Cal. 461, 3 Pac. 108; Churchill v. Rose, 136 Cal. 576, 69 Pac. 416; Wutchumna Water Co. v. Pogue, 151 Cal. 105, 90 Pac. 362 (water taken from another stream); Platte Valley Irrig. Co. v. Buckers' Irrig. Mill. & Improv. Co. 25 Colo. 77, 53 Pac. 334; Ripley v. Park Center Land & Water Co. 40 Colo. 129, 90 Pac. 75; Herriman Irrig. Co. v. Butterfield Min. & Mill. Co. 19 Utah, 453, 51 L.R.A. 930, 57 Pac. 537; Herriman Irrig. Co. v. Keel, 25 Utah, 96, 69 Pac. 719; 3 Farnham, Waters, p. 2087.

This was also recognized in Smith v. Duff (Mont.) 102 Pac. 984.

A case closely related to MILLER v. WHEELER is Herriman Irrig. Co. v. Keel, supra, where it was held that the owner of land into which a mining tunnel has been driven, from which percolating water escapes, has the right to turn such water into stream can be secured against a prior appropriator so long as the supply is adequate for both uses.

Same — transportation in stream — waste.

8. One who turns water into a stream for purposes of transportation can take no more out than he puts in, making due allowance for loss by natural waste and evaporation.

Same — reclaiming surplus — interference with natural sources.

9. One who brings water onto his land for purposes of irrigation cannot, in reclaiming the surplus, cut off or dry up any of the original sources and springs tributary to the stream draining the watershed, the waters of which have been appropriated by a prior appropriator.

August 11, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Chelan County, in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to restrain all acts and uses of waters tending to decrease the flow of Squillechuck creek below the amount to which complainant Miller was entitled under a prior appropriation. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Reeves & Reeves, for appellants:

The owner of land is also the owner of all percolating waters therein; and his dominion thereover is as complete as over the soil itself.

Bloodgood v. Ayers, 108 N. Y. 400, 2 Am.

the natural channel of a stream, and, after permitting it to flow therein for some distance, divert it again from such channel after making due allowance for seepage and evaporation.

To the same effect is Ripley v. Park Center Land & Water Co. supra, where it was held that water drained through tunnels from mines, which otherwise would not have reached the stream, was subject, as against other owners of the water in the stream, to appropriation by the owners of the mines or their grantee, a statute in the case making such water the subject of appropriation.

In Churchill v. Rose, supra, it was held that the owner of land upon which was located a spring, the original flow of which he had increased threefold, was entitled, as against prior appropriators of water of a creek to which the spring was tributary, to the increased amount of water thus developed.

The case approaching most nearly MILLER v. WHEELER in facts is La Jara Creamery & Live Stock Asso. v. Hansen, 35 Colo. 105, 83 Pac. 644. In that case an owner of land sought to appropriate water which had been taken by others from a different watershed, and which, after it had been used for irrigation, by means of seepage through his and St. Rep. 443, 15 N. E. 433; Southern P. R. Co. v. Dufour, 95 Cal. 615, 19 L.R.A. 92, 30 Pac. 783; Ellis v. Duncan, 21 Barb. 230; Gould v. Eaton, 111 Cal. 639, 52 Am. St. Rep. 201, 44 Pac. 319; Metcalf v. Nelson, 8 S. D. 87, 59 Am. St. Rep. 746, 65 N. W. 911; Hanson v. McCue, 42 Cal. 303, 10 Am. Rep. 299; Cohen v. La Canada Land & Water Co. 151 Cal. 680, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 752, 91 Pac. 584; Willow Creek Irrig. Co. v. Michaelson, 21 Utah, 248, 51 L.R.A. 280, 81 Am. St. Rep. 687, 60 Pac. 943; Herriman & Irrig. Co. v. Keel, 25 Utah, 96, 69 Pac. 719; Miller v. Black Rock Springs Improv. Co. 99 Va. 747, 86 Am. St. Rep. 924, 40 S. E. 27.

Percolating waters are not subject to appropriation.

Willow Creek Irrig. Co. v. Michaelson, supra; Kinney Irrigation, § 298.

Where it is not shown in the evidence that a spring is fed by a flowing stream, either surface or subsurface, it must be presumed that it is formed by ordinary percolations, and subject to the law of percolating waters.

Gould, Waters, 3d ed. § 281; Pence v. Carney, 58 W. Va. 296, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 266, 112 Am. St. Rep. 963, 52 S. E. 702.

Defendants are entitled to use the water of the springs on their land for stock, and for domestic and irrigation purposes.

Sullivan v. Northern Spy Co. 11 Utah, 438, 30 L.R.A. 187, 40 Pac. 709.

The fact that one permits water to pass from under his dominion for one day, or for one year or ten years, does not compel him to continue so doing; and the one capturing it after it passes from under his control does not acquire any vested right to have him continue his former course.

Dougherty v. Creary, 30 Cal. 291, 89 Am. Dec. 116; Crescent Min. Co. v. Silver King Min. Co. 17 Utah, 444, 70 Am. St. Rep. 810, 54 Pac. 244; Herriman Irrig. Co. v. Keel, supra.

Messrs. Higgins, Hall, & Halverstadt and Thomas & Sorenson, for respondents:

The right of the owner of land to do as he wishes with percolating waters is terminated as soon as the waters become spring water.

Delhi v. Youmans, 45 N. Y. 362, 6 Am. Rep. 100, 50 Barb. 316.

Percolating waters do not constitute a part of the soil, and are not attended with every incident and right of ownership which attaches to minerals found in the soil, including the right of removal even to the last drop.

Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 43 N. H. 569, 82 Am. Dec. 179; Swett v. Cutts, 50 N. H. 439, 9 Am. Rep. 276; Trowbridge v. Brookline, 144 Mass. 139, 10 N. E. 796; Smith v. Holloway, 124 Ind. 329, 24 N. E. 886; Johnstown Cheese Mfg. Co. v. Veghte, 69 N. Y. 16, 25 Am. Rep. 125; Upjohn v. Board of Health, 46 Mich. 542, 9 N. W. 845.

One making use of percolating waters is restricted to a reasonable use thereof upon his own land.

Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. supra; Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 520, 91 Am. Dec.

other land, had reached the stream from which it was sought to be appropriated. The intending appropriator based his right of appropriation on a statute which provided in effect that all ditches constructed for the purpose of utilizing the waste, seepage, or spring waters of the state should be governed by the laws relating to priority of right to water in ditches constructed for the purpose of utilizing the water of running streams. The court, however, said: "As we read the record, the appellant does not claim seepage water which first rises on its own lands, at a point outside of the natural stream that flows through them, but waters which first rise in the bed of the stream itself, not before, but after, they actually reach the channel and form part of the volume of the stream. Nor does appellant claim that this seepage forms part of any water the right to the original or first use of which belongs to appellant as an appropriator, and has been once utilized and turned into the stream, with an intent on his part again to use it, or that it is the water that naturally percolates through its own soil. It is water the original right to use which for irrigation belongs to, and has been fully utilized by, others, and afterwards, by natural law, percolates therefrom and through appellant's lands, and reaches, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and first rises in, the bed of a stream running through the same, which appellant claims the right to divert from the stream itself as against prior appropriators therefrom. We do not understand that this statute was intended to apply to such appropriations. If valid at all, it is applicable only to appropriations of waste, seepage, and springs waters, before they reach the channel or bed of a natural stream, whether by natural surface flow, by percolation, or by being artificially turned into the same." The court in this case took occasion to say further that, even if it be conceded that the statute was applicable and constitutional, the intending appropriator had failed to sustain his claim in that theory, since he failed to prove how much of the water collected, if any, was the result of seepage from that obtained from the distant watershed.

This note does not concern itself with cases dealing with the mere hastening of the flow of water in a stream, since the actual amount of water is not thereby increased, nor with cases where it appeared that the water from a foreign source was abandoned.

On the general question of use of natural stream to convey appropriated water, see subject note to Herriman Irrig. Co. v. Butterfield Min. Co. 51 L.R.A. 930.

72; Southern P. R. Co. v. Dufour, 95 Cal. 615, 19 L.R.A. 92, 30 Pac. 783; Merrick Water Co. v. Brooklyn, 32 App. Div. 454, 53 N. Y. Supp. 10; Willis v. Perry, 92 Iowa, 297, 26 L.R.A. 124, 60 N. W. 727; East v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 77 S. W. 646; Stillwater Water Co. v. Farmer, 89 Minn. 58, 60 L.R.A. 875, 99 Am. St. Rep. 541, 93 N. W. 907.

The owner of the land has no right whatever to take percolating water beyond the lines of the land from which it is taken, and divert it from the stream, either to let it go to waste, or to use it on other lands.

Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 64 L.R.A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766; McClintock v. Hudson, 141 Cal. 275, 74 Pac. 849; Cohen v. La Canada Land & Water Co. 142 Cal. 437, 76 Pac. 47.

After the spring waters had passed into the gulch, off of defendants' lands, the plaintiffs were entitled to them to the extent of Philip Miller's appropriation.

De Wolfskill v. Smith, 5 Cal. App. 175, 89 Pac. 1001.

Even if water is only waste, upon reaching the stream it belongs to the appropriator, and cannot be sold away from him.

Creek v. Bozeman Waterworks Co. 15 Mont. 121, 38 Pac. 459; La Jara Creamery & Live Stock Asso. v. Hansen, 35 Colo. 105, 83 Pac. 644; Water Supply & Storage Co. v. Larimer & W. Reservoir Co. 25 Colo. 87, 53 Pac. 386; Southern California Invest. Co. v. Wilshire, 144 Cal. 68, 77 Pac. 767.

It is not a question of abandonment or intention, but a question of law, if the water is seepage water; and it cannot be reclaimed, no matter what may be its original source, so as to deprive the original appropriator on the stream to which it comes, of whatever may be required to make good his appropriation.

Southern California Invest. Co. v. Wilshire, supra.

If defendants have artificially increased the flow, and are entitled to the increase, the burden is upon them to show definitely the amount of that increase, and the source thereof; and if they fail in this, they fail to furnish to the court facts from which the court can award them anything.

Mayberry v. Alhambra Addition Water Co. 125 Cal. 444, 54 Pac. 530, 58 Pac. 68; Paige v. Rocky Ford Canal & Irrig. Co. 83 Cal. 84, 21 Pac. 1102, 23 Pac. 875; Beaverhead Canal Co. v. Dillon Electric Light & P. Co. 34 Mont. 135, 85 Pac. 880; Churchill v. Rose, 136 Cal. 576, 69 Pac. 416; Wilcox v. Hausch, 64 Cal. 461, 3 Pac. 108; Herriman Irrig. Co. v. Keel, 25 Utah, 96, 69 Pac. 719; Buckers' Irrig. Mill. & Improv. Co. v. Farmers' Independent Ditch Co. 31 Colo. 62, 72 Pac. 49.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Chadwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1874 Philip Miller settled upon a tract of land now in Chelan county, Washington. At the time a prior settler, whose improvements he bought, had appropriated and diverted about 100 miner's inches of water then flowing in the Quil-toc-chin, latterly called the Squillchuck, a small stream flowing out of the mountains, across the Wenatchee valley, and into the Columbia river. Thereafter, before the intervention of other rights, he dug a larger ditch, and appropriated and put to beneficial use 320 miner's inches measured under 6-inch pressure. In the summer of 1885 Peter Wheeler and Fletcher Byrd settled on what is now known as "Wheeler Hill," their lands lying above the point of Miller's head gate, and distant about a quarter of a mile from the Squillchuck. On the Wheeler land there were two small springs, and on the Byrd land there was a larger spring. These springs were so located that they furnished no water for irrigation for the owners of the land upon which they arose. The Wheeler and Byrd land, or a part of it, formed a natural basin culminating in a narrow gulch descending rapidly into the Squillchuck. and in the springtime, as the snow was melting, water flowed from this drainage basin into the gulch and down into the Squillchuck. The testimony is in sharp conflict as to the amount of water flowing from the springs at the time Wheeler and Byrd made settlement; the witnesses for plaintiffs fixing the flow from them at from 4 or 5 inches to 8 or 10 inches in the summer season, while the witnesses for defendants insist that no water whatever, other than the flood waters of spring, flowed from the springs into the Squillchuck. In the year 1897 Wheeler, Byrd, and others went above their lands and onto another watershed, and appropriated the waters of Stemilt creek, which they brought over and used for irrigating their lands. From this time the flow of the springs gradually increased, and marshes of considerable extent formed on the lands, an acre or two on both the Wheeler land and the Byrd place. The marshes formed by the excess waters from the Stemilt were, like the springs, so situate that neither owner could collect the waters there accumulating and put them to a beneficial use on his own land. About the year 1894 it was agreed between Wheeler and Byrd that Byrd might lay a ditch so as to drain the excess waters on the Wheeler lands, and divert the water to his land adjoining, for the purpose of irrigation, and that in consideration therefor Wheeler might have the flow of the Byrd spring and seepage from the marsh after it had passed down the gulch, into the Squill-chuck, and on past the Miller head gates, for use on lands owned by him lower down in the valley. In the year 1901 C. E. Morse bought the land and water right of Fletcher Byrd. That Wheeler and his grantees used water out of the Squillchuck, sold land, and conveyed water rights, from 1895 up to 1906, seems not to be denied. In July, 1906, however, the flow at Miller's head gate being less than 320 inches, he brought this action to restrain defendants from all acts and uses of the water that tended to decrease his flow below the amount to which he was entitled under his original appropriation. The gist of the complaint is contained in the following excerpt from the pleadings: "That since about the 1st day of July, 1906, the quantity of water flowing in said stream and coming down to the head gate of said ditch, which is located in section 22, township 21, range 20 E. W. M., and has been so located since the year 1870, has been less than said 320 inches, since which time the defendants have taken and diverted, and are continuing to take and divert, from said stream, above said head gate, about 20 inches of water miner's measure under a 6-inch pressure, and have prevented its returning to said stream, and have wrongfully deprived the plaintiffs thereof, said water so taken and diverted being water arising from springs located upon or near section 3, township 21, range 20 E. W. M., which are and were, at the time plaintiffs' right to take said waters became vested, feeders of said main stream and a part of plaintiffs' said water."

There is no evidence whatever tending to show that any diversion of water has been made by any of the appellants from the Squillchuck itself above Miller's head gate. Hence we conclude that the diversion complained of is the digging of the ditch which drained the marsh and spring on the Wheeler land, with the incidental right claimed by the Wheelers and their grantors to divert the overflow of the Byrd spring and marsh, after it had followed the natural path of gravitation into the Squillchuck. Confusion may be the worse confounded, however, for appellants say in their brief that respondents are seeking to restrain a diversion below the Miller head gate. No findings of fact were made by the trial court; but we think the evidence shows that the greater part of the water now flowing down the gulch into the Squillchuck from Wheeler Hill is due to the seepage from the Stemilt waters which have been turned on the lands of appellants. The question naturally occurs, whether the water from this artificial source, having naturally gravitated into the soil and percolating therein, may be ditched and drained for further use by the owners as against the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) right of a lower appropriator; in other words, whether percolating waters arising from an artificial source become a natural flow of an existing watershed and a part of its drainage stream. Our conclusion is that it may be or may not be so, according to the facts presented in the particular case under consideration. The Stemilt waters being the result of the landowners' energy and effort, it would seem but just to say that, so long as he used them or could impound the overflow or waste upon his own land, although for use on other land, one asserting a right of appropriation in no way dependent upon the artificial flow, but made without reference to it, should have no cause to complain. The doctrine of appropriation rests upon the theory of ownership, and, while cases going to the particular question here presented are not numerous, there are, nevertheless, some that in principle sustain the premises which we have laid down.

In Farnham on Waters, vol. 3, § 672d, the rule is stated thus: "When an appropriation is made of the water of a stream, the rights of the appropriator are limited to the natural condition of the stream at the time the appropriation is made, and he has no interest in improvements subsequently made which increase the supply of water flowing in it. Therefore, if by his own exertions another increases the available supply of water in the stream, he has a right to appropriate and use it to the extent of the increase. This rule does not apply to mere removal of obstructions or hastening of flow, so that the actual amount of water which passes along the stream is not increased, but only to cases in which a supply of water is added to the stream, which would not otherwise have flowed there." If this be the rule applying to waters of the stream actually appropriated, the conclusion is inevitable that it would apply with greater force to a supply of water brought from an entirely different source and from another watershed.

We find the principle underlying the rule quoted in Burnett v. Whitesides, 15 Cal. 35, where the rights of the first appropriator were limited to the natural waters of the stream. In Platte Valley Irrig. Co. v. Buckers' Mill. & Improv. Co. 25 Colo. 77, 53 Pac. 334, it was held that one who had increased the average continuous flow of a stream by his own energy and expenditure was entitled to such increase, but would not be entitled to the original flow as against the senior appropriator. In Heriman Irrig. Co. v. Butterfield Min. & Mill. Co. 19 Utah, 453, 51 L.R.A. 930, 57 Pac. 537, the court, acknowledging the principle of ownership in waters developed in excess of the natural flow, says: "We are clearly of the danger; and in the performance of this duty they act as the master's representatives, so that their knowledge is imputed to the master.

Same—care of vicious animal.

2. The owner of a camel which is used for purposes of exhibition, and which is known to be vicious, is bound to keep it in such manner as will absolutely prevent the occurrence of injury, through its vicious acts, to servants whose duties require them to be about it.

(June 14, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in plaintiff's favor and from an order denying a new trial in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Naphtaly F. Freidenrich and M. L. Schmidt for appellant.

Messrs. Carl Westerfeld and R. D. Duke, for respondent:

The knowledge of the keeper was knowledge of the defendant.

Clowdis v. Fresno Flume & Irrig. Co. 118 Cal. 315, 62 Am. St. Rep. 238, 50 Pac. 373; Brice v. Bauer, 108 N. Y. 428, 2 Am. St. Rep. 454, 15 N. E. 695; Cooley, Torts, 406; Higgins v. Williams, 114 Cal. 176, 45 Pac. 1041; Donnelly v. San Francisco Bridge Co. 117 Cal. 417, 49 Pac. 559; Brown v. Green, 1 Penn. (Del.) 535, 42 Atl. 991; McGarry v. New York & H. R. Co. 45 N. Y. S. R. 564, 18 N. Y. Supp. 195, affirmed in 137 N. Y.

627, 33 N. E. 745; Niland v. Geer, 46 App. Div. 194, 61 N. Y. Supp. 696; Corlies v. Smith, 53 Vt. 532; Keenan v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. 46 Hun, 544; Harris v. Fisher, 115 N. C. 318, 44 Am. St. Rep. 452, 20 S. E. 461; George H. Hammond Co. v. Johnson, 38 Neb. 244, 56 N. W. 967; Baldwin v. Casella, L. R. 7 Exch. 325; Stiles v. Cardiff Steam Nav. Co. 33 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 310; Applebee v. Percy, L. R. 9 C. P. 647; Gladman v. Johnson, 36 L. J. C. P. N. S. 153; Soronen v. Von Pustau, 112 App. Div. 437, 98 N. Y. Supp. 431; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 878; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 371; 2 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. p. 406; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 630; Ellledge v. National City & O. R. Co. 100 Cal. 282, 38 Am. St. Rep. 290, 34 Pac. 720.

It was the defendant's duty to inform the plaintiff that the camel was vicious.

1 Thomp. Neg. § 852; 4 Thomp. Neg. § 4041; 1 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 206; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 30 S. W. 501; McGarry v. New York & H. R. Co. supra; Leigh v. Omaha Street R. Co. 36 Neb. 131, 54 N. W. 134; Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Finn, 25 C. C. A. 579, 51 U. S. App. 256, 80 Fed. 483; Bowman v. Texas Brewing Co. 17 Tex. Civ. App. 446, 43 S. W. 808.

Even if the trait was one which manifested itself only at a certain time of the year, it was the duty of the defendant to notify the plaintiff of that trait.

2 Cooley, Torts, 3d ed. § 406; Meredith v. Reed, 26 Ind. 334; McIlvaine v. Lantz, 100 Pa. 586, 45 Am. Rep. 400; Hammond v. Melton, 42 Ill. App. 186.

wild animal or animal kept for exhibition purpose, since the question of a servant's assumption of risk or contributory negligence in using unsafe horse or mule is discussed in a case note to Milby & D. Coal & Min. Co. v. Balla, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 695, and the duty of the master to warn the servant against vicious horse is discussed in a case note to Cooper v. Cashman, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 209, the majority of cases of injury to servant by animals being such as are set out in those notes.

The only case found coming within the scope of the note as thus limited is Bormann v. Milwaukee, 93 Wis. 522, 33 L.R.A. 652, 67 N. W. 924, where it was held that an employee who voluntarily engages to work inside of the inclosure where animals feræ naturæ, such as elk and deer, are kept, assumes the risk of injury. The court in this case said: "As indicated, in the case at bar the defendant kept and maintained the animals in an inclosure, and it appears that the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to work inside of such inclosure, presumably in taking care of the park or the animals in the park. The plaintiff, therefore, as well as the defendant and its officers and agents, must conclusively be 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

presumed to know the habits and propensities of such animals. With such knowledge or presumed knowledge, he voluntarily entered upon the service. There is nothing to indicate that he did not know as much about the habits and propensities of the animals as the officers and agents of the defendant, nor that he was induced to enter such service by any misrepresentation or statement on the part of the defendant. The rule is familiar that a servant assumes the ordinary risks incident to the business in which he engages. This is not the case of domestic animals, presumably harmless, but which the owner knows to be vicious, and the injured person does not; and hence the rule invoked, that a plaintiff, in pleading, is not required to negative his own contributory negligence, is not applicable."

The general question of liability for injury done by animals feræ naturæ is discussed in the notes to Hays v. Miller, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 748, and Molloy v. Starin, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 445.

As to liability for injury by animal known to be dangerous, in the absence of negligence in restraining the same, see case note to Harris v. Carstens Packing Co. 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1164.

After knowledge of the animals mischievous propensities, the defendant was bound to keep it secure, and see that nobody was hurt on account of its viciousness.

Laverone v. Mangianti, 41 Cal. 138, 10 Am. Rep. 269.

Shaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages caused by the bite of a camel. The defendant was keeping animals for exhibition at a place called "The Chutes." The place in which the animals were on exhibition was commonly called the "zoo." Among these animals was a camel. Plaintiff was employed by the defendant to look after, care for, and attend to the animals in the zoo, including the camel. Upon entering the camel's stall to clean it, the camel seized the plaintiff's leg with his teeth, lifted him from the ground and swung him about in the air, biting his leg so severely that the bones were crushed, rendering amputation necessary. For this injury the plaintiff brings this suit. The jury returned a verdict in his favor, and judgment was entered thereon. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The errors assigned are that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and that the court erred in giving certain instructions and in certain rulings upon the admission of evidence.

The answer admits that the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to look after, care for, and attend to the camel; that the plaintiff was injured; and that, at and prior to the time of the injury, the plaintiff did not know of the vicious disposition of the camel, and had not been informed thereof by the defendant. There is evidence to the effect that the camel was of a vicious disposition, addicted to biting persons attending upon it, and that the defendant's superintendent knew of that disposition at the time he hired the plaintiff. There is, therefore, no foundation for the claim that the evidence does not sustain the verdict.

The "Chutes" had several departments, each presenting different performances or means for the amusement and entertainment of the public, all within one general inclosure. The zoo constituted one of these departments. The place was under the general charge of a general manager named Levy. The zoo was under the special supervision of a superintendent named Lawrence. Several men were employed about the zoo whose duty it was to sweep out the place daily, clean the cages and stalls every morning, and throughout the day when necessary, feed and otherwise care for the animals, watch the animals and visitors, and take care that the animals were not teased by the visitors and that the visitors were not injured by the animals. These men were divided into two shifts for two different parts of the work, one of which included the care of the camel and its stall and the other did not, and they were changed from one shift to the other every week. The plaintiff was one of the men employed in this work. He was not assigned to the shift which included the care of the camel, until the day he was injured, one week after he began the service. The contract of employment was made with Lawrence, the superintendent of the zoo. It does not appear from the evidence who directed him to go upon the shift to take care of the camel. He had at that time acquired by his own observation knowledge of the fact that, when upon the new shift, it was his duty to clean the camel's stall, and he entered the stall for that purpose without being specially directed to do so, and was immediately bitten, as alleged. The evidence shows, without conflict, that two of these fellow employees of the plaintiff knew of the vicious disposition of the camel at the time plaintiff was hired. As to the knowledge thereof by Lawrence, the superintendent who hired him, the evidence was conflicting.

The court gave the following instruction: "(2) If you believe from the evidence that the care of the animals in defendant's zoo was intrusted to employees of the defendant, and that said employees were notified and knew that the camel in question had vicious propensities, the defendant had notice and knowledge of such vicious propensities of said camel."

In view of the facts above stated, the jury would naturally understand this instruction to refer to the subordinate employees aforesaid, engaged about the zoo in the actual work above described. With respect to knowledge imputed to the owner of a domesticated animal of the fact that such animal is of vicious habits or disposition, the law is that, if knowledge of such fact is brought home to an agent or servant employed about the animal, and whose duty, as such agent or servant, requires him, if he knows of the vicious character of the animal, to act in respect thereof toward third persons, or toward the animal for the protection of third persons, in any matter involving a breach of such duty, such knowledge of the servant is imputed to the master, although not imparted to him. Clowdis v. Fresno Flume & Irrig. Co. 118 Cal. 315, 62 Am St. Rep. 238, 50 Pac. 373; McGarry v. New York & H. R. Co. 45 N. Y. S. R. 564, 18 N. Y. Supp. 196, affirmed in Court of Appeals, 137 N. Y. 627, 33 N. E. 745; Brice v. Bauer, 108 N. Y. 430, 2 Am. St. Rep. 454, 15 N. E. 695; Brown v. Green, 1 Penn. (Del.) 535, 42 Atl. 991; Niland v. Geer, 46 App. Div. 194, 61 N. Y. Supp. 696; Keenan v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. 46 Hun, 546; Corliss v. Smith, 53 Vt. 532; Harris v. Fisher, 115 N. C. 318, 44 Am. St. Rep. 452, 20 S. E. 461; George H. Hammond Co. v. Johnson, 38 Neb. 248, 56 N. W. 967; Applebee v. Percy, L. R. 9 C. P. 647; Lynch v. Kineth, 36 Wash. 371, 104 Am. St. Rep. 958, 78 Pac. 923.

It was a part of the duty of these employees, while occupied about the zoo, to know whether or not the animals, or any of them, were dangerous to persons about them, and to take care that no person within the inclosure should be injured by such animals. For that purpose, they each represented the Chutes Company, and were discharging that part of the duty of the Chutes Company toward persons allowed to enter the zoo. For a failure to discharge that duty by such employees, the principal would, of course, be responsible; and if one of these employees, knowing the vicious propensity of the camel, carelessly suffered a person to go near enough to the camel to be bitten by it, and such person was so bitten, the defendant would be liable for the damages thereby caused.

The defendant's claim that the above instruction is erroneous is sustainable only on the theory that the men engaged in the zoo in the actual work of caring for the animals were not charged with the duty of protecting any person against the attacks of animals known to them to be vicious, except visitors coming there for entertainment, or other strangers, and that, consequently, their knowledge of such vicious character will not be imputed to the defendant in any matter involving danger to persons connected with the establishment. The rule cannot be thus limited. It is the duty of one who owns or keeps domestic animals known to be vicious to guard them "in such a manner as will absolutely prevent the occurrence of an injury to others through such vicious acts of the animals as they are naturally inclined to commit." 2 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 368. This language is used in the authority cited with respect to the duty of an owner of wild animals, which are presumed to be ferocious. The rule is the same, however, with regard to domesticated animals when they are in fact vicious, and their real nature is known to the owner or keeper thereof. Laverone v. Mangianti, 41 Cal. 139, 10 Am. Rep. 269; 2 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 369, 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 352. The duty of protection against such animals is owing to the public generally, to strangers as well as to those dealing with or standing in some relation to the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

owner, those only being excluded from its operation who are themselves in fault. Earhart v. Youngblood, 27 Pa. 331; Marble v. Ross, 124 Mass. 44; Laverone v. Mangianti, supra; Muller v. McKesson, 73 N. Y. 199, 29 Am. Rep. 123; May v. Burdett, 9 Q. B. 101. Upon the discovery of the vicious character of the camel, these men, as its keepers, were required to keep it in such a manner as to prevent it from injuring any and all persons lawfully within the inclosure, and to warn them of the danger, regardless of the purposes of their coming. This obligation rested on them as representatives of the defendant, and in performing it they were performing a duty which the defendant owed. In all such cases, the knowledge of the servant is imputed to the master. The obligation was due from them, on behalf of the defendant, to the plaintiff, when he entered the zoo as an employee as much as to any other person allowed to enter. The fact that he then became a fellow servant is immaterial. The duty to warn the plaintiff was not at that time owing to him as a fellow servant; it was owing to him in common with all other persons in the same situation. In discharging that duty these employees would have represented their principal, the defendant, and would not have been acting as fellow servant of the plaintiff. It is correct, therefore, in contemplation of law, upon the admitted facts of this case, to say, as this instruction says, that if these employees knew that the camel had vicious propensities, then the defendant also had notice thereof.

Some rulings upon the admission of evidence are assigned as error, but they are of so insignificant a character that we do not think it necessary to discuss them. We find no substantial error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: Sloss, J.; Angellotti, J.

Petition for rehearing denied July 14, 1909.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

ARDMORE NATIONAL BANK, Impleaded, etc., Plff. in Err.,
v.

BRIGGS MACHINERY & SUPPLY COMPANY et al.

(20 Okla. 427, 94 Pac. 533.)

Insolvent corporation — receiver — title acquired.

1. The receiver of an insolvent, nongovernment corporation takes the property of the company for the creditors, subject to such equities, liens, or encumbrances, whether created by operation of law or by act of the corporation, which existed against the property at the time of his appointment.

Headnotes by KANE, J.

Same—time of vesting — priority of rights.

2. The receiver's title and right to possession of the property of an insolvent, nongovernment corporation vests from the date of the original order for the appointment, although the proceedings may not be perfected until a later date. The receiver's title and right to possession during the interval between such original order and the time of perfecting his appointment are superior to those of a judgment creditor who levies upon the property under his judgment during such interval.

Same — liens — priority — remedies.

3. Where a vendor, after the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property and affairs of an insolvent, nongovernment corporation, files its plea of intervention, setting up all the facts in relation to certain reservation-of-title notes taken by the vendor for sales of machinery to the insolvent corporation, and further alleges that the reservation notes are liens on the property, and prays for their foreclosure, and also prays for general relief, this is not such an election as will preclude the intervenor from afterwards amending its plea of intervention, and asserting title and right to possession of the property described in the reservation notes, as against one who claims to have a lien thereon subsequent in time to the reservation notes, where such lien, if it attaches to the property at all, came into existence after the property fell into the hands of the receiver, notwithstanding the reservation notes were not filed as chattel mortgages.

Acknowledgment — interested notary — validity.

4. The acknowledgment of a deed of trust, executed by a corporation grantor to secure payment of certain promissory notes

Case Note. — Acknowledgment of corporate instrument before one who is a stockholder or officer of corporation.

Upon the general question of right of interested person to take acknowledgment, see note to Havemeyer v. Dahn, 33 L.R.A. 332.

Stockholders of corporations.

It is settled by a long line of decisions, with but few exceptions, that an acknowledgment to an instrument, taken by an officer who has a direct beneficial interest in the instrument, is void; and a stockholder of a corporation is generally held, in accordance with this rule, to be disqualified to take an acknowledgment of an instrument to which the corporation is a party.

So, a mortgage running to a corporation, acknowledged before a stockholder of the corporation, is void, and will not be enforced. Ogden Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Mensch, 196 Ill. 554, 89 Am. St. Rep. 330, 63 N. E. 1049; Wilson v. Griess, 64 Neb. 792, 90 N. W. 866; Chadron Loan & Bldg. Asso. v. O'Linn, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 1, 95 N. W. 368; First Nat. Bank v. Citizens' State Bank, 11 Wyo. 32, 100 Am. St. Rep. 925, 70 Pac. 726.

An alleged mechanics' lien cannot be enforced where a necessary acknowledgment to the building and loan contract was taken by a stockholder in the building association. Miles v. Kelley, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 147, 40 S. W. 599; Bexar Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Heady, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 154, 50 S. W. 1079, 57 S. W. 583; Workman's Mut. Aid Asso. v. Monroe (Tex. Civ. App.) 53 S. W. 1029.

So, a mortgage to a loan association, acknowledged before a stockholder and profit sharer of the association, was held void in Hayes v. Southern Home Bldg. & L. Asso. 124 Ala. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 216, 26 So. 527, in an equitable action brought by the mortgagee. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, in Winsted Sav. Bank & Bldg. Asso. v. Spencer, 26 Conn. 195, it was held that a deed to a private moneyed corporation, the signature of the grantor in which was attested by a stockholder thereof, could not be the basis on an action in ejectment against the grantor. In this case the acknowledgment was also made before the same stockholder, but the court said that they would base the decision solely upon the invalidity of the attestation, as the question of the invalidity of the acknowledgment might, perhaps, be attended with some difficulty.

A conditional contract of sale to a corporation, attested by a stockholder thereof, is not admissible in an action in trover brought by the corporation to recover the property embraced within the terms of the contract of sale. Betts-Evans Trading Co. v. Bass, 2 Ga. App. 718, 59 S. E. 8.

A protest of a note, made by a stockholder of the bank holding the note, was held inadmissible in evidence in an action on the note, in Monongahela Bank v. Porter, 2 Watts, 141.

The following cases recognize the general rule that stockholders of corporations are not qualified to take acknowledgments to corporate instruments, but present somewhat unusual features:

An acknowledgment of a mortgage, void because taken before a stockholder of the mortgagee, will operate as an attestation of the signature of the grantor, and a bill to redeem the premises, based upon the theory that the stockholder was disqualified as a witness, will be dismissed for want of equity. Maddox v. Wood, 151 Ala. 157, 43 So. 968.

Notwithstanding the fact that an acknowledgment to a mortgage is void as being taken by a stockholder in the association to which the mortgage runs, such invalidity cannot be set up as a defense to an action in ejectment, brought by one claiming title under the mortgage. The mortgage must be directly attacked by an action is a ministerial act. Where such an instrument is acknowledged before a notary public who was at the time a director and treasurer of the grantor corporation, and also indebted for unpaid subscriptions to its stock, which facts were known to the grantor, but there was nothing on the face of the instrument or acknowledgment indicating such relationship, the deed of trust was entitled to registration, and the registry thereof was notice to subsequent purchasers, encumbrancers, or lienors.

(March 10, 1908.)

ERROR to the United States Court for the Southern District of the Indian Territory to review a judgment dismissing a claim of the intervening Ardmore National Bank, filed for precedence in a suit to wind up the affairs of the insolvent Tishomingo Oil & Cotton Company. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ledbetter & Bledsoe for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Stuart & Bell for defendants in error.

Kane, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees Briggs Machinery & Supply Company, Collins & Dulaney, and Stilwell Bierce & Smith-Vaile Company, who hereafter will be called the complainants, commenced the proceedings out of which this suit grows by filing their bill in equity, alleging that the Tishomingo Oil & Cotton Company, which will hereafter be called or proceeding brought expressly for that purpose. Monroe v. Arthur, 126 Ala. 362, 85 Am. St. Rep. 36, 28 So. 476.

So, after a mortgage, the acknowledgment of which was taken by a stockholder of the mortgagee, had been foreclosed and the land sold, it was held in National Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Cunningham, 130 Ala. 539, 30 So. 336, that the mortgagor could not maintain an action in ejectment against the purchaser, on the theory that the mortgage was void because of the defective acknowledgment.

But a bill to compel the determination of claims to real estate and to quiet title, which alleges that the mortgage which is the basis of the defendant's claim is void in that the acknowledgment was taken by a stockholder of the mortgagee, is a direct attack, and no decree for the enforcement of the mortgage will be rendered on a cross bill. Jenkins v. Jonas Schwab Co. 138 Ala. 664, 35 So. 649.

A deed invalid because the acknowledgment was taken before a stockholder of the mortgagee may be legalized by subsequent legislation, but not so as to cut off the intervening vested rights of third persons.

Steger v. Traveling Men's Bldg. & L. Asso. 208 Ill. 236, 100 Am. St. Rep. 225, 70 N. E. 236; Fugman v. Jiri Washington Bldg. & L. Asso. 209 Ill. 176, 70 N. E. 644; Maxwell v. Lincoln & F. W. Bldg. & L. Asso. 216 Ill. 85, 74 N. E. 804; Garlick v. Mutual Loan & Bldg. Asso. 236 Ill. 232, 86 N. E. 236.

In Greve v. Echo Oil Co. 8 Cal. App. 275, 96 Pac. 904, it was held that the acknowledgment of the signatures of the stockholders of a corporation to a deed from the corporation was not void because taken by another stockholder, who also signed the deed. The court recognized the general rule, but held that while the rule was applicable where the corporation was the grantee, it was not applicable where it was the grantor. The court said: "We have been unable to find, after diligent search, involving the examination of many cases, a single case where it has been held that an acknowledgment by grantors, taken before a grantor, is void. No reason occurs to us why such an acknowledge should be held void, and the reason assigned in the cases for holding an acknowledgment taken before a grantee void does not exist in such case. . . . In the case at bar, the consenting stockholder who took the acknowledgment of the other stockholders held but one ninth of the stock. The consent of the other eight stockholders was sufficient to validate the conveyance without his joining therein at all. He took no beneficial interest under the conveyance, and therefore his act does not transgress the rule laid down in the adjudicated cases."

A corporator in a purely eleemosynary institution, whose only beneficial interest therein is a small daily stipend for attending the meetings of the board, is competent to take the acknowledgment of a deed conveying title to the institution. Nichols v. Gloucester Charity School, 93 Va. 101, 24 S. E. 899.

—contrary view.

In a few jurisdictions it is held that the action of an officer in taking an acknowledgment is a ministerial act, and consequently a stockholder of a corporation is not disqualified to take the acknowledgment of corporate instruments.

Thus, in Read v. Toledo Loan Co. 68 Ohio St. 280, 62 L.R.A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 663, 67 N. E. 729, it was held that a mortgage duly executed and attested and acknowledged is not invalid and cannot be impeached, in the absence of fraud and undue advantage, merely because the witnesses who attest the signature of the mortgagor, and the notary public taking his acknowledgment, are stockholders of, but not otherwise interested in, the corporation named as grantee. In taking and certifying an acknowledgment, the act of the notary public or other officer taking and certifying the same is a ministerial, and not a judicial, act. And to the same general effect was the decision in Horton v. Columbian Bldg. & L. Soc. 8 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 169.

So, in Kennedy v. Security Bldg. & Sav. Asso. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 57 S. W. 388, the court said: "We have several times held the oil company, was indebted to them severally as follows: To the Briggs Machinery & Supply Company, $7,864.64; to Collins & Dulaney, the sum of $4,580.88; to the Stilwell-Bierce & Smith-Vaile Company, in the sum of $5,546.65. All of these sums were evidenced by promissory notes. Contemporaneously with the dates of said notes, and for the purpose of securing their payment, the oil company made, executed, and delivered its certain deed of trust to J. C. Weaver, as trustee, whereby it conveyed to said trustee all the physical properties of said oil company situated at Tishomingo, Indian Territory, the same being particularly described in the complaint and said deed of trust exhibited therewith. It was further alleged that the oil company had become insolvent and unable to secure funds to operate its business, and that it was a non-going concern, and, further, that said manufacturing establishment consists of valuable and costly machinery, and the same was liable to waste, and that it was being greatly damaged for the want of care. The complaint concludes with the following prayer: "First, that the court do forthwith appoint a receiver to take charge of the property of said respondent, Tishomingo Oil & Cotton Company, and to care for the same, and to hold the same in his custody and possession pending further order of the court; and second, for foreclosure of their trust deed and lien against said property, and that said lien be set up and declared to be a first lien upon the property; and third, that a stockholder or officer of a corporation, who is a notary public, is not disqualified to take acknowledgments to conveyances to it or for its benefit. The writer is of the opinion that the practice is to be reprehended, but it does not render his official act as a public officer of the state illegal or invalid."

And the fact that an acknowledgment of a deed of trust to a corporation was taken by a stockholder and director who was a notary public does not make the instrument invalid, in the absence of any improper conduct, bad faith, or undue advantage arising out of his relation to the corporation. Cooper v. Hamilton Perpetual Bldg. & L. Asso. 97 Tenn. 285, 33 L.R.A. 338, 56 Am. St. Rep. 795, 37 S. W. 12.

So, in Home Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Evans (Tenn. Ch. App.) 53 S. W. 1104, it was held that the fact that an acknowledgment to a mortgage was taken by a director and officer of the mortgagee did not invalidate the mortgage. It does not appear expressly that the director was a shareholder, but the decision is referred to the doctrine of the Tennessee courts.

And in Keene Guaranty Sav. Bank v. Lawrence, 32 Wash. 572, 73 Pac. 680, the court said: "The mere fact that the notary in this case was an officer and stockholder in the corporation to whom the mortgage was executed would not preclude his taking the acknowledgment of the mortgagor. The taking of an acknowledgment by a notary public is a ministerial act, and may be performed by anyone qualified to act as notary."

In Watts v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Okla. 645, 58 Pac. 782, the court said, obiter: "We do not think that the fact alone that a person was an officer of a bank or a corporation would necessarily make him an interested person, in the meaning of the law, so as to render an acknowledgment taken by him, where the bank or a corporation was a party, necessarily void."

Record of instrument so acknowledged, as notice.

In some cases the question has arisen 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whether an instrument purporting to give a lien to a corporation, which is acknowledged before or attested by a stockholder of the corporation, is, upon being recorded, constructive notice to subsequent lienors.

Thus, in Kothe v. Krag-Reynolds Co. 20 Ind. App. 293, 50 N. E. 504, it was held that a chattel mortgage acknowledged before a stockholder of the mortgagee is void, and is not, although recorded, notice to subsequent innocent lien holders.

And the record of a chattel mortgage to a corporation, which was void because it was acknowledged before one of the stockholders, is not constructive notice to subsequent judgment creditors of the mortgagor. Smith v. Clark, 100 Iowa, 605, 69 N. W. 1011.

So, the record of a written instrument, whether the same purports to create a lien, or to convey or to reserve title, which is attested by a stockholder in a corporation in whose interest such writing is executed, is unauthorized and invalid, and effects no notice of the existence or contents of such instrument. Betts-Evans Trading Co. v. Bass, 2 Ga. App. 718, 59 S. E. 8.

But, in Ogden Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Mensch, 196 Ill. 554, 89 Am. St. Rep. 330, 63 N. E. 1049, it was held that where the disqualifying interest of the notary public was not apparent on the face of the mortgage or the certificate of acknowledgment thereof, the registration and recording thereof were effectual to charge a subsequent mortgagee with constructive notice of the prior mortgage. It will be noticed that ARDMORE NAT. BANK v. BRIGGS MACHINERY & SUPPLY CO. followed this same rule.

So, in Boswell v. First Nat. Bank, 16 Wyo. 161, 92 Pac. 624, 93 Pac. 661, it was held that where the disqualification of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was made is not apparent upon the face of the deed or instrument or certificate of acknowledgment, the recording of the instrument in the proper office will operate as constructive notice thereof, notwithstanding the latent defect.

Where a note and mortgage were executed and delivered to a man who was presi-that the court will order the sale of said property and estate for the purpose of paying the debts and satisfying the lien of the complainants; fourth, that complainants may have final judgment and a decree of foreclosure and sale in such terms and at such times as shall best protect their rights and the rights of any of their creditors who may intervene herein; and fifth, that the court do fix a time within which any persons urging claims, debts, or liens against said respondent corporation shall file their interventions herein. Complainants further pray that due and sufficient process may be issued and served with right form of law upon the respondent, Tishomingo Oil & Cotton Company, commanding it to be and appear, etc., and all other and further relief, both general and special, to which it may be entitled, complainants pray." After the complaint was filed a great many of the creditors of the oil company, probably all of them, filed their pleas of intervention, setting up their respective claims, and praying for relief. The court below took jurisdiction of the entire matter, and rendered to each creditor the relief the court found he was entitled to, disposed of all the assets of the oil company, and practically wound up its affairs. On the same day the complaint was filed, Judge Townsend appointed Kirby Purdom, of Tishomingo, receiver of the oil company, who duly qualified as such receiver. On the 3d of November following, Judge Townsend removed Kirby Purdom as receiver, and on the same day appointed B. R. Brundage, who likewise qualified as required by law, and took charge of all the assets of the defendant company. On the 24th day of November, 1903, the Continental Gin Company filed its original plea of intervention, alleging that the Tishomingo Oil & Cotton Company was indebted to the intervener on certain promissory notes; that the notes were given for the purchase price of machinery purchased by the oil company from the gin company; and that it was recited in said notes that the title, possession, and ownership to said properties does not pass from the intervener until the notes and interest are paid.

There were further allegations to the effect that the oil company was indebted to it upon four promissory notes, all payable to its order at Birmingham, Alabama, or Dallas, Texas, and aggregating the sum of $4,500, exclusive of interest and attorneys' fees, said notes being described specifically as to date and maturity; that all the notes were past due, and only $50 had been paid and in Ogden Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Mensch, supra, the court said, obiter: "It is well, as it seems to us, to here remark that an attorney or agent of a party who is beneficially interested in a deed or mortgage, or one who is a director or other officer, or an agent, but not a stockholder, in a corporation which is interested in the instrument to be acknowledged, is not disqualified to take and certify to an acknowledgment in an official capacity."

In a few cases falling within the scope of this note it has been held that the mere fact that a man is an officer of a corporation does not furnish the presumption that he is a stockholder in the corporation, so as to disqualify him from taking the acknowledgment of a corporate instrument.

Thus, in Florida Sav. Bank v. Rivers, 36 Fla. 578, 18 So. 850, it was held error to assume that because the person taking the acknowledgment of a mortgage running to a bank was vice president thereof, he must necessarily be a stockholder, and consequently disqualified to take such acknowledgment.

And in Horbach v. Tyrrell, supra, it was held that the fact that one is shown to be a secretary and treasurer of a corporation will not authorize the presumption that he is a stockholder of such corporation, and disqualified to take the acknowledgment of corporate instruments.

Cases involving the right of mere employees or agents of the corporation to take acknowledgments of corporate instruments have not been included.

Officers of corporation.

The fact that the person taking the acknowledgment of a corporate instrument is an officer of the corporation will not disqualify him and render the acknowledgment void, if he is not also a stockholder therein.

Bank of Woodland v. Oberhaus, 125 Cal. 320, 57 Pac. 1070 (bank cashier); Florida Sav. Bank v. Rivers, 36 Fla. 577, 18 So. 850 (vice president); Bardsley v. German-American Bank, 113 Iowa, 216, 84 N. W. 1041 (bank cashier); Banking House of A. Castetter v. Stewart, 70 Neb. 815, 98 N. W. 34 (cashier); Horbach v. Tyrrell, 48 Neb. 514, 37 L.R.A. 434, 67 N. W. 485 (secretary and treasurer).

So, in Sawyer v. Cox, 63 Ill. 130, it was held that a secretary of a corporation could take the acknowledgment of a deed from the corporation, although he also attested the signature of the vice president, who signed the deed in behalf of the corporation, where such attestation was not required by law in order to make the deed valid.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

thereon; that two of the notes, dated January 1, 1902, were executed by the defendant for 6-106 Continental linter feeders and condensers, Inv. No. Br. 559, D. S. P., 239; and that it was recited in said notes that the title, possession, and ownership of the property should not pass from the intervener Continental Gin Company until the notes were paid in full, and that the two notes dated July 31, 1902, were executed for one 3-70 Saw Munger Sliding Idler Gin outfit complete, with engine, boiler, pump, feeder, and connections, and it was recited in said notes that the title, possession, and ownership should not pass from the intervener the Continental Gin Company until said notes were paid in full. Copies of the four notes were attached to the plea of intervention. It was also alleged that in all four of the notes it was provided that the intervener should have full power to declare the same due and take possession of the property at any time it deemed itself insecure, even before the maturity of the notes, and that the intervener deemed itself insecure, and had exercised the option given in the notes, which matured January 1, 1904, and it declared the same due and payable; that it had become necessary, for the collection of said notes and the preservation of the intervener's right in said property for suit to be brought; and that thereby the defendant became liable to the intervener in the sum of 10 per cent of the amount of the notes for attorneys' fees, and that the intervener had sued on the notes and employed counsel for that purpose. The prayer for relief read as follows: "Now this intervener asks that it be given judgment against respondents for the amount due on said notes executed by respondents, and that also an order be entered herein establishing an indebtedness against the property described in said two mortgages executed by said J. D. Ray, who is hereby prayed to be made a party hereto, for the amount still due, including principal, interest, and attorneys' fees, on the four notes thereby secured, and that this intervener's lien and claim upon the property described in said four notes executed by respondent, and said mortgage executed by said J. D. Ray, to be superior to the lien and claim of all other persons, firms, and corporations upon said property. And intervener further prays that it have final judgment and a decree of foreclosure and sale in such terms and at such times as shall best protect the rights of this intervener and all other creditors holding liens upon said property above described. And this intervener further prays for all other general and special relief to which it may be entitled in the premises in any way." There is no controversy in relation to the four notes executed to J. D. Ray or the mortgages given to secure their payment, above mentioned, so they need not be taken into account in this case.

The gin company also joined the complainants in a motion which was presented to Judge Townsend, wherein it was alleged that the "complainants in said original bill and intervener the Continental Gin Company, being the movants herein, are the only creditors holding liens upon the said physical effects, and that any deterioration in the value of said property and any expense incurred in keeping the same will occasion loss and charges that will diminish their security; that they hold valid first liens upon said physical properties, and that they have brought their appropriate bill to foreclose the same; and that said security is likely to be, and will most certainly be, deteriorated and diminished in value if the same is held in charge of the receiver until the end of the litigation. Movants further show the court that it is now a seasonable time to sell said physical property, and that they are advised and believe that the same can be sold to better advantage within the next thirty days than at a later date, and that such sale will prevent the diminution of their security by waste or expenses of keeping. Wherefore movants pray that the court grant an order directing the sale of the physical property of respondent (defendant) as set out in complainants' original bill, and appoint a commissioner to make said sale in accordance with the deed of trust of the complainants, and all the liens and mortgages of the intervener, set out in extenso in complainants' original bill, and that the court do fix an upset price for which the property may be sold, and designate the time and place of sale, and for such other and further orders as, in the discretion of the court, may be necessary or proper to fully protect the movants' rights and equities herein." On the 2d day of March, 1904, the gin company filed its second amended plea of intervention, stating the facts as to the reservation notes practically as in its former plea, but stating that without in any way waiving its rights under its reservation-of-title notes, it was willing to let the court foreclose them as chattel mortgages if it would inure to the benefit of all the creditors of the oil company. The prayer for relief in relation to the reservation notes was as follows: "Now this intervener asks that an order be entered herein establishing an indebtedness against the property described in said two mortgages executed by J. D. Ray, who is hereby prayed to be made a party hereto, for the full amount still due, including principal, interest, and attorneys' fees, on the four notes thereby secured, and, if the court should deem it best and equitable to treat the conditional sale evidenced by said four notes as a mortgage, to give this intervener judgment for the amount due on said four notes executed by respondent, including principal and interest, together with a foreclosure of the lien securing said four notes on the property therein described; and if the court should deem it best not to treat said conditional sale as a mortgage, that this intervener be given judgment establishing its ownership to said property described in said four notes, and ordering the receiver herein to deliver possession of the same to this intervener, and that this intervener's lien upon the property described in said mortgages executed by said J. D. Ray be adjudged superior to the lien and claims of all other persons, firms, and corporations upon said property described in said mortgages, and that no other person, firm, or corporation be allowed to acquire any right, title, interest, or claim in and to, or lien upon, said property described in said notes executed by respondents until this intervener's claims upon said property and rights to said property shall have been fully protected. And this intervener further prays that it have final judgment, and a decree of foreclosure and sale as to the property described in said mortgages executed by J. D. Ray, and a decree protecting this intervener's rights in and to said property described in said four notes executed by respondent, and that this court enter such orders as will best protect the rights of this intervener and of all other creditors holding claims to or liens upon said property above mentioned. This intervener prays for all other relief, both general and special, to which he may be entitled to in the premises in any way."

On the 19th day of February, 1904, the plaintiff in error, the Ardmore National Bank, filed its original plea of intervention, claiming a lien on the property in controversy under and by virtue of a judgment against the oil company, and execution issued thereon, and liens established by equitable proceedings in the nature of bills of discovery. On the 30th day of March it filed its amended plea of intervention. The judgment of the Ardmore National Bank against the oil company, on which it bases its right to a lien, was rendered on the 31st day of October, 1903, and execution was issued thereon on the 2d day of February, 1904, and returned unsatisfied.

There is no dispute between the parties to this suit in regard to the amounts due from the oil company to the various creditors. Nor is there any dispute as to the execution and delivery of the instruments under which the appellees claim liens, nor that they were prior in time to the judgment and proceedings under which the appellant claims a prior lien. The appellant contends: First: That the gin company, by its original plea of intervention, and by joining the complainants in their motion to sell the property, had waived its rights under the reservation-of-title notes; that the gin company treated the notes as chattel mortgages, and attempted to foreclose them as a lien upon the property by its original plea of intervention, and the title and ownership thereto became thereby divested out of the gin company and passed to the oil company; and that the gin company having treated the reservation notes as chattel mortgages in its original plea, it was estopped from reasserting title by amended plea, and the notes being unrecorded, they were not available as prior liens against the liens asserted by the appellant. Second. That the deed of trust attempted to be foreclosed by the complainants was illegal and void, because it was never legally acknowledged and recorded; that the notary who took the acknowledgment was disqualified and incompetent to take such acknowledgment, for the reason that he was beneficially and financially interested in said deed; that at the time he took the acknowledgment he was a stockholder and a director and treasurer of the oil company, the grantor, and owed a considerable sum of money on unpaid stock subscriptions. The foregoing were substantially the issues presented below, and the trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the complainants and the intervener of the gin company, and against the appellant, the Ardmore National Bank.

The general jurisdiction of equity over corporate bodies does not extend to the power of dissolving corporations or winding up their affairs and sequestrating the corporate property and effects, in the absence of express statutory authority. But in most of the states of this country the general jurisdiction of courts of equity has been enlarged to the extent of authorizing the appointment of receivers in behalf of creditors and shareholders. These statutes greatly enlarge the powers of courts of equity over property and management of insolvent, nongoing corporations. Section 3488 of the Indian Territory Annotated Statutes of 1899, the statute in force in the Indian territory when this proceeding was commenced, provides as follows: "Whenever, in any case, a receiver shall be appointed for a corporation or the trustees thereof, or any copartnership or joint-stock company, and the order or decree of the court, judge, or chancellor shall be that the lands, tenements, goods, chattels, funds, assets, moneys, credits, choses in action, rights and interests of every kind, name, and nature, either in law or equity, or any part thereof, belonging to the same, shall be placed in the hands of such receiver, he shall from thenceforward, until the further order or decree of the court, judge, or chancellor, have full possession, custody, and control thereof, and shall be vested with the title, so far as it shall be necessary to collect debts, preserve the assets and property for the benefit of creditors and all persons interested, and may and shall bring and prosecute and defend all suits in his own name that may be necessary for that purpose." It has been held by the supreme court of Wisconsin, in Atchison v. Davidson, 2 Pinney (Wis.) 48, under a statute similar to the above, that receivers of corporations are appointed for the benefit of the creditors, with power and authority to collect and pay over to them the assets. The choses in action of the corporation are in the possession of the receiver for the creditors, and are, to all intents and purposes, the property of the creditors. The receiver of an insolvent corporation stands as the representative both of the creditors and the corporation and of its shareholders. He is not, therefore, the agent or representative of the corporation exclusively, but is regarded rather as a trustee for both creditors and shareholders. Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 479; Talmage v. Pell, 7 N. Y. 347; Libby v. Rosekrans, 55 Barb. 202; Alexander v. Relfe, 74 Mo. 495; Angell v. Silsbury, 19 How. Pr. 48. The receiver of an insolvent, nongoing corporation takes the property of the company for the creditors, subject to such equities, liens, or encumbrances, whether created by operation of law or by act of the corporation, which existed against the property at the time of his appointment.

It is admitted by all the parties to this suit that, at the time the receiver was appointed, the oil company was an insolvent, nongoing corporation, and that the property described in the reservation notes was the property of the gin company. The appellant concedes this, but insists that, after the receiver was appointed, the gin company lost its place of vantage by treating its reservation notes as chattel mortgages, and not complying with the registration law governing such instruments. Under the laws of Arkansas an unrecorded chattel mortgage is good between the parties, and, if we are right on the proposition that the possession of the receiver is the possession of the creditors, it must follow that even treating these reservation notes as chattel mortgages after the property came into the hands of the receiver would avail the appellant nothing. "A chattel mortgage, though not filed for record, is a valid security between the parties; and when, by virtue of it, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property after condition broken, this is an appropriation of it to the debt secured, and his title is good against a creditor of the mortgagor who subsequently attaches the property in his possession." Applewhite v. Harrell Mill Co. 49 Ark. 279, 5 S. W. 292. The receiver's title and right to possession of the property of an insolvent, nongoing corporation vests from the date of the original order for the appointment, although the proceedings may not be perfected until a later date. The receiver's title and right to possession during the interval between such original order and the time of perfecting his appointment are superior to those of a judgment creditor who levies upon the property under his judgment during such interval. High, Receivers, § 136; Rutter v. Tallis, 5 Sandf. 610; Steele v. Sturges, 5 Abb. Pr. 442. We do not believe, however, that the acts of the gin company amounted to a waiver of any of its rights under its reservation notes. It was within the power of the court to grant the gin company the relief it did under its original plea of intervention. In both pleas it stated the facts in substantially the same language, showing to the court the exact circumstances surrounding the transaction. It is true that in the original plea the gin company asked to have its lien under its reservation notes foreclosed. But it also asked for such other and further orders, as in the discretion of the court, may be necessary and proper to protect its rights and equities, which, in effect, amounted to a prayer of general relief. In its amended plea it expressed a willingness to have the property covered by its notes sold and the notes treated as chattel mortgages, if the court found that it would be to the advantage of all the creditors to do so, and closes its plea with a prayer for general relief. Under a prayer for general relief, the court may grant any relief that the facts stated will warrant, although such relief be inconsistent with the special relief prayed for. Cook v. Bronaugh, 13 Ark. 187; Kelly v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555; Shields v. Trammell, 19 Ark. 62; Chaffe v. Oliver, 39 Ark. 531. In Cook v. Bronaugh, supra, the supreme court of Arkansas says: "Where there is a prayer for specific relief, and also a general prayer for relief, if the state of case as presented by the bill should not be sustained in evidence, or the court should, upon principles of equity, refuse the specific relief, it may, notwithstanding, give to the complainant under his general prayer any relief warranted by the facts as set forth in this bill." From an examination of the record, it is quite obvious why the gin company and the other lien holders, including the appellant herein, were willing to have the property sold in bulk by the receiver. The following is taken from an agreed statement of facts signed by the attorneys for the complainants, the attorneys for the gin company, and the attorneys for the Ardmore National Bank (this part of the agreement has relation only to the property in dispute between the gin company and the appellant): "Ninth. It is agreed that the property described in said four notes executed by the defendant to the Continental Gin Company was used in the proper operation of an oil mill, and that it is usual and customary for an oil mill to own gins in connection with their business, and that the property of the defendant, taken as a whole, was worth more than would have been the aggregate value of the different portions of said property taken separately. Tenth. It is agreed that all the property described in the complainants' amended complaint and in said plea of intervention of the Continental Gin Company has been sold in this case under an order of the court, and that it was purchased by Sam Davidson, and that said property brought more at said sale than it would have brought had the property described in said two notes for $1,500 each been sold separately, and had the property described in said two $750 notes been sold separately, and had the other property described in complainants' bills been sold separately, and that it was for the benefit of said defendant that the property described in complainants' complaint and mortgage and in said second amended plea of intervention of Continental Gin Company was sold together and as a whole. . . . Fourteenth. It is agreed that, in the sale to Sam Davidson, above mentioned, the property described in said two notes executed by defendant to the Continental Gin Company for principal sum of $1,500 each brought $3,500, and the property described in said two notes for principal, sum of $750 each brought $2,000, and that, in the event the Ardmore National Bank shall prevail in this suit, said sums may be taken as a basis in determining the priority of the liens and rights thereto." Under the circumstances disclosed by the agreed statement of facts, it was natural that all parties who hoped to establish liens against the property should insist on it all being sold together. It cannot be said that the gin company, by agreeing to this arrangement, which would have the effect of being to the advantage of the other creditors, would work a forfeiture of its own rights. Where a vendor, after the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property and affairs of an insolvent, nongovernment corporation, files its pleas of intervention, setting up all the facts in relation to certain reservation-of-title notes taken by the vendor for sales of machinery to the insolvent corporation, and further alleges that the reservation notes are liens on the property, and prays for their foreclosure, and also prays for general relief, this is not such an election as will preclude the intervenor from afterwards amending its plea of intervention, and asserting title and right to possession of the property described in the reservation notes, as against one who claims to have a lien thereon subsequent in time to the reservation notes, where such lien, if it attached to the property at all, came into existence after the property fell into the hands of the receiver, notwithstanding the reservation notes were not filed as chattel mortgages.

On the question of the illegality of the acknowledgment to the deed of trust, we are of the opinion that the acknowledgment of a deed of trust executed by a corporation grantor to secure payment of certain promissory notes is a ministerial act. Where such an instrument is acknowledged before a notary public who was at the time a director and treasurer of the grantor corporation, and also indebted for unpaid subscriptions to its stock, which facts were known to the grantor, but there was nothing on the face of the instrument or acknowledgment indicating such relationship, the deed of trust was entitled to registration, and the registry thereof was notice to subsequent purchasers, encumbrancers, or lienors.

The correct rule is laid down in National Bank v. Conway, 1 Hughes, 37, Fed. Cas. No. 10,037 where it is held that, where the acknowledgment is regular and fair on its face, no hidden interest of the notary can be proved to impeach its validity. It is against the policy of recording acts to hold an acknowledgment void because of the secret interest of an officer taking and certifying it. The effect should be to prevent rather than allow hidden defects in the evidence of public records.

The same question was involved in Morrow v. Cole, 58 N. J. Eq. 203, 42 Atl. 673. In this case (Morrow v. Cole) the chancellor, in his opinion, says: "It is held in a number of cases that, if it appear on the face of the deed that the officer is either a party thereto, or a cestui que trust named therein, the acknowledgment is void and the record not notice. Wilson v. Traer, 20 Iowa, 231; Bowden v. Parrish, 86 Va. 68, 19 Am. St. Rep. 873, 9 S. E. 616; Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351. Some dicta go further, and assert that the interest of the acknowledging officer, whether it appear upon the face of the deed or not, will render the acknowledgment a nullity. Groesbeck

v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 345; Wills v. Woods, 28 Kan. 411. These dicta cannot be supported. Aside from the case of a married woman, as to which it is not necessary to express an opinion, it appears to me very plain that if the interest does not appear on the face of the deed the record is notice. The complainant's contention is that the officer who takes an acknowledgment performs a judicial act, and that, as no man can be a judge in his own case, such act, if done by one interested, is void. This contention is unsound. The act is no more judicial than ministerial. A judicial act ordinarily has reference to some controversy. There is nothing suggestive of controversy in an acknowledgment. It is said that the officer must be satisfied that the person who appears before him is the grantor, and that his determination that he is a judicial act. But the duty of identifying people, of being satisfied that they are what they claim to be, is discharged by all sorts of administrative officers,—for example, by a treasurer who pays out money,—and not only by officials, but at times by every member of the community. It may as well be predicated of the act, then, that it is ministerial as that it is judicial. Nothing else that the officer does has even the semblance of judicial action. He makes known the contents of the paper; he hears the grantor say that he signs it as his voluntary act and deed; and then he makes a written certificate of the facts. If the act of the officer is not judicial, the doing of it is not adjudging one's own case. If the grantor takes his own acknowledgment, it is of no effect, because it is obviously contrary to the provisions of our statute on the subject. If the grantee takes the grantor's acknowledgment, it cannot be said, perhaps, that any express provision of the statute is violated, but the act nevertheless is void, not because we have here an instance of a judge deciding his own case, but because the same public policy which prevents an interested judge from acting will (with certain reservations) prevent an interested master or commissioner. The distinction is important in this respect. The decisions of judges should always be above suspicion. To insure this result, the judges themselves should be absolutely free from the bias of self-interest, and the rule of public policy should be rigidly enforced. To apply it as rigidly to the case of commissioners, whose public functions are so different, would work little benefit, and would lead to results antagonistic to the policy of the registry laws. It may be safely asserted that it would be much more injurious to public interests to hold that extraneous proof of an undisclosed or secret interest (almost always slight) would avoid acknowledgments, and thus render the record of conveyances unreliable, than it would be to hold the contrary. Says Chief Justice Waite, in National Bank v. Conway, supra: 'It is against the policy of the recording acts to hold an acknowledgment void because of the secret interest of an officer taking and certifying it. The effort should be to prevent, rather than allow, hidden defects in the evidence of public records.' Accordingly, he held the acknowledgment under review in that case to be a ministerial act and the record notice. Such was also the decision in Lynch v. Livingston, 6 N. Y. 422, and Kimball v. Johnson, 14 Wis. 674. Both reason and authority concur in declaring, where the interest of the acknowledging officer does not appear on the face of the deed, that the acknowledgment is not void, and that the registry of the deed is notice. In Wells v. Wright, 12 N. J. L. 132, Marsh v. Mitchell, 26 N. J. Eq. 497, affirmed in 27 N. J. Eq. 631, and Homœopathic Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Marshall, 32 N. J. Eq. 110, the question related to the effect to be given to the declarations contained in the acknowledgment of a married woman,—how far they were disputable. In the last of these cases, Chancellor Runyon, dissenting, in a measure, from the view expressed in the previous cases, was of opinion that the act of the officer in ascertaining whether the married woman executed the conveyance of her own free will, without threats and coercion, was a judicial act. Perhaps with more accuracy it might be designated quasi judicial. Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U. S. 302, 31 L. ed. 158, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 143. Whether judicial or not, it is manifest that these decisions do not touch the present case. They do not deal with the question of notice. I think the registry of the mortgage was notice, and that therefore it is a lien prior to the judgment."

Another case (Read v. Toledo Loan Co. 68 Ohio St. 280, 62 L.R.A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 663, 67 N. E. 729) to the same effect is probably more in point. In the Ohio Case the mortgage was witnessed by two stockholders of the corporation grantee, and acknowledged before a notary public, also a stockholder of the grantee corporation. The supreme court of Ohio says: "In the case at bar it is admitted that Cary D. Lindsay, the assignor, at the time he acknowledged this mortgage, knew of the relation the notary, Grant Williams, sustained to the Toledo Loan Company, and knew that he was then the holder of two shares of stock in said company; and there is in this case no imputation or charge of improper conduct or bad faith or undue advantage arising out of such interest or which was placed in the hands of the sheriff on the 28th day of June, 1907, and by the sheriff levied on lots numbered 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 in block 66 in the town of Clinton, and due return made thereof on the date it was received. At the time the petition was filed a summons was issued, directed to the sheriff of the county, who made due return thereon on June 28th, showing that the defendants could not be found in the county. At the time of filing his petition, plaintiff also filed an affidavit to obtain service by publication, and on that date an order of publication was issued by the clerk, which was published in the Custer County News. Defendants failed to appear and answer, or otherwise plead within the time required by law, but wholly made default. After the institution of the suit defendant in error W. I. Brannon, hereafter referred to as intervener, having been granted leave by the court to interplead, filed his plea of intervention, alleging that he was the owner of the real estate levied upon under the order of attachment, and that he claimed same under a deed executed by defendants to him on June 20, 1907, and recorded by him in the office of the register of deeds of Custer county on July 3, 1907, which was five days after the issuance of the attachment writ. He further alleges that plaintiff had notice of his deed and claim to the property at the time the order of attachment was sued out. To this interplea plaintiff filed his verified answer, in which he denies that intervener has any interest or claim in the property levied upon or any valid deed thereto, and, pleading in the alternative, says that if he has any claim or interest, he acquired such with full knowledge and notice of plaintiff's right and claim in the property under the attachment, with the purpose and object to defeat the rights of plaintiff. Intervener thereupon filed a motion to dissolve the attachment for irregularities in the attachment proceedings. Upon hearing this motion the court sustained same, and dismissed plaintiff's action. From the judgment of the court vacating the attachment and dismissing the action, this proceeding in error is brought.

Mr. M. L. Holcombe, for plaintiff in error:

The court had jurisdiction.

Central Loan & T. Co. v. Campbell Commission Co. 5 Okla. 396, 49 Pac. 48; 2 Black, Judgm. §§ 794, 801; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 316, 19 L. ed. 932; Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. 77, 22 L. ed. 564; Megee v. Beirne, 39 Pa. 50; Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65; Peterson v. Willard, 17 La. Ann. 93; National Bank v. Peters, 51

Kan. 62, 32 Pac. 637; Johnson v. Stockham, 89 Md. 368, 43 Atl. 943; Sale v. French, 61 Miss. 170; McGehee, Due Process of Law, pp. 87, 107; Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. 336, 13 L. ed. 164; Picquet v. Swan, 5 Mason, 35, Fed. Cas. No. 11,134; Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. 319, 17 L. ed. 283; McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 366, 21 L. ed. 348; Mohr v. Manierre, 101 U. S. 417, 25 L. ed. 1052; Thaw v. Ritchie (Thaw v. Falls) 136 U. S. 519, 34 L. ed. 531, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1037; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. ed. 1054, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 734, 24 L. ed. 572; Windsor v. McVeigh, 93 U. S. 279, 23 L. ed. 916.

The affidavit was sufficient.

Raymond v. Nix, 5 Okla. 656, 49 Pac. 1110; Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 282; Pierce v. Butters, 21 Kan. 124; Long v. Fife, 45 Kan. 271, 23 Am. St. Rep. 724, 25 Pac. 594; Shippen v. Kimball, 47 Kan. 173, 27 Pac. 813; Foreman v. Carter, 9 Kan. 674; Bannister v. Carroll, 43 Kan. 64, 22 Pac. 1012; Larimer v. Knoyle, 43 Kan. 338, 23 Pac. 487; Smith v. Whittlesey, 19 Ohio C. C. 412; Green v. Green, 7 Ind. 113; Wescott v. Archer, 12 Neb. 345, 11 N. W. 491, 577; 1 Bates, Pl. & Pr. pp. 585, 684; Rapp v. Kyle, 26 Kan. 89.

An intervener cannot attack the jurisdiction of the court.

Raymond v. Nix, supra; 1 Shinn, Attachm. § 429; 4 Shinn, Attachm. § 433; Leppel v. Beck, 2 Colo. App. 390, 31 Pac. 185; Greenville Nat. Bank v. Evans-Snyder-Buel Co. 9 Okla. 353, 60 Pac. 249; 4 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 606; J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Merrill, 68 Iowa, 540, 27 N. W. 742.

Mr. George T. Webster for defendants in error.

Hayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

No trial was had upon the issues of fact made by intervener's interplea and plaintiff's answer thereto. The judgment of the court vacating the attachment and dismissing the action was upon intervener's motion to dissolve and set aside the attachment. The grounds of this motion are stated in general and somewhat indefinite terms. The motion in substance is that intervener moves the court to dismiss and vacate the attachment, for the reason that the court was without jurisdiction of either the person or property attached. The motion further recites that it is based upon the pleadings, records, and files in the cause. The alleged irregularities complained of, and upon which the judgment of the trial court was based, appear from the record to have occurred in the affidavit filed by plaintiff for publication of notice, and in the publication notice. Plaintiff's original affidavit to obtain service by publication, filed on the day of the filing of his petition, states the names of the parties to the action, and that plaintiff has filed his petition in the district court of Custer county against the defendants for the recovery of the sum of $200, due him from the defendants as a commission for the sale of real estate described in his petition; that defendants, and each of them, are not residents of the territory of Oklahoma, and service cannot be had upon them, or either of them, within the territory, although due diligence has been made, and that plaintiff desired to obtain service on the defendants by publication. Plaintiff, with the consent of the intervenor, afterwards filed an amended affidavit to obtain service by publication, in which, in addition to the facts stated in the original affidavit, he states that, at the time of the filing of the original affidavit, defendants were the owners of the lots attached, and describes them; that an attachment order had been issued in the action by the clerk of the court, which had been levied upon said real estate according to law, on June 28, 1907; that defendants were at the times of the filing of the original affidavit and the amended affidavit nonresidents of Oklahoma, residing in the state of Nebraska; that he knew such facts to be true from letters received from them; that he had made diligent search for defendants in Custer county at the time of the filing of the original affidavit, and knows that they were not in Custer county nor in Oklahoma, and that they have been absent therefrom ever since, and that service of summons could not have been had upon them in Oklahoma.

These affidavits are attacked upon several grounds. It is first urged that they are void for the reason that they fail to state facts to show wherein due diligence was used to find the defendants. Section 4277, 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, being § 79 of the Civil Code, provides: "Before service can be made by publication, an affidavit must be filed stating that the plaintiff, with due diligence, is unable to make service of the summons upon the defendant or defendants to be served by publication, and showing that the case is one of those mentioned in the preceding section. When such affidavit is filed, the party may proceed to make service by publication." While it is stated in the original affidavit that diligence was used, and while it is stated in the amended affidavit that diligent search was made by plaintiff for defendants in Custer county, in neither the original nor the amended affidavit are facts constituting such diligence fully set out. But we think sufficient facts are set out in these affidavits to render them valid, if they are regular in all other respects. In Washburn v. Buchanan, 52 Kan. 417, 34 Pac. 1049, construing the same statute, the court held an affidavit for publication in which it was stated that defendants were nonresidents of the state, and that service could not be made upon them within the state, was not sufficient, because plaintiff had failed to state therein what diligence had been used by him to obtain service. See also Roberts v. Fagan, 76 Kan. 536, 92 Pac. 559.

Intervener relies upon Cordray v. Cordray, 19 Okla. 36, 91 Pac. 781, as supporting his contention upon this proposition. In that case the affidavit as a basis for publication was in the following form: "Salia M. Cordray, being first duly sworn, upon oath says she is the plaintiff in the above-entitled cause, and that defendant J. W. Cordray is not a resident of the territory, but to the best of her knowledge and belief is a resident of ———, and that service of summons in this case cannot be had upon the said defendant in the territory of Oklahoma." It was held that this affidavit did not comply with the provisions of the statute, and that judgment rendered thereon was void for want of jurisdiction over the defendant; because, first, the affidavit was defective in that it failed to state what, if any, diligence was used to secure personal service upon the defendant; second, it failed to state the nature of the action; third, it failed to state that at the time of making the affidavit the defendant was out of the territory of Oklahoma. We think the rule announced by the court in the third syllabus, wherein it was held that said affidavit was defective for the reason that it failed to state any facts showing that diligence was used, is correct as applied to the facts of that case. In that case, plaintiff did not state that service of summons could not be had upon the defendant in the territory of Oklahoma, but her allegation with reference thereto was that to the best of her knowledge and belief defendant was a resident of ———, and that service of summons upon him could not be had in the territory. This is not equivalent to saying that defendant was absent from the territory, or that service could not be had upon him therein. She may have stated the truth when she stated that, to the best of her knowledge and belief, service could not be had upon him, but that knowledge and belief may not have been based upon such information as was the result of diligence. It could not be said from that affidavit that defendant was absent from the territory of Oklahoma at the time the affidavit was made, or that service could not be had upon him in said territory. Affiant did not so state. She said only that her information and belief was that such were the facts. An affidavit upon information and belief that defendant is a nonresident, or that service cannot be had upon said defendant in the state, is insufficient. Romig v. Gillett, 10 Okla. 186, 62 Pac. 805. But in the case at bar plaintiff states positively that defendant is not a resident of the territory, and that service cannot be had upon him therein. If such statement is true, no amount of diligence would have enabled plaintiff to obtain service upon him; and, if service could have been had by due diligence, then affiant could not have stated in his affidavit that it could not be made within the territory. In Cordray v. Cordray, supra, plaintiff did not say that service could not be had within the territory; and, having failed to say so, it was incumbent upon her to show what diligence she had used to ascertain whether service could be had upon him within the territory at the time of her making her affidavit.

Nor is the conclusion we here reach in conflict with Nicoll v. Midland Sav. & L. Co. 21 Okla. 581, 96 Pac. 744. In that case defendant was a foreign corporation who, under § 1227, 1 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, was required to appoint an agent who should reside at some accessible point in the territory, in the county where the principal place of business of said corporation was carried on, or at some place within the territory, if such corporation had no principal place of business, which agent should be duly authorized to accept service of process, and upon whom service of process might be made in any action in which the corporation was a party. The affidavit for publication in that case recited that defendant is a foreign corporation, and is a nonresident of the territory of Oklahoma, and has not complied with the laws by designating a person on whom to serve process in Noble county, Oklahoma, and has no office or place of business in said county, and that plaintiffs, with the exercise of due diligence, are unable to procure service of summons on the said defendant within the territory of Oklahoma. This affidavit fails to state that no agent has been appointed in the territory upon whom service of summons could be had, but only that no agent had been designated upon whom service of process could be had in Noble county. Nor does the affidavit state that service cannot be had upon the company in the territory. There is no allegation that it has no place of business in other parts of the territory than in Noble county, or that it has no agent in such other counties of the territory. In the absence of such allegation the mere statement that plaintiff had exercised due diligence to obtain service, and had been unable to procure it, was insufficient without stating what diligence they had used.

Section 4277, supra, requires that the affidavit for publication shall show that the case is one of those mentioned in the preceding section. The preceding section to which reference is made reads as follows: "Service may be made by publication in either of the following cases: In actions brought under the 48th and 49th sections of this Code, where any or all of the defendants reside out of the territory, or where the plaintiff with due diligence is unable to make service of summons upon such defendant or defendants within the territory; in actions brought to establish or set aside a will where any or all of the defendants reside out of the territory; in actions to obtain a divorce where the defendant resides out of the territory; in actions brought against a nonresident of the territory or a foreign corporation having in this territory property or debts owing them, sought to be taken by any of the provisional remedies or to be appropriated in any way; in actions which relate to, or the subject of which is, real or personal property in this territory, where any defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent therein, or the relief demanded consists wholly or partly in excluding him from any interest therein, and such defendant is a nonresident of the territory or a foreign corporation; and in all actions where the defendant, being a resident of this territory, has departed therefrom, or from the county of his residence, with intent to delay or defraud his creditors, or to avoid the service of a summons, or keep himself concealed therein with the like intent." These sections of the statute have been repeatedly before the supreme court of the state of Kansas for construction, both before and since the adoption of our Code from that state by the territorial legislature. A failure to make proper averments in the affidavit of such facts as show that the case is one of those provided for by § 4276 renders it insufficient to support service by publication. Leavenworth, T. & S. W. R. Co. v. Stone, 60 Kan. 57, 55 Pac. 346; Garrett v. Struble, 57 Kan. 508, 46 Pac. 943; Long v. Fife, 45 Kan. 271, 23 Am. St. Rep. 734, 25 Pac. 594. An allegation in the affidavit that the case is one of those mentioned in § 4276 is not such a statement of fact as is required by the section to be made in the affidavit. Lieberman v. Douglass, 62 Kan.

84, 64 Pac. 590. The original affidavit in his case fails to aver facts sufficient to show that it is one of the cases in which service by publication is authorized. It in no manner sets out any facts to indicate the character of the case or judgment sought therein. In the amended affidavit filed it is alleged that at the commencement of the action an order of attachment was caused to be issued by plaintiff, and levied upon certain real estate of the defendants, describing it, which alleged facts inferentially indicate the character of the judgment sought in the action. But the trial court evidently took the view that the original affidavit was so defective in this respect that it could not be cured by amendment. Affidavits for publication are amendable as to some defects. Foreman v. Carter, 9 Kan. 674; Pierce v. Butters, 21 Kan. 125; Harrison v. Beard, 30 Kan. 532, 2 Pac. 632; Long v. Fife, supra. But where the affidavit fails to state directly, inferentially, or in any other way any matter required by statute to be stated therein, it is fatally defective, and service by publication cannot be obtained thereon. Harris v. Clafin, 36 Kan. 543, 13 Pac. 830. Where the jurisdictional facts necessary to warrant service upon defendant by publication were in existence at the commencement of the action, and the affidavit for publication is defective only in that it states inferentially a matter required to be alleged therein, it is amendable even after judgment. Pierce v. Butters, supra; Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825; Harrison v. Beard, supra. But where there is a total want of averment in the affidavit of some material fact, as in this case, it is void. Harris v. Clafin, supra. The original affidavit filed herein fails to allege directly, inferentially, or otherwise any facts showing that it is one of the actions in which publication may be had under the provisions of § 4276, supra, and it was therefore incapable of being amended so as to support a service by publication thereon, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider whether the amended affidavit contains the necessary averments.

The notice by publication does not describe the property attached, nor state the nature of the judgment that plaintiff will take against the defendants. Section 4278, 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, provides what the publication notice shall contain. It shall state the court in which the petition is filed, the names of the parties, and must notify the defendants thus to be served that he or they have been sued, and must answer the petition filed by the plaintiff on or before a time to be stated, which shall not be less than forty-one days from the date of the first publication, or the petition.

tion will be taken as true, and judgment, the nature of which shall be stated, will be rendered accordingly. Where land has been attached under order of attachment against a nonresident defendant, the publication notice should contain a description of the land, and failing to do so renders it defective. Cohen v. Trowbridge, 6 Kan. 385; Cackley v. Smith, 38 Kan. 450, 17 Pac. 156. And where the publication notice fails to contain a description of the real estate attached, and omits entirely to state the nature of the judgment which is sought, as required by § 4278, 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, it is not voidable only, but void. Garrett v. Struble, 57 Kan. 510, 46 Pac. 943. The failure of plaintiff to state in his affidavit for service by publication facts showing that the case is one of those provided for in § 4276, supra, and his failure to have the publication notice describe the real estate attached, or to state in any manner the nature of the judgment sought, are such defects as would make any judgment rendered thereon at least void, and a motion to set aside such service or to vacate a judgment based thereon would have to be sustained.

This leaves for consideration whether such irregularities in an attachment proceeding can be availed of by an intervener by motion to dissolve the attachment. The section of the statute providing that third persons claiming or having interest in property attached may intervene in attachment proceedings, and by a plea of intervention set up their claim, reads as follows: "Any person claiming property, money, effects, or credits attached may interplead in the cause, verifying the same by affidavit made by himself, agent, or attorney, and issues may be made upon such interpleader and shall be tried as like issues between plaintiff and defendant, and without any unnecessary delay." 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, § 4244. The supreme court of Kansas in an early case, in which the opinion was written by Mr. Justice Brewer, lays down the rule that an intervener in an attachment under this statute can attack the attachment proceedings for only such irregularities therein as would render the same subject to attack in an independent collateral action. In that case the affidavit for attachment failed to set forth any grounds for attachment. It was held that such affidavit was fatally defective, and failed to confer upon the court jurisdiction to issue the writ of attachment, and was therefore such an error as would render the attachment subject to collateral attack, and was ground for a motion to dissolve by an intervener interpleading in the attachment proceeding. Mr. Justice Brewer, in discuss-absent from the territory of Oklahoma at the time the affidavit was made, or that service could not be had upon him in said territory. Affiant did not so state. She said only that her information and belief was that such were the facts. An affidavit upon information and belief that defendant is a nonresident, or that service cannot be had upon said defendant in the state, is insufficient. Romig v. Gillett, 10 Okla. 186, 62 Pac. 805. But in the case at bar plaintiff states positively that defendant is not a resident of the territory, and that service cannot be had upon him therein. If such statement is true, no amount of diligence would have enabled plaintiff to obtain service upon him; and, if service could have been had by due diligence, then affiant could not have stated in his affidavit that it could not be made within the territory. In Cordray v. Cordray, supra, plaintiff did not say that service could not be had within the territory; and, having failed to say so, it was incumbent upon her to show what diligence she had used to ascertain whether service could be had upon him within the territory at the time of her making her affidavit.

Nor is the conclusion we here reach in conflict with Nicoll v. Midland Sav. & L. Co. 21 Okla. 581, 96 Pac. 744. In that case defendant was a foreign corporation who, under § 1227, 1 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, was required to appoint an agent who should reside at some accessible point in the territory, in the county where the principal place of business of said corporation was carried on, or at some place within the territory, if such corporation had no principal place of business, which agent should be duly authorized to accept service of process, and upon whom service of process might be made in any action in which the corporation was a party. The affidavit for publication in that case recited that defendant is a foreign corporation, and is a nonresident of the territory of Oklahoma, and has not complied with the laws by designating a person on whom to serve process in Noble county, Oklahoma, and has no office or place of business in said county, and that plaintiffs, with the exercise of due diligence, are unable to procure service of summons on the said defendant within the territory of Oklahoma. This affidavit fails to state that no agent has been appointed in the territory upon whom service of summons could be had, but only that no agent had been designated upon whom service of process could be had in Noble county. Nor does the affidavit state that service cannot be had upon the company in the territory. There is no allegation that it has no place of business in other parts of the territory than in Noble county, or that it has no agent in such other counties of the territory. In the absence of such allegation, the mere statement that plaintiff had exercised due diligence to obtain service, and had been unable to procure it, was insufficient without stating what diligence they had used.

Section 4277, supra, requires that the affidavit for publication shall show that the case is one of those mentioned in the preceding section. The preceding section to which reference is made reads as follows: "Service may be made by publication in either of the following cases: In actions brought under the 48th and 49th sections of this Code, where any or all of the defendants reside out of the territory, or where the plaintiff with due diligence is unable to make service of summons upon such defendant or defendants within the territory; in actions brought to establish or set aside a will, where any or all of the defendants reside out of the territory; in actions to obtain a divorce where the defendant resides out of the territory; in actions brought against a nonresident of the territory or a foreign corporation having in this territory property or debts owing them, sought to be taken by any of the provisional remedies, or to be appropriated in any way; in actions which relate to, or the subject of which is, real or personal property in this territory, where any defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent, therein, or the relief demanded consists wholly or partly in excluding him from any interest therein, and such defendant is a nonresident of the territory or a foreign corporation; and in all actions where the defendant, being a resident of this territory, has departed therefrom, or from the county of his residence, with intent to delay or defraud his creditors, or to avoid the service of a summons, or keep himself concealed therein with the like intent." These sections of the statute have been repeatedly before the supreme court of the state of Kansas for construction, both before and since the adoption of our Code from that state by the territorial legislature. A failure to make proper averments in the affidavit of such facts as show that the case is one of those provided for by § 4276 renders it insufficient to support service by publication. Leavenworth, T. & S. W. R. Co. v. Stone, 60 Kan. 57, 55 Pac. 346; Garrett v. Struble, 57 Kan. 508, 46 Pac. 943; Long v. Fife, 45 Kan. 271, 23 Am. St. Rep. 724, 25 Pac. 594. An allegation in the affidavit that the case is one of those mentioned in § 4276 is not such a statement of fact as is required by the section to be made in the affidavit. Lieberman v. Douglass, 62 Kan.

784, 64 Pac. 590. The original affidavit in this case fails to aver facts sufficient to show that it is one of the cases in which service by publication is authorized. It in no manner sets out any facts to indicate the character of the case or judgment sought therein. In the amended affidavit filed it is alleged that at the commencement of the action an order of attachment was caused to be issued by plaintiff, and levied upon certain real estate of the defendants, describing it, which alleged facts inferentially indicate the character of the judgment sought in the action. But the trial court evidently took the view that the original affidavit was so defective in this respect that it could not be cured by amendment. Affidavits for publication are amendable as to some defects. Foreman v. Carter, 9 Kan. 674; Pierce v. Butters, 21 Kan. 125; Harrison v. Beard, 30 Kan. 532, 2 Pac. 632; Long v. Fife, supra. But where the affidavit fails to state directly, inferentially, or in any other way any matter required by statute to be stated therein, it is fatally defective, and service by publication cannot be obtained thereon. Harris v. Claffin, 36 Kan. 543, 13 Pac. 830. Where the jurisdictional facts necessary to warrant service upon defendant by publication were in existence at the commencement of the action, and the affidavit for publication is defective only in that it states inferentially a matter required to be alleged therein, it is amendable even after judgment. Pierce v. Butters, supra; Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825; Harrison v. Beard, supra. But where there is a total want of averment in the affidavit of some material fact, as in this case, it is void. Harris v. Claffin, supra. The original affidavit filed herein fails to allege directly, inferentially, or otherwise any facts showing that it is one of the actions in which publication may be had under the provisions of § 4276, supra, and it was therefore incapable of being amended so as to support a service by publication thereon, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider whether the amended affidavit contains the necessary averments.

The notice by publication does not describe the property attached, nor state the nature of the judgment that plaintiff will take against the defendants. Section 4278, 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, provides what the publication notice shall contain. It shall state the court in which the petition is filed, the names of the parties, and must notify the defendants thus to be served that he or they have been sued, and must answer the petition filed by the plaintiff on or before a time to be stated, which shall not be less than forty-one days from the date of the first publication, or the petition will be taken as true, and judgment, the nature of which shall be stated, will be rendered accordingly. Where land has been attached under order of attachment against a nonresident defendant, the publication notice should contain a description of the land, and failing to do so renders it defective. Cohen v. Trowbridge, 6 Kan. 385; Cackley v. Smith, 38 Kan. 450, 17 Pac. 156. And where the publication notice fails to contain a description of the real estate attached, and omits entirely to state the nature of the judgment which is sought, as required by § 4278, 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, it is not voidable only, but void. Garrett v. Struble, 57 Kan. 510, 46 Pac. 943. The failure of plaintiff to state in his affidavit for service by publication facts showing that the case is one of those provided for in § 4276, supra, and his failure to have the publication notice describe the real estate attached, or to state in any manner the nature of the judgment sought, are such defects as would make any judgment rendered thereon at least void, and a motion to set aside such service or to vacate a judgment based thereon would have to be sustained.

This leaves for consideration whether such irregularities in an attachment proceeding can be availed of by an intervener by motion to dissolve the attachment. The section of the statute providing that third persons claiming or having interest in property attached may intervene in attachment proceedings, and by a plea of intervention set up their claim, reads as follows: "Any person claiming property, money, effects, or credits attached may interplead in the cause, verifying the same by affidavit made by himself, agent, or attorney, and issues may be made upon such interpleader and shall be tried as like issues between plaintiff and defendant, and without any unnecessary delay." 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, § 4244. The supreme court of Kansas in an early case, in which the opinion was written by Mr. Justice Brewer, lays down the rule that an intervener in an attachment under this statute can attack the attachment proceedings for only such irregularities therein as would render the same subject to attack in an independent collateral action. In that case the affidavit for attachment failed to set forth any grounds for attachment. It was held that such affidavit was fatally defective, and failed to confer upon the court jurisdiction to issue the writ of attachment, and was therefore such an error as would render the attachment subject to collateral attack, and was ground for a motion to dissolve by an intervener interpleading in the attachment proceeding. Mr. Justice Brewer, in discuss-petition and other necessary papers, an order of attachment cannot be issued and served, for the reason that no action had been commenced.

Under this construction of these provisions of the statute, the attachment proceeding in the action in the case at bar has failed; for, although plaintiff has a summons issued on the day of filing his petition, no service has ever been made of such summons, and although he filed the affidavit for publication service, and publication service was attempted to be made, each was so defective as to be a nullity, and plaintiff now stands in the same position as if no affidavit for publication service, and no service by publication, had ever been attempted to be made. When the motion of intervener was filed, and the court rendered judgment thereon, nearly a year had elapsed since the filing of plaintiff's petition. No service of summons had been made, and no legal summons by publication had been begun. Had the defects in the affidavit for publication service and in the publication notice been such as to render them only voidable, instead of void, having been filed or begun within the time provided by statute, such defects could be cured by amendment, and the first publication would then have related back to the time of the filing of the petition, and intervener's motion should have been overruled.

But under the facts as shown by the record we think the trial court committed no error for which the judgment should be reversed, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

Dunn, Williams, and Turner, JJ., concur. Kane, Ch. J., not sitting.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

CITIZENS' BANK OF NORFOLK, Appt., v.

SCHWARZSCHILD & SULZBERGER COMPANY.

(109 Va. 539, 64 S. E. 954.)

Bank — payment of coupons — recovery.

A bank which pays coupons made payable to bearer, on bonds of one of its depositors, under the mistaken belief that there were funds on deposit to meet them, cannot compel the payee to return the amount so paid.

(June 10, 1909.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Law and Chancery Court for the 23 L.R.A. (N:S.)

City of Norfolk in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover money paid upon certain coupons under the misconception that the plaintiff bank held funds on deposit to meet them. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. B. Seldner for appellant.

Mr. Robert W. Shultice, for appellee:

A bank at which coupons are payable cannot recover from the payee upon showing that such coupons were paid under a misapprehension of the state of the maker's account.

Morse, Banks & Banking § 455; Riverside Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 20 C. C. A. 181, 38 U. S. App. 674, 74 Fed. 276; Bolton v. Richard, 6 T. R. 139; Aiken v. Short, 1 Hurlst. & N. 210; Levy v. Bank of United States, 4 Dall. 236, 1 L. ed. 814; Peterson v. Union Nat. Bank, 52 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 146; Oddie v. National City Bank, 45 N. Y. 735, 6 Am. Rep. 160; Manufacturer's Nat. Bank v. Swift, 70 Md. 515, 14 Am. St. Rep. 381, 17 Atl. 336; First Nat. Bank v. Burkham, 32 Mich. 328; Price v. Neale, 3 Burr. 1355; Redington v. Woods, 45 Cal. 406, 13 Am. Rep. 190; First Nat. Bank v. Ricker, 71 Ill. 439, 22 Am. Rep. 104; First Nat. Bank v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 152 Ill. 296, 26 L.R.A. 289, 43 Am. St. Rep. 247, 38 N. E. 739; Deposit Bank v. Fayette

Case Note. — Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper drawn upon or payable at it, under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it.

This note does not include cases involving the right of a bank to withdraw its certification of checks or other paper upon discovery that there are not sufficient funds to meet the same, nor cases involving the right of one bank to recover money paid in the absence of funds to another bank upon check or other paper drawn upon it, where the decision turns merely upon the effect of the regulations of the clearing house.

It is a general rule that, in the absence of fraud, the payment of a check or note by a bank upon which it is drawn or at which it is payable, under the mistaken belief that the drawer of the check or the maker of the note has sufficient funds to his credit to pay it, cannot be recovered by the bank.

In addition to the several cases fully set out in the foregoing opinion, a number of other cases assert the same general rule.

Thus, in First Nat. Bank v. Devenish, 15 Colo. 229, 22 Am. St. Rep. 394, 25 Pac. 177. the court said: "Banks are required, and for their own safety are compelled, to know at all times the balance to the credit of each individual customer, and they accept and pay checks at their own risk and peril. If, from negligence or inattention to their own affairs, banks improvidently pay when

Nat. Bank, 90 Ky. 10, 7 L.R.A. 849, 13 S. W. 339; Commercial & F. Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Md. 11, 96 Am. Dec. 554; Star F. Ins. Co. v. New Hampshire Nat. Bank, 60 N. H. 442; Iron City Nat. Bank v. Peyton, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 184, 39 S. W. 223; Bank of St. Albans v. Farmers' & M. Bank, 10 Vt. 141, 33 Am. Dec. 188; National Park Bank v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 77, 7 Am. Rep. 310; Germania Bank v. Boutell, 60 Minn. 189, 27 L.R.A. 635, 51 Am. St. Rep. 519, 62 N. W. 327; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1071.

Buchanan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of assumpsit to recover money paid by the plaintiff under an alleged mistake of fact. Upon the issue of nonasthe account of the customer is not in a condition to warrant it, and if by mistake a check is paid when the drawer has no funds, the bank must look to the customer for rectification, not to the party to whom the check was paid."

So, in Riverside Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 20 C. C. A. 181, 38 U. S. App. 674, 74 Fed. 276, it was held that the payment of a check or of a note by a bank at which it is made payable, although made under misapprehension of the state of the customer's account with the bank, concludes the bank as against the holder of the paper.

And in Boylston Nat. Bank v. Richardson, 101 Mass. 287, where the plaintiff's teller was not misled in any way and had no reason to suppose that the drawer's account was other than it was, but merely saw fit to pay the check without taking the precaution to inform himself of the state of the account, it was held that there was nothing in the transaction which bore the character of a mistake of facts in a legal sense, but only that of laches.

So, in Chambers v. Miller, 13 C. B. N. S. 125, the cashier of the bank, having discovered that the drawer had not funds sufficient to pay the check, took the money by force from the payee's messenger, who had not finished counting it. In an action by the latter for assault, the court said that the moment the person presenting the check put his hand on the money, it became irrevocably his. Although this was not an action by the bank to recover the money, the language of the court clearly implies that such an action would not lie.

A bank cannot recover, in an action for money paid by accident and mistake, the amount of a check paid under the mistaken impression that the drawer had funds, to a messenger of the payee, who had in good faith paid the money over to the payee. Penacook Sav. Bank v. Hubbard, 58 N. H. 167.

The same question frequently arises where the bank, instead of paying a check drawn upon itself in cash, receives it as a deposit, and afterwards attempts to charge it back sumpsit, the whole matter of law and fact was submitted to the court and a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant.

The material facts of the case are that, on the 4th day of November, 1907, the defendants, the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Company, a corporation, presented through the Norfolk National Bank of Norfolk for payment, fifteen coupons of $70 each, due on the 1st day of that month, taken from bonds held by the defendant. The bonds from which the coupons were taken were issued by the Jamestown Hotel Corporation and held by the defendant. The coupons were in the following words:

$70.00.

The Jamestown Hotel Corporation will pay to bearer, at the Citizens' Bank of Nor-against the account of the person depositing it. There is considerable difference of opinion upon the question whether the mere receiving of a check or even the receiving and crediting it to the depositor is a payment thereof; but, of course, this note is not concerned with that question. Cases involving that question are taken only where such a receipt is treated as a payment, and the right of the bank to recharge the check is considered. As to title of bank to check drawn upon another bank, which has been credited to depositor, see case note to Fayette Nat. Bank v. Summers, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 694.

It is generally held, following the rule as stated above, that a bank cannot recharge the account of the depositor of a check drawn upon it which it has paid by crediting the depositor's account with it merely because its cashier or other officer was not aware at the time the credit was given that the drawer had not sufficient funds to meet the check. 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 623.

Thus, it was held in City Nat. Bank v. Burns, 68 Ala. 267, 44 Am. Rep. 138, where the amount of the check had been credited to the depositor's account, that the bank could not recall or repudiate the payment because, on examination of the account of the drawer, it was ascertained that he was without funds to meet the check, although when the payment was made the officer making it labored under a mistake that there were funds sufficient.

So, in National Gold Bank & T. Co. v. McDonald, 51 Cal. 64, 21 Am. Rep. 697, the court said that there could be no doubt that if the bank, through its teller, expressly or by reasonable implication from his acts and declarations at the time, agrees to accept the check as cash and to enter a credit to the depositor for the amount, it will be bound by the agreement, whether the drawer of the check has funds to his credit or not.

And in Bryan v. First Nat. Bank, 205 Pa. 7, 54 Atl. 480, it was held that a bank, having credited the account of one depositor ever destroy the character of a bank in all commercial circles, if, when it was ready and willing to pay a check, it permitted the holder to inquire if the drawer had funds there to meet it. It is a matter with which he has no concern. In the absence of fraud on the part of the holder, the payment of a check by a bank is regarded as a finality, and the fact that the drawer had no funds on deposit will not give the bank any remedy against the holder."

In National Bank v. Berrall, 70 N. J. L. 757, 66 L.R.A. 599, 103 Am. St. Rep. 821, 58 Atl. 189, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 630, it was held that where a payee of a check, after indorsing it generally, deposits it to his account in his own bank, by which it is forwarded to the bank upon which it is drawn for collection, and the latter bank pays it by mistake, there is no privity between the paying bank and the payee, to support an action by the former against the latter to recover the amount of the check as for money paid by mistake. It was further held in that case that, aside from the question of privity, the payment cannot be said to have been made by mistake, where the alleged mistake consists in having overlooked the fact that payment of the check had been stopped; for a bank is under no legal obligation to the holder thereof to pay a check drawn upon it, and, the bank being bound to know the state of its depositor's accounts, if it does make payment of a check to a bona fide holder, who is without notice of any infirmity therein, the transaction is closed as between the parties to the payment.

Morse in his work on Banking says without qualification that, if a bank pays or accepts a check under the misconception that it has funds, it cannot recover from the holder, but it must look to the drawer alone for redress, except that under the clearing house rules a check paid through the clearing house may be returned within a certain time if the funds are found insufficient. 2 Morse, Banks & Banking, § 455. See also, generally, Bentlnck v. Dorrien, 6 East, 199; Levy v. Bank of United States, 4 Dall. 234, 1 L. ed. 814; First Nat. Bank v. Devenish, 15 Colo. 229, 22 Am. St. Rep. 394, 25 Pac. 177; Riverside Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 20 C. C. A. 181, 38 U. S. App. 674, 74 Fed. 276; 5 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 534, 535.

The coupons which were paid were payable to bearer at the plaintiff bank and possessed all the qualities and incidents of commercial paper. Arents v. Com. 18 Gratt. 750, 760, 767, and cases cited. Their payment, under the facts disclosed by the record, would no more entitle the plaintiff bank to recover from the defendant than 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

if the paper paid had been the hotel corporation's check, bill, or note. The same reasoning that applies in the one case is equally applicable in the other. If there be no privity in the one case, there is none in the other, and, if the misapprehension as to the state of the maker's account is not a mistake within the meaning of the legal rule which permits a recovery in the one case, it is equally not such a mistake in the other.

While the reasoning of the courts in the cases quoted from, that there can be no recovery in a case like this, is not altogether satisfactory, the conclusion reached by them is sustained by the great current of authority, and seems to be in accord with commercial usage.

We are of opinion, therefore, to affirm the judgment complained of.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

ROBERT V. BROWN, Appt.,

v.

EDWARD BELL, Sheriff of Toller County.

(— Colo. —, 103 Pac. 380.)

Limitation of action — execution.

1. Where execution on a judgment is a matter of right without any further proceeding before the court, the expiration of the limitation period for the enforcement of the judgment by action will not bar the right to issue an execution thereon.

Judicial sale — redemption — sheriff's mistake.

2. The mistake of the sheriff as to the amount necessary to be tendered to a purchaser at judicial sale to effect a redemption will not defeat the redemption right of one who places in his hands sufficient money to effect the redemption, where the statute provides that the redemption may be effected by paying the necessary amount to the officer.

(July 6, 1909.)

Case Note. — Effect of bar of statute of limitations against action to enforce judgment upon right to issue execution thereon.

The time within which an execution may be issued upon a judgment is regulated by statute in many states. This note, however, is confined to the question whether, in the absence of such legislation, the right to issue an execution is at an end where the right of action upon the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations.

It is expressly provided by statute in some states that an execution shall not issue after the right of action upon the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations. See Harrier v. Bassford, 145 Cal. 529, 73

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Teller County in defendant's favor in a suit to restrain him as sheriff of Teller County from selling certain lands under an alleged void execution, and to compel the conveyance of such lands to plaintiff. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rogers, Shafroth, & Gregg, William H. Malone, and S. S. Abbott, for appellant:

The judgment of the justice's court was, in the language of the statute of limitations, a judgment "rendered in any court not being a court of record," more than six years prior to issuing execution, and was expressly barred by such statute.

Seymour v. Haines, 104 Ill. 557; Dieffenbach v. Roch, 112 N. Y. 621, 2 L.R.A. 829, 20 N. E. 560; Adams v. Guy (N. C.) 10 S. E. 1102; Wilcox v. Lantz, 107 Mich. 1, 64 N. W. 735; Brown v. Wuskoff, 118 Ind. 569, 19 N. E. 463, 118 Ind. 574, 21 N. E. 243; Hughes v. Cummings, 7 Colo. 138, 2 Pac. 289.

No appearance for appellee.

Musser, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears from an agreed statement of facts that, on February 24, 1905, the sheriff of Teller county sold the Franklin lode claim for $356.42, under an execution against the Franklin Gold Mining Company, and issued a certificate of purchase, which by assignment became the property of the appellant, Pac. 1038; Water Supply Co. v. Sarnow, 1 Cal. App. 479, 82 Pac. 689; Mudge v. Livermore (Iowa) 123 N. W. 199; Stahl v. Roost, 34 Iowa, 475.

It was held in Brown v. Wuskoff, 118 Ind. 569, 19 N. E. 463 (see same case on rehearing, 118 Ind. 574, 21 N. E. 243) that, under a statute declaring that a judgment shall be a lien upon the defendant's realty for ten years, and no longer, the enforcement of an execution thereafter levied would be enjoined.

It was held in Adams v. Guy (N. C.) 10 S. E. 1102, that a statute providing that an action upon a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace must be brought within seven years after the date thereof, or else it will be barred, and that the docketing thereof in the superior court shall create a lien upon the debtor's realty, bars a motion for an execution upon a docketed judgment after the lapse of that period.

It was held in Lyon v. Russ, 84 N. C. 588, which was an action to recover land sold under execution, that an execution issued more than ten years after the rendition of judgment was void under a statute declaring that a judgment should be a lien upon the defendant's realty for ten years after the docketing thereof. The court said the judgment alone created a lien, and that the office of the execution was to enforce the lien by the sale of the property.

It was held in Peters v. Vawter, 10 Mont. 201, 25 Pac. 438, which was an application for leave to issue an execution, that the right thereto, after action is barred upon the judgment by a statute limiting the life thereof to six years, is not created by another statute permitting the issuance of an execution, upon leave of the court, after five years, as the latter act applies only to the sixth year, and after that the judgment is dead, as the statute of limitations is an absolute limitation to the life of the judgment.

It was said in Scammon v. Swartwout, 35 Ill. 328, that a statute providing that a judgment of a court of record may be revived by scire facias or that an action of debt may be brought thereon within twenty years from the rendition thereof, and not after, would seem to imply that an execution cannot be issued at any time because, if it could, there would be no necessity for such a provision; and the presumption is that after the lapse of twenty years the judgment has been extinguished, which can be rebutted only by bringing an action of debt thereon or suing out such writ, and that it would be absurd to suppose that the law designed to give to a writ of fieri facias more vitality than the judgment on which it is issued.

It was held in People ex rel. Parsons v. Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 287, which was a motion to set aside a writ of execution, that a statute permitting the issuance of such writ indefinitely is by implication modified by a subsequent statute barring actions upon judgments after ten years, so as to prevent the issue of an execution upon a judgment upon which the right of action is barred. In BROWN v. BELL the court assumes that this case was based upon the statute of limitations of 1857, while in fact it was based upon the act of 1869, which provides that actions upon judgments or decrees shall be brought within ten years, and not afterward.

So, in McGrew v. Reasons, 3 Lea, 485, a writ of supersedeas was granted to prevent the issuance of an execution upon a judgment barred by a statute providing that actions upon judgments and decrees shall be brought within ten years after the cause of action accrues. The court said that a statutory limitation of action upon a judgment is intended to be a bar to its enforcement, as, in order to give it any effective operation, it must be held that the issuance of an execution after ten years is an action upon the judgment; otherwise the bar of the statute might be avoided, and the execution issued at any time after the judgment is barred.

And a writ of supersedeas was also granted in Cannon v. Laman, 7 Lea, 513, where an execution had been issued upon a judgment upon which the right of action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court, however, here said that an execution

Brown. Under the statute a deed might issue to the holder, if no redemption was made within nine months. On March 16, 1899, one Sherman obtained a judgment against the same company before a justice of the peace. A transcript of this judgment was duly filed with the clerk of the district court, as provided by statute, on December 12, 1900, and on November 23, 1905, more than six years after the rendition of the judgment by the justice of the peace, an execution was issued out of the district court on this judgment, and placed in the hands of the appellee, as sheriff of Teller county, together with $500, for the purpose of redeeming the property, as provided by statute, from the sheriff's sale aforesaid. This was more money than was necessary for that purpose. Several days later the sheriff returned to the redeeming creditor the balance of the $500 left after deducting some sheriff's costs and $377.80 for the use of appellant, who held the certificate of purchase, and sent to the appellant the said sum of is not, in legal contemplation, an action, but the result of one, and is awarded by the judgment, which must be alive.

It was held in Lockhart v. Yeiser, 2 Bush, 231, that the lapse of fifteen years without issuance of execution will bar further proceedings upon a judgment, and that an execution thereafter issued will be quashed.

So, it was held in Coward v. Chastain, 99 N. C. 443, 6 Am. St. Rep. 533, 6 S. E. 703, that an execution issued upon a judgment upon which an action was barred by the statute of limitations would confer no right to sell, and that if sale was made it would be ineffectual to pass title, and that proceedings thereunder would be enjoined.

It was said in Hanly v. Carneal, 14 Ark. 524, although the remark was a dictum, that the spirit of a statute declaring that judgments and decrees shall, after ten years, be presumed paid and satisfied, would seem to require that an execution should be quashed if issued after the expiration of ten years, as having been improperly issued upon a dormant claim.

It was held in Price v. Wade, 14 Ont. Pr. Rep. 351, that an execution cannot, in the absence of payment or acknowledgment, be issued upon a judgment upon which the right of action is barred by the statute of limitations.

It was held in Quinnin v. Quinnin, 144 Mich. 232, 107 N. W. 906,—a proceeding to vacate the levy of an execution,—that such a writ could not issue upon a deficiency decree arising upon a mortgage foreclosure sale, when the decree was barred by a statute declaring that actions upon decrees in courts of record should be brought within ten years after entry.

And under such statute the same rule was applied in Smith v. Pegg, 111 Mich. 232, 69 N. W. 488, which was a proceeding, brought after the expiration of such statutory period, for a deficiency decree and an execution thereon.

The New York cases cited in the opinion to BROWN v. BELL (as well as the following), to the effect that, notwithstanding the right to maintain an action upon a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace is barred after six years, where the judgment has been docketed in the office of the county clerk an execution may be issued after the expiration of that period, do not determine the question whether the bar of the statute of limitations will prevent the issuance of execution, as such cases were 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) decided under a statute declaring that such judgments shall create a lien upon the defendant's real estate in the same manner and with like effect as judgments of the court of common pleas, and in each of these cases the execution was issued before the right of action upon the judgment as one of the court of common pleas was barred by the statute of limitations. Waltermire v. Westover, 14 N. Y. 17; Rose v. Henry, 37 Hun, 397; Kincaid v. Richardson, 25 Hun, 237; Townsend v. Tolhurst, 57 Hun, 40, 10 N. Y. Supp. 378; Herder v. Collyer, 22 Abb. N. C. 461, 6 N. Y. Supp. 513; Anderson v. Porter, 7 Misc. 218, 27 N. Y. Supp. 646; Becker v. Porter, 17 App. Div. 183, 45 N. Y. Supp. 296.

This point was expressly passed upon in Kennedy v. Mills, 4 Abb. Pr. 132, where it was held, under a statute providing that every judgment is presumed paid after twenty years from its date, unless such presumption is repelled by proof of payment or written acknowledgment within that time, that without such proof a motion for leave to issue an execution after the expiration of twenty years will be denied.

And it was held in Herrman v. Stalp, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 333, 6 N. Y. Supp. 514, that, after the repeal of the statute under consideration in Waltermire v. Westover, supra, a judgment of the district court of the city of New York, when docketed in the office of the county clerk under a statute declaring it shall then be a judgment of the court of common pleas, will not authorize the issuance of an execution thereon, even by leave of the court, after the right of action on the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations. The court said it would be anomalous to allow the judgment to be enforced by execution after the loss of the right to maintain an action upon it for any purpose, and that when a judgment is practically dead a live execution cannot be issued upon it.

And in Waltermire v. Westover, supra, the court said that the lien of a judgment of the court of common pleas ceased, as against purchasers in good faith and subsequent encumbrances, at the end of ten years from the time of docketing, while it continued, as against the defendant himself, until the statutory presumption of payment arose at the end of twenty years.

Attention is also called to other cases cited in BROWN v. BELL.

$377.80. The appellant returned this amount to the sheriff. The amount necessary to redeem was $383.15 or $5.35 more than was sent by the sheriff to appellant. The sheriff was proceeding to sell the property under this second execution, when this action was brought to restrain the sale, and to compel the sheriff to issue a deed to appellant upon his certificate of purchase. On the same day that the appellant returned the money to the sheriff the redeeming creditor tendered to appellant the sum of $5.35. The judgment was against the plaintiff, and he appeals.

The appellant claims that, though the judgment obtained before the justice of the peace had been taken on transcript to the district court, it was still a judgment of the justice of the peace, and that the execution issued thereon out of the district court, by means of which the redemption was attempted, was void because issued more than six years after the rendition of the judgment by the justice of the peace. Our statute provides that, when a transcript from a justice of the peace is filed and recorded in the office of the clerk of the district court, the judgment "shall thenceforward have all the effect of a judgment of the said district court, and execution shall issue thereon out of that court as in other cases." The appellant asserts that, notwithstanding the language of our statute, the judgment remains a judgment of the justice of the peace, and cites numerous authorities tending to sustain that position. Without deciding, it will be assumed, for the purposes of this case, that the appellant is right, and that the judgment was still a judgment of the justice of the peace, and not of the district court, when the execution issued. Appellant says that § 2900, Mills's Anno. Stat., provides expressly for a limitation of six years on any judgment rendered in any court not a court of record, and that therefore the execution under which the redemption was attempted to be made was null and void, and there was no redemption. Appellant cites no authorities to support this position, but assumes it.

Section 2900, Mills's Anno. Stat. (§ 4061, Rev. Stat. 1908), so far as pertinent, is as follows: "The following actions shall be commenced within six years next after the cause of action shall accrue, and not afterward. . . . Second. All actions upon judgments rendered in any court not being a court of record." Appellant seeks to annul the execution indirectly through § 2900, and raises no other question as to the life of the judgment or the issuance of the execution. The question thus presented is: Does this section limit the time within which an execution, otherwise issuable as of right, may issue on a justice's judgment? If it does, it must do so upon the theory that this statute of limitation extinguishes the judgment, wipes it out, and leaves nothing upon which an execution may rest. Especially must this be true in this case, for it must be remembered that appellant is not the judgment debtor. He is a stranger to the judgment and the execution. If he has the right to question the execution as he does, as to which right no opinion is expressed, it must be upon the theory that the running of the statute against an action on the judgment made it nothing in the sight of all men. Statutes of limitation have given rise to much discussion, and there is some contrariety of opinion about them, but the authorities are quite generally agreed, and it is the declared law of this state, that a statute like § 2900 acts upon the remedy only, and not upon the debt. It does not extinguish a debt, but simply puts to repose the remedy for its enforcement. Holmquist v. Gilbert, 41 Colo. 113, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, 92 Pac. 232; Foot v. Burr, 41 Colo. 192, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1210, 92 Pac. 236.

In order to get the benefit of the statute as a defense, a debtor must plead it specially in his answer; or, if it appears on the face of the complaint that the statute has run, he may plead it in bar of the action, by way of special demurrer. If he fails to plead the statute specially, one way or the other, the defense is not available, for it is deemed waived, and the plaintiff may recover as in other cases, notwithstanding the statute has run. Hexter v. Clifford, 5 Colo. 168; Hunt v. Hayt, 10 Colo. 278, 15 Pac. 410; Adams v. Tucker, 6 Colo. App. 393, 396, 40 Pac. 783. A debt—and a judgment is a debt—is as much a moral obligation after the bar of the statute has fallen as before. The statute may be employed as a defense by the debtor, if he chooses to do so. It is a personal privilege granted to him. Foot v. Burr, 41 Colo. 197, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1210, 92 Pac. 236. All these decisions of our courts are directly at variance with the idea that a judgment is extinguished when the statute has run.

Under § 3755, Rev. Stat. 1908, a party obtaining a judgment before a justice of the peace is of right entitled to the remedy by execution immediately after rendition of judgment. No action or proceeding of any kind before the court after judgment is necessary to obtain an execution. This fact should be borne in mind, for in some states, whose decisions will hereafter be referred to, executions are issued upon motion or some proceeding before the court. An execution is plainly a remedy afforded by law for the enforcement of the judgment. A party has another remedy looking toward the enforcement of his judgment. He may bring an action thereon in some other court. This is frequently done. He must bring this action, however, within six years after the rendition of the judgment, else there is great probability that his adversary may plead the statute of limitations (§ 2900, supra), and thus this remedy by action will be lost. Thus has our legislature left the matter, and we will have to accept it as it was left. If a party has two remedies for the enforcement of a right, the one he chooses is not barred because the other, if chosen, would have been. Foot v. Burr, supra. Having seen that a judgment otherwise alive is not extinguished because the statute of limitations has run against an action thereon, how can a statute which only limits the time within which an action can be brought on a judgment limit the time within which an execution may issue on it? It is difficult to comprehend how the issuance of an execution as of right, without an appeal to, and an order of, court, can be an "action" such as is meant in § 2900. From the foregoing observations it appears from our statutes and former decisions of this court that there is no escape from the conclusion that an execution otherwise issuable as of right may issue on a justice's judgment and be of force after the six-year statute of limitations has run against an action on the judgment. It is pleasing to note that this conclusion has support in the decisions of other states.

Waltermire v. Westover, 14 N. Y. 16, speaks of a statute providing, in substance, that all actions upon justices' judgments "shall be commenced within six years next after the cause of such action accrued." It is true that in that case the execution issued a short time before, and the sale took place about a year after, the six years had expired. The reasoning of the court is as applicable as though the execution issued later. After saying that the statute operated on the remedy, not the debt, the court, on pages 21 and 22, said: "If statutes of limitation do not discharge the debt, but act exclusively upon the remedy, upon what principle of interpretation is it to be held that this statute, which is in terms confined to the remedy by action, operates to annihilate the remedy by execution? The statute is in derogation of a clear common-law right. It does not operate, according to the recent cases, by producing any presumption of payment, but is a mere statutory bar, founded in principles of public policy. It would be contrary, therefore, to all just rules of construction to extend its operation beyond the fair and reasonable interpretation of its 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) language. The reasoning which has so fully established that statutes of this sort act upon the remedy only, and not upon the debt, equally proves that the operation of the statute in question here is confined to the particular remedy by action. Indeed, the statute could only be held to reach and subvert the remedy by execution, by holding that the debt itself is discharged, or by interpolating language not expressly or by any fair implication contained in the statute." To the same effect is Kincaid v. Richardson, 25 Hun. 237, 239.

In Williams v. Mullis, 87 N. C. 159, it is said that there is a general concurrence of opinion that the statute of limitations does not annihilate the judgment; that it acts upon the remedy, and not the debt; and that if the judgment is kept alive by issuing execution every three years, execution may issue though the statute has run. In that case it is pointed out that, under the statute of that state, if the judgment creditor allowed three years to elapse without issuing execution, he would have to apply to the clerk of the court for leave to issue, and that, the application for leave being in the nature of a scire facias, the defendant may oppose the motion by pleading the statute, but as long as the execution issued as of right, the statute could not be interposed. It might be said that the following decisions cited by an eminent writer induce the belief that this view is at variance with the general current of authority; but it seems to us, upon examination, that the said decisions, save one, are not opposed to that view:

Jerome v. Williams, 13 Mich. 521, was a proceeding before a court to renew an execution. The court said it was a substitute for a scire facias, and did not differ from a formal action, and that, where the delay in issuing execution rendered it necessary to apply for leave, it cannot be granted if the statute has run. This is far from saying that an execution as of right might not issue.

In People ex rel. Parsons v. Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 287, it was pointed out that at a certain time the statute in force did not limit the time within which a suit might be brought on a judgment, but provided that the judgment should "be presumed to be paid and satisfied at the expiration of ten years" after it was entered. Another section of the statute provided for the issue of execution without any limitation of time, and for alias executions. It would seem that, if ever a judgment is extinguished by a limitation statute, it would be by one that said the judgment should be deemed paid and satisfied, yet as eminent a lawyer as Chief Justice Cooley said that, under such statutes, there is reason for saying that an execution might be taken out notwithstanding the lapse of the ten-year period, and that the court would not be justified in setting the execution aside without proof of actual payment. It is not intended to be understood by mentioning this, that this court would go so far as to hold that a judgment would or would not be extinguished under such a statute. It is not necessary to do so under the statute which we are now considering. The case is mentioned to show that the decisions in Michigan are not opposed to the view that we have taken.

McDonald v. Dickson, 85 N. C. 248, was a proceeding before a court for leave to issue an execution, and the defendant set up the statute as a defense. The proceeding was held to be in the nature of an action. The later case of Williams v. Mullis, supra, in the same court, points out this difference in McDonald v. Dickson.

Peters v. Vawter, 10 Mont. 201, 25 Pac. 438, was upon statutes so essentially different from ours that it cannot be considered in point here, and, besides, the case was a motion for leave to issue an execution.

Thomson v. Beveridge, 3 Mackey, 170, was upon a statute which did not bar an action, but which declared that a judgment was not good and pleadable or admissible in evidence after twelve years. The court held that this reduced a judgment to a nullity, and destroyed the cause of action entirely, and distinguished it from a statute that barred an action.

In Ludeman v. Hirth, 96 Mich. 17, 35 Am. St. Rep. 588, 55 N. W. 449, it appears that judgment was rendered on April 2, 1878, and execution issued the same day. On March 29, 1888, nearly ten years thereafter, the land was advertised for sale, and was sold on May 16, 1888. The court held the sale good, notwithstanding the expiration of the ten-year period of limitation before the sale, because the execution had been issued and the sale advertised before the period had expired. This is not in point. True, the court says that executions cannot be issued and levied after the statute has run, but this dictum is no doubt intended to be taken in the light of the Michigan statute, and is supported by the citation of Jerome v. Williams and People ex rel. Parsons v. Circuit Judge, mentioned above, which logically sustain our view under the Colorado statute.

Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Braithwaite, 7 N. D. 358, 66 Am. St. Rep. 653, 75 N. W. 244, is not opposed to our view. It seems therefrom that, under the laws of that state, no action on a judgment can be brought, and no execution can be issued, after ten years, and that the judgment ceases to be a lien at the expiration of that period. The court thought that all these statutes showed the legislative purpose to destroy the judgment after ten years. It would seem that this is true, for, the action, execution, and lien being barred, it is difficult to see what would remain. The court mentioned the New York cases cited above, and said: "It is apparent that in New York the statute was levied at only a particular remedy, and therefore the courts rightly held that all other remedies remained unimpaired."

McGrew v. Reasons, 3 Lea, 485, seems to hold that the running of the statute of limitations against an action on a judgment likewise barred the remedy by execution, so that an execution on a justice's judgment might be quashed in the circuit court upon petition for certiorari and supersedeas. The age of the judgment, nearly twenty years, no doubt appealed to the court in that case. No authorities are cited by the court. The conclusion in that case is not supported by the former reasoning of our own court on the statute of limitations, and to follow it now would be subversive of former decisions in this state.

The appellant also says that there is no redemption in this case because there was not enough paid to effect the redemption. Our statute (§ 3653, Rev. Stat. 1908) provides that after the expiration of six months, and at any time before the expiration of nine months, from the sale a judgment creditor may redeem by placing an execution on his judgment in the hands of the proper officer to execute, and paying to the officer the amount of money for which the premises were sold, with ten per cent per annum interest thereon from the date of the sale. This the redeeming creditor did. Before, and for several days after, the period of redemption expired, the sheriff had sufficient money in his hands to effect the redemption, paid to him by the redeeming creditor for that purpose. If the sheriff made a mistake in distributing this money, it was a matter between appellant and the sheriff. True, the sheriff returned money to the redeeming creditor, but the latter did not ratify the mistake of the sheriff, for he tendered $5.35 seasonably to appellant.

As it appears from the foregoing that appellant is wrong in his contentions, the judgment is affirmed.

Steele, Ch. J., and Campbell, J., concur.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

FLORIDA FINANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
J. M. SHEFFIELD.

(— Fla. —, 48 So. 42.)

Ejectment — title — sufficiency.

1. A plaintiff in ejectment must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of his adversary's. He cannot recover as against one without title, unless he prove title or prior possession. Same — requisites.

2. A plaintiff in ejectment cannot recover merely on the strength of a deed to himself, without showing that his grantor had a prima facie right to recover, and a mere deed unaccompanied by evidence of the grantor's seisin is not prima facie evidence of the grantor's title. He must trace his title back to the ultimate source of title or to a grantor in possession at or near the time of his grant.

Evidence — deeds — certified copy — admissibility.

3. Certified copies of deeds should not be admitted in evidence until the party offering them makes it to appear that the original deeds were not within his custody or control.

Ejectment — adverse possession — tax deed — void assessment.

4. Where the defendant in an action of ejectment, or those under whom he claims, goes into actual possession of land purchased at tax sale under a tax deed regular on its face, but based upon a void assessment, such actual possession for the period of four years, prescribed by § 591 of the General Statutes of 1906, prior to the bringing of the action, will bar the suit.

Headnotes by PARKHILL, J.

(December 19, 1908.)

Case Note.—Effect upon special statute of limitations, which begins to run from time actual possession is taken under tax deed, of fact that such deed was void or irregular.

This note is limited to those cases where, as in FLORIDA FINANCE CO. v. SHEFFIELD, it appeared that the special statute of limitations commences to run from the time actual possession is taken under the tax deed, and does not include those cases from jurisdictions where, by the terms of the statute, limitations commence to run from the date of sale or from the date of delivery or recording of the deed.

But few jurisdictions have a special statute of limitations which begins to run from the time of possession. It would seem from the cases gathered that the question here annotated is not altogether free from difficulties, and even within the same jurisdiction presents some difference of opinion.

In Mississippi, § 539 of the Code 1880 declared that actual occupation for three years after one year from the day of sale, of any land held under a conveyance by a tax collector, in pursuance of a sale for taxes, shall bar any suit to recover such land or assail such title because of any defect in the sale of such land for taxes, or in any precedent step to said sale.

This statute was held in Patterson v. Durfey, 68 Miss. 779, 9 So. 354, to bar a suit to recover land sold for taxes, although it was claimed that part of such land, at the time of the sale to the levee board, was not delinquent for taxes, and the other part was then assessed to the liquidating levee board, and thus not subject to sale for taxes.

So, in Carlisle v. Yoder, 69 Miss. 384, 12 So. 255, where the same statute was under consideration it was said: "It may be conceded that the assessment roll was not returned by the assessor at the time required by law, wherefore the sale of March, 1882, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

under which the defendant claims, was invalid, and that the lands, having been the property of the liquidating levee board during the year 1881, were not subject to taxation and sale; and yet the defendant, by reason of actual occupation, has secured title to the land he claims. . . . The title of the defendant to the land claimed under the tax sale has been perfected by the lapse of the statutory period, without regard to any defect of power in the collector to sell the land for taxes. An actual payment by the landowner of the taxes for which the sale was made would not serve to defeat the title of the occupant of land claimed under a tax sale, who has held possession for the period prescribed by the statute. The title becomes perfect by lapse of time, whatever its original infirmity may have been."

In Brougher v. Stone, 72 Miss. 647, 17 So. 509, it was held that a purchaser from the state of land sold for taxes, who actually occupies the same under his purchase more than three years after one year from the time of sale for taxes, cannot be deprived of his property, although the sale was made on the wrong day and under a law not applicable to the land.

However, in Hoskins v. Illinois C. R. Co. 78 Miss. 768, 84 Am. St. Rep. 644, 29 So. 518, overruling Patterson v. Durfey and Carlisle v. Yoder, supra, it was held that the three years' statute of limitations applied only to sales of lands that were taxable and salable, and in which there was some defect in the proceedings relating to the assessment or sale, and not where the land was not taxable; the land being in this case a homestead, the right to a patent of which had not yet been perfected.

So, in Eastland v. Yazoo Delta Lumber Co. 90 Miss. 330, 43 So. 956, it was held that the statute did not apply to a tax sale void because the assessment was made under an unconstitutional law. The court in ERROR to the Circuit Court for Taylor County to review an order granting a new trial after verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. J. McCall for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Hendry & McKinnon, for defendant in error:

When a tax deed is valid upon its face and the statute of limitation has fully run, the former owner will not be permitted to show that the deed is in fact invalid by reason of irregularities in a prior proceeding.

Tyler, Ejectment & Adverse Enjoyment, pp. 864, 873; Black, Tax Titles, §§ 492, 493, 497, 498; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 985; Butts v. Ricks, 82 Miss. 533, 34 So. 354; Russell v. Lang, 50 La. Ann. 36, 23 So. 113; Pipes v. Farrar, 64 Miss. 514, 1

So. 740; Terry v. Heisen, 115 La. 1076, 40 So. 461.

Parkhill, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 1st day of January, 1908, the plaintiff in error instituted an action of ejectment against the defendant in error in the circuit court for Taylor county to recover the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 35, township 2 S., range 6 E., containing 80 acres, and mesne profits. The defendant pleaded the general issue. On the 24th day of March, 1908, a trial was had, and the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff, being directed by the court so to do. Upon motion of defendant the court granted a new trial, and the plaintiff sued out a writ of error, as authorized by § 1695 of the General Statutes of 1906.

this case said: "It is certainly fortunate that the legislature, in adopting § 3095 of the Code of 1906, has declared that that section shall not apply when the sale is absolutely void; fortunate as the legislative declaration that the intent of the legislature never had been, as misinterpreted in Carlisle v. Yoder; Patterson v. Durfey; and Brougher v. Stone,—supra, that such a statute of limitations should cure a pretended sale for taxes when there never had been in truth and in fact any power to sell for taxes at all. That legislative provision was merely declaratory of what this court has already announced to have been the legislative intent in § 539 of the Code of 1880 and the other related statutes of limitation."

So, in Saddle v. Smith, 54 Fla. 671, 45 So. 718, 14 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 570, the statute set out in FLORIDA FINANCE CO. v. SHEFFIELD was held not to apply to a suit to set aside a tax deed, where the calls in the deed are materially different from the lands described on the assessment roll and sold by the collector. But see the comment on this case in the SHEFFIELD CASE.

In Pence v. Miller, 140 Mich. 205, 103 N. W. 582, a similar statute at the suit of one in adverse possession, for the required time, of property under a void tax deed, was held to be a statute of limitations, and to vest in him an absolute title.

In Arkansas, Mansfield's Dig. § 4475 (Sandels & H. Dig. § 4819), provides that "no action for the recovery of any lands, or for the possession thereof against any person or persons, their heirs or assigns, who may hold such lands by virtue of a purchase thereof at a sale by the collector or commissioner of state lands for nonpayment of taxes, or who may have purchased the same from the state by virtue of any act providing for the sale of lands forfeited to the state for the nonpayment of taxes, or who may hold such lands under a donation deed from the state, shall be maintained, unless it appear that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor was seised or possessed of the lands in question within two years next before the commencement of such suit or action."

This statute was held to apply in Finley v. Hogan, 60 Ark. 499, 30 S. W. 1045, where, although the tax deed was regular on its face, the sale was void for the reason that the owner had previously paid the taxes for which it was sold.

In Ross v. Royal, 77 Ark. 324, 91 S. W. 178, it was said: "Actual possession of land taken and held continuously for the statutory period of two years, under a clerk's tax deed or donation deed issued by the commissioner of state lands, bars an action for recovery, whether the sale be merely irregular or void on account of jurisdictional defects." To the same effect is Dickinson v. Hardie, 79 Ark. 364, 96 S. W. 355.

So, in Carpenter v. Smith, 76 Ark. 447, 88 S. W. 976, it was recognized that open, continuous, and adverse possession, although under a void tax title, is sufficient to give the one in possession title.

This was also recognized in Gannon v. Moore, 83 Ark. 196, 104 S. W. 372 (erroneous designation of land in reciting clause).

And see Cooper v. Lee, 59 Ark. 460, 27 S. W. 970, sufficiently reviewed in FLORIDA FINANCE CO. v. SHEFFIELD.

Adverse possession for two years under this statute is a bar to recovery, although the deed is void on its face. Woolfork v. Buckner, 60 Ark. 163, 29 S. W. 372. The tax deed showed that two pieces of land were sold together.

However, in Caldwell v. Barrett, 71 Ark. 310, 74 S. W. 748, it was held that an overdue tax sale based on a judgment rendered by a special judge at an adjourned term of the court held on a day when the regular judge was holding court in another county in the same circuit is a nullity, and possession thereunder will not set in operation the statute of limitations of two years.

The motion for new trial is as follows:

"Now comes the defendant in the above-stated cause by his attorneys, and moves the court to set aside the verdict in said cause and to grant him a new trial therein upon the following grounds, to wit:

"(1) Because said verdict is contrary to law:

"(2) Because said verdict is contrary to the evidence.

"(3) Because the court erred in admitting in evidence, over the defendant's objection, certified copy of deed from Jno. Alexander Graham to J. W. Lyman, dated June 9, 1890.

"(4) Because the court erred in admitting in evidence certified copy of deed, dated January 26, 1901, from J. W. Lyman to G. S. Van Buskirk, over the objection of the defendant.

"(5) Because the court erred in admitting in evidence, over the defendant's objection, final decree of foreclosure, dated 11th day of August, A. D., 1898, and signed by John W. Malone, judge.

"(6) The court erred in admitting in evidence, over the objection of the defendant, master's deed from T. M. Puleston to Florida Finance Company.

"(7) The court erred in admitting in evidence certain transcripts of the tax records.

"(8) The court erred in instructing the jury that it was their duty to return a verdict for the plaintiff in so far as the ownership and right of possession of the land in dispute was concerned.

"(9) And for other good and sufficient reasons."

There was an entire failure in this case to prove plaintiff's title. The plaintiff disraigned its title from John A. Graham, and introduce in evidence, over defendant's objection, a deed from Graham to Lyman, dated June 9, 1890, another deed from Lyman to Van Buskirk, and a deed from Puleston, as master in chancery in foreclosure proceedings against Van Buskirk and others, to the plaintiff. There was no evidence to show what right Graham had to convey the

So, in Redfield v. Parks, 132 U. S. 239, 33 L. ed. 327, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83, a case arising in Arkansas, it was held that a deed of land sold for nonpayment of taxes, in which it appeared that the sale was made on a day which was not the day authorized by law, is void on its face, and not admissible in evidence to support an adverse possession under the statute.

To the same effect is Alexander v. Gordon, 41 C. C. A. 228, 101 Fed. 91, where the sale was void because made for the collection of a tax in excess of the amount which the county court was authorized by the statutes to levy, and because the officer who made the sale was without jurisdiction or authority to effect it. The court in Ross v. Royal, supra, in review of this case said: "The conclusion appears to have been reached on the ground that the requisite period of occupancy under the statute is so short as to be unreasonable, and to amount in effect to the taking of the owner's property without due process of law. That decision is in obvious conflict with several decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and cannot be regarded as an authority on the question. Upon the facts involved in that case the decision was undoubtedly correct, because no deed had been executed pursuant to the tax sale, and therefore the statute did not begin to run." It should be noted that in the Ross Case no mention whatever was made of Redfield v. Parks, supra.

Under this statute it was held in Gates v. Kelsey, 57 Ark. 523, 22 S. W. 162, that two years' adverse possession is necessary to constitute a bar, and that holding under a tax title which is in fact void, though valid on its face, where the lands are not in fact occupied or in the actual possession of anyone after the tax sale, is not sufficient. The court in this case said: "Under the general rule the holder of a tax deed is not in constructive possession of the land in case it is unoccupied or not in the actual possession of anyone, if it can be shown that the sale is void. Does the statute relied on by appellant make an exception? . . . Only two classes of persons are affected by it,—the defendant 'who may hold,' and the plaintiff who is disseised or dispossessed. No date as the day of sale or record, is specified from which it must run. There is only one fact mentioned in it which can defeat the recovery of land illegally sold for taxes, and that is the fact that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor was not seised or possessed of the lands in question within two years next before the commencement of such suit or action. The statute necessarily implies that, if he was seised or possessed within the two years, he can recover. In other words, it makes the disseisure and dispossession of the true owner for two consecutive years a bar. It is the only fact, under the statute, which can defeat him in an action to recover. There is nothing in the statute which constitutes any act disseisur. The general rule governs, and constructive possession follows the title. There is only one way in which he can be disseised or dispossessed by an illegal sale for taxes, and that is adverse possession. Two years' adverse possession is, therefore, necessary to constitute a bar under the two years' statute."

For cases on effect of an invalid tax deed as color of title within general statutes of limitations, see subject note to Bradbury v. Dumond, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 772.

For statute limiting time for attack on tax sale, or creating a conclusive presumption as to its validity, as applied to a sale under proceedings void for jurisdictional defects, and under which possession has not been taken, see case note to Nind v. Myers, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 157.

land, and the evidence did not show that plaintiff's grantors ever had possession of the land. The evidence tended to show possession in the defendant and those under whom he claimed.

A plaintiff in ejectment must recover upon the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of his adversary's. He cannot recover as against one without title, unless he prove title or prior possession. Burt v. Florida Southern R. Co. 43 Fla. 339, 31 So. 265. The plaintiff cannot recover merely on the strength of a deed to himself, without showing that his grantor had a prima facie right to recover, and a mere deed, unaccompanied by evidence of the grantor's seisin, is not prima facie evidence of the grantor's title. He must trace his title back to the ultimate source of title, or to a grantor in possession at or near the time of his grant. Lake v. Hancock, 38 Fla. 53, 56 Am. St. Rep. 159, 20 So. 811; Dubois v. Holmes, 20 Fla. 834; Florida Southern R. Co. v. Burt, 36 Fla. 497, 18 So. 581.

The certified copies of the deeds from Graham to Lyman, and from Lyman to Van Buskirk, should not have been admitted in evidence until the plaintiff made it to appear that the original deeds were not within its custody or control. Bell v. Kendrick, 25 Fla. 778, 6 So. 868; Johnson v. Drew, 34 Fla. 130, 43 Am. St. Rep. 172, 15 So. 780.

The defendant relied upon a tax deed to W. G. Sheffield of May 12, 1902, and on mesne conveyances from Sheffield, and on actual possession of the land by himself and those under whom he claimed for more than four years before this suit was brought. Section 591 of the General Statutes of 1906 provides: "When the purchaser of land at a tax sale goes into actual possession of such land, no suit for the recovery of the possession thereof shall be brought by the former owner or claimant, his heirs or assigns, or his or their legal representatives for the recovery of the possession of such land, unless such suit be commenced within four years after the purchaser at such tax sale goes into possession of the land so bought."

The plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that the tax deed was void because the assessment of the land was void, and claims that the foregoing statute of limitations does not apply for that reason.

Even though the tax deed be void because the assessment of the land was void, if the defendant or those under whom he claims went into actual possession of the land purchased at the tax sale, such actual possession for the statutory period prior to the origin of this suit will bar this suit. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The court properly granted a new trial because of his error in striking the tax deed and withdrawing it from the consideration of the jury.

The tax deed under which the defendant claims is not void on its face. It gives the name of the grantee, the number of the tax certificate, the date of the tax sale for unpaid taxes for a stated year, the name in which the property was assessed, the amount paid for the certificates, a description of the land, besides the other recitals prescribed by the statute, and the execution thereof is in the prescribed form. Cowan v. Skinner, 52 Fla. 486, 42 So. 730, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 311.

Section 591 of the General Statutes of 1906 is a statute of limitations and begins to run, not from the date of sale nor from the recordation of the tax deed, but from the time actual possession of the land is taken under the deed.

In considering the provisions of a similar statute, the supreme court of Arkansas had this to say: "But it does not follow because the sale was without notice and void that the plaintiff can now recover. . . . It has never been seriously doubted that, in cases where the purchaser at a sale of land for the nonpayment of taxes takes actual possession of the land purchased, under a proper deed conveying said land to him, the legislature may prescribe a period of limitation after the expiration of which the title of the original owner is barred. By the adverse possession of the purchaser, the owner is excluded from the possession of his premises, and notified that an adverse claimant, hostile to his interests, holds the land. Public policy no less than justice to the tax purchaser requires that he should bring his suit within a reasonable time, in order that all contested questions may be put at rest while the facts are recent and susceptible of proof." Cooper v. Lee, 59 Ark. 460, 27 S. W. 970. See also Cofer v. Brooks, 20 Ark. 542.

In Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472, 14 L. ed. 228, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "In order to entitle the defendant to set up the bar of this statute, after five years' adverse possession, he had only to show that he and those under whom he claimed held under a deed from a collector of the revenue of lands sold for the nonpayment of taxes. He was not bound to show that all the requisitions of the law had been complied with, in order to make the deed a valid and indefeasible conveyance of the title. If the court should require such proof before a defendant could have the benefit of this law, it would require him to show that he had no need of the protection of the statute before he could be entitled to it. Such a construction would annul the act altogether, which was evidently intended to save the defendant from the difficulty, after such a length of time, of showing the validity of his tax title."

Some courts hold that the special statute of limitations only applies where the tax deed is valid upon its face. Mason v. Crowder, 85 Mo. 526; Taylor v. Miles, 5 Kan. 498, 7 Am. Rep. 558; Larkin v. Wilson, 28 Kan. 513; Wofford v. McKinna, 23 Tex. 36, 76 Am. Dec. 53; Kilpatrick v. Sisineros, 23 Tex. 113; McGavock v. Pollack, 13 Neb. 538, 14 N. W. 659; Sheehy v. Hinds, 27 Minn. 259, 6 N. W. 781; King v. Lane, 21 S. D. 101, 110 N. W. 37.

Other courts hold that an action cannot be maintained by the original owner of land sold for taxes, against one who has been in possession of it for the statutory period, claiming title in good faith under a tax deed, although the deed is void upon its face. Edgerton v. Bird, 6 Wis. 527, 70 Am. Dec. 473; Oconto County v. Jerrard, 46 Wis. 317, 50 N. W. 591; McMillan v. Wehle, 55 Wis. 685, 13 N. W. 694.

This court has held that the statute of limitations prescribed by § 61, chap. 3413, p. 39, Acts 1883, and § 20, chap. 1887, p. 44, Acts 1872, and § 63, chap. 1976, p. 27, Acts 1874, will not apply to a suit to set aside a void deed or to recover possession of land attempted to be conveyed thereby. McKeown v. Collins, 38 Fla. 276, 21 So. 103; Carnecross v. Lykes, 22 Fla. 587; Grissom v. Furman, 22 Fla. 581; Sloan v. Sloan, 25 Fla. 53, 5 So. 603; Townsend v. Edwards, 25 Fla. 582, 6 So. 212. Under these statutes the limitation ran from the recording of the tax deed. They required no actual possession of the land by the holder of the tax title. As these statutes depended merely upon the recording of the tax deed for a certain period, when the deed fell because it was void, there was nothing left for the statute to rest upon, and the statute fell with the deed. But a void tax deed may be color of title. Townsend v. Edwards, supra. As the limitation prescribed by § 591 of the General Statutes of 1906 rests upon the actual possession of land purchased at a tax sale, when the tax deed falls because it is void, the statute does not fall with the deed, because it rests upon the possession of the land, and the deed becomes merely the color of title. The statute would not apply if the tax deed were void, and no title by adverse possession was shown. See Saddler v. Smith, 54 Fla. 671, 45 So. 718, where the defendant was not in possession and did not claim title by adverse possession under the void tax deed.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

By the enactment of § 64, chap. 4322, p. 39, Acts 1895, now § 591 of the General Statutes of 1906, a radical departure has been made by our lawmakers in the policy of quieting tax titles. Under statutes that made the limitation to run from the recording of a tax deed for a stated period, and that required no notice to the former owner by the purchaser's actual possession of the land, speculators flourished to the annoyance and injury of the landowners and taxpayers of the state. And so it would seem our lawmakers designedly adopted the provisions of § 591 of the General Statutes of 1906, encouraging thereby the buyer who in good faith would go into actual possession of the land, and affording, by such actual possession of the land, a notice of higher order to the delinquent taxpayer of the passing of his right to object to the irregularities and illegalities in the tax proceedings. This legislation may be commended in the language of this court in Florida Sav. Bank v. Brittain, 20 Fla. 507, as the endeavor of the lawmaker "to give some force to a tax title, thereby securing bidders other than those notoriously for speculation; and also advising the citizen that he must pay his taxes, like all good citizens should do, or his property will be sold to some purpose."

Much more may be said in support of the policy of a statute that bars the former owner's right to recover by proof of adverse possession for four years by the holder of a void tax deed than may be said in behalf of the statute that bars the former owner's right to recover by proof of adverse possession for seven years under any other color of title. When the state sells land at tax sale, gives the purchaser a deed regular on its face, takes his money, and requires him to go into the actual possession of the land so purchased for four years, causing the purchaser thereby to improve the land at his expense before he can claim the protection of the statute of limitations, and the purchaser has complied with all the requirements of the law, the former owner, who is in default, should not be permitted to oust the purchaser because of the dereliction of the officials of the state. The lawmakers have declared this should not be done, good policy proclaims its wisdom, and the courts should give effect to this legislation.

The court did not err in granting the motion for a new trial; and the judgment is affirmed.

Taylor and Hocker, JJ., concur.

Shackleford, Ch. J. and Cockrell and Whitfield, JJ., concur in the opinion.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

S. T. BREWER, Plff. in Err.,
v.
J. M. CASWELL.

(132 Ga. 563, 64 S. E. 674.)

Innkeeper — guest — evidence — sufficiency.

Where an innkeeper provided a lot and stables in which his guests were permitted to keep their horses without charge, but it was customary to charge for feed for horses if furnished by the innkeeper, it was not sufficient evidence of the relation of innkeeper and guest that one drove into the lot, unhitched his mule from his buggy, and placed the mule in a stable pointed out by a boy in charge of the lot and stables, and then left the premises without entering the inn or having any agreement with the innkeeper or his authorized agent that he would be a guest, or that the innkeeper should furnish any feed for the mule, or doing anything further towards becoming a guest, though the owner stated to the boy that he would return and would himself feed his mule at dinner time, and though he testified that he intended to take dinner at the inn with another person who accompanied him, and who dined there, but did not do so, because before the dinner hour he learned of the injury to the mule.

(May 12, 1909.)

Headnote by ATKINSON, J.

Case Note. — What acts, with respect to baggage of an intending guest, will initiate the relation of innkeeper and guest so as to create liability for its loss or injury.

Cases in which it appears that the owner of chattels left in the care of the innkeeper had no intention of himself becoming a guest are not to be included in this note. This of course excludes cases where one leaves his horse at an inn, with no intention of stopping there himself, and losses of property by persons who are at the inn for some special purpose not connected with passage or travel. Likewise, cases are excluded in which the intention to become a guest was clearly consummated, before any injury or loss, by acts other than a mere dealing with the guest's property. In other words, this note is limited to cases where the loss or injury to the goods occurred before the intending guest had registered, eaten a meal, procured a room, or, by acts other than delivering his personal property to the innkeeper, carried his intention into effect.

In Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102, where it appeared that two boxes, bearing the owner's name and containing merchandise for sale, were received by the innkeeper, and the owner delivered them with the intention of becoming a guest, and two or three hours afterward did register and become an inmate of the hotel,—it was held that the relation ERROR to the Superior Court for Liberty County to review an order granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to property for which defendant was alleged to be responsible as an innkeeper. Affirmed.

Statement by Atkinson, J.:

S. T. Brewer instituted suit in the superior court of Liberty county against J. M. Caswell for the recovery of $150, the value of a mule, the property of the plaintiff, which was lodged by him in the stable of the defendant, and was stung by certain bees kept by the defendant behind the stable and in close proximity thereto, from the effects of which the mule died.

In his own behalf the plaintiff testified, among other things, as follows:

The defendant keeps a hotel or inn at Hinesville, and, in connection therewith, conducts this stable and lot. On the day named in the declaration I came to Hinesville with Middleton. We drove my mule, and upon arrival in town drove into the lot of defendant. There was a boy in charge of the lot and stable who showed us a stall, the only one not occupied, in which we placed the mule. I instructed the boy that the mule was young and excitable, and that I would come back at dinner and feed him. I had no feed in my buggy, and expected to get the feed from the stable. Mr. Middleton, who came with me, took dinner of innkeeper and guest was established by the reception of the baggage, and that the responsibility of the innkeeper for the safe-keeping of the boxes began at that time, and that he was liable for the loss of part of the merchandise prior to the time when the owner came personally infra hospitium.

In Oriental Hotel Asso. v. Faust, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 573, 86 S. W. 373, it appeared that a traveler left his valise at a hotel in the evening, and at noon of the next day returned to the hotel, registered, and ate lunch, and when he thereafter called for his valise it was discovered that it was missing. It was contended that he was not a guest at the time he left his baggage at the hotel, but the court refused to decide this question, holding that the fact that the hotel received the baggage was some evidence that it still retained possession when the traveler registered the next day, and that this was sufficient to justify the verdict against the hotel, in the absence of any proof to the contrary.

In Arcade Hotel Co. v. Wiatt, 44 Ohio St. 32, 58 Am. Rep. 785, 4 N. E. 398, where it appeared that at 2 o'clock in the morning one went to a hotel in advance of his actual present need of entertainment, and for the sole purpose of making it a depository for his money that he might be free to follow the promptings of his own will and pleasure for the balance of that night, with no risk of its loss; that he did not register, ance or rescission, unless it be such a mistake as goes to the substance of the contract itself.

Sale—mistake—amount of recovery.

2. Where a prospective purchaser of goods submits a list of the goods he proposes to purchase and asks the price for which the owner will sell such articles, and the vendor submits a bid in the aggregate for the entire list of goods without setting out the price of each article, and the purchaser accepts the proposition and orders the goods shipped, and thereafter receives and accepts the goods, the vendor will not be allowed to recover a greater sum than that called for by his bid, on the ground that he made an error or mistake in computing the various items, and for that reason submitted his bid greatly below the price for which the goods should have sold.

Same—rescission.

3. The negligence and mistake of the vendor of property in computing the prices of various articles he is selling, or in computing the profits he expects to or should realize on the goods, is no ground for avoidance or rescission of the contract, where the other party acted in good faith and is free from any knowledge of the mistake or of any fraud or deception in the transaction.

(May 6, 1909.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the District Court for Ada County in tractor as a ground for relief, see the case note to Steinmeyer v. Schroepel, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114.

As to the right of a purchaser of personally to rely upon the seller's computation of price or estimate of quantity, see case note to Dalhoff Constr. Co. v. Block, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 419.

A supposed contract of sale when there is a mutual misunderstanding between the parties as to the price to be paid will impose no liability upon either party. West v. De Wezele, 4 Post. & F. 596; Wilkinson v. Williamson, 76 Ala. 163; Rovegno v. Defferari, 40 Cal. 459; Greene v. Bateman, 2 Woodb. & M. 359, Fed. Cas. No. 5,762.

Where, upon default by the purchaser under a conditional sale contract, the vendor agreed to sell personally to a third person for $525, under the mistaken impression that the amount remaining unpaid was but $650, when in fact it was $950, the vendor, who immediately gave notice of the mistake upon discovering it, may obtain relief in equity where he renounced the agreement and returned what had already been paid thereon, and the vendee had not acted so that he would be prejudiced by a rescission. Scott v. Hall, 58 N. J. Eq. 42, 43 Atl. 50.

Where a lumber dealer, in response to a request to designate a lump sum for which he would supply a designated number of pieces of timber of varying sizes, submitted a written statement of the number of feet in each item and the price of each, and the purchaser, looking only at the gross amount of the bill, accepted the offer without being aware of the fact of the vendor's mistake in computing the number of feet in one item, the latter will not, after the vendee has used the lumber in constructing a building, be entitled to relief in an action of assumption, as the mistake was not mutual, and it has become impossible to place the parties in statu quo, notwithstanding the statement submitted by the vendor contained a provision that "errors in extensions and footings are subject to correction." Boeckeler Lumber Co. v. Cherokee Realty Co. 135 Mo. App. 708, 116 S. W. 452.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. D. D. Williams, for appellants:

The vendee became liable to the vendors for the machinery bought at the prices shown in the invoices, because it received the goods as its own property after receiving notice of the price at which it must receive them, or not at all.

Mummenhoff v. Randall, 19 Ind. App. 44, 49 N. E. 40; Mitchell v. McBee, 1 McMull. L. 267, 36 Am. Dec. 264.

Mr. Alfred A. Fraser for respondent.

Allshie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted by the appellants for the recovery of $1,060 claimed to be due them as a balance for certain merchandise sold to the respondent between the 10th day of October and the 17th day of November, 1905. The defendant denied the indebtedness, and the case was tried to the court without a jury, and findings and judgment were entered in favor of the defendant. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial.

And the facts presented in the case of Chapline Realty & Constr. Co. v. Philip Gruner & Bros. Lumber Co. (Mo. App.) 118 S. W. 665, are identical with those of the last case, excepting that the vendor, upon discovering his error in computation after his offer had been accepted and the vendee had entered into a contract with a third person upon the strength thereof, refused to carry out his contract; and it was held that the vendor was liable in damages as the mistake was not mutual and the vendee was unaware thereof.

But where, by a mistake or as the result of oversight or error in computation, a vendor quotes a price below the true one, which is accepted by the vendee with knowledge of the mistake, the latter cannot enforce the contract. Everson v. International Granite Co. 65 Vt. 658, 27 Atl. 320.

So, where, by a mistake, the word "less"

This action is the result of a dispute which arose between the appellants and respondent over the purchase of a bill of machinery. The facts essential to the determination of this case are as follows: In the month of October, 1905, the appellants furnished respondent with a list of tools and machinery for a planing mill and sash and door factory, which they proposed to sell to respondent for $2,825 f. o. b. Portland. The respondent on the same day appears to have accepted the offer. Later, and on November 3d, respondent's manager, George Clithero, wrote appellants at Portland ordering a 48-inch 3-drum sander at $1,250 f. o. b. Portland, to come with the car of machinery previously ordered. Clithero, as manager for the respondent company, seems to have been figuring on the purchase and installation of machinery for operating a mill and factory in Boise, and, subsequent to the previous orders, appears to have concluded that they would need still other machinery, and that it would also be necessary to change the previous order as to some of the machinery, getting different and heavier material in some instances. He accordingly prepared a list of the tools, machinery, and furnishings his company wanted to purchase, and went to Portland, and called on the appellants' salesman at their place of business, and submitted the complete list, which included most of the articles and machinery covered by the previous orders and such changes as were desired. This list contained some fifty or sixty items. He requested the appellants' salesman to go over the list and give him the total price for which appellants would sell respondent the entire bill of goods. On the afternoon of November 17th, appellants' salesman, one Mark Colby, delivered to Clithero a communication which is as follows, omitting the list of goods scheduled in the letter:

Nov. 17, 1905.

Coast Lumber Company,
George Clithero, Mgr.,
Boise, Idaho.

Dear Sir:—

Your order for machines and extras as it now stands with us comprises the following list of machinery: . . . The above equipment totals approximately $5,134.80. On our original contract we estimated and charged you for 24,000 lbs. of freight to bring same f. o. b. Boise. The additions which you have just made will bring the weight approximately 40,000 lbs., but whatever the exact weight is in excess of the 24,000 we will charge you at the carload rate. We would suggest that you pay was omitted from an offer to furnish cloth which was worth from $2 to $6 per yard, 'at 5 cents a yard than Gale would ch'g.,' the vendee, knowing of the ambiguity of the offer and that there was a mistake therein, will be liable for the real value of what he orders and uses. Butler v. Moses, 43 Ohio St. 166, 1 N. E. 316.

And where the vendor of flour, by reason of a typographical error in a letter, quoted a lower price than he intended, an acceptance thereof by an experienced buyer, who must have been aware of the error, will not result in a contract which he can enforce. Buckberg v. Washburn-Crosby Co. 115 Mo. App. 701, 92 S. W. 733.

Where merchandise of greater value than that advertised at a certain figure is included by a salesman as a portion of the cheaper lot, the owner thereof, upon discovering the error before delivery of the goods, may rescind the sale. Goodrich v. Strawbridge, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 427.

In Shelton v. Ellis, 70 Ga. 297, a temporary injunction was granted and a receiver appointed pending the determination of the facts by a jury, where the defendants, who were ticket buyers, upon discovering a mistake in the published rate sheet issued by a railway company, purchased a large number of tickets at less than the regular rate of fare.

Attention is called to the case of Rowland v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 61 Conn. 103, 29 Am. St. Rep. 175, 23 Atl. 755, which holds that no contract resulted where, by 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

reason of a noise made by a passing train, a carrier's clerk misunderstood the destination mentioned by one desiring to ship freight, and quoted him a less rate to a nearer point, which the shipper paid, immediately leaving the city, so that the clerk, upon discovering the mistake, was unable to find him, whereupon the goods were despatched with instruction to collect the difference in the charge, and, as there was no meeting of the minds, the carrier was entitled to demand the correct rate at the point of destination.

And it was held in Hartford & N. H. R. Co. v. Jackson, 24 Conn. 514, 63 Am. Dec. 177, that no contract was created where a carrier's clerk asked a shipper how many bundles a quantity of lath which he desired to ship would make, and, the latter not knowing, a third person to whom the question was referred erroneously stated 100 bundles, when in fact there would be 500, and the shipper without notice of the error paid the amount demanded for carrying 100 bundles.

If the carrier, after discovering such error, transported the goods conscious of the fact that the shipper was not aware of the error, in an action to recover the price of transportation at the usual rate, such fact may be submitted to the jury merely as evidence of the carrier's assent to the price as understood by the shipper, and will not prevent the carrier from showing the mistake. Ibid.

the freight at your end of the line as goods arrive, thus obviating any chance of a misunderstanding, and when it comes to settlement that you charge us back with the 24,000 lbs. of freight at 79c. Any points that are not entirely clear to you should be glad to have you take same up at any time.

Yours truly,
Tatum & Bowen,
by M. R. C.

Clithero testifies that he asked Colby at the time what he meant by the use of the word "approximately," and Colby answered: "The only thing we cannot figure out is the size of the pulleys." That he thereupon asked Colby: "How much difference will that make?" And Colby answered: "From $3 to $4." Clithero thereupon replied: "That is all right. You can ship these goods." Clithero returned to Boise, and on December 13th received one car load of machinery. The other car load was received in Boise on December 28th. On December 18th, five days after the first car load of machinery reached Boise, Clithero received several invoices from Tatum & Bowen, aggregating about the sum of $6,194.84. Clithero testifies that he did not take the time to figure up these several invoices to see if they corresponded with his contract until some time from the 21st to the 30th of December. However, he evidently computed this on or before December 23d, because on that date Clithero wrote Tatum & Bowen as follows:

Boise, Idaho, Dec. 23, 1905.
Messrs. Tatum & Bowen,
Portland, Oregon.

Dear Sirs:—

Please find our check for$3,890 09
Discount at 3 per cent 120 51
Freight on 24,000 lbs. at 79c. .. 189 60

$4,200 00

Total credit to our account, $4,200. There seems to be an overcharge in your invoice. Please refer to your estimate of November 17th. As soon as you get this straightened out and the balance of machinery, etc., here, we will send you balance of our account.

Geo. Clithero, Mgr.

It would seem from the reply of Tatum & Bowen under date of December 27th that Clithero or his company must have also written appellants on December 22d. The reply of December 27th is as follows:

Portland, Oregon, Dec. 27, 1905.
Coast Lum. Co.,
Boise, Idaho.

Gentlemen:—

We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 22d and 23d inst., and have placed to your credit the several items aggregating $4,200. In regard to our estimate of November 17th, would state that we have looked the same over, and it is evident that our Mr. Colby did not get all the items, or what we think by reference to his papers, which he has kept, is that he made an error in his addition when making up the approximate price as per ours of the 17th of November. If you will refer to our invoices, you will find that we have not charged you with anything that does not belong there, and that the prices charged are those agreed upon and quoted you. The invoices were made from the original entries and therefore cannot be wrong. We think, if you will look everything over, you will see that our invoices were correct. Our letter of the 17th of November in any event was only an approximation. As regards the rate, the correct rate to Boise is 85c. 79c is the rate Mr. Colby obtained to Caldwell, and we think he must have made an error, as he told you the rate to Boise was the latter amount.

Yours truly,

Tatum & Bowen.

By E. F. F. S.

In answer to Tatum & Bowen's letter of December 27th, Clithero wrote them on December 30th, in part, as follows:

Boise, Idaho, Dec. 30, 1905.
Tatum & Bowen,
Portland, Oregon.

Dear Sirs:—

In your letter of the 27th inst., you state that, if we will refer to your invoices, we will find that you have not charged us for anything that does not belong there, and at prices agreed and quoted us. Now the fact is, that you never quoted us on but two or three machines in the entire purchase. In the first bill sold to us by Mr. Colby. I did not know the price of a single machine. I asked Mr. Colby to carry out the prices, but he refused to do so, and said that he was making me better prices than he would if he had to itemize the bill. . . .

The letter from Tatum & Bowen of December 27th appears to have been written by someone other than Colby. Later all the papers and correspondence appear to have been referred to Colby, and on Janary 2, 1906, he wrote Mr. Clithero personally a letter of considerable length, parts of which are as follows:

Portland, Oregon, Jan. 2, 1906.

Mr. George Clithero, Manager Coast Lum. Co., Boise, Idaho.

Dear Sir:—

The firm has turned over to me the letters and papers pertaining to the goods which the writer sold you, in an effort to trace out the very unfortunate mistake which was evidently made in closing with you the time you were in Portland. It, of course, goes without saying that we on both sides did everything possible to have the matter thoroughly understood, and so many of the items were changed or altered, and heavier machines substituted to meet conditions which arose after the original contract was signed, that we used special pains to keep the matter straight. We have taken all the papers pertaining to this subject, which fortunately we had kept, from my first estimates to you at Boise down to our final signing at Portland. We have gone over these papers carefully from beginning to end, and find that the mistake lies, undoubtedly, in the fact that the writer made a mistake in his addition, not carrying a certain figure to the next column when he should. . . .

The appellants have prosecuted this action on the theory that their salesman, Colby, made a mistake in computing the prices of the various articles included in the bill, and that, instead of being $5,134.80, it should have been $6,194.80, and that on account of such mistake the minds of the contracting parties never met on the contract price, and that respondent was therefore liable to pay appellants the price at which the machinery was invoiced to it. Respondent, on the contrary, contends that an express contract was entered into whereby the bill of goods was to be sold to it for approximately $5,431.84, and that it was thoroughly understood that the word "approximately," as used in this contract, should not make a difference or variance of more than "$3 or $4." It is also worthy of note at this point to observe that Colby does not absolutely deny stating to Clithero that, by the use of the word "approximately," he did not mean that there would be a difference of more than $3 or $4." He testifies, however, that he does not remember making such a statement. Counsel for appellants, in support of their contention, place special reliance on Mummenhoff v. Randall, 19 Ind. App. 44, 49 N. E. 40; Mitchell v. McBee, 1 McMull. L. 267, 36 Am. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Dec. 264; and Rupley v. Daggett, 74 Ill. 351.

In the first case above cited, Randall wrote Mummenhoff Company from Oxford, Michigan, quoting prices on vegetables, and, among other things, quoted potatoes at 55 cents per bushel. The stenographer, however, who took the dictation, quoted the price of potatoes at 35 cents instead of 55 cents. On receipt of the letter, Mummenhoff Company wired Randall to ship two or three cars of potatoes at price quoted. Randall accordingly shipped the potatoes and sent invoice at 55 cents. The invoice reached the purchaser before he received the potatoes. The purchaser immediately wired Randall as follows: "You offered potatoes at 35 cts.; billed at 55 cts.; explain." Up to this time Randall had never seen the letter after it had been written by the stenographer and did not know that the price had been quoted at 35 cents, instead of 55 cents. After looking the matter up in the copy book, he immediately wired Mummenhoff Company as follows: "My quotation was 55 cts. delivered; potatoes cost 45 cts. here. Second car on road. If cannot use as billed will give directions." Notwithstanding these telegrams and this information, Mummenhoff Company received and accepted the potatoes, and then refused to pay more than 35 cents. The supreme court of Indiana held that Randall had never been apprised of the mistake made by the stenographer and never in fact knew himself that any offer or proposition had been made to sell the potatoes at 35 cents, and that the purchaser was so advised before receiving and accepting the potatoes, and that he was therefore liable to pay the price as Randall had dictated to his stenographer and had notified them by wire. In Mitchell v. McBee, a firm in South Carolina ordered goods from a New York firm. When the goods came they were not all of the class or kind of goods that had been ordered. At the time of the receipt of the goods, the purchasers also received an invoice stating the prices charged for the articles. The purchasers received and accepted the goods, and the court held that, having received the goods and appropriated them to their own use, they would be liable for the goods at the invoice price. In Rupley v. Daggett, the parties were attempting to make a trade for a horse. The owner of the horse asked the purchaser $165 for the horse. The purchaser understood him to make the price $65. He did not take the animal away at that time, but a few days later returned, and the owner of the horse was absent; but he took the animal, and someone present informed him that there was evidently some mistake, as the owner would not sell the animal for $65. He took the animal away with him. As soon as the owner of the animal learned that the would-be purchaser only intended to pay $65 for the animal, he commenced an action in replevin to recover him, on the ground that there had been no meeting of the minds of the contracting parties, and consequently no sale. The supreme court of Illinois held with the plaintiff, to the effect that there was no meeting of the minds of the contracting parties, and that no sale was ever consummated.

It will at once be seen that these cases are not applicable to the facts of the case at bar. In the Indiana and Illinois cases the owners of the property never in fact quoted the price to the purchasers for which they sought to hold the goods. In the one case the stenographer had misquoted the price to the purchaser, and the purchaser was so informed before receiving or accepting the goods. To have received them after being informed of such mistake and retained them without paying the true price quoted would have been a fraud on the vendor. In the other case the owner of the horse actually quoted the price at $165, and he was not responsible for the vendee's misunderstanding, or not wanting to understand, the price as really given. In the South Carolina case the purchasers received and accepted the goods and appropriated them to their own use, although they were not the goods ordered. They were held bound by the invoice price; the court saying that they might have returned the goods if they did not want them at the invoice price, but that they would not be allowed to compel the owner to part with his goods at a price unsatisfactory to him. In the case at bar the appellants' salesman, who stood in the place of appellants themselves, actually quoted the price to respondent, and the contract was made on the figures thus given. There is no pretense made that the respondent was aware that any mistake in calculation had been made, or that he had any reason to suspect that any mistake or error had been committed on the part of the appellants, nor had respondent in any way contributed to the cause which led to such mistake, if, indeed, a mistake was really made.

This action is not prosecuted for the correction of a mistake in a contract, but is rather brought on the theory that the contract was not actually made, and that the goods were rather sold by appellants and received by respondent on general invoice. The evidence, however, shows that they did make a contract, or at least attempted to make one, and the decisive question to be determined here is: Did their minds meet on the price of this order of goods? For the purposes of this case, it may be conceded that a mistake was made by appellants' salesman in computing the prices of the items, and that, had he discovered the mistake at the time, he would have quoted a higher price than the price given on November 17th. It must also be admitted that the respondent was not aware of any mistake, and had no reason whatever to suppose that any error or mistake had been made by the appellants or their salesman. Prof. Lawson in his article on Contracts (20 Cal. Law & Proc. p. 394) says: "A mistake of one of the parties only in the expression of his agreement, or as to the subject-matter, not known to the other, does not affect its binding force, and is no ground for its rescission even in equity, unless it is such a mistake . . . that there is a complete difference in substance between what is supposed to be and what is taken, so as to constitute a failure of consideration." In Schroepel v. Meyer, 226 Ill. 9, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114, 117 Am. St. Rep. 224, 80 N.E. 564, the vendor of lumber, in footing up the different items of a bill, made the total $1,446, instead of $1,867, which it would have been had he correctly added the amounts. His bookkeeper copied the list as one of the company billheads without giving the prices of each item, and at the bottom of the list wrote the following words: "Above for $1,446." The lumber was delivered, and the purchaser paid the $1,446 and refused to pay any more. The vendor sued for the difference. The court in passing on the matter said: "A mistake which will justify relief in equity must affect the substance of the contract, and not a mere incident or the inducement for entering into it. The mistake of the appellants does not relate to the subject-matter of the contract, its location, identity, or amount, and there was neither belief in the existence of a fact which did not exist, or ignorance of any fact material to the contract which did exist. The contract was exactly what each party understood it to be, and it expressed what it was intended by each. If it can be set aside on account of the error in adding up the amounts representing the selling price, it could be set aside for a mistake in computing the percentage of profits which appellants intended to make, or on account of a mistake in the cost of the lumber to them, or any other miscalculation on their part." In Brown v. Levy, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 389, 69 S. W. 255, the Texas court of civil appeals held quite recently that where a person makes an offer to erect a building for a certain amount, and the other party accepts it, there is a consummated and binding agreement, although the bidder in adding up the items of his estimates made a mistake in the total, and consequently made he bid $10,000 less than it should have been. Bonney v. Stoughton, 122 Ill. 536, 3 N. E. 833, was substantially a similar case, and the court held that the contract was consummated and binding. These cases proceed on the theory that a purchaser has a right to know the price he is expected to pay for an article before accepting it, so that, if he considers the price higher than he can afford to pay or than he wants to pay, he may decline to accept it. A purchaser cannot be made to suffer or be held responsible because a vendor has committed an error or mistake in computing the value of his goods or the expected profits to be derived from the sale thereof. A rescission of the contract has sometimes been allowed where the purchaser was informed of the error and mistake prior to receiving and accepting the goods, and prior to his changing his position and attitude with reference to the contract and property so as to injure or prejudice him. No court, however, so far as we are advised, has ever held a contract void or invalid on account of a unilateral mistake of which the other party was not aware, and which did not go to the subject-matter of the contract itself. 2 Adlison, Contr. p. 1182; Crane v. McCormick, 12 Cal. 176, 28 Pac. 222; Moffett, H. & C. Co. v. Rochester, 33 C. C. A. 319; 62 U. S. App. 392, 91 Fed. 28; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 628. In the latter authority, the text, in dealing with the right of a court of equity to reform a contract on account of such a mistake, says: "In order that a mistake may come within the cognizance of a court of equity, it must be shown to be: first, material, or the moving cause of the complaining party's action; second, mutual, or shared in by both parties to the transaction; third, unintentional; and, fourth, free from negligence."

Contracts are the deliberate and voluntary obligations of parties capable of contracting, and they must be accorded binding force and effect. Those who enter into them must understand that they have a meaning and that they cannot be lightly tampered with. If a vendor can be heard to come into court and repudiate his contract on the ground that it had never been really consummated for the reason that he made a mistake in computing the prices of the various articles involved in the transaction, he might with equal reason insist that he had made a mistake in computing the profit he expected to realize out of the transaction. No such proposition can be tolerated. The owner of property is supposed to know what it is worth, and at least know what he is willing to take for his property. The purchaser may likewise exercise his free will and choice as to whether he will purchase property at a given price. After he has received the property understanding that he is to pay a fixed price for it, he cannot be compelled to pay a different and greater price simply because the vendor was careless or negligent in the transaction of his own business.

The findings and judgment of the trial court in this case are eminently correct. The appellants have failed to make a case.

The judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. Costs awarded in favor of respondent.

Sullivan, Ch. J., and Stewart, J., concur.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. McCABE MOORE, District Judge,

v.

JAMES M. NATION, State Auditor.

(— Kan. —, 103 Pac. 107.)

Public officer — duties.

1. The duties of a public office include all those which fairly lie within its scope, those which are essential to the accomplishment of the main purposes for which the office was created, and those which, although incidental and collateral, are germane to or

Headnotes by BURCH, J.

Case Note. — Power of legislature to impose upon judges the duty to assist in drawing jurors.

The general rule that the legislature has no power to impose upon judges or courts the duty of performing nonjudicial acts is based upon the fundamental separation, established by the Constitution, of the three branches of the government; and in order to answer the question embraced in the subject of this note, it is necessary first to determine whether, in the work of drawing a jury or in preparing jury lists, a judge is performing judicial or nonjudicial functions. In discussing this question, some cases not strictly within the scope of the note have been included because of their value upon the more general question indicated.

An examination of the cases bearing upon this subject conveys the impression that the courts consider that the act of drawing a jury or preparing a jury list is a mixed judicial and ministerial function, properly performed by either judicial officers or executive officers.

This view is expressly taken in State ex rel. Gubbins v. Anson, 132 Wis. 461, 112 N. W. 475, where the court said: "It may be conceded that, generally, the appointment to office is within the executive function; but there remains the exception that within the duties of both the judicial and legislative branches of the government are certain administrative acts, in aid and execution of $65. He took the animal away with him. As soon as the owner of the animal learned that the would-be purchaser only intended to pay $65 for the animal, he commenced an action in replevin to recover him, on the ground that there had been no meeting of the minds of the contracting parties, and consequently no sale. The supreme court of Illinois held with the plaintiff, to the effect that there was no meeting of the minds of the contracting parties, and that no sale was ever consummated.

It will at once be seen that these cases are not applicable to the facts of the case at bar. In the Indiana and Illinois cases the owners of the property never in fact quoted the price to the purchasers for which they sought to hold the goods. In the one case the stenographer had misquoted the price to the purchaser, and the purchaser was so informed before receiving or accepting the goods. To have received them after being informed of such mistake and retained them without paying the true price quoted would have been a fraud on the vendor. In the other case the owner of the horse actually quoted the price at $165, and he was not responsible for the vendee's misunderstanding, or not wanting to understand, the price as really given. In the South Carolina case the purchasers received and accepted the goods and appropriated them to their own use, although they were not the goods ordered. They were held bound by the invoice price; the court saying that they might have returned the goods if they did not want them at the invoice price, but that they would not be allowed to compel the owner to part with his goods at a price unsatisfactory to him. In the case at bar the appellants' salesman, who stood in the place of appellants themselves, actually quoted the price to respondent, and the contract was made on the figures thus given. There is no pretense made that the respondent was aware that any mistake in calculation had been made, or that he had any reason to suspect that any mistake or error had been committed on the part of the appellants, nor had respondent in any way contributed to the cause which led to such mistake, if, indeed, a mistake was really made.

This action is not prosecuted for the correction of a mistake in a contract, but is rather brought on the theory that the contract was not actually made, and that the goods were rather sold by appellants and received by respondent on general invoice. The evidence, however, shows that they did make a contract, or at least attempted to make one, and the decisive question to be determined here is: Did their minds meet on the price of this order of goods? For the purposes of this case, it may be conceded that a mistake was made by appellants' salesman in computing the prices of the several items, and that, had he discovered the mistake at the time, he would have quoted a higher price than the price given on November 17th. It must also be admitted that the respondent was not aware of any mistake, and had no reason whatever to suppose that any error or mistake had been made by the appellants or their salesman. Prof. Lawson in his article on Contracts (9 Cyc. Law & Proc, p. 394) says: "A mistake of one of the parties only in the expression of his agreement, or as to the subject-matter, not known to the other, does not affect its binding force, and is no ground for its rescission even in equity, unless it is such a mistake . . . that there is a complete difference in substance between what is supposed to be and what is taken, so as to constitute a failure of consideration." In Steinmeyer v. Schroepel, 226 Ill. 9, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114, 117 Am. St. Rep. 224, 80 N. E. 564, the vendor of lumber, in footing up the different items of a bill, made the total of $1,446, instead of $1,867, which it would have been had he correctly added the amounts. His bookkeeper copied the list on one of the company billheads without giving the prices of each item, and at the bottom of the list wrote the following words: "Above for $1,446." The lumber was delivered, and the purchaser paid the $1,446, and refused to pay any more. The vendor sued for the difference. The court in passing on the matter said: "A mistake which will justify relief in equity must affect the substance of the contract, and not a mere incident or the inducement for entering into it. The mistake of the appellants did not relate to the subject-matter of the contract, its location, identity, or amount, and there was neither belief in the existence of a fact which did not exist, or ignorance of any fact material to the contract which did exist. The contract was exactly what each party understood it to be, and it expressed what it was intended by each. If it can be set aside on account of the error in adding up the amounts representing the selling price, it could be set aside for a mistake in computing the percentage of profits which appellants intended to make, or on account of a mistake in the cost of the lumber to them, or any other miscalculation on their part." In Brown v. Levy, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 389, 69 S. W. 255, the Texas court of civil appeals held quite recently that where a person makes an offer to erect a building for a certain amount, and the other party accepts it, there is a consummated and binding agreement, although the bidder in adding up the items of his estimates made a mistake in the total, and consequently made the bid $10,000 less than it should have been. Bonney v. Stoughton, 122 Ill. 536, 13 N. E. 833, was substantially a similar case, and the court held that the contract was consummated and binding. These cases proceed on the theory that a purchaser has a right to know the price he is expected to pay for an article before accepting it, so that, if he considers the price higher than he can afford to pay or than he wants to pay, he may decline to accept it. A purchaser cannot be made to suffer or be held responsible because a vendor has committed an error or mistake in computing the value of his goods or the expected profits to be derived from the sale thereof. A rescission of the contract has sometimes been allowed where the purchaser was informed of the error and mistake prior to receiving and accepting the goods, and prior to his changing his position and attitude with reference to the contract and property so as to injure or prejudice him. No court, however, so far as we are advised, has ever held a contract void or invalid on account of a unilateral mistake of which the other party was not aware, and which did not go to the subject-matter of the contract itself. 2 Ad-dison, Contr. p. 1182; Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176, 28 Pac. 222; Moffett, H. & C. Co. v. Rochester, 33 C. C. A. 319; 62 U. S. App. 392, 91 Fed. 28; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 628. In the latter authority, the text, in dealing with the right of a court of equity to reform a contract on account of such a mistake, says: "In order that a mistake may come within the cognizance of a court of equity, it must be shown to be: First, material, or the moving cause of the complaining party's action; second, mutual, or shared in by both parties to the transaction; third, unintentional; and, fourth, free from negligence."

Contracts are the deliberate and voluntary obligations of parties capable of contracting, and they must be accorded binding force and effect. Those who enter into them must understand that they have a meaning and that they cannot be lightly tampered with. If a vendor can be heard to come into court and repudiate his contract on the ground that it had never been really consummated for the reason that he made a mistake in computing the prices of the various articles involved in the transaction, he might with equal reason insist that he had made a mistake in computing the profit he expected to realize out of the transaction. No such proposition can be tolerated. The owner of property is supposed to know what it is worth, and at least know what he is willing to take for his property. The purchaser may likewise exercise his free will and choice as to whether he will purchase property at a given price. After he has received the property understanding that he is to pay a fixed price for it, he cannot be compelled to pay a different and greater price simply because the vendor was careless or negligent in the transaction of his own business.

The findings and judgment of the trial court in this case are eminently correct. The appellants have failed to make a case.

The judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered. Costs awarded in favor of respondent.

Sullivan, Ch. J., and Stewart, J., concur.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. McCABE MOORE, District Judge,

v.

JAMES M. NATION, State Auditor.

(— Kan. —, 103 Pac. 107.)

Public officer — duties.

1. The duties of a public office include all those which fairly lie within its scope, those which are essential to the accomplishment of the main purposes for which the office was created, and those which, although incidental and collateral, are germane to or

Headnotes by BURCH, J.

Case Note. — Power of legislature to impose upon judges the duty to assist in drawing jurors.

The general rule that the legislature has no power to impose upon judges or courts the duty of performing nonjudicial acts is based upon the fundamental separation, established by the Constitution, of the three branches of the government; and in order to answer the question embraced in the subject of this note, it is necessary first to determine whether, in the work of drawing a jury or in preparing jury lists, a judge is performing judicial or nonjudicial functions. In discussing this question, some cases not strictly within the scope of the note have been included because of their value upon the more general question indicated.

An examination of the cases bearing upon this subject conveys the impression that the courts consider that the act of drawing a jury or preparing a jury list is a mixed judicial and ministerial function, properly performed by either judicial officers or executive officers.

This view is expressly taken in State ex rel. Gubbins v. Anson, 132 Wis. 461, 112 N. W. 475, where the court said: "It may be conceded that, generally, the appointment to office is within the executive function; but there remains the exception that within the duties of both the judicial and legislative branches of the government are certain administrative acts, in aid and execution of 19 Neb. 442, 27 N. W. 433; Mechem, Pub. Off. § 858; People v. Hall and Daily Register Printing & Pub. Co. v. New York, supra.

Messrs. Fred S. Jackson, Attorney General, John Marshall, and Charles D. Shukers, for defendant:

The legislature cannot, directly or indirectly, increase the salary of the judges of the district court during the term of office of such judges; nor can it cast other and additional burdens upon them, and provide additional compensation therefor.

State ex rel. Goodin v. Thoman, 10 Kan. 191; State ex rel. Little v. Wentworth, 55 Kan. 303, 40 Pac. 648; Peters v. State Canvassers, 17 Kan. 365; Wilson v. Clark, 63 Kan. 510, 65 Pac. 705; Smith v. Holt, 24 Kan. 772; Abry v. Gray, 68 Kan. 150, 48 Pac. 577.

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff was judge of the district court of Wyandotte county for the four-year term ending in January, 1909. When he entered upon the term his salary was fixed by law at $3,000 per annum. Afterward the legislature imposed upon the judge of the district court for that county the duty of preparing and revising lists of qualified jurors, and of drawing therefrom the names of persons to serve on juries, and authorized him to appoint a jury clerk to assist him in the performance of such duty. Laws 1907, chap. 232, p. 374. The same act increased the salary of the office to $3,500 per annum. The plaintiff performed the additional service required of him for the remainder of his term; but the defendant, the state auditor, refused to audit vouchers for the increase in compensation and to issue warrants on the treasurer in payment therefor. The plaintiff asks for a writ of mandamus to compel him to do so.

Section 13, art. 3, of the Constitution, reads as follows: "The justices of the supreme court and judges of the district court shall, at stated times, receive for their services such compensation as may be provided by law, which shall not be increased during their respective terms of office; provided, such compensation shall not be less than $1,500 to each justice or judge each year; and such justices or judges shall receive no fees or perquisites nor hold any other office of profit or trust under the authority of the state or the United States during the term of office for which such justices and judges shall be elected, nor practise law in any of the courts in the state during their continuance in office." The plaintiff argues that the statute did not create another office, as that of jury commissioner, and make him the incumbent, but that it merely imposed upon him as judge certain additional duties in aid of the discharge of his judicial duties; and it is said that this could be done because the new duties have an ultimate judicial purpose, are incidental to the exercise of judicial power, and are closely connected with and are germane to the judicial function. Excellent authorities are cited for these propositions.

In passing upon a statute conferring upon justices of the appellate division of the supreme court the power to appoint special jury commissioners, the New York court of appeals said: "The Constitution of 1846 provided that judges of the court of appeals and justices of the supreme court should not 'exercise any power of appointment to public office;' but this provision was omitted in the revision of the judiciary article in 1870, and it does not appear in our present revised Constitution. Const. 1846, art. 6, § 8; Rev. Const. art. 6. The omission of the express prohibition excludes one by implication; but, while a justice of the supreme court is no longer prohibited absolutely from appointing to public office, a limitation is placed upon his powers in this regard by the provision that 'he shall not hold any other office or public trust.' Article 6, § 10. The power to appoint a special jury commissioner is a public trust, because it is intrusted to public officers, to be exercised in behalf of the public, by clothing a private citizen with the powers and duties of public office. Unless, therefore, it has some reasonable connection with a judicial purpose, it is not a part of a judicial office, and cannot be imposed upon a justice of the supreme court. Re Davies, 168 N. Y. 89, 56 L.R.A. 855, 61 N. E. 118. What, however, is more germane to the judicial function than the selection of proper jurors to aid in the administration of justice? The right of the jury to decide all issues of fact presented to the court at which they attend makes their selection a judicial purpose of the highest importance. It is an invaluable aid to the discharge of judicial duties, and hence may be attached by the legislature to the judicial office, as incidental to the exercise of the usual powers of that office. The appointment of a jury commissioner rests on the same principle as that of stenographers, judges' clerks, and the like. The appointment of such officers is authorized because the discharge of their duties aids the judges in the performance of their judicial functions, and so the appointment of a special jury commissioner to select jurors aids the judges in transacting the usual business of their courts." People v. Hall, 169 N. Y. 184, 62 N. E. 170.

In the case of Daily Register Printing & Pub. Co. v. New York, 52 Hun, 542, 6 N.

Y. Supp. 10, the opinion reads: "There is nothing in the point as to the prohibition of justices of the supreme court from holding other offices or public trusts. The duty imposed upon the presiding justice, of designating (with others) a law journal in which the calendars of the courts should be published, is nothing more than an additional duty attached to the judicial office. Having made that designation, certain other incidents follow under the act, such as the requirement with respect to legal notices generally; but the designation of the journal is, primarily, for the thorough dissemination of the court calendars. This is important in securing preparation for trial and prompt attendance upon the call of the calendars. It would certainly be a very narrow and strained construction of the Constitution to hold that a duty having such results for its object was foreign to the judicial office. The illustrations of similar duties imposed upon the presiding justice and his associates by other laws, furnished by Mr. Justice Patterson in his opinion at special term, suffice to show a general legislative intent not to confine the judicial duty to the bare hearing and decision of cases, but occasionally to impose upon the judges, in the line of their vocation, duties bearing upon the general administration of justice."

If the reasoning of these decisions be unsound, the plaintiff cannot recover. If the duties of jury commissioner cannot be assigned to the judicial office, they belong to another office of trust, which the Constitution forbade the plaintiff to hold. For present purposes it will be assumed that the duties specified in the statute fall within the scope of the office of judge of the district court.

Having thus bound up the function of selecting and drawing jurors for the trial of causes with the function of adjudicating such causes, the plaintiff proceeds to sever the ligature so that he may receive an increase in pay, in the following manner: The function of jury commissioners is not judicial, but is administrative in its nature. It does not pertain to the office of district judge as such. The framers of the Constitution had in mind compensation for the services of a judge as such when acting in a judicial capacity only, and the constitutional provision quoted has no reference to extra pay for extra services of an administrative character like those required by the statute. "One class of services or duties belong to the office, and a compensation for such class cannot be increased during the term. Another class does not belong, but can be attached by the legislature to the office, and for which services compensation can be given during the term, if the purpose and result is to aid in the discharge of the usual judicial duties." If this be true, extra pay to a judge for appointing a special jury commissioner, as in People v. Hall, or for designating a paper for the publication of the court calendar, as in Daily Register Printing & Pub. Co. v. New York, or for numberless other things which he does to speed and prosper his usual and ordinary work of hearing and deciding causes, would not be compensation for services as judge in the sense of the Constitution. More than this, whenever a judge of the district court acts as jury commissioner pro tempore, and superintends the drawing of jurors to fill a depleted panel, or selects jurors for the term, and causes a venire to issue because jury lists have not been returned or the panel has been vitiated (Gen. Stat. 1905, §§ 3996, 4002), he steps outside the scope of his duties as judge, acts as an administrative officer, and may be given extra pay for the work without receiving an increase in compensation contrary to the Constitution. Some authorities are cited to sustain this novel position; but they seem to the court to fall short of doing so.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the case of Love v. Baehr, 47 Cal. 364, the legislature imposed upon the attorney general the duty of acting with a board of examiners to approve or reject claims against the state, examine the books of the comptroller and treasurer, count the money in the treasury, and invest school funds, giving him a salary of $1,500 per annum as a member of the board. It was held that such services were foreign to and outside the scope of the office of attorney general, could be declined without a breach of duty as attorney general, and hence that no constitutional impediment existed precluding a person in office when the act was passed from taking compensation for them. The court said: "From the earliest period of our history as a nation, almost every state in the Union had a secretary of state, comptroller, treasurer, and attorney general; and the general nature of the duties pertaining to each was perfectly well known to the framers of our Constitution. It is clear beyond controversy that, in establishing similar offices here, the framers of that instrument had reference to the same general class of duties, which it was well known pertained to such offices elsewhere. The Constitution provides for the election of a superintendent of public instruction, whose duties are not defined, and might have provided for the election of a state geologist. Can it be claimed, with any show of reason, that the legislature could compel either of them to become ex officio warden of the state prison or superintendent of the state lunatic asylum? It is not usual in state Constitutions to define the particular duties of subordinate officers; that being the peculiar province of the legislature, which, it is to be presumed, will prescribe only such duties as in their nature have heretofore appertained to similar offices elsewhere. In the performance of this duty, the legislature may rightfully exercise a wide discretion. It may assign to each of these officers any duties which, by the most liberal interpretation, can be held to come within the general scope of that class of duties which have usually appertained to such offices, as they were understood by the framers of the Constitution. . . . Some of these services have not the slightest relation, even upon the most liberal construction, to the duties of an attorney general, as such duties were generally understood at the adoption of the state Constitution, and as they were doubtless understood by the framers of that instrument. The business of counting money in the treasury, examining books of account, requiring the skill of an expert accountant, rather than the professional learning of a lawyer, and the investment of public money in bonds, is wholly foreign to the duties of an attorney, and is no more cognate to them than the management of a state prison or lunatic asylum." Certainly, there is nothing here to comfort the plaintiff. The court distinguished the two offices as separate, independent, and unrelated, by looking at the duties commonly affixed to them as they exist in the governmental schemes of states having similar institutions; but the main theme was double salary, and with this in mind the court said the legislature may assign to an office any duty which, by the most liberal interpretation, falls within its scope. No light whatever is thrown upon the question whether the framers of our Constitution understood judicial services to include all the incidental things germane to and in aid of the function of hearing and deciding.

In San Luis Obispo County v. Felts, 104 Cal. 60, 37 Pac. 780, county assessors were entitled to receive 15 per cent of all amounts collected by them for poll taxes. Road overseers collected road poll taxes and received 15 per cent of the amount for their services. While Felts was in office the law was changed so that the county assessor collected road poll taxes, and it was held he had the right to retain the prescribed percentage of those also, although the gross receipts of his office were increased. The court said the rule was the same from first to last, a certain sum for a certain service,—compensation in proportion to duty,—and it made no difference that the field for rendering the service was enlarged. Compensation for services rendered, 15 per cent of whatever was collected, remained unchanged. If in this case the plaintiff's compensation had been $10 per day for time employed, which usually was twenty days in the month, and an act of the legislature had increased the work until it required twenty-five days of each month, his compensation would have remained unchanged. It still would have been a certain sum for a certain service ($10 for each and every day); but if the legislature had raised the rate to $15 per day, an increase in compensation for the same service would appear.

In the case of Roulo v. Board of Auditors, 74 Mich. 129, 41 N. W. 879, an act of the legislature required registers of deeds to report mortgages to assessing officers and to registers of deeds of other counties for purposes of taxation, and gave them compensation for the work. The court said: "The legislature, by the act of 1887, imposed a new duty upon the register,—one that never belonged to his office before, and one which was not contemplated, and could not have been, when his salary was fixed by the auditors under the law of 1879. The act imposing this new duty, which he must perform under a penalty, imposed also a great responsibility upon him. For the performance of this duty, and the responsibility necessarily attending it, the legislature saw fit to give him an additional compensation over and above that heretofore received in the performance of the ordinary duties of his office. Our previous decisions are to the effect that he is entitled to it." In effect this act simply created a new office to carry out the provisions of the new tax law, and made the register of deed the incumbent. The duties were separate from and independent of those of a register of deeds; but, since the two positions were not incompatible, the register could hold both and receive pay for both.

The case of Bruce v. Dickey, 116 Ill. 527, 6 N. E. 435, distinguishes itself. The question was whether a judge could engage in the private practice of law for fees. The opinion reads: "The words that 'no judge of the supreme or circuit court shall receive any other compensation, perquisite, or benefit, in any form whatsoever,' are not depended upon for the alleged inhibition, as manifestly they should not be; but it is the last clause, 'nor perform any other judicial duties to which may belong any emoluments,' which is relied upon as containing the prohibition. These words naturally refer to of ficial services, or to services required by law to be done, and not to work done by employment under a private contract. It is the performance of duties which is prohibited,—a term which is suggestive of office. It is duties to which belong emoluments

The word 'emoluments' is peculiarly appropriate to office, denoting, in its most ordinary signification, the profit 'which is annexed to the possession of office, as salary, fees, and perquisites.' And it is emoluments which belong to the performance of duties:—the word 'belong' implying fixed, prescribed by some regulation, as are the emoluments attached to office, and not something contracted to be paid by agreement between private parties. This analysis of the language of this clause shows its fitness as prohibiting the performance of any official duties, or duties imposed by law, to which any emoluments are attached, and that it is quite inappropriate language in which to couch a prohibition to conduct a lawsuit, or to perform any other work than judicial duties, under a private contract for a compensation to be paid. Had it been the intention to prohibit judges from doing any other work for pay, it could easily have been so said in plain terms, and we cannot conceive that the cumbersome and inapt phraseology in question would have been used to express that purpose."

In the case of United States v. King, 147 U. S. 676, 37 L. ed. 328, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 439, it was said that the ordinary rule, in the absence of legislation, is that, if a statute increase the duties of an officer by the addition of other duties germane to his office, he must perform them without extra compensation. Seizing upon the words "in the absence of legislation," the plaintiff argues that, if there is legislation giving him extra pay, he may recover it. That, of course, depends upon whether some paramount law stands in the way.

Some cases are cited to the effect that, if the compensation of an officer be not fixed at the beginning of his term, it may be fixed during the term, which doubtless is true, but unimportant here.

In Missouri the Constitution provides that judges of the supreme, appellate, and circuit courts and all other courts of record receiving a salary shall, at stated times, receive such compensation for their services as is or may be prescribed by law; but it shall not be increased or diminished during the period for which they are elected. A statute of that state enacted in 1895 requires a deposit of $10 to accompany an application for a change of venue, which, if the change be granted, goes to the judge of the circuit to which the case is transferred for trial. In the case of Cunningham v. Current River R. Co. 165 Mo. 270, 65 S. W. 556, an order granting a change of venue was set aside for noncompliance with this statute, the case was tried in the initial court, and judgment was rendered against the party who sought the change and who refused to appear at the trial. On appeal he contended that the statute is unconstitutional. In reviewing the record the supreme court of Missouri said: "The $10 whose payment is required to be made on the presentation of an application for a change of venue from the circuit where the cause is at the time pending is not intended and is in fact in no sense an increase in the salary of the judge to whom it is to be paid, but compensation for extra labor imposed upon him by the person on whose application the venue is changed, by reason of the cause being sent to him from another circuit. The compensation mentioned in the Constitution means compensation paid by the state, or some subdivision thereof, in the way of an increase of salary or compensation, which cannot be increased by legislation during the period for which the judge is elected, but does not mean that he may not be paid for extra services and expenses incurred in the performance thereof, even out of the state treasury." The plaintiff says this case decides that, during his term of office, a judge who receives a salary as compensation for the service performed and labor devoted to the trial of cases in his circuit can be granted extra pay for the labor of trying cases coming to his circuit on change of venue, without increasing his compensation in the sense of the constitutional provision recited. If that be the decision, it is anomalous, and this court declines to follow it.

The case of Miami County v. Collins, 47 Kan. 417, 28 Pac. 175, is cited, in which this court said: "If the legislature has the power to add to the duties of the office, it follows that it has power to provide for compensation for the performance of the additional duties; the constitutional provision only fixing compensation for the class of duties therein enumerated." The court here referred to the duty of issuing liquor permits, cast upon the person holding the office of probate judge. The words "add to the duties of the office" were not used as the plaintiff interprets them. No addition had been made to the duties of the office of judge of the probate court. As shown in Intoxicating-Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 751, 37 Am. Rep. 284, the person holding that office was virtually invested with the separate and independent office of commissioner of licenses. The Constitution does not prohibit the probate judge from holding other offices of trust and profit, and he could therefore accept the new office and its emoluments.

In the case of Burroughs v. Norton County, 29 Kan. 196, the court merely held that the term "such services," used in a statute fixing the compensation of county commissioners, referred to services at meetings particularly specified in the context, and that remuneration for services in attending other meetings held for other and different purposes was not forbidden.

Such are the authorities which the plaintiff has selected from the wilderness of precedent to support his claim, and they are unpersuasive. A brief independent search has revealed none better adapted to serve the plaintiff's purpose, and the court is inclined to regard the distinction between duties which "belong" to an office and duties which may be "attached" to it as artificial and unsubstantial. The duties of an office include all those that fairly lie within its scope; not merely those which are necessarily involved in the accomplishment of the main purpose of the office, but those also which, although incidental and collateral, naturally and properly serve to promote and benefit the performance of the principal duties. Constitutions and statutes seldom define with precision the scope of any office. The place it usually occupies in political systems of like character is some guide. The common law is relied upon to supply many incidents, and others are left to inclusion by necessary implication. In time the need becomes apparent for further or better definition, and it is said new duties are added, or "attached," germane to those already in existence. In reality the true scope of the office already included such duties. All that is accomplished is to make active that which before was latent. If the office do not potentially embrace the duty, the duty appertains to another office. Before any duty can be classified as falling within the scope of an office, it must belong there, and nothing can be added or attached to an office that does not belong there. Whatever the standard of classification—in aid of the usual functions, incidental, collateral, appertaining, or germane to or connected with the principal duties, in line with the main purpose, or other test—when tested the duty belongs to the office, is official, and the incumbent must perform it, or it does not belong to the office, is unofficial, cannot lawfully be attached to the office, and need not be performed if an attempt to attach it to the office be made. If, however, the distinction which the plaintiff makes were sound generally, it cannot be allowed in this case. All the statute did was to authorize the plaintiff to exercise directly a power which already inhered in the court over which he presided, but which ordinarily is exercised mediately. The Constitution of this state guarantees the right of trial by jury; and every court charged with the duty of trying jury causes possesses, by virtue of its very establishment as such court, the power to provide itself with a jury, in order that it may accomplish the purpose for which it was created. This power is not merely "attached" to the court as something extra to its ordinary functions, but it "belongs" to the court in the most vital and integral sense. The New York court was correct in saying, in People v. Hall, that the right of the jury to decide all issues of fact presented to the court makes their selection a judicial purpose of the highest importance; but its grasp of the fundamental principle somewhat relaxed when it made the selection of jurors merely an aid and incident to the exercise of the usual powers of the judicial office. That function is one of the powers of the judicial office, cognate with that of hearing and deciding, an essential element of the sovereign power reposed in the court, to be exercised precisely as all its authority is manifested.

For many years the Congress of the United States made no provision for summoning grand juries or defining their powers, yet they were regularly summoned and regularly acted. In the case of United States v. Hill, 1 Brock. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 15,364, Chief Justice Marshall, sitting as circuit justice, justified this display of judicial authority as follows: "It has been justly observed that no act of Congress directs grand juries, or defines their powers. By what authority, then, are they summoned, and whence do they derive their powers? The answer is that the laws of the United States have erected courts which are invested with criminal jurisdiction. This jurisdiction they are bound to exercise, and it can only be exercised through the instrumentality of grand juries. They are therefore given by a necessary and indispensable implication. But how far is this implication necessary and indispensable? The answer is obvious. Its necessity is coextensive with that jurisdiction to which it is essential." Whenever the statutory measures for obtaining petit jurors have failed or have been exhausted, the court itself issues an open venire and brings in a jury as a measure indispensable to the exercise of its jurisdiction. Clawson v. United States, 114 U. S. 477, 29 L. ed. 179, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949, and cases cited in the opinion; 12 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 274; 24 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 230. And if every law on the statute books relating to the selecting and summoning of jurors was repealed, the courts would go on selecting and summoning them without any interruption of the administration of justice. The twelve jurors who are finally sworn to try the cause are in fact selected for the purpose by the court as a court, and the assembling of a larger number from which to choose is merely an earlier stage of the same process. At common law, when the issues were made up the judicial precept, venire facias, issued to bring in a jury. The selection and the summons were made at the same time. If the sheriff and the coroner were both disqualified, the court itself appointed elisors to make the selection (3 Bl. Com. 354); and here may be found the common-law prototype of the judicial power to appoint jury commissioners; but the decisions identify this power with that of the court to select the jury.

In the case of State v. Mounts, 36 W. Va. 179, 15 L.R.A. 243, 14 S. E. 407, the question was whether the appointment of jury commissioners by judicial officers contravened the Constitution, which forbade the legislature to confer upon any court or judge the power of appointment to office. The opinion reads: "The question here presented is whether the jury commissioners created by the act now under consideration are officers of the state, or whether they are in fact, like jurors themselves, mere officers of the court, such as commissioners in chancery, and, in a general sense, attorneys. We think there can be no doubt that such commissioners belong to the latter class and go to make up a part of the judicial machinery, such as commissioners in chancery, general and special receivers, and other similar officers. Jurors are themselves, in a certain sense, officers of the court; and this special commission is only a legislative device intended to aid the court in selecting them." In the case of State v. Kendle, 52 Ohio St. 346, 39 N. E. 947, it is said: "So as to these jury commissioners; they are appointed by the common pleas judges to assist in the administration of justice, as are master commissioners and court constables. They are but handmaids of the court in the selection of judicious and discreet persons to serve on such juries as are required in the trial of causes and the presentment of indictments. . . . It is not doubted but that the judges might be authorized to select the jurors to be returned in all cases, as they are in some. As, then, the duty might properly be performed by the court, no good reason is perceived why the court may not be authorized to appoint suitable persons to assist it in performing the duty, as is done in many similar cases." True, the legislature usually intervenes, as it may rightfully do, and provides machinery for supplying the court with jurors. Sometimes the judges themselves are made members of the body designated to select jurors. See Com. v. Manfredi, 162 Pa. 144, 29 Atl. 404; State v. Squaires, 2 Nev. 226. Frequently it is left to the judges to make the selection personally when other measures are inadequate or fail, as indicated in State v. Kendle, and as they do in this state; but whatever regulations the legislature may make, and whatever aids the legislature may furnish, the selecting of persons from the inhabitants of the proper territory to sit as jurors for the trial of issues of fact in court forms a department of the business of the court, co-ordinate with that of hearing and deciding, and consequently cannot be classified as "administrative" in origin, purpose, or character, in the true sense in which that term is employed in constitutional law.

After his term had commenced, the plaintiff was called upon to exercise a power which already inhered in his office. Could he receive extra compensation for the service? When a public official takes office, he does so understanding that every dormant duty lying within the scope of his office may be awakened to full vigor at some time within his term. Should that which is always within the range of possibility occur, he must perform the service required without additional compensation, unless the legislature has the power and sees fit to allow him extra pay. The law is so understood by all the courts and text writers, and was so established before the convention met which framed the Constitution of Kansas.

In the case of People ex rel. Phoenix v. New York, 1 Hill, 362, decided in 1841, the opinion reads: "But should it be conceded that the statute imposed a new and onerous duty upon the district attorney, it does not follow that he is entitled to any additional compensation on that account. By charging the attorney with the duty of suing for fines, without making provision for the payment of costs, the legislature has in effect declared that the salary of the officer is to be deemed the compensation for these as well as for other services. It is impossible for a salaried officer to make title to an increased compensation, on the sole ground that a new duty has been cast upon him by the legislature. There are few state officers, whether executive or judicial, who have not often been charged with new duties, and yet no one has, I presume, ever thought that this gave him a legal title to increased compensation."

In the case of Andrews v. United States, 2 Story, 202, Fed. Cas. No. 381, decided by Mr. Justice Story in 1842, while on circuit duty, it is said: "But where duties are required to be performed by a collector or other public officer, strictly official, and falling within the ordinary range thereof, there, although they may be conferred by laws subsequently passed, after he came into office, or may be cumulative upon the original duties of the officer, he must be deemed to take and hold the office cum onere."

In the case of Evans v. Trenton, 24 N. J. L. 764, decided in 1853, it is said: "It is a well-settled rule that a person accepting a public office with a fixed salary is bound to perform the duties of the office for the salary. He cannot legally claim additional compensation for the discharge of these duties, even though the salary may be a very inadequate remuneration for the services. Nor does it alter the case that by subsequent statutes or ordinances his duties are increased, and not his salary. His undertaking is to perform the duties of his office, whatever they may be, from time to time during his continuance in office for the compensation stipulated, whether these duties are diminished or increased. Whenever he considers the compensation inadequate, he is at liberty to resign. . . . This rule is of importance to the public. The successful effort to obtain office is not unfrequently speedily followed by efforts to increase its emoluments, while the incessant changes which the progressive spirit of the times is introducing effects, almost every year, changes in the character and additions to the amount of duty in almost every official station; and to allow these changes and additions to lay the foundation of claims for extra services would soon introduce intolerable mischief. The rule, too, should be very rigidly enforced. The statutes of the legislature and the ordinances of our municipal corporations seldom prescribe with much detail and particularity the duties annexed to public offices, and it requires but little ingenuity to run nice distinctions between what duties may and what may not be considered strictly official; and if these distinctions are much favored by courts of justice, it may lead to great abuse."

In order to preclude all possibility of mischief of this character, the framers of the Kansas Constitution provided that the compensation of justices of the supreme court and of judges of the district courts should not be increased during their respective terms of office, prohibited the granting to them of fees and perquisites outside of or additional to salary, and forbade them to hold any other office of profit or trust under the state or under the United States. Beyond this, they were forbidden to practise their profession in any of the courts of the state during their continuance in office, so that, so far as remuneration for services beyond salary is concerned, there is written above the portal of the judicial office in Kansas the inscription which Dante read at the top of the gate of hell: "Leave every hope, ye who enter!"

In the case of Hall v. Hamilton, 74 Ill. 437, the legislature had empowered circuit judges to interchange with each other and to hold branch courts in other circuits, and had provided a compensation of $10 per 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

day for the service, additional to the salary received,—a clear case of extra pay for extra labor performed by judges in disposing of business not belonging to their circuits. The opinion reads: "The 16th section of the judiciary article of our Constitution is this: 'From and after the adoption of this Constitution, judges of the circuit courts shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum, payable quarterly, until otherwise provided by law. And after their salaries shall be fixed by law they shall not be increased or diminished during the terms for which said judges shall be respectively elected; and from and after the adoption of this Constitution no judge of the supreme or circuit courts shall receive any other compensation, perquisite, or benefit, in any form whatsoever, nor perform any other than judicial duties, to which may belong any emoluments.' This language is as full, clear, and comprehensive as could be well conceived to prevent supreme and circuit judges from receiving any other compensation than their salaries, under any name or pretense whatever, for the discharge of any duty pertaining to their offices; and it is prohibitory on the judges from receiving the compensation for the performance of such duties except their salary. It also prohibits the General Assembly from providing any other." See also Bailey v. Kelly, 70 Kan. 869, 79 Pac. 735.

The statute of 1907 is constitutional, and obliged the plaintiff to render the services indicated; but the provision for an increased salary did not apply to him, because the statute took effect while he was serving an unexpired term.

The writ is denied.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

B. F. PATTON, Exr., etc., of Sophia Patton, Deceased, et al., Appts.,
v.

T. J. SMITH.

(— Ky. —, 114 S. W. 315.)

Husband and wife—husband's earnings—liability for debts.

1. Land purchased with money produced by a man's industry and good management

Case Note.—Right of husband's creditors to reach fruits of his management of, or services in connection with, wife's separate estate or business.

The earlier cases upon this subject will be found collected in the note appended to of a farm belonging to his wife is subject to his debts, although the title to it is taken in her name.

Surety — subrogation — amount of execution.

2. A surety who has satisfied a judgment against his principal may issue execution for the amount so paid, with interest, and is not limited to the amount specified in the judgment, under a statute giving a surety who satisfies a judgment against his principal the right to control the judgment so far as to obtain satisfaction for the whole amount paid by him, with interest.

Limitation of action — assigned judgment.

3. The rights of a surety who secures an assignment of a judgment which he satisfies for his principal are governed by the sections of the statute of limitations applying to judgments, and not by that relating to implied promises to pay.

(December 11, 1908.)

the case of Mayers v. Kaiser, 21 L.R.A. 629, this note being merely supplemental thereto.

This note is expressly confined to cases where a married woman's property, or a business conducted in her own name, is managed by her husband so that his labor and skill result in an increment thereof.

Cases where a wife's money is used by her husband in a business carried on in his own name, as well as where he uses his own money or property in the business of his wife, although carried on in her name, are excluded herefrom.

As herein shown, the preponderance of authority is against PATTON v. SMITH.

Profits accruing from corporate stock owned by a married woman, as well as property purchased therewith, are not rendered liable for her husband's debts by reason of the fact that such profits result from his successful management of the corporate business. First Natchez Bank v. Moss, 52 La. Ann. 1524, 28 So. 133; Taylor v. Wands, 55 N. J. Eq. 491, 62 Am. St. Rep. 818, 37 Atl. 315; First Nat. Bank v. Rice, 22 Ohio C. C. 183; Magerstadt v. Schaefer, 213 Ill. 351, 72 N. E. 1063, affirming 110 Ill. App. 166.

The creditors of a married man, having no legal right to require that he devote his personal services to the extinguishment of their claims, cannot object because his time, labor, business skill, and sagacity in the management of his wife's separate estate result in an increase thereof. Lister v. Vowell, 122 Ala. 264, 25 So. 564; Martin v. Banks, 89 Ark. 77, 115 S. W. 928; Shircliffe v. Casebeer, 122 Iowa, 618, 98 N. W. 486; Deere, W. & Co. v. Bonne, 108 Iowa, 281, 75 Am. St. Rep. 254, 79 N. W. 59; Hibbard v. Heckart, 88 Mo. App. 544; Young v. Hurst (Tenn. Ch. App.) 48 S. W. 355; Martin v. Davis, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 59.

And the foregoing doctrine is not affected by the fact that the husband is insolvent. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Garrard County in plaintiff's favor in a proceeding to subject to the payment of a debt of B. F. Patton land the title to which was in his wife. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Lewis L. Walker for appellants.

Messrs. Smith & Smith and R. H. Tomlinson for appellee.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this action the appellee, Smith, sought to subject to the payment of a judgment in his favor appellant B. F. Patton's land, the title to which was in the wife of appellant. The lower court granted the relief sought, and this judgment we are asked on this appeal to reverse.

There is no serious dispute as to the facts. In 1892 appellant and his wife pur-Shircliffe v. Casebeer; Deere, W. & Co. v. Bonne; and Hibbard v. Heckart,—supra.

Likewise, in order that this doctrine may be applied, it is unnecessary that the husband should receive compensation for his services. Lister v. Vowell and Deere, W. & Co. v. Bonne, supra.

The court said in Shircliffe v. Casebeer, supra, that it might be conceded as a proposition of morals, that under ordinary circumstances a debtor is bound to devote his labor to the satisfaction of the just demands of his creditors; yet there is no law which can compel such action on his part, and, as far as creditors are concerned, he need not labor at all, or may give his labor to strangers without compensation. Nay, more, he may do all this with the express purpose not to accumulate anything which may be subject to seizure by his creditors, and there will be no fraud in law or in fact, for he has neither withheld, concealed, nor disposed of anything on which they have any claim at law or in equity. But this rule is not to be construed as an abandonment or departure from the well-established rule that these transactions between an insolvent husband and his wife will be closely scrutinized when questioned by his creditors, and, if it is found that she holds the title to property as a mere trust for the use of the husband, or as a mere device by which it may be placed beyond the reach of process, equity will decree its subjection to their claims.

And it was said, in Deere, W. & Co. v. Bonne, supra, that, whatever the obligation of the husband to work for the benefit of his creditors, there is no rule in law or equity preventing him from voluntarily or gratuitously devoting his labor and skill to the business of his wife; and there is no magic in the husband's touch by which he may acquire an interest in her separate property from his mere supervision or labor; and if he is entitled to anything, it must be compensation, owing to an express agreement, personalty and real estate, it would leave a balance of $17,800, which amount represents the value of the industry, energy, and skill of Mr. Patton during these years. He testified that his indebtedness at the time he gave his deposition was in round numbers $7,550. This, subtracted from the $17,800, would leave a balance of say $10,000. One thousand two hundred dollars of this indebtedness represents the balance of the purchase price due on the McGrath land; the remainder being incurred for borrowed money and other purposes. In estimating the profit made on the original purchase, counsel for appellant insists that the reasonable rental of the land purchased by Mrs. Patton should be taken into consideration, and that this rent ought to be deducted from the difference between the value of the estate at the time of the purchase of the Robinson tract and the value of the real and personal estate now, upon the ground that the wife was entitled to the reasonable rent of her land, free from coercive subjection for the payment of her husband's debts.

not be liable for his debts, although the courts do not say what will, in such a case, actually constitute fraud. In none of them is it said that the mere management of a married woman's property, notwithstanding the increment thereof is due to the husband's skill and labor, will constitute fraud as against his creditors.

In Catlett v. Alsop, supra, the court said that the fact that the wife had neither experience in the business nor a separate estate when she embarked therein was a circumstance to be considered in determining the question of fraud, but that it alone was not sufficient to establish that the agreement between her and her husband was colorable merely, or that the business really belonged to the husband, and that it was merely a fraudulent device resorted to, to defeat the rights of his creditors.

So, the court, in Young v. Hurst (Tenn. Ch. App.) 48 S. W. 355, citing Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Gratt. 503, 94 Am. Dec. 478 and Glidden v. Taylor, 16 Ohio St. 509, 91 Am. Dec. 98, which hold that large profits accruing from an insolvent married man's management of a business carried on in his wife's name with her separate estate over and above what will compensate her for what she has invested therein, are subject to his creditors, said: "Courts, however, will not allow the husband and wife to use this right to cloak fraud against creditors; and courts, where property traceable to the skill and labor of the husband is found to exist, will make a just apportionment between the wife and her husband's creditors." To the same effect see also Trapnell v. Conklyn and Bogges v. Richards, infra.

As it is the duty of a married man to devote his skill and energy to the support of his family, and as all his creditors can reasonably expect is that his earnings beyond what is sufficient for that purpose should be applied in satisfaction of his debts, where the services rendered by him in the management of his wife's business are more than sufficient for the support and maintenance of himself and family, a court of equity will consider the excess as a debt due him from his wife, and justly apportion it between her and her husband's creditors. Catlett v. Alsop, supra; Bogges v. Richards, 39 W. Va. 567, 26 L.R.A. 537, 45 Am. St. Rep. 938, 20 S. E. 599; Trapnell v. Conklyn, 37 W. Va. 242, 38 Am. St. Rep. 30, 16 S. E. 570.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in the absence of an express agreement between husband and wife as to his compensation, the law will imply that he was to receive a reasonable amount therefor. Catlett v. Alsop, supra.

Several Kentucky cases upon this subject will be found sufficiently set out in the opinion to PATTON v. SMITH.

It was held in Pease v. Barkowsky, 67 Ill. App. 274, that the capital and income from a business carried on by a married man in his wife's name with her funds, when due to his labor and skill, will be liable for his debts. The court said that, as a man's labor and skill in any trade or branch of business is valuable capital, it is as unlawful for him to appropriate the results thereof to the exclusive use of his wife as her separate property as it would be to thus appropriate his money to the detriment of his creditors, and that if the wife furnishes the original capital, and through the husband's labor and skill it is largely increased, the addition is not her property, but the proceeds of the husband's labor and skill, which the creditors have a right to claim, and if it is so interwoven with the capital of the wife as to render identification quite impossible she will lose her claim to the capital and the transaction may be regarded, as far as the creditors are concerned, as a loan by her to her husband, by means of which he engages in trade.

And to the same effect, see also Murphy v. Nilles, 166 Ill. 99, 46 N. E. 772, affirming 62 Ill. App. 193.

While a married woman may make her husband her agent for the management of her property, and he may perform ordinary and reasonable services for her without compensation, without subjecting her property to the claims of his creditors, yet she cannot, under the guise of such agency, appropriate to herself the results of the time, labor, and skill of her husband to the exclusion of his creditors. Torrey v. Dickinson, 213 Ill. 36, 72 N. E. 703.

Where a husband as his wife's agent, carries on a business with her property for her benefit, it will be liable for his debts, unless she has filed the certificate required by statute where a married woman carries on a business on her separate account, in order that she may secure her property from her husband's creditors. Desmond v. Young, 173 Mass. 90, 53 N. E. 151.

Upon this state of facts the legal question arises, should this McGrath land, and so much of the Robinson tract as may be necessary, be subjected to appellee's debt? At the prevailing prices the McGrath land will sell for more than enough to satisfy this debt, after first paying the vendor's lien upon it of $1,200, and the judgment directs that this land be first sold. It is argued that the money with which she paid the purchase price of the land, except $7,000, and the amount yet unpaid, was the reasonable and usual profit derived from the money the wife invested in the land. It is very clear that, as the land of the wife cannot be subjected to the payment of the husband's debts, unless it has been set apart for that purpose in the manner provided in the statute, neither can the rent received by her from the land be subjected by his creditors. But that question does not present itself in this case. There is no attempt here made to subject either the land bought by the wife or the rent of the same. The right of recovery is rested upon the ground that the property sought to be subjected was accumulated solely by the industry, energy, and skill of her husband; and, this being so, it is subject to his debts. As there can be no doubt, from an examination of this record, that much more property in value than is necessary to satisfy the appellee's debt was on hand when the judgment was rendered, and that it represented and was produced by the industry and good management of Mr. Patton, we see no escape from the conclusion that the judgment of the lower court was correct. There is no substantial difference between the facts of this case and those in Blackburn v. Thompson, W. & Co.'s 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1723, 58 L.R.A. 938, 66 S. W. 5. There the attempt was made to subject to the husband's debts a house and lot conveyed to the wife, upon the ground that it was purchased and paid for by the husband, and the title taken to the wife with the fraudulent purpose of cheating his creditors. The evidence disclosed that Blackburn, the husband, was an admirable business man, that he had entire charge of the business, and that the property purchased was paid for out of profits of the business, although it was conducted in the name of his wife. The court, in an opinion holding that the property was liable for the debts of the husband, said: "It was held in Gross v. Eddinger, 85 Ky. 168, 3 S. W. 1, where the facts were very similar to those in the case at bar, that the husband's creditors were entitled to subject to the payment of their debt a lot purchased with the profits of a business conducted by the husband as agent for the wife, the title to which was in the wife. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And in Brooks Waterfield Co. v. Friasbie, 99 Ky. 131, 59 Am. St. Rep. 452, 35 S. W. 106, it was held that the creditors of an insolvent husband were entitled to subject to the payment of their debts the increase in the value of the wife's property, which was chiefly due to the skill, energy, and labor of the husband. In Moran v. Moran, 12 Bush, 303, it was held that the creditors of an insolvent husband were entitled to subject all that he might be able to earn, in excess of what was necessary for the reasonable support of himself and family, to the payment of their debts, notwithstanding the fact that it had been invested in property in the wife's name. And the same ruling was followed in Edelmuth v. Wybrant, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 931, 53 S. W. 528." This case, and those cited in the quotation from it, are conclusive of the correctness of the judgment here appealed from.

It is also argued that the judgment is erroneous because the execution returned "no property found," and which was the basis of this action, did not follow the judgment. The facts are these: On March 28, 1892, Barnett procured a judgment against appellant Patton and the appellee, Smith, who was his surety, for $1,200, with 6 per cent interest from the 1st day of April, 1887, until paid; and on the 1st day of March, 1893, appellee, as his surety in said judgment, was obliged to and did satisfy the same by paying to the judgment creditor the sum of $1,421.06, which amount represented the judgment debt, less 13 per cent of it that was paid to the judgment creditor by the assignee of Patton between the date of the judgment and its payment by the surety. Thereupon, the judgment was assigned to the surety. When the surety came to have the execution that is the basis of this action issued upon this judgment, the execution specified as the amount to be collected under it the sum that he had paid, viz., $1,421.06, with interest from March 1, 1893. When the surety satisfied the judgment, Ky. Stat. 1903, § 4666, gave him the right to control the judgment for his own benefit, and to have execution issued thereon. It provides, in part, that "if the surety pays the whole or part of a judgment, he shall have a right to an assignment thereof from the plaintiff or the plaintiff's attorney, in whole or in part; and when the plaintiff has been fully satisfied, such assignment shall give him the right to sue out or use any existing execution, or otherwise control the judgment for his own benefit against the other defendants, so far as to obtain satisfaction from the principal for the whole amount so paid by the surety, with interest." It will be observed that the statute gives to the surety the right to so control the judgment as "to obtain satisfaction from the principal for the whole amount so paid by the surety, with interest;" the purpose of the statute being to afford full relief to the surety by enabling him to collect the whole amount paid, with interest thereon. If the surety could only issue an execution for the sum specified in the judgment, it might not afford him full satisfaction for what he had paid, and so he may have execution issued for the sum actually paid by him, with interest thereon from the date of payment. This case furnishes a good illustration of the necessity for permitting the surety to have execution issued for the amount paid by him, with interest, although in this particular the execution may not follow the judgment. If Smith could only have execution issued for the amount of the judgment, or $1,200, with interest from April 1, 1887, he could only collect that sum from Patton; but this would not fully reimburse him for what he had paid, as he would lose the interest on $221.06, the difference between the principle sum for which the judgment was rendered and the amount paid by him in satisfaction of it. So that there was no error in the execution.

The statute of limitations is also relied on in the answer, but this point is not pressed by counsel for appellant in his well-considered brief. If Smith had not obtained an assignment of the judgment, then his right of recovery against Patton would be upon an implied promise to pay, and be barred by the five-year statute of limitations; but, as he obtained an assignment of the judgment, he was substituted to all the rights of the judgment creditor, and the fifteen, and not the five, year statute applied. Joyce v. Joyce, 1 Bush, 474; Duke v. Pigman, 110 Ky. 766, 62 S. W. 867.

There being no error in the judgment, it must be affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY, by Revenue Agent, Appt.,

v.

ROBERT PEEBLES, Exr., etc., of J. G.
Peebles, Deceased.

SAME, Appt.,

v.

ROBERT PEEBLES, Exr., etc., of W. H.
Peebles, Deceased.

(— Ky. —, 119 S. W. 774.)

Tax — foreign stocks.

1. Stocks in a foreign corporation, owned by a foreign testator, are not taxable in the hands of a resident executor, who was appointed by the courts of testator's domicile, and has not qualified under the laws of his residence, nor physically removed the stocks to his domicile.

Same — statute.

2. A statute requiring an executor to list for taxation property belonging to the estate applies only to an executor who has qualified in the state, and has within it property in his custody which he is investing or using so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the state for purposes of taxation.

(May 28, 1909.)

APPPEALS by plaintiff from judgments of the Circuit Court for Boyd County in defendant's favor in actions to compel defendant, as executor of J. G. Peebles, deceased, and of W. H. Peebles, deceased, to assess and pay taxes on certain shares of stock belonging to the estates of such deceased persons. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John W. Woods and S. S. Willis for appellant.

Messrs. Hager & Stewart for appellee.

Carroll, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These two appeals, involving the same question of law, will be heard and disposed of together. They are proceedings by a revenue agent against the executor, to require him to assess and pay taxes on shares of stock owned by the testators, respectively, in the Bellfonte Iron Works Company and the Scioto Fire Brick Company, Ohio corporations. The testators died residents of Note. — An extensive search has failed to disclose any other case in which it can be confidently said that there was presented for adjudication the question whether or not a resident executor or administrator of a nonresident decedent, who qualified in the state in which his testator died, but not in the state of his own domicile, can be required to list property for taxation legally in his custody, but which he has never physically removed from the state in which his decedent died, nor invested in any manner in his own state.

Attention, however, should be called to Rand v. Pittsfield, 70 N. H. 530, 49 Atl. 88, in which it was held that the personal estate of a nonresident intestate, rightfully taxed in the state where it was situated, was not taxable in the state in which the administrator resided. The authority of this case, however, upon the question presented in COM. v. PEEBLES, is weakened by the fact that, while the statement of facts preceding the opinion shows that the administrator was appointed in the decedent's state, it fails to show whether or not he ever qualified in the state of his own residence.

the state of Ohio. At the time of their respective deaths they each owned stock in the before-mentioned corporations, which were located in the state of Ohio. The laws of Ohio permit a nonresident to qualify as executor, and Robert Peebles, who is now and was, when the testators died, a citizen and resident of Boyd county, Kentucky, qualified in the probate court of Scioto county, Ohio, as executor of the two estates. The decedents did not own any property or estate in Kentucky, nor did Robert Peebles qualify in the courts of this state as executor. All his power and authority to administer the estates comes from his appointment by the probate court of Ohio. It further appears that the executor has never brought to or invested in this state any part of the estate held by him as executor. The actual custody and physical situs of all the stocks held by him and sought to be assessed have always been in Ohio. As executor, he has never been required by the laws of Ohio to assess or pay taxes on these stocks, because the corporations pay the taxes. It will thus be seen that the only question involved in the case is whether or not a resident executor of a nonresident decedent, who qualified in the state in which his testator died, can be required to assess for taxation and pay taxes on stocks legally in his custody as executor, but which he has never physically removed from the state in which his testator died, and in which the corporations issuing the stock have their place of business, or invested in any manner in this state.

It is the contention of the commonwealth (1) that certificates of stock in corporations, like bonds and notes, are merely evidences of ownership of property,—muniments of title,—and what may be called intangible property, and the physical location of the paper evidence is immaterial as affecting the legal title to the property or its situs for purposes of taxation; (2) that the executor of an estate is the absolute legal owner thereof for the time being, and stands in the shoes of the decedent with reference to the personal property, tangible and intangible, succeeding to all his rights and responsibilities with reference thereto; (3) that the situs for taxation of intangible personal property is the domicile of the owner thereof, and hence, under the laws of this state, an executor residing in this state, and having the legal custody and control of intangible personal property, should assess it for taxation here while the estate is being administered and until distribution is made, regardless of where or how or by whom he was appointed, or the physical situs of the property. It is generally recognized that a certificate of stock in a corporation is merely the representative of property, and not the property itself, occupying very much the same status as promissory notes, bonds, or other choses in action. Thomp. Corp. § 2348. It may be further said that, generally speaking, the situs of personal property of this kind follows the owner. Where he is, it is. Where he is taxable, it is taxable. But to this rule there are important exceptions that will be noticed in the course of the opinion. It is also well settled that the personal representative of an estate is the legal owner, for the time being, of all the personal assets of the decedent, and succeeds to all his rights and responsibilities with reference thereto for purposes of assessment and taxation. Baldwin v. Shine, 84 Ky. 502, 2 S. W. 164; 1 Desty, Taxn. § 68. But it does not follow from this that the residence of the personal representative is, in all cases, deemed the situs of the personal estate in his hands for purposes of taxation. The residence of the personal representative or the person holding any fiducial relation with an estate may be at one place, and the situs of the property of the estate, for purposes of taxation, although legally in his custody, may be in another place. This principle is well illustrated in the cases referred to in Higgins v. Com. 126 Ky. 211, 103 S. W. 306, in which case the court said, supporting the proposition by a number of authorities, that “for many purposes the domicile of the owner is deemed the situs of his personal property, but this is only a fiction from motives of convenience, and is not of universal application, but yields to the actual situs of the property when justice requires that it should, and is not allowed to be a controlling feature in matters of taxation.” Especially is this true when it cannot be given any other situs in the state for revenue purposes. When intangible property having a situs within this state for purposes of taxation would escape taxation unless assessed at the residence of the fiduciary in whose legal custody it is, it has often been held that his residence fixes its situs. This rule was applied in Higgins v. Com. supra, because the estate had no other situs in this state except the residence of the trustee. It has also been ruled in many cases, both in and out of this state, that when money, choses in action, or other intangible personal property, is in the actual custody of an agent or fiduciary within this state, who manages and controls it, by lending it out, investing it, collecting interest, and the like, that it is subject to taxation at the place where the agent or fiduciary resides, although the beneficial owners may be nonresidents of the state. Com. v. R. G. Dun & Co. 126 Ky. 108, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 920. 102

S. W. 859; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 144, 44 L. ed. 706, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585; New Orleans v. Stempel, 175 U. S. 309, 44 L. ed. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; State Assessors v. Comptoir National d'Escompte, 191 U. S. 388, 48 L. ed. 232, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 47 L. ed. 439, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; Higgins v. Com. supra; Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. Board of Assessors, 112 Am. St. Rep. 275, and note (115 La. 564, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 637, 39 So. 601); Buck v. Miller, 147 Ind. 586, 37 L.R.A. 384, 62 Am. St. Rep. 436, 45 N. E. 647, 47 N. E. 8. The right to tax in this class of cases is rested upon the general principle that "persons are not permitted to avail themselves for their own benefit, of the laws of the state in the conduct of business within its limits, and then escape their due contribution to the public needs through action of this sort, whether taken for convenience or design." If the real and beneficial owner of property resides in this state, he is protected by our laws and has all the benefits and advantages enjoyed by our citizens, and so we demand that he must contribute his share towards defraying the expenses of the government whose protection he receives. In exacting this contribution, we do not stop to inquire where the evidences of the debts that he owns are located, or where his intangible property is situated. He is the owner of it; and, as it cannot well have a situs for taxation in this state at any other place than his residence, at that place it must be assessed for taxation. But our laws do not end at exacting this contribution from the real owner. They require all fiduciaries and agents qualified or appointed in this state, who have in their custody any estate that has come to them by virtue of their office, to list it, because it is also protected by our laws and should bear its share of the public burden.

In Baldwin v. Shine, 84 Ky. 502, 2 S. W. 164, strongly relied upon by counsel for appellant, a phase of the question under consideration was involved, but an examination of the case will show that it does not sustain the contention of counsel. It appears from the opinion that Robert B. Bowler died domiciled in Hamilton county, Ohio, the owner of a large estate in both that state and this. Administration was granted in the state of Ohio, and afterwards administration was also granted in this state. The Kentucky administrator, after his qualification in this state, had the estate appraised, and an inventory thereof filed in the court in this state in which he qualified, and continued for several years to act as administrator, finally settling his accounts in the Kenton county court in this state. In a 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) proceeding by a revenue agent to subject to taxation the estate in the hands of the Kentucky administrator during the years that it was in the custody of the administrator, and before its distribution by him, one of the defenses made was that the assets in his hands, being mere indebtedness, had no actual situs, and must be treated as constructively located with the owners at their domicile in Ohio, and hence were not subject to taxation in this state. In answer to this the court said:

"It is true that debts have no place independent of the domicile of the owner. While specific articles of personal property permanently located in this state, and belonging to nonresidents, may be listed as to the possessor, yet evidences of indebtedness have no actual situs here, and must be treated as located with the nonresident owner; but that case is not this one. The word 'owner' in the statute refers to the person in whom the title is vested, either absolute or qualified. Here the estate was taken in charge by the Kentucky administrator. The legal title was in him. The estate followed him, and was annexed to his person, thereby having an actual situs in this state, by the law of which it was protected. Moreover, it was under the charge of, and had to be distributed through, a court of this state. These facts clearly show that the second ground of complaint is untenable. That there is a marked difference between that case and the one at bar is manifest. It is evident from the opinion that the court was largely, if not altogether, influenced by the fact that the property sought to be taxed had an actual situs in this state, in the custody of the personal representative who lived in and was appointed by the courts of this state, and whose official residence was in this state. To the same effect is Bosker v. Security Trust & S. V. Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 181, 56 S. W. 524. In Com. v. Williams 102 Va. 778, 47 S. E. 867, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 434, also relied on by counsel, we find the following state of facts: Mrs. Williams, a citizen and resident of Amhurst county, Virginia, died in that county, and there her executor qualified. At the time of her death she owned a large personal estate, consisting, in the main, of stocks and bonds, a part of which were in a safety vault in the city of New York. After her death, these stocks and bonds were permitted by the executor to remain in New York. In considering the right of the state to require the executor to pay taxes on this property, the court said: "The property, real and personal, which had belonged to her, during her lifetime, continued to be the subject of taxation after her death. It passed under her will and therefore it comes within the terms of the statute. To the moment of the death of Mrs. Williams it was, as we have seen, properly taxable in Amhurst county. By her will, title to all her personalty passed to her executor. He was not in possession on the 1st of February, 1901, of the paper evidences of this New York personalty, nor was his testatrix in such possession at the moment of her death. That fact did not exempt it from taxation in this state during her lifetime. Why should it operate to shield it from taxation after her death, when, by her will, the title to this property passed to the executor?" And, citing in support of its conclusion a number of cases, it held that the estate was subject to taxation. To the same effect is Gallatin v. Alexander, 10 Lea, 475. But in these, as in the Baldwin Case, supra, the effort was made to tax the property at the residence of the personal representative in the state in which he qualified, and the court held that, for purposes of taxation, the situs of the intangible personal property was at the place of the executor's official residence.

Counsel for appellant have not cited us to, nor have we, after diligent search, found, any authority that would sustain the right to subject this property to taxation in this state. To hold it liable to taxation, it would be necessary to go far beyond the general principles that usually control in cases of this character. We would be obliged to say that, merely because an individual who happens to be the personal representative resides in this state, he must assess for taxation at the place of his residence the property held by him in an official capacity, although such property was never at any time in this state for any purpose. A tax like this could not be sustained upon the ground that the property taxed derived any protection from the laws of this state, because it does not, nor upon the ground that the personal representative, in his official capacity, receives any benefits or advantages under our laws, because he does not. Of course, the fact that the corporation pays the taxes on the property in another state does not affect the right or power of this state to require the owner, if he were living, to list the stocks for taxation in this state; and so, if the executor had qualified in this state and had what may be termed an official or executorial residence in this state, he would also be obliged to list them for taxation before they were distributed among the beneficiaries of the estate, as he would occupy the same relation to the property as the decedent did when living.

Nor do we attach controlling importance to the fact that the paper evidences of the stock sought to be assessed was at all times actually in a safety vault or in the custody of some person out of this state. The mere physical location of the stock is not the test of its liability for assessment. The adoption of this rule would often defeat the collection of taxes that were justly due, and put it in the power of fiduciaries and others to escape taxation upon intangible personal property by simply removing it from the state during the time that our laws require its assessment, or, for that matter, permanently, as it could, although in another state, be as well managed and controlled by the executor as if it were in a vault in this state. But the presence of these evidences of property might, in some instances, aid in fixing the place in this state at which they must be assessed if a question was made as to the place in this state at which the property should be subject to taxation. But, except in this particular, and as furnishing some evidence of the situs of the property in this state for taxation, it is not material whether the evidences of debt are in or out of the state. The real question in this case, and the one by which the right to tax must be tested, is: Did the property, by virtue of its legal ownership by the executor, have a situs for taxation in this state? If the executor had qualified in this state, and had thereby obtained an official residence in this state, or if the estate in his hands was invested in this state, we would not have any doubt about its liability for taxation. But here the attempt is to require the executor to pay taxes upon property that he holds by virtue of his appointment in another state, and when no part of the property legally in his custody is within the jurisdiction of this state. A person may occupy the two relations of individual and executor; and, as individual, be subject to the laws and jurisdiction of one state, and in his official capacity be subject to the laws and jurisdiction of another state. He might, as executor, have the legal ownership of property over which our courts would have no jurisdiction. As illustrating this view, attention may be called to Gallup v. Schmidt, 154 Ind. 196, 56 N. E. 443, in which the facts were these: Gallup died testate in Marion county, Indiana, the owner and in possession of a large personal estate in that county. His will was admitted to probate in the probate court, and a resident of the state of New Hampshire qualified in the Indiana court as executor. An effort was made by the fiscal authorities of Marion county to tax the estate of the decedent. In considering the case, the court said in part: "The official residence of the executor, so far as the taxation and administration of the assets in his possession were concerned, was in Marion county. As a trustee of the property, he had his creation by the Marion circuit court, and had no existence or authority outside of said county, except as he drew it from the court of his appointment. In contemplation of law, he is ever present and officially resident in the Marion circuit court during the pendency of his trust, and required, without notice, other than presentation, to answer to every sort of claim or demand within the jurisdiction of the court, asserted against the assets in his hands for administration." And so we may say that a personal representative is not the owner of the estate in his hands, in the full sense that the decedent was. People ex rel. Darrow v. Coleman, 119 N. Y. 137, 7 L.R.A. 407, 23 N. E. 488. It is true that he is the legal owner for the time being, but this is only by virtue of his appointment. The estate does not follow him into every place he may happen to have a residence, as it would the owner. His official domicile is the state of his appointment. To the laws of that state he owes allegiance in his fiducial or official capacity, and to its laws he is answerable for the conduct of the estate coming to his care. Nor is there any sound reason why the fiction that intangible personal property follows the person of the owner should be extended to embrace, in all its aspects, the legal ownership of the fiduciary. The estate of the decedent is attached to the person of the personal representative in the place where he qualifies. It is there that he, in legal contemplation, resides. His official home is in the state under whose laws he derives all his authority. What he does in other states is under and by virtue of this appointment.

A case very much like the one we are considering, and that supports the conclusion we have reached, is Goodsite v. Lane, 72 C. C. A. 281, 139 Fed. 593, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 849, in which the United States circuit court of appeals had before it the question, "Whether personal property consisting of stocks, bonds, etc., held in New York on deposit with a bank and trust company by a trustee appointed by a court of Connecticut, under the will of a resident of Connecticut, for the benefit of an heir and legatee residing in Connecticut, and which had never been brought into or invested in Ohio, was taxable in the latter state for the sole reason that such trustee was a resident of Ohio." In considering the case, the court said: "The question here is: Was either this Connecticut estate, or its trustee, as such, within the jurisdiction of Ohio? The statute of Ohio provides that 'all property, whether real or personal, in this state . . . and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation.' Rev. Stat. 1890, § 2731. As construed by the supreme court of Ohio, 'the first clause evidently embraces the tangible property, real or personal, situated in this state, irrespective of the residence of the owner, and the second clause embraces all intangible property of persons residing in this state, irrespective of where the subject of the property may be situated.' Myers v. Seaberger, 45 Ohio St. 232, 235, 12 N. E. 396. Applying the rule mentioned supra, the state of Ohio taxes tangible property located in the state because of its jurisdiction of the property; and it taxes intangible property located without the state because of its jurisdiction of the persons residing in the state who hold it. The property involved in this case had never been brought within the state of Ohio, and therefore could not be taxed upon the ground that it was tangible property within the state. The tax must be sustained, if at all, upon the ground that the estate was the property of a person residing in Ohio, who, being within the jurisdiction of the state, and owing it an obligation, might be compelled to contribute to its support out of his property, wherever located. . . . The exaction must find its justification in the privileges and protection enjoyed in the state under its laws by the person taxed, in the capacity in which taxed. The person taxed must therefore be in the jurisdiction of the state not only personally, but officially, in the capacity in which he is taxed, and in that capacity must be enjoying the benefits referred to. In the case of a trustee, he must be exercising his office of trustee within the state, and be enjoying, as trustee, privileges of value to the estate, for which it is just the estate should pay. An examination of the cases will show that, where this tax has been sustained, either the trust estate or the beneficiary or the trustee, as trustee, was receiving benefits from the state, for which it was only fair the trustee should pay. . . . But where the estate and beneficiaries were outside the state, and the trustee only resided, and did not act as trustee, within the state, the tax was not sustained. . . . In the present case, neither the trust estate nor the beneficiary nor the trustee, in any proper sense, was within the jurisdiction of the state of Ohio. The trust estate was in New York. The trustee was appointed in Connecticut, and acted wholly outside of Ohio. The fact that as an individual he resided in Ohio could not authorize the taxation of this foreign estate, which had received no benefit whatever from the laws of Ohio."

Further illustrating this view is the case of Bonaparte v. State, 63 Md. 465, where the court said, in speaking of an executor, where the question involved was the right to subject the estate in his hands to taxation: "But he held it in the special character of an officer of the law, for the specific and temporary purpose of the administration of the property under the supervision and direction of the court from which he received letters testamentary. The domicile of a testator when living determines the situs of his personal property of an intangible nature not permanently located elsewhere for purposes of taxation, and his place of domicile at the time of his death determines the place of administering his estate. The situs of the personal property, generally speaking, and the residence of the administrator, for the purposes of administration, place them, in legal contemplation, in the city or county of the court exercising jurisdiction. The personal property, therefore, of an intangible nature, not permanently located elsewhere, such as bonds and stocks, must be deemed to remain within the jurisdiction of the court pending the settlement of the estate, and be there liable to taxation. When distribution has been made, and the fact of its transfer has been communicated to the tax authorities, the administrator's or executor's liability to pay the taxes upon it, of course, ceases." And so, in Burroughs on Taxation, § 98, it is said: "The personal property of decedents is taxed at the domicile of the decedent to the person having the legal title, and not in the name of the deceased person. During the settlement of the estate, it must have a situs somewhere, and none so appropriate as where the decedent lived. When the estate is settled and paid to the heirs or legatees, it is then assessed to such persons at their residence." Supporting this principle are the cases of Spalding v. Com. 88 Ky. 135, 10 S. W. 420; Youtsey v. Com. 110 Ky. 555, 62 S. W. 262.

Nor does the fact that § 4058 of the Kentucky statutes (Russell's Stat. § 5950) requires all persons to answer this interrogatory, "Are you or were you, on the 1st day of September of the present year, executor of the will or administrator or curator of the estate of any deceased person, or guardian, committee, or assignee, commissioner, receiver, or trustee of any person, or have you in your possession or under your control any property, money, or other thing of value belonging to any other person or corporation? Answer ———. If the answer is 'Yes,' the person is required to list such property separate from his own, and in the name of the real owner, and show by whom listed,"—militate against the conclusion we have reached. This statute manifestly applies to an executor or other fiduciary who has qualified in this state, or who has within this state money or property in his custody that he is investing or using in business in such a manner as to bring the estate within the rule laid down in the Higgins and Dun Cases, supra. In our opinion, it would be unsound in principle and unjust in practice to subject to taxation these estates.

Wherefore the judgment in each case is affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES S. HOLLANDER et al., Appts.,
v.

CENTRAL METAL & SUPPLY COMPANY OF BALTIMORE CITY.

(109 Md. 131, 71 Atl. 442.)

Specific performance — nonresident defendant — publication of notice.

1. Under a statute authorizing the appointment of a trustee to convey land in an action for specific performance, where the defendants are nonresidents, the proceeding is in rem, and notice may be given the nonresidents by publication.

Same — notice of property — sufficiency.

2. A notice to nonresidents of the land a conveyance of which is sought to be enforced

Case Note. — May jurisdiction of suit for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land within the territorial jurisdiction rest upon constructive service of process against a nonresident.

The general principle is well settled, in the absence of any statutory modification, that a suit to compel the specific performance of a contract to convey real property is a suit in personam, and not in rem. It has frequently been applied by holding that the venue of a suit for specific performance of such a contract is not necessarily in the county in which the land is located.

See, among other cases to that effect, Coon v. Cook, 6 Ind. 268; Dehart v. Dehart, 15 Ind. 107; Bethell v. Bethell, 92 Ind. 318; Davis v. Parker, 14 Allen, 94; Close v. Wheaton, 65 Kan. 830, 70 Pac. 891; Johnston v. Wadsworth, 24 Or. 494, 34 Pac. 13; Hearst v. Kuykendall, 16 Tex. 329; Morgan v. Bell, 3 Wash. 554, 16 L.R.A. 614, 28 Pac. 925. These cases are merely referred to as furnishing a specific illustration of the principle that such a suit is regarded as in personam, and not in rem. The list is by no means exhaustive, and, of course, so far as the question of local venues is concerned, the matter is subject to statutory regulation, and the rule may be changed by statute. See, for example, Parker v. McAllister, 14 Ind. 12; Epperly v. Ferguson, 118 Iowa, 47, 91 N. W. 816; Bradford v. Smith, 123 Iowa, 41, 98 N. W. 377; Collins v. Park, 93 Ky. 6, 18 S. W. 1013.

As shown in the notes to Proctor v. Proc-

Messrs. Arthur W. Machen and Arthur W. Machen, Jr., for appellants:

In an action brought by the assignee of a term, all the assignments of the term down to himself should be specifically stated, for he, being privy to them, cannot be allowed to plead generally that the estate of the lessee of and in the demised premises came to him by assignment.

1 Chitty, Pl. 16th Am. ed. *382; Gould, Pl. § 32; Alexander's British Statutes, p. 348; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 1st Am. ed. 369-

371; Miller, Eq. Proc. p. 117, note 10; Davis v. James, L. R. 26 Ch. Div. 778.

The words "cost and charge" require the person claiming the right to the conveyance to pay the reasonable counsel fees of the landlord, incurred in examining the title of the applicant who claims the benefit of the covenant, in order to make sure that the applicant is indeed the person legally entitled to the benefit of any covenants that run with the lease.

Re Baylis [1907] 2 Ch. 54; Fitzsimmons court in Single v. Scott Paper Mfg. Co. 55 Fed. 553, held that, in view of the Ohio statute expressly providing for service by publication or personal service out of the state upon a nonresident defendant in a suit to compel specific performance of a contract to convey land in Ohio, and the further provision that when a party against whom a judgment for the conveyance is rendered does not comply therewith the judgment shall have the same operation and effect, and be available as if the conveyance had been executed conformable to the judgment,—a Federal court sitting in Ohio may acquire jurisdiction in such a suit upon service by publication against a nonresident, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 738, providing that when any defendant in a suit in equity to enforce any legal or equitable lien or claim against real or personal property within the district where the suit is brought is not an inhabitant of nor found within the district, and does not voluntarily appear thereto, it shall be lawful for the court to make an order directing the absent defendant to appear, and that such order shall be served on such absent defendant, if practicable, wherever found, or, where such personal service is not practicable, shall be published in such manner as the court shall direct.

In Adams v. Hecksher, 80 Fed. 742, s. c. subsequent appeal, 83 Fed. 281, service by publication against a nonresident was held insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon a Federal court sitting in Missouri of a suit for the specific performance of a contract to convey real estate in Missouri; but the decision was upon the ground that the bill not only prayed for a conveyance, but for other relief, including a money judgment and a decree requiring the defendant to perfect the title and furnish abstracts according to the contract. In the later of the two opinions it was conceded that service by publication is sufficient to sustain the jurisdiction in a suit for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of real estate where the decree may operate in rem and transfer the title to the property from the defendant to the complainant, under a provision of the Missouri statute authorizing service by publication in all actions at law or in equity which have for their immediate object the enforcement or establishment of any lawful right, claim, or demand to or against any real or personal property within the jurisdiction.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Clem v. Givens, 106 Va. 145, 55 S. E. 567, upon the authority of Arndt v. Griggs, supra, it was held in effect that it was competent for the state of Virginia to provide that the title to real estate within its limits shall be settled and determined by a suit in which the defendant, being a nonresident, is brought into court only by publication; and, in effect, that jurisdiction in a suit for a specific performance upon service by publication against a nonresident was justified by the provisions of the Virginia Code, to the effect that a court of equity, in a suit wherein it is proper to decree or order the execution of any deed or writing, may appoint a commissioner to execute the same, and that the execution thereof shall be as valid to extinguish the right of the party on whose behalf it is executed as if he had executed it himself, and the further provision for service of process by publication, notwithstanding that these provisions were not specifically or in terms made applicable to suits for specific performance. HOLLANDER v. CENTRAL METAL & SUPPLY Co. is to the same effect.

In Felch v. Hooper, 119 Mass. 52, under a statute providing that when a person seised of an estate upon a trust, express or implied, is out of the commonwealth, or not amenable to the process of any court therein having equity powers, the court may order a conveyance to be made in order to carry into effect the objects of the trust, and appoint some suitable person in place of the trustee to convey the same, it was held that the court had jurisdiction, upon service upon a nonresident defendant out of the state, to entertain a bill by the purchaser of land, who, by the owner's permission, had entered upon the land and made improvements, to enforce the implied trust in his favor arising from the circumstances, and, to that end, appoint a trustee to convey the land. The court said that the question was not whether a contract for the conveyance of land in Massachusetts can be specifically enforced against a defendant upon whom no service is made within the state, and who is not, and never has been, a resident; that that question was decided in the negative by Spurr v. Scoville, 3 Cush. 578; but that the question was whether, under such a contract, the plaintiff, who has paid or tendered the consideration, and has, by defendant's permission, entered upon the land and made improvements thereon, may, by virtue of the statute, enforce his

v. Mostyn [1904] A. C. 46, affirming [1903] 1 K. B. 349.

Personal representatives had no interest under this lease which they could convey.

Kingdon v. Nottle, 1 Maule & S. 355.

The alleged covenant is not one which runs with the land.

Woodall v. Clifton [1905] 2 Ch. 257;

Glenn v. Canby, 24 Md. 127; Whalen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 108 Md. 11, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 130, 69 Atl. 390; 1 Poe, Pl. p. 334; Alexander's British Statutes, p. 346.

equitable title to the land in any form. The court said that the decision in the Spurr Case was placed expressly on the ground that the suit was a proceeding in personam merely, in which no decree was sought against the property, and added that "no allusion is made to statutory provisions which, upon proper allegations, might, perhaps, have afforded relief."

In the subsequent case of Merrill v. Beckwith, 163 Mass. 503, 40 N. E. 855, the court, while holding that the Massachusetts statute referred to in the last case was, in any event, inapplicable to a suit by the vendor against the purchaser, and that the court has no power under it to compel the purchaser to accept a conveyance, where the court cannot bind him personally by its decree, intimated that the statute did not apply even to a suit by the purchaser against the vendor, unless the purchaser had been in possession.

It would seem from the foregoing review of the cases that, notwithstanding the general principle that a suit for the specific performance of a contract to convey real property is a suit in personam, and not in rem, so that jurisdiction cannot rest upon constructive service of process against a nonresident who does not appear, yet that such a suit may by statute be given the character of a suit in rem or quasi in rem, so as to sustain the jurisdiction upon this mode of service, even as against a nonresident. It may be, as held in Silver Camp Min. Co. v. Dickert, 31 Mont. 488, 67 L.R.A. 940, 78 Pac. 967, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1000, that a statute which merely provides in general terms for service by publication upon nonresidents, without specifying the class of actions in which such service is permissible, does not have the effect to impress a suit for specific performance with the character of a suit in rem or quasi in rem, so as to authorize this mode of service, unless, as in Clem v. Givens, supra, there is in addition a statutory provision for a decree in the alternative, contemplating a conveyance by some person appointed by the court for that purpose, or some other decree which, in effect, operates in rem, and not in personam. Even in the absence of a provision of the latter kind, it would seem that, if the local statute providing for service by publication upon nonresident defendants specifically named suits for specific performance, or described the class of actions in which such service might be had in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The alleged covenant cannot be enforced specifically against an assignee of the reversion, because of the rule against perpetuities.

Graham v. Whitridge, 99 Md. 248, 274, 66 L.R.A. 408, 57 Atl. 609, 58 Atl. 36; London & S. W. R. Co. v. Gomm, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 562; Trevelyan v. Trevelyan, 53 L. T. N. S. 853; Winsor v. Mills, 157 Mass. 302, 32 N. E. 352; Re Tyrrell [1907] 1 Ir. Ch. 292; Gray, Rule against Perpetuities, 2d ed. §§ 230b, 275, 275a; Woodall v. Clifton, supra; Worthing terms which would clearly embrace suits for specific performance, that in itself would be sufficient to characterize the suit as one in rem, or quasi in rem, for this purpose.

There is no necessary inconsistency on the part of the courts in assuming jurisdiction of suits for the specific performance of contracts in respect of real property beyond the territorial jurisdiction, if the parties are personally subject to the jurisdiction, upon the theory that such suits are in personam, and not in rem, and, at the same time, assuming jurisdiction of such suits in respect of land within the territorial jurisdiction upon constructive service against nonresidents, upon the theory that such a suit has, by virtue of statute, become, pro hac vice, a suit in rem or quasi in rem. In other words, as was said in Burrall v. Eames, 5 Wis. 260, involving a question of local venue, a suit for specific performance may be of a twofold character, — partly in personam and partly in rem; and the court may enforce the contract either by operating upon the person to compel a conveyance, or may pass the title of the land by decree.

In view of the conceded power of the legislature of a state, by virtue of the location within its boundaries of the property to which the suit relates, to enable its courts to take jurisdiction upon constructive service of process against a nonresident, it is doubtful whether a court of equity might not, without coming in conflict with the rule that a decree in personam upon constructive service against a nonresident is contrary to due process, take the view that, as to a nonresident served constructively only, the suit for specific performance proceeds in personam, and conform its decree to that theory, even in the absence of any statute bearing on the subject, other than the general provision for service by publication on nonresidents. As yet, however, the cases have not gone quite to that extent.

In conclusion: As shown in notes previously referred to, a court having personal jurisdiction of the defendant, in order to grant specific performance of a contract to convey land in another state, must mould its decree in a form in personam. But a court not having personal jurisdiction of the defendant, in order to grant specific performance of a contract to convey land within the state must mould its decree in a form in rem.

v. Heather [1906] 2 Ch. 532; Starcher Bros. v. Duty, 61 W. Va. 373, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 913, 123 Am. St. Rep. 900, 56 S. E. 524.

No suit in personam can constitutionally be prosecuted in any state court without personal service of process.

Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 505; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 354, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108.

A suit in equity for specific performance is a proceeding in personam.

Dorsey v. Omo, 93 Md. 74, 48 Atl. 741; Penn v. Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444; Fry, Spec. Perf. §§ 123, 124.

A suit for specific performance cannot be maintained against a nonresident on service by publication merely, although the land may lie within the state; at least, unless the state, by express legislation, has given jurisdiction to the court to proceed in rem with respect to the land, in the exercise of a statutory jurisdiction differing from the exercise of the ordinary jurisdiction in suits for specific performance.

Spurr v. Scoville, 3 Cush. 578; Worthington v. Lee, 61 Md. 530; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165.

Messrs. John G. Schilpp and R. E. L. Marshall, for appellee:

While a decree for specific performance of a contract operates primarily in personam, in a limited and qualified sense it may also be said to operate in rem when the property is within the jurisdiction of the court, but the defendant is absent in a foreign state or country.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 132; Worthington v. Lee, 61 Md. 530; White v. White, 7 Gill & J. 211; Epperly v. Ferguson, 118 Iowa, 47, 91 N. W. 816; Burrall v. Eames, 5 Wis. 260; Rourke v. McLaughlin, 38 Cal. 196.

Notice by publication was sufficient.

Comegys v. State, 10 Gill & J. 175; Miller, Eq. Proc. p. 154; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 155, 28 L. ed. 103, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586; Brannon, 14th Amend. p. 247.

A covenant for redemption in a ninety-nine-year lease runs with the land.

11 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1080, 1081; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1384; Glenn v. Canby, 24 Md. 131; Barnum v. Barnum, 26 Md. 119, 90 Am. Dec. 88.

Mr. H. M. Brune also for appellee.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Central Metal & Supply Company of Baltimore City, "a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Maryland," having purchased the leasehold estate in a certain lot of land in Baltimore city, brought this suit on the 31st day of May, 1907, against the appellants, as the present owners of the reversion in said lot, for a specific performance of the covenant in the lease of the lessor, "her heirs and assigns," upon payment of the amounts specified therein, to convey the fee to the lessees, their "heirs and assigns." The bill alleges that the defendants, Charles Hollander and Elsie Hollander, his wife, and Lee M. Hollander, are nonresidents, and that the plaintiff, in January, 1907, addressed a letter to these defendants, notifying them of its desire to redeem the ground rent under the lease, and prepared and forwarded to them for execution a deed from them to the plaintiff of the fee in said lot, which they refused to execute on the ground that "the said rent is not redeemable." After an order of publication had been passed against the nonresident defendants, Charles S. Hollander and wife filed a motion to rescind the order and to quash the proceedings, on the ground (1) that a suit for the specific performance of a contract is a suit in personam, and cannot be maintained against a nonresident on service by publication, and (2) that the order of publication in this case does not contain a sufficient description of the property to inform the defendants of the property involved in the suit. Some time after this motion was filed, Lee M. Hollander filed a similar motion, alleging, as an additional reason for rescinding the order as against him, that, at the time of the bringing of the suit, he was a resident of the state of Maryland.

The case of Worthington v. Lee, 61 Md. 530, was for specific performance of a covenant for a renewal of a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, and for an injunction to restrain an action of ejectment for the recovery of the premises. Some of the nonresident defendants appeared and pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court to grant relief, while against others interlocutory decrees were entered in default of appearance and answer. The notice to nonresidents was by publication, and the court, in dealing with the case as against the nonresident defendants, said: "If the application was for a sale of the property, or for a simple conveyance thereof, those objects could be accomplished by the appointment of a trustee, as provided by the Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 16, §§ 67, 135. But those provisions of the statute do not apply in a case like the present, where the object of the decree is to secure to the plaintiff the specific execution of the covenant whereby she is entitled to obtain a renewed lease, with important and valuable personal covenants of the lessors, and without which it would not be an instrument of the character contemplated by the covenant decreed to be performed. The court could direct a lease for ninety-nine years to be made by a trustee, but not with covenant for renewal, and other personal covenants, to bind personally the owners of the reversion, their heirs and assigns. The court could, through the instrumentality of a trustee, direct the conveyance of an estate, or the transfer of a right, but not the making of personal covenants, in the absence of the parties, to bind them personally, and those who may stand in privity with them. The court possesses no such power as that inherently, and the statute does not confer it."

In the case of Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586, cited and relied on in Worthington v. Lee, supra, the court said: "It would doubtless be within the power of the state in which the land lies to provide by statute that if the defendant is not found within the jurisdiction, or refuses to make or to cancel a deed, this should be done in his behalf by a trustee appointed by the court for that purpose."

And in the case of Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557, in passing upon a Nebraska statute, and dealing with the right of the state to provide for notice to nonresident defendants, the court said that the state had "control over property within its limits; and the condition of ownership of real estate therein, whether the owner be stranger or citizen, is subjection to its rules concerning the holding, the transfer, liability to obligations, private or public, and the modes of establishing titles thereto. It cannot bring the person of a nonresident within its limits,—its process goes not out beyond its borders,—but it may determine the extent of his title to real estate within its limits; and for the purpose of such determination may provide any reasonable methods of imparting notice." Section 117, art. 16, Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, is as follows: "If in any suit in chancery, by bill or petition, respecting, in any manner, the sale, partition, conveyance, or transfer of any real or personal property lying or being in this state, or to foreclose any mortgage thereon, or to enforce any contract or lien relating to the same, or concerning any use, trust, or other interest therein, any or all of the defendants are nonresidents, the court in which such suit is pending may order notice to be given to such nonresidents of the substance and object of such bill or petition, and warning them to appear by a day therein stated." Section 127 of article 16, provides how the notice shall be given, and § 91 authorizes 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the court, whenever the execution of a deed of any kind is decreed, to appoint a trustee to execute it. The prayer of the bill and the covenant here sought to be enforced is for conveyance to the appellee of the lot described in the lease; and, while the court could not enforce a decree requiring a non-resident to execute a deed for the property, its decree may be made effective, under the provisions of the Code, by the appointment of a trustee to convey the title of the appellants, and to that end the proceedings are in rem and not in personam. Miller, Eq. Proc. § 120; White v. White, 7 Gill & J. 208; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 917; Phelps, Juridical Eq. §§ 85, 223.

The order of publication, which is set out in the record, in addition to describing the land as the "lot of ground on the east side of a 10-foot alley in the rear of Lombard and Frederick streets, in the city of Baltimore," and as being subject to the annual ground rent of $36 "created by the lease from Charlotte Belgiano to Robert Bolton and others, dated July 18, 1835, and recorded in Liber T. K. No. 262, folio 294," etc., states that an undivided one-third interest in the reversion in said lot is vested in Edward Hollander, trustee for Amelia Hollander, for life, remainder to Charles S. and Levi M. Hollander, and that the remaining two-thirds interest is vested in said Charles S. and Levi M. Hollander, "as by reference to Liber R. O. No. 2243, folio 93, will appear," and that the plaintiff notified the defendants by letter of its desire to redeem said rent, and prepared and had sent to them for execution a deed from them to the plaintiff for their interest in said lot, which they declined to execute and returned. The reference to the lease under and by virtue of which the defendants received the annual rent of $36, to their interest in the reversion, and to the letter and deed sent to them, could have left no doubt in their minds as to the land referred to, and we think was sufficient notice to the defendants of the subject-matter of the suit. Mewshaw v. Mewshaw, 2 Md. Ch. 12; Phelps, Juridical Eq. 313.

The petition of Lee M. Hollander was answered by the plaintiff, denying that he was a resident of the state of Maryland, and again alleging that he was a nonresident. The matter, as stated in the opinion of the court below, was submitted, without proof, on the petition and answer, and his motion, and the motion of Charles S. Hollander, were and we think properly, overruled. Where a case is submitted on petition and answer, the truth of the facts alleged in the answer is taken to be admitted, but the privilege of having a case so heard belongs only to the petitioner. The record does not disclose who set this motion down for hearing, but as the plaintiff in this case had no right to do so on the petition and answer, we must assume that it was done at the instance of the petitioner. Miller, Eq. Proc. § 255, and notes.

After these motions were overruled, the defendants demurred to the bill on the following grounds: (1) That the bill does not show plaintiff's right to take advantage of the covenant in the lease; (2) that the plaintiff does not offer to comply with the terms of the covenant; (3) that the covenant is not one running with the land, and cannot be enforced by the assignee of the lessees against the assignees of the lessor; and (4) that the covenant cannot be enforced against the assignee of the reversion, because it violates the rule against perpetuities.

The bill charges that the plaintiff, on the 9th day of January, 1907, obtained by deed from Benjamin Krulewitch, administrator, the leasehold property, a description of which is set out in the bill and in the plaintiff's deed filed with the bill; that the lot of ground so obtained by the plaintiff is subject to an annual ground rent of $36, created by a lease from Charlotte Bolgiano to Robert Bolton and others, dated July 18, 1835, and recorded among the Land Records in Liber T. K. No. 262, folio 294, etc., and a certified copy of which is filed with the bill; "that the said lease contains a covenant on the part of said lessor, her heirs and assigns, that at any time during the continuance of said demise, at the request and cost of said lessees, their heirs or assigns, and on their paying $600, with all rent accrued and accruing, said lessor, her heirs and assigns, would cause to be delivered to said lessees, their heirs and assigns, a good and sufficient deed in fee simple, of and for the said property;" and that the plaintiff bought said property "upon the express condition that the said rent could be extinguished at its option at any time;" "that the reversion in and to said lot, with the right to collect the annual rent of thirty-six dollars, is now vested in said defendants, as follows: (a) Edward Hollander, trustee, one of the above-named defendants, and trustee in the case of Edward Hollander v. Amelia Hollander et al., in the circuit court of Baltimore city (docket 24a, folio 245), holds a one undivided third interest therein, for Amelia Hollander, another of the above-named defendants, for life, with remainder to Charles S. Hollander and Lee M. Hollander, other above-named defendants, absolutely; (b) said Charles S. Hollander and Lee M. Hollander hold the other two-thirds undivided interest therein, as would appear by reference to the deed to said named defendants of said lot of ground, dated May 10, 1905, and recorded among the said Land Records in Liber R. O. No. 2143, folio 93," etc.; that the plaintiff notified the nonresident defendants by letter of its desire to redeem said ground rent, and in January, 1907, prepared and had sent to them for execution a deed to the plaintiff of their interest in said lot, which deed they refused to execute on the ground that, by the terms of said lease, the rent was not redeemable; that on the 20th of May, 1907, the plaintiff tendered to Edward Hollander trustee, $210.30, it "being one third of the said redemption money, together with the proportionate part of the accruing rent to the date thereof, and likewise, on May 31, 1907, tendered to Arthur W. Machen, Jr. Esq., solicitor of the defendants, Charles S. Hollander and Elsie Hollander, his wife, and Lee M. Hollander, the sum of $420.60, being their two-thirds share of said redemption money, together with their proportionate part of the accruing rent to said date;" and that at the same time plaintiff handed to said trustee and said solicitor a draft for a new deed, "requesting them, and each of them, to have the same properly executed so as to vest" the plaintiff "with an absolute fee-simple title in and to the property," which deed is filed with the bill, and which they refused to execute or to have executed; and that said Machen was the solicitor of the defendants "in this matter." The prayer of the bill is for leave to bring into court the sum of $630.90 so tendered, and that a trustee may be appointed to convey to the plaintiff the reversion in said lot, etc.

1. The general rule is that the bill must state clearly plaintiff's right to the relief prayed, and counsel for the appellants insist that, in compliance with this rule, the bill should have set out all of the assignments, from the original lessees down to the plaintiff, in order to show the right of the plaintiff, as assignee of the leasehold estate, to the benefit of the covenant sought to be enforced. The leasehold interest was conveyed by the lease to the lessees, their executors, administrators, and assigns, and the bill charges that the plaintiff is the owner of the leasehold property described in said lease by virtue of the deed from Benjamin Krulewitch, administrator. If the covenant is one that runs with the lease, in favor of the assignee of the lessees, the right to the leasehold interest created by the lease entitles the owner to the benefit of the covenant. In Spencer's Case, 5 Coke, 16, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 11th ed. 77, "it was resolved that the assignee of the assignee should have an action of covenant. So of the executors of the assignee of the assignee; so of the assignee of the executors or administrators of every assignee; for all are comprised within this word (assignees), for the same right which was in the testator or intestate shall go to his executors or administrators." The bill in substance alleges that the plaintiff is the assignee of the leasehold interest or estate created by said lease. It was not necessary to allege all the circumstances tending to prove that fact. While "every material fact to which the plaintiff means to offer evidence ought to be distinctly stated in the premises, for otherwise he will not be permitted to offer or require any evidence of such fact, a general charge or statement, however, of the matter of fact is sufficient; and it is not necessary to charge minutely all the circumstances which may conduce to prove the general charge; for these circumstances are properly matters of evidence, which need not be charged in order to let them in as proofs." Story, Eq. Pl. 5th ed. § 28; Miller, Eq. Proc. § 92; Phelps, Juridical Eq. §§ 49, 55; Mewshaw v. Mewshaw, supra; Dennis v. Dennis, 15 Md. 73. The covenant is, at the request, etc., of the lessees, "their heirs and assigns," to convey to the lessees, their heirs and assigns, etc., yet the manifest intention of the parties to the lease, as gathered from the whole instrument, was to give to the lessees and those claiming under them, viz., "their executors, administrators, and assigns," the benefit of the covenant. This, however, is not an action at law for a breach of the covenant, and the doctrine of specific performance does not depend upon such technical distinctions. Wherever, and without regard to the form and technical character of the contract, performance of a covenant in respect to lands would have been decreed between the parties to it, it will, in the absence of controlling intervening equities, "be decreed as between persons claiming under them in privity of estate, or of representation, or of title." 2 Story, Eq. 5th ed. §§ 788-790, 714, 715, 791; Worthington v. Lee, 61 Md. 530.

2. The second objection to the bill is that the plaintiff does not offer to bear the "cost and charge" of the conveyance of the fee to him, which, it is claimed, include a counsel fee to the defendants for the examination of plaintiff's title in order to ascertain if he is legally entitled to the benefit of the covenant. In the case of Oelrichs v. Spain (Oelrichs v. Williams) 15 Wall. 211, 21 L. ed. 43, the court held that counsel fees were not recoverable in a suit on an injunction bond, the condition of which was to satisfy and pay "all costs, damages, and charges" which should be occasioned by such writ of injunction, and said that the disallowance of such fees "rests on a solid foundation, and that the opposite rule is forbidden by the analogies of the law and sound public policy." This case was cited and relied on in Wood v. State, 66 Md. 61, 5 Atl. 476, where, in a suit on an injunction bond, the court held that the plaintiff could not recover fees paid counsel for procuring a dissolution of the injunction. In Johnson v. Glenn, 80 Md. 369, 30 Atl. 993, a provision in a mortgage authorizing "the payment of all expenses incident to such sale" was said to include services of an auctioneer, cost of advertising, etc., but not an allowance for commissions. Counsel fees "are not allowable" as costs "in the absence of a statute, or in the absence of some agreement or stipulation specially authorizing the allowance thereof." 11 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 104. While parties must be left to contract as they please, in the absence of a clear undertaking to do so, one party to a contract should not be required to pay for services rendered for the benefit of the other, and, whatever may have been held on the subject elsewhere, under the decisions in this state the "cost and charge" which the plaintiff under the lease is required to pay cannot be held to include a counsel fee to the defendants for examination of the plaintiff's title.

3. The next ground of the demurrer is that the covenant to convey the fee to the lessees, "their heirs and assigns," is not a covenant running with the land. In Glenn v. Canby, 24 Md. 127, the court stated, as the established doctrine, "that a covenant to run with the land must extend to the land, so that the thing required to be done will affect the quality, value, or mode of enjoying the estate conveyed, and thus constitute a condition annexed or appurtenant to it; there must also be a privity of estate between the contracting parties, and the covenant must be consistent with the estate to which it adheres, and of such a character that the estate will not be defeated or changed by a performance of it." This is the doctrine asserted by Mr. Poe in 1 Poe Pl. & Pr. 1st ed. 253, and reiterated by this court in Whalen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co 108 Md. 11, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 130, 69 Atl. 390. In Taylor's Landlord and Tenant, 7th ed. § 261, it is said that "in order that a covenant may run with the land, its performance or nonperformance must affect the nature, quality, or value of the property demised, independent of collateral circumstances, or must affect the mode of enjoyment. It must not only concern the land, but there must also be a privity of estate between the contracting parties." "In order that a covenant may run with the land,—that is, that its benefit or obligation may pass with the ownership,—it must respect the thing granted or demised, and the act covenanted to deal with respect to those rights." And again, in the case of Worthington v. Lee, 61 Md. 530, the court said that the above cases fully state the reasons why this court "has applied a more liberal doctrine to these cases than that applied in the English courts; and it has done so with special reference to the peculiar nature and condition of the local titles that exist in the city of Baltimore." Without detracting from the great weight and respect to which the authorities cited by appellants are justly entitled, we must adhere to the previous decisions of this court, and hold that the lease in question did not place the property extra commercium, and that the rights of the parties under the covenants therein are "not open to any of the objections against perpetuities."

It follows, from what we have said, that the decree of the court below must be affirmed.

Decree affirmed, with costs, and cause remanded.

The following supplemental opinion was delivered by Thomas, J., on February 11, 1909:

Since the filing of the opinion in this case, our attention has been called to the agreement of counsel and the certificate of the clerk of the circuit court of Baltimore city, filed in this court on the day of the argument, whereby it appears that the petition and motion of Lee M. Hollander were set down for hearing by the plaintiff.

In the case of Paul v. Nixon, reported in a note to Jones v. Magill, 1 Bland, ch. 177, Chancellor Hanson said: "If, indeed, the defendant was entitled to have the cause set down for final hearing on bill and answer, it must be on terms similar to those of the complainant's setting down; viz., that everything contained in the bill is true; that is to say, the rule must be reversed. But there is no such practice." Miller, Eq. Proc. p. 319, note 4.

Who is a nonresident is a mixed question of law and fact. The petitioner states in his petition "that he has lately been in Scandinavia for a year and a half, for the purpose of studying philology, and is now in the city of New York, for the purpose of using libraries there situated, but that your petitioner has never abandoned his residence and citizenship in the state of Maryland." It therefore appears that he has been out of the state at least a year and a half. The petition does not say when he expects to return to Maryland, or whether he intends to return at any certain time, and it may be that he intends to remain out of the state indefinitely. If he has been out of the state for a year and a half, with no intention of returning, "or with the intention of returning at some indefinite time in the future, as circumstances may dictate or permit," he is a nonresident within the meaning of § 123 of art. 16 of the Code, and may be proceeded against as such, notwithstanding he may not intend to abandon his domicile in this state; for, as was said in Dorsey v. Kyle, 30 Md. 512, 96 Am. Dec. 617, "In contemplation of the attachment law, the domicile may be in this state, while the actual residence is in another." The term "nonresident," in § 123 of art. 16 of the Code, means a "person who doth not reside in this state," as defined in the law relating to attachment. Dorsey v. Dorsey, 30 Md. 531, 96 Am. Dec. 633; Miller, Eq. Proc. sec. 123, p. 160.

In the case of Dorsey v. Dorsey, supra, the defendant stated in his petition that he left his home in Maryland to visit his wife, who was then sick at her father's in Winchester, Virginia, with the intention of returning in a few days, but, owing to the position of the armies about Winchester and Harper's Ferry, he was unable to do so, and was forced to wait for the close of the Civil War, although at all times intending to return. While he was absent from the state, he was proceeded against as a nonresident, and the court held that he was a nonresident within the meaning of the provision of the Code.

In the case of Risewick v. Davis, 19 Md. 82, in disposing of an exception to evidence offered to show the intention of the defendant to return to the state at some indefinite time, the court said: "Residence and domicile are sometimes distinct things. In Re Thompson, 1 Wend. 43, it was decided that residence out of the state, for the purpose of being subject to foreign attachment, did not import that domicile should be out of the state also. Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. 14, 32 Am. Dec. 423. In Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N. Y. 428, 55 Am. Dec. 350, the defendant offered to prove that, at the time of taking out the attachment, he was not a nonresident, but a resident of the city of New York; that he had been absent about three years, attending a lawsuit at New Orleans, and returned in the spring of 1848; the judge excluded the evidence, on the ground that the offer itself showed the debtor to be a nonresident, within the spirit of the act. In the case at bar, the defendant had been absent four or five years, and now constat but he might be absent as many years longer. The evidence, being foreign to the issue, should have been excluded."

Mr. Poe says: "It may be stated, as the result of the authorities, that where a citizen of this state, domiciled here, goes abroad on business or pleasure for a brief period, without any intention of abandoning or changing his domicil, and with a fixed purpose to return at a definite or specified time, retaining and intending to retain, in the meantime, both his domicil and political citizenship, he cannot properly be treated as a nonresident within the meaning of the attachment law, simply because of his temporary absence from his residence and home. Where, however, he leaves the state and remains absent for any considerable period, without any intention of returning, or with the intention of returning at some indefinite time in the future, as circumstances may dictate or permit, he will be liable to be proceeded against as a nonresident, notwithstanding he may not have acquired a fixed resident in any other state or country." 2 Poe, Pl. & Pr., 3d ed. § 506.

On the facts stated in the petition, we think the plaintiff had a right to proceed against the petitioner as a nonresident, and that therefore there was no error in the order of the court, overruling the motion to quash the proceedings against him. As we have said, the plaintiff had no right to have the matter set down for hearing on the petition and answer, but, as it appears he did so, we must assume that it was done with the petitioner's consent, and he, therefore, has no right to complain if the motion was properly disposed of on the facts stated in his petition.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

BOSTON CO-OPERATIVE BANK, Appt.,
v.
AMERICAN CENTRAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

(201 Mass. 350, 87 N. E. 594.)

Insurance — mortgage — sale — loss — payable clause.

A sale of mortgaged property for breach of condition, under a power contained in the mortgage, to the mortgagee, is within the terms of a clause in the policy avoiding it if the property shall be sold without the consent of the insurer, although the policy is made payable to the mortgagee, as his interest may appear.

(March 1, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Suffolk County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due under a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Walter Soren, for appellant:

The foreclosure proceedings made by the plaintiff did not constitute a "sale," within 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the meaning of the condition in the policy, so as to render the same void both as to insured and as to mortgagee.

Clinton v. Norfolk Mut. F. Ins. Co. 176 Mass. 486, 50 L.R.A. 833, 79 Am. St. Rep. 325, 57 N. E. 998; Foote v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 259; McKinney v. Western Assur. Co. 97 Ky. 474, 30 S. W. 1004; Jones, Mortg. §§ 424a, 425, 1893; Kyte v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 144 Mass. 43, 10 N. E. 518; Heaton v. Manhattan F. Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 502; Powers v. Guardian F. & L. Ins. Co. 136 Mass. 108, 49 Am. Rep. 20; Bailey v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 4 McCrary, 221, 13 Fed. 250; May, Ins. § 275; Stuart v. Reliance Ins. Co. 179 Mass. 434, 60 N. E. 929; Hall v. Bliss, 118 Mass. 554, Case Note. — Acquisition by mortgagee of title to property covered by policy protecting mortgagee's interest, as breach of condition against sale or transfer of title.

This note includes cases where the policy was issued to the mortgagor, loss payable to mortgagee, and also cases where the policy issued directly to the mortgagee.

As to effect of breach by mortgagor on rights of mortgagee where policy originally issued in name of mortgagor, and was by him assigned, with the consent of the insurer, to the mortgagee, or where loss was made payable to mortgagee, see case note to Brecht v. Law Union & Crown Ins. Co. 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 197.

Policies issuing to mortgagor.

The courts are not agreed upon the question where the policy issues to the mortgagor. It is held by some courts, in accord with BOSTON CO-OP. BANK v. AMERICAN CENT. INS. CO. that a transfer of the property to the mortgagee is a sale, within the meaning of provisions prohibiting sale and transfers, and that it therefore avoids the policy.

Thus, a policy issued to a mortgagor, payable to the mortgagee, as his interest might appear, and containing a provision making it void in case of any change in title or possession, has been held avoided by foreclosure, whereby the property vested in the mortgagee. McKinney v. Western Assur. Co. 97 Ky. 474, 30 S. W. 1004. The court said: "It is furthermore held by the courts quite generally, and we think correctly, that the property must remain the property of the insured; that whether there be a mortgage on it at the time the policy is issued, and a clause then inserted in the policy that, in case of loss, the insurance is to be paid to the mortgagee, or whether a mortgage be placed upon the property after the insurance is effected (with the consent of the insurance company), and an indorsement is then made by the company on the policy (as in this case) 'that loss, if any, is payable to the mortgagee,' it is one and the same thing. The property remains 19 Am. Rep. 476; Jackson ex dem. Walsh v. Colden, 4 Cow. 266.

Messrs. F. W. Brown and Walter L. Came, for appellee:

The conveyance without the assent of the company rendered the policy void.

Brown v. Cotton & Woolen Mfr's. Mut. Ins. Co. 156 Mass. 587, 31 N. E. 691; Foote v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 259; Essex Sav. Bank v. Meriden F. Ins. Co. 57 Conn. 335, 4 L.R.A. 759, 17 Atl. 930, 18 Atl. 324; McKinney v. Western Assur. Co. 97 Ky. 474, 30 S. W. 1004; Attleborough Sav. Bank v. Security Ins. Co. 168 Mass. 147, 60 Am. St. Rep. 373, 46 N. E. 390; Hunt v. Hunt, 14 Pick. 374, 25 Am. Dec. 400; Brunswick Sav. Inst. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 68 Me. 313, 28 Am. Rep. 56.

the property of the original owner, and that there is no insurance by the mortgagee of his interest in it. Nor does the indorsement, as made in this case, transfer or assign the policy to the mortgagee, but the legal effect of the indorsement, 'loss, if any, payable to the mortgagee,' is only a contingent stipulation to so pay, or a contingent application by the company, with consent of the insured, that the money, in case of loss, shall be so paid. And this interest of the mortgagee is further limited by the words, 'as his interest shall appear,'—meaning, of course, his interest as mortgagee, not as owner. He must possess such an interest when the indorsement is made to make it a valid contract. And he must possess such an interest when the loss occurs, to entitle him, by the plainest principles of his contract and of the law, to recover. And this right of recovery is also limited and made to depend further on the continuance and validity of this mortgage as between the insurance company and the insured (the owner) at the time of the loss. And the courts hold that this mortgagee must take notice of, and is bound by, the stipulations contained in the policy between the company and the owner. And that any act done or any change in the title made by the owner, whether voluntary or by judgment of a court, whereby the title to the property passes to another, destroys this right of the mortgagee to recover under this stipulation to pay to him in case of loss.

So, in this case, on the 7th day of October, the time of the loss, McKinney had no interest in this property as mortgagee, which the defendants had contracted to protect. His interest as mortgagee had been merged in his perfect legal title. Neither was Parrish [the mortgagor] any longer the owner. His right and title were then vested in another owner. So that, by the plain, unequivocal conditions and stipulations of the parties to this contract of insurance, as embraced in the policy, there was no longer existing either condition of the property, ownership, or interest that defendant undertook to insure."

And under a like provision the same con-

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is upon a policy of fire insurance in the Massachusetts standard form containing a condition that "this policy shall be void if . . . without the assent in writing or in print of the company . . . the said property shall be sold," etc. The policy was upon a building, and was issued to one Lane, who then owned the property subject to a mortgage to the plaintiff, and the policy was made payable to the plaintiff "mortgagee, as its interest may appear." The mortgage contained a power to sell the property for a breach of the condition, and to convey to the purchaser an absolute title in fee simple, such that the mortgagor would be forever barred "from claiming the property." The conclusion has been reached where a quitclaim deed was given by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, although a bond for reconveyance was taken. Foote v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 259.

So, foreclosure of a mortgage, and a purchase of the property by the mortgagee, have been held a transfer or change in title within the meaning of an insurance policy issued to the mortgagor, and payable, in case of loss, to the mortgagee, although the latter became the owner by virtue of the foreclosure. Brunswick Sav. Inst. v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 68 Me. 313, 28 Am. Rep. 56.

And a policy issued to the mortgagor, but payable to mortgagee, containing a provision of avoidance if the property be sold or transferred, or any change take place in title or possession, whether by legal process or judicial decree, or voluntary transfer or conveyance, has been held avoided by foreclosure proceedings under which the mortgagee became the owner. Hagaman v. Allentown F. Ins. Co. 38 Phila. Leg. Int. 375.

And a policy taken by a mortgagor upon his interest, though assigned to the mortgagee with the insurer's consent, has been held avoided by a quitclaim deed by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, where the charter provided that policies should become void upon alienation by "sale or otherwise." Hoxsie v. Providence Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 R. I. 517.

So, a policy issued to the mortgagor and assigned to the mortgagee has been held avoided by a conveyance of the fee to the mortgagee, where it contained a provision that it should become void in case of any transfer or termination of the interest of the insured. Bilson v. Manufacturing Ins. Co. 3 Phila. 547, Fed. Cas. No. 1,410.

And a policy issued to the mortgagor, but upon its face, payable to the mortgagee, providing that it should become void if the property "should be sold," was held avoided by a conveyance, absolute in form, and containing no mention of the mortgage, made by the mortgagor's heirs to the mortgagee. Dailey v. Westchester F. Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 173.

all right and interest in the granted premises, whether at law or in equity." Afterwards the plaintiff foreclosed the mortgage for a breach of the condition, and sold the property under the power, and became the purchaser at the sale. This was done without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, and the plaintiff has since held the estate under the title acquired by the sale. The question is whether this was a sale within the meaning of the word as used in the policy.

We see no good reason for doubt in regard to it. Coupled with the interest conveyed to the mortgagee was an independent power to make an absolute sale of the property, which should convey all the title, both of the mortgagor and the mortgagee. If any other person than the mortgagee had bought at the sale, there can be no question that the transfer would have been of a perfect title. The transaction is not changed in character or legal effect by the fact that the mortgagee became the purchaser.

Nor are the rights which the mortgagee would have had under the policy if the fire had occurred before the foreclosure of any consequence in the case. These rights were terminated and the ownership entirely changed and a new title created by the exercise of the power of sale. There was a sale of the property, within the meaning of the policy, without the consent of the defendant, and thereupon all rights under the policy came to an end.

Judgment affirmed.

And it has been held that a mortgagee is entitled to recover only as appointee of the mortgagor, where a policy issued to the latter contains slips making the loss payable to the mortgagee, and his right of recovery has been held defeated by an absolute conveyance to him by the mortgagor, where the policy contained a provision making it void in case of change in interest, title, or possession. Brecht v. Law Union & Crown Ins. Co. 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197, 87 C. C. A. 351, 160 Fed. 399.

The holding in the foregoing cases, however, is not acquiesced in by all courts.

Thus, it has been held that a policy issued to the mortgagor, loss, if any, payable to the mortgagee, and providing for notice to the insurer in case of change of ownership, was not avoided by failure to give such notice when the mortgagee became the purchaser on foreclosure. Dodge v. Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. 4 Kan. App. 415, 46 Pac. 25. The court said: "When an insurance company insures a mortgage lien, it must anticipate that, upon default, the lien holder will begin foreclosure proceedings, obtain judgment, and secure a sale of the mortgaged property. There can be no question but that the mortgagee is protected by the terms of the contract with the insurance company until the sale is confirmed and the money ordered by the court to be paid to the mortgagee. Is the purchaser also protected by the terms of the contract, and does it make any difference whether the mortgagee or a stranger is the purchaser? If a stranger is the purchaser, there is a change of ownership. If the mortgagee is the purchaser, his interest is changed from a lien holder to an owner in fee. Counsel for defendant in error contend that the interest of 'John L. Dodge, mortgagee,' was insured, and not the interest of 'John L. Dodge, owner,' and that, in order to have held the insurance in force, Dodge should have notified the company of the change of the fee title, and obtained the consent of the company to the change. They argue that the company might have been willing to have insured the property if Mrs. Cowley was the owner, but not if Dodge was the owner. The property was occupied by a tenant as a dwelling when it was insured and when it burned. It cannot be said that the hazard was increased by the transfer of the interest of Dodge from a lien holder to a judgment creditor, and then to an owner in fee. The insurance company was willing to insure Dodge as the assignee of the mortgagee. The contention of counsel for the insurance company is that Dodge failed to notify the company of the change of ownership which occurred when he purchased the property at sheriff's sale, and have the permission of the insurance company for the change of ownership indorsed upon the policy. We cannot think that this is such a change of ownership as is contemplated by that clause of the subrogation contract. The change of ownership in this case increased the interest of Dodge, who, under the subrogation contract, is the insured. In no way was the risk increased. The title had not vested in someone other than the insured. It cannot be said that the insurance company might not be willing to insure the property with Dodge as the owner, because Dodge was already the insured."

23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

And under a like policy issued after the mortgage had been foreclosed, but before the time of redemption had expired, the policy was held not to be avoided by the mortgagee's failure to give notice of the nonredemption from the mortgage sale, although the policy provided for notice of any change of ownership; it appearing that the mortgagee had bid in the property at the foreclosure sale. Washburn Mill Co. v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 60 Minn. 68, 51 Am. St. Rep. 500, 61 N. W. 828. To the same effect is Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 170, 70 N. W. 979.

And a clause in a policy issued to the mortgagor, making the loss payable to the mortgagee, and providing that the latter should notify the insurer of any change of ownership, has been held not to be violated by the execution of a quitclaim deed to the mortgagee. Ft. Scott Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Palatine Ins. Co. 74 Kan. 272, 86 Pac. 142.

So, a policy issued to the mortgagor, having a loss-payable clause, and containing a provision for avoidance in case of alienation, was held not to be defeated by a foreclosure through which the mortgagee became the owner. Bragg v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co. 25 N. H. 289. The court said: "The title, which became perfected in Prescott [the mortgagee] by means of the foreclosure, was brought about by the operation of law. There was no act of conveyance or transfer by Bragg to Prescott; nothing done by Bragg after the execution of the mortgage and the effecting of the insurance, which gave to Prescott any more rights than those possessed by him when the policy was issued. Bragg did nothing to alienate the property; and the perfection of the title was the mere operation of law, resulting from the situation of the property as it existed at the time of the insurance, and which the defendants might well have foreseen. We cannot, therefore, regard the foreclosure to be an alienation. The title and possession of the property remain in the same persons as when it was insured; and the rights of Prescott through Bragg still exist."

And a transfer of possession and control of the insured property to the mortgagee has been held not a breach of a policy issued to the mortgagor, and assigned, with the insurer's consent, to the mortgagee, which contained a provision that it should become void if the property "shall be sold and conveyed." Washington Ins. Co. v. Hayes, 17 Ohio St. 432, 93 Am. Dec. 628. The court said: "The delivery of the possession of the stock to the mortgagee upon a mortgage made before the insurance was effected would not literally come within the stipulation contained in the policy, that, if the property 'shall be sold and conveyed,' the policy shall be void. It is to be presumed that the company knew that the property had then been conditionally sold, when the policy containing a provision against future alienation was made."

And where the mortgagor bid in the property upon foreclosure, and thus increased his interest, this was held not to be a "change of title" which defeated his insurance. Continental Ins. Co. v. Ward, 50 Kan. 346, 31 Pac. 1079.

Policies issuing to mortgagee.

Where the policy originally issues to the mortgagee, the cases seem agreed that the fact that he subsequently acquires the title, and thereby increases his interest, does not constitute a breach of conditions against sale or transfer of title.

Thus, a release to a mortgagee of the equity of redemption has been held not a breach of a condition in a policy issued to him, which provided that, if the property should "be sold or conveyed, the policy should become void." Heaton v. Manhattan F. Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 502. To the same effect is Bailey v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 4 McCrary, 221, 13 Fed. 250. The court, in the latter 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

case, said: "At all events, it seems clear, both upon reason and authority, that a change of title which increases the interest of the assured, whether the same be by sale under judicial decree or by voluntary conveyance, does not defeat the insurance. This is especially true of a case like the present, where the insurance is upon the interest of a mortgagee. In such a case the parties must have contemplated the possibility, at least, that the mortgage would be foreclosed, and the full title and right of possession pass to the mortgagee. The defendant was bound to expect that complainant would foreclose his mortgage if his debt was not paid at maturity. It must be remembered that the foreclosure, sale, and change of title and possession complained of, are the necessary result of the proceedings to enforce the very mortgage which complainant held upon the property when he applied for the insurance, and that it was for the purpose of insuring his interest under it that he applied for and obtained the policy now in question."

And a policy taken by a mortgagee upon his interest, and containing a clause against change of title, has been held not avoided by foreclosure by which the mortgagee became the sole owner. Each Bros. v. Home Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 334, 16 Am. St. Rep. 443, 43 N. W. 229. To the same effect are Wich v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 2 Colo. App. 484, 31 Pac. 389, and Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wich, 8 Colo. App. 409, 46 Pac. 687.

So, the taking possession by a mortgagee upon default has been held not to constitute a change of possession, within the meaning of a policy issued originally to him. German v. Guardian F. Ins. Co. 46 Ill. App. 489.

A case somewhat analogous to the question under consideration arose in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Liddell Co. 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 168, 124 Am. St. Rep. 157, 60 S. E. 104. There the execution of a chattel mortgage by the insured to one protected by the policy as a purchase-money creditor, retaining title to secure payment, was held a violation of a provision against encumbering the property by a chattel mortgage.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

NATHANIEL M. NELSON

v.

J. H. WINCHELL & COMPANY et al.
Appts.

(— Mass. —, 89 N. E. 180.)

Trademark — jobber — goods made to order.

1. That a seller of shoes is not the manufacturer of them does not prevent his obtaining a valid trademark in connection with them, if he has them manufactured to is order, controlling the design, materials, and workmanship.

Same — license — assumed name.

2. One who, doing business under an assumed name, acquires a trademark in such name, may license or assign the use of such mark in connection with such name, and does not thereby lose the right to assume its use again upon termination of the license.

Same — fraud.

3. The mere fact that a jobber of shoes who has them manufactured under his direction, for his trade, uses a letter head in which he describes himself as a manufacturer of shoes, is not such fraud as will destroy his right to equitable relief against one who infringes his trademark.

Appeal — unassailed error.

4. Refusal of the trial judge to modify his findings at the time of entering an interlocutory decree, so as to make them accord with the facts subsequently found by the master, will not be reversed, where counsel announced before the master that he did not seek to overthrow the findings of the judge.

Evidence — use for intended purposes.

5. One seeking an accounting of profits for infringement of his trademark is not barred from claiming that he had not been guilty of fraud which would prevent his recovery by isolated facts brought out on the hearing before the master, avowedly for another purpose, and with no view to raising that issue.

Trademark — license — revocation.

6. One who, by the consent and aid of the owner of a trademark, acquires the reputation of being the manufacturer of the goods sold under it, cannot continue to make use of it on his goods after the consent of the owner is withdrawn.

Case Note. — Effect of false representations extrinsic to the tradename or trademark, on the right to protection against infringement of same.

This subject is covered in a note appended to Johnson & Johnson v. Seabury & Johnson, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1201. The general doctrine therein stated, that the maxim that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands does not apply to the owner of a trademark or tradename who seeks to protect the same from infringement by a competitor, where, in the tradename or trademark, or the label used in connection therewith, no representations are made, but such representations are extrinsic or collateral thereto, is in harmony with that stated and applied in NELSON v. J. H. WINCHELL & Co.

But one case in point other than that under annotation has been found subsequent to that note. The case of A. N. Chamberlain Medicine Co. v. H. A. Chamberlain Medicine Co. (Ind. App.) 86 N. E. 1025, while not considering the question as affected by the fact that the misrepresentations were collateral to the trademark or tradename, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Same — accounting.

7. That the owner of a trademark aided his licensee in acquiring the reputation of being the manufacturer of the product sold under it does not make it inequitable to require the licensee to account for the profits which he made by continued use of the trademark after the license had been withdrawn.

Same — tradename — termination of right.

8. The expiration of a license to use a trademark which has been acquired for use in connection with a business name will terminate the right to use the name in connection with which it was used.

Same — profits — no showing of loss.

9. The absence of evidence that the owner of a trademark has sustained damage because of another's use of it does not make it inequitable to hold the latter liable to him for profits made by its use.

Damages — wrongful use of trademark — license fee.

10. The sum fixed by the parties to be paid annually for the use of a trademark and business name is evidence of the damages to be allowed for their wrongful use after the expiration of the contract right.

Trademark — laches — effect.

11. A delay of two years in seeking to recover profits due to the infringement of a trademark, which is caused in part by negotiations for a settlement, will not bar a right to maintain the suit, at least, where defendants act under express notice that they would be held accountable for infringement of plaintiff's rights.

Same — advice of counsel — profits.

12. One who makes use of another's trademark after notice and warning not to do so cannot be said to be free from wrongful intent, so as to avoid liability for profits, al-

enunciates an exception to the general rule applicable to that state of facts, which would doubtless be recognized by the courts wherein the general rule has been stated and applied. In this case, although the misrepresentations were extrinsic to the trademark or tradename, they were held to be sufficient to preclude the complainant from relief for an infringement, because the misrepresentations, which related to the curative properties of a patent medicine, were considered by the court to be an attempt grossly to impose upon the public, as well as being a menace to human life. On this subject the court said: "If the business of such complainant is, or is sought to be, affected and injured by the misrepresentation or deceit of another, he cannot be heard in a plea that, by the fraudulent rivalry of another, his own fraudulent profits are destroyed or diminished. The exclusive privilege of deceiving or perpetrating a fraud upon the public is hardly a fit subject to be entertained in a court of equity, and certainly not one that such a court can be required to aid or sanction."

So, a policy issued to the mortgagor, having a loss-payable clause, and containing a provision for avoidance in case of alienation, was held not to be defeated by a foreclosure through which the mortgagee became the owner. Bragg v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co. 25 N. H. 289. The court said: "The title, which became perfected in Prescott [the mortgagee] by means of the foreclosure, was brought about by the operation of law. There was no act of conveyance or transfer by Bragg to Prescott; nothing done by Bragg after the execution of the mortgage and the effecting of the insurance, which gave to Prescott any more rights than those possessed by him when the policy was issued. Bragg did nothing to alienate the property; and the perfection of the title was the mere operation of law, resulting from the situation of the property as it existed at the time of the insurance, and which the defendants might well have foreseen. We cannot, therefore, regard the foreclosure to be an alienation. The title and possession of the property remain in the same persons as when it was insured; and the rights of Prescott through Bragg still exist."

And a transfer of possession and control of the insured property to the mortgagee has been held not a breach of a policy issued to the mortgagor, and assigned, with the insurer's consent, to the mortgagee, which contained a provision that it should become void if the property "shall be sold and conveyed." Washington Ins. Co. v. Hayes, 17 Ohio St. 432, 93 Am. Dec. 628. The court said: "The delivery of the possession of the stock to the mortgagee upon a mortgage made before the insurance was effected would not literally come within the stipulation contained in the policy, that, if the property 'shall be sold and conveyed,' the policy shall be void. It is to be presumed that the company knew that the property had then been conditionally sold, when the policy containing a provision against future alienation was made."

And where the mortgagor bid in the property upon foreclosure, and thus increased his interest, this was held not to be a "change of title" which defeated his insurance. Continental Ins. Co. v. Ward, 50 Kan. 346, 31 Pac. 1079.

Policies issuing to mortgagee.

Where the policy originally issues to the mortgagee, the cases seem agreed that the fact that he subsequently acquires the title, and thereby increases his interest, does not constitute a breach of conditions against sale or transfer of title.

Thus, a release to a mortgagee of the equity of redemption has been held not a breach of a condition in a policy issued to him, which provided that, if the property should "be sold or conveyed, the policy should become void." Heaton v. Manhattan F. Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 502. To the same effect is Bailey v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 4 McCrary, 221, 13 Fed. 250. The court, in the latter 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

case, said: "At all events, it seems clear, both upon reason and authority, that a change of title which increases the interest of the assured, whether the same be by sale under judicial decree or by voluntary conveyance, does not defeat the insurance. This is especially true of a case like the present, where the insurance is upon the interest of a mortgagee. In such a case the parties must have contemplated the possibility, at least, that the mortgage would be foreclosed, and the full title and right of possession pass to the mortgagee. The defendant was bound to expect that complainant would foreclose his mortgage if his debt was not paid at maturity. It must be remembered that the foreclosure, sale, and change of title and possession complained of, are the necessary result of the proceedings to enforce the very mortgage which complainant held upon the property when he applied for the insurance, and that it was for the purpose of insuring his interest under it that he applied for and obtained the policy now in question."

And a policy taken by a mortgagee upon his interest, and containing a clause against change of title, has been held not avoided by foreclosure by which the mortgagee became the sole owner. Each Bros. v. Home Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 334, 16 Am. St. Rep. 443, 43 N. W. 229. To the same effect are Wich v. Equitable F. & M. Ins. Co. 2 Colo. App. 484, 31 Pac. 389, and Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wich, 8 Colo. App. 409, 46 Pac. 687.

So, the taking possession by a mortgagee upon default has been held not to constitute a change of possession, within the meaning of a policy issued originally to him. Getman v. Guardian F. Ins. Co. 46 Ill. App. 489.

A case somewhat analogous to the question under consideration arose in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Liddell Co. 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 168, 124 Am. St. Rep. 157, 60 S. E. 104. There the execution of a chattel mortgage by the insured to one protected by the policy as a purchase-money creditor, retaining title to secure payment, was held a violation of a provision against encumbering the property by a chattel mortgage.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

NATHANIEL M. NELSON

v.

J. H. WINCHELL & COMPANY et al,
Appts.

(— Mass. —, 89 N. E. 180.)

Trademark — jobber — goods made to order.

1. That a seller of shoes is not the manufacturer of them does not prevent his obtaining a valid trademark in connection with them, if he has them manufactured to his order, controlling the design, materials, and workmanship.

Same — license — assumed name.

2. One who, doing business under an assumed name, acquires a trademark in such name, may license or assign the use of such mark in connection with such name, and does not thereby lose the right to assume its use again upon termination of the license.

Same — fraud.

3. The mere fact that a jobber of shoes who has them manufactured under his direction, for his trade, uses a letter head in which he describes himself as a manufacturer of shoes, is not such fraud as will destroy his right to equitable relief against one who infringes his trademark.

Appeal — unassailed error.

4. Refusal of the trial judge to modify his findings at the time of entering an interlocutory decree, so as to make them accord with the facts subsequently found by the master, will not be reversed, where counsel announced before the master that he did not seek to overthrow the findings of the judge.

Evidence — use for intended purposes.

5. One seeking an accounting of profits for infringement of his trademark is not barred from claiming that he had not been guilty of fraud which would prevent his recovery by isolated facts brought out on the hearing before the master, avowedly for another purpose, and with no view to raising that issue.

Trademark — license — revocation.

6. One who, by the consent and aid of the owner of a trademark, acquires the reputation of being the manufacturer of the goods sold under it, cannot continue to make use of it on his goods after the consent of the owner is withdrawn.

Case Note. — Effect of false representations extrinsic to the tradename or trademark, on the right to protection against infringement of same.

This subject is covered in a note appended to Johnson & Johnson v. Seabury & Johnson, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1201. The general doctrine therein stated, that the maxim that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands does not apply to the owner of a trademark or tradename who seeks to protect the same from infringement by a competitor, where, in the tradename or trademark, or the label used in connection therewith, no representations are made, but such representations are extrinsic or collateral thereto, is in harmony with that stated and applied in NELSON v. J. H. WINCHELL & Co.

But one case in point other than that under annotation has been found subsequent to that note. The case of A. N. Chamberlain Medicine Co. v. H. A. Chamberlain Medicine Co. (Ind. App.) 86 N. E. 1025, while not considering the question as affected by the fact that the misrepresentations were collateral to the trademark or tradename, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — accounting.

7. That the owner of a trademark aided his licensee in acquiring the reputation of being the manufacturer of the product sold under it does not make it inequitable to require the licensee to account for the profits which he made by continued use of the trademark after the license had been withdrawn.

Same — tradename — termination of right.

8. The expiration of a license to use a trademark which has been acquired for use in connection with a business name will terminate the right to use the name in connection with which it was used.

Same — profits — no showing of loss.

9. The absence of evidence that the owner of a trademark has sustained damage because of another's use of it does not make it inequitable to hold the latter liable to him for profits made by its use.

Damages — wrongful use of trademark — license fee.

10. The sum fixed by the parties to be paid annually for the use of a trademark and business name is evidence of the damages to be allowed for their wrongful use after the expiration of the contract right.

Trademark — laches — effect.

11. A delay of two years in seeking to recover profits due to the infringement of a trademark, which is caused in part by negotiations for a settlement, will not bar a right to maintain the suit, at least, where defendants act under express notice that they would be held accountable for infringement of plaintiff's rights.

Same — advice of counsel — profits.

12. One who makes use of another's trademark after notice and warning not to do so cannot be said to be free from wrongful intent, so as to avoid liability for profits, al-

enunciates an exception to the general rule applicable to that state of facts, which would doubtless be recognized by the courts wherein the general rule has been stated and applied. In this case, although the misrepresentations were extrinsic to the trademark or tradename, they were held to be sufficient to preclude the complainant from relief for an infringement, because the misrepresentations, which related to the curative properties of a patent medicine, were considered by the court to be an attempt grossly to impose upon the public, as well as being a menace to human life. On this subject the court said: "If the business of such complainant is, or is sought to be, affected and injured by the misrepresentation or deceit of another, he cannot be heard in a plea that, by the fraudulent rivalry of another, his own fraudulent profits are destroyed or diminished. The exclusive privilege of deceiving or perpetrating a fraud upon the public is hardly a fit subject to be entertained in a court of equity, and certainly not one that such a court can be required to aid or sanction."

facture any shoes, but bought his goods from manufacturers, largely from the defendants. He had put upon the market shoes stamped with the name "Washington," and a portrait of George Washington, which shoes were manufactured for him and under his direction, by the defendants. Through his efforts, these shoes had become well and favorably known to the trade and the public under the name of the "Washington shoe," and that had become a valuable trademark. In April, 1899, he caused the word "Washington" and said portrait to be registered in the office of the secretary of the commonwealth, as a trademark used by himself under the style of the Washington Shoe Company. Stat. 1895 chap. 462, § 1, p. 519; Stat. 1899, chap. 359, § 1, p. 319; Rev. Laws, chap. 72, § 7. In October, 1900, he entered into the defendants' employ under a verbal agreement, and they took over the business which he had carried on, and have since manufactured and sold shoes stamped with his trademark and known as the "Washington shoes," he having charge of this part of their business as long as he remained in their employ. Subsequently, they caused the trademark to be registered in the Patent Office at Washington in their name. But this was done without any authority from the plaintiff, and he did not know of it until shortly before he brought this suit. He did not assign the trademark to them; he did not abandon his right to it; there was no understanding that it was to become the property of the defendants; and their only right was to use it as his licensees so long as he remained in their employ upon mutually satisfactory terms; and it was so understood by the parties. He left their employ in February, 1903, on account of a disagreement as to his compensation; and their subsequent use of his trademark or label was illegal and without right.

On these facts, the single justice ruled that the plaintiff was entitled to have the defendants restrained from continuing this unlawful use; and by an interlocutory decree they were so enjoined, and the case was sent to a master to take an account, and to determine the damages and the profits, if any, to which the plaintiff was entitled, but reserving consideration of the plaintiff's right to claim profits as such until the coming in of the master's report. The case was heard at length before the master, and he reported that the net profits obtained by the defendants from the sale of shoes bearing the label were $12,563.66, but that the plaintiff's damages were only the nominal sum of $1. Numerous exceptions to this report were overruled; a motion made by the defendants for a revision of the findings of the justice at the hearing on the merits was 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

denied; and a final decree was entered, perpetually enjoining the defendants from using the plaintiff's trademark or label, with certain exceptions, not now material, and ordering them to pay to him the total amount of profits and damages found by the master. The case now comes before us upon the defendants' appeal from the interlocutory and final orders and decrees.

1. In the opinion of a majority of the court, the plaintiff, although not himself the manufacturer of the shoes which he sold, could, under the circumstances, create a valid trademark upon them. He was a jobber, and not strictly a manufacturer. But the shoes were manufactured by the defendants especially and solely for him and in accordance with his directions. He was to be himself responsible to purchasers as if he had been the manufacturer. He dictated the stock to be used and the way in which he wished the shoes to be made, and went to the defendants' factory to see that his ideas were carried out. He determined the design, the material, and the workmanship of the shoes. In short, as he put it in his testimony, he controlled the manufacture of the shoes upon which his label was to be put. We see no reason to doubt the validity of his trademark. Burt v. Tucker, 178 Mass. 493, 52 L.R.A. 112, 86 Am. St. Rep. 499, 59 N. E. 1111; Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450, 12 Am. Rep. 401. The use of a trademark does not necessarily and as matter of law import that the articles upon which it is used are manufactured by its user. It may be enough that they are manufactured for him, that he controls their production, or even that they pass through his hands in the course of trade, and that he gives to them the benefit of his reputation, or of his name and business style. Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 102, 8 L.R.A. 640, 25 N. E. 46; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 253, 24 L. ed. 828, 831; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 520, 32 L. ed. 526, 527, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 143; Godillot v. Harria, 81 N. Y. 263, 266; Re Australian Wine Importers, L. R. 41 Ch. Div. 278, 280, 281; Major Bros. v. Franklin [1908] 1 K. B. 712. It was so assumed in Ullmann v. Leuba [1908] A. C. 443. And this was not a personal trademark, but one connected with the business carried on by him under the name of the Washington Shoe Company. It could be assigned and made to pass with a transfer of that business and that name. Burt v. Tucker, supra; Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 58 Am. Rep. 149, 10 N. E. 713; Warren v. Warren Thread Co. 134 Mass. 247; MacMahan Pharmacal Co. v. Denver Chemical Mfg. Co. 51 C. C. A. 302, 113 Fed. 469, 474, 475. As the absolute property in it could have been so assigned, a limited interest by way of license, to continue either for a fixed period or while license fees were paid, or while the plaintiff should continue in the employment of the defendants, could also be created. Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 25 L. ed. 769; Batcheller v. Thomson, 35 C. C. A. 532, 93 Fed. 660; Greacen v. Bell (C. C.) 115 Fed. 553; Martha Washington, C. B. Flour Co. v. Martien (C. C.) 44 Fed. 473, and 37 Fed. 797; Filkins v. Blackman, 13 Blatchf. 440, Fed. Cas. No. 4786. Of course, the plaintiff's temporary disuse of the trademark during the period of such license would not necessarily operate an abandonment of his rights. Burt v. Tucker, 178 Mass. 493, 501, 52 L.R.A. 112, 86 Am. St. Rep. 499, 59 N. E. 1111.

2. But it is claimed that the plaintiff, even before he entered the employ of the defendants, represented to the dealers to whom he made sales in the name and style of the Washington Shoe Company, that that company, which then consisted solely of himself, was the manufacturer of the shoes which he sold with this label. He was known to the trade as a manufacturer, and not as a jobber. His letter heads read: "Washington Shoe Co., Manufacturers of Specialties. Men's, Boys' and Youths' Shoes." The defendants contend that this conduct of the plaintiff was the practice of a fraud upon his customers, and that for this reason, although the trademark was itself valid, he should have no relief in equity. And it is true that equity will not lend its aid against the infringers of a trademark which contains a material false representation, adapted to deceive purchasers of the article sold with it, or which is made the basis of material false representations in carrying on that business in which it is used. Connell v. Reed, 128 Mass. 477, 35 Am. Rep. 397; Messer v. The Fadettes, 168 Mass. 140, 37 L.R.A. 721, 60 Am. St. Rep. 371, 46 N. E. 407; Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 593, 58 Am. Rep. 149, 10 N. E. 713; Manhattan Medicine Co. v. Wood, 108 U. S. 218, 27 L. ed. 706, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Pidding v. How, 8 Sim. 477; Perry v. Truefitt, 6 Beav. 66; Flavel v. Harrison, 10 Hare, 467; Cheavin v. Walker, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 850; Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. 4 De G. J. & S. 139, and 11 H. L. Cas. 523. This is but an application of the common maxim that he who seeks equity must come into court with clean hands. If his case discloses fraud, deception, or misrepresentation on his own part, relief will be denied to him. California Fig Syrup Co. v. Putnam, 16 C. C. A. 376, 33 U. S. App. 283, 69 Fed. 740, and (C. C.) 66 Fed. 750; Krauss v. Jos. R. Peebles' Sons Co. (C. C.) 58 Fed. 585; Prince Mfg. Co. v. Prince's Metallic Paint Co. 135 N. Y. 24, 17

L.R.A. 129, 31 N. E. 990; Hobbs v. Francis, 19 How. Pr. 567; Palmer v. Harris, 60 Pa. 156, 100 Am. Dec. 557; Kenny v. Gillet, 70 Md. 574, 17 Atl. 499; Solis Cigar Co. v. Pozo, 16 Colo. 388, 25 Am. St. Rep. 279, 26 Pac. 556.

But this defense was not set up in the answer of the defendants, and does not appear to have been taken at the hearing before the single justice. Their position was that they, and not the plaintiff, had originated and owned the trademark, or that they had become its owners under the agreement by which he entered into their employ. The justice found against them on this issue, and the evidence clearly justified his finding. The claim now contended for was not put in issue, certainly was not tried out before the single justice. On the other evidence taken before him, the fact that the plaintiff's letter heads contained the words which have been quoted did not establish the further fact that he was deceiving his customers by false representations that he was the manufacturer of those shoes. Further evidence taken in connection with the use of this letter head doubtless might have established the fact. But the label itself contained no false representation. Moreover, the justice might have found on the weight of the evidence, and it now must be taken that he did find, that these shoes were manufactured under the general direction of the plaintiff, as already has been pointed out. And by his first arrangement with the defendants he was entitled to sell, and apparently did sell, the shoes in the same manner, upon the same terms, and for the same prices, as if he had been himself the manufacturer. Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450, 12 Am. Rep. 401; Dale v. Smithsonian, 12 Abb. Pr. 237. But merely collateral representations, though false, will not bar the owner of a trademark from relief, either at law or in equity. Ford v. Foster, L. R. 7 Ch. 611, cited and followed in Siebert v. Findlater, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 801, 811, Liebig's Extract of Meat Co. v. Anderson, 55 L. T. N. S. 208, 209, and Newman v. Pinto, 57 L. T. N. S. 30, 38. See also William Rogers Mfg. Co. v. Simpson, H. M. & Co. 54 Conn. 527, 9 Atl. 395. The case of Pratt's Appeal, 117 Pa. 401, 2 Am. St. Rep. 676, 11 Atl. 878, though it has been criticized, may yet, in our opinion, be sustained on the ground that the trademark there considered came under the same rule as in Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 58 Am. Rep. 149, 10 N. E. 713, and that no material false representations had been made by the plaintiff.

On the whole, so far as this question is concerned, the majority of the court are satisfied that the single justice was warrant-

(C. C.) 75 Fed. 1015. But for the fact that the plaintiff apparently had elected not to claim damages as such, it might become a serious question whether the master's finding that there was no evidence of damages was not manifestly wrong. But it appears, both upon principle and from the cases already cited, that the defendants' actual profits cannot be decisively measured by the amount of this license fee.

9. The plaintiff has not been guilty of such laches as to deprive him of the right to require an account of profits. He delayed bringing this suit for nearly two years; and there is authority for the contention that, if nothing further had appeared, this unexplained delay might have produced the result claimed by the defendants. Beard v. Turner, 13 L. T. N. S. 746; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 526, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 143; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 247, 24 L. ed. 828, 829; N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Luckel, K. & C. Soap Co. 54 C. C. A. 204, 116 Fed. 332; Low v. Fels (C. C.) 35 Fed. 361; Regis v. Jaynes, 191 Mass. 245, 247, 77 N. E. 774. But there were further facts. It was found by the single justice that the delay was in part caused by negotiations between counsel for the parties. There was evidence before the master that it was due in part to the plaintiff's desire to collect other money due to him from the defendants. Beside these circumstances, which it might have been found accounted for less than six months of the delay, there is the conceded fact that, immediately upon leaving the defendant's employ, the plaintiff, through his counsel, expressly notified them of his claim, and warned them that he would hold them legally responsible for any further use of his trademark or of his former business name. This made it manifest that he did not acquiesce in such further use by them. In this respect the case differs from most of those cited above. There was here a real objection instead of merely an apprehended one, as in Daly v. Foss, 199 Mass. 104, 85 N. E. 94. Nor is the defense of laches set up in the answer.

10. After the plaintiff's notice and warning, the defendants' further use of this label cannot be said to have been innocent or free from wrongful intent. Ewing v. Johnston, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 434; Brennan & Co. v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. 89 C. C. A. 392, 162 Fed. 472; Regis v. Jaynes, 191 Mass. 245, 248, 77 N. E. 774. So far as it was necessary to show wrongful or fraudulent conduct on their part (see Singer Mach. Mfrs. Co. v. Wilson, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 376), this was enough. They cannot shield themselves under the plea that they acted upon the advice of counsel, even if we assume, without deciding, that this would in any event have protected them; for it does not appear that they communicated to their counsel all the facts upon which that advice should have been based. The finding of the single justice that they had received simply a temporary license from the plaintiff, and that they had no further right, did not create this fact; it simply declared the existence of a fact which they must be taken to have known, and which undoubtedly they did know. But there is no pretense that they communicated this highly material fact to their counsel; and his letter of February 9, 1903, to the plaintiff's counsel, makes it very plain that he was wholly ignorant of its existence.

11. We cannot say, in spite of the very able and elaborate argument of the defendants' counsel, that the master's finding of the amount of the defendants' profits was wrong. He had a right to treat the cost sheet prepared by Clark, one of the defendants' original firm, and adopted and acted on by the defendants in the conduct of their business, as evidence of the cost of their shoes, and to accept its figures as correct, in the absence of explicit evidence to the contrary. In other words, he had the right to find, as he did find, that the cost sheet at least furnished the best basis for ascertaining such cost, especially in view of the fact that Clark was fully acquainted with the business and with the market price and cost of merchandise and all other elements of labor and expense, and that throughout the preparation of these estimates it was intended to leave a leeway or margin of profit in favor of the manufacturers. He had a right to treat the failure of the defendants, after they had received notice of the plaintiff's claim, to keep accounts which would show accurately the amount of their expenses and of their profits upon Washington shoes as a circumstance bearing against them. He did not go further than the rules laid down in Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 788, 19 L. ed. 566; Brennan & Co. v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. supra; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. 62, 108, and Docker v. Somes, 2 Myl. & K. 674. As to losses from bad debts, he adopted the doctrine of Edelsten v. Edelsten, 10 L. T. N. S. 780, neither increasing the amount of profits by reason of such sales nor diminishing that amount on account of the loss caused thereby; but practically treating those sales as if they had not been made at all. In our opinion, this was right. As to the allowance of general expenses of the business, he followed the rule laid down in Regis v. Jaynes, 191 Mass. 245, 251, 252, 77 N. E. 774. Here, as there, to allow the defendants to charge against their profits upon these goods any portion of such expenses not shown to have been increased by their dealing in these goods would be to permit them, by diminishing the expenses of conducting the rest of their business, to derive a direct advantage from their own wrongdoing. But since, as we shall hereafter see, the defendants are to be allowed their manufacturing profits, this question becomes less important. We see no advantage in going through the calculations made in argument and the figures laid before us in detail. We do not find that the master adopted any erroneous rule of law in dealing with them, or that any of his findings upon them were manifestly wrong.

12. The master has charged the defendants with the total profits realized on the shoes sold by them with the plaintiff's trademark. This is the general rule. Reading Stove Works v. S. M. Howes Co. 201 Mass. 437, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 979, 87 N. E. 751; Regis v. Jaynes, 191 Mass. 245, 249, 250, 77 N. E. 774, and cases there cited. But, as has been said, the circumstances of this case are peculiar. This trademark was not a manufacturer's, but a jobber's trademark. The plaintiff never could have realized, he never expected to realize, from it the profits of a manufacturer, but only those of a jobber. Its validity has been sustained simply as the trademark of a jobber. It was to become operative only upon shoes which had already yielded a manufacturer's profit. It was capable of yielding only the profits of a jobber. We are not called upon to determine what would be the measure of liability of a manufacturer who should, as a mere wrongdoer, appropriate a jobber's trademark. These parties had from the beginning dealt with each other as manufacturer and jobber of the Washington shoe. The plaintiff did not himself manufacture his shoes while he alone held the trademark, but bought them from the defendants. They sold the shoes to him, apparently for a somewhat less price than they obtained from their other customers for shoes of a like quality not bearing his label, but still for a price which doubtless yielded them a manufacturer's profit. He then sold the shoes under his trademark for a somewhat higher price, made higher by the addition of a sum which constituted the profit attributable to his trademark. That is, these parties had in the beginning, by the course of dealing which they adopted, divided the total profits to be obtained from these shoes into two portions,—a manufacturer's profit for the defendants and a trademark profit for the plaintiff. In this respect the case differs from any of those which have been cited at the bar, nor have we found any other case of the same character. Under 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) these circumstances, the plaintiff entered into the defendants' employ, and, for certain payments made by them, allowed them by his license to take to themselves both the manufacturing and the trademark profits. When he left them, they had a right still to manufacture the shoes, but not to put his label upon them; and when they continued wrongfully to do the latter in spite of his prohibition, their gain and his loss were the same, i. e., the amount of the trademark profits. They ought then to have paid over to him at once the amount of the trademark profits, undiminished; but they had a right to retain for themselves the manufacturing profits. In the opinion of a majority of the court, they now should account to him for the trademark profits which were originally and lawfully his; they ought not to be required to account for the manufacturing profits, to which he never had any claim. To state the case in symbols, the total amount received by the defendants from their wrongful sales may be represented by the expression $a+b+c$, in which a represents the total cost of the shoes, including all items which properly can be included therein, b is the manufacturing profit, and c is the trademark profit. The master has found the total amount of b and c to be $12,565.66, and the finding must stand. But, of this total, the part represented by b , the manufacturing profit, should be left to the defendants, and the part represented by c , the trademark profit, should be given to the plaintiff. Cartier v. Carlile, 31 Beav. 292, 298, 299; Atlantic Mill. Co. v. Rowland (C. C.) 27 Fed. 24. This is the fundamental principal of Ludington Novelty Co. v. Leonard, 62 C. C. A. 269, 127 Fed. 155. And under the special circumstances of this case, the amount to be received by the plaintiff should be determined according to what was done by the parties between December, 1898, when the plaintiff began to use his trademark, and October, 1900, when he entered into the employ of the defendants. That is, the plaintiff is to be allowed the same proportional part of the sum found by the master that he obtained of the total profits above the cost of manufacture while he used this trademark for himself. He should have also interest from the date of the filing of the master's original report. If the parties cannot agree upon this amount, the case must be recommitted to the master to determine it. This question has not been raised upon any of the exceptions to the master's report; but, upon the defendants' appeal, we must determine what decree is to be entered, and this necessarily requires us to fix the amount of profits for which, upon the facts found and reported, the defendants are to be held accountable. French v. Peters, 177 Mass. 508, 59 N. E. 449; Huntress v. Hanley, 195 Mass. 236, 239, 80 N. E. 946.

13. It is not necessary to consider in detail the other exceptions taken by the defendants. They cannot be sustained.

14. The defendants also contend that original jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this suit is vested in the courts of the United States, and that this court has not jurisdiction to entertain the case. In our opinion that contention is without merit. Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550; Re Keasbey & M. Co. 160 U. S. 221, 230, 40 L. ed. 402, 405, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Elgin Nat. Watch Co. v. Illinois Watch Case Co. 179 U. S. 665, 45 L. ed. 365, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 270, affirming s. c. 35 C. C. A. 237, 94 Fed. 667; Traiser v. J. W. Doty Cigar Co. 198 Mass. 327, 84 N. E. 462; Regis v. Jaynes, 191 Mass. 245, 253, 77 N. E. 774; Smail v. Sanders, 118 Ind. 105, 20 N. E. 296.

The final decree must be modified in accordance with the twelfth division of this opinion. In all other respects the orders and decrees appealed from must be affirmed. So ordered.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

FRANCIS C. WELCH, Trustee, etc.,
v.
GEORGE R. SWASEY et al., Board of Appeal.

(193 Mass. 364, 79 N. E. 745.)

Building — limitation of height — police power.

1. The state may, in the exercise of the police power, limit the height of buildings to be erected in cities when, in its judgment, the public health or public safety so require.

Same — restrictions — discrimination.

2. The legislature, in regulating the height of buildings in a city, may permit them to be higher in the sections where there is a call for office space than in the residential portions, although the streets in the former may be narrower than in the latter.

Legislature — delegation of power — building commission.

3. The legislature may delegate to a commission the power to determine the boundaries of the sections of a city in which the buildings of different heights as determined by the legislature shall be erected.

Same — self-government.

4. Where matters of local self-government may be intrusted to the inhabitants of towns, the legislature may delegate to a commission to be appointed by it the determination of the heights of buildings to be erected in different places within the city, where the statute provides for a general limitation upon the height to which buildings can be erected.

Building — restriction of height — reasonableness.

5. The prohibition of the erection of a building of greater height than 80 feet in the residential portion of a city unless the width on the street shall be at least one half its height is not so unreasonable as to make the regulation invalid.

Mandamus — constitutionality of statute.

6. The question of the constitutionality of a statute limiting the height of buildings may be considered under an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of a building permit which is refused because of the statute.

(January 1, 1907.)

RESERVATION by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for the opinion.

Case Note. — Constitutionality of statute or ordinance limiting height of building.

There appears to be no doubt of the proposition that the state may regulate the height of buildings in cities. And the conclusion reached in WELCH v. SWASEY, that such regulation was a valid exercise of the police power of the state, finds support in Cochran v. Preston, post, 1163; People ex rel. Kemp v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 359, 18 N. E. 862.

So, the Massachusetts statute regulating the height of buildings adjacent to a certain square in the city of Boston, but giving compensation to persons injured in their property by the limitations which it created was also upheld as a valid exercise of the police power in Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 476, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77. And upon appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States that tribunal, in 188 U. S. 491, 47 L. ed. 559, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440, held that such statute was not in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

And in Atty. Gen. v. Williams, 178 Mass. 330, 59 N. E. 812, the same statute was held not to be unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts.

But, in Parker v. Com. 178 Mass. 199, 59 N. E. 634, in which the court, in considering a similar statute, found it unnecessary to express an opinion whether a clear expression by the legislature of its intent to restrain the height of buildings in the exercise of its police power, without compensation to the owners, would infringe the Constitution, Chief Justice Holmes said: "Such a law certainly would present grave difficulties even when approached with all the presumptions that exist in favor of a legislative decision, and with the duty to uphold it unless it was impossible to do so."

ion of the full bench of an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of a building permit. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. H. Tyler, O. D. Young, and B. E. Eames for petitioner.

Mr. Thomas M. Babson, for defendants:

Regulations in regard to the height and mode of construction of buildings in cities may be made by legislative enactments, in the exercise of the police power, for the safety, comfort, and convenience of the people, and for the benefit of property owners generally.

Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 478, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77; Re Goddard, 16 Pick. 504, 28 Am. Dec. 259; People ex rel. Kemp v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 359, 18 N. E. 862; 1 Abbott, Mun. Corp. p. 237; 2 Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 754.

This power of the legislature may be deputized to municipal boards, commissioners, and other public officers.

Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 562, 48 Am. Dec. 679; Com. v. Patch, 97 Mass. 221; Salem v. Maynes, 123 Mass. 372; Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L.R.A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566, 19 N. E. 224; Sears v. Boston, 173 Mass. 71, 43 L.R.A. 834, 53 N. E. 138; Stark v. Boston, 180 Mass. 293, 62 N. E. 375; Stanfill v. County Revenue Ct. 80 Ala. 287; Dunn v. County Revenues Ct. 85 Ala. 144, 4 So. 661; Feek v. Bloomington, 82 Mich. 393, 10 L.R.A. 69, 47 N. W. 37; Haigh v. Bell, 41 W. Va. 19, 31 L.R.A. 131, 23 S. E. 666.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal question presented by this case is whether Stat. 1904, chap. 333, p. 283, and Stat. 1905, chap. 383, p. 309, and the orders of the commissioners appointed under them, relative to the height of buildings in Boston, are constitutional. A jurisdictional question, if the petitioner is entitled to relief, is whether a remedy can be given him by a writ of mandamus.

The principal question may be subdivided as follows: First, can the legislature, in the exercise of the police power, limit the height of buildings in cities so that none can be erected above a prescribed number of feet; second, can it classify parts of a city so that in some parts one height is prescribed and in others a different height; third, if so, can it delegate to a commission the determination of the boundaries of these different parts, so as to conform to the general provisions of the statute; fourth, can it delegate to a commission the making of rules and regulations such as to permit different heights in different places, according to the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) different conditions in different parts of one of the general classes of territory made in the original statute; fifth, if it can, are the rules and regulations made by the commissioners within the statute, and within the constitutional authority of the legislature and its agents?

In the exercise of the police power, the legislature may regulate and limit personal rights and rights of property in the interest of the public health, public morals, and public safety. Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 242, 67 L.R.A. 935, 66 N. E. 719; Com. v. Strauss, 191 Mass. 545, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 968, 78 N. E. 136, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 842; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 199 U. S. 306-318, 50 L. ed. 204-209, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100. With considerable strictness of definition, the general welfare may be made a ground, with others, for interference with rights of property, in the exercise of the police power. Com. v. Strauss, ubi supra.

The erection of very high buildings in cities, especially upon narrow streets, may be carried so far as materially to exclude sunshine, light, and air, and thus to affect the public health. It may also increase the danger to persons and property from fire, and be a subject for legislation on that ground. These are proper subjects for consideration in determining whether, in a given case, rights of property in the use of land should be interfered with for the public good. In Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 476, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77, this court said: "Regulations in regard to the height and mode of construction of buildings in cities are often made by legislative enactments, in the exercise of the police power, for the safety, comfort, and convenience of the people, and for the benefit of property owners generally. The right to make such regulations is too well established to be questioned. Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Salem v. Maynes, 123 Mass. 372; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27." In People ex rel. Kemp v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 359, 18 N. E. 862, a statute limiting the height of dwelling houses to be erected in the city of New York was treated as unquestionably constitutional. See 1 Abbott, Mun. Corp. 237; 2 Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, 754. There is nothing in Parker v. Com. 178 Mass. 199, 59 N. E. 634, against the validity of the statutes now before us. That case was decided upon the construction given by the court to the legislative act under which it arose. The court held that the legislature had not assumed to determine that any limitation of the height of buildings on the designated streets was required in the interest of the public health and public safety, or of the public welfare, and it left open the question whether the legislature might have made the restriction without providing compensation, if it had declared in the statute that no damages should be paid. It is for the legislature to determine whether the public health or public safety require such a limitation of the rights of landowners in a given case. Upon a determination in the affirmative, they may legislate accordingly.

The next question is whether the general court may establish different heights for different neighborhoods, according to their conditions and the uses to which the property in them is put. The statute should be adapted to the accomplishment of the purposes in which it finds its constitutional justification. It should be reasonable, not only in reference to the interests of the public, but also in reference to the rights of landowners. If these rights and interests are in conflict in any degree, the opposing considerations should be balanced against each other, and each should be made to yield reasonably to those upon the other side. The value of land and the demand for space in those parts of Boston where the greater part of the buildings are used for purposes of business or commerce is such as to call for buildings of greater height than are needed in those parts of the city where the greater part of the buildings are used for residential purposes. It was therefore reasonable to provide in the statute, that buildings might be erected to a greater height in the former parts of the city than in the latter, even if some of the streets in the former are narrower than those in the latter.

The general subject is one that calls for a careful consideration of conditions existing in different places. In many cities there would be no danger of the erection of high buildings in such locations and of such a number as to affect materially the public health or safety, and no statutory restrictions are necessary. Such restrictions in this country are of very recent origin, and they are still uncommon. Unless they place the limited height at an extreme point, beyond which hardly anyone would ever wish to go, they should be imposed only in reference to the uses for which the real estate probably will be needed, and the manner in which the land is laid out, and the nature of the approaches to it.

It was decided in Com. v. Boston Advertising Co. 188 Mass. 348, 69 L.R.A. 817, 108 Am. St. Rep. 494, 74 N. E. 601, that a statute of this kind cannot constitutionally be passed for a mere esthetic object. It was said in Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 476-480, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77, that the statute then before the court, enacted under the right of eminent domain, with compensation for landowners, would have been unconstitutional if it had been passed "to preserve the architectural symmetry of Copley square," or "merely for the benefit of individual property owners." The inhabitants of a city or town cannot be compelled to give up rights in property, or to pay taxes, for purely esthetic objects; but, if the primary and substantive purpose of the legislation is such as justifies the act, considerations of taste and beauty may enter in, as auxiliary. We are of opinion that the provision of Stat. 1904, chap. 333, p. 283, for dividing parts of the city into two classes, on each of which there is a prescribed limit for the height of buildings, was within the power of the legislature, and in accordance with the constitutional principle applicable to the enactment.

The delegation to a commission of the determination of the boundaries of these parts for the two classes was within the constitutional power of the general court. The work of the commissioners, under the first act, was not legislation, but the ascertainment of facts, and the application of the statute to them for purposes of administration. Such subsidiary work by a commission is justified in many cases. Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L.R.A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566, 19 N. E. 224; Brodvine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607; Com. v. Sisson, 189 Mass. 247, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 752, 109 Am. St. Rep. 630, 75 N. E. 619; Stark v. Boston, 180 Mass. 293, 62 N. E. 375; Re Kingman, 153 Mass. 566, 12 L.R.A. 417, 27 N. E. 778; Taunton v. Taylor, 116 Mass. 254; Nelson v. State Bd. of Health, 186 Mass. 330, 71 N. E. 693; Com. v. Bennett, 108 Mass. 27; Marshall, Field & Co. v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649-692, 36 L. ed. 294-309, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Re Kollock, 165 U. S. 526, 41 L. ed. 813, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444.

The delegation to a commission of the power to fix different heights in different places in the parts included in class B, under Stat. 1905, chap. 383, p. 309, goes further, and allows the commissioners to make rules and regulations which are in the nature of subsidiary legislation. This is within the principle referred to in Brodvine v. Revere, ubi supra, and in some of the other cases above cited. It is that, under our system in Massachusetts, matters of local self-government might always be intrusted to the inhabitants of towns. On the establishment of cities, this power is exercised by the city council, or by some board or commission representing the inhabitants. Even in towns such powers have long been exercised by local boards, for example, by the board of health. Originally such representatives of the local authority were elected by the people; but for many years local boards, appointed by the governor or other executive authority, have sometimes been intrusted with the exercise of this legislative authority. It is true that they are further from the people than the members of a city council, for whom the people vote, but in a true sense they represent the inhabitants in matters of this kind. Our decisions cover this point also. Com. v. Plaisted and Brodbine v. Revere, ubi supra. It does not follow that all rules and regulations made under such a delegation of authority would be constitutional merely because the original statute is unobjectionable. Such rules may be tested by the courts to see whether they are reasonably directed to the accomplishment of the purpose on which the constitutional authority rests, and whether they have a real, substantial relation to the public objects which the government can accomplish. A statute, ordinance, or regulation will not be held void merely because the judges differ from the legislators as to the expediency of its provisions. But, if it is arbitrary and unreasonable, so as unnecessarily to be subversive of rights of property, it will be set aside by the courts. Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98-110, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389-403, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Health Dept. v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32-40, 27 L.R.A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579, 39 N. E. 833; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561-593, 50 L. ed. 596-609, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1175; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 199 U. S. 306-318, 50 L. ed. 204-209, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133-137, 38 L. ed. 385-388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223-238, 49 L. ed. 169-176, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11-31, 49 L. ed. 643-661, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 765.

We do not see that the action of the commissioners, under Stat. 1905, was beyond their power under the Constitution. It was seemingly in accordance with the general purpose of the legislature, and was directed to considerations which they deemed proper in adjusting the rights and interests of property owners and the public. The question is not whether the court deems all the provisions wise; but whether they appear to be outside of the constitutional power of the commission. In prescribing heights in the district, the commissioners might make the width of the streets on which a building was to be erected one factor to be considered. Their action in this particular relates wholly to buildings in class B, which includes only the residential parts of the city.
23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

We cannot say that the prohibition of the erection of a building of a greater height than 80 feet in class B, unless its width "on each and every public street upon which it stands will be at least one half its height," was entirely for esthetic reasons. We conceive that the safety of adjoining buildings, in view of the risk of the falling of walls after a fire, may have entered into the purpose of the commissioners. We are of opinion that the statutes and the orders of the commissioners are constitutional.

We think that the court has jurisdiction to dispose of the case on the merits, under this petition for a writ of mandamus. The wrong alleged is that the building commissioner, and afterwards the board of appeal, refused to give the petitioner a permit to erect a building. It is conceded that the petitioner was not entitled to a permit if the statutes and orders referred to are constitutional. He alleges that the board of appeal refused to do their duty, and that his only effectual remedy is by a writ of mandamus, ordering them to grant a permit. The case comes within the general rule giving jurisdiction to issue such writs. Farmington River Water Power Co. v. Berkshire County, 112 Mass. 206-212; Carpenter v. Bristol County, 21 Pick. 258, 259; Atty. Gen. v. Boston, 123 Mass. 460. See Locke v. Lexington, 122 Mass. 290; Atty. Gen. v. Northampton, 143 Mass. 589, 10 N. E. 450.

The building commissioner and the board of appeal are not judicial officers. Stat. 1892, chap. 419, p. 471; Stat. 1894, chap. 443, p. 494. The fact that a refusal to act is founded on a mistake of law does not preclude a remedy by a writ of mandamus. In cases where the duty to perform an act depends solely on the question whether a statute or ordinance is constitutional and valid, the question may sometimes be determined on a petition for a writ of mandamus. Atty. Gen. v. Boston, 123 Mass. 460; Warren v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 84; Larcom v. Olin, 160 Mass. 102-110, 35 N. E. 113.

Petition dismissed.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States, May 17, 1909, 214 U. S. 91, 53 L. ed. 923, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

WILLIAM F. COCHRAN, JR., Appt.,
v.

EDWARD D. PRESTON, Building Inspector, et al.

(108 Md. 220; 70 Atl. 113.)

Buildings — limiting height — authority.

1. The legislature may limit the height of buildings in a section of a city which is devoted to fine residences, public buildings, and works of art, for the purpose of protecting such buildings and works from the ravages of fire.

Same — unjust discrimination.

2. The owners of buildings on the higher ground are not deprived of the equal protection of the laws by a statute limiting the height of buildings to a certain distance above a point located on the high ground of a city, although the buildings on lower ground might exceed theirs in the actual height from the ground.

Same — exception of churches.

3. The exception of churches in a statute limiting the height of buildings in a city does not deprive the owners of private property of the equal protection of the laws.

(June 24, 1908.)

APPEAL by relator from an order of the Court of Common Pleas which dismissed an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of a permit for the alteration of a building. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Yellott & Symington, for appellant:

Buildings cannot be controlled by law, with a view to securing beauty or symmetry.

Freund, Pol. Power, 1904, §§ 180, 181, 511, 514; 2 Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 755; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, p. 4; Com. v. Boston Advertising Co. 188 Mass. 348, 69 L.R.A. 817, 108 Am. St. Rep. 494, 74 N. E. 601; Belmont v. New England Brick Co. 190 Mass. 442, 77 N. E. 504; Parker v. Com. 178 Mass. 199, 59 N. E. 634; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 365, ante, 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523, 79 N. E. 745; Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 478, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77; People v. Green, 85 App. Div. 400, 83 N. Y. Supp. 460; St. Louis v. Dorr, 145 Mo. 466, 42 L.R.A. 686, 68 Am. St. Rep. 575, 41 S. W. 1094, 46 S. W. 976; People v. Hufand, 86 App. Div. 612, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1113; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 600; Farist Steel Co. v. Bridgeport, 60 Conn. 278, 13 L.R.A. 590, 22 Atl. 561.

The act is not a valid exercise of the police power.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 935, 938; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, pp. 10, 12; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 156; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 141; Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 61 C. C. A. 91, 126 Fed. 29; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Jackson & M. Pl. Road Co. 9 Mich. 285; Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188, 60 Am. St. Rep. 609, 47 N.

E. 302; Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121; Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94, 14 L.R.A. 498, 28 Am. St. Rep. 276, 50 N. W. 661; Re Cheesebrough, 78 N. Y. 237; Young v. Com. 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E. 327; Wright v. Hart, 182 N. Y. 330, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 338, 75 N. E. 404, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 263; Tilford v. Belknap, 126 Ky. 244, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 708, 103 S. W. 289; State v. Redmon, 134 Wis. 89, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 229, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 114 N. W. 137; People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321, 83 N. E. 236; St. Louis v. Hill, 116 Mo. 527, 21 L.R.A. 226, 22 S. W. 861; First Nat. Bank v. Sarlls, 129 Ind. 201, 13 L.R.A. 481, 28 Am. St. Rep. 185, 28 N. E. 434; Crawford v. Topeka, 51 Kan. 756, 20 L.R.A. 692, 37 Am. St. Rep. 323, 33 Pac. 476.

The act denies the equal protection of the laws.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 561; 8 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1059; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 289, 8 L.R.A. 808, 20 Am. St. Rep. 123, 46 N. W. 128; Anderton v. Milwaukee, 82 Wis. 279, 15 L.R.A. 830, 52 N. W. 95; State v. Haun, 61 Kan. 146, 47 L.R.A. 369, 59 Pac. 340; Union County Nat. Bank v. Ozan Lumber Co. 127 Fed. 206; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255.

Messrs. W. Cabell Bruce, Edgar Allan Poe, and Sylvan Hayes Lauchheimer, for appellees:

An act need not apply to all portions of a city, or to all individuals.

Garrett v. Janes, 65 Md. 267, 3 Atl. 597; State v. Broadbelt, 89 Md. 580, 45 L.R.A. 433, 73 Am. St. Rep. 201, 43 Atl. 771; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 319, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, ante, 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523, 79 N. E. 745.

The state in the exercise of the police power can limit the height of buildings.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 156, p. 387; Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 754; Welch v. Swasey, supra; Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 478, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77; Watertown v. Mayo, supra; People ex rel. Kemp v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 361, 18 N. E. 862.

Worthington, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question involved in this appeal is whether or not the act of 1904, chap. 42, p. 63, is a valid exercise of legislative power. By this act it is provided

Note.—See note to Welch v. Swasey, ante, 1160, as to constitutionality of statute or ordinance limiting height of building. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"that from and after the date of the passage of this act; no building, except churches, shall be erected or altered in the city of Baltimore on the territory bounded by the south side of Madison street, the west side of St. Paul street, the north side of Centre street, and the east side of Cathedral street, to exceed in height a point 70 feet above the surface of the street at the base line of Washington Monument." The act was approved March 15, 1904. The ordinances of Baltimore require all persons who desire to build, alter, or repair any structure within the limits of the city, or who desire to put an additional story upon any building therein, to obtain a permit from the inspector of buildings, and also from the appeal tax court of that city. The appellant is the owner of a large apartment house, located on the northwest corner of Mt. Vernon place and Washington place, within the territory to which the prohibition of the statute applies; and, desiring to put an additional story thereon to be used as quarters for employees, he applied to the appellees for a permit to make the desired alteration. In his application for such a permit the applicant stated that the house is at present 70 feet high, and that the proposed addition would be but 8 feet in height, and set back on the roof at a uniform distance of 20 feet from Mt. Vernon place, and a like uniform distance from Washington place, and that it would not be possible to see any part of the addition from either of these places. That the total cost of the building and ground, in the first place, was about $450,000, and that, as the building now stands, it is impossible to derive from the same a sufficient revenue to yield a fair profit on the investment therein, but that the proposed addition would enable the owner to derive a fair return for the whole outlay. The appellees refused the permit, on the ground that the additional story proposed would raise the building to a height greater than 70 feet above the base line of Washington Monument, contrary to the provisions of the act of assembly above mentioned. A mandamus was then applied for, and denied by the court for the same reason assigned by the appellees in the first instance.

It is elementary that the word "land," in its legal signification, has an indefinite extent upwards as well as downwards, and therefore, if it were possible for man to live in a state of nature, unconnected with other individuals, the proprietor of land would own, not only the face of the earth within the boundaries of his proprietorship, but also everything under it and over it. An imaginary person, living in such a state of nature, would be at liberty to use his land as he pleased, to build on it to any height, and to dig into it to any depth, without restraint. But as man was formed for society, and is incapable of living alone, organized society is essential to his well-being and happiness, and every person who enters society must give up a part of his so-called natural rights and liberties for the benefit of the community. 1 Bl. Com. p. 125. "The very existence of government presupposes the right of the sovereign power to prescribe regulations, demanded by the general welfare, for the common protection of all. This principle inheres in the very nature of the social compact. The protection of private property is one of the main purposes of government, but no one holds his property by such an absolute tenure as to be freed from the power of the legislature to impose restraints and burdens required by the public good, or proper and necessary to secure the equal rights of all." Parker & W. Public Health & Safety, § 14. The power to prescribe regulations, demanded by the general welfare, for the common protection of all, is known as the police power of the state, and is inherent in every sovereignty. Prentice, Pol. Powers, p. 6; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77. Among the police powers of the state the right to regulate the height of buildings in a city is one that cannot be questioned. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 156; Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 754; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 364, ante, 1160, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523, 79 N. E. 745. Yet such regulations must be reasonable in their character, and adapted to accomplish the purpose for which they are designed. People ex rel. Kemp v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 359, 18 N. E. 862; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 319, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 477, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77.

As the purpose of the statute under consideration does not appear on its face, such purpose is open to inquiry, and the appellant contends that its purpose was and is to preserve the beauty and architectural symmetry of the environment of Washington Monument, and that in the exercise of the police power property rights cannot be impaired for purely esthetical purposes. To sustain the legal proposition, he quotes from Freund, Police Power, 1904, § 181, as follows: "If the purposes were purely esthetic, the impairment of property rights, even upon payment of compensation, would not pass unchallenged;" and also from 2 Tiedeman, State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, p. 755, as follows: "Regulations which are designed only to enforce upon the people the legislative conceptions of artistic beauty and symmetry will not be sustained, however much such regulations may be needed for the artistic education of the people." Such is undoubtedly the weight of authority, though it may be that, in the development of a higher civilization, the culture and refinement of the people has reached the point where the educational value of the fine arts, as expressed and embodied in architectural symmetry and harmony, is so well recognized as to give sanction, under some circumstances, to the exercise of this power, even for such purposes. In Welch v. Swasey, supra, it is said that, "if the primary and substantive purpose of the legislation is such as justifies the act, considerations of taste and beauty may enter in as auxiliary." And our predecessors have said, in speaking of an ordinance of Baltimore city, passed in pursuance of the act of 1833, chap. 180, and regulating the distance that any portico, steps, or other ornamental structure on Mt. Vernon place might extend from the building line into the street, that the object was, "in furtherance of the purpose to render . . . [these places or squares] attractive, to give more freedom to the exercise of private taste for adornment in their vicinity. In a city noted for its monuments, municipal legislation peculiar to their neighborhood would seem indispensable." Garrett v. Janes, 65 Md. 260, 3 Atl. 597. We do not assent, however, to the proposition that the statute under consideration was passed for purely ornamental purposes.

We find a more substantial reason for its enactment in the suggestion of the counsel for the appellees that its purpose was to protect the handsome buildings and their contents, located in that vicinity, and also the works of art clustered there, from the ravages of fire. It must be remembered that in the center of the prescribed territory to which the statute applies stands the lofty and beautiful monument to the illustrious Washington; on one corner of Mt. Vernon place and Washington place is the handsome Mt. Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church, on another is the Peabody Institute, a stately marble building, in which are kept for public use many rare and valuable books and works of art, to replace which would be well-nigh impossible; in the same neighborhood are numerous handsome residences of private citizens, containing valuable works of art and of literature. In Mt. Vernon and Washington places are found statutes to several eminent Marylanders,—Severn Teackle Wallis, Roger B. Taney, and General John Eager Howard, and also a number of beautiful figures, known as the "Barye bronzes," so that the environment of the locality in question is, in several respects, unique, and well worthy of preservation in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) its entirety. During the session of the legislature at which the statute under consideration was passed, a great fire visited Baltimore, and destroyed a large part of the business section of the city. Extracts from an account of the fire will demonstrate some of the dangers to be apprehended from this devouring element. The account says: "The fire spread to the north and east, rapidly devouring block after block of buildings. Landmark after landmark went down. Nothing but burnt clay—bricks and cement—could stand against a conflagration which developed 2,500 degrees of heat, and was carrying itself along by its own volume, against which no water supply, no human effort, could be effective. The lofty skyscrapers on Charles, St. Paul, Calvert, and Baltimore streets burned like great torches up to the sky. Granite and marble cracked and spalled off. The marble work of the new customhouse, then in course of construction, was badly damaged wherever exposed to the heat, as was also the St. Paul street front of the new courthouse. Shortly after midnight the American newspaper office was enveloped in flames, which quickly spread across to the Sun Iron Building, involving all in common ruin. Devastation was carried down Calvert street, down South street, and Holliday street and Gay street, wiping out hotels, newspaper offices, bank buildings, warehouses, and nearly everything in the way, clear to the water front of the inner harbor. Among the buildings destroyed were many so-called fireproof structures. After the fire these lofty buildings stood amidst the ruins of lesser buildings, like gaunt skeletons, burned out interiorally but still 'structurally fireproof,' with from 40 to 60 per cent salvage credited to their construction." Great impetus is given to such a fire by very tall buildings. They serve as so many large funnels furnishing draft for the flames, thereby intensifying the heat, and outreaching the efforts of the firemen. Already some very tall buildings have been erected in this locality; the "Hotel Stafford" being 132 feet high, and the apartment house known as "The Severn" being 115 feet above the pavement at the base line of Washington Monument. It was to prevent the multiplication of such buildings in this neighborhood, and the increased danger from fire attendant thereon, that this statute was no doubt passed. We consider such an object entirely legitimate, and the statute valid as far as its purpose is concerned.

The appellant contends, however, that as the prescribed territory is hilly, and the base line of Washington Monument practically the highest point within its limits, persons owning property on lower ground have an advantage over those whose property is located on the higher ground, because the former may build houses to a greater height than the latter, and that therefore the statute denies the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. While we recognize the force of this contention, we think, when it is remembered that the primary object of the law is protection from fire, it is met by the consideration that very tall buildings on the highest part of the ground would be more difficult to deal with in case of fire than such buildings lower down. By operating from the higher portions of ground, water might be thrown on tall buildings further down the hill, and reach the top, while the tops of buildings of the same height on the higher ground would be wholly out of the reach of the fire apparatus. "In virtue of its right and duty to provide for the public welfare, the legislative branch of government possesses a vast and indefinable power and a large discretion as to the manner in which it shall be exercised." Parker & W. Public Health & Safety, § 4. If the object of the statute is to promote the public welfare, and there is a substantial relation between the object aimed at and the means devised for attaining that object, every intendment will be in favor of the entire validity of such statute. Ibid.; Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 539, 562, 9 N. E. 672; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802. The presumption in favor of the validity of the statute should prevail, unless the lack of constitutional authority is clearly demonstrated. United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 290, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601.

It was for the legislature to determine the manner in which the purpose aimed at was to be accomplished, and we are not prepared to say that the method adopted does not bear a substantial relation to the object aimed at, or that it denies the equal protection of the laws, as that term is understood and construed. Easton v. Covey, 74 Md. 262, 22 Atl. 266; Ex parte Fiske, 72 Cal. 125, 13 Pac. 310; Hine v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 478; People ex rel. Kemp v. D'Oench, 111 N. Y. 361, 18 N. E. 862. In the last-mentioned case the court held that a statute regulating the height of all houses used as dwellings did not include stores, factories, warehouses, buildings used for offices, or hotels, and that it was a valid exercise of the police powers, although, because private residences were seldom above the prescribed height, it, in effect, applied only to tenement and apartment houses. The last-mentioned case is also authority for upholding the present statute, although 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

churches are, in terms, exempted from its operation. There is not the same reason for regulating the height of churches as of some other buildings. The former frequently have spires for ornamental purposes, reaching a much greater height than 70 feet, but they do not present the same danger from fire to the surrounding buildings as many other structures do, chiefly because they are not likely to become very numerous in any one locality.

After a careful consideration of the case in all its different aspects, we think the order of the lower court dismissing the application for a writ of mandamus was right, and the same will therefore be affirmed. Order affirmed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed by Supreme Court of United States.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

THIRD NATIONAL BANK OF ST. LOUIS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

W. H. RICE.

(88 C. C. A. 640, 161 Fed. 822.)

Money had and received — wrongdoer — reimbursement.

One who wrongfully takes possession of cattle which are subject to chattel mortgage, and after their sale disclaims all title to them, and consents that the proceeds be turned over to one claiming them under another mortgage, cannot, when a judgment is recovered against him for their value by the mortgagee, which he satisfies, maintain a suit against the one to whom the proceeds were turned over, for money had and received to his use, for the purpose of reimbursing himself for his outlay.

(May 2, 1908.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri to review a judgment in plaintiff's fav-

Note. — The above case and that of Bacon v. Kimmel, discussed by the court in THIRD NAT. BANK v. RICE, appear, from an extended search, to be the only decisions which have passed on the question of the effect as to third persons of the doctrine that satisfaction of a judgment in trover vests title in the defendant by relation.

An analogous case, throwing light upon the court's position as to relation in general, where the rights of third persons become involved, is found in Case v. De Goes, 3 Caines, 261. It was held in this case that one who cut saw logs under a license from or in an action brought to recover the proceeds of certain cattle which had been sold, which proceeds had been applied in satisfaction of a mortgage. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Sanborn and Adams, Circuit Judges, and Philips, District Judge.

Mr. Thomas F. Galt for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Beardsley, Gregory, & Kirshner, with Messrs. R. F. Walker and Alfred Gregory, for defendant in error:

The payment of a judgment in trover for a wrongful conversion of personal property vests the title to the property converted in the defendant, the title in such cases being transferred by operation of law.

2 Kent, Com. 387, 388; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 815; Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. 1, 18 L. ed. 129; Kelly v. Forty-second Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 37 App. Div. 500, 55 N. Y. Supp. 1096; Mitchell v. Shaw, 53 Mo. App. 652; Smith v. Smith, 51 N. H. 571; Marsden v. Cornell, 62 N. Y. 220; Thayer v. Manley, 73 N. Y. 307.

When a person comes into possession of chattels or money which of right belong to another, and he converts them to his own use, then the law implies a promise to repay the money or the value of the chattels to the persons rightfully entitled, and in such case it is no longer necessary to aver a promise, but it is enough to set out the facts from which the promise will be inferred.

Pom. Code Pl. §§ 538-540; Farron v. Sherwood, 17 N. Y. 227; Brand v. Williams, 29 Minn. 238, 13 N. W. 42; Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Central Bank, 116 Mo. 558, 38 Am. St. Rep. 615, 22 S. W. 813; Deal v. Mississippi County Bank, 79 Mo. App. 269; Bank of Metropolis v. First Nat. Bank, 22 Blatchf. 58, 19 Fed. 301; Clark v. First Nat. Bank, 57 Mo. App. 285; Chase v. Willman Mercantile Co. 63 Mo. App. 482; Siems v. Pierre Sav. Bank, 7 S. D. 338, 64 N. W. 167; Greer v. Lafayette County Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 737; Kelly v. Forty-second Street, M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. supra; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Skillman, 52 N. J. L. 263, 19 Atl. 260; John A. Tolman

Co. v. Waite, 119 Mich. 341, 75 Am. St. Rep. 400, 78 N. W. 124.

The title obtained by the payment of the judgment relates back so as to cut out the defendant, who obtained possession of the money pending the action, the doctrine of relation being used for the equitable purpose of protecting intermediate bona fide purchasers for value only.

24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 275, 277, 278; Stahl v. Lynn, 86 Wis. 75, 56 N. W. 188; Case v. De Goes, 3 Caines. 205; Griel v. Pollak, 105 Ala. 249, 16 So. 704.

The petition states a promise of the defendant to pay the plaintiff.

Richardson v. Moffitt-West Drug Co. 92 Mo. App. 515; Fox v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 16 Mo. App. 122; Tamm v. Kellogg 49 Mo. 118; Moses v. Macferlan, 2 Burr. 1005; Field v. Brown, 146 Ind. 293, 45 N. E. 444; Bliss, Code Pl. 3d ed. § 152; Wills v. Wills, 34 Ind. 106; Gwaltney v. Cannon, 31 Ind. 229; Farron v. Sherwood, supra; Jordan v. S. Pl. Road Co. v. Morley, 23 N. Y. 502; Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 231, 83 Am. Dec. 64; Wells v. Pacific R. Co. 35 Mo. 164; Wetmore v. Crouch, 150 Mo. 681, 51 S. W. 758.

It is not necessary to allege a promise to pay, nor is privity of contract between plaintiff and defendant essential.

Clifford Bkg. Co. v. Donovan Commission Co. 195 Mo. 289, 94 S. W. 527.

Johnson-Brinkman Commission Co. v. Central Bank, supra; Calais v. Whidden, 64 Me. 249; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 563; English Bank v. Smith, 5 Conn. 71, 13 Am. Dec. 37; Colgrove v. Fillmore, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 347; Tamm v. Kellogg, supra; Hall v. Marston, 17 Mass. 575; Richardson v. Moffitt-West Drug Co. supra.

The mortgage was good, as between the parties, and even as against any subsequent mortgagee.

6 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1022, 1023, 1029; First Nat. Bank v. Marshall & I. Bank, 106 Mich. 114, 65 N. W. 604; McDermid v. Hutchinson Wholesale Grocer Co. 63 Kan. 884, Appx., 65 Pac. 668; Scrafford v. Gibbons, 44 Kan. 533, 24 Pac. 968; Griffiths v. Wheeler, 31 Kan. 17, 2 Pac. 842; Tootle v. Lyster, 26 Kan. 589; Yant v. Harvey, 55 Iowa, 421, 7 N. W. 675.

another who was in possession of land by writ of restitution was not liable for trespass by relation, although the proceedings under which the licensor was in possession were quashed and restitution ordered. The court said: "But it is a general rule with respect to the doctrine of relation, that it shall not do wrong to strangers. . . . This rule is fully recognized in Menvil's Case, 13 Coke, 21, where it is said that by relation a thing may be considered as annulled ab initio betwixt the same parties, to advance a right; but the law will never make such a construction to advance a wrong, or to defeat collateral acts which are lawful, and principally if they concern strangers. Thus, also, in Liford's Case, 11 Coke, 51, it is ruled that, where a person is disseised, the disseisee, after re-entry, cannot maintain trespass against the disseisor; for the law, as to the disseisor and his servants, will suppose the freehold to have continued in the disseisee; but not so with respect to strangers who come in by right or title under the disseisor; they cannot be made trespassers by relation."

The thing which passes from the judgment creditor to the judgment debtor when he pays the judgment for full value is the right to the property itself or its value.

Smith v. Gibson, Cas. t. Hardw. 319; Adams v. Broughton, Andrews, 18; Benjamin, Sales, 7th ed. p. 59; Acheson v. Miller, 2 Ohio St. 206, 59 Am. Dec. 663; Griel Bros. v. Pollak, 105 Ala. 249, 16 So. 704.

Phillips, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error (plaintiff below) recovered judgment in the sum of $2,086.77 against the plaintiff in error (defendant below) in an action of assumpsit for money had and received. To reverse this judgment, this writ of error is prosecuted. The controversy arose out of the following state of facts, briefly stated:

One Gillette, a large dealer in cattle in Kansas, who seems to have had a mania, as well as genius, for giving multiplied and conflicting chattel mortgages on the same herd or lot of cattle, by either mixing up the brands or giving the cattle an ostensible different situs, in 1898 acquired about 1,866 head of Texas cattle with the brand "J. A. L." There were various mortgages on these cattle. Notes issued by him, apparently secured by such mortgages, were negotiated by cattle commission merchants at Kansas City, Missouri, to various purchasers, who seem to have taken them avidiously on account of the high rate of interest they bore and the assumed security on tangible cattle. In November, 1898, after he had exhausted his resourcefulness in obtaining money and credit by such factitious methods, and his creditors began to press him, threatening him with prosecutions for obtaining money under false pretenses, Gillette fled the country, taking refuge in the Republic of Mexico. Among those claiming mortgage liens upon some of the Gillette cattle was the firm of Rice Bros. & Nixon, doing business at Kansas City, Missouri, as commission cattle merchants. After Gillette left, Rice Bros. & Nixon sent one George Rice to the pastures out in Kansas to look after the cattle in which they claimed an interest. He found some of the cattle with the brand on which they claimed a mortgage lien in what is known as the "Plum Feed Lots" and some in what is known as the "Brogan Pasture." He discovered on inspection that these cattle were mixed with those of another brand. Brogan, in charge of the cattle in his lots, refused to let George Rice remove them. Thereupon Nixon, of said firm, went out and met Rice. After consultation, they invaded the Brogan pasture between midnight and 1 o'clock A. M., broke down the fence, and drove away all of the cattle in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the lot several miles to Neosho, a station on the railroad leading to Kansas City. Nixon then went to the Plum lot, and, leaving enough cattle there to secure Plum as an agistor of Gillette, drove the residue to Neosho, and shipped the whole of the two lots to Rice Bros. & Nixon at the stock yards in Kansas City. Included in these lots of cattle were 128 head bearing a different brand from that to which the plaintiff laid any claim. Nixon knew, when thus tortiously removing the cattle, that there were among them those to which his firm asserted no claim. His only excuse for this lawless act was the trouble and difficulty of separating in the nighttime the different brands. When the cattle reached the yards at Kansas City, Nixon separated those on which the plaintiff claimed a lien and reshipped them to a pasture in the state of Iowa. Instead of making restitution, as far as they might, by returning the 128 head of cattle to the close where Nixon found them, Nixon, acting for his firm, left them in charge of one Munger, their bookkeeper, with instructions to turn them over to the person he (Munger) might think best entitled to them.

Other creditors of Gillette were on the qui vive, looking out for any Gillette cattle which might come to said stock yards, as there was considerable clamor among them as to their respective rights to the Gillette cattle. Among them was the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, which had a branch bank at said stock yards under the immediate management of one Voorhees. Learning about the situation of said 128 head of cattle, the president of said bank, with an inspector, looked over them and informed Munger that the bank held large amounts of Gillette paper and was anxious to get hold of as many of the Gillette cattle as possible. Rice Bros. & Nixon were evidently anxious to get out of the ugly and embarrassing situation into which Nixon's tortious conduct had brought them, by unloading the burden on anyone willing to take it. Accordingly, Munger turned the 128 head of cattle over to the National Bank of Commerce, with the understanding between them that the bank would hold them harmless from the consequences of their acts in the transaction.

As this arrangement was between Munger, representing the plaintiff, and the bank, it is important to follow the testimony of Munger, a witness on behalf of the plaintiff. After stating that Nixon separated the 128 head of cattle in question from the others shipped in by him, and took those claimed by the firm to a pasture in Iowa, he was asked: "In whose charge did Nixon leave the 128 head of cattle?" He answered: "In my charge." Then, stating that Nixon said to him "to turn them over to the parties to whom I thought had the best claim on them," he was pressed, on cross-examination, to state the exact language or terms employed between him and the representative of the bank in turning the cattle over to the latter. His answer was that Voorhees said "that the National Bank of Commerce owned a large amount of Gillette paper, and they were making an effort to secure all of the cattle in which Gillette was interested in any way, and asked me to turn these cattle over to the bank." After stating that Voorhees said the bank would have the cattle sold and the money held as a special deposit until the rightful ownership was decided, he was asked: If the National Bank of Commerce did not say that they would hold the firm of Rice Bros. & Nixon harmless against any loss that they might suffer on account of your turning these cattle over to them?

A. Yes, sir. . . . He (Voorhees) asked me to turn the cattle over to the National Bank of Commerce. I asked him if the National Bank of Commerce would stand good to us for the cattle in case anybody else proved a better title or a better right to them.

A. I did. . . . And he said that they would. If we would turn these cattle over to him or to the National Bank of Commerce, they would stand good to us and protect us from all liability. But I did not immediately turn them over to him. I called Mr. Winants (the vice president of the bank) over the telephone, and told him what Mr. Voorhees had said and the proposition Mr. Voorhees had made to me, and I asked him to confirm it, and he did. He said the National Bank of Commerce would do that.

Q. Why did you wish to turn these cattle over to anybody?

A. Because they did not—because we had no claim on them.

Q. Is it not a fact that you were anxious to get rid of the cattle, so as to avoid being held for them, and anxious to get somebody else to take them off your hands?

A. We were anxious to get rid of the cattle.

Q. Were you not anxious to turn these cattle over to somebody else, in order to get rid of the liability for them? Is that not a fact?

A. To a certain extent

Q. Is it not a fact?

A. Yes.

He then stated that he turned the cattle over to the National Bank of Commerce for Rice Bros. & Nixon.

Q. I will ask you if you turned these cattle over to the National Bank of Commerce.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

merce to hold for the account of Rice Bros. & Nixon?

A. I did not.

Q. I will then ask you again if you did not turn these cattle over to the National Bank of Commerce for them to hold as their own interest?

A. I did not."

Then, being inquired of as to why he turned the cattle over to the National Bank of Commerce, he answered: "Because I thought that in all probability they had a better claim to them than anybody else, on account of their owning a large amount of paper taken from the various commission firms at the Kansas City Stock Yards. . . . We had absolutely no claim on the cattle."

The Bank of Commerce, discovering that it had no lien on these cattle, in turn became anxious to get rid of them. The representative of the bank advised Munger of that fact, and inquired what should be done with the cattle. Thereupon it was agreed to turn them over to the Siegel-Sanders Commission Company to sell. At that time the cattle were in a lot subject to the order of Munger, and he gave to Voorhees a "title order in blank for them."

Q. Was there anything in this order that the National Bank of Commerce was to hold these cattle for the person who held rightful title to them?

A. The title orders are blanks furnished by the stock yards, and they do not permit anything to be written on the order except the number of animals and to whom the stock belongs and to whom it is to be delivered. That order, then, had to be surrendered to the stock yards company.

On further cross-examination of Munger, the following occurred:

Q: I will ask you to relate your conversation with Mr. Voorhees when you turned these cattle over to him?

A. Mr. Voorhees told me that the National Bank of Commerce owned a large amount of Gillette paper; that they were trying to secure as many of the cattle as possible in which Gillette had any interest; and he told me, if we would turn the cattle over to them, they would be responsible to us,—hold us harmless for the value of the cattle—if there were anyone appeared who had a better right to them.

Q. Is it not a fact that you turned these cattle over to the National Bank of Commerce because you thought that they were the most responsible parties, that they would be able to protect you against loss?

A. That is partly, but not wholly, the reason.

Q. What was the other reason?

A. I thought the chances were that they would have a better right to the cattle than the other claimants, inasmuch as they had taken a large amount of this Gillette paper from the various commission merchants at the yards.

The Third National Bank of St. Louis (defendant below) at that time held a mortgage on Gillette cattle, which it claimed covered the 128 head in question. Its claim was placed in the hands of Mr. Ball, an attorney of Kansas City, who applied to Rice Bros. & Nixon, and informed them that his client held a mortgage on the cattle, and demanded that they be turned over to him, when he was informed "that they had nothing more to do with it; that those cattle were in charge of Siegel-Sanders Commission Company for the Bank of Commerce, and they had nothing to do with it." Thereupon Mr. Ball demanded the cattle of said commission company. He was informed by them that the Bank of Commerce claimed them, and that they had the cattle for sale, and they would proceed to sell them and turn the money over to the Bank of Commerce. Mr. Ball further testified that it was suggested in the interview that, as the cattle were in the yards on expense, Siegel-Sanders Company could sell them and deposit the money in the Bank of Commerce until it could be ascertained whether the Third National Bank of St. Louis or the Bank of Commerce was entitled to it. When he applied to the Bank of Commerce, he learned from Mr. Winants (vice president) that the Siegel-Sanders Company had sold the cattle and kept the money, and the Bank of Commerce made no claim to it. He then applied to Siegel-Sanders Company for the proceeds, and received from them a check therefor, which he indorsed and forwarded to his client. He further stated that he did not remember the brand of the cattle, but: "I remember that I claimed under what was known as the Dunlap mortgages, and that they bore the brands purporting to be covered by those mortgages."

Soon after the foregoing occurrences, a suit was instituted of rather a peculiar comprehensive character, in the district court of Chase county, Kansas, by one of Gillette's mortgagees, asserting priority of right to certain of the Gillette cattle, including the 128 head in question. Rice Bros. & Nixon, among others, were made parties defendant, and appeared thereto. Although named as a defendant, the Third National Bank of St. Louis was not served with process and did not appear to that suit. After taking evidence, a decree was entered therein, by consent, determining the manner in which the funds in the hands of the receiver of that court, arising from the sales of cattle to which there were conflicting claims, should be apportioned among them; also rendering judgment against Rice Bros. & Nixon for the value of the cattle wrongfully taken by them as aforesaid. Having satisfied that judgment, Rice Bros. & Nixon at once instituted an action at law in the circuit court of Jackson County, Missouri, against the National Bank of Commerce, based on said contract of indemnity between them, made on their behalf by Munger. They were defeated in that action, on the ground taken by the court that the contract was contrary to public policy. See 98 Mo. App. 696, 73 S. W. 930, where the case is reported. Nixon having retired from the copartnership, and one of the Rice brothers having died, W. H. Rice, as surviving partner, instituted the present action against the defendant, the Third National Bank of St. Louis, to recover the money so received by it as aforesaid, and obtained judgment therefor.

The contention on the part of the plaintiff is that, although Rice Bros. & Nixon were trespassers ab initio in seizing the cattle, when they satisfied the judgment against them for the tort they became substituted to the owner's right to the cattle from the date of the conversion. The correctness of this, as a general proposition of law, may be conceded. Lovejoy v. Murray, 3 Wall. 11, loc. cit. 18 L. ed. 132; Adams v. Broughton, 2 Strange, 1078; 2 Kent, Com. 388; Thayer v. Manley, 73 N. Y. 307; Smith v. Smith, 51 N. H. 571,—which hold that the title so acquired by the tortfeasor takes effect from the time of the conversion. This, resting upon the maxim, Solutio pretii emptiois loco habetur, presumes that the wrongdoer is in possession of the property and has not voluntarily parted therewith to a third party. Judge Cooley, in his work on Torts, 3d ed. pp. 881, 882, says: "It was decided in Adams v. Broughton, supra, that judgment in trover or trespass for the value of the property vested the title in the defendant; and this decision has been followed in this county to some extent. . . . The title by relation vests as of the time when the conversion took place, but this relation is not effectual for all purposes; it could not render a third party a trespasser upon the rights of the defendant for anything done by him intermediate the conversion and the judgment; and if, after conversion, the plaintiff sold his interest in the property, the purchaser will not be affected by the suit, . . . since by the sale he has disabled himself from passing title to the defendant."

In support of the text he cites the case of Bacon v. Kimmel, 14 Mich. 201, where the plaintiff brought trespass, and for the purpose of proving title introduced a judgment against him in favor of the mortgagee in a chattel mortgage, from whom the property had been wrongfully taken, and which judgment was subsequent to the trespass complained of in the case. Judge Christiancy said that admitting the recovery of that judgment and its satisfaction by the plaintiff "had the effect as between them to vest the right of property and the possession in the plaintiff; and that as between them it related back, so as to perfect the plaintiff's title from the time of the trespass for which that judgment was obtained; still it could not affect the defendants in this suit, so as to make them trespassers as against the plaintiff. . . . There is no evidence in the case tending to show that, at any time during the period covered by the declaration, . . . the plaintiff had any right whatever to the property or its possession, nor tending to show that in obtaining the possession of the property the defendants were guilty of a trespass against anyone, much less against the plaintiff. And, whatever effect the recovery and satisfaction of Wheeler's judgment against the plaintiff should have had as between them by relation back, it cannot by such relation make the defendants trespassers for acts which did not constitute a trespass as against the plaintiff at the time they were committed."

To sustain the action at bar, the learned counsel for the plaintiff assume, as indeed they must, first, that the National Bank of Commerce received the cattle from Rice Bros. & Nixon as mere bailees, or under an express or implied trust to hold them for the benefit of the rightful owner whenever he might appear; and, second, that Siegel-Sanders Commission Company took them impressed with a like trust, which followed and attached to the proceeds in the hands of the defendant in favor of the plaintiff as the cestui que trust. That Rice Bros. & Nixon turned the cattle over constructively to the National Bank of Commerce on the controlling assurance that the bank would hold them harmless is confirmed by the undisputed fact that, immediately after Rice Bros. & Nixon satisfied the judgment against them, they made demand on the Bank of Commerce, not for the proceeds of the sale of the cattle, which they knew had been turned over to the Third National Bank of St. Louis, but for the amount paid by them in satisfaction of said judgment, based on the promise of indemnity. In their petition, as disclosed in the reported case (98 Mo. App. 696, 73 S. W. 930), they alleged: "That it was thereupon agreed between them and defendant that, in consideration of their turning the cattle over to defendant, the latter would indemnify and protect them against damages by reason of their act."

As stated by the court from the evidence: 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"It was then agreed between plaintiffs and defendant that plaintiffs would turn the 128 head over to defendant; the latter agreeing to indemnify them in case they were forced to respond in damages to the true owner, or, indeed, to anyone of superior right. Plaintiffs, as stated by their principal witness, were anxious to get the cattle into other hands, so as to rid themselves of liability. They did not have an opinion as to which of the several claimants of liens had the best right or title; but they decided to turn the cattle over to defendant, for the reason that they thought it to be more certainly responsible than the others."

Moreover, as already shown by the testimony of Mr. Ball, witness for the plaintiff, when the Bank of Commerce advised Mr. Munger that it made no claim to the cattle, to get out of the tangle Munger gave the blank "title order" for the transfer of the cattle from their lot to that of Siegel-Sanders Commission Company to be sold. And when Mr. Ball applied to Rice Bros. & Nixon for the cattle, stating that the Third National Bank of St. Louis claimed them under mortgage, they distinctly disclaimed any interest in the cattle, and said they had turned them over to the bank. They were apprised, therefore, of the defendant's assertion of right to the cattle, and they knew that the Siegel-Sanders Commission Company turned over the proceeds to the defendant. It does not now lie in the mouth of the plaintiff, as asserted in argument by his counsel, to say they do not know that the defendant ever held such mortgage. They were distinctly advised by Mr. Ball that his client asserted such mortgage, and they consented to what was done without asking to see the mortgage; and the trial in this case proceeded upon the theory that the plaintiff in the action in the Kansas district court claimed under mortgage superior in right to that of the defendant.

How, then, can it be legally possible for the plaintiff to maintain against the defendant the action for money had and received to his use? When demand was made upon them by Mr. Ball, they disclaimed any interest whatever in the cattle. There was, therefore, no fiduciary relation or promise, either expressed or implied, between them and the defendant. It is an ancient and deep-rooted axiom of the common law, which "use has made familiar and time has rendered sacred," that "the law will not imply a promise where there was an express promise, so the law will not imply a promise of any person against his own express declaration, because such declaration is repugnant to any implication of a promise." Whiting v. Sullivan, 7 Mass. 107; Earle v. Coburn, 130 Mass. 593. While there are instances where the law will imply a promise to pay by a party who protests, as where the law creates a duty to perform that for which it implies a promise to pay, as in the illustration of the refusal of a man to furnish food and clothing to his wife and children, yet the rule is that such promise shall never be implied against protest, except in cases where the law itself imposes the duty, which must be a legal, and not a mere moral or sentimental, duty. This idea is expressed by Woodruff, J., in Butterworth v. Gould, 41 N. Y. 463, as follows: "Where a defendant has received moneys due to the plaintiff, but claiming it as his own under circumstances in which he has no authority from the plaintiff, and does not act under any pretense of such authority, and the payment to him is made in proposed recognition of his title thereto as his own, and does not operate to discharge the payer from his liability to the plaintiff, then and in such case, there is no trust and no implied promise to pay the money to the plaintiff."

Had Rice Bros. & Nixon, after the conversion of the cattle, maintained the status quo, retaining the cattle or the proceeds until they satisfied the judgment in trespass against them, their title would have attached as of the date of the conversion; and had the defendants in that situation, between the date of the conversion and the satisfaction of the judgment, tortiously taken the cattle or their proceeds from Rice Bros. & Nixon, they could have sued in trover, or have waived the trespass and brought action in assumpsit. But when, after the first conversion, the wrongdoers, as in this case, to extricate themselves, as they intended to do and supposed they were accomplishing, from ultimate liability and loss, voluntarily turned the property over to a third claimant, not in trust for themselves, but as an independent claimant, there was not an expressed or implied promise by the third person to answer to the assenting wrongdoer for the property. Multo fortiori, they cannot maintain trespass or trover, as they assented to the taking. We are unable to find any precedent to support the action adopted by the plaintiff; and, in our judgment, established principles of law and procedure interdict it. The request of the defendant below for a directed verdict should have been given.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to grant a new trial, and for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

Petition for rehearing denied.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

EX PARTE BYRON G. BUTTON.

EX PARTE ELMER C. HAMMOND.

(83 Neb. 636, 120 N. W. 203.)

Deposition — witness — justice of peace.

1. Sections 966 and 967 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to the taking of depositions before justices of the peace, but §§ 356 et seq. control in such matters.

Habeas corpus — commitment for contempt — irregularities — review.

2. Irregularities in proceedings before justices of the peace committing a recusant witness cannot be reviewed upon habeas corpus. It is only when the proceedings are void that this writ can be of any value.

Constitution — construction.

3. The language of the Constitution is to be interpreted with reference to the established laws, usages, and the customs of the country at the time of its adoption, in the course of ordinary and long-settled proceedings according to law.

Deposition — witness — justice of peace — statutory powers.

4. Statutes authorizing justices of the peace to take depositions and to punish persons who disobey subpoenas or refuse to answer proper questions are within the provisions of § 18, art. 6, of the Constitution, providing that justices of the peace shall "have and exercise such jurisdiction as may be provided by law."

Same — improper questions — refusal to answer — contempt.

5. A refusal to answer such improper questions as would constitute abuses of process is not a contempt and may not be punished, and a witness is entitled to his privileges and immunities as well when a deposition is taken as when examined in open court.

(March 5, 1909.)

APPPLICATIONS for writs of habeas corpus to secure the release of petitioners from custody to which they had been committed for alleged contempt of court. Writs refused.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Flansburg & Williams for petitioners.

Mr. Charles A. Robbins for respondents.

Letton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner was detained Headnotes by LETTON, J.

Note. — As to power of magistrate to punish witness for contempt, see note to Farnham v. Colman, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135.

tween parties. Power to hear and determine matters more or less directly affecting public and private rights is conferred upon and exercised by administrative and executive officers; but this has not been held to affect the validity of statutes by which such powers are conferred"—citing Dogge v. State and Re Abeles, supra; Ex parte McKee, 18 Mo. 599; and distinguishing the case of Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377, one of the cases relied upon by petitioner.

The supreme court of Kansas at first held in Re Abeles, supra, that a notary had power to commit for refusal to testify, but in Re Huron, 58 Kan. 152, 36 L.R.A. 822, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614, 48 Pac. 574, by a divided court it overruled that case and held that the statute purporting to confer such power is invalid. The opinion announcing this conclusion is written by Johnston, J., in opposition to his own views, which are also stated, and which are in line with Dogge v. State. In a note to Farnham v. Colman, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1135, a number of cases are collated, and it is shown that at common law only courts of record had power to punish for contempt, and that the power of a justice of the peace to punish a witness for contempt for refusing to be sworn and refusing to testify had its origin in a statute of Philip and Mary. The practice has long been followed in this country under authority of statutes. The power has its source in the statute and exists no farther than thus granted. This is the point really decided in Re Kerrigan, 33 N. J. L. 344, cited by petitioner, where a recorder was held to have no general power to punish for contempt, not being a court of record, and that magistrates and others empowered to act in a summary way must act within the powers specially conferred. While admitting the persuasiveness of an opinion by a court of the standing of the courts of New York, we believe that under the laws and Constitution of this state we must decline to follow People ex rel. MacDonald v. Leubischer, 34 App. Div. 577, 54 N. Y. Supp. 869, if inconsistent with the views expressed here, though as to this we are somewhat doubtful when the whole opinion is examined. The gist of that case seems to be that a commissioner of the court of another state is not an officer empowered to imprison for contempt, and is not an officer connected with the administration of justice in New York state.

If the language of the Constitution were to be construed as strictly as petitioner contends, no judicial powers or functions could be exercised by a judge at chambers or by a county judge, except when in session as a court, for "district courts" and "county courts" alone are mentioned in the section which he quotes; but the words of the Constitution are to be interpreted with reference to the established laws, usages, and customs of the country at the time of its adoption, and the course of ordinary and long-settled proceedings according to law. Whether the special power given by statute to fine or imprison recusant witnesses is the exercise of a judicial function or of judicial power we think really is merely a matter of academic definition. The point to determine is: Does it violate any provision of the fundamental law? It is one of the long-established means or instrumentalities adopted to aid in securing justice, and must have been in the minds of the makers of the Constitution as much as the fact that much of the action of a county judge or of a district judge in chambers is of a judicial nature. De Camp v. Archibald, supra. But, in any event, § 18, art. 6, of the Nebraska Constitution provides that justices of the peace "shall have and exercise such jurisdiction as may be provided by law." The power to take depositions and commit for refusal to testify is expressly conferred by statute. We think that, construing the two sections together, there is no constitutional restriction upon the legislative right to enact the statute or upon the officer to exercise the power. The language of this section is as broad as of that giving judges of courts of record such jurisdiction as may be provided by law. Const. § 23, art. 6.

The petitioner complains that the taking of the deposition is not in good faith, and that the questions asked him would require the disclosure of his private business. The record does not disclose that this has been attempted, but, even if it were, it might be proper under the issues, of the nature of which we are not informed. If it should be sought to perpetrate a wrong or to abuse the process of the court or officer clearly for an unjustifiable purpose, we think that the witness might lawfully refuse to answer; but this question is not presented here, since the petitioner refused to be sworn or to testify at all. While objections to testimony cannot be ruled upon by the officer, yet it cannot be permitted that a witness may be compelled to answer questions seeking to elicit matters which the determination of the issues of the case did not require, or which pertain to his private business or affairs, and are not proper subjects of inquiry in the case. A commitment of a witness for properly protecting himself from an illegal inquisition would not be upheld; but a refusal to be sworn may properly be punished, as may also a refusal to answer proper interrogatories. Ex parte Jennings, 60 Ohio St. 319, 71 Am. St. Rep. 720, 54 N. E. 262; Ex parte Schoepf, 74 Ohio St. 1, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 325, 77 N. E. 276; Ex parte Mallinkrodt, 20 Mo. 493; Ex parte Krieger, 7 Mo. App. 367; Ex parte Abbott, 7 Okla. 78, 54 Pac. 319. In the cases Re Davis, 38 Kan. 408, 16 Pac. 790, and Re Cubberly, 39 Kan. 291, 18 Pac. 173, decided while the rule of the Abeles Case was the law of that state, it is held that an officer has no power to commit a witness for refusal to give a deposition, when it appears that it is not taken in good faith, but merely to harass and annoy the adverse party or to fish out evidence in advance of the trial. In this state a speedy remedy for the abuse of the power granted is conferred by § 359 of the Code, which provides that a witness imprisoned by an officer before whom his deposition is being taken may apply to a judge of the supreme court, district court, or probate court, who shall have power to discharge him if it appears that his imprisonment is illegal. This affords a summary method of review by a judicial officer, and by another section of the statute such power may be exercised at chambers. A refusal to answer such questions as would constitute abuse of process is not a contempt and may not be punished, and a witness is entitled to his privileges and immunities as well when a deposition is taken as when examined in open court.

Under the facts shown in the record the justice had the right to issue the subpoena to compel the petitioner to appear. On his refusal he had a right to issue an attachment and have him brought into his presence at the time and place specified in the notice to take depositions. He then had a right to request him to be sworn, and upon his contumacious refusal so to do the statute expressly gave him the power to imprison him until he would comply with the order of the court.

The petitioner seems to be held under a lawful commitment, and the writ is therefore denied.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

W. H. WHITE, Appt.,

v.

J. J. KINCAID et al.

(149 N. C. 415, 63 S. E. 109.)

Corporation — dissolution — resistance of minority.

1. The courts will not, save in rare and exceptional instances, interfere at the suit 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of minority stockholders of a corporation with proceedings of a majority to dissolve it as authorized by statute.

Same — hostility.

2. The courts will not, at the instance of a minority stockholder of a corporation, restrain the majority from proceeding to dissolve the corporation, although it is solvent, if because of business conditions it has ceased to operate its plant, and there is no capital ready and available to resume operations should such course be determined upon; while the attitude of the parties towards each other does not give promise of mutual co-operation and eventual success.

Same — winding up — jurisdiction.

3. An action to enjoin majority stockholders of a corporation from proceeding to wind it up will not be dismissed, even though such relief cannot be granted, if because of disputes as to indebtedness and other matters arising in the action, which are in part incident to the proper winding up and adjustment of the corporate affairs, it is proper for the court under its statutory authority to take charge of the winding-up proceedings.

(December 16, 1908.)

Case Note. — Right of minority stockholder to restrain voluntary dissolution of corporation by the directors or majority stockholders.

This note is confined to cases involving the right of minority stockholders to enjoin the dissolution of a corporation by the directors or by the majority stockholders, and does not include cases in which the minority stockholder seeks to set aside a dissolution, or which discuss merely the power of the majority stockholders to dissolve the corporation, or the rights of the minority on dissolution. As to power of majority stockholders to dissolve corporation, see case note to Chilhowee Woolen Mills v. State, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 493.

The cases involving this question, which are not numerous, support the rule that a court of equity will not, in the absence of fraud, enjoin the dissolution of a corporation, where the proceedings to dissolve are being conducted in accordance with the statutory provisions.

Thus, an injunction to restrain the dissolution of a corporation was refused in Elbogen v. Gerbereux-Flynn Co. 50 App. Div. 623, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1, where everything that would constitute fraud, and every allegation of the complaint, and every statement in the affidavits of the plaintiff suggesting or indicating fraud, was positively denied by the individual defendants, and there were no circumstances proven which should induce the court to give greater weight to the plaintiff's assertion than to the defendants' denials, and the latter had a clear right under the statute to take the course pursued.

So, in Colby v. Equitable Trust Co. 124 App. Div. 262, 108 N. Y. Supp. 978, affirmed in 192 N. Y. 535, 84 N. E. 1111, it was held APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court for Rowan County dissolving a preliminary injunction against the winding up of a corporation. Affirmed.

Statement by Hoke, J.:

The plaintiff, using his complaint filed in the cause as an affidavit, alleged, among other things, that he owned $2,000 of stock in defendant company, a corporation having $19,000 of paid-up stock, owning a valuable plant, and owing not more than $2,800. Plaintiff also alleged certain wrongs committed in the control and management of the plant on the part of one of the defendants, J. J. Kincaid, the manager and owner of one hundred and forty shares of stock, and avers, further, that he and the individual codefendants had made a combination, and entered on a scheme to dissolve the corporation, for the purpose of ousting plaintiff from his office as secretary and treasurer and impairing the value of his holdings by selling out the property at a time and in a manner that would result in a sacrifice of the same, and cause great damage to the corporation and the holders of stock therein, etc. Plaintiff alleged, further, that the corporation is solvent, and was prosperous until the last several months, when, owing to the panic, the furniture mills of the county had closed down, or were working on shorter time, and this condition of affairs had made it advisable for defendant company to suspend operation temporarily, but there was every reason to believe that, with the revival of business now probable and imminent, defendant company could resume, and under proper management become, a money-making enterprise. The individual defendants answered, and admitted that the plant was now closed down, and alleged that its indebtedness is much greater than plaintiff states, filing an itemized statement of accounts and claims against it; that while the corporation is now solvent, there are no present means available for further operations. Defendants further admit that under § 1195, Rev. 1905, the defendants' directors, acting in their best judgment, and believing it advisable and most for the benefit of the corporation that the same be dissolved, had passed resolutions to that effect; and having issued proper notices for the stockholders to meet and consider and pass upon this resolution, as required by the statute, the said stockholders were proceeding to act under the notice, when they were stayed by restraining process of the court issued in this cause. Defendants deny that there has been any scheme or purpose to wrong the plaintiff or deprive him of his property, or to wrong or injure the corporation, or the holders of the stock therein, either by reason of the dissolution or the disposition of the property, but aver that the property is to be sold by methods calculated to make it bring its value, and where plaintiff and all others shall have an opportunity to bid and buy; that defendant J. J. Kincaid is the only member of the company who has any experience in this work, and he desires to withdraw and go into the business in the eastern part of the state, and, taking all the conditions and circumstances into consideration, the directors, deeming it to the best interest of the corporation and its stockholders that it should be dissolved, have passed the resolution to that effect, as heretofore stated. Plaintiff replied, denying the amount of the indebtedness claimed, averring mismanagement, etc., on the part of defendant J. J. Kincaid, as stated. On the hearing the preliminary restraining order was dissolved, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Messrs. T. C. Linn and Thomas J. Jerome, for appellant:

The majority cannot dissolve the corporation in opposition to the wishes of the

that if a large majority of the stockholders of a corporation deem it for their interests to liquidate the company, and proceedings in good faith are about to be taken in accordance with the statute for that purpose, it could not be pretended that a court of equity ought to interfere to prevent such liquidation.

And in Windmuller v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co. 114 Fed. 491, it was held that an injunction would not be granted, restraining corporations holding stock in another corporation from voting such stock on a resolution to dissolve the corporation, which dissolution was being attempted in strict conformity with the statute. The following statement from Thompson on Corporations, vol. 4, § 433, was quoted with approval: "It is believed that no case can be 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

found in which a court of equity has granted an injunction at the suit of a minority stockholder against the majority to prevent them from discontinuing the business of the corporation, and winding up its affairs." The same views were reasserted when the case came before the court again on a motion for a preliminary injunction, in 115 Fed. 748.

While it is intimated in the foregoing cases that an injunction would issue at the suit of a minority stockholder to restrain the dissolution if it was being carried on fraudulently, yet the power of the court to interfere in such a case undoubtedly arises out of its inherent power to prevent fraud, rather than any power to supervise corporations.

minority, when it is not insolvent or doing a failing business.

State v. Chilhowee Woolen Mills Co. 115 Tenn. 266, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 496, 112 Am. St. Rep. 825, 89 S. W. 741; Cook, Corp. §§ 629, 670; Abbot v. American Hard Rubber Co. 33 Barb. 578; People v. Ballard, 134 N. Y. 269, 17 L.R.A. 746, 32 N. E. 54.

Messrs. L. H. Clement, Hayden Clement, and Overman & Gregory, for appellees:

A court of equity has no power to review the decision of the board of directors of a corporation as to the advisability of a dissolution, or to enjoin such dissolution at the suit of a minority shareholder.

10 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1301; Dill. Corp. 4th ed. p. 63; Windmuller v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co. 114 Fed. 491; Windmuller v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co. 115 Fed. 748; Oglesby v. Attrill, 105 U. S. 605, 26 L. ed. 1186.

Hoke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Our statute on the subject (Revisal 1905. § 1195) provides for the voluntary dissolution of corporations, in effect, as follows: That whenever, in the judgment of the board of directors, it shall be deemed advisable and most for the benefit of a corporation that it should be dissolved, they may pass a resolution to that effect by a majority of the board, proper notice being first given as required, and when this resolution has been submitted in writing to the stockholders, and, in a meeting called for the purpose, two thirds in interest of the stockholders consent to such dissolution, and the action is filed with the secretary of state, who shall issue a certificate to that effect, and after due publication of notice in the county, and this having been made to appear to the secretary, the corporation shall be dissolved and its business affairs settled up and adjusted as required by law. As far as North Carolina is concerned, this statute settles the question formerly much mooted in the courts as to whether, and under what circumstances, a corporation could be dissolved by the stockholders, when no time was fixed for its duration, upholding and extending this power of voluntary dissolution, as established by the better considered decisions on the subject. Black v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 22 N. J. Eq. 130-404; Treadwell v. Salisbury Mfg. Co. 7 Gray, 393, 66 Am. Dec. 490. This regulation enters into every charter, subject to the provisions of the statute; and unless otherwise enacted by the legislature, every stockholder takes and holds his stock subject to this power of voluntary dissolution by resolution of the directors, concurred in by two thirds in interest of the stockholders. This being the law governing the interest of these parties, when the board of directors of a corporation have determined, in the exercise of their best judgment, that the corporation be dissolved, and are pursuing the methods specified by the statute, it is only in rare and exceptional instances that their action should be stayed or interfered with by the courts. It is a principle well established that, when a person, corporation, or individual is doing a lawful thing in a lawful way, his conduct is not actionable, though it may result in damage to another; for though the damage done is undoubted, no legal right of another is invaded, and hence it is said to be damnum absque injuria. Dewey v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 392-408, 55 S. E. 292; Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (plaintiff's appeal) 142 N. C. 318, 55 S. E. 205; Oglesby v. Attrill, 105 U. S. 605, 26 L. ed. 1186. In such cases the motive prompting the act, however reprehensible or malicious, is not as a rule relevant to the inquiry; nor will courts undertake to interfere with the honest exercise of discretionary powers vested by statute in the management of a corporation, however unwise or improvident it may seem. Windmuller v. Standard Distilling & Distributing Co. (C. C.) 114 Fed. 491.

It is true that, both before and since the enactment of this statute, there is a salutary principle, very generally recognized and upheld by well-considered decisions, that the directors of these corporate bodies are to be considered and dealt with as trustees in respect to their corporate management, and that this same principle has been applied to a majority, or other controlling number, of stockholders in reference to the rights of the minority, or any one of them, when they are as a body in the exercise of this control, in the management and direction of the corporate affairs (Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 150 N. Y. 410, 34 L.R.A. 76, 55 Am. St. Rep. 689, 44 N. E. 1043); and certainly this is true when the majority or controlling number of stockholders are exercising their authority in dictating the action of the directors, thereby "causing a breach of fiduciary duty" (Robotham v. Prudential Ins. Co. 64 N. J. Eq. 673-689, 53 Atl. 842). And, while these decisions have been more frequently made in reference to some assignment or disposition of the corporate property or assets, whereby the corporation is disabled from performing its work, and is necessarily retired from active business, this same principle applies, in a restricted degree, when the action complained of is a voluntary dissolution, according to the methods provided by law. In these cases, also, if it clearly appears that the action of the management is in bad faith; that the resolution for dissolution, for instance, has been superinduced by fraud or undue influence, or if it could be clearly established that this resolution was not taken for the benefit of the corporation, or in furtherance of its interest, but, for the mere purpose of unjustly oppressing the minority of the stockholders, or any of them, and causing a destruction or sacrifice of their pecuniary interests or holdings, giving clear indication of a breach of trust,—such action could well become the subject of judicial scrutiny and control. Treadwell v. United Verde Copper Co. 47 App. Div. 613, 62 N. Y. Supp. 708; Elbogen v. Gerbereux-Flynn Co. 30 Misc. 264, 62 N. Y. Supp. 287; Re London & M. Discount Co. (1865-66) L. R. 1 Eq. 276; Re Beaujolais Wine Co. (1867-68) L. R. 3 Ch. 15.

Such cases almost invariably arise when the management of a solvent concern, going and prosperous, ceases operations and determines to dissolve and sell out, with a view of continuing the same or similar business under different control, and when there is indication given that the sole purpose was to oppress some of the stockholders and confiscate their holdings, or when it is done in furtherance of some scheme to promote the pecuniary interest of the actors, and to the detriment of the corporation, giving indication of a breach of trust on the part of the authorities in charge and control of the corporate affairs. But no such facts are presented here. There is no testimony offered of any scheme or conspiracy, on the part of defendants, to oppress the plaintiff, except an inference made by him from the fact that a dissolution was resolved upon. While the company is now solvent, it has not been running for several months, because the returns were not satisfactory, and the prospect of a change in this respect only rests in surmise. There is some dispute as to the amount of indebtedness, nor does there seem to be any capital ready and available with which to resume operations in case such a course should be determined upon; and, from the allegations made by the parties, their attitude towards each other does not give promise of mutual co-operation or eventual success. On the evidence, therefore, and in a case of this kind we are permitted to act on the evidence, the court is of opinion that the restraining order was properly dissolved, and that, on the facts as they now appear, the contemplated dissolution should be allowed to proceed.

While we are of opinion that the order restraining the dissolution of the defendant corporation was properly dissolved, we do not think, even if our present disposition of the question should prevail at the final hearing, that the action should be dismissed. In such case, or before that time, if the directors and stockholders see proper, or deem it prudent, to act in advance of a trial, the dissolution should proceed under the methods provided by the statute. But there are, as stated, substantial issues arising in the pleadings, more particularly as to the indebtedness, both between plaintiff and defendants and between the individual defendants and the corporation, which will require decision by the court. And while, by § 1201 of the statute, the directors, unless otherwise determined by order of some court having jurisdiction, are made trustees, with power to settle or wind up the corporate business, under § 1203 this entire matter of winding up the business after dissolution may be taken charge of by the court, and must be at the instance of either the creditors or stockholders or any one of them. And matter clearly arising in this action being in part incident to the proper winding up and adjustment of the corporate affairs, and necessary to be determined, there seems to be no reason why, if dissolution is to be had, the proceedings referred to and contemplated in § 1203 should not be carried on and completed in this action, and this will include such orders as to the disposition and sale of the plant as may be for the best advantage of the assets and the best interest of the parties.

There is no error, and the judgment below is affirmed.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

LOU COOPER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

GERD FLESNER et al

(— Okla. —, 103 Pac. 1016.)

Trial — directing verdict — procedure.

1. The question presented to a trial court on a motion to direct a verdict, or which presents itself, in the consideration of such action, on its own motion, is whether, admitting the truth of all the evidence which

Headnotes by DUNN, J.

Case Note. — Destruction of record of deed or mortgage as affecting constructive notice imparted thereby.

This note does not cover the intentional destruction or interference with the record, nor any questions arising under acts for the re-establishment of destroyed records, except the single question as to the effect of the failure to take advantage of such acts has been given in favor of the party against whom the action is contemplated, together with such inferences and conclusions as may be reasonably drawn from it, there is enough competent evidence to reasonably sustain a verdict, should the jury find in accordance therewith. Where the evidence is conflicting, and the court is asked, or on its own motion considers, the direction of a verdict, all facts and inferences in conflict with the evidence against which the action is to be taken must be eliminated entirely from consideration, and totally disregarded, leaving solely the evidence for consideration which is favorable to the party against whom such action is leveled.

Estoppel — pleading facts — necessity.

2. An estoppel must be pleaded in order to enable a party to avail himself of it on the trial, and must be pleaded with particu-upon the continued effect of the original record as constructive notice.

The cases are practically unanimous in holding that the destruction of the record of a deed or mortgage does not, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, destroy its effect as constructive notice, and that consequently a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer without actual notice, subsequent to the destruction of the record, is as much affected by the constructive notice as if the record had not been destroyed. Franklin Sav. Bank v. Taylor, 4 C. C. A. 55, 9 U. S. App. 406, 53 Fed. 854; Paxson v. Brown, 10 C. C. A. 135, 27 U. S. App. 49, 61 Fed. 874; Ashburn v. Spivey, 112 Ga. 474, 37 S. E. 703; Alvis v. Morrison, 63 Ill. 181, 14 Am. Rep. 117; Shannon v. Hall, 72 Ill. 354, 22 Am. Rep. 146, s. c. on subsequent appeal 85 Ill. 473; Gammon v. Hodges, 73 Ill. 140; Steele v. Boone, 75 Ill. 457; Heaton v. Prather, 84 Ill. 330; Curyea v. Berry, 84 Ill. 600; Franklin Sav. Bank v. Taylor, 131 Ill. 376, 23 N. E. 397; Tucker v. Shaw, 158 Ill. 326, 41 N. E. 914; Hyatt v. Cochran, 69 Ind. 436; Thomas v. Hanson, 59 Minn. 274, 61 N. W. 135; Myers v. Buchanan, 46 Miss. 397; Weir v. Cordz-Fisher Lumber Co. 186 Mo. 388, 85 S. W. 341; Manwaring v. Missouri Lumber & Min. Co. 200 Mo. 718, 98 S. W. 762; Crane v. Dameron, 98 Mo. 567, 12 S. W. 251; Geer v. Missouri Lumber & Min. Co. 134 Mo. 85, 56 Am. St. Rep. 489, 34 S. W. 1099; Williams v. Butterfield, 214 Mo. 412, 114 S. W. 13 (obiter); Deming v. Miles, 35 Neb. 739, 37 Am. St. Rep. 404, 53 N. W. 665; COOPER v. FLESNER; Fitch v. Boyer, 51 Tex. 336; Mattfeld v. Huntington, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 716, 43 S. W. 53; Armentrout v. Gibbons, 30 Gratt. 632; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 153.

According to the weight of authority, also, the mere failure of a grantee or mortgagee, the record of whose deed or mortgage has been destroyed, to avail himself of the statutory provisions for the restoration of the record or the re-recording of the deed or mortgage, does not prevent him from relying on the original record as constructive notice, if the statute does not in terms clarity in order to constitute either a cause of action or defense. No intendments are indulged in favor of such plea, but it is incumbent upon the party pleading to aver all the facts essential to its existence.

Real property — deed — notice — destruction of record — effect.

3. Where a deed has been once recorded, a subsequent burning or other destruction of the records will not render the same ineffectual as notice to subsequent purchasers.

Same — "actual notice."

4. The words "actual notice" do not always mean in law what in metaphysical strictness they import. They more often mean knowledge of facts and circumstances sufficiently pertinent in character to enable reasonably cautious and prudent persons to investigate and ascertain as to the ultimate facts.

or by clear implication make such restoration or re-recording a condition of continued constructive notice. Ashburn v. Spivey; Shannon v. Hall; Gammon v. Hodges; Hyatt v. Cochran; and Myers v. Buchanan,—supra.

But apparently opposed to this position is Holton v. Alley, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 529, 24 S. W. 113, holding that the negligence of the mortgagee, the record of whose mortgage was destroyed, in failing to restore the record in the easy way provided by the statute, was such as to prevent a court from disturbing an innocent purchaser who acquired title about five years after the destruction of the record, without actual notice. The terms of the statute do not appear, but the decision is referred to the general principle that, where loss must fall on one of two innocent parties, it will be put upon him whose negligence has made the loss possible.

Under the Texas statute providing inter alia that, when the original papers have been saved or preserved from loss, the record of the originals having been lost or destroyed, the same may be recorded again, and the last registration shall have force and effect from the filing for original registration, provided that such originals are recorded within four years next after such loss or destruction, it is held that a destroyed record cannot operate as constructive notice, unless it has been restored as required by that provision. O'Neal v. Pettus, 79 Tex. 254, 14 S. W. 1065; Salmon v. Huff, 80 Tex. 133, 15 S. W. 257, 1047; Barcus v. Brigham, 84 Tex. 538, 19 S. W. 703; Magee v. Merri-man, 85 Tex. 105, 19 S. W. 1002; Weber v. Moss, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 13, 21 S. W. 609; Greer v. Willis (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 1185.

And the rule applies to a partially destroyed record, so that, if the instrument as disclosed by the record is defective as a conveyance, or if the certificate of acknowledgment as there appears is not sufficient, the record will not operate as notice. Weber v. Moss, supra.

The case of Evans v. Templeton, 69 Tex. 375, 5 Am. St. Rep. 71, 6 S. W. 843, was taken out of the rule, upon the ground that Same — bona fide purchaser — notice.

5. One who purchases land with knowledge of such facts as would put a prudent man upon inquiry, which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would lead to actual notice of rights claimed adversely to his vendor, is guilty of bad faith if he neglects to make such inquiry, and is chargeable with the "actual notice" he would have received.

(May 15, 1909.)

ERROR to the District Court for Payne County to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to partition certain real property. Reversed.

Statement by Dunn, J.:

The plaintiff in error, who was plaintiff below, began her action in the district court of Payne county against Gerd Flesner and others to have adjudged and decreed to her an undivided one-half interest in and to the E. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$, section 8, and the W. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 9, in township 19 N., range 2 E., of the Indian meridian, Payne county, Oklahoma, and have her de-one who has not paid the purchase price cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser so as to entitle him to take advantage of the former purchaser's negligence in failing to have the record restored.

In Kempner v. Beaumont Lumber Co. 20 Tex. Civ. App. 307, 49 S. W. 412, it was expressly held that the statute requiring re-registration as a condition of continued notice was applicable, notwithstanding that the destruction of the record occurred prior to the statute; the time for re-registration in that case running from the time the act took effect.

In Magee v. Merriman, supra, the court, without deciding the question whether the law requires the registration of the original only, and does not relate to the registration of a certified copy in case the original has been lost or destroyed, said that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the existence of the original deed would be presumed.

In Tarrant County Agri. M. & B. Stock Assn. v. Yellowstone Kit, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 685, 31 S. W. 1080, it was held that the failure to supply the destroyed record was not excused by the fact that the original deed was destroyed. In answer to the contention that, as the original deed in this case was not "saved or preserved from loss" as provided in § 4 (the provision above set out) no duty devolved upon the holder to provide for a second registration, the court said that the provisions of §§ 1 and 2 provided for the supplying of lost or destroyed records without reference to the existence or nonexistence of the original, and that the duty rested upon the owner without reference to the provision of § 4 or to the preservation or loss of the original. After remarking that there was no period of limitations prescribed in §§ 1 and 2 within which the clared to be entitled to the common possession of the premises with the said defendant during the years from 1901 to 1907, inclusive, and praying an accounting for the value of the use and occupancy of the premises during said time; also asking for partition of the same. To this petition the defendant filed an answer denying all of the averments of the petition, except that he was in the actual and sole possession of the land. A trial of the cause was had to a jury, and, at the conclusion of the evidence of both parties, the court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, which was accordingly done, and, on judgment being rendered thereon, plaintiff took the case to the supreme court of the territory of Oklahoma by proceedings in error, and the same now comes to us for review by virtue of our succession to that court.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The controversy grows out of the following facts: George W. Gardenhire on the 1st day of December, 1890, commuted on the tract of land in controversy, and on the 2d day of March, 1891, made a warranty deed to the same to his son, Clide, who on lost record must be supplied, the only limitation provided for being contained in § 4, the court said that the privilege of supplying the record should be exercised at least before the purchase by a third party. In this case, however, some of the instruments in the subsequent purchaser's chain of title were executed more than four years after the destruction of the record.

While the Texas statute requires re-registration within four years after destruction, re-registering or re-recording after the expiration of that period would seem to be sufficient as against purchasers or encumbrancers subsequent to the re-registration or re-recording. Though the question was not expressly passed on, it was said in Frugia v. Trueheart (Tex. Civ. App.) 106 S. W. 736, that re-registration in 1894 after destruction in 1874 was good for all purposes of notice after the later date.

It was held in Curry v. Lehman, 55 Fla. 847, 47 So. 18, that the lien on real property acquired in one county by the recording of a transcript of a judgment or decree rendered in another, whether such transcript was recorded before or after the destruction of the original record, was not lost by the failure to commence proceedings to establish the lost record as provided by a statute providing that, when the records of any court in any county showing the entry and rendition of any judgment or decree shall have been heretofore destroyed by fire, such judgment or decree shall not be good and effectual as a lien on real estate as against creditors or subsequent purchasers for a valuable consideration and without notice, unless legal proceedings to re-establish the same shall be begun in the proper court within nine months from the passage of this act.

March 24, 1891, executed a warranty deed to the same tract of land to William G. Scott, who, plaintiff alleges, prior to the 9th day of December, 1895, executed and delivered a warranty deed to Jacob Gardenhire, her husband, to whom she was married on the 20th day of September, 1894, and who died on or about January 5, 1895. It is plaintiff's claim that this warranty deed was duly recorded, but that the record of the same was destroyed at the time of the destruction of the courthouse of Payne county by fire on December 27, 1894, and that the original deed she was unable to find or produce. On January 7, 1895, William G. Scott, executed and delivered to George W. Gardenhire a quitclaim deed, which was duly filed for record with the register of deeds of Payne county, March 15, 1898. On November 20, 1899, George W. Gardenhire made, executed, and delivered to the defendant Flesner his bond for a deed to this tract of land for a consideration of $3,500, $700 of which was duly paid in cash at the time of the execution and delivery of the said bond, and Flesner in March following took actual possession of the tract of land, and on May 16, 1901, received from George W. Gardenhire a warranty deed for the tract, having paid in full the consideration agreed upon. The next payment made after the $700 payment was on the 15th day of January, 1901. At the time of Jacob Gardenhire's death, he was without issue and left surviving him his wife and father, so that, under our law of descent and distribution, they would each inherit a one-half interest in this land, provided the conveyance contended for could be established, and evidence thereof being in such a condition as to charge Flesner with knowledge or notice. At the time Flesner purchased, he was not a resident of Payne county, and was virtually a stranger therein. He made, however, several trips to the vicinity of Stillwater before finally coming to an agreement with his grantor and moving on the land.

The testimony adduced by plaintiff is to the effect that, on one of his visits to that vicinity, in January or February, 1900, he stopped at the home of Louis M. Cooper, the father of plaintiff's present husband, who lived about three quarters of a mile from the land in controversy.

Mr. Cooper testified in answer to interrogatories as follows, in reference to what he told him about plaintiff's claim of right and interest in and to the land involved:

Q. Now, this day that Mr. Flesner and Mr. Shaffer was at your house, you say Mr. Flesner said something about buying this east half of the southeast of 8, and the west half of the southwest of 9, the old 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Gardenhire land, or the Jake Gardenhire land. You may state to the jury what he said about it.

A. Well, he came there and called for dinner, as I stated, rather late. We had our dinner, and I told him we never turned anyone off, and, if he would wait until my wife could fix dinner, he could have his dinner. While he was sitting there eating dinner, he told his business; said he was around looking up a location, and wanted to buy a farm and wanted to know if I knew of any. Well, I knew of several farms for sale, but I don't know that I named the Gardenhire place. He said, though, he was stuck on the Gardenhire place.

Q. He told you that?

A. Yes, sir, and I asked him, "For why?" He said it was close to the college, close to school, and he believed he would like to own it. "Well, now," I says, "you are a stranger in the neighborhood, and my advice would be to let that farm alone," that George Gardenhire didn't own it, that if he bought it he would buy trouble; that Jake's widow had married into my family, married one of my sons, and some day they would commence suit for her rights. Well, they asked the question then if there was any heirs, and I told him "No." Well, he said, then he wasn't afraid to buy it, and I told him, the way I understood the statute, she was entitled to one half of that land, and he said, "No," she wasn't entitled to nothing. "Well," I says, "that is your opinion, and my opinion is the other way, but my advice would be to let it alone, and not buy it, for you will buy a lawsuit if you do."

Q. What, if anything, did you say to Flesner about Jake having a deed to that land at any time?

A. Well, I told him how the thing happened—

Q. Just go on and tell fully to the jury that conversation with him.

A. I don't know as I can tell it all.

Q. Tell the jury all you remember you said to him.

A. I told him Mr. George Gardenhire had told me he had deeded the farm away, and Mr. Scott told me also he had deeded it to Jake Gardenhire, and Jake Gardenhire told me also he had a deed for it, it was his, and asked me what I thought about the trade, in exchanging his farm directly north for that. "Well," I says, "I don't know how you traded, but I think you made a good trade, a good exchange." "Well," he says, "I did that, and got a deed for it."

Q. You told Mr. Flesner that, did you?

A. Yes, sir; I did tell him that, to keep him out of trouble, because I didn't want any trouble in my family, and didn't want him to buy it, or any other stranger.

The party, taking his deed to the register of deeds' office and having it recorded, did all that was required of him. Mr. Wade in his work on the Law of Notice (2d ed. § 157) says: "It has also been decided that, where the deed has been once recorded, a subsequent burning or other destruction of the records will not render the same ineffectual as notice to subsequent purchasers." See also Geer v. Missouri Lumber & Min. Co. 134 Mo. 85, 56 Am. St. Rep. 489, 34 S. W. 1099; Ashburn v. Spivey, 112 Ga. 474, 37 S. E. 703; Alvis v. Morrison, 63 Ill. 181, 14 Am. Rep. 117. The force of this rule was broken in the mind of the trial court by reason of the fact that the plaintiff had permitted her claim of interest in and to the land to lie unasserted and without record from the date of the destruction of the courthouse to the date of the bringing of this action, thereby, it was assumed, estopping herself from asserting her claim to the land in the face of a purchaser in good faith for value, whose title was predicated upon an apparently clear record. We question much whether the defendant in this cause was entitled, as the record is presented, to have interposed in his behalf, against the assertions of plaintiff, the doctrine of an equitable estoppel. Estoppel is an affirmative defense to be specially and specifically pleaded. Such is the holding in the cases of Holt v. Holt (Okla.) 102 Pac. 187; Deming Invest. Co. v. Shawnee F. Ins. Co. 16 Okla. 1, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 607, 83 Pac. 918; Tonkawa Mill. Co. v. Tonkawa, 15 Okla. 672, 83 Pac. 915; Troyer v. Dyar, 102 Ind. 396, 1 N. E. 728; Sharon v. Minnock, 6 Nev. 377. So far as the record discloses, the defendant Flesner would not have been in any particular deterred from taking identically the same course which he did had he had full and complete knowledge of the claims of plaintiff, and knew that she intended asserting them. If not, then it was incumbent upon him to assert it, and to aver that the failure of plaintiff to do some act or perform some duty had caused him to act differently than he otherwise would. We do not consider or pass upon the question of plaintiff's failure constituting an estoppel, nor any of its effects should it ultimately be found. We do not regard it as being in the case. On another trial of this cause defendant, if he elects and can do so, should be permitted to amend his answer, and set up the plea of estoppel upon which to predicate proof of the same. If the deed was not recorded, or the same thing, if plaintiff is unable to show it was to the satisfaction of a jury, then the question of notice will be involved.

Section 12, chap. 16, § 888, under the title "Conveyances of Real Estate," Wilson's 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, provides: "Except as hereinafter provided, no acknowledgment or recording shall be necessary to the validity of any deed, mortgage, or contract relating to real estate as between the parties thereto; but no deed, mortgage, contract, bond, lease, or other instrument relating to real estate, other than a lease for a period not exceeding one year and accompanied by actual possession, shall be valid as against third persons, unless acknowledged and recorded as herein provided; except, actual notice to such third persons shall be equivalent to due acknowledgment and recording." Our statutes defining notice are found in chapter 28, entitled, "Definitions and Provisions," Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, §§ 9-13 inclusive, which are as follows:

"Sec. 9. Good faith consists in an honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through the forms or technicalities of law, together with an absence of all information or belief of facts which would render the transaction unconscientious.

"Sec. 10. Notice is either actual or constructive.

"Sec. 11. Actual notice consists in express information of a fact.

"Sec. 12. Constructive notice is notice imputed by the law to a person not having actual notice.

"Sec. 13. Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence, is deemed to have constructive notice of the fact itself."

The question which then presents itself is: Was the information which plaintiff contends was given defendant at the time of his visit to the Cooper home in January or February, 1900, given, and, if so, was it either actual or constructive notice? It will be observed that § 13, supra, charges every person with constructive notice of the fact itself when, having actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry, he omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence. In the case of Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354, the court of appeals of New York, dealing with this question, speaking through Justice Selden, said: "Notice is of two kinds—actual and constructive. Actual notice embraces all degrees and grades of evidence from the most direct and positive proof to the slightest circumstance from which a jury would be warranted in inferring notice. It is a mere question of fact, and is open to every species of legitimate evidence which may tend to strengthen or impair the conclusion.

Constructive notice, on the other hand, is a legal inference from established facts, and, like other legal presumptions, does not admit of dispute. 'Constructive notice,' says Judge Story, 'is in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not even allow of its being controverted.' Story, Eq. Jur. § 399. A recorded deed is an instance of constructive notice. It is of no consequence whether the second purchaser has actual notice of the prior deed or not. He is bound to take, and is presumed to have, the requisite notice. So, too, notice to an agent is constructive notice to the principal; and it would not in the least avail the latter to show that the agent had neglected to communicate the fact. In such cases the law imputes notice to the party whether he has it or not. Legal or implied notice, therefore, is the same as constructive notice, and cannot be controverted by proof." This question is also elaborately treated by the supreme court of Wisconsin in the case of Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498, wherein the court held in the syllabus: "One who purchases land with knowledge of such facts as would put a prudent man upon inquiry, which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would lead to actual notice of rights claimed adversely to his vendor, is guilty of bad faith if he neglects to make such inquiry, and is chargeable with the 'actual notice' he would have received." See also Hooser v. Hunt, 65 Wis. 71, 26 N. W. 442, and Pope v. Nichols, 61 Kan. 230, 59 Pac. 257.

The statutes of California on this question are very similar to our own. They will be found embraced in §§ 18 to 19 of the Civil Code. The case of Prouty v. Devin, 118 Cal. 258, 50 Pac. 380, was one somewhat similar to the one at bar, in which the court said: "Section 1217 of the Civil Code provides that an unrecorded instrument is valid as between the parties thereto and those who have notice thereof. Notice is actual and constructive. Actual notice is that which consists in express information of a fact, and constructive notice is that which is imputed by law. Civil Code, § 18. 'Every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact has constructive notice of the fact itself in all cases in which, by prosecuting such inquiry, he might have learned such fact, (Civil Code, § 19), . . . for the general doctrine, as well as the express provision of § 19 of our Civil Code, is that whatever puts a party on inquiry amounts in judgment or law to constructive notice, provided the inquiry becomes a duty, and, if followed, would lead to the knowledge of the required site facts by ordinary diligence and understanding." After reciting the evidence in the case, the court concluded the opinion by saying: "The question for determination is whether there was actual notice upon the part of Bates of circumstances sufficient to put him as a prudent man upon inquiry. If so, then in law he is chargeable with constructive notice and knowledge of the fact of this pre-existing mortgage." Mr. Wade in his work on the Law of Notice, dealing with this question (§§ 3, 4, and 5), says: "Actual notice has been defined by declaring that it exists 'when knowledge is actually brought home to the party to be affected by it.' This excludes all notice which does not amount in fact, as well as theory, to actual knowledge. There can be no doubt that this definition is 'too narrow. . . . The courts have accordingly refused to confine actual notice within the narrow limits of the definition quoted above. Their departure from the rule that renders actual notice and actual knowledge synonymous terms is perhaps most conspicuous in cases arising under the registry laws, where, in order to give precedence to a prior unrecorded instrument over a subsequent one affecting the same land, which has been duly recorded, it is necessary to prove that the subsequent purchaser had actual notice of the prior unregistered instrument. . . . There are two classes of actual notice which for convenience may be designated as (1) express, which includes all knowledge or information coming to the party to be charged, of a degree above that which depends upon collateral inference, or which imposes upon him the further duty of inquiry; and (2) implied, which imputes knowledge to the party because he is shown to be conscious of having the means of knowledge, though he does not use them. In other words, where he chooses to remain voluntarily ignorant of the fact, or is grossly negligent in not following up the inquiry which the known facts suggest." The author, in § 8, further discusses the notice which he terms "implied," by stating that it does not include either positive knowledge or information so direct as to necessarily carry conviction to the mind of the person notified, and neither does it belong to that class which depends upon legal presumption, but that it is substantial evidence, from which the jury after estimating its value may infer notice. He then says that it differs from constructive notice, with which it is frequently confounded and which it greatly resembles, with respect to the character of the inference upon which it rests; constructive notice being the creature of positive law, or resting upon strictly legal inference, while implied notice arises from inference of fact. The language of our statute, it will be observed in this connection, is that the party having actual notice of circumstance, etc., is deemed to have constructive notice of the fact itself; so that it seems to us the constructive notice of our statute and the implied notice referred to by Mr. Wade are almost, if not exactly, the same in legal effect.

The issues presented are all controverted questions of fact, and as such should have been submitted to the jury for its determination. The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing the conveyance and title under which she claims, and that the defendant had either actual or constructive notice thereof. There may be a question of plaintiff's laches involved, and, if insisted on, it also, along with the other questions, should be left to a jury.

The judgment of the lower court is accordingly reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Kane, Ch. J., and Turner, Williams, and Hayes, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

MARY V. KIRK, Respt.,
v.

H. H. WYMAN et al., Members of Aiken
Board of Health, Appts.

(— S. C. —, 65 S. E. 387.)

Health — pesthouse — injunction.

1. A board of health may be enjoined from sending to the pesthouse, which is unfit for her habitation because of want of water supply and heating arrangements and the proximity of the city dumping ground, and because to it are sent persons afflicted with smallpox and other loathsome diseases, an elderly lady of refinement who has a form of leprosy which is very slightly, if at all, contagious, and who has mingled for years with the people without communicating the disease to anyone, while quarantine in her own home would afford complete protection to the public until a comfortable place could be arranged for her elsewhere.

Injunction — pesthouse — protection of patient.

2. A remedy by action against members of the board of health for damages for wrongfully sending one to the pesthouse, if it existed, is not adequate to such an extent as to prevent the issuance of an injunction against such act.

(Hydrick, J., dissents.)

(August 19, 1909.)

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Aiken County temporarily restraining them from removing complainant to the contagious division of the city hospital. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hendersons, for appellants:

The court under the law should not have undertaken to restrain the exercise of the discretion of this board in its ministerial duty in carrying out the conclusion which they had reached, by passing upon the question as to what was a proper place to which to remove respondent, or whether she should be removed at all.

Brown v. Ansel, 82 S. C. 141, 63 S. E. 449; State ex rel. Rawlinson v. Ansel, 76 S. C. 403, 57 S. E. 185, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 613; State ex rel. Mauldin v. Matthews, 41 S. C. 414, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 735, 62 S. E. 695; 21 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 404; Tiedeman.

Case Note. — Right to injunction against being sent to pesthouse.

The general rule is that the courts will not interfere with the exercise of legislative or discretionary powers conferred by the state upon municipalities, and will not restrain or coerce the action of a municipal corporation acting through its duly appointed officers or boards, merely because such action is unwise, extravagant, or a mistake of judgment. 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1230. But where the action is fraudulent, clearly oppressive, or grossly abusive, the courts will intervene and exercise their inherent power of equity to prevent such fraud, injustice, or abuse of power. The above rule applies, of course, to municipalities acting through health officers or boards, as well as to the other branches of the municipal government.

There appears to be no direct authority upon the question whether an injunction will issue to restrain health officers from removing a patient suffering from a contagious disease to a pesthouse. But there is no apparent reason why the courts should not act in such a case, providing that the attending circumstances require or justify the intervention of equity,—as, for example, in KIRK v. WYMAN, where it appeared that the removal of the plaintiff to the pesthouse was unnecessary to protect the public from the spread of the disease, and would work unnecessary hardship upon the plaintiff. Before a court will issue an injunction in any case it must appear that the plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, and this rule is, of course, applicable to cases of the kind under discussion; and it appears in the above case that the plaintiff would not have any adequate remedy at law for the injuries which would have been inflicted by her removal to the pesthouse under the circumstances.

A few cases may be cited to show different applications of the rule as stated

State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, §§ 17, 44; Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 553, 558, 562, 567, 842, 843.

If the board of health acted outside of their jurisdiction, with negligence or malice or ill-will, complainant would have a cause of action against them, and that is an adequate remedy at law, and should oust the court of equity of any right to proceed by the extraordinary remedy of injunction.

16 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 45, 48; Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 724-726; Americus v. Mitchell, 79 Ga. 807, 5 S. E. 202; Aaron v. Broiles, 64 Tex. 316, 53 Am. Rep. 764; Cooley, Const. Lim. 4th ed. p. 729; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. art. 2, § 95; Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 10 L.R.A. 116, 25 Am. St. Rep. 850, 26 N. E. 100; Pearson v. Zehr, 138 Ill. 48, 32 Am. St. Rep. 113, 29 N. E. 854.

Messrs. Croft & Croft and Sawyer & Owens, for respondent:

A party who is not heard, and who has no opportunity of being heard, before the board of health, is not concluded by the findings or adjudications of the board, and may contest all the facts upon which his liability is sought to be established.

Salem v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 431; Smith, Corp. ¶ 1675; Golden v. Health Dept. 21 App. Div. 420, 47 N. Y. Supp. 623; Rogers v. Barker, 31 Barb. 447; Munn v. Corbin, 8 Colo. App. 113, 44 Pac. 783;

Hutton v. Camden, 39 N. J. L. 122, 23 Am. Rep. 210; Weil v. Ricord, 24 N. J. Eq. 169; Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. 262; Sawyer v. State Bd. of Health, 125 Mass. 182; Philadelphia v. Scott, 81 Pa. 80, 22 Am. Rep. 738; Baugh v. Sheriff, 7 Phila. 82; Board of Health v. Potts, 2 Clark (Pa.) 52; Belcher v. Farrer, 8 Allen, 325; Taunton v. Taylor, 116 Mass. 254; Gaines v. Waters, 64 Ark. 609, 44 S. W. 353; Hartman v. Wilmington, 1 Marv. (Del.) 215, 41 Atl. 74; Savannah v. Mulligan, 95 Ga. 323, 29 L.R.A. 303, 51 Am. St. Rep. 86, 22 S. E. 621; Americus v. Mitchell, 79 Ga. 807, 5 S. E. 201; Pearson v. Zehr, 138 Ill. 48, 32 Am. St. Rep. 113, 29 N. E. 854; Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 10 L.R.A. 116, 23 Am. St. Rep. 850, 26 N. E. 100; People ex rel. Copcutt v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1, 23 L.R.A. 481, 37 Am. St. Rep. 522, 35 N. E. 320; Metropolitan Bd. of Health v. Heister, 37 N. Y. 661; Harrington v. Providence, 20 R. I. 233, 38 L.R.A. 305, 38 Atl. 1; Lowe v. Conroy, 120 Wis. 151, 66 L.R.A. 907, 102 Am. St. Rep. 983, 97 N. W. 942, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 341; 21 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 399.

Where public officers are acting illegally, or without authority and in breach of trust, and causing irreparable injury, they will be enjoined.

above to cases in which an injunction has been sought restraining health officers.

Thus, in Manhattan v. Hessin (Kan.) 105 Pac. 44, the court refused to restrain the health officers of a city from using one of its buildings as a pesthouse for the isolation of patients suffering from smallpox, where their acts in attempting to stop the spread of the disease were apparently performed in good faith, for the best interests of all persons concerned, and with commendable promptness and good judgment.

And an injunction restraining the city from using property as a hospital for the care of a person afflicted with leprosy was sustained in Baltimore v. Fairfield Improv. Co. 87 Md. 352, 40 L.R.A. 494, 67 Am. St. Rep. 344, 39 Atl. 1081, where it was shown that the establishment of such a hospital would cause serious injury to the value of the property in the locality.

And in Wong Wai v. Williamson, 103 Fed. 1, the court restrained the board of health from requiring the Chinese residents of the city of San Francisco to be inoculated with a bubonic plague serum, and from confining such residents within the limits of the city until so inoculated. The court said that while it was possible that the Asiatic or Mongolian race, as a class, might be more liable to the plague than any other, such an explanation would be dismissed as unsatisfactory where no evidence had been offered to support the claim, and it was not known to be a fact.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, in Jew Ho v. Williamson, 103 Fed. 10, the court held that it had the power to inquire whether a quarantine which had been established to prevent the threatened spread of the bubonic plague was reasonable and necessary under all of the circumstances.

And a board of health was enjoined in Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. 94, from removing tenants and closing up houses, where it was not justified by the actual existence of a contagious disease. In this case the decision of the court is based upon the ground that there did not appear to be any necessity of such an excessive exercise of power, merely because of the possible approach of cholera during the summer season.

In Summit Twp. v. Jackson, 154 Mich. 37, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 260, 117 N. W. 545, an injunction was sustained which forbade a city removing a person afflicted with a communicable disease in an adjoining town without the consent of the latter's health officer, where the general health laws provided that no person so affected should be brought into any township without a permit from its health officer.

Upon the general question of quarantine regulations by health authorities, see note to Hurst v. Warner, 26 L.R.A. 484.

As to the right of municipality to establish contagious disease hospital beyond city limits, see case note to Summit Twp. v. Jackson, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 260.

22 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 879, 882; Rogers v. Barker, supra.

The mere fact that damages are recoverable at law is no objection to the granting of an injunction, in case such damages would not be adequate compensation for the injuries.

22 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 771; First Evangelical Church v. Walsh, 57 Ill. 363, 11 Am. Rep. 21; Dennis v. Eckhardt, 3 Grant, Cas. 390; Butler v. Thomasville, 74 Ga. 570.

Mr. J. P. K. Bryan, also for respondent:

Acts of health bodies and other bodies exercising police power of the state can be reviewed by the court.

Riley v. Greenwood, 72 S. C. 90, 110 Am. St. Rep. 592, 51 S. E. 532; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 481, 41 L. ed. 523, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 236, 238, 239, 49 L. ed. 169, 175, 176, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Rohn v. Osmun, 143 Mich. 68, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 635, 106 N. W. 697; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 409, 410; 2 High, Inj. 3d ed. 969, 974, 993; People ex rel. Copcutt v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1, 23 L.R.A. 481, 37 Am. St. Rep. 522, 35 N. E. 320; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 602, 603.

It is not enough that the plaintiff has a remedy at law; it must be as efficient and as prompt in its administration as the remedy in equity.

Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. 210, 7 L. ed. 655; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 12, 43 L. ed. 341, 346, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bailey, 13 Wall. 616, 621, 20 L. ed. 501, 503; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 514, 32 L. ed. 1005, 1008, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 79, 95, 36 L. ed. 82, 88, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; 2 Story, Eq. § 928; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 231, 49 L. ed. 171, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18.

• Woods, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The board of health of the city of Aiken, after investigation, reached the conclusion that Miss Mary V. Kirk, a resident of the city, was afflicted with leprosy contagious in its nature, and passed resolutions requiring her to be removed to the city hospital for infectious diseases. Thereupon Miss Kirk brought this action for injunction, alleging in her complaint that, although she is a victim of leprosy, it is of the kind shown as anesthetic, and not dangerous to the community; that she is a woman of culture and refinement; and that the place to which the board of health require her to be removed is the city pesthouse, coarse and comfortless, used only for the purpose of incarcerating negroes having smallpox and other dangerous and infectious diseases; that the house adjoins the city dumping grounds, where the offal of the city is deposited, from which arise foul and unhealthy odors. Judge Aldrich on the complaint issued a temporary restraining order, and required the board of health to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be granted pending the hearing of the cause. As a return the board of health submitted their answer, alleging: (1) That the leprosy afflicting the plaintiff is contagious and dangerous to the community; (2) that they had resolved on compulsory isolation outside of the city only as a last resort, after Miss Kirk had refused to leave the city; (3) that the city council at their instance have put the city hospital in good condition and repair for Miss Kirk's temporary abode, and have promised to build for her a comfortable cottage, supplied with all modern conveniences, as soon as the work can be done; (4) that, while the city dumping grounds are about 100 yards from the hospital, the foul offal is not deposited there, and foul and unhealthy odors do not arise from it; (5) that they have discharged what they consider to be their duty under the law with humanity and courtesy. After hearing many affidavits from both sides, bearing on the issues thus made, Judge Aldrich granted a temporary injunction, restraining the board of health from removing the plaintiff to the city hospital or pesthouse. The order contained, however, this condition: "This order is not to be understood as interfering with the board of health in maintaining such quarantine regulations as they may deem necessary for the public safety." The board of health appealed.

The order of injunction rests on the finding by the circuit judge that the city hospital or pesthouse is unfit for the habitation of such a patient, by reason of a want of water supply and heating arrangements, and the proximity to the city dumping grounds. The appeal being from a mere temporary injunction, with the hotly contested issues of fact depending on affidavits only, we shall consider no matters of law or fact, except such as are absolutely necessary to decide whether the temporary injunction should be maintained.

The state Constitution thus provides for the creation of boards of health: "It shall be the duty of the general assembly to create boards of health wherever they may be necessary, giving to them power and authority to make such regulations as shall protect the health of the community, and abate nuisances." Art. 8, § 10. All the statute law relating to boards of health was re-enacted and incorporated in chapter 28, art. 1, Civ. Code 1902, and therefore should be referred to the duty to legislate on the subject, imposed by the Constitution of 1895 on the general assembly. Municipal boards of health, therefore, are to be considered as deriving their authority to isolate infected persons from the section of the Constitution above referred to, and from § 1099 of the Civil Code, which provides: "The said board of health shall have power and it shall be their duty to make and enforce all needful rules and regulations to prevent the introduction and spread of infectious or contagious diseases by the regulations of intercourse with infected places, by the arrest, separation, and treatment of infected persons, and persons who shall have been exposed to any contagious or infectious diseases, and by abating and removing all nuisance which they shall deem prejudicial to the public health, to enforce vaccination, to mark infected houses or places, to prescribe rules for the construction and maintenance of house drains, waste pipes, soil pipes, and cesspools, and make all such other regulations as they shall deem necessary for the preservation of the public health. They shall also have power, with the consent of the town or city council, in case of the prevalence of any contagious or infectious diseases within the town or city, to establish one or more hospitals and to make provisions and regulations for the management of the same."

Complaint was made about December 8, 1908, that Miss Kirk was afflicted with leprosy. The board came to the conclusion that the complaint was well founded, that the leprosy was contagious, and that it was necessary to the public health that Miss Kirk should leave the city, or be isolated in the city hospital or pesthouse until a more suitable abode could be provided for her. The first resolution was passed on December 13, 1908, in these terms: "Resolved, that we notify Miss Kirk, her friends, and practising physician that we will move her out to the city hospital if she is not moved out of the city in ten days from the date of service." Notice of this resolution was given to Miss Kirk; but at the request of Dr. Croft, Miss Kirk's physician, the board reconsidered the matter, and entered upon a diligent inquiry as to the nature of the disease and the necessity of isolation, calling to their aid Dr. Croft and all the physicians of the city. The investigation did not change the board's conclusion. On December 28th, and again on the 29th, Miss Kirk wrote to the board, submitting to its action and acquiescing therein on condition that she should have a white caretaker.

The following extracts from the minutes of the board of health indicate their formulated rule, after having had the matter under consideration from December 5, 1908, to 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

January 13, 1909: "The matter of Miss Kirk was taken up and discussed. The secretary reported that the resolution adopted, asking council to erect a cottage for Miss Kirk, had been placed before the mayor and council, and that body had agreed to erect such cottage as soon as practicable, and the mayor had so informed Miss Kirk. The following was then introduced and adopted as a part of the rules and regulations of the board of health: 'Resolved by the board of health for the city of Aiken, that pursuant to the law giving us the power thereto, that we do hereby adopt the following rule and regulation: In order to prevent the introduction and spread of infectious or contagious diseases in the city of Aiken, that wherever any person is known to have any contagious or infectious disease, and if they enter the town having such, they be commanded immediately to leave the city, and if they do not, that they be quarantined until they can be removed, and in case any such person or persons is found within the city of Aiken affected with any such infectious or contagious disease, that they be notified to leave, and if they do not leave within a reasonable time, or their relatives and friends do not take them away, then and in such case that an order may be issued by the board of health to the health officers, or any of the policemen of the city, to take such party in charge and remove them to the city hospital for infectious diseases, or such other place as may be designated by the board of health.'

On January 18, 1909, the board resolved "that Miss Kirk be removed out to the city hospital to-day, provided her health permits." Subsequently, on the same day, Dr. Croft gave to the board a certificate: "I have this day visited Miss Kirk, and find that she is very nervous and has been quite sick all night, and think that it is advisable that she be not removed at present." Three days thereafter, on January 21, 1909, the complaint for injunction and the order to show cause were served on the board of health.

The principles of constitutional law governing health regulations by statute and municipal ordinance may be thus stated:

First. Statutes and ordinances requiring the removal or destruction of property or the isolation of infected persons, when necessary for the protection of the public health, do not violate the constitutional guaranty of the right of the enjoyment of liberty and property, because neither the right to liberty nor the right of property extends to the use of liberty or property to the injury of others. The maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, applies to the person as well as to the property of the citizen.

645, 56 L.R.A. 795, 72 Am. St. Rep. 458, 25 So. 591; Forbes v. Board of Health, 28 Fla. 26, 13 L.R.A. 549, 9 So. 862. In this state it must be held, on the authority of White v. Charleston, 2 Hill, L. 576, that the members of a board of health are not personally liable for errors in their official conduct, when they exercise their honest judgment. Personal liability depends on proof of bad faith. True, bad faith may be shown by evidence that the official action was so arbitrary and unreasonable that it could not have been taken in good faith; but there is no such showing in this case. Even if there were such showing, the remedy by action for damages would not be adequate where the health or life of the citizen is by force unnecessarily imperiled. Protection from the loss of health or life is the only adequate relief in such case.

We cannot too strongly emphasize the caution which courts should exercise in entertaining applications for injunction against boards of health, yet careful consideration of the record leads us to the conclusion that this is an exceptional case, and that the order for the temporary injunction, carefully guarded as it was in its terms, was not improvidently made.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court should be affirmed.

Hydrick, J., dissenting:

I feel constrained to dissent from the decision of the court in this case.

In the main, I concur in the statement of the principles of law applicable in the consideration by the courts of municipal ordinances and regulations of boards of health, as laid down by Mr. Justice Woods. There are, however, some expressions contained therein which are susceptible of a construction which would make his statement of the principles applicable in such cases conflict with the previous decisions of this court, and which, if such construction is proper, may prove subversive of the power and authority conferred upon these bodies by the Constitution and statutes. In the fourth subdivision of his statement of the law, he says: "In passing upon such regulations and proceedings, the courts consider, first, whether interference with personal liberty or property was reasonably necessary to the public health; and, second, if the means used and the extent of the interference were reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose to be attained." In the fifth subdivision he says: "If the statute, or the regulations made, or the proceedings taken under it, are not reasonably appropriate to the end in view, the necessity for curtailment of individual liberty, which is essential to the validity of such statutes and regulations and proceedings, is wanting, and the courts must declare them invalid, as violative of constitutional right."

This court has held, in a number of cases, that, within the scope of the power conferred upon them by the Constitution and statutes, these bodies are the exclusive judges of the necessity of police regulations adopted by them, and of the means necessary and proper to enforce them. Within the scope of their powers, their action is legislative, as well as administrative, and the courts have no power to inquire whether it is necessary, reasonable, or appropriate to the end in view, unless, and only in so far as, such inquiry may be necessary to enable the courts to determine whether rights guaranteed by the Constitution, state or Federal, have thereby been invaded. The courts will not be misled by a mere subterfuge. Hence, in order that rights guaranteed by the Constitution may not be violated under the form and pretense of police regulations, the courts will inquire whether there is any real and substantial relation between such regulations and the manner of their administration and the avowed purpose sought to be accomplished. If the language above quoted means no more than that the courts may inquire into the reasonableness or necessity of such regulations and into the manner of their administration, and consider these, in so far as such inquiry and consideration may serve to enable the courts to decide whether there is any real and substantial relation between such regulations and the manner of administering them and the avowed purpose sought to be attained, and hence whether they are bona fide exertions of the police power or mere pretenses, under cover of which constitutional rights are invaded, then I think the statement correct; but if it is meant that the courts can go further, and, after having discovered the existence of some real and substantial relation between such regulations and the method of enforcing them and the end sought to be attained, set their judgment up against that of the municipal corporation or board of health as to the appropriateness, reasonableness, or necessity of such regulations, when they do not invade any constitutional right, then I do not think it a correct statement of the law. If there is such an intimate relation between the law and the avowed purpose of it that reasonable men might differ as to the necessity, reasonableness, or wisdom of the law, the courts are bound by the judgment of the lawmakers, unless law conflicts with the Constitution; but of course, if no such relation appears to exist between the law and its administration and the end to be attained, or if such relation is so slight that, considering its effect and operation and the manner of its administration, reasonable men could not differ in the opinion that the real purpose and intent of the law is to evade some provision or guaranty of the Constitution, under a mere pretensive exercise of the police power, or if it does, in fact, in its necessary operation and effect, conflict with the Constitution, then the courts may hold it void, as being in excess of the power granted, or in violation of the Constitution. Upon this view many apparent conflicts in the decisions may be reconciled, for the courts are generally agreed that large powers and discretion must be vested in municipal bodies and boards of health in regulating the police, and that every intendment will be indulged in support of their actions, and they will not be declared void, unless they are clearly in excess of the powers conferred, or a palpable invasion of rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

In some states the courts have declared municipal ordinances and regulations of boards of health void because they were unreasonable or unnecessary to the public safety; but upon careful examination of the cases, it will be found that, in the great majority of them, they were said to be unreasonable or unnecessary because they were in excess of the powers granted, or in conflict with constitutional provisions. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. §§ 94, 319, 328. "The judgment of the court cannot be substituted for the judgment of the board of health." Naccari v. Rappelet, 119 La. 272, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 640, 44 So. 13; Ruhs-trat v. People 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, and note (185 Ill. 133, 49 L.R.A. 181, 57 N. E. 41); Booth v. People, 186 Ill. 43, 50 L.R.A. 762, 78 Am. St. Rep. 229, 57 N. E. 798. "If no state of circumstances could exist to justify such a statute, then we may declare this one void because in excess of the legislative power of the state; but, if it could, we presume it did. Of the propriety of legislative interference, within the scope of legislative power, the legislature is the exclusive judge." Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 132, 24 L. ed. 86; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257. It may be observed, also, that with regard to the extent to which the court will inquire into the reasonableness or necessity of such law, the courts place laws regulating lawful business enterprises in a class separate and distinct from those enacted to protect the public health. Compare Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 49 L. ed. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

169, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18, with Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. ed. 643, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 765. I have cited these decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to show that upon this point the decisions of that court are in accord with the decisions of this court, because, where Federal questions are involved, the state court is bound to follow the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court.

This court has held, time and again, that it has no power to declare a police regulation void because it is unreasonable or unnecessary. Heisembrittle v. Charleston, 2 McMull. L. 233; Charleston v. Goldsmith, 2 Speers, L. 428; Charleston v. Ahrens, 4 Strobh. L. 241; Charleston v. Wentworth Street Baptist Church, 4 Strobh. L. 306; Summerville v. Pressley, 33 S. C. 56, 8 L.R.A. 854, 26 Am. St. Rep. 659, 11 S. E. 545; Darlington v. Ward, 48 S. C. 570, 38 L.R.A. 326, 26 S. E. 906; Brunson v. Youmans, 76 S. C. 128, 56 S. E. 651. In Summerville v. Pressley, the court, on page 61 of 33 S. C. says: "Assuming for the present that the town council had the power to pass the ordinance, no question can be made whether a 'nuisance' had been created, nor whether the restrictions complained of were necessary to accomplish the purpose in view. It was their exclusive right to judge what was 'necessary and requisite' to preserve the health of the town." Again, at page 63 of 33 S. C.: "We suppose that the cultivation inhibited must have been considered as dangerous to health in the locality of Summerville; but, be that as it may, it was a question for the lawmaking body." On page 64 of 33 S. C. the court quoted, with approval, the following from Harrison v. Baltimore, 1 Gill, 264: "Of the degree of necessity for such municipal legislation, the mayor and council of Baltimore were the exclusive judges. To their sound discretion is committed the selection of the means and manner (contributory to the end) of exercising the powers which they might deem requisite to the accomplishment of the objects of which they were made guardians." Similar expressions, as directly in point, will be found in each of the cases above cited.

The principal ground of my dissent, however, is upon the point upon which the decision is mainly rested, to wit, whether "plaintiff has made a prima facie showing that the manner of the isolation was so clearly beyond what was necessary to the public protection that the court ought to enjoin it as arbitrary." While I do not think the circumstances demanded precipitate action by the board, and while they might, perhaps, with little danger to the public, have allowed Miss Kirk to remain in her own home until they could have provided a more suitable place for her than the pesthouse, still of that they were the exclusive judges, unless their action involved an unconstitutional invasion of her liberty. In view of what has been said, perhaps I should say that in my opinion the board treated Miss Kirk with the greatest kindness and consideration, as, indeed, they should have done, for her unfortunate condition certainly appeals most strongly to the kindest sentiments of humanity; but, considering the situation from the point of view of the board, as well as from that of Miss Kirk, what could they have done, under the circumstances, more than they did? The court holds that they were within their rights and duty in ordering her isolation, and that they were not bound to keep up a perpetual quarantine of her house in the heart of the city. Should they have gone forward and built a house for her? That might have been a useless waste of time and money, for they had no way of knowing whether she would occupy it. By the time it was done, she might have decided to leave the city, as she had the right to do under the ordinance, and as the testimony shows she was contemplating doing. Suppose the board had never suggested the idea of building a more comfortable and convenient house for her, or suppose they had not had the means to do so, and the pesthouse had been the only place where they could isolate her. Would the court hold that, because they had no other place, they could not isolate her there? But what of the pesthouse? There is much of opinion in the affidavits pro and con as to its fitness for the isolation of Miss Kirk. Doubtless these opinions are more or less colored by the feelings and prejudices of the witnesses. The undisputed facts, as to its character and condition, are more to the point. These show that it is composed of four small rooms, measuring about 12x12 feet each, in a row, with a hall about 4 feet wide along the front. Each room has a door opening into the hall, and two windows on the opposite side, which are provided with sash and Venetian blinds. It is built of dressed lumber, weather-boarded, and ceiled. The partitions are of dressed ceiling. The ceiling has shrunk, and shows some cracks and knot holes. The rooms are heated by stoves, which are said to be rickety and rusty. The house has no piazzas. There are no trees or shrubbery around it. It has been used for the isolation of negroes with smallpox; but no case had been there within about two years, and after the last case was discharged the house was fumigated by the best system known to modern science. It was again thoroughly cleansed and fumigated

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

while being prepared for Miss Kirk, and was painted inside and outside. The dump pile, where the trash from the city, consisting of brush, leaves, waste paper, tin cans, etc., but not the offensive offal, was piled and burned, is about 100 yards from the house, and when this trash is being burned, the smoke sometimes blows over and through the house. The city council proposed and intended to remove the dump pile, which could have been done in a day or two.

With this detailed description of the house and its surroundings, the court is as capable as the witnesses of drawing correct conclusions as to whether the confinement there of an elderly lady, cultured and refined, and accustomed to live in a house equipped with all the modern comforts and conveniences, would have caused her any serious injury. I do not think it would; but, granting that it might, it does not follow that the board should be enjoined on a mere possibility, in the exercise of their honest judgment as to what was necessary for the protection of the public health. I dare say there is not a pesthouse or hospital in the state, except perhaps those in the larger cities, that will afford all, or even many, of the comforts and conveniences of a well-equipped modern dwelling house; but that is no reason why one accustomed to live in such a house should have the right to enjoin a board of health from taking him to a less comfortable or convenient place, if he should be afflicted with a contagious disease, and thereby become a menace to the community. Certainly not, unless he can show with reasonable certainty that it would probably—not possibly—seriously endanger his health or life. The maxim, Salus populi est suprema lex, is the foundation of all police law, and to it even rights of property and of liberty, which are protected by the Constitution, must give way. When danger threatens the commonwealth, there arises that overruling “necessity” which “knows no law.” It is the principle in which authority is found for compulsory vaccination laws, which have been, without exception so far as I know, sustained by the courts notwithstanding the victims are always made more or less sick, and may even suffer death as a consequence. 1 Tiedeman State & Federal Control of Persons & Property, §§ 17, 44, 169; Markham v. Brown, 92 Am. Dec. 76, and note (37 Ga. 277); Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 792, 42 L.R.A. 175, 66 Am. St. Rep. 243, 30 S. E. 850; People ex rel. Nechamcus v. Warden, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L.R.A. 718, 39 N. E. 686; State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 49 L.R.A. 588, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691, 35 S. E. 459. “There is an implied assent on the part of every member of society that his own individual welfare shall, in cases of necessity, yield to that of the community, and that his property, liberty, and life shall, under certain circumstances, be placed in jeopardy, or even sacrificed, for the public good." Broom, Legal Maxims, 4th ed. 49.

I do not go to the extent of saying that, if it had been made to appear with reasonable certainty that confinement of Miss Kirk in the Aiken pesthouse would have probably resulted in serious injury to her health, the board could have lawfully insisted on confining her there; or, if they had, that the court would not, under the circumstances of this case, have enjoined them. But that is not the case made by the record, from which it appears that there was at least as much, if not more, danger to the public from Miss Kirk's being in the city than there was to her from confinement in the pesthouse. It must be remembered that it was only intended for her temporary abode, until a new cottage could be built, and that the city council proposed and intended to supply the house with water, electric lights, and, from the very commendable spirit shown by the board of health and the city council, I have no doubt they would have supplied everything else necessary to make her comfortable. In dealing with such matters, of necessity and for obvious reasons, a wide range of discretion must be allowed the local authorities, and they should not be interfered with, unless it is clearly made to appear that they have abused that discretion to the probable injury to health or life. The Constitution and statutes have conferred large powers on boards of health, but to what purpose, if they are not allowed to enforce them?

I do not think the plaintiff has made a prima facie showing entitling her to injunctive relief, and I think the precedent a dangerous one and unnecessary to the protection of any right of the plaintiff, under the law, and therefore the order of the circuit judge should be reversed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE H. MEAD et al., Appts.,
v.

J. R. WINSLOW
and

S. A. WHITE et al., Respts.

(53 Wash. 638, 102 Pac. 753.)

Principal and surety — necessity of writing.

1. An undertaking to become surety for a building contractor must be in writing, under the statute of frauds.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — sufficiency of writing.

2. The mere indorsement of one's name upon a building contract, under the word "surety," is not a sufficient note or memorandum in writing of the obligation of the one so signing to satisfy the statute of frauds and charge him as surety on the contract.

Contract — reformation — absence of necessary writing.

3. A contract of suretyship which is invalid under the statute of frauds because of insufficiency of the written memorandum cannot be reformed in equity so as to insert the missing provisions and make it enforceable.

(June 22, 1909.)

Case Note. — Subscribing one's name under word "surety" in written contract as satisfying statute of frauds.

A search has disclosed but two additional cases in which this question has been decided, and, in accord with the decision in MEAD v. WINSLOW, the writing was held in each to be insufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds.

Thus, the signature of a person, under a column headed "sureties," in shipping articles, unaccompanied by any addition or explanation showing for what he was surety, has been held not a sufficient writing to satisfy the statute of frauds. Dodge v. Lean, 13 Johns. 508.

And a signature after the word "security," appearing at the end of an agreement signed by one undertaking to pay rent to a third person, was held not a sufficient writing to satisfy the statute, since it failed to show the consideration for the undertaking. Gould v. Moring, 28 Barb. 444.

There appears to be a conflict among the cases as to the necessity of the consideration being expressed in agreements of this kind. The particular ground, therefore, upon which the above decision rests, would not in all states present a valid objection to the sufficiency of the writing.

The case of Moore v. Eisaman, 201 Pa. 190, 50 Atl. 982, although not strictly within the scope of this note, is deemed sufficiently analogous to warrant its insertion. It was there held that the meaning of the letters "O. K.," written before his signature by one sought to be held as guarantor, at the end of a contract for the purchase of brick, entered into between the plaintiffs and a third person, could not be shown by parol. The court said: "While, as has been observed, the defendant could not be made liable to the plaintiffs on a parol guaranty, yet this did not prevent the plaintiffs from showing by parol testimony the meaning of the initial letters 'O. K.' Without the aid of extrinsic evidence, the letters could not be interpreted, nor the use of them in the connection in which they were employed be understood. It was therefore competent for the plaintiffs to show that the letters written on the contract by Eis-

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County in favor of defendants White et al. in an action brought to reform, and, as reformed, to recover upon, a building contract. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. L. Culver and B. A. Crowl, for appellants:

Parol evidence is admissible to show who the contracting parties are.

Landers v. Foster, 34 Wash. 674, 76 Pac. 274; Strong v. Eldridge, 8 Wash. 595, 36 Pac. 696.

The old rule, that the contract is to be construed strictly in favor of the surety, has been modified in accordance with common sense and the spirit of the age.

Eureka Sandstone Co. v. Long, 11 Wash. 164, 39 Pac. 446; Ihrig v. Scott, 5 Wash. 585, 32 Pac. 466; Cowles v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 32 Wash. 124, 98 Am. St. Rep. 838, 72 Pac. 1032.

The contract of White and Bailey is an absolute and original obligation; and they are parties to the original contract, and primarily bound by its terms and conditions, and liable for the faithful performance of the same.

1 Brandt, Suretyship, § 2; Perkins v. Goodman, 21 Barb. 218; Eureka Sandstone Co. v. Long, 11 Wash. 172, 39 Pac. 446; man imported and meant a guaranty in trade circles. Had it been shown that such was their signification in commercial usage, the parties would be presumed to have used them in that sense, and they would have constituted a written contract of guaranty. We have, however, examined the evidence with care, and it fails to show that the common acceptance or meaning of the letters written by Eisaman at the end of the contract is that of a guaranty. The most that can be claimed for the testimony is that it shows that such was the interpretation placed upon the letters 'O. K.' by the witness and by the appellants. This is not sufficient, and is not the proof required to support the appellants' offer. It was not competent to introduce testimony to show that the appellants relied on the writing as a guaranty of Long's contract, or, as has been said, that the parties to the alleged guaranty understood the contract to be of such a character. The offer of parol testimony for such purposes is in itself an admission of the insufficiency of the written agreement to establish a guaranty, and discloses the necessity of such testimony to make the alleged guarantor liable to the appellants. Parol testimony to show either the intention of the parties or that they acted on the understanding that the writing was a guaranty is supplying by parol a defective written guaranty, which is prohibited by the statute of frauds."

Another case, not strictly within the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Cowles v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 32 Wash. 127, 98 Am. St. Rep. 838, 72 Pac. 1032; Hanna v. Savage, 7 Wash. 418, 35 Pac. 127, 36 Pac. 269; Hingley v. Bellingham Bay Boom Co. 5 Wash. 644, 32 Pac. 737, 33 Pac. 1055.

If the court deemed the words "for Win-slow" necessary to make the contract complete, the evidence is sufficient to warrant reformation.

State v. Lorenz, 22 Wash. 289, 60 Pac. 644; Richmond v. Ogden Street R. Co. 44 Or. 48, 74 Pac. 333; Reed v. Root, 59 Iowa, 359, 13 N. W. 323; Pitcher v. Hennessey, 48 N. Y. 415; Dennis v. Northern P. R. Co. 20 Wash. 320, 55 Pac. 210.

Messrs. H. G. Rowland and Dix H. Rowland, for respondents:

If any credit at all is given to the person for whose benefit the promise is made, and is not given wholly to the promiser, the undertaking is collateral, and must be in writing.

20 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 164, 166, 191, 258-260; Nugent v. Wolfe, 111 Pa. 471, 56 Am. Rep. 291, 4 Atl. 15; Emerson v. Slater, 22 How. 41, 16 L. ed. 365; Stearns, Suretyship, p. 42.

The note or memorandum is clearly insufficient to take the case out of the statute.

Lee v. Hills, 66 Ind. 474; Marion County v. Shipley, 77 Ind. 553; Grant v. Naylor, scope of this note, but closely analogous, is Great Western Printing Co. v. Belcher, 127 Mo. App. 133, 104 S. W. 894. It was held in this case that the words "Guaranteed, Belcher," indorsed across the face of an itemized account, constituted a sufficient writing to satisfy the statute of frauds, since the agreement showed the parties and items, and was complete without adding terms or stipulations by parol.

And where a party signs his name at the end of an agreement, adding the word "surety," his undertaking has been held original, so that he is to be treated as a principal, and the statute of frauds is therefore not applicable. Perkins v. Goodman, 21 Barb. 218. The court said: "The undertaking of a surety who signs upon the face or at the end of a contract, with the principal, although he adds the word 'surety' to his name, is an original, and not a collateral, undertaking. It is not a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, but is an undertaking for a direct performance on his own part. He becomes a party to the contract, and may be treated as principal by the creditor, although he is a surety merely as between him and the other party, with whom he jointly or severally undertakes. In such cases no writing, other than the body of the contract, is necessary; and the statute of frauds has no application. The debt is his if the contract is valid."

4 Cranch, 224, 2 L. ed. 603; Brandt, Suretyship, 2d ed. § 81; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 261; Marston v. French, 43 N. Y. S. R. 538, 17 N. Y. Supp. 510; Foote v. Robbins, 50 Wash. 277, 97 Pac. 103.

The evidence did not authorize reformation.

Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 34, 3 Am. Rep. 418; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 859; Deseret Nat. Bank v. Dinwoodey, 17 Utah, 43, 53 Pac. 216; Phillips v. Port Townsend Lodge No. 6, F. & A. M. 8 Wash. 529, 36 Pac. 476; Heffron v. Fogel, 40 Wash. 698, 82 Pac. 1003.

Gose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants commenced this action for the purpose of reforming a written contract, and recovering a judgment thereon against the defendant and the respondents, for its breach. The introductory part of the contract is as follows:

Building Contract.

This agreement made and entered into this 25th day of March, 1907, by and between J. R. Winslow, party of the first part, hereinafter designated the contractor, and George H. Mead and Helen M. Mead, party of the second part, hereafter designated the owner, witnesseth: That the contractor, in consideration of the agreements herein made by the owner, agrees with said owner as follows.

The contract, which is quite lengthy, then provides what shall be done by the contractor and the owner, respectively. The attestation clause and the subscription are as follows:

In witness whereof the parties of these presents have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written.

J. R. Winslow.
George H. Mead.
H. M. Mead.

In presence of sureties
S. A. White.
W. F. Bailey.

The words "In presence of" are printed, and the word "sureties" was written before the contract was signed. The complaint charges that the respondents "subscribed as sureties for the faithful performance of such contract on the part of J. R. Winslow," and prays that the contract be reformed as to the respondents, so as to read, "Subscribed as sureties for the faithful performance of said contract on the part of J. R. Winslow," and for judgment against the defendant and the respondents. The 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

case was tried to the court, resulting in a judgment for the respondents. From such judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The answer, among other things, pleads that the contract is void under the provisions of Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4576 (Pierce's Code, § 5343) which provides: "In the following cases specified in this section, any agreement, contract, and promise shall be void, unless such agreement, contract, or promise, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized, that is to say:—

. . . (2) Every special promise to answer for the debt, default, or misdoings of another person." The contract does not show the relation of the respondents to it, other than such as may be gathered from their signatures. Upon reading the contract the mind at once inquires, For whom and for what purpose did the respondents sign? The contract may be searched in vain for an answer to this inquiry. It contains many requirements upon the part of the contractor and the owner, but is silent as to any duty or obligation as to the respondents. The discussion takes broad ground in the briefs, but the view we take of the case narrows the scope of inquiry.

The appellants contend, first, that the contract of the respondents is an original undertaking, rather than a collateral one, and as such that it is not within the statute. We will first notice this contention. When the object of the undertaking is to become surety for another, the promise is collateral, and must be in writing. 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 163. In Nugent v. Wolfe, 111 Pa. 471, 480, 56 Am. Rep. 291, 4 Atl. 15, 17, speaking to the question of the distinction between an original and a collateral promise, the court say: "It is difficult, if not impossible, to formulate a rule by which to determine in every case whether a promise relating to the debt or liability of a third person is or is not within the statute; but, as a general rule, when the leading object of the promise or agreement is to become guarantor or surety to the promisee, for a debt for which a third party is and continues to be primarily liable, the agreement, whether made before or after or at the time with the promise of the principal, is within the statute, and not binding unless evidenced by writing. On the other hand, when the leading object of the promiser is to subserve some interest or purpose of his own, notwithstanding the effect is to pay or discharge the debt of another, his promise is not within the statute." "Courts must rely on the circumstances of each particular case and its general features, in order to ascertain the intent of the parties, and how they viewed it, when it is doubtful whether it was a contract of suretyship or guaranty, or an original undertaking. Generally speaking, an oral undertaking by a person not previously liable, for the purpose of securing the debt or performing the same duty for which the person for whom the undertaking is made remains liable, is within the statute of frauds, and must be in writing." 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 164. Upon both principle and authority we have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the undertaking of the respondents was a collateral one. The contract, therefore, must be in writing, notwithstanding the fact that all the parties entered into it at the same time. Stearns, Suretyship, p. 42.

We will next consider whether the contract as it affects the respondents is in writing, within the meaning of the statute. In Foote v. Robbins, 50 Wash. 277, 97 Pac. 103, the court had under consideration a contract whereby the owner employed a broker to sell real estate. The terms and conditions of sale were complete, but the contract was silent as to the broker's compensation for his services. At pages 279, 280 of 50 Wash. the court said: "If by the written agreement the payment of a commission by respondents was contemplated, resort must now be had to oral evidence for the purpose of showing the amount of such commission, and that it was to be paid by the appellant as vendor, and not by the purchaser as vendee. The unmistakable purpose of the statute was to avoid any such method of fixing the extent of the liability, or the liability itself, of either a vendor or a vendee for the payment of a commission." In Allen v. Kitchen (Idaho) 100 Pac. 1052, 1056, a well-considered case, the court, speaking through Ailshie, J., say: "There is no contract until it is reduced to writing as provided by law. It is not a question as to what the contract was intended to be, but, rather, Was it consummated by being reduced to writing as prescribed by the statute of frauds? Admittedly an essential portion of the contract in this case was not reduced to writing and subscribed by the party to be bound. This case therefore presents the question of adding to and supplying an insufficient description, rather than that of reforming an untruthful description. If a court of equity can supply one requirement of a contract that is required by the statute of frauds to be in writing, it may supply another, and the logical conclusion would be that it might in the end supply all the requirements, and thereby contravene a positive statute. This cannot be done." "In order to render an oral contract falling within the scope of the statute of frauds enforceable by action, the memorandum thereof must state the contract with such certainty that its essentials can be known from the memorandum itself, or by a reference contained in it to some other writing, without recourse to parol proof to supply them. Accordingly, if an oral contract falling within the scope of the statute has terms not stated in the memorandum, or if the memorandum contains a reference to such terms, or imports their existence by fair inference, without clearly stating them, or if the memorandum merely refers to the contract without stating its terms, the case falls within the statute." 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 258-260. See also Marion County v. Shipley, 77 Ind. 553; Lee v. Hills, 66 Ind. 479; Grand v. Naylor, 4 Cranch, 224, 2 L. ed. 603.

The document, aside from the word "sureties" and the signatures of the respondents, states a complete contract between the appellants and the defendants, but contains no provision which even tends to connect the respondents with it. As between the appellants and the respondents, there is an entire absence of contract. In order to hold the respondents to any liability, the court would be required to create a contract, either by construction or by parol evidence. There is no language in the contract to warrant the former, and the latter is within the prohibition of the statute. Surely the mere subscription of the contract by the respondents under the word "sureties," without showing their relation to the contract or to the parties, cannot be said to create any contract relation. A cursory examination of the record in this case affords abundant evidence, if evidence were wanting, of the wisdom of the statute. One of the respondents testified that he only engaged to guarantee the integrity of the defendant, while the other said that he signed merely for the purpose of recommending him.

Finally, it is contended that a court of equity has power to reform the contract, and to enforce it when so reformed. The contract being invalid, under the statute parol evidence will not be admitted for the purpose of reforming it. To do so would result in permitting the parties to accomplish indirectly that which the statute forbids. Speaking to this question in Allen v. Kitchen, supra, at page 1057 of 100 Pac., it is said: "After a very careful examination of the many authorities dealing with this question, we are clearly of the opinion that courts of equity have power and jurisdiction to so reform an executory contract that is valid and binding on its face as to relieve it of any statement, declaration, or description that has been inserted therein through deception, fraud, or mutual mistake, and to make the statements speak the truth, as it was intended to insert them in the instrument. On the other hand, we are equally satisfied that a court of equity has no power or jurisdiction to construct an executory agreement for the parties, or to insert therein new and essential elements, or matter that is required by the statute to be reduced to writing in order to make the contract valid and binding. In other words, reformation does not mean re-creation. The court will not, under the guise of reforming an instrument, construct or reconstruct the instrument, so as to make it comply with the statute." See also Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24, 3 Am. Rep. 418. The record does not present the question of reforming a contract so as to speak the truth, but rather of creating a contract in its entirety.

What we have said renders it unnecessary to consider the other assignments.

The judgment will be affirmed, and the respondents will recover their costs.

Rudkin, Ch. J., and Chadwick, Fullerton, and Morris, JJ., concur.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
NORTH LITTLE ROCK ICE & ELECTRIC COMPANY.

(86 Ark. 538, 111 S. W. 994.)

Evidence—secondary.

1. The general agent of an insurance company cannot, in a suit upon the policy, state whether or not the report of an agent who issued the policy contained anything as to the idleness of the plant on which it was issued, since the report is the best evidence.

Insurance—knowledge of agent.

2. Knowledge of local insurance agents as to the condition of a risk upon which they issue policies, the property belonging to a corporation of which they are directors and large stockholders, which fact was not known to the insurer or its general agent, is not chargeable to the insurer.

Note.—As to effect of knowledge of insurance agent acting in two capacities, see case note to Foreman v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 444. See also, generally, as to power of agent to bind insurer by oral waiver and as to the effect of non-waiver agreements, notes in Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Thompson, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1064 and Haapa v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1165. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same—manufacturing plant—idleness.

3. Insurance of a building which is not in operation as a manufactory at the time, as "occupied as an ice factory," does not require its operation as such, to make the policy valid, under a provision that the policy shall be void if on a manufacturing establishment which shall cease to be operated for ten consecutive days.

Same—interpretation.

4. Language in the second clause of an insurance policy, the first clause of which insures a building, which covers machinery and all appurtenances and appliances necessary and used in the owner's business, does not imply that the building is a manufacturing establishment.

(June 15, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pulaski County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell, & Loughborough for appellant.

Mr. J. W. Blackwood, for appellee:

The establishment had not ceased to be operated within the meaning of the policy.

Lebanon Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Erb, 112 Pa. 149, 4 Atl. 8; Bole v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 159 Pa. 53, 28 Atl. 205; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Holcombe, 57 Neb. 622, 73 Am. St. Rep. 533, 78 N. W. 300; American F. Ins. Co. v. Brighton Cotton Mfg. Co. 125 Ill. 131, 17 N. E. 771; Poss v. Western Assur. Co. 7 Lea, 704, 40 Am. Rep. 68; Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Leathers, 5 Sadler (Pa.) 226, 20 W. N. C. 107, 8 Atl. 424; City Planing & Shingle Mill Co. v. Merchants' M. & C. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 72 Mich. 654, 16 Am. St. Rep. 552, 40 N. W. 777; Allemanina F. Ins. Co. v. White, 8 Sadler (Pa.) 308, 11 Atl. 96; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 61, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Ladd v. Aetna Ins. Co. 147 N. Y. 478, 42 N. E. 197; May v. Buckeye Ins. Co. 25 Wis. 291, 3 Am. Rep. 82; Louck v. Orient Ins. Co. 176 Pa. 638, 33 L.R.A. 714, 35 Atl. 247; Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 106 Tenn. 513, 52 L.R.A. 665, 62 S. W. 146; Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co. 52 Ohio St. 12, 26 L.R.A. 316, 49 Am. St. Rep. 699, 38 N. E. 1011; Ostrander, F. Ins. p. 419.

Where the building is not in operation at the date of the issuance of the policy, the company will be charged with notice, and a waiver is implied.

Short v. Home Ins. Co. 90 N. Y. 16, 43 Am. Rep. 138; Clay v. Phenix Ins. Co. 97 Ga. 44, 25 S. E. 417; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Brown, 3 Kan. App. 225, 44 Pac. 35; Queen Ins. Co. v. Kline, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 619, 32 S. W. 214; Aurora F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Kranich, 36 Mich. 289; Rochester Loan & Bkg. Co. v. Liberty Ins. Co. 44 Neb. 537, 48 Am. St. Rep. 745, 62 N. W. 877; Devine v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Wis. 471; Alkan v. New Hampshire Ins. Co. 53 Wis. 143, 10 N. W. 91; Clark v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 How. 248, 12 L. ed. 1061; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Pet. 49, 7 L. ed. 344, 10 Pet. 515, 9 L. ed. 516; 3 Kent, Com. 237; Flinn v. Headlam, 9 Barn. & C. 693; 1 Marshall, Marine Ins. 450, 481, 482; Hazard v. New England M. Ins. Co. 8 Pet. 557, 8 L. ed. 1043; Green v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 10 Pick. 402; Tidmarsh v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co. 4 Mason, 439, Fed. Cas. No. 14,024; Buck v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 1 Pet. 160, 7 L. ed. 94; Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1905; Burritt v. Saratoga County Mut. F. Ins. Co. 5 Hill, 192, 40 Am. Dec. 345; Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 6 Cranch, 281, 3 L. ed. 224; Bufo v. Turner, 6 Taunt. 338; Walden v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 12 La. 134, 32 Am. Dec. 116; Hall v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 184, 18 L.R.A. 139, 32 Am. St. Rep. 497, 53 N. W. 727.

The establishment was not a manufacturing plant.

Re Capital Pub. Co. 3 MacArth. 412; Frazee v. Moffitt, 20 Blatchf. 267, 18 Fed. 584; Hittinger v. Westford, 135 Mass. 262; Halpin v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 120 N. Y. 73, 8 L.R.A. 79, 23 N. E. 989; Long v. Duff, 2 Bos. & P. 209.

Cohn, Special Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The Home Fire Insurance Company of Fordyce, Arkansas, was sued in the court below by the appellee for the amount of an award made by two appraisers under an agreement of submission signed by the parties in interest, the insurance company, after the award, refusing to pay the same; it having reserved all rights, except the right to contest the amount of sound value and the loss and damage which the appellee had sustained, in the agreement referred to. It placed its ground of refusal solely upon the ground that the appellee had disregarded the terms of the policies under which its claim originated, which provided that "if the subject of insurance be a manufacturing establishment, and it be operated in whole or in part at night later than 10 o'clock, or if it cease to be operated for more than ten consecutive days," the entire policy should be void, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon or added thereto. It alleged merely that the appellee was a manufacturing establishment, and that it had ceased, during the life of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the policies, to be operated for more than ten consecutive days, without indorsement on the policy, or in any paper added thereto, of permission so to do, and without notification. A trial was held resulting in a verdict and judgment for the appellee for the amount of the award, in addition to the amount of the statutory penalty of 12 per cent, and an attorney's fee was fixed by the court, for which judgment was rendered. The policies all contained the same description of the risk covered thereby, which was given in five separate clauses, as follows:

"$5,000. On their one story brick, composition roof building, including foundations and cold storage vaults, occupied as an ice factory, situated No. 'A' '1' Main street, block 31, sheet 63 Sanborn's map of Argenta, Arkansas.

"$13,500. On their fixed and movable machinery of every description, including engines, boilers and their connections, settings and their foundations, metal stacks, tanks, pumps, refrigerating and ice machines, filters and condensers, ice cans, piping and pulleys, tools, hose, and all appurtenances and appliances necessary to and used in their business. All while contained in the above-described building.

"$500. On their wagons and buggies.

"$100. On their wagon and buggy harness.

"$100. On their office furniture and fixtures, all while contained in the above-described building."

At the trial J. P. Faucette testified in behalf of the appellee, and stated that he was its president at the time of the fire, and for four or five years before, and at the time the policies were issued; that he was a member of the firm of Faucette Brothers, who were the local agents of the Home Insurance Company, at Argenta, Arkansas, where the risk was located; that his brother, W. C. Faucette, was the other member of that firm; that each of them owned $8,000 of the capital stock of the Ice & Electric Company, the entire capital stock being $32,000; that the said Faucette Brothers were also directors of the said Ice & Electric Company, and he was its general manager at the time the policies were issued; that they, said Faucette Brothers, issued the policies in suit, as local agents at Argenta, upon forms furnished in blank to them by G. L. Meyers & Company, general agents of the insurance company at Memphis, Tennessee; that these policies were renewals of previous ones issued by the said G. L. Meyers & Company in other companies; that the property of appellee had not been operated as an ice factory since October, 1904; that he knew of this fact at the time the policies were issued; that, at that time, the stables and places for the wagons, and the horses and mules, and the office, were all in the building described in the policy; that a bookkeeper was in charge of the books; that orders were taken there for coal, and ice was delivered there, by wagon and by car load, there being a switch connected with the premises; that, at the time of the closing of the manufacturing, the machinery was in good condition, and he had afterwards personally looked after it; that the factory, ever since it had been opened in 1896, had operated only for the six months during the hot season, suspending in October; that there was no change in the use of the building after October 15, 1904, and that they were open for business, as usual, on the day the fire occurred.

G. L. Meyers, for the appellant, testified that his firm were the general agents of the insurance company for Argenta and elsewhere; that they sometimes sent around inspectors to inspect risks, but he could not remember sending any inspector around to examine the risk in question; that his agent had adjusted a loss in the neighborhood; that he had no notice or knowledge at the time the policies in suit were issued or up to the time of the fire that the building and machinery insured were not being used and operated as an ice factory; that the Faucette Brothers never communicated the fact to his office that these were not being operated as a factory; that he was familiar with the views and customs of insurance companies as to material parts of policies, and that a manufacturing establishment not in operation was not generally considered a good risk. The witness Meyers also testified that Faucette Brothers had sent reports of all policies issued to G. L. Meyers & Company, general agents, shortly after issuing the same, and had done so as to the policies in suit, setting forth the location and general description, but, upon objection by the appellee's counsel, he was not permitted to state whether there was anything in the report about the plant not being in operation, upon the ground that the written report was the best evidence. We may say, in passing, that we do not think there was any error in this ruling. Jackson ex dem. Van Slyck v. Son, 2 Caines, 178.

The appellant asked for a peremptory instruction and also asked the court to instruct the jury that the insurance here was of a manufacturing establishment, and, if it ceased to be operated as a manufactory without consent for more than ten consecutive days, the policy became void; also, that the knowledge of Faucette Brothers that the manufacturing establishment had ceased to be operated would not bind the appellant, if, at the time, they were officially connected with the appellee or interested in it. These instructions were refused. And, at appellee's request, the court gave a peremptory instruction to the jury, directing them to find in favor of the appellee.

A question is raised in the brief of counsel for appellee as to whether appellant was not bound by the custom of the appellee while it was operating an ice factory, to shut down during the cold season. But we do not deem it necessary to decide this.

There are two matters we are called upon to determine: (1) Was the property insured a manufacturing establishment? (2) Was the appellant bound by the knowledge of Faucette Brothers?

Taking up the propositions in the reverse order to that stated, we first pass upon the question as to whether the insurance company was bound by the knowledge of Faucette Brothers. As they were largely interested in the Ice & Electric Company, as directors and stockholders, and one of them was its manager at the time the policies were issued and until the date of the fire, and it has not been shown that these facts were known to the insurance company or its general agents at the time the policies were issued, it would be improper to make their knowledge, thus obtained, binding upon the insurance company. Where an agent has a personal interest known to the assured, and not known to the insurer, which might induce him to keep a matter concealed from his principal, and he does keep the matter concealed from the principal, to the prejudice of the latter, the assured cannot rely upon the doctrine that the knowledge of the agent of such matter is the knowledge of the principal. Elliott, Ins. § 164; Mechem, Agency, § 723; Zimmermann v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 110 Mich. 399, 33 L.R.A. 698, 68 N. W. 215; Wildberger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 72 Miss. 338, 28 L.R.A. 220, 48 Am. St. Rep. 558, 17 So. 282; Rockford Ins. Co. v. Winfield, 57 Kan. 576, 47 Pac. 511; Spare v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. (C. C.) 19 Fed. 14; Cascade F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Journal Pub. Co. 1 Wash. 452, 25 Pac. 331; note to Potter's Appeal, 7 Am. St. Rep. 279-283. And in stating this conclusion, we are not oblivious to the fact that sometimes the same person acts as agent of both parties, either where both parties are put on notice of that fact and acquiesce therein, or some peculiar provision of statute applies. See Phoenix Ins. Co. v. State, 76 Ark. 180, 88 S. W. 917, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 440; 2 Clement, F. Ins. pp. 504, 505; Clay v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 97 Ga. 44, 25 S. E. 417. And, if this is material in the final determination of this cause, the failure of the court to notice this principle of law would require a reversal of the cause, even though it may be true that the local agents—that is, Faucette Brothers—sent a report of the issuance of the policies to the general agents at Memphis, setting forth the location and general description of the property insured. For the appellant was entitled to the judgment of the jury, under proper instruction, on the point as to whether the report contained enough to inform the general agents of the fact that the Ice & Electric Company had ceased to operate an ice manufacturing establishment before the policies had issued.

The remaining question is whether it was incumbent upon the Ice & Electric Company to operate a manufacturing establishment, and not to cease doing so for any period of more than ten consecutive days. It is urged that the words “if the subject of insurance be a manufacturing establishment . . . (and) if it cease to be operated for more than ten consecutive days” were alone sufficient to work a forfeiture in this case. But we think that if, at the time the policies were issued, there was no factory in operation, because the manufacturing of ice had been abandoned, the clause could not operate as a cause of forfeiture, and we must seek further for data on which to base the contention that the appellee was obliged to maintain a manufacturing establishment. The words quoted are contained in the printed part of the policies, and these printed parts are prepared by the insurer to meet the varying contingencies of different cases of insurance, as they arise; for different forms of policies are not prepared to meet the requirements of each case as it occurs. The clause might apply appropriately where the application for insurance, if such there was, or where the description of the risk in apt terms, showed the intention to be to insure a manufacturing establishment in operation, and nothing else.

We are therefore remitted to the written part of the policies. Now the language of the first clause, referring to the building, uses the words “occupied as an ice factory.” Did this require the appellee to operate an ice factory? The language was capable of meaning that the building had been used and operated as an ice factory at one time, but was not necessarily then so operated. If it was intended to make the insurance only apply to the building while it was being operated as an ice factory, it would have been easy to say “occupied and operated as an ice factory, and only while so operated.” That would have made the language unambiguous. We are not disposed to construe away the terms of policies, neither are we disposed to give the insurer the benefit of the doubt, where the language is capable of different constructions, since insurance contracts are prepared entirely by the insurer or at its instance, and there is not that mutual consultation as to the use of the terms which obtains in ordinary contracts. Neither can we shut our eyes to the fact that policies of fire insurance are in most instances taken by the insured without reading, and that they are usually, as in the present instance, filled with provisions bearing upon all manner of subjects relating to insurance, some of which may not apply to the then existing case; and that the true application of such provisions is not always clear. We think that the use of the language quoted, especially in view of the apparent indifference of the insurer as to the actual condition and use of the premises until the question of paying the loss arose, indicates that the intention was to insure the property as it was at the date of the policy.

Our conclusions are sustained by the decisions of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in the cases of Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Erb, 112 Pa. 149, 4 Atl. 8, and Louck v. Orient Ins. Co. 176 Pa. 638, 33 L.R.A. 712, 35 Atl. 247.

We proceed to examine the cases cited by counsel for appellant. In the case of Stone v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 475, 11 L.R.A. 771, 27 N. E. 6, it was held that, at the time the policy issued, the property was used and operated as a manufacturing establishment, and was insured as such while it continued in operation, and that afterwards operations were stopped without permission of the insurer. In Dover Glass Works Co. v. American F. Ins. Co. 1 Marr. (Del.) 32, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039, the court held that the property insured was a manufactory in operation, and it appeared that, during the life of the policy, the manufactory ceased to be operated within the meaning of the policy. In McKenzie v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922, a sawmill had been shut down, and the policy required certain conditions to be observed under those circumstances by the insured, which it had failed to comply with. In Brehm Lumber Co. v. Svea Ins. Co. 36 Wash. 520, 68 L.R.A. 109, 79 Pac. 34, the policy insured a sawmill in operation, and it provided that the mill should not remain idle or shut down for more than thirty days without permission indorsed thereon, and the insurance company had on one occasion indorsed its permission on the policy, but, for the period in question, its permission had not been asked nor given. Oronin v. Fire Assn. of Philadelphia, 119 Mich. 74, 77 N. W.

648, reported again in 123 Mich. 277, 82 N. W. 45, was a case in which a creamery while it continued in operation had been insured, and operation had ceased for the prohibited period without the permission of the insurance company. In Day v. Mill-Owners' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 710, 29 N. W. 443, the property insured was a flour mill while it was operated, and the mill was shut down for the prohibited period without the permission of the company. In El Paso Reduction Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. (C. C.) 121 Fed. 937, the facts were that, at the date of the policy, the insured property was being operated as a manufactory, and that it was insured while it should be so operated, and permits had been given to cease to operate the same at certain periods, but not for the period in question. In Kentucky Vermillion Min. & Concentrating Co. v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co. 77 C. C. A. 121, 146 Fed. 695, the written part clearly provided for the continued operation and use of the premises as a manufacturing establishment, the written part setting out particularly what the insured should do in case the plant became idle or was shut down. And these provisions were disregarded. And in Ranspach v. Teutonia F. Ins. Co. 109 Mich. 699, 67 N. W. 967, the condition of the policy was that it should become void if the buildings insured "be or become vacant, and so remain for ten days," and the premises were left vacant for the prohibited period.

We have reviewed all of the cases which have been called to our attention by counsel for appellant. But we are unable to find anything therein which corresponds with the facts in the present case. All of the cases so cited, except the case last mentioned, went off upon the theory that the facts showed that a mill or manufactory, while continuing to be in operation, was insured, and that there had been a cessation of such operation without permission or other compliance with the terms of the policy. The Michigan case related to vacancy of the premises, and expressly covered an existing, as well as a future, vacancy of the premises. But in the case before us we hold that the evidence shows that the property had ceased to be operated or used as a factory long before the policies were issued, and that the language quoted was all the evidence there was to sustain the position that the property insured was to be operated, and only to be insured while being operated, as a factory, and that this was inadequate to establish that contention. The language of the second clause of the policies, which refers to machinery, engines, and boilers, and says, "and all appurtenances necessary to and used in their business," does not imply that the business of the insured company is that of manufacturing. The courts seem to favor the view in cases like the present one, that each clause must be construed separately from the other, and that the language of a clause relating to the building should not be looked to to construe a clause relating to personal property. Halpin v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 120 N. Y. 73, 8 L.R.A. 79, 23 N. E. 989; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Holcombe, 57 Neb. 622, 73 Am. St. Rep. 532, 78 N. W. 300; Elliott, Ins. § 251. And see Sunderlin v. Aetna Ins. Co. 18 Hun, 522.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It follows that no material error, which calls for a reversal, occurred at the trial in the Circuit Court, and that the judgment of that court should be affirmed. And it is so ordered

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

GULF COMPRESS COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

W. E. HARRINGTON.

(90 Ark. 256, 119 S. W. 249.)

Warehouseman — limitation of liability.

1. A provision in receipts issued by a warehouseman for property stored with him, that he is not responsible for loss by fire, does not include fire due to his own negligence.

Same — negligence.

2. The owner of a warehouse for the storage of cotton, situated adjacent to a railway track, may be found negligent in permitting cracks in the building through which sparks might reach the cotton, and in keeping in the building large quantities of loose cotton, through which fire would spread rapidly, in close proximity to the property of the bailor.

(May 3, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pulaski County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to Case Note. — Effect of stipulation exempting warehouseman from loss by fire.

The conclusion reached in the above case, that a provision in a contract of storage exempting a warehouseman from loss by fire does not include fire due to his own negligence, finds support in Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 683, 77 Pac. 664; United Fruit Co. v. New York & B. Transp. Co. 104 Md. 567, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 240, 65 Atl. 415, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 437; and in Lancaster Mills v. Merchants' Cotton Press & Storage Co. 89 Tenn. 1, 24 Am. St. Rep. 586, 14 S. W. 317.

recover damages for the destruction of certain cotton by fire, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rose, Hemingway, Cantrell, & Loughborough, for appellant:

The contract exempting defendant from liability for loss by fire was valid.

Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Fed. 904, affirmed in 30 L.R.A. 193, 17 C. C. A. 62, 36 U. S. App. 152, 70 Fed. 201, affirmed in 175 U. S. 91, 44 L. ed. 84, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469; Southern Exp. Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. ed. 556; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. ed. 1067; Primrose v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 883, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1098; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Cook, 9 C. C. A. 680, 15 U. S. App. 445, 61 Fed. 624; Harkness v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 73 Iowa, 190, 5 Am. St. Rep. 672, 34 N. W. 811; Clough v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 446, 85 C. C. A. 1, 155 Fed. 81; Coup v. Wabash R. Co. 56 Mich. 111, 56 Am. Rep. 374, 22 N. W. 215; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Wallace, 30 L.R.A. 161, 14 C. C. A. 257, 24 U. S. App. 589, 66 Fed. 506; Wilson v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 129 Fed. 774; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 44 L. ed. 560, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385; Bates v. Old Colony R. Co. 147 Mass. 255, 17 N. E. 633; Hosmer v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 506, 31 N. E. 652; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 38 L.R.A. 93, 58 Am. St. Rep. 348, 44 N. E. 796; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 148 Ind. 196, 40 L.R.A. 101, 62 Am. St. Rep. 503, 46 N. E. 917, 47 N. E. 464; Blank v. Illinois C. R. Co. 80 Ill. App. 475; Robertson v. Old Colony R. Co. 156 Mass. 525, 32 Am. St. Rep. 482, 31 N. E. 650; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Eubanks, 48 Ark. 460, 3 Am. St. Rep. 245, 3 S. W. 808; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Pitcock, 82 Ark. 441, 118 Am. St. Rep. 84, 101 S. W. 725, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 582.

Messrs. Moore, Smith, & Moore, for appellee:

The business of defendant being affected with a public interest, it is against public policy to contract against liability for loss by fire caused by the company's negligence.

Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Talbot, 47 Ark. 97, 14 S. W. 471; Taylor v. Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. 39 Ark. 148; Little Rock, M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Harper, 44 Ark. 208; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 357, 21 L. ed. 627; Nash v. Page, 80 Ky. 539, 44 Am. Rep. 490. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, W. E. Harrington, was the owner of thirty-four bales of cotton, which were destroyed by fire while held for storage by the defendant, Gulf Compress Company, in its warehouse at Little Rock, Arkansas. He sued the defendant for the value of the cotton, and seeks to establish liability on the alleged ground that the latter was guilty of negligence in permitting destruction of the cotton by fire, and he recovered a judgment for damages, from which the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Learned counsel raise only two questions in the argument here, viz.: (1) That defendant is not liable, because it contracted against liability for loss by fire caused even by its own negligence; and (2) that there is not sufficient evidence to warrant a finding that its servants were guilty of any negligence which caused the fire. The briefs on each side contain interesting and very instructive discussions of the question whether or not it is contrary to public policy to permit a concern operating a compress and receiving cotton for storage and compression, which is said to be a business of a public or quasi public nature, or a business "affected with a public interest," to contract against liability to patrons for damages caused by its own negligence.

But the first question to be decided is whether or not the defendant in this case did in fact contract against such liability; for, until we settle that question in the affirmative, it is unnecessary to go further. The written receipts executed by defendant to plaintiff for the cotton when delivered to it, and which constituted the contract between the parties, are in the following form: "Received on account of W. E. Harrington one bale of cotton, marked as stated herein, on storage, to be delivered to bearer only upon the return of this receipt and the payment of all advances and such charges as may have accrued under the current tariff of this company. Not responsible for loss by fire, acts of Providence, natural shrinkage, old damage, or for failure to note concealed damage." It will be observed that nothing is expressly said in the receipt about exemption from liability for negligence. It provides in general terms that there shall be no responsibility "for loss by fire, acts of Providence, natural shrinkage, old damage, or for failure to note concealed damage." Does this exemption include negligence of the obligor?

The receipt issued is in the form prepared by the defendant itself. The exemption set forth therein is couched in language of its own selection, and, according to well-settled rules of interpretation, should be construed in the strongest light against it. Judge Thompson, in his work on Negligence (vol. 1, § 1143), says that there is a "tendency of the law to discountenance stipulations in contracts between parties whereby one of the parties undertakes to exempt himself from liability for his own negligence," and that this tendency is discovered in decisions of the courts declining to construe provisions in contracts so as to bring them within such exemption, even in cases where public policy would not forbid it if clearly expressed. In Railton v. Taylor, 20 R. I. 279, 39 L.R.A. 246, 38 Atl. 980, it was held (quoting from the syllabus) that "the lessor's own negligence in the management and use of that part of the premises remaining in his control, including the heating apparatus, is not within a stipulation that he shall not be liable for any loss to property on the premises, if destroyed or damaged by fire, water, or otherwise, or by the use or abuse of the Cochituate water, or by the leakage or bursting of water pipes, or in any other way or manner."

It has been held in many cases that a receipt given by a warehouseman, stipulating that goods are received at "owner's risk," does not exempt from damage caused by negligence. Denver Public Warehouse Co. v. Munger, 20 Colo. App. 56, 77 Pac. 5; Hunter v. Baltimore Packing & Cold Storage Co. 75 Minn. 408, 78 N. W. 11; Collins v. Burns, 63 N. Y. 1; Herzig v. New York Cold Storage Co. 115 App. Div. 40, 100 N. Y. Supp. 603. In the Colorado case above cited the court said: "Contracts against liability for negligence are not favored by the law. In some instances, such as common carriers, they are prohibited as against public policy. In all cases such contracts should be construed strictly, with every intentment against the party seeking their protection." The case of Dieterle v. Bekin, 143 Cal. 683, 77 Pac. 664, is precisely in point. There the warehouseman's receipt stipulated that there should be "no liability for fire," etc.; but it was held that this did not exempt him from liability for fire caused by negligence, the court saying: "Such a contract cannot be construed so as to excuse a bailee from the exercise of ordinary care to protect the property from fire."

It may be argued that this construction entirely emasculates the stipulation and renders it meaningless, for the reason that even without it there is no liability on the part of the warehouseman for loss by fire unless the same be caused by negligence. That may be true; but even without a stipulation of exemption there is no responsibility on the part of the warehouseman for loss on account of "acts of Providence, natural shrinkage, old damage, or for failure to note 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) concealed damage," and yet the receipts contain a stipulation exempting from liability for those causes. A warehouseman is no insurer against damage to property held for storage, and is liable only for damage caused by negligence. But this argument affords no reason for importing into the contract a stipulation for exemption from liability for negligence which the parties themselves have not seen fit to express in apt words,—a stipulation, too, which the law at least discourages when it does not positively forbid. If a stipulation against liability for negligence had been intended, we must assume that it would have been more aptly expressed in the contract. We hold that the contracts in question do not contain such exemption.

Does the evidence sustain a finding of negligence on the part of the defendant which caused the destruction of the cotton? The warehouse was located contiguous to railroad tracks along which engines were frequently passing. A large lot of loose, unbaled cotton was kept there, through which fire, if once communicated, would spread rapidly and invade the whole premises. There were holes and cracks in the corrugated iron wall of the shed on the side next to the railroad tracks. A door was permitted to get out of repair, and remain so for a considerable time, so that it could not be closed. It is claimed that in this way the property in store was kept in close proximity to the more highly inflammable loose cotton, and that the whole was exposed, on account of the open door and holes in the wall, to danger from sparks escaping from passing locomotives. There was evidence to the effect that about twenty minutes before the fire was discovered an engine passed along by the warehouse, puffing very hard. The fire is not otherwise accounted for, and, considering all the circumstances, we are of the opinion that the jury had the right to infer that the fire was communicated from the passing engine, and to find that the defendant was negligent in exposing the stored cotton, without proper protection, to this danger. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Coombs, 76 Ark. 132, 88 S. W. 595, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 151.

Affirmed.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF ANDREW J. MACKY, Deceased.

REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO et al., Appts.

(— Colo. —, 102 Pac. 1075.)

Inheritance tax — exceptions — operation.

1. A statute enacted for the collection of for any less amount; on all estates of $10,000 and less, $3; on all estates of over $10,000, and not exceeding $20,000, $4; on all estates over $20,000, and not exceeding $50,000, $5; and on all estates over $50,000, $6; provided, that an estate in the above case which may be valued at a less sum than $500 shall not be subject to any such duty or tax." By his will, admitted to probate in the county court of Boulder county, Andrew J. Macky, after certain specific bequests, which need not be mentioned here, gave the sum of $50,000 to and for an hospital building and home, to be built in the city of Boulder for the comfort of poor widows and orphan children while sick and not able to care for themselves, provided that the city of Boulder or the county commissioners of the county of Boulder would maintain and support the said hospital and home; otherwise the said $50,000 to be divided among certain legatees, as named in the will. In the same instrument he devised the residuum of his estate, left after paying the specific bequests, legacies, debts, and costs of administration, to the regents of the University of Colorado, located at Boulder, for a building to be known as an auditorium building, and to be erected upon the university grounds. The estate was appraised as provided in the above-mentioned sections, for the purpose of ascertaining the several amounts thereof subject to an inheritance tax, and, after due allowance for all other matters, it was found that the residuary legacy to the regents of the uni-not exempt from a collateral inheritance tax. Simon's Estate, 5 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 548.

But a charitable corporation which, by its charter, is exempt from taxation, is also exempt from the operation of a transfer-tax law, and when its personal property is exempt up to a certain amount, a bequest thereto which will not cause it to exceed that amount is also exempt; and this is true although a section of the general tax-exemption law, whose language is broad enough to include it, is, by a change in the transfer-tax law, made inapplicable thereto. Re Kimberly, 27 App. Div. 470, 50 N. Y. Supp. 586.

Construing the language of a statute of New York which made an inheritance tax applicable to "property . . . over which this state has any jurisdiction for the purposes of the taxation," it was held that, admitting that the state had power to subject United States securities to an inheritance law, yet it had not done so. Re Whiting, 150 N. Y. 27, 34 L.R.A. 232, 55 Am. St. Rep. 640, 44 N. E. 713; Re Sherman, 153 N. Y. 1, 46 N. E. 1032; Re Coogan, 27 Misc. 563, 59 N. Y. Supp. 111, affirmed in 45 App. Div. 628, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1144 and 162 N. Y. 613, 57 N. E. 1107. Contra.—Carver's Estate, 4 Misc. 592, 25 N. Y. Supp. 991, affirmed in 75 Hun, 612, 28 N. Y. Supp. 1126. In Re Whiting, supra, the court said that the words of the statute above quoted "refer to the jurisdiction actually exercised through contemporary statutes, rather than to the entire jurisdiction actually possessed by the state;" and in Re Sherman, supra, that "it is the jurisdiction of the state to subject property to taxation under its general taxing power, and not whether the jurisdiction has been exercised, which is the test of exemption." Hence, Federal securities were not intended to be subject to the inheritance tax, because not subject to the ordinary taxing power of the state.

—where inheritance-tax law adopts general tax exemptions.

The exemption expressly extended by the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

inheritance-tax law to "the societies, corporations, and institutions now exempted by law from taxation" (which, under the earlier form of the New York inheritance-tax law, was the language of the exemption clause), was held in Re Vassar, 127 N. Y. 1, 27 N. E. 394, not to be confined to those bodies which enjoyed complete immunity from taxation as to all property which they had or might at any time become possessed of, irrespective of any statutory limit. This case expressly overruled Re Keech, 26 N. Y. S. R. 433, 7 N. Y. Supp. 331 (affirmed in 32 N. Y. S. R. 227, 11 N. Y. Supp. 265); Re Lennox, 31 N. Y. S. R. 959, 9 N. Y. Supp. 895; Re Vanderbilt, 2 Connolly, 319, 10 N. Y. Supp. 242; and impliedly Re Herr, 22 N. Y. S. R. 905, 5 N. Y. Supp. 48.

This exemption clause, however, was held not to extend to a board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church and the board of home missions of the same denomination, both New York corporations, neither being exempt from taxation by the acts under which they were created or by the general tax-exemption statute. Re Board of Foreign Missions, 58 Hun, 116, 33 N. Y. S. R. 793, 11 N. Y. Supp. 310.

Or to religious societies and colleges not exempt from taxation by charter or special laws. Catlin v. Trinity College, 113 N. Y. 133, 3 L.R.A. 206, 20 N. E. 864; Re Kavanagh, 24 N. Y. S. R. 404, 6 N. Y. Supp. 669.

Or to a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, not exempt by its charter from taxation, there being no general statute exempting it from general taxation. Re Keith, 1 Connolly, 370, 5 N. Y. Supp. 201.

But an institution for the blind, which did not receive pay from patients under any circumstances, was held to be within such exemption clause, since it was an almshouse, and, as such, exempt from general taxation. Re Underhill, 2 Connolly 262, 20 N. Y. Supp. 134.

And the same was held as to a home for incurables. Re Neale, 32 N. Y. S. R. 910, 10 N. Y. Supp. 713.

And a hospital which is exempt from general taxation is also exempt from the opversity amounted to the sum of $217,270. The county court found that the bequests for the hospital and home and to the regents of the university were not subject to an inheritance tax. From this judgment of the county court an appeal was taken on behalf of the state of Colorado by the attorney general to the district court of Boulder county, and that court found that the legacies for the home and to the regents were subject to an inheritance tax, under the law above mentioned, and the executor was ordered to pay to the state the sum of $16,305.14 as the inheritance tax due to the state on account of the two bequests. From this judgment of the district court, the regents and the executor have appealed to this court.

tion of the transfer tax. Re Kimberley, 27 App. Div. 470, 50 N. Y. Supp. 586.

A bequest to a charitable corporation or association to be formed was exempt from the transfer tax, when the corporation or association, when formed, would be exempt from general taxation. Re Graves, 171 N. Y. 40, 13 N. E. 787.

It was held that the exemption of church buildings from taxation by the general tax law did not exempt from an inheritance tax a legacy to build a church, since the rule of equitable conversion did not extend that far. Re Van Kleeck, 121 N. Y. 701, 25 N. E. 50.

It was held in Hunter's Estate, 22 Abb. N. C. 24, that this exemption clause—"societies, corporations, institutions now exempted by law from taxation—" implied an immunity from taxation expressly granted by statute, and not a mere omission to tax, and that therefore only those societies, etc., are deemed "exempted by law from taxation," within the meaning of such phrase, whose property is so exempted.

This same clause was held in Re Hamilton, 148 N. Y. 310, 42 N. E. 717, not to refer to the state itself or any of its political divisions; and a bequest to a municipality within the state was therefore held to be subject to the tax. The court said: "The reference obviously was to such associations, corporations, or institutions as would have been included within its general terms, but for the exception or exemption itself. We have seen that the state or any of its political divisions would not have fallen within the terms of the law, and hence no exemption was necessary to relieve them of its provisions. Exemption implies that the person or corporation to which it applies is or would otherwise be taxable. To include public property which is not, and, in the nature of things, cannot be, taxable at all, within the terms of an exemption act, would be to do a vain and useless thing, which cannot be imputed to the legislature in the construction of the act in question." Thus, the gist of the decision is that the words "exempted by law" mean "exempted by statute."

But the exemption in the inheritance-tax 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mr. Henry O. Andrew, for appellant
Thomas V. Wilson:

An inheritance tax is a tax on the right or privilege of succeeding to property.

27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 338; Dos Passos, Inheritance Tax Law, p. 38; Brown v. Elder, 32 Colo. 532, 77 Pac. 853; People v. Koenig, 37 Colo. 283, 85 Pac. 1129, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 140; Nunnenmacher v. State, 129 Wis. 190, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 121, 108 N. W. 627, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 711; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L.R.A. 259, 38 N. E. 512; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L.R.A. 632, 41 Am. St. Rep. 569, 30 Atl. 76; State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferrie, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L.R.A. 221, 41 N. E. 579; Wallace v. Myers, 4 L.R.A. 171, 38 Fed. 184; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn.

law was held in the subsequent case of Re Thrall, 157 N. Y. 46, 51 N. E. 411, to apply to a bequest to a municipality, the general tax law having been, in the meantime, changed so as to declare specifically that "all real property within the state and all personal property situated within the state or owned within this state" is taxable unless exempt from taxation by law. The court said: "This provision was evidently intended to cover state and municipal property, for, in the next section, the statute proceeds to specify the property exempt from taxation: 1. Property of the United States. 2. Property of this state other than its wild or forest lands in the forest preserve. 3. Property of a municipal corporation of the state, held for a public use, except the portion of such property not within the corporation. We now have a statute taxing the property of municipal corporations, except such portion thereof as is held for a public use within the corporate limits, which, by the express provisions of the statute, is exempt from taxation."

Under a Massachusetts statute providing that all property within the commonwealth which shall pass by will or by intestate succession other than to certain designated near relatives or "to or for charitable, educational, or religious societies or institutions, the property of which is by law exempt from taxation, shall be subject to a tax," etc., it was held that a legacy to a town to establish a free library was exempt from the tax, since it might fairly be called an educational or charitable institution, and not subject to the tax. Essex v. Brooks, 164 Mass. 79, 41 N. E. 119.

So also it was held that the statute exempts bequests and devises to a society or institution whose society is generally exempt from taxation, whether the particular gift, when in the hands of the society or institution, will be exempt from taxation or not. First Universalist Soc. v. Bradford, 185 Mass. 310, 70 N. E. 204. And this rule applies to a devise to a religious society of land and a dwelling house, "to be used and occupied only as a parsonage," which would be taxable to the society when thus used and occupied. Ibid.

674, 28 L.R.A. 178, 30 S. W. 750; Gels-thorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L.R.A. 170, 51 Pac. 267; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 43, 44 L. ed. 970, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Re Thrall, 157 N. Y. 46, 51 N. E. 411.

The state never taxes its own property to raise revenue for itself.

Cooley, Taxn. pp. 130, 2634; 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 367-370; People v. McCreery, 34 Cal. 456; People ex rel. Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 361; Denver v. Bone-steel, 28 Colo. 484, 65 Pac. 628; Re Ham-ilton, 148 N. Y. 310, 42 N. E. 717; Franklin County v. Ottawa, 33 Am. St. Rep. 403, note; Aplin v. University of Michigan (At-ty. Gen. v. University of Michigan) 83 Mich. 467, 10 L.R.A. 376, 47 N. W. 440; Illinois Industrial University v. Champaign County, 76 Ill. 184; Kansas State Agri. College v. Hamilton, 28 Kan. 376; People ex rel. Jerome v. State University, 24 Colo. 178, 49 Pac. 286; Abbott, Mun. Corp. pp. 716, 717; Schuylkill County v. North Man-heim Twp. 42 Pa. 21.

Messrs. Giffin, Rowland, & Giffin for appellants Regents.

Messrs. William H. Dickson, Attorney General, and S. H. Thompson, Jr., for appellee:

When a person dies leaving property of a certain amount, the legatee, receiving as his portion the remainder after the tax is taken out, does not pay the inheritance tax, but that is paid by the state; and, consequently, the University of Colorado, in receiving the legacy, takes after the part belonging to the state of Colorado has been deducted.

Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 84, 18 L.R.A. 709, 32 N. E. 1096; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, 44 L. ed. 998, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Gels-thorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L.R.A. 170, 51 Pac. 267; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L.R.A. 178, 30 S. W. 750.

The municipality and the University of Colorado are not exempted, and any person bequeathing property to them must pay a portion thereof to the state.

Re Hamilton, 148 N. Y. 310, 42 N. E. 717.

Musser, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It has been quite universally held in our own state and elsewhere that a tax of the nature of that imposed by the aforesaid sections of our revenue law is not a tax up-23 L.R.A. (N.S.) on property, but is a tax or excise upon the power or right of transmitting or re-ceiving property by will or under intestate laws. Brown v. Elder, 32 Colo. 527, 77 Pac. 853; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 44 L. ed. 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L.R.A. 632, 41 Am. St. Rep. 569, 30 Atl. 76; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L.R.A. 178, 30 S. W. 750; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L.R.A. 259, 38 N. E. 512; Re Mer-riam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; Re Wil-merding, 117 Cal. 281, 49 Pac. 181; Gels-thorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 299, 39 L.R.A. 170, 51 Pac. 267; State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 3 L.R.A. 372, 17 Atl. 82; Koch-ersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L.R.A. 446, 47 N. E. 321. The parties concede that that is the law. The attorney general, on behalf of the state, contends that the tax imposed by our law is payable out of the estate; that it is a tax upon the power of a testator to dispose of his property by will; and that, at the death of the testator, his estate is divided into two parts by op-eration of law, one part passing to the legatees and devisees, as provided in the will, the other to the state, in payment of the inheritance tax, and that, no matter who the legatees or devisees may be, the state is entitled to this tax. On the other hand, counsel for appellants contend that the tax is imposed upon the right of the legatees or devisees to receive the property under the will; that it is payable by the legatees and devisees as a tax for the priv-ilege of taking the property, and that in-asmuch as the regents of the university and the city and county of Boulder are public corporations, whose property is exempted from taxation, the exemption applies in this case, and the regents and the city or county of Boulder should be permitted to receive the legacies free from any inher-ance tax.

What is the subject upon which the tax provided for in this part of our revenue law is imposed? Is it the right to dispose of or transmit property by will or under the intestate laws, or is it the right to re-ceive property by will or under the intestate laws? It is conceded that, if it is the former, then the judgment should be af-firmed, for in that case it is the right or power of Andrew J. Macky to dispose of his property by will that is the subject of taxation. If it is the latter, then it is the right of the public corporations to receive the legacies that is, the subject of taxation; and the further inquiry must then be made as to whether or not such corporations are exempt from the inheritance tax, or, rather, whether the rights of such corporations to receive the legacies is a subject of taxation. In Knowlton v. Moore, supra, Mr. Justice White reviewed the history of taxes of the nature of those imposed by our law, and applied to them the term "death duties," as they are called in England, to indicate their generic nature, for it is to be remembered that fundamentally it is the power to transmit or the right to receive property by death that is the subject levied upon by all such taxes. As is shown by Mr. Justice White, the oldest form of death duty in England was a probate duty, established in 1694. It was a fixed tax upon the sum of the personal estate, payable upon the grant of letters of probate, and was treated as an expense of administration. In 1780 there was added a tax known as a legacy tax, and collected by means of a stamp fixed to the receipt of the legatee. The burden of this duty fell on the legatee, unless, in case of a will, the testator otherwise directed. 4 Enc. Laws of England, 125. In 1853 the two forms of taxes aforesaid were supplemented by a tax called a succession duty, which was levied upon real estate passing wholly or partly because of death, and on personalty not subject to the legacy tax. This was akin to the legacy tax, and borne by the successor; i. e., the beneficiary under the succession. Id. 129. In 1894 an act called the "finance act" provided an estate duty which took the place of the probate duty, and, like the latter, is payable out of the general residue of the estate. Id. 130-135. Speaking with reference to this estate duty, it is said in Hanson's Death Duties, p. 63: "The new duty imposed by the finance act, and called estate duty, as has been said above, supersedes probate duty; but the key to the construction of the finance act lies in remembering that the new estate duty, although it is leviable on property which was left untouched by probate duty, such as real estate, yet is in substance of the same nature as the old probate duty. What it taxes is not the interest to which some person succeeds on a death, but the interest which ceased by reason of the death. Unless this principle is kept clearly in view, the mind is constantly tempted by the wording of the act to revert to principles of succession duty which have no real connection with the subject." Here, then, are presented two classes of death duties; the one being the taxation of the interest which ceased with death, and which is upon the transmission of property. Into this class fall the probate duty and the estate duty, the burden of which is borne by the estate; the other class being the taxation of the interest to which a person has succeeded on the death, and which is upon the right to receive. Into this latter class fall the legacy and succession taxes, the burden of which is borne by the person beneficially interested,—the legatee or successor in interest. In 1797 (1 Stat. at L. 527, chap. 11, § 1) our Congress imposed a legacy tax which continued in force until 1802. The tax was collected by means of stamps placed upon the receipts given for the payment of the legacies or distributive shares of personal property, and was charged upon the legacies or distributive shares, and not upon the residuum of the personal estate. In 1862 a legacy tax was again imposed, like in character to that of 1797, and in the same act a probate duty was levied, proportioned to the amount of the estate. In 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 285, 286, chap. 173, §§ 124, 125) an act was passed increasing the rate of the probate duty on the whole estate and the legacy tax on each particular legacy or distributive share, and adding a duty on the passing of real estate. "Thus it came to pass that the system of death duties prevailing in England, and that adopted by Congress,—leaving out of view the differences in rates and the administrative provisions,—were substantially identical and of a threefold nature; that is, a probate duty charged upon the whole estate, a legacy duty charged upon each legacy or distributive share of personalty, and a succession duty charged against each interest in real property." Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 51, 44 L. ed. 973, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 751. It is now apparent that, if the position of the state in the present case is proper, then the death duties imposed by our statute must be placed in that class which Hanson says is a taxation upon the interest which ceased with death, and in which we have seen fall the probate and estate duties of England and the United States, and, as we shall presently see, transfer taxes in the nature of those imposed by the New York act of 1892 (Laws 1892, chap. 399, p. 814), and the burden is on the estate. On the other hand, if the position of the appellants is the correct one, then the death duties imposed by our law must be placed in that class; that is, a taxation of the interest to which some person succeeds on the death, in which the burden is borne by the one benefited, and which we have seen embraces legacy and succession duties, and must perforce include inheritance and collateral inheritance taxes, for an inheritance is an interest to which a person succeeds upon the death of an ancestor intestate. Hence we are led from a contemplation of the generic, to a discussion of the specific, nature of the death duties levied by the sections of our revenue act under consideration.

While the particular appellation employed by a legislature in designating a subject of legislation is not always indicative of its specific nature, yet, in this instance, the fact that our legislature called the tax an inheritance tax is of much significance, in view of the fact that, from the very language of the sections, no other term could be used that would more aptly indicate the specific nature of the tax. The statute provides that interests, whether in real or personal property, passing by will or under the intestate laws, shall be subject to the tax. A tax upon an interest in personal property passing by will is a legacy tax. The tax upon an interest in real property, whether passing by will or under the law of descent, could be aptly termed a succession tax. The tax imposed upon the interests obtained by lineal descendants might be termed a lineal inheritance tax, and that upon collateral ones a collateral inheritance tax. No term sufficiently comprehensive could be more aptly employed to embrace a tax upon the right to acquire interests in real and personal property passing by will to devisees or to legatees, or under the statute of descents and distributions to heirs, whether lineal or collateral, than the term "inheritance tax." When we further consider the fact that the sections of our revenue act dealing with this tax are almost literal copies of an Illinois act entitled, "An Act to Tax Gifts, Legacies, and Inheritance," etc. (Laws 1895, p. 301), it strongly appears that the legislature, by the term "inheritance tax," intended that term to be expressive of the specific nature of the tax, and that it should operate upon interests to which persons succeeded upon death, as described by Hanson. Take the language of chap. 3, § 21, p. 49, Laws 1902, copied above. What property does it make subject to a tax? All property which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of the state. Not any portion of the decedent's estate that may be used in the payment of debts or costs of administration, for that does not pass,—not all the property of the decedent, but all the property of the decedent which shall pass. Again, if any interest "shall be transferred by deed, grant, sale, or gift," in contemplation of death, to take effect in possession or enjoyment after such death, it is subject to the tax. Plainly, the interests subjected to a tax are those to which some persons have succeeded. Who are made liable for the tax? The statute answers: 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"And all heirs, legatees, and devisees, administrators, executors, and trustees shall be liable for any and all such taxes until the same shall have been paid as herein-after directed." Who are these "heirs, legatees, and devisees, administrators, executors, and trustees" upon whom the burden is cast? They are the persons who have succeeded to the property,—the administrators and executors for the purpose of administration; trustees for the carrying out of any trusts; and the heirs, legatees, and devisees at the final distribution, or, it may be, at the death, so far as real estate is concerned. It might be said right here that administrators and executors succeed to the whole estate, but in the very next sentence, and in the remainder of the section, the statute again limits the portion subject to the tax, and classifies the same for the purpose of fixing the rate and measuring the amount of the tax. What is that classification, and what property and persons are its subjects? The property embraced in each of the classes is the beneficial interest in any property or income therefrom which shall pass to some person included in any group. Here again is property which has passed. Who are the persons that are affected? They are the lineal and collateral heirs and strangers in blood of the decedent. Again, it is those who have succeeded to the property. We could thus proceed through other sections, but enough has been said to clearly show that it is only property that has passed by will or descent that is charged with the tax, and it is upon those who succeeded to the beneficial interests that the burden of the tax is cast.

Adverting to some of the decisions, there is found the case of United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073, which appears to hold that the tax in question there was a tax upon the right to dispose of property, and the state in this case lays much stress upon that decision. It appears in the Perkins Case that one Merriam bequeathed all his estate to the United States government. The surrogate's court fixed a tax to be paid by the estate. The matter finally reached the court of appeals, where it was determined that the tax should be paid. In Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505. The matter was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States. The tax was assessed under a law of 1892. Section 1 of the act provides: "A tax shall be and is hereby imposed upon the transfer of any property, real or personal, of the value of $500 or over . . . to persons or corporations not exempt by law from taxation on real or personal property in the following cases." (Laws 1892, chap. 399.) The first case is when the transfer is by will or by the intestate laws of the state from any person dying seised or possessed of the property while a resident of the state. The second case is when a transfer is by will or intestate law of property within the state, and the decedent was a nonresident. The third case is when a transfer is of property by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift made in contemplation of death. The court of appeals of New York determined that this tax limited the power of testamentary disposition, which is equivalent to saying that it was a tax upon that power. The Supreme Court of the United States in the Perkins Case followed the holding of the New York court, that the tax was under the law of 1892, and not under a previous one, and seemed to base its opinion upon the law of 1892. This law is, as it purports to be, a tax upon the right to transfer property; and while it is of the same generic nature as the Colorado law, being a death duty, it is not of the specific nature. If, as the court of appeals said, this tax limits the power of testamentary disposition, it is to be placed in that class spoken of by Hanson, as being a tax upon the interests that ceased by death. Hence, the opinion in the Perkins Case, which seems to accept the view of the court of appeals, is not fairly authority here. It must be borne in mind that the decisions are numerous wherein the nature of death duties is discussed generically only. Such decisions have in view the idea that the tax is not one on property, and, to sustain that view, treat the subject in a more general way, and hold that it is the right to dispose of or receive property by death that is the subject of taxation, without intending to be specific in the case. No decision has been pointed out to us wherein is discussed the specific nature of an inheritance or succession tax, as distinguished from that of a probate, estate, or transfer tax, but that it is held that an inheritance or succession tax is on the right to receive the property. In State v. Hamlin, supra, speaking of a tax under a statute substantially like ours, the supreme court of Maine, at page 504 of 86 Me, said: "The tax under this statute is, once for all, an excise or duty upon the right or privilege of taking property by will or descent under the law of the state." In State v. Alston, supra, speaking with reference to a tax imposed under an act providing for a collateral inheritance and succession tax, the supreme court of Tennessee, at pages 680, 681, of 94 Tenn., said: "It must be borne in mind that the tax is not upon the property, but the right or privilege of acquiring it by succession. It is a condition upon which the person may take the estate of a deceased relative by inheritance or testator by his will. It is a retention by the state of a part of a deceased person's property which the state may take to meet its necessities, and which in certain cases it may take in toto, as in cases of escheated property. It is not a tax upon the right of alienation, but on the privilege of receiving, by inheritance or will or otherwise, at the death of a former owner." In State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 325, 30 L.R.A. 218, 41 N. E. 579, 580, the court, speaking of an inheritance tax under a statute very similar to ours, said: "Properly understood, it is not the right to transmit, but the right and privilege to receive, that is taxed." The court then proceeds to say that the right to dispose of property is not so clearly taxable, and then continues: "But, when the right to receive the property is considered, it is clear that the right is distinct and separate from the property itself, and the state may tax this right to receive property, and this is so whether the property is disposed of by the owner during his lifetime or at his death." And on page 326 of 53 Ohio St. the court said: "As a majority of the court are of opinion that it is not a tax on property, but upon the right to receive property, the statute must, as to this point, be sustained." In Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, supra, the supreme court of Montana, discussing an inheritance tax law very similar to ours, at pages 303, 304, of 20 Mont., said: "The better view, as laid down by the authorities, is that a collateral inheritance or succession tax is a duty or bonus exacted in certain instances by the state upon the right and privilege of taking legacies, inheritances, gifts, and successions passing by will, by intestate laws, or by any deed or instrument made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor. The burden of the tax is not imposed upon the property itself, but upon the privilege of acquiring property by inheritance. In nearly all inheritance-tax laws the statutes provide for appraising the property to be inherited, but the object of such valuation is not to tax the property itself. It is to arrive at a measure of price by which the privilege of inheriting can be valued." And on page 305 of 20 Mont.: "The most exact rule is that which regards the tax as upon the right to receive property, rather than the right to dispose of it." In 1895 the legislature of Illinois passed an act already referred to. The sections of our revenue act, relating to an inheritance tax, are almost literal copies of the whole of the Illinois law. The person who framed the Colorado law evidently had before him the Illinois law, which was copied, with here and there a word changed. The only substantial difference is in the rate and in the verbiage of the proviso relative to exemptions. In 1897 the supreme court of Illinois in Kochersperger v. Drake, supra, passed upon the constitutionality of the law of that state. As our law was adopted after that decision was rendered, the utterances of the Illinois court come to us with a force like unto that of a legislative enactment. On pages 125 and 126 of 167 Ill., the Illinois court said: "The laws of descent and devise being the creation of the statute law, the power which creates may regulate and may impose conditions or burdens on a right of succession to the ownership of property to which there has ceased to be an owner because of death, and the ownership of which the state then provides for by the law of descent or devise. The imposition of such a condition or burden is not a tax upon the property itself, but on the right of succession thereto. To deny the right of the state to impose such a burden or condition is to deny the right of the state to regulate the administration of a decedent's estate. When, by the act of June 15, 1895, for the taxation of gifts, legacies, and inheritances in certain cases, the legislature prescribed that a certain part of the estate of the deceased person should be paid to the treasurer of the proper county, for the use of the state, it was in effect an assertion of sovereignty in the estate of deceased persons. Whether to be levied and determined as a tax or penalty, the principle is that, where one owning an estate dies, that estate is to be assessed in accordance with the provisions of the act, and the tax to be paid for the right of inheritance. The amount reserved to the state from the estate of a deceased owner is not a tax on the estate, but on the right of succession." Thus the decisions of the courts in other jurisdictions impel the inevitable conclusion that it is sought in this proceeding to tax the right of the regents of the university and the right of the county or city of Boulder to receive the legacies left to them by the will of Andrew J. Macky.

While this result has been reached without special reference to decisions of this court, it is gratifying to note that in former decisions this court has reached the same conclusion. In Brown v. Elder, supra, wherein the inheritance tax in this state was held constitutional, after adverting to the fact that all the objections which were made to its constitutionality had been met by other courts, and that it was not necessary to make any argument in support of its validity, this court, at page 532 of 32 Colo. said: "We shall content ourselves merely with the general statement taken from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594, in which the decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Illinois, upholding the validity of the act of which ours is a substantial copy, was affirmed, that the constitutionality of such taxes is based upon two principles: First, an inheritance tax is not one on property, but one on the succession; second, the right to take property by devise or descent is a creature of the law, and not a natural right, and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it." And the court, summing up its argument on page 539 of 32 Colo., said: "We have already held that our law imposes a tax upon the privilege of taking, receiving, and enjoying property that passes by will or under our intestate laws, and that authority for its imposition is found in the sovereign power of the state to lay a tax upon privileges and successions." In People v. Koenig, 3 Colo. 283, 285, 286, 85 Pac. 1129, 1130, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 140, our court again refers to this tax as "a succession or inheritance tax, excise, or duty." And, after summarizing § 21 of the act, this court said: "From the foregoing summary of the section, it is apparent that thereby the tax or duty imposed is upon the receipt of some beneficial interest in the property which passes by will or under the intestate laws of the state. Each heir, devisee, or legatee must pay in proportion to the amount which he actually receives. While all heirs, devisees, and legatees, etc., are liable for such taxes, certainly each beneficiary can be held only for the tax on what he receives, and not on the whole estate, unless he receives the same. . . . As the tax is laid upon the receipt of 'such property by each person,' naturally the exemption should, and we hold does, apply to the separate distributive shares and legacies, and not to the aggregate value of the property of the decedent." Other quotations from this case would unnecessarily lengthen this opinion. A careful perusal of that decision shows that its reasoning is based upon the hypothesis that the tax is on the beneficiary, and leads to the conclusion that if this court were now to hold that our inheritance tax is a burden upon the estate of a deceased person, payable out of the estate, and is not a tax upon the right to receive a legacy or distributive share of the estate, to be borne by the beneficiary, such holding would be foreign to the reasoning of our court in People v. Koenig, and would be in effect a reversal of that case.

The conclusion having been reached that the right of the regents and the right of the county or city of Boulder to receive the legacies in the present case are the subjects sought to be taxed, and that the regents and the county or city are the beneficiaries from whom it is sought to collect the tax, it becomes necessary to inquire whether these public corporations are exempt from the tax, or, rather, are such rights of such public corporations proper subjects of taxation within the contemplation of our inheritance tax law? Appellants claim an exemption first under § 4 of article 10 of our Constitution, and § 17 of the revenue act; and, second, upon the broad principle that a state never taxes its own property or the property of minor governmental agencies of the state. The sections of our Constitution and revenue act referred to provide that the property of the state, counties, cities, towns, and other municipalities shall be exempt from taxation. As these sections deal with taxation of property, it may be difficult to apply them in this case. It is not necessary, however, to consider whether these sections apply or not. It is enough to say that a county and a city, though differing somewhat in their corporate nature, are public corporations, carrying out the powers delegated by the laws of the state for the purpose of local government. What are the regents of the university? Section 5 of article 8 of our Constitution declares the University of Boulder to be an institution of the state. Section 12 of article 9 provides that the regents of the university shall be elected by the people, and constitutes them a body corporate under the name of "The Regents of the University of Colorado." Section 14 of the same article provides that this corporation shall have the general supervision of the university, and the exclusive control and direction of its funds and appropriations. By constitutional amendment, all these rights and franchises may be changed or taken away. The regents constitute a body corporate, but this body is a part of the state,—a department of the state to which is intrusted the supervision and government of the university of the state. By § 5 of article 8 of the Constitution, this body corporate is under the control of the general assembly, except as limited by the other provisions of the Constitution. It is fostered by the state. Appropriations are made and confided to it, which are raised by taxation upon the property of the people of the state. It is a public corporation in which the regents have no private interest whatever. It is an agency of the state for the government of the university. Its property and rights are the property and rights of the state.

There is a principle of law by which some things are always presumptively or impliedly exempted from the operation of general tax laws, because it is reasonable to suppose that they were not contemplated by the legislature at the adoption of the law. Such is the case with property belonging to the state and its governmental agencies which is held for governmental purposes. It is said that the taxation of such property would render necessary new taxes to meet the demand of the tax imposed, and the public would be taxing itself in order to raise money to pay to itself. Though the state has the power to do this, the process would be a useless one, and by it no one would be benefited except the officers employed, whose compensation would go to increase the tax levy. Such property is therefore regarded as impliedly exempt from the operation of tax laws unless the intention to include it is clearly expressed. Public Schools v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667; People ex rel. Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353; Schuylkill County v. North Manheim Twp. 42 Pa. 21; Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. 263 et seq.; Abbott, Mun. Corp. 716. The authorities last referred to, it is true, speak only of taxes on the property of the state or its governmental agencies. It is perfectly logical, however, to say that the same thing is true in case of an excise tax when the subject sought to be taxed is some right of the state or its governmental agencies, the exercise of which will aid them in the performance of their governmental duties. Indeed, if the doctrine of implied exemption is true in case of a property tax, then it follows that it must also be true in case of an excise tax. No matter what the subject of taxation may be in our revenue law, the object is always the same,—the raising of money for the support of government in the state. One of the great objects of county government is the erection and maintenance of homes for the poor. By subdivision 47, § 6525, Rev. Stat. 1908, cities and towns are empowered to erect and maintain hospitals, orphanages, etc., for the relief of persons in sickness and distress through poverty. Thus has the state provided for the care and support of the poor and dependent of its people. Hospitals and homes for this class of unfortunates must be built and maintained by taxation, unless some person, as in the present case, donates a fund for that purpose. An auditorium is a convenient and necessary building to be used in connection with the university. Sooner or later it would be built by taxation were it not for this present gift. What substantial difference is there between taxing the poorhouse, hospitals and orphanages of the county and city and the auditorium of the university, and taxing the right of these public corporations to receive a fund with which to erect these buildings, the erection of which is the exercise of a governmental duty? The application of the doctrine of implied exemption of governmental subdivisions and agencies from excise duties or taxes has already been made in this state. In 1901 the general assembly passed a general revenue law (Laws of 1901, chap. 94, p. 241), containing the inheritance tax and some other forms of excise duties. It contained a section imposing a tax of $5 upon each party appearing in the supreme court. This was for the purpose of state revenue, and was not recoverable by the successful party. It was, in fact, a tax upon the right to appear in the supreme court, and was levied in general language including all litigants. This tax was not contained in the revenue law of 1902, when, for some reason, the law of 1901 was substantially re-enacted. The then county of Arapahoe, in one case, and the city of Denver, in another, paid this supreme court tax of 1901 under protest, and then moved to have the same refunded. In the opinion rendered on the determination of the motion in City of Denver v. Bonesteel, 28 Colo. 483, 65 Pac. 628, this court said: "It is by virtue of political subdivisions, such as counties, and municipalities like cities, that the laws are executed and the welfare of the people subserved. Taxes are charges levied by the sovereign state upon the persons of its subjects or citizens, and not charges upon itself. Revenue is the object of taxation, and none would result from levying a tax upon the agencies of the state through which it exercises the functions of government, or by virtue of which it protects and enforces its rights or those of its citizens. Taxation of these functions and agencies would, in effect, be merely taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another. In the end no net revenue would be derived. Such a policy would simply require a levy to meet these expenses in the first instance, to be again returned by the imposition of a fee. Hence, however general the statute may be in enumerating the parties liable to a tax of the character under consideration, the rule is that the subdivisions of the state, created for governmental purposes, are not included, or were intended to be excluded, in the absence of a specific declaration to the contrary; and the general rule of law invoked by the attorney general with respect to exemptions does not apply to public matters." It is thus apparent that the doctrine of implied exemption, as applying to this case, is the law of this state, and, if it is not now applied, there would be a departure from that law. It follows, therefore, that the judgment of the district court was wrong. The New York decisions cited by both parties have been discussed, for the reason that these decisions appear to deal with taxes of this nature generically or with laws specifically different, or turn 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

upon the point that the statutes do not expressly exempt public corporations from taxes of this nature, thus not considering the law of implied exemption in such cases, as applied in this state.

The judgment will therefore be reversed, and this cause remanded, with directions to the District Court to vacate its judgment, and enter a judgment that the legacies, when paid to the regents of the university and the city or county of Boulder, shall be so paid free from and without the payment of any inheritance tax.

All the Justices concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

JOHANN GRABOW, Plff. in Err..

v.

WILLIAM MCCracken et al.

(— Okla. —, 102 Pac. 84.)

Statute of frauds—deed of land—parol reservation of crop.

M. and another conveyed by warranty deed to G. a certain tract of land for a consideration recited in the deed of $2,900. at said time there being standing upon said land a matured crop of corn; it being agreed by parol that the grantors should gather and remove from said premises said corn as a part of the consideration of said conveyance. The grantee afterwards claimed said crop of corn by virtue of said deed, there being no reservation of said crop in the face thereof. Held that it might be shown by parol that said corn was reserved by the grantors as a part of the consideration for said conveyance.

(May 12, 1909.)

Headnote by WILLIAMS, J.

Case Note.—Must a contract for the sale of growing crops or a reservation of the same by a grantor in a deed be in writing.

Whether or not growing crops are realty or personalty depends very greatly upon the nature of the transaction in which the question arises. Many courts consider them realty as to some transactions and personalty as to others. It is the purpose of this note to discuss the question whether they are to be considered realty or an interest therein so as to be capable of passing only by a contract in writing; and the further somewhat analogous question whether a grantor of the lands upon which the crops are growing may reserve them by parol. These questions are in a way distinct and are so treated by many authorities, but other authorities seem to treat the right of a grantor to reserve growing crops by parol ERROR to the District Court for Kingfisher County to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover possession of certain crops to which plaintiff alleged title under a deed of the land upon which they were grown. Affirmed.

Statement by Williams, J.

On the 18th day of October, A. D. 1906, the plaintiff in error, as plaintiff, commenced his action in the probate court of Kingfisher county, territory of Oklahoma, against the defendants in error, William McCracken and Lucy McCracken, as defendants, by petition in replevin, alleging in due form that he was the owner and lawfully entitled to the immediate possession as dependent upon the necessity of a contract for the sale of such crops being in writing. And it will be noted that in some of the cases cited in GRABOW v. MCCracken the two questions are in a way combined. It is consequently thought advisable to treat both questions in one note.

This case does not include cases involving the necessity of a delivery of the crops if deemed personal property, in order to satisfy the statute.

Sale of growing crops.

The great weight of authority is to the effect that annual crops, raised by yearly labor and cultivation, are, although unsevered from the soil, to be regarded as personal chattels and capable of being sold by oral contract, without regard to whether the crops are growing or matured. Marshall v. Ferguson, 23 Cal. 65; Davis v. McFarlane, 37 Cal. 634, 99 Am. Dec. 340; Bull v. Griswold, 19 Ill. 631; Bricker v. Hughes, 4 Ind. 146; Sherry v. Picken, 10 Ind. 375; Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana, 205; Dayton v. Dakin, 103 Mich. 65, 61 N. W. 349; Garth v. Caldwell, 72 Mo. 622; Holt v. Holt, 57 Mo. App. 272; Westbrook v. Eager, 16 N. J. L. 81; Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cow. 39; Newcomb v. Ramer, 2 Johns. 421, note; Whipple v. Foot, 2 Johns. 418, 3 Am. Dec. 442; Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio, 550; Brittain v. McKay, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 265, 35 Am. Dec. 738; Wisely v. Barclew, 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 216; Carson v. Browder, 2 Lea, 701.

Growing crops, if fructus industriales, are chattels, and an agreement for the sale of them, whether mature or immature, whether before or after severance, is not an interest in land under the statute of frauds. Carson v. Browder, supra.

So, a verbal contract for the sale of growing crops is not rendered void by the statute of frauds, although it may confer upon the purchaser an exclusive right to the land while the crop is ripening and being harvested. Davis v. McFarlane, supra.

Annual crops, such as corn, raised by yearly labor and cultivation, are to be regarded as personal chattels independent of and distinct from the land, capable of being sold by oral contract, and this without regard to whether the crops are growing or, having matured, have ceased to derive any nutriment from the soil. Garth v. Caldwell, supra.

A contract for the sale of nursery stock need not be in writing. Whitmarsh v. Walker, 1 Met. 313.

In Dunne v. Ferguson, Hayes (Exch.) 542, it was held that growing turnips were to be considered chattels, and a valid sale thereof could be made by parol.

A verbal contract for the sale of potatoes to the plaintiff, who was to have them at digging time and was to furnish the diggers, is not within the statute of frauds. Sainsbury v. Matthews, 4 Mees. & W. 343.

So, a contract for the sale of potatoes to be taken "immediately" from the ground is not within the statute. Parker v. Staniland, 11 East, 362. So, also, a contract to sell a crop of potatoes at a fixed price per acre, to be dug and carried away by the purchaser, is not within the statute. Warwick v. Bruce, 2 Maule & S. 205. In both of these cases the crop had ceased to grow, but the same rule was applied where the crop was still growing, in Evans v. Roberts, 5 Barn. & C. 829. And to the same effect were the decisions in Poulter v. Killingbeck, 1 Bos. & P. 397; Jones v. Flint, 10 Ad. & El. 753; Mayfield v. Wadsley, 3 Barn. & C. 357.

Proof of a verbal sale of the corn, although only a few inches high, was held in Northern v. State, 1 Ind. 113, to be a good defense to an action upon a constable's bond for failure to levy upon the corn under an execution against the vendor, issued after the sale.

An assignment of the owner's interest in a farm does not carry with it growing crops which had been verbally reserved by the owner's grantor upon his conveyance of the property to the owner within a year. Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cow. 39.

A crop of timothy seed, whether sold before or after it is gathered, is not a part of the realty so that a landlord's lien thereon of the deed was a performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, and entitled him to the wheat, and no question under the statute of frauds, contended for by the appellee, could arise in the case."

See also Harvey v. Million, 67 Ind. 93.

In the case of Austin v. Sawyer, 9 Cow. 39, the court said: "Whatever may be the rule of construction elsewhere, we are not at liberty here to question the validity of a parol contract for the sale of growing crops. Was there any evidence of such a contract? Rejecting all that passed anterior to and at the time of executing the written contract, the proof is that Wilcox, when treating with the defendant as to the sale of the farm, declared the wheat to belong to the plaintiff. This is sufficient, in my judgment, to authorize a jury to presume a formal and valid contract for the sale of the wheat."

In the case of Backenstoss v. Stahler, 33 Pa. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592, the court said: "It is a rule of the common law that growing crops are personal property, but pass by conveyance as appurtenant to the land, unless served by reservation or exception; and this rule has not been altered by statute of frauds and perjuries. A party may show by parol that the growing crops were reserved on a sale of the land, although there be no exception in the deed."

See also Harbold v. Kuster, 44 Pa. 392.

In the case of Neill v. Chesson, 15 Ill. App. 266, it is held that parol evidence is admissible to show that the grantor should have the growing wheat and the rent for a certain time, when the same is not reserved in the face of the deed.

In the case of Baker v. Jordan, 3 Ohio St. 438, it is held that growing corn may be reserved by parol from the operation of a deed, in common form, for the land whereon it grows; that growing corn may be a part of the realty for some purposes, but it is generally to be considered as personalty; that, when the evidence of such understand-

Me. 126, 96 Am. Dec. 438; Vanderkarr v. Thompson, 19 Mich. 82; Adams v. Watkins, 103 Mich. 431, 61 N. W. 774; McIlvaine v. Harris, 20 Mo. 457, 64 Am. Dec. 196.

A reservation by parol, if permitted to be established in a court of justice, would come directly in conflict with the well-settled rule of law which declares that parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict or substantially vary the legal import of a written agreement. Gibbons v. Dillingham, supra.

A parol reservation of wine plants, which are of the nature of rhubarb, is inadmissible to contradict the terms of a conveyance of the land, absolute on its face. Wintermute v. Light, 46 Barb. 279.

In Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 25 Pac. 430, real-estate brokers had sold some land without reserving the crops, at the price at which the land was to be sold without the crops, and the court held that they were entitled to recover their commissions, as it appeared that all of the parties understood that the crops were not to pass with the land, and the sale was not consummated for reasons entirely outside the terms of the contract of sale. The court said that a written contract for the sale of land, which did not contain any reservation of growing crops, if standing alone, must prevail, notwithstanding the fact that there was a verbal understanding that the crops were not to pass.

A parol reservation of crops may amount to a license to enter and remove the crops. Powell v. Rich, 41 Ill. 466; Carter v. Wingard, 47 Ill. App. 296.

In speaking of a parol reservation of crops of grain which was not mentioned in a deed, the court in Huffman v. Hummer, 17 N. J. Eq. 269, said that a written agreement may be altered by a parol agreement subsequently made, but, if contemporaneous with the written agreement, the instrument itself is 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) a repository of the intention of the parties and the only competent evidence of what their intention was.

But a number of cases hold that a verbal reservation by the grantor of crops growing on the land conveyed is valid, and evidence thereof is admissible. It will be noted that the admissibility of such evidence is put upon several different grounds.

Thus, in Walton v. Jordan, 65 N. C. 170, the court said: "Annual crops, which are regarded in law as fructus industriales, do not necessarily pass with the title of the land. For many purposes they are considered as personal property, and they may be sold and transferred by parol, as they are not embraced in the statute of frauds. While they are growing, they pass by presumption of law with the title of the land, but this presumption may be rebutted, even with parol evidence."

So, also, in Baker v. Jordan, 3 Ohio St. 438, the court said: "Growing corn may be part of it, for some purposes, but it is generally to be considered as personalty. If the parties to a deed, either by words or their behavior, signify their understanding that as between them it is personalty, the law will so regard it and will respect their intention in the construction of the deed. When the evidence of such understanding is produced, it is not to contradict the deed, for with that it is perfectly consistent; but it is to show that what, in some instances, would go with the lands as part of the realty, was, in that case, converted into personalty by the will of the parties, and thus to hold the deed to its true meaning and effect." And to the same effect was the decision in Bourne v. Bourne, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 467.

And in Backenstoss v. Stahler, 33 Pa. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592, it was held that a reservation of a growing crop acts as a sev-ing is produced, it is not to contradict the deed, for with that it is perfectly consistent, but it is to show that what in some instances would go with the land as a part of the realty was, in that case, converted into personalty by the will of the parties, and thus to hold the deed to its true meaning and effect.

See also Phillips v. Keysaw, 7 Okla. 674, 56 Pac. 695; Aull Sav. Bank v. Aull, 80 Mo. 199; Champion v. Munday, 85 Ky. 31, 2 S. W. 546; Richardson v. Traver, 112 U. S. 423, 28 L. ed. 804, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 201; McCrea v. Purmort, 16 Wend. 460, 30 Am. Dec. 103; Hersey v. Verrill, 39 Me. 271; Quimby v. Stebbins, 55 N. H. 420; Steed v. Hinson, 76 Ala. 298; Fraley v. Bentley, 1 Dak. 25, 46 N. W. 506; Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Wilkinson, 72 Ala. 286; McMahan v. Stewart, 23 Ind. 590; Frey v. Vanderhoof, 15 Wis. 398; Drury v. Tremont Improv. Co. 13 Allen, 168; McDill v. Gunn, 43 Ind. 315.

The following authorities support the contrary rule: Kammrath v. Kidd, 89 Minn. 380, 99 Am. St. Rep. 603, 95 N. W. 213; Gibbons v. Dillingham, 10 Ark. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 233; Winn v. Murehead, 52 Iowa, 64, 2 N. W. 949; Stewart v. McArthur, 77 Iowa, 162, 41 N. W. 604; Adams v. Watkins, 103 Mich. 431, 61 N. W. 774; Taylor v. Southerland, 7 Ind. Terr. 660, 104 S. W. 874; Chapman v. Veach, 32 Kan. 167, 4 Pac. 100.

The weight of authority and reason supports the rule, at least that a matured crop of corn and wheat standing ungathered upon a tract of land may be specifically reserved by parol in the sale of the land, as a part of the contract price or consideration of the deed.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

erance, and the crop does not pass by the deed with the land; consequently, parol evidence as to a reservation does not vary or contradict the terms of the deed.

And following the Backenstoss Case, it was held in Harbold v. Kuster, 44 Pa. 302, that a verbal agreement that growing crops should remain the property of the grantor would not necessarily be merged in a deed of the realty.

In Hendrickson v. Ivins, 1 N. J. Eq. 562, it was held that a verbal reservation of "green grain" was valid, but the decision was based upon the fact that the parties intended to insert the reservation in the deed and it was omitted by the scrivener who drew the deed.

Although a growing crop of wheat was considered to be real estate and within the statute of frauds, it was held in Kerr v. Hill, 27 W. Va. 576, that where it was verbally agreed between the parties upon the sale of land under the power given in an ordinary deed of trust, that, if the land should be purchased by one of the parties, the owner should reserve the wheat, such a verbal agreement would be enforced where it appeared that the purchaser bid for the land with such a reservation in mind.

In some cases a reservation of a growing crop has been treated as a part of the consideration, and, as such, may be shown by parol. This is the view taken by GRABOW v. McCracken and by Heavilon v. Heavilon, 29 Ind. 509, which is quoted at length therein.

And the Heavilon Case is approved and followed in Harvey v. Million, 67 Ind. 90. These Indiana cases expressly overrule the earlier cases from that state, of Chapman v. Long and Turner v. Cool, supra, which hold to the contrary.

So, where the reservation of a growing crop is made as part of the trade, which includes the conveyance, it was held in Ben- 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ner v. Bragg, 68 Ind. 338, that it might be proven by parol. And to the same effect was the decision in Hisey v. Troutman, 84 Ind. 115.

And in Kluse v. Sparks, 10 Ind. App. 444, 36 N. E. 914, 37 N. E. 1047, it was held that "the true and full consideration of a sale of land may always be shown by parol, and as the reservation of the emblements may enter into the consideration for, or constitute an inducement to, the sale, it is held that parol evidence is admissible to prove a reservation of the growing crops or emblements, notwithstanding the rule that such crops, prima facie, pass with a sale of land."

So, also, in Holt v. Holt, 57 Mo. App. 272, it was held that a parol reservation of crops by the grantor was valid under the statute of frauds, and an admission of evidence thereof was permissible. The court said: "The statement of the amount of the consideration in a deed, and the acknowledgement of its payment, is no more than a receipt,—a statement of a fact which is not necessary to the validity of the deed. It is only prima facie evidence of what it states, but not conclusive, except that there was some consideration. Such a recited consideration is not intended to be contractual, and therefore works no estoppel as to amount or character; or, in other words, the parties in such case are not estopped from showing by parol evidence the amount and character of the consideration to be different from that recited in the deed."

But parol evidence that the grantor was to retain growing crops as a part of the consideration of a deed was held inadmissible in Kammrath v. Kidd, 89 Minn. 380, 99 Am. St. Rep. 603, 95 N. W. 213. The court said: "The true consideration may generally be shown, but, when evidence offered for such purpose will have the effect to restrict the legal operation of the covenants, it is incompetent."

A few cases hold that whether evidence of a parol reservation of crops is admissible or not depends upon whether the statute of frauds requires a contract concerning growing crops to be in writing or not.

Thus, it was held in Flynt v. Conrad, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 190, 93 Am. Dec. 588, that parol evidence is admissible to show that it was the intention of the parties at the time the deed was executed that only the land should pass, and that the growing crops should continue to be the property of the grantor, as the statute of frauds does not apply to an agreement concerning a growing crop.

But in Gibbons v. Dillingham, 10 Ark. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 233, it was held that parol evidence to show a verbal reservation of growing crops was contrary to the statute of frauds.

And in Mellvaine v. Harris, 20 Mo. 457, 64 Am. Dec. 196, it was held that, as growing wheat is an interest in land, a contract concerning it is within the statute of frauds and perjuries, and must be in writing; and it would follow, therefore, that parol evidence of the sale of a growing crop of wheat would be inadmissible. The effect of this decision, however, is practically overthrown by Garth v. Caldwell, 72 Mo. 622, supra, in which it was held that annual crops were capable of being sold by parol contract.

In Powell v. Rich, 41 Ill. 466, it was held that, if immature crops are to be reserved from passing with a conveyance of the land, the reservation must be in writing to satisfy the statute of frauds, as they are to be deemed an interest in the land and pass with it. A statement as to a distinction between matured and immature crops made in this case was said in Damery v. Ferguson, 48 Ill. App. 225, to be mere dictum, and the rule was held to apply to matured crops if unsevered as well as to immature crops. And to the same effect was the decision in Carter v. Wingard, 47 Ill. App. 296. In none of these cases, does the court express any opinion as to the question whether a verbal sale of growing crops is valid or not.

In regard to these cases, it is not clear in what way the admissibility of evidence of a parol reservation is dependent upon the provisions of the statute of frauds. It would seem that, if the court proceeds upon the theory that evidence of a parol reservation of growing crops would tend to vary the terms of the conveyance, absolute on its face, the rule of evidence forbidding the contradiction or variation of written instruments by parol testimony is conclusive in itself, regardless of whether the rule of that jurisdiction required a contract for the sale of growing crops to be in writing or not; and it will appear from the cases discussed earlier in the note that in some jurisdictions evidence of a parol reservation of a crop has been held inadmissible, although an oral sale of growing crops is held valid, and not within the statute of frauds. And in Austin v. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sawyer, 9 Cow. 39, while it was held that evidence of a parol reservation of the crops was inadmissible, the validity of a parol contract for the sale of the crops was expressly affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

ALMA CABLE, Admr., etc., of Rufus R. Cable, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

SPOKANE & INLAND EMPIRE RAILROAD COMPANY, Resp't.

SADIE CABLE, by Guardian ad Litem, Appt.,

v.

SAME, Resp't.

(50 Wash. 619, 97 Pac. 744.)

Electric railway — duty — crossing.

1. One about to cross a track of an interurban electric railway, on which trains are customarily operated at high speed, must stop, look, and listen for approaching trains.

Same — contributory negligence.

2. One is negligent in assuming that an electric interurban train which he knows to be approaching a crossing is to stop, and in driving upon the track in front of it when his view is obscured by obstructions, without ascertaining its exact location, so as to prevent holding the railroad company liable for injuries, although the company is negligent in running a through train at high speed, off from schedule time, without sounding proper warning at the crossing.

Imputed negligence — railroad crossing — individual duty.

3. A person of years of discretion who is injured at a railroad crossing while riding with another who has full control of the driving cannot escape the charge of contributory negligence, on the theory that the negligence of the driver is not imputable to him, if there is no evidence that he made any effort to protect himself by attempting to secure observation of the rule requiring such travelers to stop, look, and listen.

(October 16, 1908.)

Case Note. — Duty to look and listen before crossing interurban electric railway on company's own right of way.

The cases discussing the duty of a person traveling upon a street to look and listen before crossing the tracks of an electric railway traversing public streets or highways are collected and discussed in a note to Pilmer v. Boise Traction Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 254. This note is confined to cases passing upon the duty to look and listen before attempting to pass over an electric road crossing a street or highway in a country

A PPEALS by plaintiffs from judgments of the Superior Court for Spokane County in favor of defendant in actions brought to recover damages for personal injuries which were alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Adler C. Clausen and Samuel T. Crane for appellants.

Messrs. Graves and Kizer & Graves, for respondent:

Deceased in driving upon the track, under the circumstances, was guilty of negligence barring recovery.

Woolf v. Washington R. & Nav. Co. 37 Wash. 507, 79 Pac. 997; 2 Thomp. Neg. §§1641, 1656; Phillips v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 111 Mich. 274, 66 Am. St. Rep.

district, where the tracks are laid on the company's own right of way.

The cases hold generally that there is imposed upon a traveler about to cross an electric track which is laid upon the company's own right of way through the country, a greater duty to look and listen for approaching cars than would exist in a city where so great a rate of speed cannot be maintained, and where there is a greater degree of care required of the motorman to keep his car under control. The duty imposed upon a traveler in the country about to cross the tracks of an electric railway is very similar to the duty to look and listen imposed upon a traveler about to cross the tracks of a steam railway.

Thus, in Robinson v. Rockland, T. & C. Street R. Co. 99 Me. 47, 58 Atl. 57, it was held that where a traveler upon a highway approaching an electric railway crossing is able to view the track for but a short distance from the crossing, until his horse is directly upon the track, it is all the more his duty to listen for an approaching car, and failure so to do constitutes contributory negligence. The court said: "The conditions of a country crossing of an electric railway in some respects more nearly resemble the crossings of steam railways than they do the situation in the city streets, where persons and teams are constantly traveling across and upon the tracks. A greater speed may be reasonable upon the part of the electric car, calling for a corresponding increase of vigilance on the part of the traveler."

And failure actually to look before attempting to cross an electric railway track was held in Phillips v. Washington & R. R. Co. 104 Md. 455, 65 Atl. 422, 10 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 334, to be contributory negligence precluding recovery for injuries caused by being struck by a car while attempting to cross. The court said: "In considering this question of contributory negligence it must be borne in mind that the injury did not occur on the streets of a city, but in the open country, where a higher rate of speed in the movement of electric cars is permissible than is allowable along the more crowded thoroughfares of a town. More caution was therefore demanded of a person in crossing a track of an electric railway in the country than would have been necessary in the city. The use of no greater caution in the open country than would have been requisite to constitute ordinary care and prudence in the city would not have been due care and caution on the part of the individual in approaching and going upon an electric railway crossing in the country. An act which would be prudent in the city might be glaringly negligent in the country; and hence the standard by which contributory negligence is to be measured in the two instances necessarily varies with the changed conditions existing in the two dissimilar localities."

392, 69 N. W. 496; Gulder v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 70 N. J. L. 196, 56 Atl. 124; Griffin v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 638, 27 N. W. 792; Merkle v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 49 N. J. L. 473, 9 Atl. 680; Golinvaux v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 125 Iowa, 652, 101 N. W. 465; Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 33 Colo. 517, 70 L.R.A. 681, 81 Pac. 801, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 700; Keyley v. Central R. Co. 64 N. J. L. 355, 45 Atl. 811; Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. v. French, 69 Miss. 121, 12 So. 338; Allen v. Maine C. R. Co. 82 Me. 111, 19 Atl. 105; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Howard, 124 Ind. 280, 8 L.R.A. 593, 19 Am. St. Rep. 96, 24 N. E. 892; Seefeld v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Wis. 216, 5 Am. St. Rep. 168, 35 N. W. 278; Pennsylvania R. Co. v.

So, where in approaching a suburban railway crossing the plaintiff's intestate did not stop, or even look, after reaching a point where either act would have been of any benefit to her, it was held in Folkmore v. Michigan United R. Co. (Mich.) 121 N. W. 811, that she was guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery.

And failure on the part of the plaintiff to look and listen for a car after the regular car has passed is contributory negligence which precludes a recovery of damages for injuries received by being struck by an extra car which followed the regular car at an interval of about fourteen seconds. Hatcher v. McDermott, 103 Md. 78, 63 Atl. 214. The court, after stating the rule laid down in Annapolis & B. Short Line R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 72 Md. 82, 19 Atl. 8, that there is no principle of law which precludes a railroad company from sending extra trains or engines over its road whenever the necessities of its business may require, said: "That being the law in reference to steam railroads, upon which trains are usually made up of a number of cars to which other cars may be added when required, it is even more applicable to electric railways running through the country, as circumstances may often arise which require extra cars to accommodate the public."

So, the failure of a traveler to observe the requirement to avail himself of his full

Beale, 73 Pa. 509, 13 Am. Rep. 753; Schaefer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Iowa, 624, 17 N. W. 893; Mantel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 33 Minn. 62, 21 N. W. 853; Haas v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 47 Mich. 401, 11 N. W. 216; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Crisman, 19 Colo. 30, 34 Pac. 286; Central R. Co. v. Smalley, 61 N. J. L. 277, 39 Atl. 695; Criss v. Seattle Electric Co. 38 Wash. 320, 80 Pac. 525; Coats v. Seattle Electric Co. 39 Wash. 386, 81 Pac. 830; Davis v. Cœur d'Alene & S. R. Co. 47 Wash. 301, 91 Pac. 839; Anson v. Northern P. R. Co. 45 Wash. 92, 87 Pac. 1058; Baker v. Tacoma Eastern R. Co. 44 Wash. 575, 87 Pac. 826; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 2 McCrary, 268, 8 Fed. 488, affirmed in 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Hatcher v. McDermott, 103 Md. 78, 63 Atl. 214; Bush v. Union P. R. Co. 62 Kan. 709, 64 Pac. 624; Durbin v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 17 Or. 5, 11 Am. St. Rep. 778, 17 Pac. 5; Judson v. Great Northern R. Co. 63 Minn. 248, 65 N. W. 447; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jones, 76 Ill. 311; Smith v. Wabash R. Co. 141 Ind. 92, 40 N. E. 270; Ward v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 43 Fed. 422; Horn v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 4 C. C. A. 346, 6 U. S. App. 381, 54 Fed. 301; Blount v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 9 C. C. A. 526, 22 U. S. App. 129, 61 Fed. 375; Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. 29 L.R.A. 695, 16 C. C. A. 435, 32 U. S. App. 577, 69 Fed. 810; Pyle v. Clark, 25 C. C. A. 190, 49 U. S. App. 260, 79 Fed. 744; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 90 Ala. 185, 11 L.R.A. 674, 8 So. 518; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Dinse-mann, 54 Ark. 431, 16 S. W. 169; Glascock v. Central P. R. Co. 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518; Mann v. Belt R. & Stock Yard Co. 128 Ind. 138, 26 N. E. 819; Oleson v. Lake Shore

& M. S. R. Co. 143 Ind. 405, 32 L.R.A. 146, 42 N. E. 736; Hunter v. Montana C. R. Co. 22 Mont. 525, 57 Pac. 140; Blackburn v. Southern P. Co. 34 Or. 215, 55 Pac. 225; Day v. Boston & M. R. Co. 97 Me. 522, 57 Atl. 420; Barnhill v. Texas & P. R. Co. 19 La. 43, 33 So. 63; Vincent v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 48 La. Ann. 933, 55 Am. St. Rep. 287, 20 So. 207; Brown v. Texas & P. R. Co. 42 La. Ann. 350, 21 Am. St. Rep. 374, 7 So. 682; Dascomb v. Buffalo & State Line R. Co. 27 Barb. 221; Salter v. Utica & B. River R. Co. 75 N. Y. 273; Brinker v. Michigan C. R. Co. 12 Mich. 283, 80 N. W. 28.

A person driving with another, in such a situation that his means of observation are equal to those of the driver, may not trust his safety absolutely, blindly, to the driver but must make use of his own faculties to preserve himself from danger, and he is required to look and listen, to warn, to protest, and if these be ineffectual, even to leave the vehicle.

Hoag v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 121 N. Y. 199, 18 N. E. 648; Brickell v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 290, 17 Am. St. Rep. 648, 24 N. E. 449; Aurelius v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 19 Ind. App. 584, 49 N. E. 857; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Boyts, 16 Ind. App. 640, 45 N. E. 81; Fechley v. Springfield Traction Co. 119 Mo. App. 358, 96 S. W. 421; Dean v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 129 Pa. 514, 6 L.R.A. 143, 5 Am. St. Rep. 733, 18 Atl. 718; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McLeod, 78 Miss. 334, 52 L.R.A. 954, 84 Am. St. Rep. 630, 29 So. 76; Crescent Twp. v. Anderson, 114 Pa. 643, 60 Am. Rep. 367, 8 Atl. 379; Bush v. Union P. R. Co. and Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas supra; Miller v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R.

opportunity to listen for a car which he knew might cross the road from behind an obstruction which prevented him from seeing its approach was held to be contributory negligence in Heitman v. Pacific Electric R. Co. (Cal. App.) 102 Pac. 15. The court applied the rule laid down in Herbert v. Southern P. Co. 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 951, but said that they did not assume to hold that in all cases, and under all conditions, the crossing of an interurban electric railway is to be governed by the same rules as those applied to steam railways.

And in McNab v. United R. & Electric Co. 94 Md. 719, 51 Atl. 421, where the negligence of the plaintiff consisted in driving upon the track after she saw the car approaching, rather than her failure to look or listen, the court held that while there was a clear distinction between the duty of a person crossing an electric road in city streets and crossing the tracks of a steam railroad in the country, that distinction lay not in the difference of motive power, but because of the different conditions surrounding ing the running of the cars in the different localities. After citing a number of cases which make this distinction the court said: "The cases cited above distinguish between a street railway in a city and a steam railway in the country; but they do not justify the pushing of that distinction to the extent of holding that there is such a difference between an electric railway in the country and a steam railway as to change what would be contributory negligence as respects the latter into noncontributory negligence or due care as respects the former."

As to duty to stop, look, and listen after entering on first track of railway, see case note to Cherry v. Louisiana & A. R. Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 505.

As to duty of traveler to stop, look, and listen upon approaching overhead or underground railway, see case note to Heinzel v. Winston, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 150.

As to failure to give customary signals as excusing nonperformance of duty to look and listen, see case note to Cooper v. North Carolina R. Co. 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 391.

Co. 128 Ind. 97, 25 Am. St. Rep. 416, 27 N. E. 339; Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Howard, supra; Smith v. Maine C. R. Co. 87 Me. 339, 32 Atl. 967; Meenagh v. Buckmaster, 26 App. Div. 451, 50 N. Y. Supp. 85; Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 115 Pa. 113, 64 Atl. 323, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 351; Holden v. Missouri R. Co. 177 Mo. 456, 76 S. W. 973; Brannen v. Kokomo, J. & J. Gravel Road Co. 115 Ind. 115, 7 Am. St. Rep. 411, 17 N. E. 202; Dryden v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 211 Pa. 620, 61 Atl. 249; Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. v. Bentz, 38 Ill. App. 485; Vincennes v. Thuis, 28 Ind. App. 523, 63 N. E. 315; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bussey, 66 Kan. 735, 71 Pac. 261; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Kutac, 72 Tex. 643, 11 S. W. 127; Hajsek v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 5 Neb. (Unof.) 67, 97 N. W. 327; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Molloy, 122 Ky. 219, 91 S. W. 685.

Root, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These two actions arose out of the same occurrence, and may be disposed of in one opinion. One was an action brought by Alma Cable, as administratrix of the estate of Rufus E. Cable, who was killed by a collision with the cars of the respondent at an interurban railway crossing, and the other was by Sadie Cable, a minor, brought by her guardian, for injuries sustained at the time of said accident. Each case was withdrawn from the jury, and judgment of dismissal entered by the court.

The facts were about these: Respondent operates an electric railway between Spokane, Washington, and Cœur d'Alene, Idaho. Upon its line is a station known as "Spokane Bridge," located 18 miles east of Spokane. Rufus Cable lived near this station. On the day of the accident he was to take his daughter, appellant Sadie Cable, aged seventeen years, to this station, where she was to board the train of respondent for Spokane. The train which caused the accident is known as the "Flyer," and does not make stops at this station. On the day in question it was late, and a special had gone by somewhere near the time that the Flyer usually passed Spokane Bridge. Prior to the coming of the train, Cable and two daughters and another person were driving about the neighborhood in an open buggy. When the train was about a half a mile from the station of Spokane Bridge, these people were in their buggy visiting with a neighbor, about $\frac{1}{6}$ of a mile from the crossing, which crossing is about 175 feet west of the station. The train was coming from the east. Decedent and his party supposed it was a local train which made stops at this station, and they immediately drove toward the station, in order that the young lady might board the train. They drove at a brisk trot until the horse was nearly to the track, when it slowed into a walk, and at this moment reared, and, as it came down, struck against the side of one of the three cars of the train, which at that moment dashed by. Rufus Cable received injuries from which he died the next day, and the appellant Sadie Cable was seriously injured. Appellants claim that the people in the buggy supposed the train to be the local, and that it would stop at the station. Sadie Cable testifies that she looked when they were some distance from the crossing, and did not see the train coming. There was evidence of the presence of certain freight cars upon the side track, and of certain buildings, cord wood, and small trees which, to a certain extent, obscured the view. The evidence showed, however, that all these parties knew that the train was coming, and that, if the horse had been stopped shortly before reaching the track, they could have both heard and seen the approaching train.

It is contended by appellants that respondent was negligent in running its train at too high a speed, and in not whistling or sounding bells, or otherwise giving suitable warning of its approach. There was considerable conflict in the evidence as to these matters; but, assuming that the railway company was negligent, we will take up the question of contributory negligence, which formed the basis of the trial court's action in dismissing the cases. From the evidence introduced by appellants we can see no escape from the conclusion that the decedent and his daughter, one of the appellants herein, were chargeable with contributory negligence. It is the rule in this as in most states that a person about to cross the track of a steam railway must stop, look, and listen, unless the conditions be such that to do so would avail nothing. The observations and experiences of mankind, with reference to this class of accidents, have led the courts to announce and observe this rule as an appropriate measure of the degree of care and prudence necessary to relieve a person from the charge of negligence when about to go upon so dangerous a place as the crossing of a railway. We think the same rule applies to an interurban electric railway upon which trains are customarily operated at a high speed. These people did not stop before crossing the railway track. Had they done so shortly before reaching the crossing, they could plainly have seen and heard the approaching train. If they looked or listened, it was not at a time or place where looking or listening revealed to them the true condition of affairs. If, as contended by appellants, there were box cars or other obstructions which obscured the view until decedent and companions were within a short distance of the track, it would seem that this fact should have impressed them with the greater necessity of stopping to look and listen before emerging from behind said obstructions and going upon the track, especially as they had already seen the train coming. It seems to us that this deplorable catastrophe was a result of the people in the buggy taking it for granted that the train was to stop at the station, when as a matter of fact it was a train that did not make stops at said station, and passed through on this occasion, as on all others, without stopping.

There is a suggestion that the appellant Sadie Cable is not chargeable with contributory negligence, even though her father may have been, inasmuch as she was not driving the horse, and had no control thereover. Ordinarily where one rides in a vehicle with the driver thereof, and is injured by the negligence of a third person, to which negligence that of the driver contributes, this contributory negligence is not imputable to the passenger, unless said passenger has, or is in a position to have and exercise, some control over the driver with reference to the matter wherein he was negligent. We are not disposed to impute to appellant Sadie Cable the contributory negligence of her father; but she, being of years of discretion, was subject to the general rule of "stop, look, and listen," heretofore announced; and, in the absence of a showing that she endeavored to stop the horse, or have her father do so, or to anything for her protection equivalent thereto, and in the absence of any evidence tending to show a purpose, intention, or attempt on her part to take any such precaution, or that she was prevented, or without fault on her part induced, from so doing, we see no way by which she may escape the operation of the rule.

The judgment of the Superior Court is affirmed.

Fullerton, Crow, Rudkin, and Dunbar, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

ALBERT D. BRADFIELD, Resp't.,

v.

JENNIE FARRER AVERY.

(— Idaho, —, 102 Pac. 687.)

Pleading — election contest — complaint — sufficiency.

1. A complaint to contest an election un-

Headnotes by STEWART, J.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

der subdivision 2, § 5026, Rev. Codes, must allege and show facts which disqualify the incumbent, or person declared elected, at the time of the election.

Officer — "eligibility."

2. Where the word "eligibility" is used in connection with an office, and there are no explanatory words indicating that such word is used with reference to the time of election, it has reference to the qualification to hold the office, rather than the qualification to be elected to the office.

School superintendent — eligibility — time of qualification.

3. The provision of § 585, Rev. Codes, "that no person shall be eligible to the office of county superintendent of public instruction except a first-grade practical teacher of not less than two years' experience in Idaho, one of which must have been while holding a valid first-grade certificate issued by a county superintendent," relates to the time the person so elected is inducted into office, and, although the person so elected does not possess such quali-

Case Note. — Officer: is eligibility to be determined as of time of election or appointment, or of induction into office.

The cases discussing this question are quite evenly divided, and, while perhaps the majority are in accord with BRADFIELD v. AVERY, there is considerable authority to the contrary. The question has arisen most frequently under statutory or constitutional provisions using the word "eligible" in connection with certain qualifications or disqualifications for public office. That such a provision relates to the time of taking office, instead of the election or appointment, was held in the following cases: State ex rel. Thornburg v. Huegle, 135 Iowa, 100, 112 N. W. 234; People v. Hamilton, 24 Ill. App. 609; Hoy v. State, 168 Ind. 506, 81 N. E. 509, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 944; Brown v. Goben, 122 Ind. 113, 23 N. E. 519; Shuck v. State, 136 Ind. 63, 35 N. E. 993; Demaree v. Scates, 50 Kan. 275, 20 L.R.A. 97, 34 Am. St. Rep. 113, 32 Pac. 1123; Kirkpatrick v. Brownfield, 97 Ky. 558, 29 L.R.A. 703, 53 Am. St. Rep. 422, 31 S. W. 137; State ex rel. Broatch v. Moores, 52 Neb. 770, 73 N. W. 299.

In Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294, under a constitutional provision that "no person elected to any judicial office shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, be eligible to any office of trust or profit under the state other than a judicial office," it was held that the word "eligible" means legally qualified, and one who is elected to a judicial office which he refuses to accept may subsequently be elected to a nonjudicial office.

And in Vogel v. State, 107 Ind. 374, 8 N. E. 164, under the same constitutional provision, it was held that, where the term of the nonjudicial office began the same day that the judicial office terminated, the party elected would not be eligible.

fication at the time of election, still, if the disqualification is removed and the person elected becomes qualified at the time he is inducted into office, such person is eligible to the office of county superintendent of public instruction.

Same — disqualification when elected.

4. A person who will become qualified to hold the office of county superintendent of schools under the laws of this state may be elected to such office while under disqualification, provided such disqualification is removed before the term of office to which such person is elected begins.

Same — statutory qualifications.

5. Section 593, Rev. Codes, empowers the state board of education "to authorize the county superintendents to issue teachers' certificates to graduates of state normal schools and to graduates of any chartered college or university having the right to grant degrees: Provided, that applicants for certificates under the provisions of this section shall have been successfully engaged in teaching not less than twenty-seven months, and shall present to the state board of education a certificate of graduation from a state normal school, or a literary degree from a chartered college or university."

School — teachers' certificate — date.

6. When application is made to the state board under said § 593, Rev. Stat., and the necessary credentials and proof are furnished the board, and the board admits that such proof is sufficient, and subsequently issues a certificate thereon and by reason thereof, then the applicant is entitled to have such certificate issue as of the date such application and proof are made, and a certificate issued upon such proof will relate back to the date such applicant showed she was entitled to such certificate.

(June 26, 1909.)

A PPEAL by the contestee from a judgment of the District Court for Ada County in contestant's favor in a proceeding to contest an election. Reversed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Other provisions for qualification for office which have been held to relate to the time of induction, rather than that of election or appointment, are "shall be qualified to hold office" (Privett v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 301); and "the surveyor must be a licensed land surveyor of the state" (Ward v. Crowell, 142 Cal. 587, 76 Pac. 491).

In State ex rel. Perine v. Van Beek, 87 Iowa, 569, 19 L.R.A. 622, 43 Am. St. Rep. 397, 54 N. W. 525, while there was no statutory or constitutional provision involved, the court held that an alien cannot hold office until naturalized, but that naturalization after election and before induction into office is sufficient.

In State ex rel. Schuet v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 489, under a former decision holding that one not a citizen was ineligible to hold office, it was held to be sufficient if this ineligibility was removed before taking office.

And this decision was followed in State v. Trumpf, 50 Wis. 103, 5 N. W. 876, 6 N. W. 512, holding that, under a provision vacating the office if the person elected fails to qualify and enter upon its duties within ten days after notice of election or appointment, the removal of a disability before the expiration of the ten days is sufficient, though it is after the date named for taking office.

But a number of cases construing provisions using the word "eligible" have held that the qualifications or disqualifications mentioned in connection therewith relate to the time of election, and that compliance with the provision between election and induction into office is not sufficient. It was so held in the following cases: Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 117; State v. Lake, 16 R. I. 511, 17 Atl. 552; Territory ex rel. Parker v. Smith, 3 Minn. 240, Gil. 164, 74 Am. Dec. 749; Taylor v. Sullivan, 45 Minn. 309, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

11 L.R.A. 272, 22 Am. St. Rep. 729, 47 N. W. 802; Roane ex rel. Tunstall v. Matthews, 75 Miss. 94, 21 So. 665.

And these cases are supported by dicta in State ex rel. Elliott v. Bemenderfer, 96 Ind. 374; Finklea v. Farish (Ala.) 49 So. 366; Com. v. Pyle, 18 Pa. 519.

In State ex rel. Nourse v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 560, it was held that a constitutional provision that no person holding a lucrative Federal office "shall be eligible to any civil office of profit under this state," relates to the time of election as well as induction into office, but that the resignation of a United States district attorney is effective when mailed on the day preceding the election.

In State ex rel. Childs v. Holman, 58 Minn. 219, 59 N. W. 1006, under a statutory provision for residence of members of the assembly of a city that they "shall be elected at large, and four of same shall reside, etc.," it was held that they must reside in the districts specified at the time of election.

In Re Corliss, 11 R. I. 638, 23 Am. Rep. 538, under a provision that no person "holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector," it was held that the qualification must be removed before election by the people.

In R. ex rel. O'Donnell v. Broomfield, 5 Ont. L. Rep. 596, 2 Ont. Week. Rep. 295, under an act providing that no one holding a certain office shall be qualified to be a member of the council, it was held that the disqualification relates to the time of election, instead of the time of taking office.

And in R. ex rel. Zimmerman v. Steele, 5 Ont. L. Rep. 565, 2 Ont. Week. Rep. 242, the same provision was held to disqualify a person holding an incompatible office at the time of his nomination; but this decision seems to be based on other decisions holding that the nomination is the beginning of the election.

been clear that the qualification had reference to the capability of the person to be elected, but where the language is "shall be eligible to the office," and then follow attainments,—the result of experience and education,—it seems to us the legislature was intending to deal with the fitness of a person to hold the office, rather than the capability of one to be elected to such office.

We think this position is also strengthened when we take into consideration the opening statement of § 585, wherein it is provided: "Before entering upon the duties of his office, the county superintendent of public instruction shall take and subscribe the oath prescribed by law [etc.]: . . . Provided, that no person shall be eligible to the office," indicates that the proviso has reference to qualifications required at the time the person is inducted into office. This position is also strengthened by the provision found in said section, "and the holder of a first-grade certificate at the time of his election or appointment." If it was intended that the qualification, "a practical teacher of not less than two years' experience," had reference to the time of election, rather than the time of induction into office, it would not have been necessary to also provide that such person should be the holder of a first-grade certificate at the time of election, for, if all such qualifications related to the time of election, it would not have been necessary to specifically state that such person must hold a first-grade certificate at the time of election or appointment. The fact that this particular qualification is made to apply to the time of election would indicate that the other qualifications prescribed were not intended to apply to the time of election. We are therefore forced to the conclusion that, in enacting this statute, the legislature were attempting to carry out the power given them by the Constitution, and prescribe qualifications required of a person to hold the office of county superintendent, rather than qualifications rendering such person capable of being elected to such office.

The contest provided for by § 5026, Rev. Codes, is directed toward facts and conditions that existed at the time of the election of the incumbent or that transpired at the election itself. Toncray v. Budge, 14 Idaho, 621, 95 Pac. 26. If, then, the contest is directed toward facts and conditions that existed at the time of the election, then, in order to state a cause of action, the complaint should allege such facts as would show the disqualification of the contestee at the time of the election. The facts alleged in the complaint in this case are not matters which would render the contestee disqualified from being elected to such office, as a person is not required to possess such qualifications at the time of the election. From what has been said it follows that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer to the complaint.

Counsel for the respective parties have argued the merits of this case, and, as the facts are agreed to by both parties, upon a reversal of this case the question necessarily will arise whether the contestant can amend the complaint so as to state a cause of contest. Inasmuch as this question naturally arises upon the facts, and the facts are agreed to and have been fully discussed by respective counsel, we deem it proper to dispose of the entire case upon its merits. It is conceded that the contestee was elected to the office of county superintendent at the November election in 1908; that she received a certificate certifying to her election. It appears from the facts, and the court finds, that on September 27, 1907, the appellant presented to the state board of public instruction of the state of Idaho a certificate of graduation from the Mansfield State Normal School of Mansfield, Pennsylvania, and also presented proof to said board that she had taught twenty-seven months since said certificate was issued to her, together with proof of her good moral character, and in every way complied with the statute, and requested said board to authorize the county superintendent of public instruction of said Owyhee county to issue a certificate to her; that the board refused, but afterwards, and on April 2, 1908, did issue said certificate upon the application made by appellant on September 27, 1907, and without any additional proof having been presented to said state board. If the state board had directed that a certificate issue to appellant upon September 27, 1907, after she had presented her application and proof or within a reasonable time thereafter, then the appellant would have been the holder of a first-grade certificate for more than one year of the two years she was engaged in teaching, and the holder of a first-grade certificate at the time of her election. The certificate, however, was not issued until April 2, 1908, which would not make her the holder of a first-grade certificate during one of the two years she was engaged in teaching.

The question then arises: Was the appellant entitled to have her certificate dated as of the date of her application and completion of proof, or, if not then dated, does it relate back to such date as effecting her qualification to hold the office of county superintendent? As stated above, the certificate directed to be issued to the appellant was upon the application made by her on September 27, 1907, and the proof furnished on that date. No additional proof or evidence was furnished by the appellant to the state board. By causing the certificate to be thereafter issued on such application and proof, the board conceded and admitted that the appellant was entitled to have such certificate issued to her on the date she made her application and furnished her proof. Under the provisions of § 593, Rev. Codes, the state board of education has power "to authorize the county superintendents to issue teachers' certificates to graduates of state normal schools and to graduates of any chartered college or university having the right to grant degrees: Provided, that applicants for certificates under the provisions of this section shall have been successfully engaged in teaching not less than twenty-seven months, and shall present to the state board of education a certificate of graduation from a state normal school, or a literary degree from a chartered college or university." The only reason assigned why the state board did not authorize the county superintendent to issue a certificate in accordance with the provisions of this statute is that, at the time the application was made, the board had not made up an accredited list of state normal schools which it would recognize. Whether an applicant can compel the state board to direct that a certificate issue upon presenting proof that the applicant is a graduate of a state normal school or a chartered college or university having the right to grant degrees, and has been successfully engaged in teaching for not less than twenty-seven months, may be questioned, especially until the board have determined that one so qualified is entitled to a certificate. But, when the board recognizes that the applicant is fully qualified under the provisions of this statute and has furnished the board with the necessary credentials and proof to entitle the applicant to a certificate, and admits such fact, and concedes that the applicant is entitled to a certificate under the showing made, then there can be no question but what it is the duty of the board to authorize the certificate to issue to such applicant as of the date when the showing is made, required by the statute. If the proof of the applicant was incomplete at the time presented, and additional proof was required by the board, then the date the certificate should issue is to be determined by the time the board determines that the proof presented is sufficient to entitle the applicant to a certificate. If the proof is wholly insufficient and unsatisfactory to the board, then a doubt might arise whether the board could be compelled to issue the certificate; but the duty of the board under such circumstances does not arise in this case, for it is conceded that the applicant was fully qualified; that her proof was sufficient; that she fully complied with the statute, and did every act and furnished proof of every qualification to entitle her to a certificate on September 27, 1907. This being true, it was the duty of the board to cause such certificate to be issued as of that date.

Counsel for respondent, however, argues that, it being entirely discretionary with the board as to whether a certificate should issue, the board in this instance had the right and power to postpone causing such certificate to issue, until the applicant had demonstrated her fitness and qualification to receive such certificate by teaching a sufficient length of time to satisfy the board. The court, however, finds that the certificate was issued, not by reason of the fact that the applicant demonstrated her qualification to receive the same by teaching after she made application for such certificate, but that the certificate was issued by reason of the application and proof made on September 27, 1907. There is nothing in the record in this case which indicates that the state board were in any way influenced or controlled by reason of the fact that the applicant proved her qualification by her work as a teacher after the application was made. The facts and the findings of the trial court clearly show that the state board acted wholly upon the proof submitted on September 27th, and decided and determined that such proof was sufficient to entitle the applicant to a certificate, and ordered such certificate to issue by reason of such application and proof. This being true, the appellant was entitled to have such certificate relate back as of the date she furnished such proof to the state board, and it was the duty of the state board to have caused such certificate to issue as of that date. Under the facts and the findings of the trial court, it was of that date that she was entitled to such certificate. Under the facts of this case, the appellant was clearly qualified to hold the office of county superintendent of schools, and, being qualified to hold the office, she was capable of being elected to such office while under disqualification, provided such disqualification was removed before the term of office to which she was elected began. Hoy v. State, 168 Ind. 506, 81 N. E. 509, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 944; Privett v. Bickford, 26 Kan. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 301; State ex rel. Off v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497; State ex rel. Schuet v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 489.

From what has been said, it follows that the appellant was qualified to hold the office of county superintendent, to which the people of Owyhee county elected her, at the time her term began, under the statute of this state. The judgment in this case is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to proceed in accordance with this opinion. Costs awarded to the appellant.

Allshie, J., concurs. Sullivan, Ch. J., did not sit at the hearing.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

FIRST STATE BANK OF CORWITH

v.

ED. WILLIAMS, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 121 N. W. 702.)

Note — renewal — forgery — estoppel.

1. One who gives a new note in renewal of old ones, one of which he claims to be a forgery, will, after he has retained possession of the old note and received the benefit of the renewal for several months, until the bank has become insolvent, be estopped from setting up the forgery in partial defense of a suit on the renewal note.

Same — consideration.

2. Sufficient consideration for a promise to pay a note given in renewal of several, one of which was claimed to have been forged, exists in the surrender by the payee of the old note and the extension of the time for payment.

(Weaver, J., dissents.)

(June 5, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Hancock county entered upon a directed verdict in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John Hamill and Senef & Bliss for appellant.

Messrs. C. R. Wood and J. E. Wichman, for appellee: *

The extension of time of the two notes renewed was a sufficient consideration for the new note.

German Sav. Bank v. Geneser, 116 Iowa, 119, 89 N. W. 201; Keys v. Mann, 63 Iowa, 560, 19 N. W. 666.

The question of whether the $1,000 note was a valid obligation, or not, could not be investigated or tried in the suit on the new note.

French v. French, 84 Iowa, 655, 15 L.R.A. 300, 51 N. W. 145; Greenlee v. Mosnat, 116

Case Note. — Liability upon paper given in renewal of forged paper.

The cases presenting this question are not sufficiently numerous to formulate any general rule governing it, but the few reported cases, for the most part, hold that a maker or indorser of commercial paper which is given in renewal of forged or altered paper will be liable on the renewal paper, especially where it was given with full knowledge of the defects in the original paper.

A note given as a compromise in a suit upon a note for a larger amount, claimed by the maker to be a forgery, was held valid and enforceable in Grant v. Chambers, 30 N. J. L. 323. This decision is referred to the general doctrine of compromise, and it was held that the settlement of the dispute, and not the alleged forged paper, was the consideration of the renewal note.

An acceptor who renewed a bill that was forged as to his acceptance could not, after the lapse of a month, plead the forgery in bar to an action on the second bill, as the law would infer a loss to the holder by the delay. Mather v. Maidstone, 18 C. B. 273.

In Bradford Nat. Bank v. Taylor, 75 Hun, 297, 27 N. Y. Supp. 96, the defendant indorsed certain notes in blank and delivered them to a third person; the year was filled out, but the month and day were left blank; a third person, two years later, changed the figures of the year, filled out the blanks, and had the notes discounted at the plaintiff's bank; with full knowledge of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

all these facts the defendant indorsed other notes in renewal of the notes so altered. The court held that the defendant was liable on the renewal note, apparently upon the ground that there was no such alteration of the notes as to vitiate them. The question presented in FIRST STATE BANK v. WILLIAMS was therefore not necessarily decided, but the argument is clearly to the effect that even if the defendant would not have been liable upon the altered notes, he would have been liable upon the renewal notes. The court said: "After being informed of every material circumstance relating to the alteration of the notes, the defendant consented to indorse the note in suit, delivered it to the plaintiff, required the return of the two notes canceled, and retained them for three months, and all this after he was informed of the use of the notes by Smith two years and more after the time he made the indorsements."

But a person making or indorsing a bill in renewal of another bill which has been so altered as to release him from liability is not liable upon the renewal bill, where it was given in ignorance of the alteration. Bell v. Gardiner, 4 Mann. & G. 11.

The mere offer to renew an altered note, which offer is not accepted, is not a waiver of the alteration. McDaniel v. Whitsett, 96 Tenn. 10, 33 S. W. 567.

Upon the general question of liability of person whose signature is forged on commercial paper, see note to Traders' Nat. Bank v. Rogers, 36 L.R.A. 539.

Iowa, 535, 90 N. W. 338; Keefe v. Vogle, 36 Iowa, 87.

As against the receiver the defendant was estopped from claiming "failure of consideration," having permitted the note to remain in the bank as part of its assets, without dispute, until after it was due and after the bank failed; and by permitting the bank to hold it and report it as part of its assets, he was estopped as against the receiver and the bank's creditors from saying that it was not valid.

First Nat. Bank v. Felt, 100 Iowa, 680, 69 N. W. 1057; Pauly v. O'Brien, 69 Fed. 460; German Sav. Bank v. Des Moines Nat. Bank, 122 Iowa, 737, 98 N. W. 606.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The receiver appointed November 27, 1907, to settle the affairs of the First State Bank of Corwith found among its assets a promissory note of $1,372, executed to the bank by the defendant and his wife, dated March 23, 1907, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum and payable November 1st of that year. This action is based thereon. The defendant admitted the execution of the note, but averred that there was a partial failure of consideration, in that it was given in renewal of the note of $271.22, conceded to be valid, and another note of $1,000 dated March 21, 1906, and payable to the bank March 1, 1907, purporting to be signed by the defendant and his wife. It is said in the answer that the last note was forged, and that, by falsely representing that it was genuine, the cashier of the bank induced the defendant to execute the note sued on. The receiver pleaded in reply a general denial, and that defendant was estopped from interposing the defense. The defendant testified that at the time he signed the note, the cashier exhibited to him the $1,000 note; that upon examining it he stated that he did not recollect about it; that the cashier replied that he certainly gave it, or it could not have been in the bank, and that the signatures were genuine, and the books of the bank so showed; that defendant studied a little bit over it, and not being certain, and relying upon the cashier's integrity and statements, executed the note sued on. Both notes were handed to him. He carried them home, and made no further objection to the note alleged to have been forged until after the bank had been closed by the appointment of the receiver over eight months afterwards. He denied having signed the note, as did his wife, but admitted that he knew as much about the transaction when the note sued on was executed as he did at the trial.

Any rulings excluding evidence which 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

may have been erroneous were cured by its subsequent admission, and the only inquiry for us to determine is whether the court erred in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. It is to be noted that the cashier made no claim to personal knowledge, nor does it appear that he was aware of the facts being otherwise than represented. This being so, the allegations of fraud were not supported by the evidence. The evidence did not raise an issue of whether the $1,000 note was genuine, but, as we think, this was foreclosed by the execution of the new note. This was necessarily on the ground of ratification, as to which the authorities seem to be in sharp conflict. An "act done for another by a person not assuming to act for himself, but for such other person, though without any precedent authority whatever, becomes the act of the principal if subsequently ratified by him." Wilson v. Tuman, 6 Mann. & G. 236. But may an act of one not assuming to be for, but personating, another, as in forging a signature, be ratified? Answering in the affirmative, see: Howard v. Duncan, 3 Lans. 175; Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 4 Allen, 447; Hefner v. Vandolah, 62 Ill. 483, 14 Am. Rep. 106. See 3 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1775. Contra, and holding that silence, when confronted with the forged instrument or even a promise to pay it or to be bound thereby, unless this be for a consideration or has misled the holder to his prejudice, will not preclude the defense of forgery, see: McKenzie v. British Linen Co. 34 Moak, Eng. Rep. 301; Brook v. Hook, L. R. 6 Exch. 89; Wilson v. Hayes, 40 Minn. 531, 4 L.R.A. 196, 12 Am. St. Rep. 754, 42 N. W. 467; Workman v. Wright, 33 Ohio St. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 546; Warren v. Fant, 79 Ky. 1; Woodruff v. Munroe, 33 Md. 148. See Smith v. Tramel, 68 Iowa, 488, 27 N. W. 471. The decisions seem to be agreed, however, that if the holder had been misled to his prejudice by the conduct or promises of the person whose name has been forged, the latter will be estopped from pleading that the instrument is not genuine. Buck v. Wood, 85 Me. 204, 27 Atl. 103; Kuriger v. Joest, 22 Ind. App. 633, 52 N. E. 764, 54 N. E. 414. See Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. § 1352b. See Bell v. Mahin, 69 Iowa, 408, 29 N. W. 331; § 3060a (23), Code Supp. 1907.

The circumstances were such as to estop defendant from interposing the defense. Both the notes for which that sued on was executed were past due. One of them is conceded to have been valid, and the extension of time for payment involved in the giving of the last note was a valuable consideration. So, too, in connection therewith was the surrender to the defendant of the note alleged to have been forged and the extension of time for paying the sum named therein. But for this the bank might have proceeded against the person who forged it. It was prevented from so doing for more than seven months following, during which defendant retained the discredited paper, without objection. Having accepted the benefits of the adjustment to the manifest disadvantage of the bank, the defendant is estopped from again inquiring into the genuineness of the note. Moreover, the controversy has been settled. In so far as appears, the dispute was bona fide on either side and a proper subject of adjustment. See Greenlee v. Mosnat, 116 Iowa, 535, 90 N. W. 338. Nothing is known now of which defendant was not aware then, so that he was in no way deceived. The bank granted further time and surrendered the old notes. The defendant executed the note in suit. The consideration on either side was ample. To constitute a consideration, it is enough that something is promised, done, forbore, or suffered by the party to whom the promise is made, as consideration for the promise made to him. Harlan v. Harlan, 102 Iowa, 701, 72 N. W. 286; Fishbaugh v. Spunaugle, 118 Iowa, 337, 92 N. W. 58; McKee v. Needles, 123 Iowa, 195, 98 N. W. 618; Daily v. Minnick, 117 Iowa, 563, 60 L.R.A. 840, 91 N. W. 913.

Yielding to the inducement offered by the making of the new note, and by reason thereof doing that but for which the bank would not have done, i. e., surrendering the note alleged to have been forged, as well as the other, and extending the time of payment of both,—constituted a valuable consideration. Smith v. Smith, 4 Idaho, 1, 35 Pac. 697; Grant v. Chambers, 30 N. J. L. 323. See Mather v. Maidstone, 18 C. B. 273. "The compromise itself was the consideration as agreed to by both parties to the new note, and it is a matter of entire indifference whether the old note was genuine or a forgery." Grant v. Chambers, supra.

The ruling was correct, and the judgment is affirmed.

Weaver, J., dissenting:

In my judgment the case was clearly one for a jury. There is no showing or claim that the alleged forged note had been purchased or received by the bank from a third person in ignorance of its true character. On the contrary, the circumstances are such as indicate that, if forged, the note was fabricated in the bank by its cashier. So far as appears, the bank never parted with any money or thing of value in consideration for the paper. There is therefore no room for an estoppel against defendant to plead want of consideration for the note in suit, or to claim the benefit of an alleged ratification. It is true that the defendant's statement of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the matters of his defense is not such as appeals very strongly to one's confidence. It seems unnatural, though not necessarily incredible, and as jurors we might well refuse to give it credit; and I fear that this feature of the case is now leading the court to announce propositions of law which we shall hesitate to affirm when confronted with them in the future. In all ordinary cases at law the credibility of witnesses and the weight of their testimony is for the jury alone.

I think the district court erred in directing a verdict.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

L. D. WILLCUTT & SONS COMPANY

v.

JEREMIAH J. DRISCOLL et al., Members of Bricklayers' Benevolent & Protective Union No. 3 et al.

(200 Mass. 110, 85 N. E. 897.)

Master and servant — strike — property.

1. Demands of laborers for increased wages and that wages shall be paid during working hours are properly enforced by a strike.

Labor union — fine — validity.

2. A labor union cannot impose fines upon its members to coerce them to join a strike to the injury of one seeking their services.

(Knowlton, Ch. J., and Sheldon, J., dissent.)

(October 24, 1908.)

Case Note.—Right of labor union to impose fine on members as a means of inducing them to join in strike.

The question under consideration necessarily assumes that a labor or trade union is lawful. If it were an illegal or unlawful combination any action by it would necessarily be likewise unlawful.

Cases so holding would not be in point on the question under consideration, and hence are excluded. To fairly raise this question it should not only be assumed that the labor union is legal, but also that the fine was levied, or a threat made to levy it, in an attempt to bring to a successful issue a lawfully inaugurated strike or boycott, since, if either were unlawful per se, that fact would likewise render any means resorted to in aid thereof unlawful. Assuming, then, what was found to be the fact in the case under annotation, that the union and the strike were per se lawful, the question is presented whether, as a means to bring the strike to a successful end, the in-

REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court after entering a decree in favor of defendants of a bill to enjoin interference by defendants with plaintiff's business. Decree reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Elder & Whitman, for complainant:

The defendants should be enjoined from the imposition of fines and penalties, or threatening the same, upon the plaintiff's employees in order to induce them to quit their jobs.

Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085; Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L.R.A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 42 Atl. 607; Alfred

W. Booth & Bro. v. Burgess, 72 N. J. Eq. 181, 65 Atl. 226; Ertz v. Produce Exch. Co. 82 Minn. 173, 51 L.R.A. 825, 83 Am. St. Rep. 419, 84 N. W. 743; Purvis v. Local No. 500, U. B. C. & J. 214 Pa. 348, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 63 Atl. 585, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 275; Temperton v. Russell [1893] 1 Q. B. 726.

No one can unjustifiably and intentionally interfere with a man's right to dispose of his capital as labor in any manner he pleases, or in any way whatsoever, whether by force or fraud, or by peaceable persuasion or other noncoercive inducements.

Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L.R.A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125; May v. Wood, 172 Mass. 11, 51 N. E. 191; Vegelah v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, fiction of a fine by a labor union on its members in accordance with its by-laws is such coercion as will entitle the employer whose employees are on strike to relief therefrom.

A labor union being a voluntary association, it would seem, on principle, that the concession that it is a lawful organization, that the strike inaugurated is a lawful one, and the end sought to be gained thereby lawful, must necessarily and logically lead to the conclusion that the enforcement of a lawful by-law by levying a fine on any member violating it by working for the employer against whom the strike is aimed, is also lawful, and not such unlawful coercion of its own members as to entitle such employer to relief therefrom. The opposite conclusion was, however, reached by a divided court in L. D. WILLCUTT & SONS CO. v. DRISCOLL, based on reasons very fully and ably presented in a majority opinion therein, while an equally able minority opinion denied that an employer of labor is entitled to relief under such circumstances.

The majority opinion, while recognizing the validity of the association, the lawfulness of the strike and the by-law in question, denies the right to enforce it, when such enforcement coerces the members to the extent to interfere with what is termed the employer's right to an unrestricted labor market. This doctrine receives little, if any, support from the cases wherein the question has been considered, and the cases cited and apparently relied upon give very doubtful support to the proposition.

One of these cases, Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L.R.A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 42 Atl. 607, presented a very different state of facts. In that case a dealer was held entitled to damages for injury to his business by an unlawful combination of dealers conspiring to ruin his business, the means used being a fine upon any member of the combination that dealt with him.

Another case cited and relied upon was Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085. This was also an action for damages caused plaintiff by a combination of competitors conspiring together to ruin his business. The case might well have been disposed of on the ground that the combination was an unlawful conspiracy, on the theory that the purpose and the object, as well as the means used, were unlawful. The court, however, based its conclusion that the combination was an unlawful conspiracy, on the ground that the means used were unlawful. The means thus stamped as unlawful was a boycott of plaintiff, enforced by coercing the members of the combination from trading with him, by levying heavy fines upon any members having business dealings with him. In reaching its conclusion the court said that from the very nature of the case it was manifest that the right of competition furnished no justification for an act done by the use of means which in their nature were in violation of the principle upon which it rested, and added: "The weapons used by the trader who relies upon this right for justification must be those furnished by the laws of trade, or at least must not be inconsistent with their free operation. No man can justify an interference with another man's business, through fraud or misrepresentation, nor by intimidation, obstruction, or molestation. In the case before us the members of the association were to be held to the policy of refusing to trade with the plaintiff by the imposition of heavy fines, or, in other words, they were coerced by actual or threatened injury to their property. It is true that one may leave the association if he desires, but if he stays in it, he is subjected to the coercive effect of a fine, to be determined and enforced by the majority. This method of procedure is arbitrary and artificial, and is based in no respect upon the grounds upon which competition in business is permitted, but, on the contrary, it creates a motive for business action inconsistent with that freedom of choice out of which springs the benefit of competition to the public, and has no natural or logical relation to the grounds upon which the right to compete is based. Such a method of influencing a person may be coercive and illegal." Although this case was apparently regarded by the entire court 35 L.R.A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077; Tasker v. Stanley, 153 Mass. 148, 10 L.R.A. 468, 26 N. E. 417; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Employing Printers' Club v. Dr. Blosser Co. 122 Ga. 509, 69 L.R.A. 90, 106 Am. St. Rep. 137, 50 S. E. 353, 2 A. & E. Am. Cas. 694; Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. 128, 54 L.R.A. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 779, 48 Atl. 894; Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L.R.A. 747, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524; Noice v. Brown, 39 N. J. L. 569; Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 133; Alfred W. Booth & Bro. v. Burgess, supra.

Mr. Frederick W. Mansfield for respondents.

Hammond, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This bill, although originally brought against two unincorporated associations, or labor unions by name, has now been amended, so that it runs only against certain individuals as officers and members of these associations and against the other members of those associations as represented by these individuals. No question is made that the defendants do not sufficiently represent all the members of both unions; and the bill is not open to objection upon this ground. Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 589, 590, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 638, and cases there cited.

as supporting the majority opinion in L. D. WILLCUTT & SONS CO. v. DRISCOLL, it is, however, not entirely clear that it was intended to enunciate the broad doctrine as it was applied in the WILLCUTT CASE. At least the language used is susceptible to a contrary construction. Thus the court expressly pointed out that the conspirators failed to show that the coercion or intimidation of its members, who were plaintiff's customers, by levying a heavy fine upon them, was justified by the law of competition, and said that the ground of justification was not broad enough to cover the acts of interference in their entirety, and the interference, being injurious and unjustifiable, was unlawful. The court also apparently attempted to limit the doctrine that even under such circumstances the imposition of a fine upon members of a combination would generally be coercion. Upon this point the court said: "We do not mean to be understood as saying that a fine is of itself necessarily, or even generally, an illegal instrument. In many cases it is so slight as not to be coercive in its nature; in many it serves a useful purpose to call the attention of a member of an organization to the fact of the infraction of some innocent regulation, and in many it serves as an extra incentive to the performance of some absolute duty or the assertion of some absolute right. But where, as in the case before us, the fine is so large as to amount to moral intimidation or coercion, and is used as a means to enforce a right not absolute in its nature, but conditional, and is inconsistent with the conditions upon which the right rests, then the coercion becomes unjustifiable and taints with illegality the act."

The dissenting opinion in the WILLCUTT CASE is based, in part at least, upon the theory that the labor organization being legal, and the strike in question lawful, the enforcement of a lawful by-law inflicting a fine upon the members of the union not obeying strike orders would likewise be lawful, both as to the members and their employer or employers. This conclusion receives support in Jetton-Dekle Lumber Co. v. Mather, 53 Fla. 969, 43 So. 590, which holds that an employer of labor is not entitled to an injunction restraining a labor union from peaceably enforcing its rules against its members to the extent of expulsion of such as work for those who employ nonunion labor. The employer in this case contended that the unions exercised unlawful coercion upon their members by fines and threats of expulsion to cause them to refrain from working for him, thereby interfering with his right to a free labor market. In denying the contention that this was unlawful coercion the court said:

"The questions before us are raised upon a report of the facts found by the justice of the superior court who heard the case. They grew out of a trade dispute between the plaintiff and the members of the unions who were in its employ. In April, 1906, these unions adopted a code of working rules, in which, beside some minor demands not now material, they demanded that wages be increased 5 cents an hour, that all foremen should be members of the unions, that the

"This was a risk voluntarily assumed by the members entering the unions, and if no longer willing to pay the price, if the advantages derived are not equal to the burdens assumed, each member has a perfect right to withdraw from the union; to seek to get back his former employment, and to be protected therein."

The right of an employer of labor to complain of the enforcement of such by-laws was also presented to the court in Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 527, 28 L.R.A. 464, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 38 Pac. 547. The court, however, did not pass upon it, and it was said that the charge of intimidation through the enforcement of such by-laws was not sufficient on demurrer, because it did not appear that there was sufficient odium attached to the enforcement thereof to put the members in fear, or that compliance with the orders and resolutions of the union were induced thereby.

In Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, 121 Fed. 503, in answering the contention of an employer of labor that the necessary operative business agent of the unions should be allowed to visit any building under construction to attend to his official duties, and that wages should be paid during working hours. The plaintiff declined to accept these rules, and a strike followed.

By the constitution and rules of the unions it appeared that a code of fines and penalties was established by the International Union, an association composed of these and other similar unions throughout the country, and that this code was being actively enforced by the local unions. One rule provided that any member violating any section of the working code should be fined upon conviction not less than $5 nor more than $25, one of these sections being that "no member of the union shall work with a nonunion man who refuses to join the union." Various other penalties were provided, varying from $5 to $500 for each offense, to be imposed upon persons designated as "common scabs," "inveterate or notorious scabs," and "union wreckers;" these terms being applied to those who in different ways persist in working after a strike has been called. These fines in their operation are likely to be coercive in their nature.

This code was actively enforced by the unions, and most of the members of the unions who left their work did so through fear of the fines that would be imposed upon them if they continued to work. The defendants Driscoll and Reagan on one occasion found two men at work for the plaintiff, one a journeyman who had been, and the other a foreman who then was, a member of the union. Reagan threatened the journeyman with a fine of $100 if he continued to work, and Driscoll notified the foreman that he was called out. Both refused to leave. Driscoll reported the fact at a meeting of the union, and a vote was passed that charges be preferred against the men for working contrary to the rules. A preliminary injunction result of the system and methods of the labor union in requiring its members to strike when so ordered, under pain of incurring a fine, expulsion, or other punishment, was subversive alike of the fundamental rights of the employer to manage his own business and of the employees to bestow their labor as they might elect, the court said: "This kind of argument enters deeply into the domain of political science, and might well be addressed to a body of constructive statesmen, or men originally contemplating a labor organization; it is an argument that would be pertinent against the organization of society into government. The will of the individual must consent to yield to the will of the majority, or no organization, either of society into government, capital into combination, or labor into coalition, can ever be effected. The individual must yield in order that the many may receive a greater benefit. The right of labor to organize for lawful purposes and by organic agreement to subject individual members to rules, regulations, and conduct prescribed by the majority is no longer an open question in the jurisprudence of this country."

And see Re Charge to Grand Jury, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 781, 62 Fed. 828, wherein it is said that no man in his individual right can lawfully demand and insist upon conduct by others which will lead to an injury of a third person's lawful rights; that an employer of labor has a right to the service of each of his employees until each lawfully chooses to quit; and any concerted action on the part of others to demand or insist, under any effective penalty or threat, upon their quitting, to the injury of the employer, is conspiracy, unless such demand or insistence is in pursuance of a lawful authority conferred upon them by the employees themselves, and made in good faith in the execution of such authority.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Considering the same subject in Purvis v. Local No. 500, U. B. C. & J. 214 Pa. 348, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 63 Atl. 585, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 275, Brown, J., remarked that it was undoubtedly true that when the injury resulting from a disregard of such by-laws as are under consideration is confined to the members of the union, they alone can complain; and added: "Even if injury incidentally results to outsiders through compliance, by the members of the union, with its rules and orders, there may be no remedy for it. An agreement by those to be benefited by it that they will themselves observe its terms in accepting employment, even if employers be incidentally embarrassed thereby, can occasion no injury to employers which the law will recognize, for workmen, whether bound by a compact among themselves or not, have the absolute right to give their services to whom they please, or to withhold them from whom they please, without responsibility for consequences to employers or to anyone else."

Although not in point as to the facts, this doctrine also finds support in Badger Brass Mfg. Co. v. Daly, 137 Wis. 601, 119 N. W. 328, wherein, after pointing out that the relation between the coerced employees and the plaintiff in the action was merely that of employer and employee, the court said that when one laboring man was prevented from soliciting work, engaging in a contract to work, or continuing in his work, by one or more of his fellow laborers, the more direct wrong is that done to the laboring man so coerced, and he ordinarily should bring the action to redress that wrong, and added: "At the same time a right of action of a different nature sometimes accrues to the employer of such person, as where the workman so coerced is in this manner induced to break his existing contract with such employer, or in cases where the inwas issued in this case, and no further steps were taken under the vote.

The defendants established a strike headquarters, and provided a strike fund from which payments were made to the strikers and other men out of work. Some of the defendants made constant visits to a job of the plaintiff, generally at noontime, to persuade men whom the plaintiff had hired to leave its employ. They offered as inducements in some cases to nonunion men membership without the full payments usually required, and in other cases work elsewhere. Men frequently left the plaintiff's employ after these talks, in some cases stating that they would like to work, but could not run the risk of being fined. The defendant Driscoll induced two men to go who otherwise would have continued at work, by paying them with funds of the unions the wages due them from the plaintiff, and providing them with transportation to Utica, New York, where he had secured other work for them.

The plaintiff was constructing other buildings at Fairhaven and at Andover, which were within the districts of other unions; and the union men employed by the plaintiff on those jobs also struck. It was found, however, that these men were not under the control of the defendants, though it did fairly appear that these strikes were a direct result of the strike in Boston, since all these unions were affiliated together in the International Union and all members of the unions were familiar with what should be done in such cases.

It was admitted that the defendants were not persons of financial responsibility, and the judge found "that the acts of the defendants as above set forth were calculated to interfere and did interfere with the performance of the plaintiff's contracts for the interference with workmen not yet under contract with the employer, but seeking employment, becomes so greatly attended with abuse and violence and backed by a conspiracy and the aid of numbers as to amount to an actionable interference with the right of the employer to carry on his lawful business."

And see also note to Reynolds v. Davis, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, wherein this distinction is also made between an employee's right to relief when interfered with in his attempt to labor, by a labor organization, and the right of his employer to relief against such interference.

The dissenting opinion also finds support in Master Stevedores' Assn. v. Walsh, 2 Daly, 1, which holds a by-law prescribing a penalty against any member working with nonunion members, or for less than specified wages, not to violate either the common law or statute. It is also held that the enforcement of such by-law is not in restraint of trade.

This case contains a very interesting discussion of the general question whether or not such labor unions are unlawful at common law, and it reviews the early English and American cases on the subject. Referring to the validity of the by-law, the court said: "There was nothing in the by-law inconsistent with the act of incorporation or with the laws of the state. As individuals the master stevedores might collectively enter into an agreement not to work under certain rates, and when formed into a corporation they could, as a corporate body, make a by-law of that nature, being one in the language of the statute 'to promote the business and interest of the association.' If the by-law is one which it is in the power of the corporation to make, it has the power also to attach to it a penalty for the purpose of enforcing it. All who become members of the corporate body are bound by it, and where the penalty is incurring an action may be brought in the name of the corporation to recover it. . . .

The proper mode of enforcing a by-law is by a pecuniary penalty; for the corporation cannot, either directly or indirectly, impose any forfeiture of goods, or of stock or other corporate interests for the breach of it, . . . and the penalty must be certain. . . .

The words of the by-law are that the party shall forfeit to the association 25 per cent of the amount of such bill as fixed by the association, which penalty may be collected by due process of law. Though the word 'forfeit' is used, this is not a forfeiture, . . . but a pecuniary penalty, and it is sufficiently certain. This was not a by-law in restraint of trade; for it imposes no restraint upon one party which is not beneficial to the others, and is not, as has been shown, prejudicial to the interests of the public."

See also Burns v. Bricklayers' Benev. & P. Union No. 1, 27 Abb. N. C. 20, 14 N. Y. Supp. 361, wherein it was held that a member of a trade union was not entitled to the aid of the court to be relieved from fines assessed against him by the union because he violated a strike order and worked for an employer who employed nonunion men, both of which were in violation of by-laws of the union. Relief was denied on two grounds: (1) Because it was conceded that the plaintiff had violated the by-laws of the union relating to working with nonunion men; (2) because plaintiff had not appealed from the action of the executive committee in imposing the fines, and he had not exhausted his remedy in the society.

But see in this connection the concurring opinion of Davis, J., in People ex rel. Doyle v. New York Benev. Soc. 6 Thomp. & C. 85, wherein he says that a by-law which in effect forbids the members of a union to work at their trade at such prices as they choose, and compels them to join in a strike, by punishing those who refuse to do so, is void as against public policy.

construction of buildings, and, had they continued, would have seriously embarrassed the plaintiff in the prosecution of its business, and that such consequences were contemplated by the defendants in their endeavor to force the plaintiff to accept their working rules to govern the management of its business."

As already stated, the strike had four objects. Of these the demand for an increase of wages was properly enforceable by a strike. The demand that wages should be paid during working hours amounts merely to a demand for a shorter day, and also was properly enforceable by a strike. The reasonableness of such demands we have not the means of determining; and it is settled that such matters are best left to be adjudicated in the freedom of private contract between the interested parties. More difficult questions are presented by the demands that all foremen shall be members of the unions, and that the business agent of the unions shall be allowed to visit any building under construction. See as to the first of these points a very interesting article by Professor Smith, 20 Harvard Law Rev. p. 431, note 1. But it is unnecessary under the circumstances to determine these questions, as the plaintiff replied with a bare refusal of all the demands.

We are of opinion, therefore, that this strike must be regarded as simply a strike, for higher wages and a shorter day. It was not a mere sympathetic strike, as in Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 587, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 638, or one whose immediate object was only remotely connected with the ultimate object of the strikers, as in Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011. It was a direct strike by the defendants against the other party to the dispute, instituted for the protection and furtherance of the interests of the defendants in matters in which both parties were directly interested and as to which each party had the right, within all lawful limits, to determine its own course. Such a strike must be treated as a justifiable strike so far as respects its ultimate object.

But however justifiable or even laudable may be the ultimate objects of a strike, unlawful means must not be employed in carrying it on; and it is contended by the plaintiff that the use of fines and threats of fines, under the circumstances disclosed in the record, are unlawful. The question is stated by the trial judge in the following language: "In case of a justifiable strike, has the contractor the right to invoke the aid of the court to prevent the labor union from imposing a fine [which the court has found to be coercive in its nature] or taking action to impose one upon one or more of its members under its rules to induce them to leave the contractor's employ to his injury?" Under the findings of the judge it would seem that the question is not intended to be quite so broad as otherwise might be inferred from its language. The language is broad enough to include the case where the employee is under a contract to stay with his employer and where to leave would be a violation of that contract. But no such state of things appears upon the record. The plaintiff "hired its masons by the day and paid them on the basis of the number of hours worked, and it might have discharged them and they might have left at the close of any day." The question must therefore be considered as applying only to cases where the employee by leaving violates no contractual right of the employer.

The question how far the imposition of fines by an organization upon its members where the effect is to injure a third party is justifiable is considered by this court in Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085, and it was there adjudged that the imposition of such a fine, by which members of the organization were coerced into refusing to trade with the plaintiff, not a member, to his great damage, was inconsistent with the ground upon which the right to competition in trade is based, and as against him was not justifiable. In the course of the opinion the case of Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L.R.A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 42 Atl. 607, was cited, in which the same conclusion was reached. In Martell v. White, five justices sat, and four of them, being a majority of the whole court, concurred in the ground upon which it was decided. The case was carefully presented by counsel, the questions involved were regarded as important, and there was a difference of opinion among the judges who sat in it. It was therefore considered at great length; and the conclusion was reached after a most exhaustive discussion and the most careful deliberation. It stands as a solemn adjudication by this court after such discussion and deliberation. So far as respects the trend of judicial opinion and authority there has been no change since the decision was announced, unfavorable to it or to the ground upon which it was reached. On the contrary, so far as we are aware, whenever the case has been mentioned by members of the profession, whether they be judges engaged in the practical administration of the law, or professors teaching the students of our schools the true theory of legal principles, it has been received with favorable comment. See Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.)

254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 698; Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Moulders' Union, No. 125 (C. C.) 150 Fed. 155, 178; 20 Harvard Law Rev. pp. 355, 356; 17 Green Bag, 210. There is every reason why the doctrine of stare decisis should apply; and, so far at least as respects this commonwealth, the case must be held as settling the correctness of the principle upon which the decision was based.

That principle, if applicable to the facts of this case, is decisive. The majority of the court are of the opinion that it is applicable, and hence that there should be a decree for the plaintiff, enjoining intimidation or coercion by fines.

Under ordinary circumstances this opinion would end here. But inasmuch as a minority of the court still think that the principle laid down in Martell v. White, with reference to intimidation by fines imposed by an organization upon its members, is not correct, and also, perhaps, that, even if correct, it is not applicable to the facts of this case, and are unwilling to accept that principle as law in this commonwealth notwithstanding the authority of that case, it may be well to say something in addition to what was there said. We are also somewhat influenced to take this action by reason of the importance of the question and its relation to a part of the law still in the nebulous but clearing stage.

Before entering more fully upon the discussion it is well to get a clear conception of what the case is. To begin with, it is not a contest between the members of two competing labor unions, as was Plant v. Woods, supra, nor is it a conflict between an organization and one of its members in a matter in which no third party is interested. Neither does the plaintiff corporation contend that it has any right to compel the intimidated workman to enter its employ. Nor is it seeking, in behalf of a member of a union, to enforce or defend the right of such member to be free from a fine or threat of a fine. The plaintiff has no concern with the imposition of fines by a union upon its members, unless, and only so far as, such an imposition is in violation of a right of the plaintiff. Even if the fine be illegal the plaintiff has no standing in court to complain unless some one of its rights is invaded to its damage. In a word, the case is not between the party imposing the fine and the person fined, nor between the person fined as such and a third party who suffers, but on the contrary it is between such third party and the party imposing the fine. If it were only between the person fined and the party imposing the fine, then with some degree of plausibility it might be said that the former had no right to complain, or at least had waived that right; but it is manifest that neither of the immediate parties to the fine can, either by an agreement among themselves or by waiver, justify the invasion of the right of a third party, if any he has, to object to it.

What is the complaint of the plaintiff? It is a corporation engaged in the construction of buildings and employing a number of men. Its men left its employ on a strike. To keep them away the defendants threatened with fines such as were members of the unions, and by that means kept them away from the plaintiff when otherwise they would have stayed; all to the great damage of the plaintiff. Shortly stated, the case is this: The plaintiff's men are being coerced by threats of a fine to leave its employ, greatly to its injury, the fines to be levied in accordance with the by-laws of a voluntary association of which the proposed victims are members. This injury to the plaintiff is intended by the defendants. Has the plaintiff any standing in equity to an injunction against the infliction of such injury?

It is to be premised that the right which the plaintiff seeks to have protected against the acts of the defendants arises from no contract or statute, but out of the nature of things. It is one of the large body of rights which have their foundation in the fitting necessities of civilized society. It is the common-law right to a reasonably free labor market. Vice Chancellor Stevenson, in speaking of it, says it has been called a "probable expectancy," and describes it as "the right which every man has to earn his living or to pursue his trade or business without undue interference." Jersey City Printing Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759, 765, 53 Atl. 230. He further remarks (pages 765, 766 of 63 N. J. Eq.): "It will probably be found . . . that the natural expectancy of employers in relation to the labor market, and the natural expectancy of merchants in respect to the merchandise market, must be recognized to the same extent by courts of law and courts of equity, and protected by substantially the same rules. It is freedom in the market, freedom in the purchase and sale of all things, including both goods and labor, that our modern law is endeavoring to insure to every dealer on either side of the market." And in Atkins v. W. A. Fletcher Co. 65 N. J. Eq. 658, 664, 55 Atl. 1074, 1076, the same judge says: "The elemental right of the employer of labor, which the courts recognize to-day, no doubt, is the right to employ, while the corresponding right of the workman is the right to be employed. In other words, the right to buy labor and the right to sell labor are recognized by the law, and their enjoyment is greatly impaired or destroyed unless freedom in the labor market—freedom on both sides of the labor market—is maintained. Each party to a contract for the sale of labor has an interest in the freedom of the other party with respect to making the contract." In the words of Lord Lindley in Quinn v. Leatham [1901] A. C. 495, 534, "a person's liberty or right to deal with others is nugatory unless they are at liberty to deal with him if they choose to do so." This right of the employer is conclusively established by the numerous cases which hold that he may maintain an action against those who by intimidation prevent persons from entering into his employ. See remarks of Lord Halsbury in Allen v. Flood [1898] A. C. 1, 71, 72. In our own reports such a case may be found in Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 35 L.R.A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077. This is the right—the right to a free labor market—which the plaintiff asserts has been invaded by the defendants, and for which he seeks protection.

The defendants also have rights. They have the right to work or not to work, to sell their labor upon such terms as they see fit and to combine for the purpose of getting more pay or a shorter day. And for the purpose of strengthening their organization and making it more effective they have the right to make appropriate by-laws for its internal management, and for the regulation of the conduct of its members toward each other in matters affecting the general interests of the body; and they may enforce obedience to such by-laws and regulations by fines or other suitable penalties.

But not much progress is made by this general statement of the rights of the respective parties. We are still only on the skirmish line. In the jurisprudence of any civilized country there are but few, if any, absolute rights,—rights which bend to nothing and to which everything else must bend. The right to one's life would seem to be quite absolute, but it must yield to the private right of self-defense and to the public right to punish for crime. And so in the case before us, neither the right of the plaintiff to a free labor market nor the right of the union to impose a fine upon its members is absolute. Neither is to be considered apart from the other, or without reference to any other conflicting right, whether public or private; but each must be regarded as having in the rules of human conduct its own place, beyond the limits of which it must not go. Moreover, it must be borne in mind (what sometimes seems to be forgotten by the actors upon each side of such controversies) that the controversy is not a warfare in the sense that for the time being the usual rules of conduct are changed, as in the case of an actual war between two countries. There is no martial law in these cases, no change in the ordinary rules of society, but these rules remain the same as before, commanding what was theretofore right and prohibiting what was theretofore wrong.

The right of an employer to free labor is subject to the right of the laborers to hamper him by many expedients short of fraud or intimidation amounting to injury to the person or property of those who desire to enter his employ, or threats of such injury. For instance, persuasion not amounting to such intimidation is lawful, and perhaps the same may be said of social pressure even when carried to the extent of social ostracism, not including, however, any threat in a business point of view. See Vegelahn v. Guntner, supra; Jersey City Printing Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759, 769, 53 Atl. 230; 20 Harvard Law Rev. p. 267. Social rights and privileges must take care of themselves. The law cannot prescribe with whom one shall shake hands or associate as a friend.

So long also as the by-laws of a union relate to matters in which no one is interested except the association and its members, and violate no right of a third party or no rule of public policy, they are valid. Fines may be imposed, for instance, for tardiness, absence, failure to pay dues, or for misconduct affecting the organization or any of its members; and for numerous other acts. It cannot be successfully contended, however, that as against the right of some party other than the association and its members an act, otherwise a violation of the third party's rights, is any less a violation because done by some member in obedience to a by-law. If a member commits an assault upon a person, and is called into court by the commonwealth upon a criminal complaint or in a civil action by the victim, he can find no valid ground of defense in the fact that he committed the assault in compliance with the requirements of a contract with some other person, or in obedience to a by-law of an association of which he was a member. So a by-law providing that, upon an order to strike, every employee shall quit work, even although such an act should be in violation of a contract then existing between him and his employer for continuous service, and that for failure thus to break his contract the member should be fined, doubtless would be declared invalid. And the principle at the bottom of such a decision is this; namely, an interference with the right of a third party cannot be justified upon the ground that the intruder is acting in accordance with an agreement between him and some other person. In a word, so long as a fine is imposed for the guidance of members in matters in which outside parties have no interest, or in which there is no violation of a right of an outside party, then no such party can complain. But when the right of such a party is invaded, it is no defense, either to the person fined or to those who have imposed the fine, that the invasive act was done in accordance with the by-laws of an association.

In the case before us, standing opposed to each other are these two rights,—the right of the employer to a free labor market, and the right of the striking employees in their strife with him to impair that freedom; and the crucial question is, How far can the latter go? On which side of the line shall stand the matter of coercion by fines imposed by a union upon its members to impair that freedom? Is the employer's right to a free market subject to this system of mutual intimidation and coercion by fines, or is the right to establish such a system subject to the right of the employer to a free market? If the employer's right is not subject to this method of intimidation, then of course as against him it is unlawful. If it is subject to it, then he cannot complain, no matter how severe the blow.

So far as concerns the law of this commonwealth at least, some things seem to be settled. It is settled that the flow of labor to the employer cannot be obstructed by intimidation or coercion produced by means of injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury. Vegelahn v. Guntner, supra. In that case Allen, J., said: "Such an act [picketing as a means of intimidation] is an unlawful interference with the rights both of employer and employed. An employer has a right to engage all persons who are willing to work for him at such prices as may be mutually agreed upon; and persons employed or seeking employment have a corresponding right to enter into or remain in the employment of any person or corporation willing to employ them. These rights are secured by the Constitution itself. Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L.R.A. 325, 31 Am. St. Rep. 533, 28 N. E. 1126; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 71, 22 L.R.A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, 35 N. E. 62; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L.R.A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454; Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L.R.A. 702, 43 Am. St. Rep. 670, 59 N. W. 362." See also Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212, 9 Am. St. Rep. 689, 17 N. E. 307. And it is unnecessary to cite cases in support of the proposition that such is the great weight of authority elsewhere, even though the ultimate object of the strike be legal.

There can be no doubt that fining is one method of injuring a man in his estate, and 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that a threat to fine is a threat of such an injury. Indeed this is recognized by the decree made by the trial court in this very case, so far as it affects Reagan, one of the defendants, who it is found had threatened with a fine a man once but not then a member of a union.

It is urged, however, that although this method of intimidation is generally an invasion of the employer's right to a free market, and therefore illegal, yet when the intimidation is exerted by a union upon its members in accordance with its by-laws, in a strike whose object is legal, it is justifiable and legal. To this the obvious reply is that the rule of freedom to contract is founded upon principles of public policy, that each party to a contract is interested in the freedom of the other party, that it can make no difference to the public or to the employer (who in the present case is the other party) that the person intimidated is or is not a member of the society intimidating. In either case the injury is the same and is from the same cause, namely, intimidation. The workman is no longer free. In Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 527, 28 L.R.A. 464, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 38 Pac. 547, the court, after speaking of the general right of labor unions to make rules, proceeds thus: "It must be understood, however, that these associations, like other voluntary societies, must depend for their membership upon the free and untrammelled choice of each individual member. No resort can be had to compulsory methods of any kind to increase, keep up, or retain such membership. Nor is it permissible for associations of this kind to enforce the observance of their laws, rules, and regulations through violence, threats, or intimidation, or to employ any method that would induce intimidation or deprive persons of perfect freedom of action."

The keynote on this matter is struck in Alfred W. Booth & Co. v. Burgess, 72 N. J. Eq. 181, 65 Atl. 226, 233, in the following language: "No surrender of liberty or voluntary agreement to abide by by-laws on the part of the employees who are first coerced, made by them when they enter their labor unions, can . . . affect the right of the complainant to a free market, which right he will enjoy for all it may be worth if these employees are permitted to exercise their liberty. The employees may be able to surrender their own right, but they certainly cannot surrender the rights of other parties;" citing Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L.R.A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 42 Atl. 607, and Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 738. And in Downes v. Bennett, 63 Kan. 653, 662, 55 L.R.A. 560, 88 Am. St. Rep. 256, 66

Pac. 623, 626, there is a recognition of the same doctrine: "This is not the case of a union or association of persons intimidating its members from engaging in a specific service offered by an employer and standing ready and open to be entered. In such cases, on a showing of continuous damage caused by inability to secure employees, preventive relief has been afforded." Boutwell v. Marr, supra.

An opposite doctrine leads to strange conclusions. For instance, if ten men banded together undertake by coercion to keep two other men from entering an employment, and they do this in order to force the employer, for lack of ability to get the two, to employ them (the ten), the employer's right to a free market is invaded, and if he suffers thereby he may proceed either in equity or law against the ten; but if the ten men first induce the two other men to enroll themselves in the same organization with the ten, then, it is said, the ten men may by fines or threats of fines so intimidate the two men as to frighten them from the employer, and that such intimidation is no violation of the employer's right. A rule of law which leads to such inconsistencies is not to be adopted. It does not distinguish between coercion and noncoercion, but between organized coercion and sporadic coercion. It makes a distinction entirely foreign and immaterial to the ground upon which the right to a free market is based.

If it be said that fines are not in themselves illegal, and that consequently their use cannot be illegal, the answer is that when they are used as a method of coercion and create a kind of coercion inconsistent with the right of a person they are, as against that person's right, illegal. If it be said, as we have heard it said, that fines are innocent and cannot be illegal, because they are used by all governments as a method of punishing criminals, the answer is that if the principle is true that, what a government may do to punish for crime, individuals or societies may do to enforce private rights, then it follows that a by-law providing for imprisonment or even death may be legal.

If it be said that the member fined may take his choice either to leave the organization or abide by its rules, to which he has before assented, and that where there is a choice there can be no coercion, the answer is that in almost every conceivable case of coercion short of an actual overpowering of the physical forces of the victim there is a choice. The highwayman who presents his cocked pistol to the traveler, and demands his purse under pain of instant death in case of refusal, offers his victim a choice. He may either give up his purse and live, or refuse and die. In Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Rep. 287, the victim had a choice either to pay a fine or take the consequences of a refusal. And so the member of a labor union has the choice either to pay the fine or leave the union. Is it difficult to realize what that choice is in these days of organized labor? Is it too much to say that many times it is very difficult, indeed practically impossible, for a workman to get bread for himself and his family by working at his trade, unless he is a member of a union? It is true he has a choice between paying his fine and not paying it, but is it not frequently a hard one? May not the coercion upon him sometimes be most severe and effective? Such is not a free choice. And a market filled with such men is not a reasonably free market. In this connection the language of Boutwell v. Marr, supra, seems significant and appropriate: "The law cannot be compelled by any initial agreement of an associate member to treat him as one having no choice but that of the majority, nor as a willing participant in whatever action may be taken. The voluntary acceptance of by-laws providing for the imposition of coercive fines does not make them legal and collectable. . . . The fact that the relations and processes deemed essential to a recovery are brought within the membership and proceedings of an organized body cannot change the result. The law sees in the membership of an association of this character both the authors of its coercive system and the victims of this unlawful pressure. If this were not so, men could deprive their fellows of established rights, and evade the duty of compensation simply by working through an association."

If it be said that without fines the same result may be indirectly reached by the organization by exercising two rights, namely, the right to expel a member and the right to charge an initiation fee upon his return, and since the same result may thus be legitimately reached, nobody is harmed if it be reached by fine, the reply is that if the purpose of expulsion and the subsequent initiation fee be each a part of one and the same transaction, namely, the imposition of a fine, and the two acts are in substance the procedure by which the intimidation by fine is exercised, and such is the intention, then there may be a strong reason for holding that such a procedure is one imposing a fine and should be treated as such. Ordinarily, however, each separate act should be treated by itself and its validity judged by itself. The fact that separately and independently executed they incidentally may have the effect of a fine is immaterial on the question of the right to fine. The fact that a result may be incidentally reached in one way does not show that the same result may be lawfully reached in another way.

In considering this question we cannot lose sight of the great power of organization. It should be taken into account when one is considering where the line should be drawn between the right of the employer to a free market and the right of workmen to interfere with that market by coercion through the rules of a labor union. It is not universally true that what one man may do any number of men by concerted action may do. In Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 638, Loring, J., after alluding to the great increase of power by combination, says: "The result of this greater power of coercion on the part of a combination of individuals is that what is lawful for an individual is not the test of what is lawful for a combination of individuals, or to state it in another way, there are things which it is lawful for an individual to do which it is not lawful for a combination of individuals to do."

This organization of labor to better the condition of the laborer is natural and proper. There can be no doubt that it is the most effective way, perhaps the only effective way, in which as against the organization of capital the rights of the laborer can be adequately protected. In many ways the labor unions have succeeded in bettering the condition of the laborer; and so far as their ultimate intentions and the means used in accomplishing them are legal they are entitled to protection to the extreme limit of the law.

But their powers must not be so far extended as to encroach upon the rights of others. It is clear that if the power to intimidate by fine be regarded as one of the powers which labor unions may rightfully exercise, then the right to a free market for labor—nay, even the right of the laborer to be free—is seriously interfered with, to the injury both of the public and the employer as well as the laborer.

In Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085, it was said: "The right of competition rests upon the doctrine that the interests of the public are best subserved by permitting the general and natural laws of business to have their full and free operation, and that this end is best attained when the trader is allowed in his business to make free use of these laws." So of competition in labor; and so of competition between the employer and employee. The contest between them is only competition on a wide basis. As was said by Knowlton, Ch. J., in Berry v. Donovan, 188

Mass. 353, 358, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 605, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 738: "In a broad sense the contending forces may be called competitors." If the contest be carried on under the rules which regulate the law of supply and demand, leaving those engaged on either side to act under the general and natural laws of business, free from artificial coercion or intimidation, as the words are ordinarily understood in this connection, then neither party has the right to complain; but if coercion or intimidation by threats of a direct personal loss, due not to causes arising out of the situation or logical to the situation, but to a cause having no natural relation to the situation, and entirely inconsistent with the basic principle of freedom of action under the natural laws of business, then there is cause for complaint. Such a method of coercion must be declared illegal, as in violation of the right of the public and all concerned to a reasonably free labor market, that is, a market where all may act under this basic principle of freedom.

In view of these considerations and of others more fully set forth in Martell v. White, which are not here repeated, and in Boutwell v. Marr, ubi supra, a majority of the court are of opinion that the overwhelming sense of the thing is that the principle that the right of the employer is not subject to coercion or intimidation by injury or threats of injury to the persons or property of laborers standing in the market to meet him, should apply to the coercion and intimidation exerted by labor unions upon their members by fines or threats of fines. Any other conclusion is inconsistent with the existence of a reasonably free labor market, to which both the employer and the employee are entitled.

Our attention has not been called to any case, nor are we aware of any, in which the precise point here involved has been discussed, which is inconsistent with the conclusion which we have reached. We are not aware of any case in which it has been adjudged that, where a third party has a right to insist that those with whom he deals shall be free from coercion, the rule does not apply to coercive acts by way of fines or threats of fines, imposed or to be imposed by a voluntary association upon its members in accordance with its by-laws. The case of Bowen v. Matheson, 14 Allen, 499, was explained in Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011. Neither in that case nor in Pickett v. Walsh, supra, was there any evidence of coercion by fines. And the same may be said of Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 476, L. R. 21

Q. B. Div. 544, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, [1892] A. C. 25. In that case there was simply a withdrawal of trade advantages under certain conditions. The defendants had two prices,—one price for one class of customers, and a different one for another class. There was nothing in the nature of an arbitrary fine. As stated by Fry, L. J., in the case as reported in L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, 622: "Competition was in substance the only weapon which the defendants intended to use against their rivals in trade. No thought of using violence, molestation, intimidation, fraud, or misrepresentation was entertained by the defendants." See also in same case the language of Coleridge, Ch. J., L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 544, 552, and that of Halsbury, Lord Chancellor [1892] A. C. on p. 36, as follows: "After a most careful study of the evidence in this case, I have been unable to discover anything done by the members of the associated body of traders other than an offer of reduced freights to persons who would deal exclusively with them,"—and that of Lord Watson, on page 43 of the same volume.

In the preparation of this opinion a large number of cases, in addition to those hereinbefore named, have been consulted, among which are the following: Brown v. Stoerkel, 74 Mich. 269, 3 L.R.A. 430, 41 N. W. 921; Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. 128, 54 L.R.A. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 779, 48 Atl. 894; Fuerst v. Musical Mut. Protective Union (City Ct.) 95 N. Y. Supp. 155; Burns v. Bricklayers' Benev. & P. Union No. 1, 27 Abb. N. C. 20, 14 N. Y. Supp. 361; Master Stevedores' Assn. v. Walsh, 2 Daly, 1; Proelich v. Musicians' Mut. Ben. Assn. 93 Mo. App. 383; Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L.R.A. 797, 802, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis (Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwestern Lumbermen's Assn.) 54 Minn. 223, 21 L.R.A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319, 55 N. W. 1119; Temperton v. Russell [1893] 1 Q. B. 715; Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan (C. C.) 121 Fed. 563; Mayer v. Journeymen Stonecutters' Assn. 47 N. J. Eq. 519, 20 Atl. 492; Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (C. C.) 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 788, 62 Fed. 803; Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 101, 30 Atl. 881. See also for others, those cited in Martell v. White and in Pickett v. Walsh, supra.

The result is that in the opinion of a majority of the court there should be a decree restraining and enjoining the defendants, their agents, and servants from intimidating by the imposition of a fine, or by a threat of such fine, any person or persons from entering into the employ of the plaintiff or remaining therein, or from in any way being a party or privy to the imposition of any fine or threat of such imposition upon any person desiring to enter into or remain in the employ of the plaintiff; and it is

So ordered.

Sheldon, J., dissenting:

The Chief Justice and I are unable to assent to the conclusion reached by the majority of the court. We cannot convince ourselves that under such circumstances as are here presented the defendants should be enjoined from imposing or threatening to impose fines upon those members of their organization who, by continuing to work for the plaintiff, had, under the rules to which they had themselves assented, become liable to such imposition. The question is one of great practical importance; it has been said that the law upon the subjects involved is not yet fully settled; and we think it proper to state the views which seem to us to be correct.

We assume that any defendants who have instituted or are carrying on an unjustifiable strike, or who for the prosecution and maintenance of a justifiable strike are inducing workmen either to leave or to refrain from entering the employ of a plaintiff, by the use of means which are either unlawful in themselves or would operate as an interference with a superior right of the plaintiff,—who, that is, have combined either to secure an unlawful end or to secure a lawful end by the use of unlawful means,—may be restrained by injunction, at any rate from such specific wrongful acts in furtherance even of a lawful strike as are unjustifiable towards the plaintiff, and are likely to cause such injury to the plaintiff as to warrant equity in interfering. It would not be material in such a case that there was no continuing contract of employment between the plaintiff and the servants who were thus induced to leave him, or that the employer was complaining of the action of the labor union in seeking merely to enforce its rules upon its own members, although no question arose between the union itself and workmen who desired to continue in their employment, but who were coerced by the fear of fines or of other consequences that might follow their infraction of the rules of the union. See, as to this general doctrine, Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085; Vegetahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 35 L.R.A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077; Perkins v. Pendleton, 90 Me. 166, 60 Am. St. Rep. 252, 38 Atl. 96; Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L.R.A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 42 Atl. 607; Frank v. Herold, 63 N. J. Eq. 443, 52 Atl. 152; Alfred W. Booth & Bro. v. Burgess, 72 N. J. Eq. 181, 65 Atl.

226; Spaulding v. Evenson (C. C.) 149 Fed. 913; Temperton v. Russell [1893] 1 Q. B. 715. Nor is it doubted that the promoters of a strike would have no right to persuade a laborer to violate any existing contract of employment with the plaintiff. Beekman v. Marsters, 195 Mass. 205, 210, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 122 Am. St. Rep. 232, 80 N. E. 817, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 332, and cases cited; Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457. Nor would they have a right, by the threat of a fine or of any similar disciplinary measure, to prevent anyone who was not a member of their union from working for the plaintiff. Read v. Friendly Soc. [1902] 2 K. B. 88; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Employing Printers' Club v. Dr. Blosser Co. 122 Ga. 509, 69 L.R.A. 90, 106 Am. St. Rep. 137, 50 S. E. 353, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 694; South Wales Miners' Federation v. Glamorgan Coal Co. [1905] A. C. 239, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 436. This is the fundamental doctrine of Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Rep. 287.

But the defendants' associations were lawful ones. The language of Knowlton, Ch. J., in Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 302, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457, states as to this point a universally recognized doctrine. No court would assert that the organization of a labor union constituted 'in itself an unlawful conspiracy. The objects aimed at by these unions were proper ones. Their main object, as stated in the constitution of one of them, the Bricklayers' Benevolent & Protective Union, is "to unite all practical journeymen bricklayers working within the jurisdiction of this union, so that by concerted action their interests will be protected and their condition improved, and to render assistance to injured members, and also provide a proper burial for deceased members." The right of the defendants to form such combinations or unions for the purpose of protecting their interests and improving their condition by securing higher wages and shorter periods of labor, even in competition with other laborers, is undisputed. Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 580, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 638; Snow v. Wheeler, 113 Mass. 179; Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 10, 8 Am. Rep. 287; Com. v. Hunt, 4 Met. 111, 129, 38 Am. Dec. 346.

Nor is there now any question that the defendants had the right, through concerted action, to attempt to secure the attainment of these lawful objects by means of a strike. If the end aimed at is lawful, the strike is lawful, and is not made unlawful by the 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

fact that it is ordered and carried on by the action and through the instrumentality of a labor union. This is the express point of the decision in Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457, a decision which was made only some months ago, and which as to this point was concurred in by every member of the court, the only dissent being as to the lawfulness of the purpose of the strike which was there considered. This means and must mean that the members of a labor union who have engaged in a strike for a lawful purpose have a right to carry it on and to seek to make it effectual by the use of any means which are neither unlawful in themselves, nor inconsistent with the exercise by others of any equal or superior rights.

It is conceded in this case that the defendants' strike was a lawful one, because it must be treated as instituted and carried on for the lawful purposes of obtaining higher wages and shorter periods of labor. We adopt as to this question what is said in the majority opinion. It follows accordingly that the defendants had a right not only to carry on their strike, but to seek to make it successful by the use of whatever rightful means were available to them. And this seems to us to be the general doctrine of the cases. It has been upheld, either in terms or by necessary inference, in Reynolds v. Everett, 144 N. Y. 189, 39 N. E. 72; Mills v. United States Printing Co. 99 App. Div. 605, 91 N. Y. Supp. 185; Rogers v. Evarts (Sup.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 264; Downes v. Bennett, 63 Kan. 653, 55 L.R.A. 560, 88 Am. St. Rep. 256, 66 Pac. 623; Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, 26 Or. 527, 28 L.R.A. 464, 46 Am. St. Rep. 640, 38 Pac. 547; Gray v. Building Trades Council, 91 Minn. 171, 63 L.R.A. 753, 103 Am. St. Rep. 477, 97 N. W. 663, 1118, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 172. Indeed this proposition, as we understand, is not disputed by the majority; nor has it been denied by any authoritative judicial decision.

The plaintiff in the case before us has indeed, like every other employer of labor, a right to enjoy a free labor market, to have a free flow of labor come to him; that is, he has a right to employ such men as are willing to work for him upon such terms as may be mutually agreed upon between him and them. The strongest statements of this right may perhaps be found in some of the cases cited in the majority opinion. Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 698; Jersey City Printing Co. v. Cassidy, 63 N. J. Eq. 759, 765, 53 Atl. 230; Atkins v. W. A. Fletcher Co. 65 N. J. Eq. 658, 664, 55

Atl. 1074; Quinn v. Leatham [1901] A. C. 495, 534. But even these decisions follow the now universal current of authority in recognizing the right of the defendants to curtail and restrict this right of the plaintiff, by combining in labor unions to engage in a lawful strike for the improvement of their own conditions, and in endeavoring to render their strike successful by using all rightful means both to secure unanimity of action among their own members and to dissuade other laborers from entering the employ of the plaintiff. That is, the relative right of the plaintiff to enjoy a free labor market is modified and limited by the right of its employees to enter into an agreement or combination to secure higher wages or to improve otherwise the conditions of their employment, and for this purpose to engage in a strike and to use all rightful means to insure the success of their strike by checking, and if they can do so without resorting to wrongful means by wholly stopping, the free flow of labor to the plaintiff. But if this be so, manifestly the plaintiff's right to a free labor market is not only not a paramount right, but it is and must be subject to the higher right of the defendants to combine and to carry on a strike by the use of whatever lawful means may be in their power; and we cannot see how this right can be further limited than by restricting it to acts which are not forbidden by law, either as being unlawful in themselves or at variance with a sound public policy. Accordingly, the question now to be decided is whether we can say that the members of a labor union have no right, acting in conformity with rules previously established, to impose a fine upon one of their own members if he goes to work or continues to work for an employer against whom a justifiable strike has been declared in accordance with those rules, where there is no contractual right or duty on either side for the performance of such work.

If we are right in what thus far has been said, the answer to this question must depend upon whether the imposition of such a fine is either forbidden by some rule of law or is found to be inconsistent with some principle of public policy. But in our opinion neither of these affirmations can be made.

The right of all voluntary associations, whether formed for the carrying on of business or for purely social purposes, to establish appropriate by-laws and regulations, not only for their own internal management, but also to regulate the conduct of their members towards each other and in matters affecting the general interests of the body, is conceded. And the right to enforce obedience to such by-laws and regulations by suitable penalties is generally recognized. See, besides many other cases that might be cited, R. v. Westwood, 7 Bing. 1, 90, 2 Dow. & C. 21; Goulding v. Standish, 182 Mass. 401, 65 N. E. 803; McFadden v. Murphy, 149 Mass. 341, 21 N. E. 868; Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511; Mayer v. Journeymen Stonecutters' Asso. 47 N. J. Eq. 519, 20 Atl. 492; Brown v. Stoerkel, 74 Mich. 269, 3 L.R.A. 430, 41 N. W. 921; Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan (C. C.) 121 Fed. 563; Martin v. Nashville Bldg. Asso. 2 Coldw. 418. That provisions for fines to be imposed for conduct injurious to the members of such voluntary associations are not necessarily bad, either as between the members themselves or as affecting the conduct of members towards third persons, was assumed in Bowen v. Matheson, 14 Allen, 499. See page 501. And although the manifest effect of the fine provided for in that case was to put at least a certain measure of coercion upon the individual members of the association to persist in conduct which had been found to be ruinous to the plaintiff's business, the decision was restated and approved in Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 500, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011. The same may be said of other cases cited in that opinion. The suggestions as to the decision in Bowen v. Matheson, supra, made in Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085, and in the majority opinion in the case at bar, really go no farther than to say that such a fine is not necessarily unlawful; but that is exactly what is here contended for.

We cannot make the law to be enforced against labor unions in this respect more stringent than that which is applicable to other organizations established for proper purposes. Such unions are voluntary associations. They are formed for proper purposes. Their objects are not only lawful, but commendable. Like some other associations, the very purpose for which they are created makes it highly important that their members should be held together by the strongest possible bonds, so as to work with absolute unanimity, especially in the time of a trade dispute or strike. Pledges and promises binding all the members are desirable. Voluntary agreements to abide in such matters by the will of a majority of the members under a coercive pecuniary influence, or even under pain of expulsion, cannot be objectionable. Indeed, the right of labor unions to enforce, under penalty of fine or expulsion, compliance by all their members with rules and regulations which have been adopted because deemed by a sufficient majority to be for the common good, and which are not in themselves inappropriate or unlawful, is necessary to their continued existence. It is to the united action of all their members that such organizations owe their strength and their ability to accomplish the results at which they aim. Doubtless persons who do not agree in the desirability of those results, or in the wisdom or efficiency of the means adopted to secure them, cannot be required to continue as members against their will, any more than they could have been compelled to become members in the first instance.

It is of the very essence of a voluntary organization that membership in it is and must continue to be itself voluntary; and this must be so on both sides as long as property rights do not come in question. Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 402, 502, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Flaccus v. Smith, 199 Pa. 128, 54 L.R.A. 640, 85 Am. St. Rep. 779, 48 Atl. 894; Longshore Printing Co. v. Howell, supra. So long, however, as such membership continues and the organization still serves the purpose for which it was created, "the will of the individual must," as was said by the court in Wabash R. Co. v. Hannahan, supra, "consent to yield to the will of the majority, or no organization, either of society into government, capital into combination, or labor into coalition, can ever be effected. The individual must yield in order that the many may receive a greater benefit. The right of labor to organize for lawful purposes, and by organic agreement to subject the individual members to rules, regulations, and conduct prescribed by the majority, is no longer an open question in the jurisprudence of this country." So Taft, J., in Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & P. R. Co. (C. C.) 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 788, 62 Fed. 803, 817, after conceding the right of the employees of a receiver to organize themselves into a labor union which shall take joint action as to their terms of employment, and to elect officers to represent them, says: "The officers they appoint,

. . . if they choose to repose such authority in anyone, may order them, on pain of expulsion from their union, peaceably to leave the employ of their employer because any of the terms of their employment are unsatisfactory." In Mayer v. Journeyman Stonecutters' Asso. supra, it appeared that members of the defendant association were practically compelled to acquiesce in the decision of the majority and to join in strikes or abstain from working for particular employers by forfeiture of membership consequent upon being declared "scabs;" and this was not interfered with by the court, no other coercion or actual violence having been used. The same rule was applied in Brown v. Stoerkel, supra, to persons suspended from a labor union for not joining in a strike. The validity of such rules as are here in question, and of penalties to be imposed under them after due notice and hearing in conformity to the rules, was either declared or recognized and assumed in Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 575, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 638; Fuerst v. Musical Mut. Protective Union (City Ct.) 95 N. Y. Supp. 155; Burns v. Bricklayers' Union, No. 1, 27 Abb. N. C. 20, 14 N. Y. Supp. 361; Master Stevedores' Asso. v. Waleh, 2 Daly, 1; Froelich v. Musicians' Mut. Ben. Asso. 93 Mo. App. 383; and Moore v. Bricklayers' Union, 23 Ohio L. J. 48. In Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A. C. 495, the fines imposed were not treated as in themselves objectionable, but the decision was put upon the ground that the defendants had acted not for any purpose of advancing their own interests as workmen, but for the sole purpose of injuring the plaintiff in his trade. See language of Lord Shand, at page 514. So, in Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 698, it was assumed that the imposition of fines, even up to the amount of $500, might be lawful; but the case turned upon the fact that the plaintiff had not had such notice and trial as were guaranteed to him by the rules of the union. In Alfred W. Booth & Bro. v. Burgess, 72 N. J. Eq. 181, 65 Atl. 226, the object of the fines was to enforce a strike which was merely sympathetic or in the nature of a boycott, such as was held to be unjustifiable in Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 638. In Purvis v. Local No. 500, U. B. C. & J. 214 Pa. 348, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 63 Atl. 585, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 275, a strong decision against the coercion of an employer by sympathetic strikes against his customers, it was assumed throughout the opinion that the officers of the labor union would not have been prevented from enforcing by peaceful means upon their own members the rules of the union forbidding its members to work upon nonunion material; and this would include the right to impose the penalties established by those rules. In Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, affirmed on appeal in [1892] A. C. 25, it appeared that conformity to the rules of the association was enforced by a penalty of dismissal, a severer and more drastic remedy than a mere pecuniary penalty, which practically could usually be enforced only by expulsion, and this fact was relied upon by the plaintiff upon the appeal (page 30); but both Lord Watson and Lord Morris declined to treat this threat of expulsion as involving any wrongful intimidation (pages 43, 49, 50). Indeed, we do not understand it to be denied that those members of the unions who declined to join in the strike which was ordered were liable to expulsion by the unions acting in good faith, and as it appears that the defendants are peculiarly irresponsible, payment of the fines threatened could have been enforced only by expulsion. And the member of a union upon whom such a fine has been lawfully imposed in accordance with by-laws to which he has himself previously assented is in no respect in the predicament of a highwayman's victim, who has the bare option of parting with his money to save his life or of losing his life without thereby saving his money. The situation of one who finds himself compelled to choose between two alternatives, however distasteful, which he has brought upon himself and neither of which is unlawful, is in no way comparable to that of one who is compelled by wrongful force to elect between submitting to one of two alternative injuries, both of which are unlawful. An argument which rests upon such a comparison is without foundation.

Nor can we say that the imposition of fines not in themselves unlawful, and not injurious to the plaintiff except as they restrict an inferior right by the lawful exercise of a higher right is to be regarded as contrary to a sound public policy. Gloomy vaticinations of injurious results to be apprehended from the excessive power which labor unions may acquire by their combination of many individuals into one body do not greatly impress us. The power of capital hitherto has not been found insufficient to prevent other than proper advantages from being gained by the representatives of labor, nor does it seem to us likely to be insufficient in the future. If it shall appear that there is such a danger, yet we cannot alter the law by denying to labor unions the rights and powers which the law gives to all lawful associations.

The law does not do so vain a thing as to allow the formation of labor unions and to declare their right to initiate and by lawful means to carry on a justifiable strike, and then refuse them the use of the only practical means by which their acknowledged rights can be secured. And see, beside the cases already cited, Cote v. Murphy, 159 Pa. 420, 23 L.R.A. 135, 39 Am. St. Rep. 686, 28 Atl. 190; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis (Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwestern Lumbermen's Asso.) 54 Minn. 223, 21 L.R.A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319, 55 N. W. 1119; Macaulay Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 37 L.R.A. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 Atl. 1. The books are full of cases recognizing the right of labor unions to enforce their rules upon their members in a reasonable way. There are but few cases that discuss by-laws authorizing the imposition of fines for a violation of rules; for their validity is almost universally conceded. It is believed that most of the many thousand labor unions in this country and Great Britain have such a rule or by-law, under which they are acting to-day without complaint from anyone. In such action they are in our judgment simply adopting a principle which is of general application for similar purposes.

It is true of course that no man lawfully can be compelled at the mere dictation of other men to abstain from working for such prices and during such periods of labor as he may be willing to accept; but it is no less true that when one chooses voluntarily to unite with others of the same craft in forming an organization for the purpose of bringing about by the united action of all its members more favorable conditions of employment, he is bound, so long as he desires to remain a member of that organization, to submit within certain limits his own freedom, alike of judgment and of action, to the judgment of his associates, and to conform his conduct to that standard which they shall have agreed to be for the best interest of all and of each. Unity of action would be impossible upon any other terms. Accordingly, all the members of such a body have a right to expect, and by reasonable rules and appropriate penalties to provide for, the observance of such terms. Those who desire to employ the members of such organizations must expect this to be the case, and have no right to complain of the requirements of such rules, and of their reasonable enforcement upon each other by the members of such organizations. To this extent, the employer's relative right to a free labor market must yield to the higher right of the laborers to combine and to act in unison for the purpose of obtaining better terms from their employer. In other words, the general right of an employer to go into the market to hire laborers does not deprive a union, in carrying on a lawful strike, of the right to use upon its individual members, for the purpose of keeping them up to the performance of their duty as such members, all the influences that any other organization properly could use, including the imposition of fines. The right to use such influences is an independent and paramount right. The interests of the employer are subordinate to this right, and must yield to it.

Doubtless this power of discipline by fines or by the ultimate penalty of expulsion cannot properly be resorted to for the purpose of requiring conduct intrinsically unlawful, or for the purpose of compelling a minority member to join in action the ultimate object of which is to damage a third person. Ertz v. Produce Exch. Co. 82 Minn. 173, 51 L.R.A. 825, 83 Am. St. Rep. 419, 84 N. W. 743. Just as the rules of an association cannot protect its members who have done actionable injury to a third person, so a plaintiff who has suffered injury by the enforcement of its rules and penalties upon its own members for a wrongful purpose may properly be allowed a remedy. Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 1, 10, 8 Am. Rep. 287. If a strike should be declared for an unlawful object, it would be illegal because of its object; and all the members trying to maintain it by direct or indirect action against the employer might be liable in damages and subject to injunction. They would be so liable just as much without a by-law authorizing the imposition of fines as with one. Any labor organization acting against an employer to prevent him from carrying on his business is acting unlawfully if its action is without legal justification. The case of Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 43 L.R.A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 42 Atl. 607, might well have been put upon this ground; and in our opinion our own case of Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085, should have been rested upon a similar doctrine. But if the object of a strike is legal and commendable, an effort to keep the members together by the imposition of fines, if need be, under a by-law previously adopted, is also legal and commendable.

The only cases that we have found which in principle are contrary to our conclusions are Boutwell v. Marr, supra, the reasoning of which we regard as ill-considered and erroneous, and Martell v. White, supra, in which a majority of this court followed the Vermont decision. But in Martell v. White, it was assumed (page 262 of 185 Mass.) that the fine was "so large as to amount to moral intimidation or coercion," and was "used as a means to enforce a right not absolute in its nature but conditional," and was "inconsistent with the conditions upon which the right" rested. None of these conditions are applicable here. The findings made in this case went no further than that some coercion was exercised upon the striking members of the unions by their apprehension of fines. We have seen that the fines which were threatened were not in themselves unlawful, were in accordance with the by-laws of the unions of which the strikers were members, and were imposed in conformity with a right which was paramount to any inconsistent right of the plaintiff. We do not consider that the point actually decided in Martell v. White is necessarily inconsistent with the view here taken. So far, however, as the general doctrine of that case is applicable to fines imposed for a violation of rules lawful in themselves, and not sought to be enforced for a purpose either strictly unlawful or opposed to public policy or inconsistent with the general welfare of the community, we are not willing to follow it. We do not think that the court can distinguish between the coercive effect of larger and smaller fines, or say as matter of law that they do, by reason merely of their magnitude, amount to moral intimidation. All fines are necessarily coercive in their operation if they have any effect whatever. The statement that they may simply call to attention of a member of an organization to the fact of the infringement of some innocent regulation, or serve as an example or incentive to the performance of some absolute duty, we understand to be, and have been manifestly intended to be, a concession that the degree of coercion which they exert in some instances may be a proper one. Perhaps unreasonable or excessive fines sometimes might be found to amount to intimidation; but we think it better to say that such fines as are here in question, not found to be excessive in amount, are not to be declared to be unreasonable or unlawful where they are imposed under rules or by-laws which are in themselves proper and reasonable, are imposed for justifiable purposes, and are well adapted to serve useful ends for a paramount interest of the parties whose conduct they are to guide, and do not interfere with any absolute or prior right of a third person or work an injury to his relative rights proportionate to the good aimed at and reasonably expected to come by reason of the strike to the members of the association. Dowd v. Bennett, 63 Kan. 653, 55 L.R.A. 560, 102 Am. St. Rep. 256, 66 Pac. 623.

To repeat what has been already said in substance, what seems to us the fallacy of the majority opinion is its failure to rest upon the fact that the strike in this case was upon justifiable grounds, and of course was lawful. It follows that the action of each member of the union in trying to maintain the strike, without force or without any unlawful coercion or intimidation exercised upon anyone, was justifiable and lawful. It was not an interference with the rights of the plaintiff, because, as we have seen, the right of an employer to conduct his business without interference in the labor market is subordinate to the right of his employees to strike and to maintain the strike in a lawful manner. As against this right of the employees the employer has no right to have their labor flow to him uninfluenced or undiverted.

Accordingly, we are of opinion that the decree of the superior court should be affirmed.

Loring, J., specially concurring:

For the reasons stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Sheldon I should agree with the conclusion there reached, were it not for the recent decision made by this court in Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085.

The agreement in Martell v. White was not an agreement or combination of laborers to better their condition, but an agreement between certain manufacturers, quarriers, and polishers of granite to buy and sell to and to work for each other to the exclusion of other granite manufacturers, quarriers, and polishers. This court held such an agreement to be a valid one. Whether that agreement was a valid one is not now up for decision. For the purposes of this discussion I take Martell v. White to be a decision as to what means may be lawfully used to enforce a legal agreement.

In my opinion the decision in Martell v. White ought not to be overruled in the case at bar although it was wrong, provided laborers and labor unions will not suffer injustice from our standing by it.

The evils which ensue from overruling a wrong decision where no injustice is involved in following it are greater than those which come from standing by it. It would be hard to measure the disastrous consequences to the administration of justice if it were thought that a change in the personnel of the court is to be the occasion for rearguing what has been decided.

The decision in Martell v. White will not (in my opinion) work injustice to employees and labor unions if it is confined to the point there decided, and is not extended to broader propositions.

These broader propositions are as follows:

(1) That employees have a right to combine to better their condition, and to do all acts (not unlawful) necessary to make the combination an efficient one; (2) that they have a right to strike to gain that end if their demands therefor are not granted by their employer, and to do all acts (not unlawful) necessary to make the strike successful; and (3) that these rights of the employees are superior to the right of the employer to have a free flow of labor in his business.

There is nothing in the decision in Martell v. White, or in the decision in the case at bar, which calls in question these propositions or any one of them.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

All that was decided in Martell v. White and all that is up for decision in the case at bar is that the imposition of a fine is the use of unlawful means.

It was not decided in Martell v. White that in case a member of a labor union (which has instituted a strike to get higher wages, for example) goes to work for the employer in question at the old rate, he cannot be expelled.

Neither was it decided in Martell v. White that since the labor union, in the case put above, can expel such a member, it cannot, if he goes to work for the old rate of pay, threaten to expel him for the purpose of keeping him in the ranks of the labor union, that is to say, in the ranks of the strikers.

Further, it was not decided in Martell v. White that if a member in the case put above is subject to expulsion because he has deserted the union and gone to work for the lower rate of pay, the union is not at liberty to impose upon him the payment of a sum of money for the common benefit as a condition of his reinstatement. In such a case the union is not bound to expel the deserter. It is at liberty to take him back. On the other hand, since it can expel him and at the same time is at liberty to take him back, it can take him back on such terms as it may choose to impose, including the payment of a sum of money to the union for the common benefit.

And finally, since it may do this it may threaten to do this to keep such a fellow member from going back to work at the old lower rate of pay. There is nothing in Martell v. White which denies or pretends to deny this right to a labor union.

A payment imposed upon a deserting member of a labor union under the circumstances stated above is not, using words accurately, a fine. The difference is that a fine is imposed upon a former member for breaking the by-laws while he was a member, and can be collected whether the deserting member returns to the ranks of the union or not, while such a sum as is described above is a condition of the reinstatement of a member who has been expelled or is subject to expulsion, and cannot be collected if the member does not choose to be reinstated.

But although there is a difference between a fine and such a payment as is described above, the difference between the two is of no practical consequence to labor union. So long as a labor union can impose upon a member who is subject to expulsion the payment of a sum of money as a condition of his reinstatement, the right to impose a fine (giving to that word its accurate meaning) is of no practical consequence. No labor union in the past ever attempted to collect a fine from a member who had left the union and did not seek reinstatement. And no labor union will ever find it worth while to enter on such litigation. The game is not worth the candle. It is because the difference between these two things is not of practical consequence that I think that Martell v. White should not be overruled. What we are dealing with in the case at bar are the practical rules which govern strikes properly instituted for a proper purpose. If a wrong decision has been made, it had better stand if it does not work injustice. As I have said, if the decision in Martell v. White is not extended it does not work injustice, and for that reason (in my opinion) it ought not to be overruled in the case at bar.

I am of opinion that the case at bar is covered by the decision in Martell v. White. Further, that the decision in Martell v. White ought not to be overruled in this case, and that the plaintiff is entitled to the decree stated in the opinion of a majority of the court.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

HARRIET T. SAMMONS, Exrx., etc., of Anna Leslie Higbie, Deceased, Respnt.,
v.

KATE J. PIKE et al., Appts.

(— Minn. —, 120 N. W. 540.)

Divorce decree—collateral attack in foreign jurisdiction.

1. One Higbie, at all times involved, a resident of Minnesota, initiated in 1886 a divorce proceeding in Dakota against his wife, who lived in New York. She answered. He dismissed the action. In 1887 he brought another suit, in Nebraska. She answered, and set up a cross bill for a divorce on her part. While this action was pending, and in 1887, he began a third divorce proceeding, in Dakota. Fraud in service of summons was claimed and denied. The wife did not appear. Decree for absolute divorce was granted in 1889. Neither party remarried. The wife had actual knowledge of the existence of the decree for some seven years before her death. The husband died in 1905. The wife died in 1906. In an action of ejectment, brought later, in 1906, by persons claiming under her, to recover possession of the homestead and other property from persons claiming under him, it is held that a decree of divorce may be impeached collaterally in the courts of another state by proving that the court granting it had no jurisdiction because of the plaintiff's want of domicile, even where the record purports to show such jurisdiction.

Voidable divorce decree — laches — effect on property rights.

2. Where a decree of divorce by a court within the jurisdiction of which the person seeking a divorce was a resident at the time involved is voidable only, because of fraud in connection with the service of the summons or in the conduct of the case, the victim of the fraud may, by unexplained delay, lasting until after the death of the perpetrator of the fraud, or by other conduct operating by way of waiver or estoppel, be prevented from successfully asserting a right to a distributive share of the estate of the original wrongdoer.

Void divorce decree—validation by subsequent conduct.

3. Whether, under any circumstances of aggravation, a decree of divorce entered by a court of a state of which neither plaintiff nor defendant was a resident at any time, could be validated by any subsequent conduct—quære.

Same — subsequent conduct — effect on property rights.

4. The failure of the wife in this case to attack the invalid decree, and her other conduct complained of, did not operate to prevent persons claiming under her from securing her distributive share in his estate as the law determined it to be.

(Start, Ch. J., and Brown, J., dissent.)

(March 26, 1909.)

Case Note.—Impeaching decree of divorce rendered in other state on the ground of nonresidence or domicile of person in whose favor it was granted.

As shown in the note to Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 135, it is held in many cases, and established beyond question, that a decree of divorce rendered in another state may be impeached on the ground of the lack of residence or domicile of the plaintiff at the divorce forum, notwithstanding the recitals of the jurisdictional facts in the decree.

In the subsequent case of German Sav. & L. Asso. v. Dormitzer, 192 U. S. 125, 48 L. ed. 373, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231, where the decree rendered in one state was successfully attacked in another on the ground that the party in whose favor it was granted was not a resident of the divorce forum, it was said in the opinion that it is too late now to deny the right collaterally to impeach a decree of divorce made in another state, by proof that the court had no jurisdiction, even when the record purports to show jurisdiction and the appearance of the other party.

To the same effect are the following cases decided since the note above referred to: Beeman v. Kitzman, 124 Iowa, 86, 99 N. W. 171; State v. Westmoreland, 76 S. C. 145, APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Steele County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover possession of certain lands. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. L. W. Collins and William H. Hallam, for appellants:

A judgment of divorce in a sister state, regular on its face, and known to the defendant several years before her death, cannot be assailed for the first time in a collateral proceeding involving a mere contest over property, and begun after both parties are dead.

Colby v. Colby, 65 Minn. 549, 67 N. W. 663; Re Ellis, 55 Minn. 401, 23 L.R.A. 287, 43 Am. St. Rep. 514, 56 N. W. 1056; Nelson, Div. & Sep. §§ 1054, 1056, 1064; Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. 831; McNeil v. McNeil, 78 Fed. 834; Marvin v. Foster, 61 Minn. 154, 52 Am. St. Rep. 586, 63 N. W.

8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 842, 56 S. E. 673; Field v. Field, 215 Ill. 496, 74 N. E. 443.

In none of the cases cited in this note was the attack upon the decrees made by the party who procured it. In State v. Westmoreland, supra, the attack was by the state in a prosecution for adultery against the party who procured the divorce in the other state. In the other cases the attack was by the party against whom the divorce was granted.

As shown in the earlier note, it was held in Re Swales, 60 App. Div. 599, 70 N. Y. Supp. 220, that a wife who had obtained a divorce in Illinois was estopped to question the jurisdiction of the Illinois court upon the ground that she was not a resident of the state at the time of the divorce, in a proceeding by her in New York for letters of administration upon the estate of the divorced husband. This decision was subsequently affirmed by the court of appeals on the opinion below (172 N. Y. 651, 65 N. E. 1122).

So, it was held in People ex rel. Shrady v. Shrady, 47 Misc. 333, 95 N. Y. Supp. 991, that a man who procured a divorce in another state, and remarried, could not attack the validity of that divorce on the ground of his nonresidence, in a prosecution in New York as a disorderly person for abandoning a woman whom he married subsequently to the divorce.

To the same effect is Bledsoe v. Seaman, 77 Kan. 679, 95 Pac. 576, where a wife who procured a divorce in another state upon a cross petition in a suit commenced by her husband was held barred, in a subsequent action in Kansas for alienation of the affections of her former husband, from attacking the validity of the decree on the ground of her nonresidence at the divorce forum. The court said that the parties are barred from such conduct, not because the judgment obtained is conclusive as an adjudication, but for the reason that such a practice cannot be tolerated; that people who invoke the action of a court, and, through negligence or falsehood, mislead the court as to the existence of the facts upon which its jurisdiction depends, and obtain a judgment for relief, will not afterwards be heard to deny the validity of such judgment. Though expressly stating that the rule applied in the case did not rest upon the doctrine of estoppel as ordinarily understood, the court intimated that there were some facts presented which indicated that an orinary estoppel might have been applied, remarking that the defendant in the action for alienation of affections had a right to assume that the plaintiff therein no longer had or claimed any right to the affection or society of her former husband, and that any relations which she (defendant) might assume with him thereafter would not in any way infringe the plaintiff's rights.

It is to be observed in this connection that the right of a party who procured a decree of divorce in another state, to impeach the same upon the jurisdictional ground that he or she was not a resident of that state at the time the divorce was obtained, presents a different question from the right of one who procured a decree in the state in which he or she then resided to impeach the same on the ground that the defendant was a nonresident and was served constructively only. The former question goes to the jurisdiction of the subject-matter; the latter merely to the jurisdiction of the parties. As a matter of precaution, however, it may be pointed out in this connection, that the decision of the appellate division in Starbuck v. Starbuck, 62 App. Div. 437, 71 N. Y. Supp. 104 (referred to at page 172 of the earlier note), to the effect that one who procured a divorce in the state of her residence was not precluded from denying the effect of the decree in New York upon the ground that her husband was a nonresident of the divorce forum and was served constructively only, was subsequently reversed by the court of appeals (173 N. Y. 503, 93 Am. St. Rep. 631, 66 N. E. 193).

As to character of residence essential to give jurisdiction in divorce proceedings, see case note to Bechtel v. Bechtel, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1100. For conflict of laws on the subject of divorce, in general, including the recognition in one state or country of a decree of divorce rendered in another, and the right to impeach such foreign decrees, see note to Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 135, and supplementary notes to Joyner v. Joyner, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647, as to extraterritorial effect of decree of divorce rendered upon constructive service, and to State ex rel. Aldrach v. Morse, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1127, on the jurisdiction of a court of the state of matrimonial domicile to grant a divorce upon constructive service of process against defendant who is out of the jurisdiction. As to effect in third state of decree upholding a foreign divorce, see case note to Bidwell v. Bidwell, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 325.

484; Caswell v. Caswell, 120 Ill. 377, 11 N. E. 342; Earle v. Earle, 91 Ind. 27; Hurley v. Hurley, 117 Iowa, 621, 91 N. W. 895; Re Brigham, 176 Mass. 223, 57 N. E. 328; Arthur v. Israel, 15 Colo. 147, 10 L.R.A. 693, 22 Am. St. Rep. 381, 25 Pac. 81; Nicholson v. Nicholson, 113 Ind. 131, 15 N. E. 223; Evans v. Woodsworth, 213 Ill. 404, 72 N. E. 1082; Sloan v. Sloan, 102 Ill. 581; Perry v. Perry, 15 Phila. 242; Everett v. Everett, 60 Wis. 200, 18 N. W. 637; Mohler v. Shank, 93 Iowa, 273, 34 L.R.A. 161, 57 Am. St. Rep. 274, 61 N. W. 981; Magin v. Lamb, 43 Minn. 80, 19 Am. St. Rep. 216, 44 N. W. 675; Potts v. Potts, 10 W. N. C. 102; Johnston v. Sharpe (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 1006; Maher v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. 95 Ill. App. 367; Gilbert v. Reynolds, 51 Ill. 513; Larimer v. Knoyle, 43 Kan. 338, 23 Pac. 487; Prewett v. Dyer, 107 Cal. 154, 40 Pac. 105; Holcomb v. Independent School Dist. 67 Minn. 321, 69 N. W. 1067; Reed v. Reed, 52 Mich. 117, 50 Am. Rep. 247, 17 N. W. 720; Hurley v. Hurley, 117 Iowa, 621, 91 N. W. 895; Moor v. Moor (Tex. Civ. App.) 63 S. W. 347; Starbuck v. Starbuck, 173 N. Y. 508, 93 Am. St. Rep. 631, 66 N. E. 193; 2 Bishop, Marr. & Div. § 753, B; Richardson's Estate, 132 Pa. 292, 19 Atl. 82.

Messrs. Leach & Reigard, for respondent:

A foreign divorce may be collaterally attacked and declared null and void on the ground that the plaintiff in the divorce case was not a resident of the state or country where the divorce action was prosecuted, if the defendant did not appear.

State v. Armington, 25 Minn. 29; Thelen v. Thelen, 75 Minn. 433, 78 N. W. 108; Re Ellis, 55 Minn. 401, 23 L.R.A. 287, 43 Am. St. Rep. 514, 56 N. W. 1056; McHenry v. Bracken, 93 Minn. 510, 101 N. W. 960; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 50 L. ed. 867, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1; 14 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 722, 723, 820, 821; 23 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 697, note 60; State v. Westmoreland, 76 S. C. 145, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 842, 56 S. E. 673; Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 183, note; Beeman v. Kitzman, 124 Iowa, 86, 99 N. W. 171; German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Dormitzer, 192 U. S. 125, 48 L. ed. 373, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Pollock v. Pollock, 9 S. D. 48, 68 N. W. 176; Smith v. Smith, 7 N. D. 404, 75 N. W. 783.

An absolutely void, as distinguished from a voidable, divorce judgment can have no force or effect whatever, and can acquire no force or effect from lapse of time.

Heffner v. Gunz, 29 Minn. 108, 12 N. W. 342; Feikert v. Wilson, 38 Minn. 341, 37 N. W. 585; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1046-1049.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, claiming under Mrs. Higbie, deceased, brought ejectment in the latter part of 1906 to recover possession of a homestead and other lands in this state from defendant Pike, claiming under the will of Mr. Higbie, also deceased, and against other defendants in possession as her tenants. Mr. and Mrs. Higbie were married in New York in 1864, and shortly afterwards removed to Owatonna, Minnesota. Mr. Higbie resided there until his death, January 5, 1905. Mrs. Higbie came to Minnesota with her husband, but lived apart from him between October, 1877, and April, 1880, when she returned and lived with him until November 3, 1883, when she finally left him, and lived in New Jersey and New York, where she died in 1906. In 1886 Mr. Higbie initiated divorce proceedings in Dakota against Mrs. Higbie on the ground of desertion. Mrs. Higbie answered. Mr. Higbie dismissed the action. In 1887 Mr. Higbie began another divorce suit in Nebraska on the ground of desertion. Mrs. Higbie answered, and set up a cross bill for divorce on her part. Mr. Higbie sought to dismiss the case on the ground that he had become a resident of Minnesota. His motion the court denied. In 1888 Mr. Higbie's bill for divorce was dismissed, but the action was retained on the cross bill. In September, 1890, it was stricken from the docket on motion of Mr. Higbie. In June, 1887, while the Nebraska action was still pending, and while he was still a resident of this state, he swore to a complaint for divorce from Mrs. Higbie on the ground of desertion, and in July filed it in Hand county, Dakota territory, which is now in South Dakota. Later he made affidavit in which he stated he was a resident of Minnesota. Summons was served on Mrs. Higbie by publication. A copy was mailed to Mrs. Higbie by registered letter. Some one satisfied the postal authorities and received it. Plaintiff insists, and the trial court found, that the letter was sent to a place at which Mrs. Higbie did not reside, and that the service of summons was void for fraud. Defendant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence. The wife did not appear. The Dakota court entered a decree granting an absolute divorce in 1889. According to defendant upon the record it appears that Mrs. Higbie had no cause for desertion or divorce, that plaintiff had full knowledge of the decree of divorce rendered in the Dakota court for seven years, and that she is barred by her "acquiescence, trickery, artifice, cunning, and bad faith." The trial court found that Mr. Higbie was, at the time of the Dakota divorce proceedings and at all times here involved, a resident of Minnesota. It granted plaintiff judgment. Some aspects of this case were before this court in Sammons v. Higbee, 103 Minn. 448, 115 N. W. 265. The present appeal involves two questions not there considered.

Of these the first is whether the decree of the Dakota court was subject to collateral attack under the circumstances of this case. The rule is settled beyond peradventure that "a decree of divorce may be impeached collaterally in the courts of another state by proof that the court granting it had no jurisdiction because of the plaintiff's want of domicile, even when the record purports to show such jurisdiction." German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Dormitzer, 192 U. S. 125, 48 L. ed. 373, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221. How universally this view of the law has been accepted will appear in cases collected in Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 183, note. It is unquestionably the law in this state. Thelen v. Thelen, 75 Minn. 433, 78 N. W. 108. And see Pollock v. Pollock, 9 S. D. 48, 68 N. W. 176; Smith v. Smith, 7 N. D. 404, 75 N. W. 783. No well-considered decision, as distinguished from a dictum, to the contrary, has been called to our attention.

The second question is whether the divorce decree should be given legal effect because of Mrs. Higbie's conduct subsequent to it. That decree, plaintiff insists, was clearly void because, first, of fraud in the service of the summons; and, second, of the nonresidence in Dakota of both the plaintiff and defendant. In the view of the case we take, the second of these reasons only need be considered. It is decisive of the issues. Defendant places emphasis upon the fact that neither the cause of morality nor interest of the public is involved, since both parties are dead, and that this is a controversy about property interests only, to which principles peculiar to divorce proceedings should not be applied. They insist that the decree was voidable only, and that, under the circumstances presented by this record, it must stand.

None of the many authorities to which they have directed our attention justify this conclusion, in letter or in spirit. In none of them were both the parties non-residents of the state the court of which granted the divorce. In all but one of them, after a summons had been duly served, and after proper proof had been adduced, and after all the required subsequent proceedings had been lawfully observed, a valid decree could have been entered. The proposition in which they fairly result, is: Where a decree of divorce by a court within the jurisdiction of which the person seeking a divorce was a resident at the times involved is voidable only, because of fraud in connection with the service of the summons or the conduct of the case, the victim of the fraud, by unexplained delay lasting until after the death of the perpetrator of the fraud, or by other conduct operating as a waiver or estoppel, may be prevented from successfully asserting a right to a distributive share of the estate of the original wrongdoer. Thus, in the leading case on the subject, Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. 831, nine years' unexcused delay, during which the plaintiff in the divorce proceeding had died, was held sufficient to validate the divorce, although the publication of the summons was secured by fraud and constituted an imposition on the court. In that case, however, the defendant lived in Ohio; but no question was raised that plaintiff lived in Michigan. If the defendant had appeared in the proceeding, a valid decree might have been entered. Defendant might have waived an improper service of summons by appearance. It was consonant with equity that her conduct subsequent to the decree constituted a waiver. In none of the cases to which defendant has referred us,—and we have examined them all,—did it appear that the plaintiff was not a resident of the state in which the court granted the divorce. Some of them were cases of fraud in connection with the service of summons. Zoellner v. Zoellner, supra; Earle v. Earle, 91 Ind. 27; Everett v. Everett, 60 Wis. 201, 18 N. W. 637; Prewett v. Dyer, 107 Cal. 154, 40 Pac. 105; Evans v. Woodsworth, 213 Ill. 404, 72 N. E. 1082; Marvin v. Foster, 61 Minn. 154, 52 Am. St. Rep. 586, 63 N. W. 484. Indeed, in Maher v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. 95 Ill. App. 365, there was "colorable jurisdiction." At page 373 the court said: "The decree was not void for want of jurisdiction of appellant, or because of want of power" on part of the court to entertain an application for divorce and to proceed to a decree. The proceedings of the court were at the most erroneous. In Gilbert v. Reynolds, 51 Ill. 513, no notice had been served and no appearance entered. In Re Brigham, 176 Mass. 223, 57 N. E. 328, the charge was that evidence in the divorce proceeding had been suppressed by fraud and collusion. "The jurisdiction was undoubted and complete." In Nicholson v. Nicholson, 113 Ind. 132, 15 N. E. 223, both parties were residents of the proper state. The fraud consisted of inducing the noninterposition of a defense. Promise to dismiss was broken. And see Larimer v. Knoyle, 43 Kan. 338, 23 Pac. 487; Johnston v. Sharpe (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 1006 (where the answer was filed by an attorney without the authority of defendant, then a nonresident); Arthur v. Israel, 15 Colo. 147, 10 L.R.A. 693, 22 Am. St. Rep. 381, 25 Pac. 81 (where the wife, after learning of the decree, married another man); Mohler v. Shank, 93 Iowa, 273, 34 L.R.A. 161, 57 Am. St. Rep. 274, 61 N. W. 981 (where the same feature appeared); Hurley v. Hurley, 117 Iowa, 621, 91 N. W. 895; Sloan v. Sloan, 102 Ill. 581 (an unauthorized action). In Caswell v. Caswell, 120 Ill. 377, 11 N. E. 342, the husband resided in that state, and brought suit in the courts of that state, but not in the right county. This case is the only one cited by defendant which tends to support his contention.

Plaintiff insists that the divorce was "an absolute nullity, a mere brutum fulmen," of no force whatever, and incapable of having any legal effect given to it. Both principle and authority are strongly persuasive of the soundness of that proposition. But if a defendant in such irregular divorce had married, had had offspring, and had died after the death of the plaintiff, would a court bastardize the innocent children? Or if after the decree the defendant had attempted, successfully or unsuccessfully, to kill the plaintiff, and then died after his decease, would she transmit a right to his estate? The question whether, under any possible circumstances of extreme aggravation, the subsequent conduct of the defendant in the divorce proceedings could validate the improper decree, or operate as an estoppel against one claiming a distributive share of the estate of plaintiff therein, it is not necessary to here decide. For, assuming that there might be such circumstances, the record now before us certainly does not disclose them.

In this case, Higbie himself was guilty of deliberate fraud upon his wife and upon the court. The trial court found, and was justified in finding, that neither husband nor wife had at any time been a resident of or domiciled in the territory of Dakota or in the state of South Dakota, and that Mr. Higbie never had any bona fide intention of removing thereto, but went there temporarily for the sole purpose of instituting the divorce action. This was not "a mere irregularity." A deliberate perjury as to a prerequisite to jurisdiction was involved. Mr. Higbie could not have come into equity with clean hands. Those claiming under him are in no better position. Nor was the alleged misconduct of Mrs. Higbie by any justifiable reasoning sufficient to have confirmed the decree, or to have estopped her, or persons through her, from claiming a distributive share of the husband's estate. She had never married again. She had stopped the first divorce in Dakota. She had appeared in the second proceeding, in Nebraska. Knowing that her husband lived and continued to live in Minnesota, she was not bound to follow him into any other jurisdiction, remote or near, in which he might attempt to perpetrate an outrage on the courts and fraud on her. Her mere inaction until the time of actual knowledge of the existence of the decree is immaterial and insignificant. What she did afterwards did not validate the divorce. The unvarnished substance of her alleged misconduct is that she defaulted in the performance of her conjugal duties, that she contributed none of the aid of a wife to build up this estate, that she slept on her rights, and that, according to the verbal testimony of a real-estate agent, whose remembrance was indefinite, she once wrote a letter, which was not produced, wherein she claimed to have been divorced from her husband and to own certain property as a feme sole. Defendant's conclusion is that the time-honored trio, "conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence, were wanting in her conduct." If there were no other considerations presented in this case, it is clear that the divorce was not validated by her conduct. It appears, however, that Mr. Higbie's words and actions to his wife were brutal, and justified her in living apart from him, and that she notified persons engaged in buying land from Mr. Higbie that she was still his wife. She was not shown to have signed any deed as a single woman. The trial court, indeed, found that she never, at any time after such pretended divorce, acquiesced therein, or held herself out as a single woman, but, until the death of her husband, at all times claimed to be his wife. She always insisted that the Dakota divorce was a fraud. It necessarily follows that the judgment of the trial court must be and is hereby sustained.

In this view of the case it would be a work of supererogation to consider the merits of defendant's further contention that judgment previously rendered in the probate court operated as an estoppel.

Affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Jaggard, J., on July 2, 1909, handed down the following additional opinion.

Defendants' motion for reargument proceeds on the express assumption that the original opinion herein was based on two points not represented nor argued. In point of fact, that decision rests on two simple and unmistakable propositions, elaborately argued orally and on briefs, on which the decision of the trial court rests, viz.: First, that the invalid Dakota divorce decree was subject to collateral attack; second, that the wife's conduct subsequent to the decree did not operate to validate it. The opinion did set forth that a group of authorities in defendants' brief sustained not the proposition for which they were cited, but another which was there formulated, namely, that the conduct of a spouse, including laches, subsequent to the granting of a divorce decree invalidated by fraud in the service of summons or in the course of the trial, may estop representatives of such person from claiming a distributive share in his estate. Defendants insist, however, that the cases to which reference will be immediately made sustain the position that delay for a sufficient period to attack a decree of divorce void because neither of the parties was a resident of the jurisdiction rendering the decree may by estoppel prevent any question as to its validity.

We did not refer in the original opinion to Re Ellis, 55 Minn. 401, 23 L.R.A. 287, 43 Am. St. Rep. 514, 56 N. W. 1056, because it does not purport at all to be of the class of cases to which the instant controversy belongs. There the divorce was obtained by collusion to confer jurisdiction. The divorced husband died. The parties to the controversy concerning his estate were his divorced wife, who alleged the invalidity of the decree, a woman whom he had married after the divorce, who asserted its validity, and a sister and a brother, claiming under the will. The trial court found for the second wife. This was affirmed. In the case at bar neither of the parties had married again. The intervening rights of third parties were not involved. Defendants themselves called our attention to the principle that the courts, in motions to vacate judgments, proceed with great caution and anxious care of the intervening rights of strangers. Black, Judgm. 321. Moreover, at page 410 of 55 Minn. Gillfillan, J., says: "When, as between whom, and to what extent is such determination [of residence of the parties] binding in the state in which the parties are in fact residents? . . . First, in proceedings between the state of the parties' actual residence and one of the parties; second, in proceedings between the parties in the state of their actual residence, where the divorce in the other state was procured on the application of one of them, the other not appearing in the action to procure it; third, in proceedings between the parties, when both voluntarily appeared in the action in which the divorce was granted and consented to the jurisdiction, or that the court might determine the facts on which the jurisdiction depended. In the second class of cases it was settled that a judgment of another state can be assailed on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the court to render it. The decisions have been practically uniform that the party who did not submit to the jurisdiction is not bound by 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the judgment." The decision tends to sustain our original conclusion.

In Hurley v. Hurley, 117 Iowa, 621, 91 N. W. 895, it did not appear and was not found that the husband was a nonresident when he obtained a divorce. Moreover, the rights of third persons had intervened. In McNeil v. McNeil (C. C.) 78 Fed. 834, the opinion was oral and rested on the proposition that, "McNeil not having been a resident of the state for a year when he brought his suit for divorce, the court had no jurisdiction. This, however, is not apparent on the record, and hence a judgment cannot be said to be void on its face and therefore subject to attack at any time." This rule, as has appeared in the original opinion, is distinctly not the law, either in the Federal courts or in this court.

For the first time our attention is now called to Reed v. Reed, 52 Mich. 117, 50 Am. Rep. 247, 17 N. W. 720. It fails, for a number of reasons, to support defendants' contention. It suffices for the present to point out that the law in Michigan accords with the opinion previously expressed in the original opinion. In O'Dell v. Goff, 153 Mich. 643, 117 N. W. 59, the testator had obtained a divorce in Indiana from contestant's mother. The undisputed evidence in the case proved that at this time the testator resided in Michigan. The judgment was held to be void ab initio, and that defendant in the proceedings to obtain it had a right to disregard proceedings therein of which she had notice. Carpenter, J., said: "The controversy was being tried by a court which possessed no jurisdiction, and she was pursuing a course which she had a lawful right to pursue by paying no attention to the steps that were taken therein."

Former opinion adhered to.

Brown, J., dissenting:

I dissent. A careful consideration of the merits of this case, after reargument, leads me to the conclusion that a reversal should be ordered. The opinion of the court states all the facts, and the reasons for my conclusions are, in brief, as follows:

The judgment of divorce, though void in fact, was valid on its face, and a certified copy thereof was personally served on Mrs. Higbie many years before her death, yet she took no proceedings to have it set aside, and to this extent at least she acquiesced therein. If both parties had voluntarily appeared before the Dakota court in which the action for divorce was brought, and submitted to its jurisdiction, they would have been bound by the judgment, although the court, by reason of the fact that both were nonresidents, had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action,—the marital rela-with power to own and operate mills for the manufacture of flour and other mill products, and to deal in grain, farm, and dairy products, live stock, meats, agricultural implements and machinery, coal, lumber, and other articles.

The city of Duluth is one of the important terminal grain markets in the Northwest, and in the immediate vicinity thereof are found elevators, flour mills, and proper equipment for handling and marketing grain and other farm products. The board of trade does not buy, sell, or in any way deal in grain. Not more than 20 per cent of those holding membership in the board are engaged in the grain or milling business at Duluth. Some are engaged in banking, marine insurance, and vessel agency business of Duluth, while others are engaged in the grain and other business outside of Duluth. The board merely furnishes facilities and conveniences for the transaction of the grain business, and to that end procures for its members information as to crop conditions and the grain markets of the world. It owns a building, of the value of $500,000, in which there is an exchange room, where actual trades are made and posted, and where grain is bought and sold. Persons engaged in the grain commission business, and others connected with vessel agencies and marine insurance, have their offices in this building. Two classes of commission men—those who sell for the owner grain coming into Duluth and those who buy for the consumer at Duluth or Superior, or for transportation to lower lake ports or for foreign exchange—transact business on the floor of the board of trade. Practically all the grain bought and sold at Duluth is bought and sold on the board of trade, although some little grain, used for local consumption, is handled elsewhere.

The memberships in the board of trade, which originally cost $1,000 each, have all been disposed of, and are now held by various individuals. They are subject to sale, and the owners may become members of the board of trade upon certain terms and conditions prescribed by the board. The Minnesota Farmers' Exchange never applied for membership in the Duluth Board of Trade, and neither the board nor its officers or members in any manner conspired or combined to prevent the Minnesota Farmers' Exchange from having its grain handled or dealt in on the board, by threatening to boycott any member who might venture to handle its grain, or otherwise. Rule 27 of the board of trade provides that regular sessions shall be held from 9:30 A. M. to 1:15 P. M. daily, except Saturday, when trading shall cease at 12 o'clock noon, and that no firm, member, or corporation shall buy or offer to buy, sell or offer to sell, any grain or seed on track, by sample or to arrive, except during such is justifiable. Their combination is lawful when it does not extend so far as to inflict injury upon others, or to oppress and crush them by excluding them from all employment unless gained through joining a labor organization or trades union. This we have decided, and this the law of the state sanctions." The majority opinion of the court does not clearly pass upon the legality of a combination of labor within such a statute, but the dissenting opinion of Justice Vann makes it clear that that question was before the court and passed upon.

In Cleland v. Anderson, supra, the question whether an exception of combinations of laborers from the operation of such a statute would render the statute unconstitutional was decided in the negative. The court said of such a statute: "In its letter and spirit, it refers only to combinations and conspiracies of persons engaged in the manufacture, sale, and transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, to prevent or hinder competition, and regulate and control prices. No express exception of organizations of laborers intended to maintain or advance wages was necessary to exempt them from its operation. The section in question is inserted rather out of abundance of caution, to prevent judicial extension of the terms of the act beyond its scope and purpose, than to grant a privilege or immunity to persons who would otherwise fall within its terms. The distinction between goods and merchandise produced by skill and labor and the skill and labor which produce them is manifest and reasonable. The statute does not say that laborers who have goods, wares or merchandise, the product of labor, for sale, may combine to advance or control the price, but only that the law designed to prevent combinations in restraint of trade in such articles when produced shall not be construed to affect organizations formed to regulate the wages or compensation of the labor and skill which produce them."

But compare Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816, which held that the same statute was unconstitutional, because, by excepting labor organizations from its provisions, it denied the equal protection of the laws to all persons not members of such organization.

A conclusion to the contrary was also reached in People ex rel. Akin v. Butler Street Foundry & Iron Co. 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349, which hold unconstitutional and void, an amendment to an anti-trust law making an exception in favor of combinations the principal object or effect of which was to maintain or increase wages. In reaching this conclusion, the court followed Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, which held such a statute unconstitutional, because it improperly discriminated in favor trading hours and on the floor of the exchange.

The state charges that the board and its officers have violated the anti-trust statute by adopting and enforcing what is known as "Rule 26," which is as follows:

"The following rates of commission are deemed to be just and reasonable.

"Grain, etc

"Section 1. Receiving and selling on arrival, to arrive, or for some future month's delivery: Wheat, barley, rye, and flax, 1 cent per bushel; Durhum wheat, 1 cent per bushel; corn and oats $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per bushel; mill stuffs, 50 cents per ton; ground feed, 50 cents per ton; hay, 50 cents per ton, except that the minimum charge on hay shall be \$5 per car. On sales to arrive, where delivery is not made, one half of the above commission shall be charged.

"Sec. 2. Buying and shipping in cars in lots of less than 5,000 bushels: Wheat, barley, rye, and flax, 1 cent per bushel; corn and oats, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per bushel. In lots of 5,000 bushels or more, not less than $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per bushel.

"Warehouse Receipts.

"Sec. 3. Buying lots of not less than 5,000 bushels $\frac{1}{4}$ cent per bushel; no charge for selling same receipts. Selling warehouse receipts, lots not less than 5,000 bushels, $\frac{1}{4}$ cent per bushel; lots less than 5,000 bushels, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per bushel.

"For Future Delivery.

"Sec. 4. Buying and selling $\frac{1}{8}$ cent per bushel on lots of 5,000 bushels or more, $\frac{1}{4}$ cent per bushel on lots of less than 5,000 bushels. Where delivery of warehouse receipts is made on such contracts, $\frac{1}{4}$ cent per bushel.

"Sec. 5. Between members of the Duluth Board of Trade, the rates of commission may be arranged without restriction.

"Sec. 6. In addition to the above, there shall be charged such legitimate expenses as are necessarily incurred in caring for the property and guarding the interests of both consignor and consignee, including interest on advances. Interest shall be charged on all advances made to country shippers or members of other exchanges.

"The minimum rate to be fixed each year during August, for one year, by a committee of three, appointed by the president. Nothing in this rule shall be so construed as to prevent any special arrangement between consignor and consignee, by which a higher rate of commission or interest may be charged in special cases.

"Sec. 7. Every member of the association, and every person, firm, and corporation ad-of agricultural products or live stock in the hands of the producer or raiser. The Illinois court made no distinction between such an exception and an exception as to combinations to control and regulate the price of labor. It is also to be noted in this connection that, according to the common-law rule as applied in Illinois, a combination to control or regulate the price of labor is as unlawful a monopoly as is a combination to regulate and control the price of any merchandise or commodity. More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L.R.A. 361, 33 Am. St. Rep. 216, 29 N. E. 888.

State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, supra, held a combination for the purpose of gathering news and disposing of it was not within such a statute, because it related to personal services. On this point the court said: "There is nothing here on which a monopoly can attach. The business is one of mere personal service,—an occupation. Unless there is 'property' to be 'affected with a public interest,' there is no basis laid for the fact or the charge of a monopoly." And see Lohse Patent Door Co. v. Fuelle, supra, wherein the foregoing case is cited and quoted from with approval on this point.

But see Froelich v. Musicians Mut. Ben. Asso. 93 Mo. App. 383, wherein a combination among professional musicians to regulate and control prices to be charged for their professional services was said to be an unlawful monopoly, because in restraint of trade.

Also State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 343, 117 Am. St. Rep. 479, 80 Pac. 639, 84 Pac. 737, wherein an agreement among persons engaged in buying and selling cattle at a given point, tending to restrict competition in such work, and to fix and regulate the compensation therefor, was held to be within the terms of a somewhat similar statute, and therefore illegal. This decision, however, was based upon a provision in the statute, invalidating contracts tending to create a restriction in trade or commerce, and in the full and free pursuit of a business authorized and permitted by the laws of the state. This agreement was treated as relating to a business rather than to personal services, and the court did not consider the question here under consideration. The case comes very close to a line of cases not included herein, relating to the validity of combinations of laborers who conspire actively to interfere with trade or interstate commerce, including such cases as Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. ed. 488, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 815, which held that combinations of laborers to boycott goods which were subjects of interstate trade and commerce came within the Federal anti-trust act against combinations affecting interstate trade or commerce.

mitted to trade, or to do business therein, who shall charge less than the regular rates of commission and interest established by the rules of the association, or shall assume, or rebate any portion of the same, or shall, with intent to evade in any way, directly or indirectly, the regular rate of commission established by the rules of the association, or shall with intent to cut, or to evade in any way, directly or indirectly, the regular rates of commission established by the rules of the association, purchase, or offer to purchase, any grain or seed on track, at any railway station outside of and for delivery at the city of Duluth or Superior, or who shall purchase, directly or indirectly, for his own account or otherwise, from any person not a member of the association, any grain, seed, or other commodity dealt in upon the board, without charging and deducting from the purchase price the regular rates of commission and interest, if any, established by the rules of the association, or shall make or report any false or fictitious sales or purchases, or shall resort to any method of accounting, directly or indirectly, in violation of or contrary in purpose, and effect to a strict adherence to the regular established rates of commission of the association, or shall, with intent to evade the regular rates of commission established by the rules of the association, directly or indirectly pay or give, or offer so to do, any money or other consideration of whatsoever nature, to any person, to procure or influence shipments or consignments of grain or seed in any form, or shall, with intent to cut or evade in any way, directly or indirectly, the regular rates of commission established by the rules of the association, make use of any shift or device whatsoever, shall be deemed guilty of violation of the rules of the association establishing rates of commission, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined by the association not less than $1,000 nor more than $2,000, as the board of directors may determine, such sum to be paid into the general fund of the association.

"Sec. 8. Any member of the Duluth Board of Trade, who shall become the agent of, or who shall handle grain on commission, or otherwise, for any person, firm, or corporation, when such person, firm, or corporation is known to be buying or handling, or has attempted to buy or handle, grain for less rates of commission than provided in this rule, such member shall be considered as having violated this rule, and be held subject to the penalties prescribed.

"Sec. 9. Any charge of the violation of the foregoing provisions, or any part thereof, shall be by complaint in writing, filed with the secretary of the association. The 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

party charged shall be summoned by written notice from the secretary, and shall appear before the board of directors of the association, who shall investigate and try the charge.

"Sec. 10. The board of directors shall offer a reward, not exceeding $1,000, to any person who shall furnish evidence that does convict any member of the Duluth Board of Trade, or any firm, corporation, or party admitted to trade or to do business in the Duluth Board of Trade, of a violation of the established rates of commission; the object of this rule being to prevent the demoralization resulting from the giving, either directly or indirectly, of compensation to station agents, elevator agents, bankers, brokers, merchants, or any other parties, at any locality whatsoever to influence shipments or consignments of grain. But this rule shall not prevent the regular employment, by members of this association, of traveling men, but shall prohibit a division of commissions with such traveling men who are not resident members of this association.

"Sec. 11. Any member of the Duluth Board of Trade may at any time submit in writing to the board of directors any question for interpretation under this rule, and the question and its interpretation shall be posted on the board for at least ten (10) days, and henceforth be, to all intents and purposes, a part of this rule."

Rules substantially like those of the Duluth Board of Trade, relating to the qualifications of members and the manner of their admission, fixing a minimum rate of commission that may be charged upon transactions for nonmembers, allowing rates and commissions between members to be arranged without restriction, providing for and charging interest upon advances, regulating the trading upon the floor of the exchange, and providing penalties by expulsion or suspension for violation of the rules, have been in force for many years in similar exchanges in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Minneapolis, Milwaukee and elsewhere.

Messrs. E. T. Young, Attorney General, and George W. Peterson, for appellant:

The fact that the immediate result of the combination has been temporarily to reduce prices, or that it may reduce them, is immaterial in determining the legality of the combination, the court not being governed by the temporary effect upon the prices, but by the power of the combination to control them.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 850; 27 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 898.

All arrangements, in whatever form, which are designed to suppress competition, are in restraint of trade.

27 Cye. Law & Proc. p. 899; Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 255, 64 L.R.A. 260, 102 Am. St. Rep. 341, 69 N. E. 1085; Slaughter v. Thacker Coal & Coke Co. 55 W. Va. 642, 65 L.R.A. 342, 104 Am. St. Rep. 1013, 47 S. E. 247, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 335; Herri-man v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 35 L.R.A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81, 46 Pac. 730, 44 Pac. 600; State ex rel. Crow v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 152 Mo. 1, 45 L.R.A. 363, 52 S. W. 595; State ex rel. Watson v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L.R.A. 145, 34 Am. St. Rep. 541, 30 N. E. 279; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L.R.A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267, 27 L.R.A. 437, 45 Am. St. Rep. 609, 39 N. E. 1062; People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 23 L.R.A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690, 34 N. E. 785.

The test of illegality is not the intent with which a combination is entered into, nor its actual present effect, but the power it has or may have to produce the same or another or different effect in the future, such effect being restraint upon trade and commerce.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 48 L. ed. 608, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. 64 L.R.A. 689, 60 C. C. A. 290, 125 Fed. 454; Gibbs v. McNeeley, 60 L.R.A. 152, 55 C. C. A. 70, 118 Fed. 120; United States v. Swift & Co. 122 Fed. 529, affirmed in 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 518, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276.

Rule 26, in and of itself, is an unlawful restraint of trade, and an unlawful limitation upon open and free competition in the purchase and sale of grain, and, as such, a violation of the statute.

Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 40 L. ed. 838, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; United States v. Swift & Co. 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 518, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. supra; United States v. Coal Dealers' Asso. 85 Fed. 252; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Bailey v. Master Plumbers' Asso. 103 Tenn. 99, 46 L.R.A. 561, 52 S. W. 853.

Messrs. Davis, Kellogg, & Severance, and Sullivan & Grant, for respondents:

The anti-trust law does not cover nor does it purport to cover, combinations or organizations of men who charge for personal services rendered.

Gray v. Building Trades Council, 91 Minn. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

171, 63 L.R.A. 753, 103 Am. St. Rep. 477, 97 N. W. 663, 1118, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 172; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis (Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwestern Lumbermen's Asso.) 54 Minn. 223, 21 L.R.A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319, 55 N. W. 1119; State ex rel. Monnett v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co. 61 Ohio St. 520, 56 N. E. 464; Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club, 140 Mich. 538, 112 Am. St. Rep. 420, 104 N. W. 40.

The defendant corporation is fully authorized by statute to make and enforce the rules in question, and they are not in restraint of trade.

Stewart v. Erie & W. Transp. Co. 17 Minn. 372, Gil. 348; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, supra; Ertz v. Produce Exchange, 79 Minn. 140, 48 L.R.A. 90, 79 Am. St. Rep. 433, 81 N. W. 737; Gray v. Building Trades Council, supra; Fowle v. Park, 131 U. S. 88, 33 L. ed. 67, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. ed. 290, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Anderson v. United States, 171 U. S. 604, 43 L. ed. 300, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 196; Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. 64 L.R.A. 689, 60 C. C. A. 290, 125 Fed. 454; Arthur v. Oakes, 25 L.R.A. 414, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 744, 11 C. C. A. 209, 24 U. S. App. 239, 63 Fed. 310; Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 125 Fed. 121; Reynolds v. Plumbers' Material Protective Asso. 30 Misc. 709, 63 N. Y. Supp. 303; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464, 13 N. E. 419; Matthews v. Associated Press, 136 N. Y. 333, 32 Am. St. Rep. 741, 32 N. E. 981; John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Asso. 175 N. Y. 1, 62 L.R.A. 632, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578, 67 N. E. 136; Russell v. New York Produce Exchange, 27 Misc. 381, 58 N. Y. Supp. 842; State ex rel. Cuppel v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. W. 760; Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 287; Central Shade Roller Co. v. Cushman, 143 Mass. 353, 9 N. E. 629; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 35 L.R.A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077; Pitcher v. Board of Trade, 121 Ill. 412, 13 N. E. 187; American Live Stock Commission Co. v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 143 Ill. 210, 18 L.R.A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 32 N. E. 274; Ulery v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 54 Ill. App. 233; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Searles, 85 Miss. 520, 68 L.R.A. 715, 37 So. 939; Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 56 N. J. Eq. 680, 39 Atl. 923; Herri-man v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 35 L.R.A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81, 46 Pac. 730, 44 Pac. 600; Macauley Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 37 L.R.A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 Atl. 1; Gladish v. Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, 113 Mo. App. 726, 89 S. W. 77; Delz v. Winfree, 80 Tex. 400, 26 Am. St. Rep. 755, 16 S. W. 111; Warren v. Louisville Leaf Tobacco Exchange (Ky.) 55 S. W. 912; Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 544; Gibbins v. Metcalfe, 15 Manitoba L. Rep. 560; Dos Passos, Stock Exchange, p. 25.

ELLIOTT, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The trial court found that the Duluth Board of Trade, as organized and conducted, is not an arrangement, conspiracy, or combination in restraint of commerce within the state; that it does not restrain, limit, interfere with, or destroy open and free competition in the purchase and sale of grain at Duluth; that competition between seller and buyer is active and free; that the board does not fix prices of grain, nor prevent nor limit competition in the purchase or sale of grain; but that the facilities which it furnishes are in aid of the traffic in grain from the point of production to the point of consumption.

1. The right of the state to appeal in a proceeding of this nature has been discussed by counsel at great length. The action is in form a civil proceeding, wherein the state seeks to obtain a judgment forfeiting the corporate privileges, powers, and franchises, dissolving the corporation, and disposing of its property, and enjoining the defendants and each of them from in any way continuing the alleged conspiracy, and from in any way interfering with, restraining, or limiting open and free competition in the sale and purchase of produce in the Duluth market or elsewhere. It is authorized by the statute, and is a civil proceeding, notwithstanding the fact that the statute makes the prohibited acts criminal. Without entering upon an extended discussion of the question, we sustain the right of the state to prosecute the appeal.

2. The finding that there has been no conspiracy or boycott against the Minnesota Farmers' Exchange, and that it never applied for membership in the Duluth Board of Trade, leaves but one question to be determined, and that is whether, by the promulgation of rule 26, and the transaction of business thereunder, the defendant has entered into a combination, contract, arrangement, or conspiracy in violation of chapter 359, p. 487, Gen. Laws 1899.

The public policy of this state with reference to combinations and agreements which tend to restrain trade and limit, restrict, or regulate the production, price, and distribution of articles of trade, manufacture, or use, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

has been declared by constitutional provisions and statutory enactments.

In 1888 there was embodied in the organic law of the state a declaration that "any combination of persons, either as individuals or as members or officers of any corporation to monopolize the markets for food products in this state, or to interfere with or restrict the freedom of such markets, is hereby declared to be a criminal conspiracy, and shall be punished in such manner as the legislature may provide." Const. art. 4, § 35. In 1891 the legislature enacted a statute denouncing as illegal all combinations to fix prices or to control the production of any commodity. Gen. Laws 1891, chap. 10, p. 82. In 1899 the provisions of this statute were elaborated and re-enacted as chapter 359 of the General Laws of that year, which was in force when the present action was commenced. It provided that "any contract, arrangement, or conspiracy, or any combination in the form of a trust, or otherwise, hereafter entered into, which is in restraint of trade or commerce within this state, or in restraint of trade or commerce between any of the people of this state and any of the people of any other state or country, or which limits or tends to limit or control the supply of any article, commodity, or utility, or the articles which enter into the manufacture of any article or [of] utility, or which regulates, limits, or controls or raises, or tends to regulate, limit, control, or raise the market price of any article, commodity, or utility, or tends to limit or regulate the production of any such article, commodity, or utility, or in any manner destroys, limits, or interferes with open and free competition in either the production, purchase, or sale of any commodity, article, or utility, is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful. . . .

"Any corporation heretofore or hereafter created, organized, or existing under the laws of this state, which shall hereafter either directly or indirectly make any contract, agreement, or arrangement, or enter into any combination, conspiracy, or trust, as defined in section one (1) of this act, shall, in addition to the penalty prescribed in section two (2) of this act, forfeit its charter, rights, and franchises, and it shall thereafter be unlawful for such corporation to engage in business, either as a corporation or as a part of any combination, trust, or monopoly, except as to the final disposition of its property under the laws of this state."

With the exception of a provision prohibiting boycotting (Gen. Laws 1901, chap. 194, p. 269), no further changes were made in the law until the adoption of the Revised Laws of 1905, in which the act of 1899 appears in substance as §§ 5168 and 5169. Section 5168 provides that "no person or association of persons shall enter into any pool, trust agreement, combination, or understanding whatsoever with any other person or association, corporate or otherwise, in restraint of trade within this state, or between the people of this or of any other state or country, or which tends in any way or degree to limit, fix, control, maintain, or regulate, the price of any article of trade, manufacture, or use, bought and sold within the state, or which limits or which tends to limit the production of any such article, or which prevents or limits competition in the purchase and sale thereof, or which tends or is designed so to do. Every person violating any provision of this section, or assisting in such violation, shall be guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than three nor more than five years."

A subsequent statute (Gen. Laws 1907, chap. 252, p. 342), makes it unlawful for persons or corporations handling grain at public warehouses in the state to enter into any combination, contract, agreement, or understanding with any other person or corporation owning or operating any other public warehouse at any railway station, whereby the amount of grain to be received or handled shall be equalized or pooled between such warehouses, or whereby the profits or earnings derived from such warehouses shall be divided or pooled or apportioned in any manner, or whereby the price to be paid for any kind of grain at such station shall be fixed or in any manner affected.

3. The Minnesota anti-trust law is framed along the lines of the Federal statute, although it is more diffuse. It may fairly be assumed, however, that the general purpose of all statutes of this kind is the same, and we may therefore properly look to the decisions made under Federal and state statutes of a similar character for the principle by which to construe our own statute. Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co. (C. C.) 123 Fed. 692. The first clause or part of the statute prohibits agreements and combinations in restraint of trade, thus following the language of § 1 of the Federal statute (act July 2, 1890, chap. 647, 26 Stat. at L. 209, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200). This general language is then followed by provisions which specifically forbid combinations or agreements which tend in any way to limit, fix, control, maintain, or regulate the price or production of any article of trade, manufacture, or use, bought and sold within the state, or which prevent or limit competition in the sale or purchase of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) the same. The statute thus specifically refers to such agreements as affect the price or production of articles of the kind named, or competition in the purchase and sale thereof.

We have reached the conclusion that, in view of the statutory powers of the Duluth Board of Trade, the nature of its business, and the services for which the uniform charges are required to be made, the agreement embodied in rule 26 does not constitute a combination, contract, or understanding in restraint of trade or commerce within this state, nor does it tend to limit, fix, maintain, control, or regulate the price or production of any article of trade, manufacture, or use, or to prevent or limit competition in the purchase or sale of the same, within the purview of the anti-trust statute. All cases of this character must be determined and controlled by their own facts; and before examining the anti-trust statutes and decisions, for the purpose of trying to find some controlling principle, it may be well to ascertain the statutory powers of the Duluth Board of Trade, the nature of its business, and the conditions under which it is carried on.

In 1868 (Laws 1868, chap. 20, p. 35) the legislature enacted a law which authorized any number of persons, not less than three, in any town or city having a population of more than 3,000, to proceed according to the provisions of title 111, chap. 34, Gen. Stat. 1866, for the organization of corporations for purposes other than pecuniary, to "associate themselves and become incorporated as a chamber of commerce or a board of trade for the purpose of advancing the commercial, mercantile, and manufacturing interests of such city or town, for inculcating just and equitable principles of trade, for establishing and maintaining uniformity in the commercial usages of said city or town, for acquiring, possessing, and disseminating useful business information, and for adjusting the controversies and misunderstandings which may arise between individuals engaged in trade, and for promoting the general prosperity of such city or town." The ordinary powers were conferred upon such corporations, and in addition thereto they were authorized to constitute committees of reference and arbitration and committees of appeals, to be governed by such rules and regulations as may be prescribed in the rules, regulations, and by-laws, for the settlement of matters of difference between members of the association and other persons not members. They were authorized to "examine, measure, weigh, gauge, or inspect flour, grain, provisions, liquor, lumber, or any other articles of produce or traffic commonly dealt in by the members of said corporation, and the certificate of such person or inspector as to the quality or quantity of any such articles, or their brand or mark upon it, or upon any package containing such article, shall be evidence between buyer and seller of the quantity, grade, or quality of the same, and shall be binding upon the members of said corporation or others interested and requiring or assenting to the employment of such weights, measures, gauges, or inspectors."

Chapter 20, p. 35, Gen. Laws 1868, was carried forward into Gen. Stat. 1878, where it became §§ 197-199, inclusive, of chapter 34. Chapter 37, p. 54, Gen. Laws 1881, amended § 2, chap. 20, p. 36, Gen. Laws 1868, and provided that corporations organized thereunder "shall have full power and authority to purchase, improve, hold, use, rent, mortgage, sell, and convey, such real and personal property as it may deem advisable, and may by resolution or by-law prescribe the terms and conditions of membership and the mode of admitting members, and in like manner may prescribe what officers it will have, their mode of election or appointment, and their functions and duties, and generally as to the management and transaction of all its business and affairs." In 1883 (Gen. Laws 1883, chap 138, p. 193) the legislature enacted a new statute, providing for the organization of chambers of commerce and boards of trade. This statute expressly legalized all such corporations which had been incorporated under chapter 20, Gen. Laws 1868, and chapter 37, Gen. Laws 1881, and conferred upon them all the power, authority, and jurisdiction conferred on such as should be organized under the new act. By this act the powers of such corporations were specifically stated and somewhat enlarged. The 1868 statute had provided that such corporations could be organized "for establishing and maintaining uniformity in the commercial usages of such city or town." The act of 1883 authorized their creation in counties, as well as in cities and towns,—the restriction as to population being retained,—and added, after "maintaining" the words "and enforcing." Fines for a breach of the rules, regulations, and by-laws might be imposed on the members and collected in the courts as in an action for debt. In 1887 (Gen. Laws 1887, chap. 87, p. 138) § 1 of the act of 1883 was amended so as to provide for the organization of chambers of commerce or boards of trade, or both, in any organized village, city, town, or county, without reference to the population thereof. The existing statute became §§ 2982-2984, inclusive, subtitle 7, title 3, chap. 34, Gen. Stat. 1894, and §§ 3112 et seq., Rev. Laws 1905.

The Duluth Board of Trade was organized 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

January 31, 1881, under the 1868 statute, and two months before the enactment of chapter 37, Gen. Laws 1881. The articles of incorporation stated that (1) "the general nature of its business is to establish and maintain uniformity in commercial usages, to inculcate just and equitable principles of trade, to adjust controversies and business disputes, to acquire and disseminate valuable business information, and particularly to maintain a commercial exchange, and to secure to its members the benefits of co-operation in the furtherance of their legitimate pursuits. The principal place of the transaction of said business is in Duluth, St. Louis county, state of Minnesota." (2) "The qualifications and terms of membership in this corporation shall be subject to such by-laws and to such fees and assessments as may be fixed by the board of directors from time to time." By virtue of the provisions of the subsequent statute, its powers were made the same as similar corporations organized under the later law. It has continued to exist until the present time, and Rev. Laws 1905, § 2838, provides that "all private corporations existing and doing business at the time of the taking effect of the Revised Laws shall continue to exercise and enjoy all powers and privileges possessed by them under their respective articles of incorporation and the laws applicable thereto then in force. . . ."

It is through such organizations as the Duluth Board of Trade that the grain trade of the Northwest has been and now is largely transacted. The purposes for which such corporations may be created are stated in the statute and in the articles of incorporation of this defendant. The primary object is to furnish facilities for the proper conduct of business. The board of trade itself neither buys nor sells grain. It maintains an exchange room where the representatives of buyers and sellers meet and compete, and their competition results in trades in grain. It maintains telegraphic communication with other grain markets, and furnishes and posts information as to such markets and as to crop conditions generally. It has a building, in which its members engaged in the grain trade have offices, as do others who are connected more or less directly therewith. It is not claimed that the board fixes prices at which grain is purchased and sold. It collects and publishes statistics. It makes a market, in the sense that it keeps a record of actual transactions in the buying and selling of grain, thus making a Duluth market, in the sense that there is a Chicago and Minneapolis market. These things necessarily promote, instead of restrict, the grain trade. As said by the trial court, instead of limiting competition in the purchase and sale of grain, "the facilities which it furnishes are in aid of the traffic in grain, from the point of production to the point of consumption."

The nature of the grain business seems to require peculiar and unusual facilities for its transaction. The grain is brought by the producer to local stations, where it is placed in elevators or sold to local buyers. It must then be shipped to terminal points, like Duluth or Minneapolis, to be there disposed of on the market. These great central markets are essential, not only for the preservation and storing of the grain in large quantities, but also in order that the business may be financed. At about the same time in each year great sums of money are required for this purpose, and it is stated that the banks of Minneapolis and Duluth furnish each year to the grain men from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000. This money, which is absolutely necessary for the moving of the crops, cannot be obtained unless the business is so organized and conducted as to minimize the risks resulting from fluctuating prices. Through these organizations the demoralization of prices of the products which constitute the basis of credits is prevented. These markets also enable parties operating elevator lines and purchasing large quantities of grain to sell for future delivery on each day substantially the amount of grain which they purchase at interior points, thus reducing the hazards of the business, and enabling them to procure from financial institutions the funds necessary to move the crops.

The business of handling grain is of such a nature as to subject it to regulations which would be entirely unjustifiable if applied to a purely private business. It is because the business is of a quasi public nature that even the owner of a country elevator, who buys for himself alone, and is his own grader and weighmaster, may be required to secure a license from the state. State ex rel. Railroad & W. Commission v. W. W. Cargill Co. 77 Minn. 223, 79 N. W. 962, Id. 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423. For the same reason, the legislature may make a weighmaster's certificate prima facie evidence of what is stated therein. Vega S. S. Co. v. Consolidated Elevator Co. 75 Minn. 308, 43 L.R.A. 843, 74 Am. St. Rep. 484, 77 N. W. 973. It may also require all persons who sell grain on commission to take out a license and execute a bond for the protection of persons who deal with them. State ex rel. Beek v. Wagener, 77 Minn. 483, 46 L.R.A. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 681, 80 N. W. 633, 778, 1134; State v. Edwards, 94 Minn. 225, 69 L.R.A. 667, 102 N. W. 697. See generally State ex rel. Stoesser v. Brass, 2 N. D. 482, 52 N. W. 408, Id. 153 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

757, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 670, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; American Live Stock Commission Co. v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 143 Ill. 210, 18 L.R.A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 32 N. E. 274; New York & C. Grain & Stock Exchange v. Board of Trade, 127 Ill. 153, 2 L.R.A. 411, 11 Am. St. Rep. 107, 19 N. E. 855. The fact that a business is affected with a public use does not, of course, exempt it from the operation of the anti-trust statute. But the general policy of the law, which requires uniformity of charges by persons engaged in such business, may well have a bearing upon the construction of the statute. These conditions, which are matters of general knowledge, must be taken into consideration in determining whether the legislature, when it enacted the anti-trust statute, intended to interfere with the well-understood workings of boards of trade and chambers of commerce, which had been organized under statutes designed to afford proper facilities for the marketing of grain and other produce.

The legislatures and courts recognize that such organizations serve a useful and proper purpose in modern business communities, and no disposition has been shown to unduly restrict the exercise of their corporate powers and functions. Evans v. Chamber of Commerce, 86 Minn. 448, 91 N. W. 8; McCarthy Bros. Co. v. Chamber of Commerce, 105 Minn. 497, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 589, 117 N. W. 923. The Duluth Board of Trade was organized long before the enactment of the anti-trust law, under a statute which expressly authorized such corporations. Both statutes were subsequently embodied in the Revised Laws. The anti-trust statute applies to all persons, associations, and corporations, and the members thereof; but it should not be construed so as to destroy or cripple a legitimate, legally authorized business, unless such clearly appears to have been the legislative intention. But if the Duluth Board of Trade is transacting its business in a manner which is against the public policy of the state, it must change its methods or cease doing business. In order to determine what is forbidden by the statute, it is necessary to examine the common law and the statutes by which it has been declared and supplemented, as well as the construction which has been placed thereon by the courts. The evils sought to be remedied are general, and the statutes, national and state, are similar in purpose, though somewhat diverse in form.

4. To say that a combination restrains trade and prevents competition is a repetition of the same idea,—the giving of two names to the same thing. Whatever restrains trade prevents competition, and whatever prevents competition in trade necessarily restrains trade. The word "monopoly," which plays so great a part in the law, conveys the same idea, because where there is monopoly there can be no competition. Production, and hence prices, are under the control of the monopolist, to the possible and probable injury of the public. Freedom of trade requires competition. Without one the other cannot exist, and whatever restrains the one restricts the other. It is true that unrestrained and unregulated competition may destroy what it is designed to preserve; but the theory of law and legislation still is that the welfare of the public requires that competition in trade and commerce shall exist, in order that freedom of trade may be maintained. To understand the language of the statute, it is necessary to know something of its history. The contract in restraint of trade, which originally fell under the condemnation of the common law, was one whereby a party bound himself not to follow some particular occupation, trade, calling, or profession, or to engage in some particular business for a period within a particular territory. From the earliest time the policy of the English law has been to discourage these voluntary restraints which tradesmen were induced to impose upon themselves, because they intended to deprive the community of the services of one of its members, and frequently tended to create a monopoly, and thus destroy the freedom of trade.

An early, and possibly the first, case in which a contract of this character was held void was decided during the reign of Henry V. Year Book, 2 Hen. V. (1415). It appeared that a dyer had bound himself not to exercise his trade for six months in the same town with the plaintiff. After holding the contract void, the court indignantly exclaimed: "Per Dieu! If the plaintiff were here, he should go to prison until he had paid a fine to the King!" In 1602, in Colgate v. Bacher, Cro. Eliz. pt. 2, p. 872, it was said that it was against the law "to prohibit or restrain any to use a lawful trade at any time or at any place; for as well as he may restrain him for one time, or one place, he may restrain him for longer times and more places, which is against the benefit of the commonwealth." The reasons assigned for the invalidity of such contracts were that they disabled a man from acquiring a livelihood, thus depriving the community of the benefit of his labor, and possibly requiring it to support him and his family, and had a tendency to give the covenantee a monopoly of the trade from which he had thus excluded one competitor, and by the same means might exclude others. In the leading case of Mitchel v.

Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, decided in 1711, Chief Justice Parker declared that the courts should not approve such contracts, because of the mischief which might arise from them to the party by the loss of his livelihood and the subsistence of his family, and to the public by reason of depriving it of a useful member, and also because they enabled parties to obtain exclusive advantages in trade by reducing it into as few hands as possible. These reasons are more fully stated by Mr. Justice Morton in Alger v. Thatcher, 19 Pick. 51, 31 Am. Dec. 119.

All restraints of trade were then thought to be unlawful; but in the course of time it was found that so rigorous and far-reaching a rule seriously interfered with ordinary everyday business transactions, and it was gradually relaxed until it is now the law of England and America that contracts in partial restraint of trade are valid, when reasonably necessary to protect the legitimate interests of the covenantee. It must, however, be a restraint which, under all the circumstances and conditions, is reasonable, and, as said by Tindal, Ch. J., in Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735: "We do not see how a better test can be applied to the question whether reasonable or not than by considering whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in favor of whom it is given, and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the public." Nordenfelt v. Maxim-Nordenfelt Guns & Ammunition Co. [1894] A. C. 535; United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L.R.A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 141, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271; Oregon Steam Nav. Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 64, 22 L. ed. 315; Kronschabel-Smith Co. v. Kronschabel, 87 Minn. 230, 91 N. W. 892; National Ben. Co. v. Union Hospital Co. 45 Minn. 272, 11 L.R.A. 437, 47 N. W. 806; Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co. 130 U. S. 396, 32 L. ed. 979, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553; Diamond Match Co. v. Roeber, 106 N. Y. 473, 60 Am. Rep. 464, 13 N. E. 419. As stated in a recent English text-book: "The sole test of the validity of a contract in restraint of trade is its reasonableness in the interests of the covenantee," subject to the proviso that "the covenant must not otherwise offend against public policy." Matthews & A. Restraint of Trade (1907) chap. 2, p. 39.

If a contract is unreasonable according to this test, it is invalid at common law; and this, in the particular case, may be because of either or both of the reasons given by the judges in the earlier cases. It restricts the freedom of the individual, limits his capacity to utilize his labor and skill for the benefit of himself, his family, and the public, and prevents him from competing with the covenantee in the trade or business from which he is excluded, to the injury of the public, which is thus deprived of the benefits which result from the freedom of trade. But, as said by Judge Taft, in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. supra: "Where the sole object of both parties in making the contract, as expressed therein, is merely to restrain competition and enhance or maintain prices, it would seem that there was nothing to justify or excuse the restraint,—that it would necessarily have a tendency to monopoly, and therefore would be void. In such a case there is no measure of what is necessary to the protection of either party, except the vague and varying opinion of judges as to how much, on principles of political economy, men ought to be allowed to restrain competition. There is, in such contracts, no main lawful purpose, to subserve which partial restraint is permitted, and by which its reasonableness is measured; but the sole object is to restrain trade in order to avoid the competition which it has always been the policy of the common law to foster."

We have, then, two distinct kinds of contracts which the common law recognized as in restraint of trade: (1) Contracts per se in restraint of trade, whereby an individual contracts himself out of a trade; and (2) contracts which tend to destroy competition and thus create monopolies. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 403, 48 L. ed 727, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436. The validity of the first class is determined by the reasonableness of the particular contract, while the second class are against public policy and invalid because of their tendencies, without reference to their reasonableness. The former are generally, if not always, ancillary to a valid principal contract, and, although technically in restraint of trade, are not within the purview of the anti-trust statute. Cincinnati, P. B. S. & P. Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179, 50 L. ed. 428, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; A. Booth & Co. v. Davis (C. C.) 127 Fed. 875; Espenson v. Koepke, 93 Minn. 279, 101 N. W. 168. See Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U. S. 423, 52 L. ed. 865, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572.

The contracts or agreements in restraint of trade which fall under the condemnation of the anti-trust statute are of the second class, and are contrary to public policy because they have a tendency to prevent competition in trade and commerce. The Englishmen of the 1400's, blindly groping for some means of protecting themselves from unconscionable traders, adopted what now seems the absurd device of prohibiting entirely the buying and selling of certain articles for profit. They desired, if possible, to be free to deal with tradesmen who were themselves free to buy and sell without restraint. They therefore made the buying up large quantities of corn and other victuals with the intent to sell them again an indictable offense, because this of course must be injurious to the public by putting it in the power of one or two rich men to raise the price of provisions at their own discretion. It will be observed that this act applied to victuals and breadstuffs only, but Stat. 5 & 6 Edw. VI., chap. 14, made criminal the buying or contracting for any merchandise or victuals coming on the way to markets, or dissuading persons from buying their goods there, or persuading them to enhance the price when there, any of which practices makes the market dearer to the fair trader. Stephen's History Crim. Law of England, vol. 3, pp. 199 et seq. The owners of certain salt works were charged with raising the price of salt, and Lord Mansfield, in granting a motion to file an information against them for conspiracy, said: "If an agreement was made to fix the price of salt or any other necessity of life by people dealing in that commodity, the court would be glad to lay hold of an opportunity, from what quarter whatsoever the complaint came, to show them the sense of the crime, and that what rate soever the price was fixed, high or low, made no difference, for all such agreements are of bad consequence and ought to be discontinued." See Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 672. The act thus commented upon by Lord Mansfield is forbidden by modern anti-trust statutes, and expressly by the second part of the Minnesota statute. The old offenses of regrating, engrossing, and forestalling are no longer known to the law; but modern legislatures are still seeking a solution of the same problem,—how to maintain the right to freely buy and sell the necessities and conveniences of life in a market which is free from artificial and conventional restrictions.

More objectionable, because more far-reaching and detrimental to the public interests, were the special privileges enjoyed under grants from the Crown, which were known as "monopolies." The technical monopoly, as distinguished from the practical monopoly of modern times, was a license or privilege, granted by the sovereign to an individual for the sole buying and selling, making, working, or using of anything whatsoever, whereby the people in general were excluded from the liberty of manufacturing and trading, which they had before enjoyed. In Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown (6th ed.) vol. 1. p. 470, chap. 79, a monopoly is defined as "an allowance by the King to any person or persons of the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using of anything whereby any person is sought to be restrained from any freedom which he had before, or hindered from his lawful trade." It differed from engrossing only in that, in the case of monopoly, a patent was had from the King, while engrossing was a transaction between individuals. 4 Bl. Com. p. 459; 3 Coke, Inst. p. 181; Leeper v. State, 103 Tenn. 500, 48 L.R.A. 167, 53 S. W. 962.

The practice of granting privileges of this character has been common in all countries, and still survives to a limited extent even in this country. The abuse of the power by Queen Elizabeth so stirred the people to righteous wrath and indignation that "the coach of the chief minister to the Crown was surrounded by an indignant populace, who cursed the monopolies, and exclaimed that the prerogative should not be suffered to touch the old liberties of England." Macaulay's History of England, vol. 1, p. 50. In the Long Parliament, Sir John Culpeper bitterly declared that the monopolists "are a nest of wasps, a swarm of vermin, which have overcrept the land. . . . These are like the frogs of Egypt, they have gotten possession of our dwellings, and we have scarce a room free from them. They sup in our cup; they dip in our dish; they sit by our fire. We find them in the dye fat, washbowl, and powdering pot. They share with the butler in his box. . . . They will not bait us a pin. We may not buy our own cloaths without their brokerage. These are the leeches that have sucked the commonwealth so hard that it is almost hectical. Mr. Speaker, I have echoed to you the cries of the kingdom. I will tell you their hopes. They look to Heaven for a blessing upon this Parliament." As early as 1602 it was held in Darcy v. Allein (Case of Monopolies) 11 Coke, 84b that such monopolies were void at common law. Darcy had been granted the exclusive right to make, import, and sell playing cards within the realm. The court held the grant void, because it was a monopoly and against the common law, for reasons which, when carefully analyzed, seem to reduce themselves to the single one that monopolies prevent competition and thus control prices. In 1025, Parliament, by Stat. 21 James I., chap. 3, forbade the granting of monopolies save in certain specified cases. Yarmouth v. Darel, 3 Mod. 75; East India Co. v. Sandys, Skinner, 132 (1684), 10 How. St. Tr. 371. Elaborate and instructive discussions of the history and nature of monopolies will be found in the opinions of Mr. Justice Story in Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773, and Mr. Justice Field in the Slaughter-house Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394, and in Senator Nelson's report on the proposed amendment of the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sherman act, Rept. 710, 848, 60th Cong. 2d Sess. (1909).

The modern monopolies, against which the legislatures, courts, and people inveigh, are generally such as result indirectly from the legislative grant of some exclusive privilege, or the right to carry on a business which is dependent upon the existence of some special privilege or franchise. A practical monopoly may exist without the aid of a legislative grant, as it may result from the control of a trade or industry, brought about by means of contracts and combinations between competitors. In the modern sense, and within the meaning of the Federal statute and the Constitution and statute of Minnesota, trade and commerce are monopolized "when, as a result of efforts to that end, previously competing businesses are so concentrated in the hands of a single person or corporation, or a few persons or corporations acting together, that they have power to practically control the prices of a commodity, and thus to practically suppress competition." Noyes, Intercorporate Relations, 2d ed. 389, and cases cited; National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U. S. 129, 49 L. ed. 694, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379 (McKenna, J.). Like the ancient monopolies, the practical monopoly is under the ban of the law because it tends to prevent competition and enhance the price or deteriorate the quality of the commodity or service to which it relates. National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, supra; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Harding v. American Glucose Co. 182 Ill. 551, 64 L.R.A. 738, 74 Am. St. Rep. 189, 55 N. E. 577.

From these analogous acts, which were illegal at common law, and under the English statutes which became a part of the common law, it appears that the purpose in all the prohibitions was to preserve the freedom of trade by means of free competition between the traders themselves, in order that the public should not be required to pay exorbitant prices for articles of common use and necessity. It was to prevent any man or set of men from possessing the power to arbitrarily determine the price at which an article of common use shall be sold, because he who controls prices is the master of the world. The well-being of the trader, and the indirect benefit to the community through his activities, was also an important factor; but much of the solicitude for the individual which was manifested in the early decisions seems unnecessary to modern eyes, and plays a minor part in modern cases, which are determined by the test of public policy.

At common law, contracts in restraint of trade were not unlawful in the sense of being criminal, nor did their breach give rise to a civil action. They were simply unenforceable. United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L.R.A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 141, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271; Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor [1892] A. C. 25; Hornby v. Close, L. R. 2 Q. B. 153. Such contracts could not be enforced, nor could monopolies be legally enjoyed; but neither the making of the one nor the acquiring and enjoying of the other was a crime. A conspiracy to create a monopoly in commodities which constitute the necessities of life, or to enhance the market price thereof, to the prejudice of the consumer, was and is a criminal offense at common law. See Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632, 6 L.R.A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102; Nestor v. Continental Brewing Co. 161 Pa. 473, 24 L.R.A. 247, 41 Am. St. Rep. 894, 29 Atl. 102; Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 114 Ill. App. 75; Pocahontas Coke Co. v. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. 60 W. Va. 508, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 268, 116 Am. St. Rep. 901, 56 S. E. 264, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 667; People v. Fisher, 14 Wend. 9, 28 Am. Dec. 501; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 267, 27 L.R.A. 437, 45 Am. St. Rep. 609, 39 N. E. 1062; American Biscuit & Mfg. Co. v. Klotz (C. C.) 44 Fed. 723; People v. Sheldon, 139 N. Y. 251, 23 L.R.A. 221, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690, 34 N. E. 785; Harding v. American Glucose Co. 182 Ill. 615, 64 L.R.A. 738, 74 Am. St. Rep. 189, 55 N. E. 577. A very complete collection of cases decided on common-law principles will be found in notes in (1895) 11 Am. R. & Corp. Rep. 388, 445, and 474. See also Noyes, Intercorporate Relations, 2d ed. chaps. 35, 36.

5. The common-law rules were sufficient under ordinary conditions to protect the public and yet leave ample freedom for legitimate business transactions. But the astonishing material development of this country, with its opportunities for exploitation and the acquisition of great wealth, produced conditions which the common law, with its inadequate remedies, seemed unable to control. Competition was rapidly being eliminated from the business situation, with the result that the prices of most of the articles of everyday use were determined arbitrarily by men who controlled their production and distribution, instead of by the laws which are supposed to operate when trade and commerce are free from artificial restraints. These abuses led to the enactment of a series of statutes which are popularly known as "anti-trust statutes."

(a) The most important of these, because of the nature and magnitude of the interests affected, is the Sherman anti-trust statute of July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies." (20 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200. Its terms are very general, and its prohibitions are against (1) contracts and combinations in restraint of trade and (2) attempts to monopolize trade or any part thereof. Section 1 provides that "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal" and punishable as a crime. Section 2 provides that "every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several states or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." The statute is made applicable to the District of Columbia and the territories, and its enforcement is provided for through criminal proceedings and the injunctive power of the courts. Individuals who are injured by reason of a violation of this statute are given a remedy by way of damages against the wrongdoer. To aid in its enforcement Congress has enacted statutes providing for the prompt hearing of suits in equity instituted by the government, and providing for special officers, with ample funds under their control. 26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3200 et seq.; 32 Stat. at L. 823, 904, chaps. 544, 755, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1903, pp. 376, 366, 367. See also the anti-trust provision of the Wilson tariff act (Act August 27, 1894, chap. 349, §§ 73-77, 28 Stat. at L. 570, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3202, 3203) and the immunity proviso of appropriation act Feb. 25, 1903, chap. 755, 32 Stat. at L. 904, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 884.

The validity of the Sherman act as an exercise of the power to regulate commerce was sustained in United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25. It embraces only agreements and combinations and acts which have direct connection with interstate and foreign commerce; but such commerce comprehends intercourse for all the purposes of trade, in any and all its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between citizens of different states, and the power to regulate it embraces all the instrumentalities by which such commerce is conducted. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. ed. 200, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40. Its prohibitions are broader than those of the common law against restraints of trade. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. ed. 488, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 815; Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Lewis Voight & Sons Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 143, 78 C. C. A. 567, 148 Fed. 939. It has therefore been held to apply to railroads and other public-service corporations, and to prohibit all combinations or acts which cause restraint of interstate commerce, whether such restraint is reasonable or unreasonable. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 328, 41 L. ed. 1023, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. ed. 679, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Pocahontas Coke Co. v. Powhatan Coal & Coke Co. 60 W. Va. 508, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 268, 116 Am. St. Rep. 901, 56 S. E. 264, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 667. It makes no distinction between classes of persons, and applies to combinations of laborers as well as capitalists. Loewe v. Lawlor, supra. A combination to restrain a part of interstate commerce, whether reasonable or unreasonable, is as illegal as a successful monopolization of the whole of interstate commerce. The statute prohibits "any combination whatever to secure action which essentially obstructs the free flow of commerce between the states, or restricts in that regard the liberty of a trader to engage in business." Ibid. As construed by the circuit court of the second circuit, it makes illegal every combination by which competition is ended or suspended between two or more persons engaged in interstate or foreign trade or commerce. "Disregarding various dicta," said Judge Lacombe, "and following the several propositions which have been approved by successive majorities of the Supreme Court, this language is to be construed as prohibiting any contract or combination whose direct effect is to prevent the free play of competition, and thus tend to deprive the country of the services of any number of independent dealers, however small." United States v. American Tobacco Co. (C. C.) 164 Fed. 700.

The following combinations and agreements have been held illegal under the Sherman law: An agreement between certain railroad companies, which provided for establishing and maintaining, for their mutual protection, reasonable rates, rules, and regulations in respect to freight traffic, through and local, and by which free competition between these companies was restricted. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540. An arrangement between certain railway companies with reference to railroad traffic among the states, under which the railroads were not subject to competition among themselves, even though the contracts were in themselves reasonable. United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. supra. An agreement between certain private companies and corporations engaged in different states in the manufacture, sale and transportation of iron pipe, whereby competition among them was avoided. Adams Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, supra. A combination created by an agreement between certain dealers in tiles, grates, and mantels in different states, whereby they controlled, or sought to control, the price of such articles in these states. W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 384, 48 L. ed. 608, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307. A combination of publishers and booksellers to fix prices and compel publishers and dealers by means of rewards and punishments, to sell at the prices so fixed. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus (C. C.) 139 Fed. 155. See Scribner v. Straus (C. C.) 139 Fed. 193.

A contract or agreement whereby a holding corporation was created, to which the stockholders of competing parallel lines of railways, contrary to the laws of the state which created the competing companies, agreed to transfer the stock of both roads, was prohibited by the Sherman act, because it tended to destroy competition among carriers and create a monopoly of the trade. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, supra. In the so-called Beef Trust Case it was alleged that the defendants were guilty of the following acts: (a) Directing their purchasing agents to refrain from bidding against each other at auction sales of live stock; (b) bidding up the price of such stock for a few days at a time, to influence large shipments, and then ceasing to bid, in order to obtain the stock thus shipped at less than prevailing prices; (c) agreeing upon prices to be adopted by all, and restraining the output or quantity of meat shipped; (d) directing uniform prices for cartage and delivery throughout the United States as a device to increase the price to dealers and consumers; and (e) negotiating with carriers for secret rebates on their enormous shipments, thus bringing about unjust discrimination against other shippers and competitors, for the purpose of stifling and destroying competition. It was held on demurrer that these acts constituted an unlawful combination and conspiracy within the meaning of the Sherman act, because in restraint of trade and commerce. United States v. Swift & Co. (C. C.) 122 Fed. 529, affirmed in Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 514, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276.

The owner of a patented article may impose restrictions upon its manufacture and sale, and, if the conditions are otherwise not illegal, they will not violate the Sherman act, even though the tendency is to restrain trade. The very object of the patent laws is to create monopoly. E. Bement & Sons v. National Harrow Co. 186 U. S. 70, 46 L. ed. 1058, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747. But where the patentee went beyond the rights secured by the patent, in raising and maintaining prices in states where the patent had no practical existence, the contract was held forbidden by the Sherman act. Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co. (C. C.) 142 Fed. 531, but see 154 Fed. 358. Contracts under which a board of trade furnishes stock quotations under certain conditions are not in restraint of trade at common law or under the Sherman act. Board of Trade v. Christie Grain & Stock Co. 198 U. S. 236, 49 L. ed. 1031, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637.

(b) The Federal anti-trust act necessarily applied only to contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of interstate and international trade and commerce, and soon after its passage the states began to enact similar statutes for the purpose of reaching agreements and combinations which were beyond the reach of the Federal power. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 44 L. ed. 657, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518, and National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U. S. 115, 49 L. ed. 689, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379, sustain the power of the states to enlarge the common-law rules and prohibit combinations in restraint of trade within their borders, when such combinations limit competition in the production or sale of articles, or increase or reduce prices in order to prevent free competition. The authority to pass such laws arises out of the police power. In Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U. S. 447, 49 L. ed. 546, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289, the court, in sustaining the Kansas statute, said: "A secret arrangement by which, under penalties, an apparently existing competition among all the dealers in a community in one of the necessities of life is substantially destroyed, without any merging of interests through partnership or incorporation, is one to which the police power extends."

Anti-trust statutes of the same general character, although differing somewhat in scope and detail, are now in force in Arkansas (act March 16, 1897, p. 60; act March 6, 1899, p. 50); California (Civil Code, § 1673; Laws 1907, chap. 530, p. 984); Florida (Laws 1897, chap. 4534, p. 60, confined to beef and meats); Georgia (Laws 1896, p. 68); Illinois (Laws 1907, p. 216, amending Laws 1891, p. 206, and Laws 1893, p. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.))

89, which were declared unconstitutional in Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431); Indiana (Laws 1907, chap. 243, p. 490; Laws 1899, chap. 148, p. 257); Iowa (Code, §§ 5060-5062); Kansas (act March 8, 1897, chap. 265, p. 481, sustained in Smiley v. Kansas, supra); Kentucky (Ky. Stat. §§ 3915-3921 [Russell's Stat. §§ 3717-3723]); Louisiana (act July 7, 1892, p. 120, No. 90; Const. art. 190); Maine (Rev. Stat. 1903, chap. 47, §§ 53-55); Massachusetts (Laws 1908, chap. 454, p. 409); Michigan (Laws 1899, act No. 255, p. 409); Minnesota (Rev. Laws 1905, §§ 2098, 5168; Laws 1907, chap. 269, pp. 342, 363); Missouri (Laws 1891, p. 186; Rev. Stat. 1899, §§ 8965-8977 [Anno. Stat. 1906, pp. 4150-4156]); Montana (Penal Code 1895, chap. 8, §§ 321, 325 [Rev. Codes, §§ 8285, 8289]); Nebraska (Laws 1897, chap. 79, p. 347); North Carolina (Laws 1907, chap. 218, p. 254); Oklahoma (Laws 1907-08, chap. 83, p. 750); New York (Laws 1899, chap. 690, 727, pp. 1514, 1558; Penal Code, § 168); North Dakota (Rev. Codes 1899, §§ 7480-7484); Ohio (Bates's Anno. Stat. 1904, § 4427-1); South Carolina (act Feb. 26, 1902 [23 Stat. at L. p. 1057]); South Dakota (Laws 1907, chap. 131, p. 196; Rev. Penal Code 1903, §§ 770-781); Tennessee (act March 30, 1891, chap. 218, p. 428; act April 30, 1897, chap. 94, p. 241); Texas (Laws 1907, chap. 12, p. 16; Id. chap. 97, p. 194; Id. chap. 120, p. 221; Id. chap. 173, p. 322, and Laws 2d Sess. 1907, chap. 10, p. 456). The former statute was sustained in Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas and National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, supra; Utah (Rev. Stat. 1898, §§ 321, 1758; Const. art. 12, § 20); Wisconsin (Laws 1893, chap. 210, p. 264; Stat. 1898, §§ 1747e-1747g, 1791). A convenient summary of these statutes will be found in Noyes, Intercorporate Relation, 2d ed. chap. 41. The Constitutions of Idaho (art. 11, § 18), Kentucky (§ 198), Louisiana (art. 190), Maryland (Declaration of Rights, § 41), Minnesota (art. 4, § 35), Montana (art. 15, § 20), Utah (art. 12, § 20), Washington (art. 12, § 22), Wyoming (art. 10, § 8), and Oklahoma (art. 5, § 41), contain provisions concerning monopolies and trusts. See Stimson, Fed. & Stat. Const. § 580.

These statutes vary somewhat in their terms, and many cases have been decided under them. A reference to a few of the decisions will serve to illustrate the construction which has been placed upon the statutes by the state courts. The following have been held prohibited by the statutes:

A combination between corporations engaged in carrying freight and passengers by boat between points in different states, the purpose of which was to create a monopoly in the traffic. White Star Line v. Star Line, 141 Mich. 604, 113 Am. St. Rep. 551, 105 N. W. 135 (applies Sherman act). A contract whereby one party agrees to remain out of business, which is broader than is necessary to protect the covenantee, and which tends to restrain trade and create a monopoly. Anderson v. Shawnee Compress Co. 17 Okla. 231, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 846, 87 Pac. 315, affirmed in 209 U. S. 423, 52 L. ed. 865, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572. A contract having for its object the fixing and control of the price of farm machinery. International Harvester Co. v. Com. 124 Ky. 543, 99 S. W. 637. An agreement whereby a corporation secured the exclusive right and privilege of marketing the products of the American Tobacco Company in New York city, the company controlling 90 per cent of the tobacco business of the United States, the effect of which is to destroy competition. Locker v. American Tobacco Co. 121 App. Div. 443, 106 N. Y. Supp. 115. A series of agreements whereby substantially all the building contractors of a particular locality agreed to buy brick exclusively from certain specified manufacturers, and by which the latter agreed to sell brick to such contractors only, and by which all the bricklayers in such locality agreed to handle only the brick of such manufacturers, obtained through such contractors; the purpose being to prevent competition and control the price of brick. Purinton v. Hinchliff, 120 Ill. App. 523. The purchase by one corporation of the majority of the stock of another corporation, for the purpose of controlling the latter and preventing competition. Dunbar v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 224 Ill. 9, 115 Am. St. Rep. 132, 79 N. E. 423, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 57. "It is immaterial that it would not result in a complete monopoly,"—citing People ex rel. Peabody v. Chicago Gas Trust Co. 130 Ill. 268, 8 L.R.A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319, 22 N. E. 798; Distilling & Cattle Feeding Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 448, 47 Am. St. Rep. 200, 41 N. E. 188; Bishop v. American Preservers' Co. 157 Ill. 284, 48 Am. St. Rep. 317, 41 N. E. 765; Harding v. American Glucose Co. 182 Ill. 551, 64 L.R.A. 738, 74 Am. St. Rep. 189, 55 N. E. 577. An agreement that all salt shall be purchased from a designated company for the period of two years, in connection with an agreement not to import salt and to discourage shipments by other parties. Getz Bros. & Co. v. Federal Salt Co. 147 Cal. 115, 109 Am. St. Rep. 114, 81 Pac. 416. A contract limiting the quantity of fish to be caught during the season. Atty. Gen. ex rel. Wolverine Fish Co. v. A. Booth & Co. 143 Mich. 89, 106 N. W. 868. A combination the tendency and manifest intent of which was to prevent general competition, and thus control trade in a commodity and enable the members of the combination to dictate prices. "The ultimate object of the combination was to give to its members a monopoly in the retail coal business in their respective localities, thus enabling them to regulate prices independent of legitimate and healthy competition." Sanford v. People, 121 Ill. App. 619. "All the cases, ancient and modern, agree that a combination the tendency of which is to prevent general competition and to control prices is detrimental to the public and consequently unlawful." People v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. 22 Abb. N. C. 164, 2 L.R.A. 33, 3 N. Y. Supp. 401.

The Texas statute (Acts 1903, chap. 94, p. 119), prohibiting trusts, and defining a trust as a combination of capital, skill, or acts of two or more persons to create or carry out restrictions in the free pursuit of any business authorized by the laws of the state, or to prevent or lessen competition in transportation, was held to be violated by a contract between a railway company and an express company, whereby the latter was given exclusive privileges and the former bound itself not to contract with others to do an express business on the road, and that, if privileges should be accorded others by legislative or judicial proceedings, the express company should have credit for the sums paid by the other corporations. "The contract in question shows by its own terms that its purpose was to secure to the express companies, as far as it was in the power of the parties to do so, the exclusive right to do an express business upon the railroad, and to exclude other express companies from the enjoyment of like rights. . . . We conclude that there was the purpose to create and carry out a restriction in the free pursuit of a business," and that it was a combination of the capital, skill, and acts of both corporations. State v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 99 Tex. 516, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 783, 91 S. W. 214, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1072.

The Michigan statute (act No. 255, p. 409, Pub. Acts 1899), which made it unlawful to contract not to sell any commodity below a fixed value, or to keep the price of an article at a fixed figure, or to settle the price of any article so as to prevent competition, or to combine or unite any interest connected with the sale of any commodity that its price may be affected, made illegal a contract, embodied in the rules of a master plumber's club, which provided that the price of supplies should be fixed by a committee, at which price all were to sell to the members of the exchange. The tendency was to create monopoly, and the court said: "It is no answer to say, that this monopoly has, in fact, reduced the price. . . . That policy may have been necessary to crush competition. The fact exists that it rests in the discretion of [the direction of] this company at any time to raise the price to an exorbitant degree." Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club, 140 Mich. 538, 112 Am. St. Rep. 420, 104 N. W. 40; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 660, 6 L.R.A. 457, 43 N. W. 1102.

The Nebraska statutes (Sess. Laws 1887, chap. 114, p. 675, and Sess. Laws 1897, chap. 80, p. 352), which prohibit combinations of grain dealers to fix the price of grain do not exempt such dealers from the general anti-trust statute. State v. Omaha Elevator Co. 75 Neb. 637, 106 N. W. 979, 110 N. W. 874. The statutes forbid a combination to control and limit the price of milk (Ford v. Chicago Milk Shippers' Asso. 155 Ill. 166, 27 L.R.A. 298, 39 N. E. 651), a combination to control the price of beer (Houck v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. 88 Tex. 184, 30 S. W. 869; Nester v. Continental Brewing Co. 161 Pa. 473, 24 L.R.A. 247, 41 Am. St. Rep. 894, 29 Atl. 102), a combination to fix the price of meats (State ex rel. Crow v. Armour Packing Co. 173 Mo. 356, 61 L.R.A. 464, 96 Am. St. Rep. 515, 73 S. W. 645), a combination of merchants to compel another to sell goods at a price fixed by it (Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 429, 57 L.R.A. 547, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553), a combination to control the production and fix the price of petroleum and its products (State ex rel. Monnett v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co. 61 Ohio St. 520, 56 N. E. 464), an agreement among competing grain dealers that each will account, at so much per bushel, for all grain bought by him in excess of an allotted share (State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 67 L.R.A. 903, 69 Pac. 199), an agreement whereby a builder is to add a percentage to his bid and give it to an association of which he is a member (Milwaukee Masons & Builders' Asso. v. Niezerowski, 95 Wis. 129, 37 L.R.A. 127, 60 Am. St. Rep. 97, 70 N. W. 166), an agreement between an association of master plumbers and a manufacturer to buy only from such manufacturer (Bailey v. Master Plumbers' Asso. 103 Tenn. 99, 46 L.R.A. 561, 52 S. W. 553), and an agreement between such an association and a manufacturer that the latter will sell only to the association (Walsh v. Master Plumbers' Asso. 97 Mo. App. 280, 71 S. W. 455). See Kosciusko Oil Mill. & Fertilizer Co. v. Wilson Cotton Oil Co. 90 Miss. 551, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1053, 43 So. 435; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 606.

Many attempts have been made to bring unobjectionable transactions within these 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) statutes, and a reference to some of the cases will serve to show the proper scope of the prohibitions. A contract not to sell any other whisky of the same brand in the place where the buyer was engaged in business until the buyer had disposed of the quantity purchased was held not in violation of the Texas act of 1899 (Acts 1899, chap. 146, p. 246), which prohibited agreements to fix or regulate the price of any article, to maintain such price when fixed, or to limit or fix the amount or quantity of any article. Norton v. W. H. Thomas & Sons Co. 99 Tex. 578, 91 S. W. 780. This statute was held not to condemn a contract whereby a sleeping-car company was to furnish sleeping cars for a railroad company, and in which the only reference to prices was the stipulation that the sleeping-car company might charge passengers on its cars on the trains of the railway company such fares as were customary on competing lines of railway where equal accommodations were furnished. No one had a right to run cars on the railroad, and therefore "the free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by law was not restricted." The contract in no way interfered with the rights of any other sleeping-car company, if any existed, to build and furnish its cars to railway companies. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. State, 99 Tex. 34, 70 L.R.A. 950, 87 S. W. 336.

An agreement between a carrier and an association of citizens for special rates on excursion tickets does not violate either the state or Federal anti-trust statutes. Lytle v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. 100 Tex. 292, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 437, 99 S. W. 396. In Hartz v. Eddy, 140 Mich. 479, 103 N. W. 852, it was held that a certain lease was not a part of the plan of a salt trust to limit the production of salt, raise the price thereof, and create a monopoly. In State v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. 71 S. C. 544, 51 S. E. 455, it was held that the anti-trust statute should be construed to mean that the contract is against public policy when made with a view to lessen, or which tends to lessen, full and free competition to an unreasonable extent. In Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Co. v. Greenwood Hardware Co. 75 S. C. 378, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 501, 55 S. E. 973, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 902, it was said: "A construction of the statute which would make obnoxious every contract which tends in any measure to affect the cost or price of articles to the producer or consumer . . . would probably render the statute liable to the objection that it unnecessarily and unreasonably abridges the freedom of contract, guaranteed by the state and Federal Constitutions. . . . In determining whether a particular contract falls within the inhibition of the statute, the court must necessarily consider the tendency or power of the contract to injure the public, either considered in itself or as a part of a scheme to destroy or impede competition and control supply and prices. A contract may be lawful in itself as an isolated matter, but yet be unlawful as a part of a scheme to create a virtual monopoly. . . . Every case, however, alleged to fall within the statute, must be controlled by its own peculiar facts and circumstances, and we will not attempt to state any hard-and-fast rule by which every case must be governed. The main general test should be whether the contract, trust, or combination is monopolistic in purpose and natural tendency. If so, it unreasonably affects competition and prices to the detriment of the public, and is obnoxious to the statute." It appeared that a New York corporation had entered into a contract with a South Carolina corporation whereby the latter bound itself to sell certain articles for use only in G. and vicinity, to canvass the territory named for purchasers, and not to accept the agency for or sell similar articles during the term of the contract. The other party agreed to manufacture the articles and sell them to the South Carolina corporation, and to use reasonable diligence to prevent other agents from making sales of similar articles within the territory. This was held a minor contract in partial restraint of trade only, and not tending to prevent competition and restrain trade.

The rules of a live-stock exchange, which provided for the expulsion of members who were guilty of commercial dishonesty, and forbade members from having any further commercial transactions with the person who had been expelled, were held not within the inhibition of the statute. The exchange, said the court, "does not seek to limit trade, nor to limit competition by refusing to buy from or sell to others for the reason that they are not members of its association. But they can boycott a member, or, rather, they can refuse to deal with him, not because he is not a member of the exchange, but because he has been found guilty and expelled from the association for his wrongdoing." Gladish v. Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, 113 Mo. App. 726, 89 S. W. 77. The case was distinguished from Ferd Hein Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 64, 71 S. W. 691, where certain brewers had an agreement that they would not sell to anyone indebted to either of the others for beer until he had paid that debt. An agreement of that character, it was said, "tended to establish a monopoly, deprive the debtor of the benefit of competition, and served to impose a penalty on his condition" which was forbidden by the statute against trusts and pools. "The object of the statute," said the court in the Gladish Case (page 733) "is to promote the public welfare, and not to outlaw harmless combinations, or those which are beneficial in their nature. This statute, like every other, should receive a reasonable construction. The purposes of the exchange are to be commended,"—citing Haebler v. New York Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 414, 44 N. E. 87; American Live Stock Commission Co. v. Chicago Live Stock Exchange, 143 Ill. 210, 18 L.R.A. 190, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 32 N. E. 274; Board of Trade v. Nelson, 162 Ill. 431, 53 Am. St. Rep. 312, 44 N. E. 743; Belton v. Hatch, 109 N. Y. 593, 4 Am. St. Rep. 495, 17 N. E. 225. Of a contract by which one corporation bound itself to buy all its raw material from, and sell all its manufactured products to, another, the court said: "We do not regard this contract as one in restraint of trade, and therefore illegal and void. Nor do we think it is forbidden by the anti-trust law of this state or by the Sherman act. There is neither allegation nor evidence here that this contract tended to produce a monopoly, or was in restraint of trade, or enabled the parties thereto, or either of them, to monopolize the market, or that it had anything to do with commerce." Heimbuecher v. Goff, 119 Ill. App. 373.

The anti-trust statute does not affect a contract made by a seller of grain to sell to purchasers a certain amount of grain, to be delivered in the future. C. H. Albers Commission Co. v. Spencer, 205 Mo. 105, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1003, 103 S. W. 523. A contract, to run for eight years, whereby an owner of a bed of fire clay agreed to erect a plant and operate it, and several corporations agreed to take a specified amount of the product daily at a fixed price, the first party agreeing not to operate a fire-clay plant on any other land owned or controlled by him in the state, and the second party agreeing not to sell brick to any other parties, and the latter not to buy of any other party in the state, and not to enter into any combination or trust to limit the output of the plant, is not invalid under the statute. After quoting the Illinois statute, Mr. Justice Wilkin said: "The object of these statutes is to prohibit the formation of trusts and combinations, and remove all obstructions in restraint of trade and free competition. It was not the purpose of either law to hinder or prohibit contracts on the part of corporations or individuals, made to foster or increase trade or business. But a contract may incidentally restrain competition or trade without violating the statutes, if its chief purpose is to promote and increase the business of those who enter into it." The contract was regarded as one in partial restraint of trade only. Southern Fire Brick & Clay Co. v. Garden City Sand Co. 223 Ill. 616, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 446, 79 N. E. 313, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 50.

In Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Searles, 85 Miss. 520, 68 L.R.A. 715, 37 So. 939, a car-service association was held not to be a trust within the meaning of the statute of that state. This decision contains a very full discussion of the general subject. It was said that, in construing anti-trust statutes, the nature of the business contemplated by the contract and the tendency of the contract as affecting the public should be considered, rather than the interests of the parties to the particular contract. But the design of the legislature was to protect the public, not to unnecessarily restrict the transacting of business by either corporations or individuals. "The various kinds of legitimate business rendered necessary by the multiform demands of public convenience, the manifold callings which are an incident of this progressive age, all demand that the individual right of contract shall be given full sway, conditioned only that the rights of the public and the welfare of the people and the public policy of the state shall be held sacred. . . . The result desired, the purpose of the entire legislation, was to suppress trusts, secure the benefits arising from competition in trade, prevent monopolies, and protect the people from the possible tyranny and oppression of combined wealth."

A contract for the sale of the entire output of sash weights of a particular foundry at a specified price, and obligating the seller to withdraw a former lower price, is not invalid. Combinations between individuals or firms for the regulation of prices or competition in business are held not to be monopolies and in restraint of trade so long as they are reasonable and do not include all the commodity or trade, or to create such restrictions as to materially affect the freedom of commerce. Over v. Byram Foundry Co. 37 Ind. App. 452, 117 Am. St. Rep. 327, 77 N. E. 302; Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 35 L.R.A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81, 46 Pac. 730, 44 Pac. 660.

6. Where the statute prohibits a specific thing, that fact, of course, furnishes an all-sufficient reason for the decision; and, as the state statutes generally go more into detail than the Federal statutes, the state decisions are less controlled by general considerations. When the legality of the particular act is to be tested by whether it violates general statutory prohibitions upon restraints of trade or commerce, the courts give various reasons for their conclusions. Different forms of expression are used; but, when reduced to the lowest terms, it seems that if any one thing may be said to be the test, it is the effect upon competition. Combinations are not per se illegal, any more than are contracts, agreements, and understandings generally; but, when the purpose of either is to destroy competition in trade or commerce, the particular transaction falls within the prohibitions of the anti-trust statute. The acts which are specifically forbidden by the statute are contrary to the public policy of the state because they are thus forbidden (Stewart v. Erie & W. Transp. Co. 17 Minn. 372, Gil. 348), and the effect upon competition furnishes a reasonably accurate test for cases which arise under the general language of the statute. The definition of monopoly involves the same principle, and contracts and combinations which tend to create a monopoly are against public policy, and therefore illegal, because they deprive the community of the benefits of competition, and thus place the power to control production or fix prices in the hands of a few persons.

But it does not follow that every contract or combination which in any degree tends to restrict competition is illegal. So strict a rule would invalidate innumerable ordinary business transactions which are unobjectionable and necessary that business shall not completely stagnate. As said in Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 593, 43 L. ed. 296, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40: "The contract condemned by the statute is one whose direct and immediate effect is a restraint upon that kind of trade or commerce. . . . The act . . . must have a reasonable construction, or else there would scarcely be an agreement or contract among business men that could not be said to have, indirectly or remotely, some bearing upon interstate commerce, and possibly to restrain it." The anti-trust statutes were never designed to forbid such transactions, and it has been universally held that contracts and combinations which tend to promote business, and which only remotely, incidentally, and indirectly restrain competition, are not forbidden. If the necessary effect of the combination is to stifle or to directly or necessarily restrict free competition, it is under the ban of the law, whatever may have been the intention of the parties. But if "it promotes or but incidentally or indirectly restricts competition, while its main purpose and chief effects are to foster the trade and to increase the business of those who make and operate it, then it is not a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of trade within the true interpretation of this act, and it is not subject to its denunciation." Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. 64 L.R.A. 689, 60 C. C. A. 290, 125 Fed. 454; Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. ed. 290, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep.

held that neither under the common law nor the Texas anti-trust statute is it illegal to enter into a combination to establish uniform rates of insurance and of commissions to agents. The court said: "Labor is necessary to production and transportation, and therefore it is not merely an aid, but a necessity, of commerce. It is advantageous to the public, and in that sense they have an interest in it. The services of professional men are likewise indispensable in most civilized communities and are presumably likewise advantageous to the public. The public have an interest in them in the same sense in which they have an interest in the business of insurance. It follows, therefore, that if insurance companies are to be brought within the rule that makes agreements to increase the price of merchandise illegal, upon the ground that the public have an interest in their business, agreements among laborers and among professional men not to render services below a stipulated rate should be held contrary to public policy and void upon the same ground. Combinations among workmen to increase or maintain their wages by unlawful means are unlawful. . . . 'Encouragement to workmen in their endeavors to associate themselves into organizations for their mutual benefit have settled beyond question that unemployed workmen may unite and agree not to work unless for a certain price. This is a plain right, upon which no doubt ought ever to have existed. People v. Fisher, 28 Am. Dec. 508, note.'"

More v. Bennett, 140 Ill. 69, 15 L.R.A. 361, 33 Am. St. Rep. 216, 29 N. E. 888, seems to support the contention that a combination to fix the rate to be charged for personal services is illegal. That case grew out of an attempt of the law stenographers of the city of Chicago to fix the prices at which they would work. It is criticized in Queen Ins. Co. v. State, supra, and the cases cited by the court do not seem to be applicable upon the facts. As a matter of fact, such stenographers furnish more than their personal services, and the compensation is measured by the quantity of the product of their labors. Thus, in the ordinary case of a court stenographer who furnished a transcript of evidence, the party ordering it pays for what he receives at a fixed price per folio. The proposition under consideration in More v. Bennett did not include ordinary stenographers, who work by the day or month, and it cannot be that such persons cannot combine and co-operate for the purpose of fixing or raising their wages, while workmen generally are permitted to do the same thing, with the approval of the law.

This conclusion is not inconsistent with 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that the Sherman anti-trust law applies to combinations of workmen as well as capitalists, or with the cases which have held certain anti-trust statutes unconstitutional because they exempted certain classes of people from their operation. The right of proper classification is conceded, and the statute must apply equally to all members of the class; but our statute is directed to combinations for certain purposes, and we hold that combinations and agreements the sole and only purpose of which is to fix the charges that shall be made for personal services are not within the prohibitions of the statute.

8. But, if it should be conceded that the agreement or combination effected by rule 26 is within the general scope and purpose of the anti-trust statute, it would not violate the statute, because it does not create a monopoly, and its direct and necessary tendency is neither to restrain trade by preventing competition in the business of buying and selling grain on commission, nor to limit, fix, control, maintain, or regulate the price of production of any article of trade, manufacture, or use bought and sold within the state, nor to prevent or limit competition in the purchase and sale thereof. As already stated, the board of trade neither buys nor sells grain. The members act as the agents of the producers and purchasers of the grain, and the regulation of their commissions for such services can have no appreciable effect upon either the production or the price of the grain. It is a fixed charge, which must be paid, and the price which the producer obtains for the grain may be affected indirectly thereby. But the question is whether the production or price is directly or to any appreciable extent controlled or regulated by the rule which makes the charge uniform, instead of variable,—definite and known, instead of uncertain and unknown. So long as the rate of commission is reasonable, as it is conceded to be in this instance, it must be for the benefit of the producer to know in advance what it will cost in commission to have his grain sold. A rule which determines the handling charges, and makes the charge the same per bushel to the farmer who ships 100 sacks and the elevator company which ships 100 cars, cannot be held to be against public policy. In fact, public policy requires that such charges shall be definite, certain, and uniform, and this seems equally true as to commissions for sales when made under the peculiar conditions under which the grain business is conducted. A board of trade which requires its members to treat all its customers exactly alike in the matters of charges for services no more destroys competition than does a railroad when it charges all shippers the same rate for conveying freight.

It is common knowledge that competition between commission men for the business of the producers is in fact strong, and success in getting the business depends not upon offering to transact it for less than the uniform rate of commission, but upon the skill and facilities possessed for obtaining the highest price for the grain from the elevator and mill men who are generally the purchasers. There is no fixed price at which sales must be made. If A can secure a cent a bushel more for B's grain than can C or any other commission man, he will get the business, and the producer who has selected him to make the sale will get the benefit of his superior skill and energy. Competition of this character exists on all boards of trade and chambers of commerce, and it is inconceivable that a rule which requires all the commission men who are members of the board or chamber to charge the same rate of commission for the same service can materially affect or control either the production of grain or the price at which it sells. Of course, in a remote and indirect way, every charge and item of expense which attaches to the marketing of grain or other products affects, to some extent, the prices received by the producers and paid by the ultimate purchaser. But contracts and agreements for certain and uniform charges, which are for the benefit of all, and operate only indirectly on production and prices, are not within the prohibitions of the statute.

The purpose and effect of this rule is not to stifle competition, but to protect the members of the board, and foster their business and trade, and prevent it from becoming demoralized, to the injury of all parties, including the consumer. The propriety of such rules, indirectly, at least, received the approval of the Supreme Court of the United States in Anderson v. United States, 171 U. S. 604, 43 L. ed. 300, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50, where Mr. Justice Peckham said: "From very early times it has been the custom for men engaged in the occupation of buying and selling articles of a similar nature at any particular place to associate themselves together. The object of the association has in many cases been to provide for the ready transaction of the business of the associates by obtaining a general headquarters for its conduct, and thus to insure a quick and certain market for the sale or purchase of the article dealt in. Another purpose has been to provide a standard of business integrity among the members, by adopting rules for just and fair dealing among them, and enforcing the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) same by penalties for their violation. The agreements have been voluntary, and the penalties have been enforced under the supervision and by members of the association. The preamble adopted by the association in this case shows the ostensible purpose of its formation. It was not formed for pecuniary profits, and a careful perusal of the whole agreement fails, as we think, to show that its purpose was other than as stated in the preamble . . . and that the result naturally to be expected from an enforcement of the rules would not directly, if at all, effect interstate trade or commerce."

We think the same statement may be made with reference to the rules of the Duluth Board of Trade in their relation to intrastate trade and commerce. In a recent text-book written by one of the judges who decided the case of United States v. American Tobacco Co. (C. C.) 164 Fed. 700, which makes the restriction of competition conclusive, it is said that, "in order to come within the provisions of the Federal statute, the direct effect of a combination must be in restraint of interstate commerce;" and "that a voluntary association or 'exchange,' formed by dealers in articles of a similar nature in a particular locality, for the purpose of fairly regulating the methods of conducting business and establishing a general headquarters, and the by-laws of which provide rules for fair dealing among the members, but which exercises no control over prices or production, is not in contravention of the statute. Neither the object nor consequence of such an association is to suppress competition, and its effect upon interstate commerce, if any, is remote." Noyes, Intercompany Relations, 2d ed. § 395.

Anderson v. United States, supra, and Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. ed. 290, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40, while not exactly in point, tend to sustain the respondents' views as to the legality of this rule of the Duluth Board of Trade. The case which comes the nearest to sustaining the appellant's contention is State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 334, 117 Am. St. Rep. 479, 80 Pac. 639, 84 Pac. 737. That was a criminal prosecution of the defendant upon the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, by selling cattle which he represented to be free from encumbrance when in fact they were covered by a mortgage. The defense was that the mortgage was void, because based upon a transaction which was made criminal by the Kansas anti-trust statute. The defendant offered to prove that the mortgage was given to a member of the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, which was an association of persons engaged in buying and selling live stock for others and practically controlling that business at Kansas City; that a by-law of such association forbade a member from charging a less commission for such services than 50 cents a head; and that a part of the consideration of the notes to secure which the mortgage was given was a charge for the services of the mortgagee in purchasing the cattle covered by the mortgage. This evidence was excluded, and for the error alleged to have thus been committed the defendant demanded a new trial. The statute forbade combinations of "capital, skill, and acts" for various enumerated purposes, one of which was "to create or carry out restrictions in the free and full pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state." It was held that the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange was an illegal organization within the meaning of this section of the statute. The statute was quite specific, and may well have been designed to reach such a case; but it is not a controlling authority in favor of the appellant, under our statute, upon the facts disclosed by this record.

A somewhat extended investigation of the law and careful consideration of the facts of this case have convinced us that the Duluth Board of Trade has not violated the Minnesota statute, and that the decision of the learned trial judge was correct.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

W. A. ROHLF

v.

HENRY KASEMEIER et al., Appts.

(— Iowa —, 118 N. W. 276.)

Monopoly — personal services — combination.

Personal services of a physician are not a commodity within the meaning of a statute relating to pools and trusts, and making guilty of a conspiracy persons who combine to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, commodity, or merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold in the state.

(November 18, 1908.)

Note. — For a case holding that a combination for the purpose of regulating charges for personal services is not within the inhibition of a very similar statute to that considered in the above case, see State v. Board of Trade, ante, 1260, and cases gathered in a note thereto.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Bremer County discharging petitioner in a habeas corpus proceeding from custody to which he had been committed for alleged violation of the statute against combinations. Affirmed.

Statement by Deemer, J.:

This is a habeas corpus proceeding brought to determine the legality of an indictment returned against the plaintiff by the grand jury of Bremer county, Iowa. A demurrer to the petition was overruled, and the trial judge discharged the plaintiff and released him from the custody of the sheriff, by whom he was held. Defendants appeal.

Messrs. Bernard Stenzel and J. T. Sullivan, for appellants:

Medical and surgical services are a commodity under the provisions of § 5060 of the Code of Iowa.

People v. Fisher, 14 Wend. 9, 28 Am. Dec. 501; United States v. Workingmen's Amalgamated Council, 26 L.R.A. 158, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 831, 54 Fed. 994, 6 C. C. A. 258, 13 U. S. App. 426, 57 Fed. 85; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S. 194, 49 L. ed. 154, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 48 L. ed. 608, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 518, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Assn., 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. ed. 679, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Beechley v. Mulville, 102 Iowa, 602, 63 Am. St. Rep. 479, 70 N. W. 107, 71 N. W. 428; Com. ex rel. Chew v. Carlisle, Brightly (Pa.) 40; Smiley v. Kansas, 196 U. S. 447, 49 L. ed. 546, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. ed. 488, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 815.

Messrs. Hagemann & Farwell and Sager & Sweet, for appellee:

The word "commodity" as used in Code § 5060, does not include within its meaning medical or surgical services.

Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L.R.A. 259, 38 N. E. 512; Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 22 L.R.A. 483, 24 S. W. 397; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91; Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club, 140 Mich. 538, 113

Am. St. Rep. 420, 104 N. W. 40; State v. Henke, 10 Mo. 225; Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 252, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 136, 92 N. W. 306, 96 N. W. 212, 98 N. W. 1075, 105 N. W. 1092; Downing v. Lewis, 56 Neb. 386, 76 N. W. 900.

Deemer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, who is a physician and surgeon, with thirteen others of like profession, was indicted by the grand jury of Bremer county for the crime of entering into an agreement, combination, or understanding to fix and maintain fees and charges to be exacted for medical and surgical services in said county. Plaintiff was arrested under the indictment, and thereafter brought habeas corpus proceedings before the Honorable C. H. Kelley, Judge, to secure his release from custody, claiming that he was unduly and illegally restrained of his liberty, for the reason that the indictment charges no offense known to our laws, and that, if there be a law forbidding such acts as are charged against him, it is unconstitutional and void, in that it deprives him of his liberty, prevents him from acquiring or possessing property, and deprives him of his safety and the pursuit of his happiness, and deprives him of the right of contract and of the equal protection of the laws. The charging part of the indictment reads as follows: "The said L. C. Kern, Dr. C. T. Brown, Dr. O. L. Chaffee, Dr. W. A. Rohlf, Dr. H. C. Jungblut, Dr. B. C. Dunkelberg, Dr. C. H. Graening, Dr. Stafford, Dr. A. G. Rennison, Dr. Patterson, Dr. J. F. Auner, Dr. Murphy, Dr. Bradford, Dr. Cross, on the 30th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seven, in the county aforesaid, being physicians and surgeons located and practising their professions in the county of Bremer, state of Iowa, did then and there wilfully, unlawfully, and maliciously conspire, combine, confederate, and agree with each other to create, organize, and enter into, and did then and there wilfully, unlawfully, and maliciously enter into, and become a member of, and a party to, a trust, pool, agreement, contract, combination, confederation, and understanding, to fix, establish, and regulate, and maintain the price of a commodity in the county of Bremer, state of Iowa, and did then and there wilfully and unlawfully fix, regulate, and establish the price of medical service and medical skill, and the profit, benefit, fee, and compensation to be received therefor, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Iowa." The demurrer challenges these contentions of plaintiff, and 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) it is stoutly insisted upon this appeal, that the indictment does charge an offense, and that the statute under which it was found is a valid exercise of legislative power.

As the case must turn upon the construction of a statute, we here copy the material parts of the section under which the indictment was found. It is No. 5060 of the Code, reading as follows: "Pools and Trusts.—

Any corporation organized under the laws of this or any other state or country, for transacting or conducting any kind of business in this state, or any partnership, association, or individual, creating, entering into, or becoming a member of, or a party to, any pool, trust, agreement, contract, combination, confederation, or understanding with any other corporation, partnership, association, or individual, to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, commodity, or merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold in this state, shall be guilty of a conspiracy." The first point to be decided is: Do the acts charged constitute a crime under this section of the Code? It will be noticed that it forbids a combination, agreement, or understanding to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or of merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold in this state. The primary inquiry is: Are the charges of a physician or surgeon for his medical skill or ability an article of merchandise or commodity to be produced or sold in this state? For appellant it is contended that the word "commodity" is broad enough to cover the charge made for professional services or skill, and that the trial court was in error in holding to the contrary. It must be remembered that the word is found in a criminal statute, and that, in the interpretation of such statutes, different rules apply from those which obtain in civil matters or where contracts are involved. Nothing is to be added to such statutes by intendment, and, as a rule, they are to have a strict construction. Moreover, it is well settled that, in construing any statute, all the language shall be considered, and such interpretation placed upon any word appearing therein as was within the manifest intent of the body which enacted the law. Much, of necessity, depends upon the context and upon the usual and ordinary significance of the language used. Now, the word "commodity" is derived from the Latin commodetas, and means primarily a convenience, profit, benefit, or advantage; but, in referring to commerce, it comprehends everything movable—that is, bought or sold—except animals. See Webster's International Dictionary; Best v. Bauder, 29 How. Pr. 489; Barnett v. Powell, Litt. Sel. Cas. 409; Queen Ins. Co. v. State, 86 Tex. 250, 22 L.R.A. 483, 24 S. W. 397. This word appearing in another statute (McClain's Code, § 5454) was held to cover insurance, and it was decided that a combination to fix insurance rates was illegal. See Beechley v. Mulville, 102 Iowa, 602, 63 Am. St. Rep. 479, 70 N. W. 107, 71 N. W. 428. But in that case the parties were not selling their own services. They were, as the opinion says, selling insurance, which was regarded as a commodity as used in the statute then under consideration. Here, the indicted defendants were for a price giving their own services, or perhaps selling them, and the question is: Were these personal services a commodity?

As already indicated, the word must be taken in connection with the others used in the statute, and it is manifest that the commodity referred to must have been such as could be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold in the state, and the price was to be of an article or merchandise or commodity. If the contention of appellant be correct, the statute covers all kinds of personal labor, both skilled and unskilled, under the term "commodity." Indeed, this is the broad claim made by counsel. Now, whilst there is a class of political economists who treat labor as so much merchandise, the wage being regulated simply by supply and demand, there is another class which, taking account of the personal equation, sees in it something more than a commodity, and refuses to subscribe to the doctrine that supply and demand alone regulate the price. This latter class of economists refuse to accept the doctrine that a man is rich because he has stored away within him many days' work, and are convinced that his necessities, quite as often as the demand for his labor, fix the stipend which he is to receive. In other words, the laborer, skilled or unskilled, is not regarded as standing on an equality with him who barter in goods and merchandise. It is not, of course, within the province of courts of justice to adopt or promulgate any particular system of political science; but in the interpretation of statutes they must take notice of current political theory and conviction. If we were to adopt the view so strongly presented by appellant's counsel, it would be on the assumption that the associated words "merchandise" and "commodity" include the wages to be paid for labor, because labor is a sort of merchandise, subject to barter and sale as other goods. A fundamental rule of construction is that, where particular words are followed by general ones, the general are restricted in meaning to objects of a like kind with those specified. State v. Stoller, 38 Iowa, 321; People v. New York & M. B. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 565; McDade v. People, 29 Mich. 50. Now, the term "merchandise" is special rather than general, and has reference primarily to those things which merchants sell either at wholesale or retail. Jewell v. Sumner Twp. 113 Iowa, 47, 84 N. W. 973. "Commodity" is a broader term, and, when used as in the statute now under consideration, means almost any description of article called movable or personal estate. Barnett v. Powell, supra; Shuttleworth v. State, 35 Ala. 415; State v. Henke, 19 Mo. 225.

Used in connection with the term "merchandise," and qualified as it is in the latter part of the section by the words "manufactured, mined, produced, or sold," it is manifest that the statute was not intended to, and did not, include labor, either skilled or unskilled. It must be remembered that the statute is a criminal one, and that such statutes must be strictly construed; and, in case of doubt, the construction must be adopted most favorable to the party charged. The only ground upon which appellant can stand with any show of plausibility is that labor is a commodity to be bought, sold, or produced, as merchandise. This is a strained and unnatural construction, and gives to the word "commodity" a meaning which is perhaps permissible, but is not the commonly accepted one. Under our statutes, words and phrases are to be construed according to the context and the approved usage of the language. Code, § 48. With this in mind, we are constrained to hold that labor is not a commodity within the meaning of the act now in question. As supporting this conclusion, see Hunt v. Riverside Co-op. Club, 140 Mich. 538, 112 Am. St. Rep. 420, 104 N. W. 40, 12 Det. L. N. 264; Queen Ins. Co. v. State, supra. It seems to be the almost universal holding that it is no crime for any number of persons, without an unlawful object in view, to associate themselves together, and agree that they will not work for or deal with certain classes of men, or work under a certain price, or without certain conditions. Carew v. Rutherford, 106 Mass. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 287; Com. v. Hunt, 4 Met. 134, 38 Am. Dec. 346; Rogers v. Everts, 17 N. Y. Supp. 268; United States v. Moore (C. C.) 129 Fed. 630.

The statute in question was aimed at unlawful conspiracies or combinations in restraint of trade, and was manifestly not intended to cover labor unions. It is the right of miners, artisans, laborers, or professional men to unite for their own improvement or advancement, or for any other lawful purpose, and it has never been held, so far as we are able to discover, that a union for the purpose of advancing wages is unlawful under any statutes which have been called to our attention. As said by Judge Taft in Re Phelan (C. C.) 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 788, 62 Fed. 803: "Such unions, when rightly conducted, are beneficial in character." And it would be a strained and unnatural conclusion to hold that a statute aimed at pools and trusts should be held to include agreements as to prices for labor, because the word "commodity" is used therein. As the right to combine for the purpose of securing higher wages is recognized as lawful at common law, a statute enacted to prohibit pools and trusts should not be held to apply to combinations to fix the wages for labor, unless it clearly appears that such was the legislative intent. Whatever of doubt there may be regarding the power of the legislature to do so, we do not think that the act in question covers combinations to fix the labor price, whether that labor be skilled or unskilled.

Appellants rely largely upon the celebrated cases of Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. ed. 488, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 815, and Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900, and other like cases, in support of their construction of the statute; but in our opinion none of these cases are applicable. The Debs Case is not in point. Others involved a pool between manufacturers, and still others boycotts. In the Loewe Case defendants were engaged in a boycott of plaintiff and its customers, and were in the performance of acts calculated to destroy plaintiff's business by driving away customers, by threats and coercion were driving away plaintiff's employees, and circulating false reports regarding plaintiff and its business, the effect of which was to destroy its interstate trade. These acts were held to be an unlawful interference with interstate commerce and a violation of the anti-trust law known as the "Sherman act" (Act July 2, 1890, chap. 647, 26 Stat. at L. 209, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200). The statute before us has nothing to do with commerce, nor does it have to do with restraint of trade or commerce, as does the Sherman act. It has to do with pools and trusts organized in this state to fix or regulate the price of any article or commodity, or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, commodity, or merchandise to be produced or sold in the state. Surely it has no reference to the amount or quality of labor to be produced or sold. Such a construction would be ridiculous. And, if it will not bear that interpretation, it follows that the word "commodity," when used with reference to prices, should not be held to include labor. No case has been cited which supports appellant's contention, and we have not been able to find any. On the other hand, the following lend support to our conclusions: Cleland v. Anderson, 86 Neb. 252, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 136, 92 N. W. 306, 96 N. W. 212, 98 N. W. 1075, 105 N. W. 1092; Downing v. Lewis, 56 Neb. 386, 76 N. W. 900; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91. It would be stretching the statute entirely too far to hold that it covers combinations to fix the price of labor. That the practice of medicine and surgery is labor, no one, we think, will question.

The trial court was right in discharging the plaintiff, and its judgment must be, and it is, affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, Plff. in Err.,
v.
ROBERT L. DRAYTON.

(82 Neb. 254, 117 N. W. 768.)

Constitutional law — commercial discrimination.

1. The act of the legislature entitled "An Act to Prohibit Unfair Commercial Discrimination between Different Sections, Communities, or Localities, or Unfair Competition, and Providing Penalties Therefor," approved April 3, 1907 (Sess. Laws 1907, chap. 157, p. 490), held not to be in violation of the Constitution.

Same — class legislation.

2. The said act does not prevent persons and corporations dealing in commodities in general use from selling them at such price as such person or corporation may see proper to demand, nor is it class legislation within the constitutional prohibition.

Same — police power.

3. The prevention of discrimination in particular localities, in price of commodities in general use, "for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor" by selling such commodities at a lower rate in such locality than is charged for the same elsewhere, is within the police power of the state.

Same — power of legislature.

4. Within constitutional limits, the leg-

Headnotes by REESE, J.

Note. — An extended search has failed to disclose any other case which has passed on the power of the legislature to forbid selling a commodity in a particular locality at a lower rate than obtains elsewhere for the purpose of stifling competition.

lature is the sole judge as to what laws should be enacted for the protection and welfare of the people, and as to when and how the police power of the state is to be exercised.

(September 16, 1908.)

ERROR to the District Court for Antelope County to review an order sustaining a demurrer to an information charging defendant with having violated an anti-competition law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. D. Thornton, for plaintiff in error:

While the police power cannot be put forward as an excuse for oppressive legislation, yet, when properly resorted to for preserving the public interest and the protection of private parties, a large discretion is vested in the legislature to determine not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests.

State ex rel. Ornstone v. Cary, 126 Wis. 135, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 174, 105 N. W. 792.

A statute will not be declared unconstitutional unless it is palpably repugnant to the Constitution, and it is not sufficient that it is unjust and oppressive in some of its provisions, or that it violates the natural, social, or political rights of the citizen, unless it is shown that such injustice is prohibited or that such rights are guaranteed by the Constitution.

National Council, J. O. A. M. v. State Council, J. O. U. A. M. 104 Va. 197, 51 S. E. 166.

An objection that a statute is inequitable and unjust cannot be considered by a court, as that is a matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the legislature.

Kerr v. Perry School Twp. 162 Ind. 310, 70 N. E. 246; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming, 39 Neb. 679, 23 L.R.A. 210, 42 Am. St. Rep. 613, 58 N. W. 226; Gordon Bros. v. Wageman, 77 Neb. 185, 108 N. W. 1067; Shortall v. Puget Sound Bridge & Dredging Co. 45 Wash. 290, 122 Am. St. Rep. 899, 88 Pac. 212.

A law applying to all persons engaged in an industry ordinarily recognized as a distinct business is not class legislation.

Brady v. Mattern, 125 Iowa, 158, 106 Am. St. Rep. 291, 100 N. W. 358; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 705, 28 L. ed. 1146, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; State v. Schlemmer, 42 La. Ann. 1166, 10 L.R.A. 135, 8 So. 307; Stolz v. Thompson, 44 Minn. 271, 46 N. W. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

410; Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Soper, 39 Iowa, 112; Iowa Eclectic Medical College Asso. v. Shrader, 87 Iowa, 659, 20 L.R.A. 355, 55 N. W. 24; People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 529, 32 L.R.A. 853, 62 Am. St. Rep. 715, 66 N. W. 382; Merritt v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 34 Minn. 245, 25 N. W. 403; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 245, 28 L.R.A. 796, 32 S. W. 5; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714, 17 Am. Rep. 696, 10 S. E. 143; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028, 49 Ark. 325, 5 S. W. 297; State Assessors v. Central R. Co. 48 N. J. L. 146, 4 Atl. 578; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa (Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cutts) 94 U. S. 163, 24 L. ed. 95; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 523, 29 L. ed. 466, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161.

Messrs. W. T. Thompson, G. G. Martin, and W. B. Rose also for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Jackson & Kelsey, Isaac E. Congdon, and W. D. McHugh for defendant in error.

Reese, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An information was filed in the district court of Antelope county, in which it was charged that the defendant, the agent of the Atlas Elevator Company, a corporation, incorporated under the laws of the state of West Virginia, and doing business in this state, and engaged in the sale and distribution of lumber, lime, plaster, cement, and brick, commodities in general use in the village of Orchard, in Antelope county, and in the village of Brunswick, in the same county, on the 20th day of August, 1907, in the county and state aforesaid, "did unlawfully, maliciously, and intentionally, for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor in the village of Orchard, in Antelope county, in the state of Nebraska, discriminate between different sections of the state of Nebraska, to wit, the village of Brunswick, in Antelope county, in the state of Nebraska, and the village of Orchard, in Antelope county, in the state of Nebraska, by selling such lumber, lime, plaster, cement, and brick at a lower rate in the village of Orchard, in said state and county, than is charged by the Atlas Elevator Company for lumber, lime, plaster, cement, and brick in the village of Brunswick, in said county and state, after making due allowance for the difference in the grade, quality, and the actual cost of transportation from the point of production of said lumber, lime, plaster, cement, and brick, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Nebraska." The defendant filed his motion to quash the information, alleging the following reasons and grounds therefor:

"First. Because the legislative enactment by the legislature of the state of Nebraska, under which the said information was filed, contravenes the provisions of the Constitution of the United States of America.

"Second. Because the legislative enactment contravenes the provisions of the Constitution of the state of Nebraska, and that such enactment is unconstitutional and void.

"Third. Because the facts stated in the information are not sufficient to constitute an offense under the laws of the state of Nebraska."

The district court sustained the motion, following the order with the recital that "it appearing to the court that no valid information can be filed against the defendant, under the statute and laws of the state under which the information was filed, it is ordered that the defendant be discharged and his bail released." The county attorney excepted to the ruling and order of the court, and brings the case to this court for review, under the provisions of §§ 423 and 515 of the Criminal Code.

There is no attack made upon the form of the information in the briefs of contending parties, and nothing was said upon the subject in the oral arguments; hence no reference will here be made to it. The whole contention is as to the constitutionality of the act of April 3, 1907, published as chapter 157, p. 490, Sess. Laws 1907. The act is too long to be copied here in full, and we must be content with a reproduction of the 1st section, which is as follows: "Section 1. (Local Unfair Discriminations.) Any person, firm, company, association, or corporation, foreign or domestic, doing business in the state of Nebraska and engaged in the production, manufacture, or distribution of any commodity in general use, that shall intentionally, for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor in any locality, discriminate between different sections, communities, or cities of this state, by selling such commodity at a lower rate in one section, community, or city than is charged for said commodity by said party in another section, community, or city, after making due allowance for the difference, if any, in the grade or quality and in the actual cost of transportation from the point of production, if a raw product, or from a point of manufacture, if a manufactured product, shall be deemed guilty of unfair discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared unlawful." The other sections prescribe the penalties for a violation of the law and the methods of its enforcement; but which we need not here notice. We have been favored with able oral arguments at the bar of the court as well as very elaborate briefs, in which a multitude of cases are cited, and with a full discussion of the legal principles contended for, but which it will be impossible for us to refer to in detail without extending this opinion to an unreasonable length. As we understand the contention of counsel for defendant, it may be fairly summarized by the following extract from their brief: "A careful examination of the act reveals that it is directed against persons, or corporations doing business in the state and engaged in the production, manufacture, or distribution of 'any commodity in general use;' against persons or corporations dealing in commodities which, until the passage of the act, had universally, and ever since mankind began to trade, been regarded as subjects of legitimate and unrestrained commerce and private enterprise. The act is not directed against dangers to the public health or morals. The act is not directed against so-called natural monopolies or business affected with a public interest. The act attacks trading in commodities in general use. It is the converse of an anti-trust law in being an anti-competition law." The argument is that the object and purpose of the act are not within the police power of the state; that its effect would be to stifle competition and thus foster monopolies; that it takes from the citizen the right to contract and to control his property, destroys freedom in trade, and practically compels the merchant and tradesman to conduct and carry on his business at one place only; that it is class legislation, and "operates upon and against the man who has stores in more than one place, and does not affect the dealer in but one place." It is said that "the fundamental error in the act is that it attempts to inquire into a man's intentions with reference to something that is his own private concern, just as much as his religion or politics. Dealing in commodities in general use is something with which the police power of the state has nothing whatever to do. The citizen is a free man, and is the keeper of his own heart and mind." It is contended that the act is violative of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and that no person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws; and that the similar provision in the Constitution of this state is also violated by this act. Many cases are cited by which it is sought to maintain this contention; but, in the view which we take of the law, we are not able to see that they can be applied. They refer, in the main, to the statutes which seek to control and limit transactions in the ordinary and lawful commerce of the country, such as the issuance of trading stamps, the conferring of presents or gratuities out of one's own property for the purpose of drawing custom, the right of the individual to engage in any line of lawful business he may see proper to follow; that acts which discriminate in favor of one as against another class of persons engaged in the same lawful business are infractions of the Constitution, and therefore void, as well as acts declaring specified transactions unlawful, but exempting from their provisions certain named classes of persons and lines of business; the maintaining by mining or manufacturing companies of stores, truck shops, etc., by which they sell their goods and wares to their employees on credit at a higher price than is charged other customers who buy for cash; that classifications of persons or things must be general, and apply to all similarly situated; acts which seek to destroy the right of every competitor to fix his own price upon commodities which he may lawfully sell or money which he may lawfully loan (subject of course to usury laws), and, in general, such acts as seek to invade the reserved right of every individual to transact and carry on his lawful business according to his own judgment, in his own way, untrammelled by discriminatory laws, by which others similarly situated are given preferences over him. In the foregoing we have sought to fairly outline the contention of the defendant, giving in this limited way the substance of the holdings of the cases cited without further reference to them.

At the beginning of our investigations we are confronted with the oft-repeated and well-settled doctrine that no act of the law-making power of the state can be held unconstitutional unless it is clearly violative of the provisions of the Constitution; that, if it is legally possible to sustain legislative enactments, they should not be held void. We are further met with another well-known rule that what is known as the police power is inherent in every government, and does not depend upon legislative grants or limitations. That unless the act under consideration is open to attack as in violation of the written provisions of the fundamental law, or an illegal effort to extend the police power over a subject which cannot be brought within the rightful exercise of that power, the law must be sustained. It must also be remembered that, with reference to the latter subject, the legislative department of the state, within well-known and well-defined limitations, is the sole judge as to when and how that power is to be exercised. From a careful reading and study of the act in question, we are driven to the conclusion that it is not subject to attack upon either of the grounds named. It does not seek to prevent any person or corporation from engaging in any lawful business, nor does it prevent legitimate competition, nor seek to interfere in any way with the due management of anyone's business, nor prevent the sale of any commodity at any price which the owner may fix or demand. Indeed, the act recognizes the right of all to engage in the production, manufacture, distribution, and sale of any and all commodities in general use. There is a clear recognition in law, in commerce, and in the possession and use of property, that every person has the right to use his own as he sees fit, so long as he does not wrongfully use it in such a way as to interfere with the rights of others. The whole fabric of civilized, social, and commercial life, and the enjoyment of liberty and ownership of property, are based upon compromises and limitations of the use of one's members and the control of his property. The act in question only provides against the use and sale of one's property for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor. The owner or dealer may sell for any price he may choose, or on any terms he may adopt, without reference to what effect his action may have upon the trade or business of others, so long as he does not do so for the purpose named. It may be that by underselling others he may draw trade away from them, or, indeed, the secondary effect may be to compel them to adopt his scale of prices or abandon their business, yet, if his conduct is not for the purpose and with the intention prohibited by the statute, he is violating no law, and no one can legally object to or interfere with his methods. The statute clearly makes the purpose with which the act is done the controlling element of the offense. As claimed by counsel for the state, the statute under consideration was enacted for the purpose of supplying a defect in the anti-trust laws of the state. It is within the knowledge of all that in many instances persons engaged in the sale of commodities in general use by the people have depressed prices in one locality where there was competition and increased them in others where there was none, thus avoiding loss, until the competitor was driven out of business, when prices would be raised to an unreasonable and oppressive extent, and the people of the district or community supplied from that point would be the sufferers. It was evidently the intention of the legislature to prevent that course of conduct, if resorted to for that purpose. The law afforded no protection from the injurious effects of such predatory course. If no protection could be furnished to the people who were compelled to purchase the commodities, it would be easily within the range of possibilities for one person or corporation to practically control the whole commerce of a community, a county, or even the state, exacting such prices as greed might dictate, and yet seeing to it that no others should be allowed to engage in a similar business as competitors. It is within the knowledge of all of mature years that, within the last quarter or half century, the meats furnished the people of our cities and towns were supplied by local dealers who purchased their live stock from the near-by farmer or stock grower, slaughtered the animals, and supplied wholesome meats at reasonable prices, and yet paid remunerative prices for the live animals, saving the cost of transportation to and from what are now the exclusive points of manufacture and production. That both the producers and consumers are losers is known to all. That this condition has been brought about by a system of coercion and underselling "for the purpose of destroying the business" of local competitors is also known to all. Is there no power anywhere lodged in the state to prevent this or remedy the evil? If there is, it is with the lawmaking power. If that department of government has the power, it must be by the exercise of the rights of police regulation. Has the legislature that power?

Many writers have sought to define and prescribe the true extent and limitations of the police power, but none have succeeded to the approval and satisfaction of all. It must be conceded that in its operation there is no distinction between persons natural or corporate. Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 70 Ill. 642. In Tiedeman's Limitations of Police Power, p. 1, it is said: "The object of government is to impose that degree of restraint upon human actions which is necessary to the uniform and reasonable conservation and enjoyment of private rights. Government and municipal law protect and develop, rather than create, private rights. The conservation of private rights is attained by the imposition of a wholesome restraint upon their exercise,—such a restraint as will prevent the infliction of injury upon others in the enjoyment 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of them. It involves a provision of means for enforcing the legal maxim, which enunciates the fundamental rule of both the human and the natural law, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. The power of the government to impose this restraint is called 'police power.' By this 'general police power of the state, persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the state, of the perfect right in the legislature to do which no question ever was, or upon acknowledged general principles ever can be, made so far as natural persons are concerned.'" In 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 915, 918, it is said: "It has been found impossible to frame, and is indeed deemed inadvisable to attempt to frame, any definition of the police power which shall absolutely indicate its limits by including everything to which it may extend, and excluding everything to which it cannot extend, the courts considering it better to decide as each case arises whether the police power extends thereto. There have been, however, many attempts to define this power in a general way, and the sum of these definitions amounts to this: That the police power in its broadest acceptation means the general power of a government to preserve and promote the public welfare by prohibiting all things hurtful to the comfort, safety, and welfare of society, and establishing such rules and regulations for the conduct of all persons and the use and management of all property as may be conducive to the public interest. . . . The police power is an attribute of sovereignty, and exists without any reservation in the Constitution, being founded upon the duty of the state to protect its citizens and provide for the safety and good order of society. It corresponds to the right of self-preservation in the individual, and is an essential element in all orderly governments, because necessary to the proper maintenance of the government and the general welfare of the community. Upon it depend the security of social order, the life and health of the citizen, the comfort of an existence in a thickly populated community, the enjoyment of private and social life, and the beneficial use of property; and it has been said to be the very foundation upon which our social system rests. It is founded largely on the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, and also to some extent upon that other maxim of public policy, Salus populi suprema lex."

It is true that the ultimate question of the validity of a statutory enactment by which this power is sought to be exercised is with the courts, and they will not hesitate to discharge the duty of declaring an act void if clearly so convinced, but subject to the presumptions and limitations herein referred to. The rule upon this subject can perhaps be no more clearly expressed by us than by the following: "Under the police power the state can interfere whenever the public interests demand it, and in this particular a large discretion is necessarily vested in the legislature to determine not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests. But the character of police regulations, whether reasonable, impartial, and consistent with the Constitution and the state policy, is a question for the courts, for the police power is too vague, indeterminate, and dangerous to be left without control, and hence the courts have ever interfered to correct an unreasonable exertion or a mistaken application of it; and, when the legislature passes an act which plainly transcends the limits of the police power of the state, it is the duty of the judiciary to pronounce its invalidity and to nullify the legislative attempt to invade the citizen's right, for to hold that every act of the general assembly passed under the guise of an exercise of the police power or sought to be defended upon that ground was beyond judicial control would render every guaranty of personal right found in the Constitution of little or no value." 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 936. The legislature, as we must conclusively presume, acted upon the fullest investigation, and upon what appeared to it to be reasonable grounds, and, as must be also assumed, has determined that the prohibition of the reduction of the price of commodities in general use in any particular locality, "for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor in such locality," and discriminating "between different sections, communities, or cities" by underselling at the point of competition for the purpose named, would be conducive to "the general welfare" of the people compelled to purchase such commodities, and by the act in question has sought to remedy the evil. Has it not the power to do so? As said in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 370, 30 L. ed. 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064, and quoted in Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 685, 32 L. ed. 256, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 996: "The very idea that one man may be compelled to hold his life, or the means of living, or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life, at the mere will of another, seems to be intolerable in any country where freedom prevails, as being the essence of slavery itself." If the state has not the power to protect its people from the acts of those who have for their "purpose" the destruction of the business of a competitor in order that the wrongdoer may have a monopoly, its powers are much more limited than we had supposed. In Powell v. Pennsylvania, supra, the court, quoting from the Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496, said: "Every possible presumption . . . is in favor of the validity of a statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt. One branch of the government cannot encroach on the domain of another without danger. The safety of our institutions depends in no small degree on a strict observance of this salutary rule. . . . The power which the legislature has to promote the general welfare is very great, and the discretion which that department of the government has in the employment of means to that end is very large." Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. State, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 44 S. W. 936, is an instructive and well-considered case upon the general subject involved in this case. When we take into consideration that it is not the act itself, but the act coupled with the purpose of destroying the business and property of others, which is declared to be criminal, we find but little trouble in arriving at the conclusion that the statute is within the power of the legislature, and is therefore valid.

It is contended by counsel for defendant that "the act interferes with freedom of contract," and is therefore violative of the Constitutions of both the Federal and state governments. As we have already indicated, we are wholly unable to see where the previously existing right of the individual to enter into lawful contracts is in the least abridged or impaired. It is not the making of contracts which is forbidden, but the conduct, purpose, and motives of the party in connection with his acts, which brings him within the prohibitions of the law.

It is also contended that the act is void by reason of its classifications, and must therefore be held invalid on the ground of "class legislation." It is said that "the act operates upon and against the man who has stores in more than one place, and does not affect the dealer in but one place." That "keepers of but one store may compete, intend to build themselves upon the ruins of their fellows who maintain single stores or stores in several places, and to ruin their fellows in order to build themselves up, and the law applauds; but keepers of more than one store doing the very things and with like intentions as single store keepers are frowned upon, fined, and imprisoned." To this we must be permitted to say that we are unable to find any provision in the act which is susceptible of the construction contended for. An individual or corporation may have but one place where the commodity dealt in may be stored or kept in stock, and yet in the "distribution" of that stock may seek to destroy the business of a competitor in another locality, and thus violate the law. There are many cities and villages in this state which are adjacent to each other,—sometimes so near as to cause a stranger, unacquainted with their superficial boundaries, to be unable to say where one leaves off and another begins. A dealer in one may, for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor in the other, so discriminate as between the two places as to violate the statute. Common experience and observation, within the knowledge of all, is to the effect that many of the strongest and most grasping monopolies of the state have their places of business—their business homes—in but one place, and yet they are "distributing" and "selling" their commodities in practically every city and village within the state. They do not desire competition. They do not hesitate to destroy the business of local dealers wherever found by unjust discriminations. If prompted by that "purpose," the law is violated, and it is within the power of the legislature to prevent the discrimination. Again, it is said that, by the provisions of the law, an act which is of itself lawful may be rendered unlawful by reason of the mind or purpose of the individual accused, and that such mental condition or purpose would be impossible of proof. This is not a question which inheres in the subject before us. The presence or absence of a criminal purpose may or may not be easily ascertained, but with that we now have nothing to do. Each prosecution under the act will have to depend upon its own proved facts. The existence or nonexistence of what is known in criminal law as the criminal mind would be a question for a trial jury under the facts established by the evidence submitted. Questions are discussed in the brief of defendant, which we have incidentally referred to, but without special attention, and which we scarcely think merit a further extension of this opinion.

We find nothing in the act under consideration requiring us to hold it unconstitutional. The District Court erred in holding the act of the legislature invalid. The exceptions of the state are therefore sustained. Judgment accordingly.

Petition for rehearing denied.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

ZACHARY T. BRINDLEY, Appt.,

v.

EDWIN WALKER et al.

(221 Pa. 287, 70 Atl. 794.)

Corporation — removal of secretary.

A secretary and treasurer of a corporation appointed by the board of directors may be removed at the pleasure of the board, although the statute provides that the corporation shall be managed by a president, a board of directors, a secretary, a treasurer, and such other officers as the corporation authorizes.

(May 11, 1908.)

Case Note.—Power of directors to remove their own appointee who is one of the class of officers to whom the management of the business is confided.

The general rule is that, where the law governing a corporation is silent as to the tenure of the officers thereof, and also as to their removal, the power of amotion is incidental to that of appointment, and the appointing power may remove an officer appointed by them whenever, in their judgment, the best interests of the institution require it. People ex rel. Stevenson v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 110; State ex rel. Danforth v. Kuehn, 34 Wis. 229.

In People ex rel. Stevenson v. Higgins, supra, it is said that the appointing power may remove any officer appointed by them, without assigning any specific cause therefor, if, in their judgment, the best interests of the corporation require it.

While in State ex rel. Danforth v. Kuehn, supra, it is said that this power of amotion does not authorize the removal of an officer by the appointing power arbitrarily and without cause; that the power to remove, when an incident to the power to appoint, is confined to removal for good cause shown, which must be something affecting the character and qualification of the incumbent, or his unfitness, or want of capacity, longer to discharge the duties of his position. And see also to same effect, Fuller v. Academic School, 6 Conn. 532.

This power of removal, where incident to the power to appoint, seems to include all classes of officers, without reference to their position in the corporation, whether executive, managerial, or subordinate. Re A. A. Griffing Iron Co. 63 N. J. L. 357, 46 Atl. 1097 (president); O'Neal v. F. A. Neider Co. 118 Ky. 62, 80 S. W. 451 (treasurer); Granger v. American Brewing Co. 25 Misc. 302, 55 N. Y. Supp. 695 (general superintendent), reversed on a different point in 25 Misc. 701, 54 N. Y. Supp. 590.

This doctrine has also been applied to the power of trustees of public academies and universities to remove their appointees. Fuller v. Academic School, supra;

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Erie County in defendants' favor in a mandamus proceeding to compel the reinstatement of plaintiff as secretary of the Erie Specialty Company. Affirmed.

The Erie Specialty Company was organized under the act of April 29, 1874, and its supplements. It had a paid-up capital stock of 700 shares, of which plaintiff owned 350. It was managed by a board of three directors, and the board organized by electing plaintiff as secretary and treasurer. After the organization the president called a special meeting, at which plaintiff was deposed and other persons placed in the offices of secretary and treasurer.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank Gunnison, John S. Rilling, and Henry E. Fish, for appellant:

The secretary of an incorporated company is a managing officer of the company, and is not merely an officer of the managers or directors by whom he is appointed.

4 Thomp. Corp. § 4692; Ehrenzeller v. Union Canal Co. 1 Rawle, 181; Coffin v. Reynolds, 37 N. Y. 640.

Messrs. J. C. Sturgeon, H. M. Sturgeon, and T. A. Lamb, for appellees:

The board of directors of a private corporation have power to remove their secretary and treasurer at pleasure, without alleging a reason therefor and without notice to the party removed, where there is no provision in the law nor in the by-laws of the corporation, fixing the term for which the officer so removed should serve.

Field v. Girard College, 54 Pa. 233; State v. Vincennes University, 5 Ind. 77.

Usually the power to remove is expressly conferred by by-law, charter, or statute, upon the appointing power; where so conferred, it is well settled that the power to remove exists to the extent thus conferred and in the manner provided, if provision is made therefor. Stobo v. Davis Provision Co. 54 Ill. App. 440 (removal of secretary by board of directors); State ex rel. Bornefeld v. Kupferle, 44 Mo. 154, 100 Am. Dec. 265 (also removal of secretary by directors); Douglass v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 484, 7 L.R.A. 822, 23 N. E. 806 (also removal of secretary by directors); Solley v. American Lubricator Co. 119 Iowa, 591, 93 N. W. 590 (removal of vice president by directors); Queen v. Second Ave. R. Co. 44 How. Pr. 281 (removal of vice president and general superintendent by directors); Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 274 (cashier of bank); Taylor v. Hutton, 43 Barb. 195 (president of national bank).

The power of removal, where conferred in general terms or existing as an incident to the power of appointment, does not authorize the board of directors to remove

1 Thomp. Corp. §§ 804, 805; 4 Thomp. Corp. §§ 4704, 4714; Burr v. McDonald, 3 Gratt. 215; Adamantine Brick Co. v. Woodruff, MacArth. & M. 318; Re A. A. Griffing Iron Co. 63 N. J. L. 357, 46 Atl. 1097; Hand v. Clearfield Coal Co. 143 Pa. 408, 22 Atl. 709; Wood, Mast. & S. § 37; Soldiers' Orphans' Home v. Shaffer, 63 Ill. 243; Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145, 76 Am. Dec. 508; 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, p. 1053, note 1; Bainbridge v. Smith, 60 L. T. N. S. 879; 2 Purdy's Beach, Priv. Corp. § 730; McCullough v. Moss, 5 Denio, 567; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Alling, 99 U. S. 463, 25 L. ed. 438; Elkins v. Camden & A. R. Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 233; Saltmarsh v. Spaulding, 147 Mass. 224, 17 N. E. 316; Hoyle v. Plattsburgh, & M. R. Co. 54 N. Y. 314, 13 Am. Rep. 595; State ex rel. Bornefeld v. Kupferle, 44 Mo. 154, 100 Am. Dec. 265.

Stewart, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By the action of the board of directors of the defendant corporation the appellant was removed, without cause being assigned, from the office of secretary and treasurer, to which he had been elected by the board. He seeks by this proceeding to be reinstated, on the ground that in removing him the directors exceeded their power. The general rule with respect to officers in private corporations such as this is that all below the grade of directors, and such other officers as are elected by the corporation at large, hold their offices durante bene placito, and are removable by the directors without cause being assigned. The reason for the rule is as obvione of their own number. Com. ex rel. Dickinson v. Detwiller, 131 Pa. 614, 7 L.R.A. 357, 18 Atl. 990; Laughlin v. Geer, 121 Ill. App. 534; Raub v. Gerken, 127 App. Div. 42, 111 N. Y. Supp. 319.

A board of directors, not having power to remove a member thereof, has no power to amend the by-laws to authorize them to remove a director. Raub v. Gerken, supra.

Where the by-laws of an unincorporated association give the executive committee no power to remove the secretary or to appoint his successor, and his election comes from the association itself, and is for a designated term, such committee cannot remove him, since his removal can be accomplished only by the body which elected him. Tanner v. Ranken, 44 Misc. 488, 89 N. Y. Supp. 770.

Where the by-laws of an incorporated savings bank provide that the directors shall elect from their number a president, vice president, and such other assistants as are necessary, the assistants to hold office at the pleasure of the directors, no power to remove the president exists in the board of directors. Archer v. People's Sav. Bank, 88 Ala. 249, 7 So. 53.

ous as the distinction made. The supreme authority in every corporation resides in its membership. The expressed will of the majority at a regular shareholders' meeting governs in all matters within the limits of the charter. Therefore, when action has been taken by the corporation at such a meeting on any subject pertaining to the affairs of the association, it is beyond the power of any of the agents of the corporation to undo or change what has been done. The directors are the immediate representatives of the corporation, charged with the management of its affairs, and are necessarily invested with large discretionary powers; but they can act only where the corporation has not. Ordinarily, the selection of the secretary and treasurer is committed to the board of directors, as was the case here; but, when the corporation has itself elected these officers, the directors must accept them, and the officers so elected hold on the terms and conditions prescribed by the corporation, and none other. They derive their title to their respective offices from the same source as the directors do theirs, and they can be removed only by the power that appointed them. It is otherwise when the corporation has committed the election to the board of directors. In such case the board stands for the corporation, the officers selected are its appointees, and its power to remove is necessarily implied. "The directors and managing agents of a corporation have undoubted authority to revoke the powers of the inferior agents whom they have appointed. It would be practically impossible to carry on the business of a corporation without this power. It is therefore always implied. The power is a discretionary one, and the rightfulness of its exercise cannot be investigated by the courts. But the directors of a corporation have no implied authority to revoke the power of those agents who are appointed by a vote of the stockholders, or whose office is fixed and regulated by the charter." 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 541. "The ministerial officers who are not elected by the corporators at large, for stated terms, but who are appointed by the board of directors, and who, therefore, sustain toward the corporation the relation of an employee toward an employer, serving for a compensation, which in general the directors do not receive, have no franchise in their office, and hence are removable at the mere pleasure of the directors, without the assignment of any cause, without the giving of any notice, and without any trial or investigation into the grounds of the removal." 1 Thomp. Corp. § 805.

The secretary and treasurer in corporations such as this are purely ministerial officers. The effort here made to show that, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) under our act of assembly, they are something more, is unavailing. The act of 1891, under which this corporation is said to have been chartered, provides that corporations chartered under it "shall be managed and conducted by a president, a board of directors or trustees, a secretary or clerk, a treasurer, and such other officers, agents, and factors as the corporation authorizes for that purpose." The effect and purpose of this provision is to require of every corporation that it shall have the officers named, viz., a president, directors, secretary, and treasurer, as a necessary part of the equipment of its organization. The act does not attempt to define the powers and duties of any of the officers named, but leaves these to be implied from the established custom and the nature and character of the places filled. The construction that would make the act invest the secretary and treasurer with discretionary power—something which a ministerial officer has not—would extend that discretionary power to all the agents and factors which the act allows the corporation to employ. Manifestly nothing of this kind was intended. From what we have said it follows that, in removing the appellant from the office of secretary and treasurer, the board of directors was exercising a power which rightfully belonged to it. Whether it was wisely or considerably exercised is not for us to determine.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

DANIEL GARRIGAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

(89 C. C. A. 494, 163 Fed. 16.)

Appeal—contempt—review.

1. A conviction for disobeying an injunctive order to punish for acts in contempt of the power and dignity of the court is reviewable as a criminal proceeding.

Injunction—notice—disobedience—contempt.

2. The mere publication in newspapers and posting upon wagons of an injunctive order forbidding interference with Case Note.—Necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it.

This note, as indicated in its title, presupposes that one not a party to a suit in which an injunction is issued may, at least if properly charged with notice of the injunction, be chargeable with contempt for teams of a teaming company are not sufficient to charge with knowledge thereof, so as to render guilty of contempt, one not a party to the proceeding who assists in a riot in which such teams are interfered with and those in charge of them assaulted, in opposition to his denial of knowledge and the legal presumption of his innocence.

Same — aiding disobedience — evidence.

3. The mere fact that one not a party to an injunction against interfering with the teams of a teaming association assisted in a riot in which such teams were interfered with and those in charge of them assaulted, is not sufficient to show that he aided and abetted persons named in the bill in violating the injunction, so as to render him guilty of contempt of court.

Same — assault on prisoner.

4. An assault upon a guard of a team, interference with which has been enjoined by the court, after he has been arrested and is in custody of the police, is not directed against a custodian of the team so as to render the act a contempt of the injunction.

(April 14, 1908.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of the Northern District of Illinois to review a violating the same, and deals simply with the question as to the necessity and the sufficiency of the notice in order to charge such a person.

Under some circumstances, at least, a party to an injunction suit may be chargeable with notice of the issuing of the injunction so that his violation thereof will render him guilty of contempt even though he has no actual notice thereof; but it is otherwise as to one not a party. In order to charge such a person with contempt he must have had actual notice of the injunction prior to the performance of the acts upon which the charge of contempt is based.

Thus, a stranger to an injunction if he has notice or knowledge of its terms is bound thereby, and may be punished for contempt for violating its provision; but he cannot be charged with contempt unless a copy of the injunction was served upon him, or it is proved that he had knowledge of its provisions. State ex rel. Thompson v. Lavery, 31 Or. 77, 49 Pac. 852. It was so held, although the injunction in this case ran against the "defendant, . . . his agents, attorneys, and employees, and all persons acting under, by, or through him."

In Stateler v. California Nat. Bank, 77 Fed. 43, an attorney who was not aware of an injunction restraining a certain party, his attorneys, etc., from commencing any further litigation or attempting to take control of any assets of an insolvent bank, and from attempting to settle or allow any attorney's or other fees growing out of past litigation, was held purged of contempt in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

judgment adjudging defendant guilty of contempt in violating an injunctive order. Reversed.

Statement by Seaman, Circuit Judge:

The plaintiff in error, Daniel Garrigan, was adjudged by the circuit court guilty of contempt, in the violation of an injunctive order issued by that court, in aiding and abetting the parties enjoined and interfering with the business and employees under the protection of such order, and the proceedings and judgment are brought for review by this writ of error.

The judgment recites the proceedings and findings, and reads as follows: "It appearing to the court that on April 28, 1905, the Employers' Teaming Company filed its bill of complaint in equity in said court, in and for said district and division thereof, praying for an injunction, both temporary and permanent, and that on said April 28, 1905, on the application of said the Employers' Teaming Company, said court duly entered of record, in said chancery proceeding, a temporary stay and injunctive order, and that said the Employers' Teaming Company thereafter filed a petition in said chancery proceeding for a rule directing Daniel Garrigan to show cause by a violating the order by an affidavit showing that he was not aware thereof.

Klinck v. Black, 14 S. C. 241, held that the act of a deputy sheriff in putting a purchaser into possession, after an order restraining such act had been served on the sheriff, but before the deputy had knowledge of the injunction, was invalid. This was not a proceeding for contempt, but the question involved was as to the validity and effect of the act itself.

The necessity of actual notice in order to charge one not a party with contempt in violating the injunction is very commonly recognized in the statements of the principle that one not a party to the suit may be chargeable with contempt in violating an injunction.

Thus, for example, an injunction is not only binding on persons who were actual parties defendant to the bill, but also on all persons who have actual notice of the contents of the writ, and the latter are liable to punishment for contempt for violating the injunction. O'Brien v. People, 216 Ill. 354, 108 Am. St. Rep. 219, 75 N. E. 108, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 966.

It will also be observed that the necessity of actual notice of the injunction, in order to charge one not a party with contempt, is recognized in most of the cases cited in the note. There is, however, an exception to the rule requiring actual notice in such cases, where the order or decree granting the injunction operates, so to speak, in rem and attaches to certain property, and is not in personam merely.

Thus, actual notice of an injunction in short day why he should not be attached for contempt of said court for violating said temporary stay and injunctive order; and it further appearing to the court that affidavits were duly filed with and in support of said petition, and that upon the filing and presentation of said petition and affidavits, said Daniel Garrigan was duly ruled by said court, in said chancery proceeding, to show cause by May 31, 1905, at 10 o'clock A. M., why he should not be attached for contempt of said court for violating said temporary stay and injunctive order; and that said Daniel Garrigan was duly and personally served with a certified copy of said rule, and that he thereafter filed an answer thereto, supported by affidavits, and that rebuttal affidavits were filed by said the Employers' Teaming Company; and the court having heard and considered said petition, answer, and all said affidavits, and also oral evidence then and there offered in open court by said the Employers' Teaming Company and also by said Daniel Garrigan; and the court having heard the arguments of counsel for said respective parties, and being fully advised in the premises, and said Daniel Garrigan having been present in open court in person and by counsel at the hearing on said rule, and being also now here present in open court in person and by counsel,—the court finds that said Daniel Garrigan on May 2, 1905, in the city of Chicago, in said district, had full knowledge of the existence of said temporary stay and injunctive order and of the terms thereof, and with such knowledge did then and there knowingly, wilfully, and intentionally violate said stay and injunctive order, and did then and there, with full knowledge of the existence of said temporary stay and injunctive order, and of the terms thereof, knowingly, wilfully, and intentionally aid and abet the defendants, or some of them, to said bill of complaint, in committing acts and grievances complained of in said bill of complaint, and prohibited by said stay and injunctive order. And the court further finds that said Daniel Garrigan on the date and at the place last aforesaid, and with full knowledge of the existence of said temporary stay and injunctive order and of the terms thereof, did knowingly, wilfully, and intentionally and contrary to and in violation of the terms of said stay and injunctive order, interfere with, hinder, obstruct, and aid and abet the defendants, or some of them, to said bill of complaint, in interfering with, hindering, and obstructing the proceedings for the abatement of a liquor nuisance is not essential to render a lessee of the property liable for a contempt in maintaining a liquor nuisance on the premises, even though he was not a party to the proceedings, since the judgment operates upon the property as well as upon the person of the defendant, and the lessee necessarily takes the property subject to the restriction and burden imposed thereby. Silvers v. Traverse, 82 Iowa, 52, 11 L.R.A. 804, 47 N. W. 888; State v. Porter, 70 Kan. 411, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 462, 91 Pac. 1073. (See note to latter case in 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 462, as to the effect of a judgment enjoining the use of real property in a certain manner upon the right of subsequent occupants to use the property in that manner.)

In Buhlman v. Humphrey, 86 Iowa, 597, 53 N. W. 318, it was held that a decree in an injunction proceeding restraining certain persons therein named from keeping a liquor nuisance upon certain premises was not binding upon a subsequent purchaser of the premises or his lessee so as to subject them to punishment for contempt in case of their violation of the same; but this decision was not upon the ground that such purchaser or his lessees did not know of the injunction, but upon the ground that they were not bound thereby, and the court expressly said that it was immaterial whether in fact they knew of the injunction or not, since it was not directed against them and did not attach to the property.

In Newcomer v. Tucker, 89 Iowa, 486, 56 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. W. 499, holding that a tenant of premises could not be charged with contempt for the violation of an injunction which in terms enjoined the owner only from using the premises for the sale of liquor, the court said that the case was in all respects like Buhlman v. Humphrey, though it is also stated in this case that it did not appear that the tenant had knowledge of the injunction.

It is well settled that actual notice of the injunction is sufficient to render even one who was not a party guilty of contempt in violating it, and that it is not necessary, if he had actual notice, that he should have been served with a copy of the injunction or the writ. Re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 41 L. ed. 1110, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658, affirming 12 C. C. A. 134, 22 U. S. App. 561, 64 Fed. 320; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McConnell, 82 Fed. 65; United States v. Sweeney, 95 Fed. 447; Ex parte Richards, 117 Fed. 658; Anderson v. Indianapolis Drop Forging Co. 34 Ind. App. 100, 72 N. E. 277; Koehler v. Farmers' & D. Nat. Bank, 3 Silv. Sup. Ct. 141, 6 N. Y. Supp. 470, affirmed in 117 N. Y. 661, 22 N. E. 1134; Daly v. Amberg, 126 N. Y. 490, 27 N. E. 1038; People ex rel. Aldinger v. Pugh, 57 Hun, 181, 10 N. Y. Supp. 634, affirmed in 132 N. Y. 403, 30 N. E. 745.

So, one though not a party to a bill is sufficiently charged with notice of an injunction to render him guilty of contempt in violating the same, by the reading and giving to him of a copy of the decree, and without service of a copy of the writ. Fowler v. Beckman, 66 N. H. 424, 30 Atl. 1117.

business of said the Employers' Teaming Company, and also its employees and agents, while they were then and there engaged in the conduct and operation of its business; that said Daniel Garrigan has failed to show cause why he should not be attached and punished as for contempt of this court for violating said temporary stay and injunctive order; that said contempt has tended to defeat and impair the rights and interests of said the Employers' Teaming Company, and to obstruct justice, and bring the administration of justice into contempt. Wherefore, the premises considered, it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said rule to show cause be and the same hereby is made absolute. And it is further hereby ordered and decreed by the court that the said Daniel Garrigan was and is, and he hereby is adjudged, guilty of and in contempt of this court, and that said Daniel Garrigan stand committed to and be confined and imprisoned in the county jail of Du Page county, in Wheaton, in said county, in the state of Illinois, for and during the period of three months, unless he shall be sooner discharged therefrom by due process of law, and that a warrant of commitment do now issue in due form for the arrest forthwith of said Daniel Garrigan, directed to the United States marshal for the northern district of Illinois, and that, when arrested by said marshal, said Daniel Garrigan be committed to said jail, and that he be there held for the said period of three months, unless sooner discharged therefrom by due process of law, and that said term of imprisonment shall begin when said Daniel Garrigan is lodged in said jail, as herein provided."

The injunctive order referred to ran against various trade organizations and individuals, named as defendants in the bill filed by the Employers' Teaming Company,—the plaintiff in error not being named therein, nor party of record in any form,—and "each and every of the agents and servants of the said defendants and of each of them, and any and all other persons and associations now or hereafter aiding or abetting or confederating or acting in concert with said defendants, or any or either of them, in committing the acts and grievances, or any of them, complained of in said bill of complaint," and restrained the commission of various acts, including the following: "Hindering, obstructing, or stopping any of the business of the complainant, the Employers' Teaming Company, in the maintenance, conduct, management, or operation of any of its business, barns, stables, horses, wagons, or properties of any kind in the city of Chicago; . . . also, from in any manner interfering with, hindering, obstructing or stopping the passage along and through the streets of said city of any of complainant's wagons, teams, or teamsters in and about the business of complainant; . . . and also from accompanying, following, talking with, or calling upon any person or persons employed by or doing business with said complainant, against the express will of said person or persons, for the purpose of or in such manner as to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any such person or persons; . . . and also, either singly or in combination with others, from picketing, besetting, or patrolling any place or places where said complainant's employees, teams, wagons, stables, barns, or other property may be or happen to be in said city; . . . and also, from ordering, assisting, aiding, or abetting in any manner whatsoever, any person or persons to commit any of the acts aforesaid." It further provided for service of the order upon and in respect of the defendants therein, and that it "shall be binding upon all of said defendants and all other persons whomsoever from and after the time they severally have knowledge of the allowance of this order."

Argued before Baker and Seaman, Circuit Judges, and Sanborn, District Judge.

Messrs. Daniel L. Ornice and William H. Slack for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Levy Mayer for the United States.

Seaman, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was not a party to the bill filed by the Employers' Teaming Company for injunctive relief, nor a member of either of the associations named as defendants therein, nor named in the restraining order whereof violation is averred in these contempt proceedings, and neither averment nor proof appears of his relation to or privity with either of the parties enjoined, prior to or apart from the alleged acts in violation and contempt of such order. Thus the proceedings and conviction which are brought for review under this writ of error are distinctly criminal in their nature, and reviewable in conformity with the established doctrine of such procedure. Besette v. W. B. Conkey Co. 194 U. S. 324, 326, 48 L. ed. 997, 1001, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665; Re Christensen Engineering Co. 194 U. S. 453, 459, 48 L. ed. 1072, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729. Whatever of confusion appeared in the authorities, prior to the decisions above cited, as to the distinction in contempt proceedings between those of civil and criminal nature,—the one remedial for the benefit and enforcement of the rights of parties to a suit, and the other to punish for acts in contempt of the power and dignity of the court,—that classification has become the settled rule for testing the nature of the proceeding and reviewable questions.

The proceedings against the plaintiff in error were instituted by a petition filed by the Employers' Teaming Company, as complainant in the above-mentioned bill, averring, in substance, the issuance of the injunctive order referred to, its wide publication in newspapers in Chicago, and posting conspicuously on all the wagons of complainant which were engaged in the operation described, and stating "upon information and belief that each of the persons hereinafter named as respondents to this, its said petition, did at the time of the commission of the acts hereinafter complained of have full knowledge and notice of the issuance of said temporary stay or injunctive order, and knew, or by the exercise of ordinary intelligence might have known, of the issuance of said injunctive order." Thereupon the petition charges that the plaintiff in error (and numerous other persons named) "violated said injunctive order as aforesaid, at the time, place, and in the manner set forth in the affidavits of Solon W. Baxter" and seven other persons attached to and made a part of the petition. An answer was filed by the plaintiff in error, under a rule entered and served to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt and after raising various objections to the petition and proceeding, which denies under oath commission of the several acts and offenses charged in the petition and affidavits, and denies knowledge or notice of the injunction, or violation thereof "intentionally or otherwise." Motion was made and denied to discharge the rule to show cause upon this sworn answer, and the case proceeded to hearing, with sufficient objections urged and saved on behalf of the plaintiff in error to raise the various propositions on which error is assigned.

The evidence upon which the conviction rests appears in a bill of exceptions, and consists mainly of ex parte affidavits, purporting to be made by witnesses of the occurrences in controversy,—with a single witness, one Dimick, produced and testifying in open court,—which affidavits were submitted on behalf of the parties respectively. In the opinion filed by the trial court it is aptly remarked that the opposing affidavits, "as is usual in such controversies, were directly contradictory of each other;" and that, in "such irreconcilable conflict of testimony, it is often impossible to get a clue to the truth." While these affidavits concur in proving a case of mob violence during the attempted movement of complainant's teams and wagons through the streets of Chicago, and riotous interference with the persons guarding them, those introduced for the prosecution and defense are "directly contradictory" in all the facts bearing upon the issues involved, both in respect of the conduct of the parties, collectively and individually, engaged in the riot, and of the part and conduct of the plaintiff in error therein. Assuming, without deciding, that it was within the discretion of the trial court to hear the case upon such affidavits, instead of ascertaining the facts from testimony taken in open court, as was the course adopted in Re Savin, 131 U. S. 267, 268, 33 L. ed. 150, 151, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699, and mentioned as of course in United States v. Shipp, 203 U. S. 563, 575, 51 L. ed. 319, 324, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 265, the facts to authorize conviction must nevertheless be clearly established, and the affidavits introduced here exemplify the infirmity of such ex parte means for the "legal understanding" of facts in controversy intended by the rules of evidence.

In any view of the charges of contempt and evidence so received, it is unquestionable that the only issues of fact were: (a) Whether the accused had knowledge of the injunction; and if such knowledge appeared, whether he committed acts, either (b) in aid of its violation by the parties enjoined, or (c) in plain defiance of its terms, and thus in contempt of the authority and commands of the court. As it is neither charged nor proven that the plaintiff in error was one of the parties enjoined, he is not chargeable for breach or violation of the injunction, in the well-recognized sense of those terms applicable to parties. He was bound, alike with other members of the public, to observe its restrictions when known, to the extent that he must not aid or abet its violation by others, nor set the known command of the court at defiance by interference with or obstruction of the administration of justice; and the power of the court to proceed against one so offending and punish for the contemptuous conduct is inherent and indisputable. Seaward v. Paterson [1897] 1 Ch. 645, 554, 76 L. T. N. S. 215; Re Reese, 47 C. C. A. 87, 90, 107 Fed. 942. We believe the above-mentioned distinction in contempt proceedings, between disobedience of the injunction by parties and privies and the conduct of others in contempt of the authority and commands of the court, to be elementary, and the sufficiency of the evidence in the case at bar to support conviction must be tested thereunder. The question discussed in the briefs, whether the general averment in the petition that the plaintiff in error "violated said injunctive order" authorized reception of this evidence to establish either class of contempt relied upon for conviction, is not involved in our view of the effect of the affidavits, incorporated in the petition, that they aver such facts and furnish notice for the introduction. The petition is plainly defective, however, in the averments to charge the plaintiff in error with knowledge of the injunction,—stating alternatively that he "knew, or by the exercise of ordinary intelligence might have known, of the issuance;" but laying out of view for the present inquiry the objection raised thereupon, we proceed to consideration of the versions of fact on which the finding and conviction are predicated, to ascertain their bearing and sufficiency.

The present proceedings arose out of notorious conditions of mob violence which attended a strike in Chicago, known as the "teamsters' strike," in April and May, 1905. We are not authorized, however, to consider upon this review, either the serious questions, public or private, which were involved, or the effect of the disturbances and violence upon the business and welfare of the community, as pressed to attention in the argument in support of the judgment. The issues to be determined are not of riotous and unlawful conduct in attack upon the teams and guards, nor whether the testimony tends to show commissions of offenses by the plaintiff in error against the state and public, either by way of inciting a mob to acts of violence or in breaches of the peace. Such offenses are not within the cognizance of the trial court, and the judgment cannot rest on their commission, however convincing the proof may appear. While the "contempt proceeding is sui generis," it is distinctly criminal in its nature (Besette v. W. B. Conkey Co. supra), and the accused is clearly entitled to the benefits of the common-law presumption of innocence, with its strict requirement of proof for conviction, although the pleadings may not be subject to the technical rules of the criminal law.

Taking up the affidavits introduced in support of the charges of contempt, they plainly state a vicious attack upon two teams of the complainant and the persons attending as guards, by a mob and individuals named, for the manifest object of obstructing the teams and injuring the guards. They identify the plaintiff in error as one of the assailants, "in the uniform of a city fireman," and state that he was following up the teams and guards in their passage through the street; that he was observed "throwing stones at the colored men guarding the teams," was swearing at the guards, "calling vile names," and cried out to the crowd to "hang the damned niggers;" and that he ultimately assaulted and struck one of the guards after such guard was arrested by the city police force, was in their custody, and either in a police wagon or "getting into it." The single witness, Dimick, called to testify upon the hearing, states only the last-mentioned assault upon the guard so arrested and in custody in the police wagon. These versions of fact, in substance,—without a fact stated to connect the mob violence or individual attacks with parties named in the injunction, either as associations or individuals, or with express defiance of such injunction, and with no proof tending to show knowledge of the injunction or intent to defy its commands, aside from the alleged publications of the order in the public press and notices thereof borne upon the wagons thus interfered with,—constitute the evidence upon which the plaintiff in error is adjudged guilty of contempt. On the part of the plaintiff in error, his presence when the conflict occurred is admitted, but his testimony is specific in denial of every act of violence or participation above mentioned; and he states in substance that his only part in the disturbance was to assist "the police to protect life and property," and that he did so assist in quelling the riot and arresting rioters, in conformity with his understanding of his duty as one of the city firemen. This version is supported by several affidavits, by policemen and other witnesses, and subsequent proceedings in the criminal court were introduced by way of corroboration. Further statements by these affiants, in reference to the conduct of persons acting as guards, are deemed immaterial in any view of the issues.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

With the stories thus contradictory as to the participation and conduct of the plaintiff in error, we are impressed with the view indicated in the opinion of the trial court that it is difficult, to say the least, to ascertain the true version; but solution thereof is not involved here as a reviewable question. The findings by the court stated in the judgment are in general terms, in effect, that plaintiff in error, (a) with full knowledge of the injunction, (b) did wilfully and in violation of its terms interfere with, "and aid and abet the defendants, or some of them, to said bill," in interfering with, "the business of said the Employers' Teaming Company" and its employees and agents engaged therein, and (c) that he "has failed to show cause why he should not be attached and punished as for contempt." While we are not at liberty to refer to the opinion of the court for other or specific findings of fact, we assume for the purposes of the present inquiry that the above-mentioned statements of fact by the witnesses for the prosecution are adopted by the finding as the true version, and thus made conclusive here for the purposes of review; and it is further assumed that the deductions in the findings, as stated, amount to a finding of both of the classes of contempt above defined, namely, aiding and abetting violation of the injunction by a party, and contemptuous interference as an outsider. Thereupon, the question is presented whether these deductions are sustained by proof.

We are of opinion that each of the findings is unsupported, in any admissible view of the facts so established. The finding that the plaintiff in error had "full knowledge of the injunction"—a fundamental requisite for either charge of contempt—rests alone on the alleged publicity of the issuance, through newspapers and notices thereof which were posted on the wagons intercepted by the mob. No testimony appears of word or action on the part of the plaintiff in error, or in his hearing, in reference to the injunction; nor that his attention was directed to the wagons, their contents, or any notices thereon. He is clearly entitled to the benefit of "the presumption of innocence, as evidence in favor of the accused, introduced by the law in his behalf" (Coffin v. United States, 156 U. S. 432, 458, 460, 39 L. ed. 481, 492, 493, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 394, reaffirmed in the recent opinion of this court in Dalton v. United States, 83 C. C. A. 317, 154 Fed. 461), which arises alike in respect of notice and conduct, as "an instrument of proof created in his favor;" and the mere inference of "full knowledge," derived solely from the above-mentioned facts, is without force, as we believe, to overcome the express denial of knowledge on the part of the accused, fortified by the presumption thus defined. The finding of such knowledge, therefore, is unsupported by the needful proof to authorize conviction, and cannot be upheld under the foregoing view. So the question whether the insufficient averment thereof in the petition constitutes reviewable error does not require solution.

Upon these premises, therefore, that knowledge of the injunction is unproven, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and that no proof appears that the plaintiff in error was engaged by or with any person or association enjoined in its violation, we are of opinion that the evidence fails to establish cause for his conviction of contempt of court, within either of the classes found and adjudged against him. The misconduct stated by the witnesses for the prosecution,—in assailing and abusing the guards who were protecting the movement of the teams, and inciting the mob to like interference,—however criminal in its nature and disturbing in purpose and effect, thus standing alone, does not constitute contempt within either definition of such offense. Wilful defiance, and contempt of the authority and order of the court, cannot be intended or committed without information that such authority has been exercised in the issuance of an injunction protecting the movement and services thus interfered with. Nor is the alleged misconduct brought within the finding of violation of the order, in aiding or abetting "the defendants, or some of them, to said bill of complaint, in committing the acts and grievances complained of," for the further reason that it does not appear in evidence that any such parties were engaged in the attack, directly or indirectly. In reference to the alleged subsequent assault upon one of the guards when such guard was under arrest and in the custody of the police authorities, we deem it sufficient to remark that the guard was not then serving as escort, and any offense then committed was against the dignity of the state, and not that of the court issuing the injunction.

For want of evidence that the plaintiff in error was guilty of contempt of court in his alleged misconduct, the judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, with direction to discharge the rule against the plaintiff in error.

Petition for writ of certiorari denied by Supreme Court of United States [214 U. S. 514, 53 L. ed. 1063, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696].

Petition for rehearing denied June 4, 1908.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Abandonment.

Constitutionality of statute requiring a husband, upon conviction of abandonment, to provide for support of wife or family (Case Note)

854

Accomplice.

Criminal responsibility of one who aids another in an assault in which the latter, without his knowledge or consent, uses a deadly weapon (Case Note)

273

Accounting.

Power of court to require accounting between members of partnership which is illegal or void, or which has been engaged in illegal business (Case Note)

478

Jurisdiction of equity over suit for accounting in respect of real property in another state or country (Case Note)

Accounts.

Conclusiveness of stated or settled account containing inaccuracy or error in method of mathematical calculation (Case Note)

787

Acknowledgment.

Acknowledgment of corporate instrument before one who is a stockholder or officer of corporation (Case Note)

1075

Actions or suit.

Right of foreign corporations to maintain, see CORPORATIONS.

Necessity of formal declaration of forfeiture as a condition of maintaining action other than for damages, based on a breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold (Case Note)

923

May one who destroys insured property defeat an action by the owner upon the ground that the right of action is in the insurer (Case Note)

870

Adverse possession.

Is possession of a mortgagee who enters under incomplete or defective foreclosure adverse to mortgagor (Case Note)

754

Alienation of affections.

Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note)

391

Animals.

Liability for frightening animal to death (Case Note)

183

Liability of master to servant for personal injury by wild animal or animal kept for exhibition purposes (Case Note)

1071

Liability of municipal corporation for failing to prevent animals running at large in street (Subject Note)

642

Appeal and error.

Effect of pending appeal from a conviction upon its operation as a bar to another prosecution for the same offense (Case Note)

596

Arbitration and award.

Conclusiveness, as between municipality and contractor, of decision of engineer or other empowered officer as to matters concerning contract for public improvement (Case Note)

317

Assault.

Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note)

389

Criminal responsibility of one who aids another in assault in which the latter, without his knowledge or consent, uses a deadly weapon (Case Note)

273

Assignment.

Assignability of executory contract to perform particular work, as distinguished from a contract for personal services or contract of sale (Case Note)

223

Estoppel to set up original obligee's breach of condition to make future advances as against assignee of contract for payment of money not protected by the law merchant (Case Note)

178

Assumpsit.

Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper drawn upon it or payable at it under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it (Case Note)

1092

1303

Right to recover from agent money paid him for his principal (Case Note)	553	Boarding stable. Care required of keeper of boarding stable (Case Note)	188
Attachment. As condition precedent to equitable remedy of creditors, see CREDITORS' BILL. Right of third persons who claim property to intervene in attachment action (Case Note)	536	Bonds. As to bail bonds, see BAIL. Liability of sureties on bond of public officer for default of principal during prior term (Case Note)	131
Right of intervener in attachment to attack validity of service of process (Case Note)	1084	Bridge. Right of municipality, without express power, to permit construction of an overhead bridge across a public street for private purpose (Case Note)	158
Attorneys. Right of attorney to purchase subject-matter of litigation or of retainer from client, and his duty in relation thereto (Case Note)	679	Brokers. Power of real-estate broker to make a contract of sale (Case Note)	982
Implied power of attorney to bind client for expenses incidental to trial, including associate counsel fees (Case Note)	702	Right to commissions where two or more real-estate brokers acting for the same person are instrumental in effecting a sale of property to a certain purchaser (Case Note)	164
Automobiles. Effect of operating automobile on highway without a license (Case Note)	561	Buildings. Constitutionality of statute limiting height of (Case Note)	1160
Baggage. See INNKEEPERS.		When provision in conveyance as to erection of, regarded as condition subsequent (Case Note)	771
Bail. Liability of bail where principal fails to appear for no fault of his own (Case Note)	137	Burglary. Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note)	390
Bankruptcy. Failure or refusal of a bankrupt or person having money or property belonging to a bankrupt to deliver it to trustee, as a contempt of court (Case Note)	255	Burial. Constitutionality of restriction on business of undertaking (Case Note)	147
Banks. Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper drawn upon or payable at it, under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it (Case Note)	1092	Burial insurance and funeral benefits (Case Note)	197
Bicycle. Liability of municipal corporation for failing to prevent bicycling in violation of road law (Subject Note)	641	Canal. When does statute of limitations commence to run against action for damages caused by seepage from canal (Case Note)	795
Duty to make streets and highways safe for bicycles (Case Note)	543	Carriers. Liability of railroad company for acts of employee of sleeping or Pullman Car Company toward passengers (Case Note)	1056
Bills and notes. Valuation of commercial paper for purposes of graduating offense of larceny (Case Note)	1063	Right of passenger on street car which turns back before reaching destination (Case Note)	571
Liability upon paper given in renewal of forged paper (Case Note)	1234	Negligence in starting street car with jerk (Case Note)	891
Necessity of exhaustion of remedy at law as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note)	78, 101	Construction and effect of statute making it an offense to get on a moving car or train (Case Note)	513
Effect of renewal of principal's obligation to release party to a note executed to the creditor as collateral (Case Note)	141	Right of passenger using, as approach to station, a way not provided by carrier (Case Note)	633
Payment to one not in possession (Case Note)	414	Duty of carrier to furnish bedding for live stock (Case Note)	278
		Effect of misrepresentation as to character, quantity, or value of goods by shipper on his right to recover for loss (Case Note)	745

Is pass issued as part of consideration for contract within statute prohibiting free transportation of passengers or discrimination in passenger rates (Case Note)	217	Power of legislature to impose upon judges the duty to assist in drawing jurors (Case Note)	1115
Cash surrender value. See INSURANCE.		Constitutionality of statutes to prevent waste of subterranean water, natural gas, or oil (Case Note)	436
ChamPERTY and maintenance. Right of attorney to purchase subject-matter of litigation or of retainer from client and his duty in relation thereto (Case Note)	679	Constitutionality of statute or ordinance limiting height of building (Case Note)	1160
Checks. Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper drawn upon or payable at it under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it (Case Note)	1092	Constitutionality of restriction on business of undertaking (Case Note)	147
Cloud on title. Jurisdiction of equity over suit to remove cloud on title to real property in another state or country (Case Note)	924	Power of state or health authorities to forbid the use of a polluted water supply (Case Note)	766
Club. Applicability of liquor laws to social club dispensing liquors to members (Case Note)	192	Effect of change of judicial decisions to impair the obligation of a contract (Case Note)	500
Coasting. Liability of municipality for failure to prevent coasting in streets (Subject Note)	639	Right to take or retain in Rogues' Gallery picture of one accused of crime before conviction (Case Note)	739
Commerce. What is sufficient to terminate interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors (Case Note)	1020	Constitutionality of statute requiring a husband, upon conviction of abandonment, to provide for support of wife or family (Case Note)	854
Concealed weapons. What manner of carrying or concealment of weapon violates statute against carrying concealed weapons (Case Note)	173	Contagious diseases. Right to injunction against being sent to pesthouse (Case Note)	1188
Conflict of laws. Conflict of laws as to insurance contracts (Case Note)	968	Contempt. Failure or refusal of bankrupt or person having money or property belonging to a bankrupt to deliver it to trustee, as a contempt of court (Case Note)	255
Impeaching decree of divorce rendered in other state on the ground of non-residence or domicile of person in whose favor it was granted (Case Note)	1254	Necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it (Case Note)	1205
Jurisdiction of equity over suits affecting real property in another state or country (Case Note)	924	Contracts. Assignability of, see ASSIGNMENT. Implied power of attorney to bind client for expenses incidental to trial including associate counsel's office (Case Note)	702
Conspiracy. See LABOR ORGANIZATION; MONOPOLY.		Liability upon paper given in renewal of forged paper (Case Note)	1284
Constitutional law. Failure or refusal of a bankrupt or person having money or property belonging to a bankrupt to deliver it to trustee as a contempt of court (Case Note)	255	Subscribing one's name under word "surety" in written contract as satisfying statute of frauds (Case Note)	1197
		Must a contract for the sale of growing crops or reservation of same by a grantor be in writing (Case Note)	1218
		Termination of contracts of employment which contained stipulations permitting rescission by the employer if the work is not satisfactorily performed (Case Note)	1003
		Power of court to require accounting between members of partnership which is illegal or void, or which has been engaged in, illegal business (Case Note)	478
		Validity of anticipatory contract making provision for wife in the event of her obtaining a divorce for subsequent fault of husband (Case Note)	880
		Validity and effect of stipulation of incapacity of testator (Case Note)	783

Contract by selling shareholder not to engage in business in competition with corporation (Case Note)	506	Necessity of entry or formal declaration of forfeiture as a condition of maintaining action, other than for damages based on breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold (Case Note)	938
Conclusiveness, as between municipality and contractor, of decision of engineer or other empowered officers as to matters concerning contract for public improvement (Case Note)	317	Does grantor's right to rescind for breach of condition as to support descend to his heirs or representatives (Case Note)	232
Personal liability of public officer on contract which he attempts to make for public in excess of his authority (Case Note)	428	Creditors' bill.
Conversion.		May provision in will for support of person, which is made a lien or charge upon property devised or bequeathed to others, be reached by his creditors (Case Note)	525
Action for, see TROVER.		Conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors (Subject Note)	1
Corporations.		I. Introduction	2
Acknowledgment of corporate instrument before one who is a stockholder or officer of corporation (Case Note)	1075	II. Basis of equitable relief	4
Necessity of exhaustion of remedy at law as to corporation as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 97, 99,	109	III. Extent to which legal remedy must be pursued
Power of directors to remove their own appointee who is one of the class of officers to whom the management of the business is confided (Case Note)	1293	a. As to judgments
Contract by selling shareholder not to engage in business in competition with the corporation (Case Note)	506	1. Necessity of	10
Right of minority stockholder to restrain voluntary dissolution of corporation by the directors or majority stockholders (Case Note)	1177	2. Sufficiency, nature, effect
Soliciting trade as doing business within the state (Case Note)	834	(a) In general	20
Effect upon right of foreign corporation to maintain suit of compliance with local law after suit is instituted (Case Note)	492	(b) Judgments or decrees in equity	21
		(c) Judgments of other jurisdictions	22
Counties.		3. Proceedings at law affecting judgment	26
Liability of county for injury to one employed in or about jail, prison, or other house of detention maintained by it (Case Note)	910	b. As to execution, levy, and return
		1. As to property subject to levy
Courts.		(a) Necessity of lien
Necessity of exhaustion of remedy as to property situate beyond jurisdiction as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note)	88	(1) The general rule	26
May jurisdiction of suit for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land within the territorial jurisdiction rest upon constructive service of process against a nonresident (Case Note)	1135	(2) Absence of lien; remedy at law	31
Jurisdiction of equity over suits affecting real property in another state or country (Case Note)	924	(3) Expiration of lien	32
		(b) Acquirement of lien
Covenants and conditions.		(1) In general	33
When provision in conveyance for erection of building or other structure regarded as a condition subsequent (Case Note)	771	(2) As to real estate	33
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)		(3) As to personalty	37
		(c) Rule as to attachment and garnishment liens	39
		(d) Exhaustion of remedy at law
		(1) In general	46
		(2) Issuance of execution	47
		(3) Return of execution	49
		(4) Rule where debtor has property open to levy	54
		(5) Effect of levy upon property owned by debtor	58
		(e) Demand	58
		2. As to property not subject to levy	59

IV. What amounts to exhaustion of remedy at law
a. In general	62
b. Regularity of proceedings at law	63
c. County to which execution must be sent; return	64
d. Return of execution
1. Sufficiency of	66
2. Conclusiveness of	68
3. Return on or before return day	71
4. Effect of collusion as to	74
5. Demand before return	74
e. Necessity of issuing new execution	74
f. Pursuit of joint debtors	75
g. Several claims; exhaustion of remedy as to one	77
h. Exhaustion as to surety, principal, indorser	78
i. Exhaustion of remedy as to debtor and third person	79
j. Proceedings on inferior court judgments	79
V. Exceptions to general rules; excuses for noncompliance
a. Where claim is admitted or allowed	80
b. Where compliance with rules would be a mere matter of form	82
c. Where law and equity are administered by same court	84
d. Where debtor is a nonresident, or is absent	85
e. Where property is situate beyond jurisdiction	88
f. Effect of insolvency; lack of property subject to execution	88
g. Effect of debtor's death
1. In general	92
2. Allowance of claim against estate	96
h. Actions against corporations
1. Effect of insolvency	97
2. Effect of dissolution or abandonment	99
i. Actions against partners
1. In general	99
2. Failure to exhaust remedy as to all the partners	100
j. Actions by sureties; promissory notes	101
k. Miscellaneous grounds for non-compliance with general rules	101
VI. Necessity of exhausting remedy at law, where equity jurisdiction is original
a. In general; special equities	102
b. Fraud	104
c. Trusts in general	105
d. Statutory trusts	107
e. Trust-fund theory
1. As to corporations	109
2. As to ordinary partnerships	110
3. As to special partnerships	111

VI.—Continued.
f. Estates of deceased debtors
1. In general	111
2. Exhaustion of personal assets	112
VII. Effect of special statutes	113
Criminal law.
See also CONCEALED WEAPONS; EVIDENCE.
As to injunction to restrain criminal act, see INJUNCTION.
Effect of repeal, without saving clause, of penal statute or ordinance upon prior conviction under it (Case Note)	243
Criminal responsibility of one who aids another in assault in which the latter, without his knowledge or consent, uses a deadly weapon (Case Note)	273
Effect of a pending appeal from a conviction upon its operation as a bar to another prosecution for the same offense (Case Note)	598 Crops.
Right as between successful plaintiff and evicted defendant to crops unsevered at time of final judgment (Case Note)	531
Must a contract for the sale of growing crops or reservation of same by a grantor be in writing (Case Note)	1218
Measure of damages for destruction of perennial crops (Case Note)	310
Curtesy.
Husband's right of curtesy in land which he settled upon or conveyed to his wife (Case Note)	778
Damages.
Law governing as to measure of damages for breach of telegraph company's contract (Case Note)	648
Admissibility of evidence of family relations of plaintiff on question of damages in an action for libel or slander (Case Note)	362
Miscarriage as an element of damages (Case Note)	345
Measure of damages for the destruction of perennial crops (Case Note)	310
Law governing as to right to recover against telegraph company for mental anguish (Case Note)	648
Days of grace.
Computation of days of grace allowed for payment of insurance premium or assessment where date of payment or expiration of such period falls on Sunday or holiday (Case Note)	759
Death.
Justifiable killing as a defense in an action for death intentionally inflicted (Case Note)	996
Dedication.
Right of one to testify as to his intent with respect to (Subject Note)	398

- Leaving blank in plat as a dedication (Case Note) 809
- Deeds.
See also COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.
Must a contract for the sale of growing crops or a reservation of the same by a grantor in a deed be in writing (Case Note) 1218
- Descent and distribution.
As to inheritance taxes, see TAXES.
Does the grantor's right to rescind for breach of condition as to support descend to his heirs or representatives (Case Note) 232
- Discovery and inspection.
Power to compel plaintiff in a suit to submit to a physical examination (Case Note) 463
- Disorderly persons.
Constitutionality of statute requiring a husband upon conviction of abandonment to provide for support of wife or family (Case Note) 854
- Ditch.
When does statute of limitations commence to run against action for damages caused by seepage from ditch (Case Note) 795
- Divorce and separation.
Impeaching decree of divorce rendered in other state on the ground of non-residence or domicil of person in whose favor it was granted (Case Note) 1254
Effect of complainant's knowledge of spouse's antenuptial unchastity as a bar to divorce for subsequent adultery (Case Note) 240
Validity of anticipatory contract making provision for wife in the event of her obtaining a divorce for subsequent fault of husband (Case Note) 880
- Domicil and residence.
Right of one to testify as to his intent with respect to (Subject Note) 397
- Double taxation.
See TAXES.
- Ejectment.
Right as between successful plaintiff and evicted defendant to crops unsevered at time of final judgment (Case Note) 531
- Election of remedies.
Bringing action for purchase price as waiver of right of vendor in conditional sale to recover property in specie (Case Note) 144
- Embezzlement.
May estoppel to deny authority to receive money alleged to have been embezzled be invoked against public officer charged with embezzlement (Case Note) 761
- 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)
- Engineer.
Conclusiveness as between municipality and contractor of decision of engineer or other empowered officer as to matters concerning contract for public improvement (Case Note) 317
- Entry.
Necessity of, as a condition of maintaining action other than for damages based on breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold (Case Note) 935
- Equity.
As to conditions precedent to equitable remedy of creditors, see CREDITORS' BILL.
Jurisdiction of equity over suits affecting real property in another state or country (Case Note) 924
- Estoppel.
Estoppel to set up original obligee's breach of condition to make future advances as against assignee of contract for payment of money, not protected by the law merchant (Case Note) 178
Estoppel of principal to deny authority of agent who has not possession of securities to receive payment (Case Note) 414
May estoppel to deny authority to receive money alleged to have been embezzled be invoked against public officer charged with embezzlement (Case Note) 761
Effect of continued occupation by trespasser for less than limitation period to estop owner to maintain trespass q. c. f. (Case Note) 270
- Evidence.
May negligence be inferred from mere fact that a horse runs away (Case Note) 171
Applicability of maxim, Res ipsa loquitur, to caving in or sinking of surface of street (Case Note) 1022
Admissibility of parol evidence to show reservation of growing crops from deed (Case Note) 1218
Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 367
I. The common-law rule
a. Statement of 365
b. Retention of common-law rule in some jurisdictions
1. Generally 368
2. The Alabama rule 365
(a) Generally 365
(b) Application in criminal cases 369
(c) Application in civil cases 370
(d) Exceptions 371
II. Rule under statutes permitting parties to testify
a. Generally 372
b. The test of admissibility 374

II.—Continued.

c. Exceptions and limitations

1. Varying terms of written instrument 376
2. Conclusions of witnesses 379
3. Mental operations and intentions depending upon nonexistent or suppositional circumstances 381
4. Secret and undisclosed intent or motive 383
5. Intent of wrongful acts intentionally done 384
6. Intention shown by acts, declarations, or circumstances 386

d. Application

1. Generally 387
2. To homicide 388
3. To assaults 389
4. To burglary, larceny, robbery, etc. 390
5. To seduction or alienation 391
6. To usury 391
7. To libel and slander 392
8. To malicious prosecution 392
9. To fraud 393
 - (a) Generally 393
 - (b) By false representation 393
 - (c) By insolvent, as against creditors 395
10. To residence, occupation, or use 397
 - (a) With reference to domicile, etc. 397
 - (b) With reference to homestead 397
 - (c) With reference to abandonment of easement or other rights 397
11. To dedication 398
12. To gambling contracts 398
13. To cases involving negligence 399
14. To other and miscellaneous matters 399

e. Proof by agent or associate

f. Weight and conclusiveness

III. Conclusion

Admissibility of evidence of family relations of plaintiff on question of damages in an action for libel and slander (Case Note) 362

Execution.

As condition precedent to equitable remedy of creditors, see CREDITORS' BILL.

May provision in will for support of person which is made a lien or charge upon property devised or bequeathed to others be reached by his creditors (Case Note) 526

Effect of bar of statute of limitations against action to enforce judgment, upon right to issue execution thereon (Case Note) 1096

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Executors and administrators.

See also DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Necessity of exhaustion of remedy at law against deceased debtor as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 92-96, 111, 112

Exhibitions.

Liability of municipality for failure to prevent display of fireworks in street (Subject Note) 643

Explosives.

Liability of municipality for failure to prevent use of explosives in street (Subject Note) 643

Extended insurance.

See INSURANCE.

Fires.

May one who destroys property defeat an action by the owner upon the ground that the right of action is in the insurer (Case Note) 870

Effect of stipulation exempting warehousemen from loss by fire (Case Note) 1205

Fireworks.

Liability of municipality for failure to prevent use of fireworks in street (Subject Note) 643

Foreigner.

Duty of master as to instructing and warning servant unable to understand English (Case Note) 206

Forfeiture.

Necessity of formal declaration of forfeiture as a condition of maintaining action other than for damages, based on a breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold (Case Note) 938

Forgery.

Liability upon paper given in renewal of forged paper (Case Note) 1234

Fraud.

As affecting trademark, see TRADE-MARK.

Fraud and deceit.

Effect of misrepresentation as to character, quantity, or value of goods by shipper on his right to recover for loss (Case Note) 745

Is fraudulent representation by vendor as to area within boundaries correctly pointed out actionable (Case Note) 487

Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 893

Fraudulent conveyances.

See also CREDITORS' BILL.

Right of insolvent to testify as to his intent as against creditors (Subject Note) 895

Right of husband's creditors to reach fruits of his management of, or services in connection with, wife's separate estate or business (Case Note)	1124	Liability for discharge of steam near street or highway so as to frighten horses (Case Note)	946
Funeral.		Liability for injury to person other than passenger or employee by derailment of street car (Case Note)	751
Burial insurance and funeral benefits (Case Note)	197	Applicability of maxim, Res ipsa loquitur , to caving in or sinking of surface of street (Case Note)	1022
Future advances.		Holiday.
Estoppel to set up original obligee's breach of condition to make future advances, as against assignee of contract for payment of money, not protected by the law merchant (Case Note)	178	Computation of days of grace allowed for payment of insurance premium or assessment where date of payment or expiration of such period falls on Sunday or holiday (Case Note)	759
Gaming.		Homicide.
Right of party to a gambling contract to testify as to his intent (Subject Note)	308	As to civil liability for, see DEATH. Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note)	388
Liability of one party to an arrangement to share profits from gambling for money lost by a third person to the other party (Case Note)	522	Horse.
Garnishment.		As to animals, generally, see ANIMALS. Care required of keeper of boarding stable (Case Note)	188
As condition precedent to equitable remedy of creditors, see CREDITORS' BILL.		May negligence be inferred from the mere fact that a horse runs away (Case Note)	171
Grave.		Liability for discharge of steam near street or highway so as to frighten horses (Case Note)	946
Is money set aside under will or otherwise for purpose of caring for grave subject to inheritance tax (Case Note)	474	Hospital.
Health.		Right to injunction against being sent to pesthouse (Case Note)	1188
Right to injunction against being sent to pesthouse (Case Note)	1188	Husband and wife.
Power of state or health authorities to forbid the use of a polluted water supply (Case Note)	706	As to estate by Curtesy, see CURTESY. Constitutionality of statute requiring a husband upon conviction of abandonment to provide for support of wife or family (Case Note)	854
Highways.		Validity of anticipatory contract making provision for wife in the event of her obtaining divorce for subsequent fault of husband (Case Note)	880
See also DEDICATION.		Right of husband's creditors to reach fruits of his management of or services in connection with wife's separate estate or business (Case Note)	1124
As to automobiles, see AUTOMOBILES.		Effect of temporary cessation from independent employment upon right of married woman to recover for loss of earning capacity due to personal injury (Case Note)	408
Right of municipality without express power to permit construction of an overhead bridge across a public street for private purpose (Case Note)	158	Husband's right to sue wife for personal tort (Case Note)	699
Liability of municipal corporation for failure to prevent improper conduct in or use of streets (Subject Note)	636	Indictment, information, and complaint.
I. Scope	636	Must indictment or information for unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors state name of person to whom sale is made (Case Note)	581
II. General rules	637	Infringement of patent.
III. Riots and unlawful assemblages	638	See PATENTS.
IV. Coasting	639	Injunction.
V. Racing	641	Effect of injunction against suing on running of statute of limitations (Case Note)	673
VI. Bicycling in violation of road law	641
VII. Animals running at large	642
VIII. Use of fireworks and other explosives	643
IX. Conclusion	646
Remedy of abutting owner as affected by his consent to the construction of a railroad or street railway in street (Case Note)	433
Duty to make streets and highways safe for bicycles (Case Note)	543
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Injunction at the suit of the state against public nuisance which is also a crime or misdemeanor (Case Note)	691	Intervention.
Effect of abutting owner's consent to construction of railroad or street railway in street on his right to an injunction (Case Note)	433	Right of third persons who claim property to intervene in an attachment action (Case Note)	536
Right of minority stockholder to restrain voluntary dissolution of corporation by directors or majority stockholders (Case Note)	1177	Intoxicating liquor.
Against being sent to pethouse (Case Note)	1188	Interstate commerce in, see CARRIERS.
Necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it (Case Note)	1295	Applicability of liquor laws to social club dispensing liquors to members (Case Note)	192
		Effect upon lease of property for saloon purposes of passage of prohibitory law during the term (Case Note)	497
		Effect upon lease of property for saloon purposes of passage of prohibitory law during the term (Case Note)	497
Innkeepers.		Jail.
What acts, with respect to baggage of an intending guest, will initiate the relation of innkeeper and guest so as to create liability for its loss or injury (Case Note)	1107	Liability of county or municipality for injury to one employed in or about a jail, prison, or other house of detention maintained by it (Case Note)	910
Insurance.		Joint creditors and debtors.
Rent insurance (Case Note)	123	Necessity of exhausting remedy as to joint debtors as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note)	75
Burial insurance and funeral benefits (Case Note)	197	Judges.
Applicability of statute against rebates and discrimination to allowance by agent to insured of part of former's commissions (Case Note)	722	Power of legislature to impose upon judges the duty to assist in drawing jurors (Case Note)	1115
Conflict of laws as to insurance contracts (Case Note)	968	Judgment.
Computation of cash surrender value, extended or paid-up insurance, where policy holder has borrowed on the policy (Case Note)	828	Recovery of, as a condition precedent to equitable relief of creditors, see CREDITORS' BILL.
Acquisition by mortgagee of title to property covered by policy protecting mortgagee's interest, as breach of condition against sale or transfer of title (Case Note)	1147	Judgment in original action as bar to action by defeated party against the adverse party for perjury in procuring it (Case Note)	184
What constitutes "spitting or coughing blood" (Case Note)	917	Impeaching decree of divorce rendered in other state on the ground of non-residence or domicile of person in whose favor it was granted (Case Note)	1254
Computation of days of grace allowed for payment of insurance premium or assessment, where date of payment or expiration of such period falls on Sunday or a holiday (Case Note)	759	Effect of judgment in personam requiring conveyance of land in another state or country (Case Note)	924
Does existence of indebtedness from insurer to insured in an amount sufficient to pay premium or assessment prevent forfeiture of policy for non-payment of premium (Case Note)	304	Perjury as ground for relief against (Case Note)	564
What constitutes disability within meaning of accident or health policy (Case Note)	352	Right as between successful plaintiff and evicted defendant to crops unsevered at time of final judgment (Case Note)	531
Construction and effect of condition in accident or health policy that assured must be confined to the house to entitle him to indemnity (Case Note)	359	Jury.
		Power of legislature to impose upon judges the duty to assist in drawing jurors (Case Note)	1115
Intent.		Labor organization.
Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note)	367	Right of labor unions to impose fine on members as a means of inducing them to join in strike (Case Note)	1236
		Right of municipality or other public body to discriminate in favor of organized labor (Case Note)	815
Interurban road.		Land association.
Duty to look and listen before crossing interurban electric railway on company's own right of way (Case Note)	1224	Distribution of parcels of land by chance as a lottery (Case Note)	626

Landlord and tenant.

- Rent insurance (Case Note) 123
- Effect upon lease of property for saloon purposes of passage of prohibitory laws during the term (Case Note) 497
- Power of lessee to subject owner's interest to mechanics' lien (Case Note) 601

Larceny.

- Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 390
- Valuation of commercial paper for purposes of graduating offense of larceny (Case Note) 1063

Levy and seizure.

- As condition precedent to equitable remedy of creditors, see CREDITORS' BILL.
- May provision in will for support of person which is made a lien or charge upon property devised or bequeathed to others be reached by his creditors (Case Note) 526.

Libel and slander.

- As to damages in, see DAMAGES.
- Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 392
- Right of one not specially named to maintain action for libel or slander, based on charges made against a class or group of persons to which he belongs (Case Note) 726

License.

- Applicability to vehicles owned by non-residents of city ordinance imposing a license upon the use of vehicles (Case Note) 453
- What constitutes a plumbing business within license statutes (Case Note) 677 Life tenants.

- Right to require legatee of life interest in money or its equivalent, to give security for benefit of remainderman (Case Note) 716

Limitation of actions.

- Effect upon special statute of limitations, which begins to run from time actual possession is taken under tax deed, of fact that such deed was void or irregular (Case Note) 1102
- Effect of injunction against suing on running of statute of limitations (Case Note) 673
- Effect of bar of statute of limitations against action to enforce judgment upon right to issue execution thereon (Case Note) 1096
- When does statute of limitations commence to run against action for injury to surface by mining operations or other excavations (Case Note) 805
- When does statute of limitations commence to run against action for damages caused by seepage from a ditch or canal (Case Note) 795
- Sufficiency and effect of "return" to state by defendant to start statute of limitations running (Case Note) 547

- Effect of continued occupancy by trespasser for less than limitation period to estop owner to maintain trespass q. c. f. (Case Note) 270

Livery stable.

- Care required of keeper of boarding stable (Case Note) 188

Live stock.

- See CARRIERS.

Local improvements.

- See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Lottery.

- Distribution of parcels of land by chance as a lottery (Case Note) 625

Malicious prosecution.

- Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 392

Master and servant.

- As to liability of railroad company to passenger for acts of employees, see CARRIERS.
- As to liability of municipality for negligence of its officers or employees, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.
- Termination of contracts of employment which contain stipulations permitting rescission by the employer if the work is not satisfactorily performed (Case Note) 1043
- Does relationship of master and servant still exist where servant goes on master's premises before, after, or between hours of actual labor (Case Note) 854
- Liability of master for injury to servant who had left his working place and gone to another portion of the plant for his own purposes (Case Note) 960
- Duty of master as to instructing and warning servant unable to understand English (Case Note) 296
- Liability of private person or corporation for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority (Case Note) 288
- Assurance of safety by master or vice principal (Case Note) 1014
- Liability of master to servant for personal injury by wild animal or animal kept for exhibition purposes (Case Note) 1071
- Liability of master for injury to vice principal by negligence of servant (Case Note) 361

Mechanics' liens.

- Power of lessee or vendee to subject owner's interests to mechanics' liens (Case Note) 601

Merchants.

- Power of municipality to regulate use of scales by merchants (Case Note) 265

Meters.

Right of municipal corporation to require use of water meters and impose expense of same on consumers (Case Note) 410

Mines and minerals.

Constitutionality of statutes to prevent waste of natural gas or oil (Case Note) 436

When does statute of limitations commence to run against action for injury to surface by mining operations or other excavations (Case Note) 805

Miscarriage.

As element of damages (Case Note) 345

Mistake.

Rights and liabilities under contract for sale of personalty as affected by a vendor's mistake in fixing price (Case Note) 1109

Liability of registrar of deed for mistake in registering or indexing instrument affecting title to real property (Case Note) 127

Monopoly.

Is combination to control the price of labor or other personal service per se a violation of statute against trusts and monopolies (Case Note) 1260

Monument.

Is money set aside under will for purpose of caring for monument subject to inheritance tax (Case Note) 474

Mortgage.

See also INSURANCE.

Effect of tender before maturity of debt to discharge lien of mortgage (Case Note) 403

Is possession of a mortgagee who enters under incomplete or defective foreclosure adverse to mortgagor (Case Note) 754

Taxation of mortgage and real estate at full value as double taxation (Case Note) 152

Right of one who advances money to another for purpose of redeeming from a sale under a mortgage to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgage (Case Note) 190

Payment to one not in possession of mortgage (Case Note) 414

Municipal corporations.

Liability of county or municipal corporation for injury to one employed in or about a jail, prison, or other house of detention maintained by it (Case Note) 910

Right of municipality or other public body to discriminate in favor of organized labor (Case Note) 815

Right of municipal corporation to require use of water meters and to impose expense of same on consumers (Case Note) 410

Necessity of written notice as to defect as condition of liability of municipal corporation for injuries due to the positive act of its officers or servants (Case Note) 282

Power of municipality to regulate use of scales by merchants (Case Note) 266

Liability of municipality for torts of its officers or employees in connection with its waterworks (Case Note) 204

Right of municipality without express power to permit construction of an overhead bridge across a public street for private purpose (Case Note) 158

Effect of repeal without saving clause of penal statute or ordinance upon prior conviction under it (Case Note) 243

Conclusiveness as between municipality and contractor of decision of engineer or other empowered officer as to matters concerning contract for public improvement (Case Note) 317

Natural gas.

See OIL AND GAS.

Negligence.

As to proximate cause, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Liability of registrar of deed for neglect in registering or indexing instrument affecting title to real property (Case Note) 127

Right of one to testify as to his intent in cases involving negligence (Subject Note) 399

May negligence be inferred from the mere fact that a horse runs away (Case Note) 171

Liability for frightening animal to death (Case Note) 183

Nonresidents.

Necessity of exhausting remedy as to nonresident or absent debtor as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 85

Notice.

Record as notice, see RECORDING LAWS.
As a condition of municipal liability, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it (Case Note) 1295

Officers.

As to embezzlement by, see EMBEZZLEMENT.

As to liability of municipal corporation for acts of officers, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Is eligibility to be determined as of time of election or appointment, or of induction into office (Case Note) 1228

Personal liability of public officer on contract which he attempts to make for public in excess of his authority (Case Note) 428

Oil and gas.

See MINES AND MINERALS.

Ordinances.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Partnership.

Jurisdiction of court of equity over suit for a partnership accounting in respect of land in another jurisdiction (Case Note) 924

Power of court to require accounting between members of partnership which is illegal or void, or which has been engaged in illegal business (Case Note) 478

Liability of one party to an arrangement to share profits from gambling for money lost by a third person to the other party (Case Note) 522

Necessity of exhausting remedy as to partners as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 99, 100, 110, 111

Dissolution of partnership authorized to act as agent, as termination of agency (Case Note) 849

Pass.

See CARRIERS.

Patents.

Manufacture and sale of a part which in itself is unpatented, as infringement of a combination patent of which such part is an essential element (Case Note) 1027

Payment.

Right to recover from agent money paid him for his principal (Case Note) 553

Effect of fact that agent does not have possession of securities upon question of his authority to receive payment (Case Note) 414

Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper drawn upon or payable at it under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it (Case Note) 1092

Percolating waters.

See WATERS.

Perjury.

Perjury as ground for relief against judgment (Case Note) 564

Judgment in original action as bar to action by defeated action against adverse party for perjury in procuring it (Case Note) 134

Personal services.

Is combination to control the price of labor or other personal services per se a violation of statute against trusts and monopolies (Case Note) 1260

Pesthouse.

Right to injunction against being sent to pesthouse (Case Note) 1188

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Photograph.

Right to take, or retain in Rogues' Gallery, picture of one accused of crime before conviction (Case Note) 739

Physical examination.

See DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

Pledge and collateral security.

Effect of renewal of principal's obligation to release party to a note executed to the creditor as collateral (Case Note) 141

Plumbers.

What constitutes a plumbing business within license statute (Case Note) 677

Police.

Liability of private person or corporation for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority (Case Note) 289

Principal and agent.

As to brokers, see BROKERS.

Dissolution of partnership authorized to act as agent, as termination of agency (Case Note) 849

Right to recover from agent money paid him for his principal (Case Note) 553

Effect of fact that agent does not have possession of security upon question of his authority to receive payment (Case Note) 414

Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper, drawn upon or payable at it, under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it (Case Note) 1092

Liability of one party to an arrangement to share profits from gambling for money lost by a third person to the other party (Case Note) 522

Principal and surety.

Liability of bail, see BAIL.

Liability of sureties on bond of public officer, see BONDS.

Subscribing one's name under word "surety" in written contract as satisfying statute of frauds (Case Note) 1197

Necessity of exhausting remedy as to surety as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 75

Necessity of exhausting remedy at law in actions by sureties as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 101

Effect of renewal of principal's obligation to release party to a note executed to the creditor as collateral (Case Note) 141

Prison.

See JAIL.

Proximate cause.

May the intervening act of a child break the causal connection between the defendant's negligence and the injury (Case Note) 269

Public improvements.

- Right to subdivide private owner's land for the purpose of assessment for public improvement (Case Note) 405
- Conclusiveness as between municipality and contractor of decision of engineer or other empowered officer as to matters concerning contract for public improvement (Case Note) 317

Pullman Car Company.

- Liability of railroad company for acts of employee of, toward passenger (Case Note) 1056

Racing.

- Liability of municipal corporation for failure to prevent racing in streets (Subject Note) 641

Railroads.

- For liability to passenger, see CARRIERS.
- Remedy of abutting owner as affected by his consent to the construction of a railroad or street railway in street (Case Note) 438
- Act of third person as excuse to railroad for blocking street crossing (Case Note) 350
- Construction and effect of statute making it an offense to get on a moving car or train (Case Note) 513
- Duty to look and listen before crossing interurban electric railway on company's own right of way (Case Note) 1224
- Liability for discharge of steam near street or highway so as to frighten horses (Case Note) 946
- May one who destroys property defeat an action by the owner upon the ground that the right of action is in the insurer (Case Note) 870

Recording laws.

- Liability of registrar of deeds for neglect, delay, or mistake in registering or indexing instrument affecting title to real property (Case Note) 127
- Destruction of record of deed or mortgage as affecting constructive notice imparted thereby (Case Note) 1180

Religion.

- Religious belief as qualification of witness (Case Note) 1023

Remainderman.

See LIFE TENANT.

Rent.

- Rent insurance (Case Note) 123

Replevin.

- Bringing action for purchase price as waiver of right in conditional sale to recover property in specie (Case Note) 144

Riot.

- Liability of municipal corporation for failure to prevent riot in street (Subject Note) 638
- L.R.A. (N.S.)

Robbery.

- Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 390

Rogues' gallery.

- Right to take or retain in rogues' gallery picture of one accused of crime before conviction (Case Note) 739

Sale.

- Rights and liabilities under contract for sale of personalty as affected by vendor's mistake in fixing price (Case Note) 1109
- Bringing action for purchase price as waiver of right of vendor in conditional sale to recover property in specie (Case Note) 144

Satisfaction.

- Termination of contract of employment which contained stipulations permitting rescission by the employer if the work is not satisfactorily performed (Case Note) 1003

Scales.

- Power of municipality to regulate use of scales by merchants (Case Note) 266

Seduction.

- Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 391

Set-off and counterclaim.

- Does existence of indebtedness from insurer to insured in an amount sufficient to pay premium or assessment prevent forfeiture of policy for non-payment of premium (Case Note) 304

Sleeping car company.

- Liability of railroad company for acts of employee of sleeping-car company toward passenger (Case Note) 1056

Specific performance.

- May jurisdiction of suit for specific performance of a contract for conveyance of land within the territorial jurisdiction rest upon constructive service of process against a nonresident (Case Note) 1135
- Jurisdiction of equity over suits for, in relation to real property in another state or country (Case Note) 924

Spendthrift trust.

See TRUSTS.

Stare decisis.

- Effect of change of judicial decision to impair the obligation of a contract (Case Note) 500

State.

- Injunction at suit of state against public nuisance which is also a crime or misdemeanor (Case Note) 691

Statute of frauds.

See CONTRACTS.

Oil and gas.

See MINES AND MINERALS.

Ordinances.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Partnership.

Jurisdiction of court of equity over suit for a partnership accounting in respect of land in another jurisdiction (Case Note) 924

Power of court to require accounting between members of partnership which is illegal or void, or which has been engaged in illegal business (Case Note) 478

Liability of one party to an arrangement to share profits from gambling for money lost by a third person to the other party (Case Note) 522

Necessity of exhausting remedy as to partners as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 99, 100, 110, 111

Dissolution of partnership authorized to act as agent, as termination of agency (Case Note) 849

Pass.

See CARRIERS.

Patents.

Manufacture and sale of a part which in itself is unpatented, as infringement of a combination patent of which such part is an essential element (Case Note) 1027

Payment.

Right to recover from agent money paid him for his principal (Case Note) 553

Effect of fact that agent does not have possession of securities upon question of his authority to receive payment (Case Note) 414

Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper drawn upon or payable at it under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it (Case Note) 1092

Percolating waters.

See WATERS.

Perjury.

Perjury as ground for relief against judgment (Case Note) 564

Judgment in original action as bar to action by defeated action against adverse party for perjury in procuring it (Case Note) 134

Personal services.

Is combination to control the price of labor or other personal services per se a violation of statute against trusts and monopolies (Case Note) 1260

Pesthouse.

Right to injunction against being sent to pesthouse (Case Note) 1188

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Photograph.

Right to take, or retain in Rogues' Gallery, picture of one accused of crime before conviction (Case Note) 739

Physical examination.

See DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

Pledge and collateral security.

Effect of renewal of principal's obligation to release party to a note executed to the creditor as collateral (Case Note) 141

Plumbers.

What constitutes a plumbing business within license statute (Case Note) 677

Police.

Liability of private person or corporation for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority (Case Note) 289

Principal and agent.

As to brokers, see BROKERS.

Dissolution of partnership authorized to act as agent, as termination of agency (Case Note) 849

Right to recover from agent money paid him for his principal (Case Note) 553

Effect of fact that agent does not have possession of security upon question of his authority to receive payment (Case Note) 414

Right of bank to recover amount paid on check or other paper, drawn upon or payable at it, under mistaken belief that there were sufficient funds to meet it (Case Note) 1092

Liability of one party to an arrangement to share profits from gambling for money lost by a third person to the other party (Case Note) 522

Principal and surety.

Liability of bail, see BAIL.

Liability of sureties on bond of public officer, see BONDS.

Subscribing one's name under word "surety" in written contract as satisfying statute of frauds (Case Note) 1197

Necessity of exhausting remedy as to surety as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 78

Necessity of exhausting remedy at law in actions by sureties as condition precedent to creditors' bill (Subject Note) 101

Effect of renewal of principal's obligation to release party to a note executed to the creditor as collateral (Case Note) 141

Prison.

See JAIL.

Proximate cause.

May the intervening act of a child break the causal connection between the defendant's negligence and the injury (Case Note) 249

Public improvements.

- Right to subdivide private owner's land for the purpose of assessment for public improvement (Case Note) 405
- Conclusiveness as between municipality and contractor of decision of engineer or other empowered officer as to matters concerning contract for public improvement (Case Note) 317

Pullman Car Company.

- Liability of railroad company for acts of employee of, toward passenger (Case Note) 1056

Racing.

- Liability of municipal corporation for failure to prevent racing in streets (Subject Note) 641

Railroads.

- For liability to passenger, see CARRIERS.
- Remedy of abutting owner as affected by his consent to the construction of a railroad or street railway in street (Case Note) 433
- Act of third person as excuse to railroad for blocking street crossing (Case Note) 350
- Construction and effect of statute making it an offense to get on a moving car or train (Case Note) 513
- Duty to look and listen before crossing interurban electric railway on company's own right of way (Case Note) 1224
- Liability for discharge of steam near street or highway so as to frighten horses (Case Note) 946
- May one who destroys property defeat an action by the owner upon the ground that the right of action is in the insurer (Case Note) 870

Recording laws.

- Liability of registrar of deeds for neglect, delay, or mistake in registering or indexing instrument affecting title to real property (Case Note) 127
- Destruction of record of deed or mortgage as affecting constructive notice imparted thereby (Case Note) 1180

Religion.

- Religious belief as qualification of witness (Case Note) 1023

Remainderman.

See LIFE TENANT.

Rent.

- Rent insurance (Case Note) 123

Replevin.

- Bringing action for purchase price as waiver of right in conditional sale to recover property in specie (Case Note) 144

Riots.

- Liability of municipal corporation for failure to prevent riot in street (Subject Note) 638

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Robbery.

- Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 390

Rogues' gallery.

- Right to take or retain in rogues' gallery picture of one accused of crime before conviction (Case Note) 739

Sale.

- Rights and liabilities under contract for sale of personalty as affected by vendor's mistake in fixing price (Case Note) 1109
- Bringing action for purchase price as waiver of right of vendor in conditional sale to recover property in specie (Case Note) 144

Satisfaction.

- Termination of contract of employment which contained stipulations permitting rescission by the employer if the work is not satisfactorily performed (Case Note) 1003

Scales.

- Power of municipality to regulate use of scales by merchants (Case Note) 266

Seduction.

- Right of one to testify as to his intent (Subject Note) 391

Set-off and counterclaim.

- Does existence of indebtedness from insurer to insured in an amount sufficient to pay premium or assessment prevent forfeiture of policy for non-payment of premium (Case Note) 304

Sleeping car company.

- Liability of railroad company for acts of employee of sleeping-car company toward passenger (Case Note) 1056

Specific performance.

- May jurisdiction of suit for specific performance of a contract for conveyance of land within the territorial jurisdiction rest upon constructive service of process against a nonresident (Case Note) 1135
- Jurisdiction of equity over suits for, in relation to real property in another state or country (Case Note) 924

Spendthrift trust.

See TRUSTS.

Stare decisis.

- Effect of change of judicial decision to impair the obligation of a contract (Case Note) 500

State.

- Injunction at suit of state against public nuisance which is also a crime or misdemeanor (Case Note) 691

Statute of frauds.

See CONTRACTS.

GENERAL INDEX

NOTES ARE INDEXED BY THE WORD "ANNOTATED" AFTER THE PARAGRAPHS TO WHICH THEY APPLY.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

Of appropriated water, see Evidence, 15, 16; Waters, 7.

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

Plea in abatement to raise objection that bill does not show authority of one filing it, see Pleading, 16.

A cause of action to rescind a deed made in consideration of a covenant to support and maintain the grantor and containing a clause reserving a lien for maintenance and support, and a clause giving the grantor a right to re-enter and use and occupy the land during his life, for failure of the grantee to perform the covenant, does not die with the grantor. White v. Bailey, 23: 232, 64 S. E. 1019, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

ABSTRACTS OF TITLE.

Unauthorized contract by broker to furnish, see Brokers, 1; Specific Performance, 3.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

See Highways.

ACCEPTANCE.

Of property dedicated, see Dedication, 3, 4.

Of goods sold, see Trial, 21.

ACCOUNTING.

Between partners, see Partnership, 2.

ACCOUNTS.

Estoppel to set up incorrectness of account stated, see Estoppel, 5.

One to whom an account is rendered which contains an excessive interest charge on moneys advanced by the other party thereto, together with a tender of the cash balance, cannot avoid the effect of delay in repudiating the account by placing it in the hands of an attorney for adjustment, if the latter does not proceed in due time. Ripley v. Sage Land & Improv. Co. 23: 787, 119 N. W. 108, 138 Wis. 304. (Annotated)

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

A deed of trust executed by a corporation is sufficiently acknowledged to entitle it to registration, although it was acknowledged before a notary public who was at the time a director and the treasurer of the corporation and who was also indebted for unpaid subscriptions to its stock, where these facts were known to the grantor, and where there is nothing on the face of the deed or the acknowledgment to indicate such relation. Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & S. Co. 23: 1074, 94 Pac. 533, 20 Okla. 427. (Annotated) title it to registration, although it was acknowledged before a notary public who was at the time a director and the treasurer of the corporation and who was also indebted for unpaid subscriptions to its stock, where these facts were known to the grantor, and where there is nothing on the face of the deed or the acknowledgment to indicate such relation. Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & S. Co. 23: 1074, 94 Pac. 533, 20 Okla. 427. (Annotated)

ACTION OR SUIT.

On note, see Bills and Notes, 4.

By foreign corporation, see Corporations, 3, 4.

Right of action for death, see Death.

As to election of remedies, see Election of Remedies.

Actions by executors or administrators, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

By married woman, see Husband and Wife, 5, 6.

By husband against wife, see Husband and Wife, 7, 8.

On insurance policy, see Insurance, 20.

Limitation of time for bringing, see Limitation of Actions.

As to parties, see Parties.

1. A conviction for disobeying an injunctive order to punish for acts in contempt of the power and dignity of the court is reviewable as a criminal proceeding. Garrigan v. United States, 23: 1295, 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494.

2. Seepage to the injury of neighboring property from an irrigation ditch constructed under authority of law, in the ordinary and usual manner, cannot be regarded as making the ditch a nuisance, for which successive actions can be brought until it is abated. Middlekamp v. Bessemer Irrig. Ditch Co. 23: 795, 103 Pac. 280, — Colo. —.

3. Causes of action in tort may be joined, in separate counts, in the same petition, with causes of action in contract, when they all arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, and affect all the parties to the action. Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch, 23: 573, 99 Pac. 1089, — Okla. —.

ADMINISTRATORS.

See Executors and Administrators.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Recognition in equity of title acquired by, see Equity, 7.

Adverse possession by servant, see Landlord and Tenant, 1.

Adverse possession by mortgagee, see Mortgage, 3.

Prescriptive right to water in stream, see Waters, 12.

1. The mere use by the public of a strip of lake shore for picnics, strolling, pleasure driving, and hauling sand, will not, no matter how long continued, vest in it the right to continue such use, where the use was not confined to a well-defined line of travel. Poole v. Lake Forest, 23: 809, 87 N. E. 320, 238 Ill. 305.

2. Actual possession of land for a period of four years under a tax deed regular on its face, although based upon a void assessment, will bar a suit in ejectment for the possession thereof, under Florida Gen. Stat. 1906, § 591, providing that no action for the recovery of land sold under a tax sale can be brought by the former owner or those claiming under or through him, unless commenced within four years after the purchaser goes into possession of the land so bought. Florida Finance Co. v. Sheffield, 23: 1102, 48 So. 42, — Fla. —. (Annotated)

AFFIDAVIT.

Service by publication, see Writ and Process, 6, 7.

AGENCY.

See Principal and Agent.

AMENDMENT.

Of indictment or information, see Indictment, etc., 3.

Of pleading, see Pleading, 3.

Of statute, see Statutes, 5.

ANIMALS.

Transportation of live stock by carrier, see Carriers, 15-17.

Liability of master for injury to servant by vicious camel, see Master and Servant, 4, 18.

Presumption of negligence of owner from running away of team, see Evidence, 12.

Liability of municipality for frightening horse by blowing of whistle, see Evidence, 28; Municipal Corporations, 7, 8; Trial, 9.

Fright of horse on highway by discharge of steam, see Negligence, 3, 8; Trial, 19.

Liability for injuries resulting from runaway, see Negligence, 7.

Pleading in action for injuries from fright of horse by nuisance near highway, see Pleading, 10.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Proximate cause of injury resulting from negligent frightening of horse, see Proximate Cause, 5.

Liability of railroad for frightening horse, see Railroads, 4.

ANTI-TRUST LAW.

Violation of, see Monopoly and Combinations.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Reviewability as criminal proceeding of conviction for contempt, see Action or Suit, 1.

Power of attorney to appeal and bind client for costs of transcript, see Attorneys, 2.

Effect of pending appeal from conviction to prevent it from being bar to other prosecution for same offense, see Criminal Law, 3.

Judicial notice of, see Evidence, 1.

Right of appeal.

1. In a proceeding by the state against an incorporated board of trade and its officers, charging them with violation of the anti-trust statute, the state may appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant. State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 23: 1260, 121 N. W. 395, 107 Minn. 506.

Transfer of cause; mode.

2. A petition for review is the proper method of taking to the circuit court of appeals the question of the correctness of an order committing a bankrupt for failure to turn over property, in the exercise of the authority conferred upon the bankruptcy court by the act of 1898. Re Cole, 23: 255, 163 Fed. 180, 90 C. C. A. 50.

Record on appeal.

3. A motion to dismiss a case before a reviewing court, on the ground that the evidence heard on an application for a temporary injunction in the trial court was not made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, should be overruled when such evidence appears to be only cumulative evidence of facts alleged in the verified petition, since its exclusion would not necessitate a dismissal, as it would not then appear that plaintiff's demand was entirely unsupported by evidence. Cooper v. Goodland, 23: 410, 102 Pac. 244, — Kan. —.

4. An assignment in the supreme court of error in an intermediate appellate court in affirming a judgment is sufficient to present for review in the supreme court every error assigned in the intermediate court. Van Cleef v. Chicago, 23: 636, 88 N. E. 815, 240 Ill. 318.

What considered on appeal.

5. Payment on account, made after the entry of a decree establishing a mechanics' lien, cannot be considered by the appellate court in determining the correctness of the decree. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

Presumptions.

6. A granted motion to set down for hearing on petition and answer a petition to quash a proceeding to compel specific performance of a contract to sell real estate will be assumed, on appeal, to have been filed by petitioner, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, so that the truth of the answer denying the residence of defendant, which would invalidate the service of process, must be taken as admitted and the service upheld. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

7. Since a general demurrer to a bill in equity challenges its sufficiency in all respects, a decree sustaining such a demurrer is presumed on appeal to rest upon any sufficient ground disclosed by the bill, even though it was not assigned in writing as a ground of demurrer, while others, not well taken, were. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — W. Va. —.

What matters reviewable generally.

8. Upon a petition to review an order of the bankruptcy court committing a bankrupt for failure to comply with an order to turn over property, made in the exercise of its authority under the act of 1898, the court may revise any question of law as to which it may justly infer the district court reached a conclusion, whether formally expressed or not, and whether or not formally presented. Re Cole, 23: 255, 163 Fed. 180, 90 C. C. A. 50.

9. Upon a petition to revise an order in bankruptcy under the act of 1898, the court may search the opinion filed by the district court, not to eke out insufficient findings of fact, but for the purpose of ascertaining the issues which that court considered. Re Cole, 23: 255, 163 Fed. 180, 90 C. C. A. 50.

10. A constitutional question is waived by appealing to the appellate court rather than to the supreme court. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

Discretionary matters.

11. Refusal of the trial judge to modify his findings at the time of entering an interlocutory decree, so as to make them accord with the facts subsequently found by the master, will not be reversed, where counsel announced before the master that he did not seek to overthrow the findings of the judge. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

12. The refusal of a trial judge in a criminal prosecution to permit a witness to testify in narrative form will not be reviewed, unless the discretion vested in such judge was clearly abused. Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

Questions not raised below.

13. A judgment in favor of a religious society for disturbance of its meetings by the operation of a railroad in the vicinity, which is based on the theory that such operation damaged the property within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring compensation in such cases, cannot be sustained on appeal, on the theory that such operation constituted a nuisance, where the case was neither tried nor submitted to the jury upon any such theory. Twenty-Second Corp., etc. v. Oregon S. L. R. Co. 23: 860, 103 Pac. 243, — Utah, —.

14. An objection to the constitutionality of a provision in a mechanics' lien law allowing attorneys' fees to the lienor's solicitor cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

Errors waived or cured below.

15. Proceeding with the trial after refusal of the court to take the case from the jury waives the exception taken to such refusal. Jarrell v. Young, Smyth, Field Co. 23: 367, 66 Atl. 50, 106 Md. 280.

Review of facts.

16. The appellate court will not permit a jury to give damages to one person and withhold them from another upon the same evidence in an action for damages for personal injuries upon their conclusion as to his intelligence from his personal appearance, on the theory that, the jury having the witness before them, their finding is binding upon the appellate court. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. 23: 296, 118 N. W. 350, 119 N. W. 289, 137 Wis. 506.

17. In a criminal prosecution, where there is sufficient competent evidence to sustain a conviction, the appellate court cannot interfere on the ground that such conviction is unsupported by the evidence. Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

18. The determination by the trial court on conflicting evidence that a broker for the sale of property had secured a purchaser at a certain price before the owner interfered by a sale through another broker is binding on the appellate court. Jennings v. Trummer, 23: 164, 96 Pac. 874, 52 Or. 149.

19. The reviewing court is bound by the findings of fact by the trial court, where it disposes of the case upon motions for directed verdicts, if there is any evidence in support thereof. Interstate L. Assur. Co. v. Dalton, 23: 722, 165 Fed. 176, 91 C. C. A. 210.

20. A finding of the trial court that a hemorrhage did not constitute a serious illness within the meaning of the life insurance policy in suit is conclusive, when the evidence is conflicting both as to the severity of the illness and the condition of insured's health thereafter until her last illness, and there is an entire absence of any evidence that such loss of blood brought on, or was likely to result in, permanent or material impairment of her health. Eminent Household of C. W. v. Prater, 23: 917, 103 Pac. 558, — Okla. —.

21. Where, under the Constitution, an appeal in an equity case takes before the reviewing court all questions of law and fact, that court is not bound by findings of the trial court upon conflicting evidence, at least, where all evidence was taken by deposition. Campbell v. Gowans, 23: 414, 100 Pac. 397, — Utah, —.

22. The unanimous affirmance by the appellate division of what purports to be a finding of fact as to the legal effect of a legal instrument will not prevent a review by the court of appeals of the question of law involved in the construction of the instrument. Smyth v. Brooklyn U. Elev. R. Co. 23: 433, 85 N. E. 1100, 193 N. Y. 335.

Grounds for reversal.

23. Although there is no appeal from the judgment, the cause will not be reversed for error in denying plaintiff's motion for new trial because defendant's evidence was not sufficient to support his defense, if the complaint on its face shows that no recovery can be had on the cause of action set forth therein, and that no amendment can correct it, so that the error, if any, is without prejudice. Peters v. Peters, 23: 699, 103 Pac. 219, — Cal. —.

24. In an action for the negligent failure of a carrier properly to bed a car so that it would be reasonably safe for the transportation of stock, where the proof is undisputed that the car was unsafe because of improper bedding, testimony concerning the custom of the carrier in preparing other cars for like shipments, if irrelevant, is without prejudice to defendant. Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 278, 118 N. W. 655, 82 Neb. 726.

25. The exclusion of evidence, even if erroneous, does not require a reversal, where the facts which the excluded evidence was offered to show were proved by other evidence, and the final judgment could not have been altered by its admission. MacKenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

26. An instruction is not subject to exception, though it may be erroneous when standing alone, if, when considered with the other instructions upon the same subject given in connection therewith, it is not prejudicially erroneous. Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 278, 118 N. W. 655, 82 Neb. 726.

27. The giving of abstract and misleading instructions is not necessarily reversible error. Suelli v. Derricott, 23: 996, 49 So. 895, — Ala. —.

28. The omission from an instruction as to an element of damages of a requirement that plaintiff must be found to be entitled to recover will not require reversal, where such requirement is properly set forth in other instructions. Van Cleef v. Chicago, 23: 636, 88 N. E. 815, 240 Ill. 318.

29. In a prosecution for the alleged commission of a crime, the defendant may waive his opening statement to the jury; but if the court compels counsel, over their objections, to make that statement, the error is without prejudice, unless it affirmatively appears from the record that defendant suffered some disadvantage thereby. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

30. A judgment of conviction will not be set aside because of alleged error in overruling defendant's challenges for cause to veniremen, on the ground that he was compelled by reason of such rulings to exhaust his peremptory challenges, where none of such persons sat upon the jury, and it does not affirmatively appear that they were peremptorily challenged by him. Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

31. The trial court is vested with great discretion in excluding veniremen or talesmen from a jury, and its rulings in that particular are not subject to review, unless a fair jury was not obtained. Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

32. Where a competent, impartial, and honest jury is secured in a murder case, a conviction will not be reversed because of some inadvertent failure to comply with every directory provision of the jury law, in the absence of any showing of prejudice against accused. State v. Barnes, 23: 932, 103 Pac. 792, — Wash. —.

33. A sound decree sustaining a general demurrer to a bill in equity should not be reversed, merely because the trial court assigned an erroneous or incorrect reason therefor. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — W. Va. —.

34. Eleven hundred dollars is not such an excessive allowance to a father for mental suffering in being deprived of the opportunity to assist in preparing the body of his child for burial, through the neglect of a telegraph company in failing promptly to deliver a message to him, that the appellate court can set the verdict aside as arbitrary or intended as punishment. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill, 23: 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —.

Judgment.

35. The wife's share of community property cannot be increased upon the husband's appeal in a divorce proceeding. Pereira v. Pereira, 23: 880, 103 Pac. 488, — Cal. —.

36. A prosecution under an indictment charging an offense cannot be dismissed by the appellate court because the facts do not support the conviction. Hartnett v. State, 23: 761, 119 S. W. 855, — Tex. Crim. App. —.

37. Upon reversal of a judgment in a divorce proceeding upon the husband's appeal and remanding of the case for new trial, because of error in classing as community in the division of the property that which was his separate estate, the trial court is at liberty to make a new apportionment of community between the parties in such shares as shall seem just under all the circumstances. Pereira v. Pereira, 23: 880, 103 Pac. 488, — Cal. —.

APPROPRIATION.

Of public money, see Public Moneys.
Of water, see Waters, 2-5, 7.

ARREST.

As to bail bonds, see Bail and Recognizance.
Liability of carrier for, see Carriers, 2.
Civil liability for killing in effecting arrest, see Death, 2; Evidence, 32.

ARTESIAN WELL.

Right to change place of diversion by means of, see Waters, 6.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

Attorney's lien for services on client's right of action for, see Attorneys, 3.
Assignment of right of action for, see Contracts, 9.
Liability for manslaughter of one assisting in assault, see Homicide, 1.

ASSEMBLY.

Constitutional right of, see Constitutional Law, 27, 28.

ASSIGNMENT.

Of promissory note, see Bills and Notes, 2, 3.
Of action for assault and battery and false imprisonment, see Contracts, 9.
Of contract for supplies, see Damages, 2; Landlord and Tenant, 3; Railroads, 1, 2.
Of lease, see Landlord and Tenant, 6-8.
Right of assignee of leasehold to benefit of covenant for conveyance of fee, see Pleading, 6.

1. A contract to cut wood and deliver it to a railroad company is assignable by the company, so as to impose upon the assignee the duty to pay for the wood when delivered according to its terms. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368. (Annotated)

2. The assignee of a contract for supplies is, under the general doctrine of indebitatus assumpsit, bound to indemnify the assignor for loss which he may suffer at the suit of the other contracting party, because of the default of the assignee. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

See Appeal and Error, 4.

ASSUMPSIT.

1. An action may be maintained against persons who enter into a written contract for the sale of lands, assuming to act as agents for the owners, and receive money to be paid to the owners as part of the consideration, for money had and received to the use of the person from whom they received it, independently of the contract, where they retain the money and the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

owners refuse to be bound by the contract, as in such case the law implies an agreement to restore the money, because the contract which the agents assumed to have authority to make has failed, and they have the plaintiff's money in their possession. Simmonds v. Long, 23: 553, 101 Pac. 1070, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

2. One who wrongfully takes possession of cattle which are subject to chattel mortgage, and after their sale disclaims all title to them, and consents that the proceeds be turned over to one claiming them under another mortgage, cannot, when a judgment is recovered against him for their value by the mortgagee, which he satisfies, maintain a suit against the one to whom the proceeds were turned over, for money had and received to his use, for the purpose of reimbursing himself for his outlay. Third Nat. Bank v. Rice, 23: 1167, 161 Fed. 822, 88 C. C. A. 640.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

By passenger, see Carriers, 9.

Notice or knowledge and appreciation of the danger are indispensable to an assumption of the risk of it. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

ATTACHMENT.

As to garnishment, see Garnishment.

What questions may be raised by person intervening in attachment proceedings, see Intervention.

Sufficiency of petition in creditor's action to enforce attachment lien, see Pleading, 12.

Effect of seller's delay in asserting right to retake property as against attaching creditor, see Sale, 3.

Sufficiency of publication notice in action for attachment, see Writ and Process, 4, 5.

1. The owner or claimant of property attached as that of another in an action for debt has such an interest as against both parties to the main action as entitles him to intervene, irrespective of other and adequate remedies, for the purpose of asserting his right and title to the attached property, under a statute authorizing the intervention of third parties who have an interest in the matter in litigation, in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both. Potlatch Lumber Co. v. Runkel, 23: 536, 101 Pac. 396, — Idaho, —. (Annotated)

2. A third person who intervenes in an action for debt, on the ground that his property has been attached as that of the debtor in the main action, does not thereby raise an additional issue, where the attachment statute provides that an attachment duly and regularly issued becomes a lien on the property "as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered," as in such case the attachment is a provisional remedy which reaches out and lays hold upon the property by proceeding in rem, and subjects it to the payment of the debt for the recovery of which the action was brought, and therefore the intervention simply raises the issue as to the ownership of the property. Potlatch Lumber Co. v. Runkel, 23: 536, 101 Pac. 396, — Idaho, —.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

1. As the chief law officer of the state, the attorney general is clothed and charged with all the common-law powers and duties pertaining to his office, except as limited by statute. State v. Ehrlick, 23: 691, 64 S. E. 935, — W. Va. —.

2. In the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, the attorney general has the management and control of civil litigation on behalf of the state. State v. Ehrlick, 23: 691, 64 S. E. 935, — W. Va. —.

ATTORNEYS.

Agreement to hunt up and bring to attorney persons having causes of action against railroad companies, see Contracts, 10, 13.

Liability of lessee agreeing to pay cost of conveyance of fee to him to pay counsel fee for investigation of his right to conveyance, see Contracts, 6.

Admissibility in evidence of testimony of, see Evidence, 22.

Right to issue execution to secure attorney's fee for services, see Execution.

Acting under advice of counsel in infringing trademark, see Trademarks, 5.

1. An attorney in hac re cannot sustain a purchase from a client of the subject-matter of the retainer, where it appears that during the course of his employment he formed an opinion that the property was more valuable than had theretofore been assumed, which opinion he failed to disclose, since by such silence he failed to give his client all that reasonable advice against himself that he would give against a third person. Crocheron v. Savage (N. J. Err. & App.) 23: 679, 73 Atl. 33, — N. J. —.

(Annotated)

2. The employment of an attorney to conduct a trial to final termination in the nisi prius court does not authorize him to appeal from an adverse decision or bind his client for the cost of a transcript of evidence to be used for that purpose. Tobler v. Nevitt, 23: 702, 100 Pac. 416, 45 Colo. 231.

(Annotated)

3. An attorney has no charging lien for services upon his client's right of action for assault and battery and false imprisonment before judgment, which will prevent the client from settling the case against his will. Tyler v. Superior Court, 23: 1045, 73 Atl. 467, — R. I. —.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Objecting for first time on appeal to mechanics' lien law allowing, see Appeal and Error, 14.

AUTOMOBILES.

Computation of time during which non-resident may operate automobile without license, see Time, 1.

One operating an automobile on a public highway in violation of a statute forbidding the operation thereon of unregistered machines has no right of action against one who injures it merely by want of ordinary care. Dudley v. Northampton Street R. Co. 23: 561, 89 N. E. 25, 202 Mass. 443.

(Annotated)

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

1. Sureties on the bond of one under indictment for felony do not act at their peril in permitting him to leave the state on a visit, so as to be absolutely liable in case he is prevented from returning in time for his trial, because of an unavoidable accident to his person. Hargis v. Begley, 23: 136, 112 S. W. 602, — Ky. —.

2. Sureties on the bond of one who, being under indictment for crime, did not appear for trial, may excuse their failure to appear at the term of court at which the case was called, by showing that they relied on a printed court calendar which did not show the term at which the case was called, and that they were ignorant of the change from the calendar as printed. Hargis v. Begley, 23: 136, 112 S. W. 602, — Ky. —.

3. An accidental gun-shot wound which prevents one under an indictment for crime, who has left the state on a visit, from returning in time for trial, is within the operation of a statute allowing relief to his sureties for unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the principal from appearing and defending. Hargis v. Begley, 23: 136, 112 S. W. 602, — Ky. —.

(Annotated)

BAILMENT.

A livery-stable keeper is not liable for injury to a horse by its getting loose in the night and being kicked by another horse, where it was tied in the usual and customary manner, and as the owner had tied it when he brought it to the stable. Bigger v. Acree, 23: 187, 112 S. W. 879, 87 Ark. 318.

(Annotated)

BANKRUPTCY.

Method of review of correctness of order committing bankrupt, see Appeal and Error, 2.

What questions reviewable on review of order in bankruptcy, see Appeal and Error, 8, 9.

Contempt in refusing to obey order to turn over funds, see Contempt, 2, 7.

Effect of filing claim by surety against bankrupt estate of principal to estop him from setting up his release from liability, see Estoppel, 4.

BANKS.

Right of debtor to place money in bank against the wishes of creditor in order to confer jurisdiction in garnishment proceedings, see Garnishment, 1.

When limitation period begins to run against right to recover penalty for taking of usury by national bank, see Limitation of Actions, 10.

A bank which pays coupons made payable to bearer, on bonds of one of its depositors, under the mistaken belief that there were funds on deposit to meet them, cannot compel the payee to return the amount so paid. Citizens' Bank v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. 23: 1092, 64 S. E. 954, 109 Va. 539. (Annotated)

BENEFITS.

Estoppel by receiving, see Estoppel, 10.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

As to railroad relief associations, see Railroad Relief Associations.

BERTILLON SYSTEM.

For identification of criminals, see Criminal Law, 1, 2.

BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 17, 18.

BICYCLES.

Duty to keep street safe for use of, see Highways, 4, 5.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

See Appeal and Error, 3.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Effect of treating as chattel mortgage in suit for payment by receiver, see Election of Remedies, 1.

Estoppel of surety on, to set up release, see Estoppel, 4.

Release of surety on, see Principal and Surety.

Consideration.

Sufficiency of consideration for renewal, see Principal and Surety, 2.

1. Sufficient consideration for a promise to pay a note given in renewal of several, one of which was claimed to have been forged, exists in the surrender by the payee of the old note and extension of the time for payment. First State Bank v. Williams, 23: 1234, 121 N. W. 702, — Iowa, —.

1a. A promise to lend money as needed in the future is a sufficient consideration for a promissory note of the intending borrower for the amount, although the same is never in fact advanced. Marling v. Fitzgerald, 23: 177, 120 N. W. 388, 138 Wis. 93.

Rights and liabilities of transferees.

2. The rule that an assignee of a promissory note, not in due course, takes it subject to equities or defenses existing between the original parties, does not include defenses arising subsequently to the transfer, such as the failure of the payee to comply 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

with a promise which formed the consideration for the note. Marling v. Fitzgerald, 23: 177, 120 N. W. 388, 138 Wis. 93.

3. One who executes a note secured by mortgage which is placed on record, to another, who does not comply with a condition subsequent, which is to form the consideration for it, will not be permitted to set up that fact as a defense to a suit by one to whom the securities were assigned for value, without notice, although he did not take them in due course, so as to be within the protection of the law merchant, where the maker was charged with notice of the possibility of an assignment of the securities for value. Marling v. Fitzgerald, 23: 177, 120 N. W. 388, 138 Wis. 93. (Annotated)

Actions and defenses; renewal.

Estoppel in suit on renewal note to set up forgery of original, see Estoppel, 10.

Failure to recover on renewal note set out in one count as bar to recovery on original set out in another, see Pleading, 1.

Sufficiency of consideration for renewal, see Principal and Surety, 2.

4. The giving of a renewal note has no effect, in the absence of an agreement therefor, to discharge either the makers or indorsers of the original obligation, if for any reason not chargeable to the wrong or fraud of the holder, the renewal proves to be invalid. Farmers' Sav. Bank v. Arispe Mercantile Co. 23: 889, 117 N. W. 672, 139 Iowa, 246.

BLASTING.

Right to recover for injuries resulting from fright caused by, see Fright.

As nuisance, see Nuisance, 2.

BOARD OF TRADE.

As illegal combination, see Monopoly and Combinations, 4, 5.

BONDS.

As to bail bonds, see Bail and Recognizance.

Right of bank paying coupons on bonds of depositor under mistaken belief that there are funds to meet them, see Banks.

Requiring life tenant to give security for protection of remainderman, see Life Tenants.

Sureties of an officer who has succeeded himself cannot maintain a bill in equity, after his death, to correct his official reports so as to show that he did not in fact have on hand funds with which he charged himself at the time they became his sureties, and thereby relieve themselves from liability for a shortage in his accounts. Cowden v. Trustees of Schools, 23: 131, 85 N. E. 924, 235 Ill. 604. (Annotated)

BRIDGES.

Right to construct overhead bridge in street, see Highways, 1.

Duty of municipality to keep safe for travelers, see Municipal Corporations, 9, 14.

BROKERS.

Effect of illegality of brokerage partnership on member's right to compel division of commissions, see Partnership, 2.

Authority and liability of.

Authority of broker to collect principal of loan effected through him, see Payment, 2.

Effect of exceeding authority in contracting to furnish warranty deed and abstract of title, see Specific Performance, 3.

1. Authority conferred on a real estate broker to make a binding contract for the sale of land includes power to bind the grantor to execute covenants of general warranty and furnish an abstract of title. Jasper v. Wilson, 23: 982, 94 Pac. 951, — N. M. —.

2. The authority conferred upon a real estate brokerage copartnership in listing property with it for sale, is terminated upon the dissolution of the copartnership; and a contract for the sale of such property, made after such dissolution, by the continuing partner, is not binding upon the owner thereof, unless ratified by him. Larson v. Newman, 23: 849, 121 N. W. 202, — N. D. — (Annotated)

3. Power to make a binding contract for sale of real estate is conferred on a broker by an owner residing in a foreign country, who intrusts to his discretion the subject-matter of the amount to be paid for the property, requesting him to do the best he can, and receive the purchase money and apply it in satisfaction of the grantor's debts. Jasper v. Wilson, 23: 982, 94 Pac. 951, — N. M. — (Annotated)

4. The sale of land by a real estate agency with whom it has been listed, on any other terms and conditions than those authorized by the owner thereof, is not binding on the latter. Larson v. Newman, 23: 849, 121 N. W. 202, — N. D. —.

5. Ratification of a contract for the sale of certain lands, which had been entered into by a real estate agent in excess of his authority, who in answer to an inquiry of such owner as to the prospects of a sale and as to how the crops were looking, sent a copy of the contract of sale and also a deed for signature, is not shown by the answer of the owner to the agent, which did not state that he would consummate the sale, or that the deed sent had been executed, or that he was satisfied with the contract, or that the agent was authorized to make it. Larson v. Newman, 23: 849, 121 N. W. 202, — N. D. —.

Compensation.

Review on appeal of findings of trial judge as to broker's right to commission, see Appeal and Error, 18.

6. A property owner who, with knowledge of the facts, deals with a customer of one broker through the agency of another, will be liable to the first for his commission. Jennings v. Trummer, 23: 164, 96 Pac. 874, 52 Or. 149.

7. A broker for the sale of property who notifies the owner of the fact that he has a customer, and gives his name, is entitled to the credit of bringing the parties together, although he does not actually introduce them to each other, which service is performed by another broker. Jennings v. Trummer, 23: 164, 96 Pac. 874, 52 Or. 149. (Annotated)

8. A property owner will be liable for the commission of a broker to whom he has given the right to sell the property, after receiving notice that he has a customer, if such owner afterwards induces another broker to effect the sale, by acquainting him with the facts. Jennings v. Trummer, 23: 164, 96 Pac. 874, 52 Or. 149.

BUILDINGS.

Delegating to commission power to determine height of, see Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

Discrimination in regulation of height of, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

Limiting height of, in exercise of police power, see Constitutional Law, 16.

Questioning validity of statute limiting height of buildings on mandamus to compel issuance of building permit, see Mandamus.

1. The legislature may limit the height of buildings in a section of a city which is devoted to fine residences, public buildings, and works of art, for the purpose of protecting such buildings and works from the ravages of fire. Cochran v. Preston, 23: 1163, 70 Atl. 113, 108 Md. 220.

2. The prohibition of the erection of a building of greater height than 80 feet in the residential portion of a city unless the width on the street shall be at least one half its height is not so unreasonable as to make the regulation invalid. Welch v. Swasey, 23: 1160, 79 N. E. 745, 193 Mass. 364.

3. The legislature, in regulating the height of buildings in a city, may permit them to be higher in the sections where there is a call for office space than in the residential portions, although the streets in the former may be narrower than in the latter. Welch v. Swasey, 23: 1160, 79 N. E. 745, 193 Mass. 364.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See Evidence, 5-16.

BURGLARY.

Civil liability for killing in making arrest for burglary, see Evidence, 32.

BURIAL.

Regulation of burial of corpse, see Constitutional Law, 11.

Validity of contract to furnish burial at death, see Contracts, 7.
Burial insurance, see Insurance, 2, 3, 8, 18

CAMELS.

See Animals.

CANCELATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Multifariousness of bill to cancel deeds and obtain accounting, see Pleading, 4.
Necessity of obtaining decree canceling release before repudiating it, see Release, 2.

CARRIERS.

Conveyance to railroad in consideration of agreement to erect and maintain depot on land conveyed, see Covenants and Conditions, 1.

Who are passengers.

1. One who, in going from a railroad car to a street, after passing a certain distance along the walk provided by the railroad company, turns aside and attempts to walk across the tracks of the company, cannot claim the protection from the company which is due to a passenger. Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 23: 633, 83 N. E. 367, 197 Mass. 88. (Annotated)

Arrest of passenger.

Special police officer as servant of railroad, see Master and Servant, 1, 19.

2. A railroad company is not liable for the acts of a special police officer appointed as provided by the Nebraska statute, and in its pay, in wrongfully arresting and prosecuting a person for the alleged shoving of such officer's wife while she was engaged in conversation at the company's station, where the arrest was not directed or instigated by it, and in no way affected its rights or property, although the plaintiff was rightfully in the station, having a ticket and awaiting the arrival of a train. McKain v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 23: 289, 64 S. E. 18, — W. Va. —.

Measure of care required; negligence generally.

Damages for injury to passenger, see Damages, 7.

Release by passenger from liability for injury, see Evidence, 34.

3. Knowledge on the part of a railroad company of the use by passengers of a particular route in leaving its cars does not amount to an invitation to use it, where other proper arrangements have been provided. Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 23: 633, 83 N. E. 367, 197 Mass. 88.

Negligence of passenger.

See also infra, 14, 15.

As to negligence in entering or leaving car, see infra, 11.

4. A passenger in a Pullman car may rely on the porter for assistance and guidance as to his conduct, as the representative of the railroad company. Gannon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 23: 1061, 117 N. W. 966, — Iowa, —.

5. One who, after leaving a railroad car, for his own convenience voluntarily leaves the walk provided by the company for access to the street, and steps upon the railroad track, in full view of an approaching train, without taking the slightest precaution for his own safety, cannot hold the company liable for injuries caused by a collision with the train. Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 23: 633, 83 N. E. 367, 197 Mass. 88.

Ejection of passenger.
6. A street car passenger who insists upon remaining on a car which turns back before his destination is reached, without paying the return fare, may be ejected as a trespasser, although he was not warned, when boarding the car, that it would not go to the point to which his contract entitled him to be carried. Wright v. Orange & P. V. R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 23: 571, 73 Atl. 517, — N. J. —. (Annotated)

Leaving at destination.
Passenger's right to punitive damages as question for jury, see Trial, 2.
7. A railroad company is liable for the act of a porter of a Pullman car in putting off a passenger at the wrong station, where it relies upon him to notify sleeping passengers of the approach of the train to their stations. Campbell v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 23: 1056, 65 S. E. 628, — S. C. —. (Annotated)

Injuries in getting on and off.
Judicial notice of authority of Pullman car porters to assist passengers in entering and leaving trains, see Evidence, 2.

8. A railroad company which, with knowledge that a passenger has alighted from the train for exercise at the station, starts the train without reasonable warning and opportunity for him safely to re-enter the train, is liable for injuries inflicted upon him in consequence of such act. Gannon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 23: 1061, 117 N. W. 966, — Iowa, —.

9. The fact that an electric street car will start with more or less of a jerk is one of the risks assumed by passengers, so that the mere facts that a car starts with a sudden movement or jerk, and that a passenger is thrown to the floor and hurt, do not make out a case of negligence which will render the company liable for the injury; but to render it liable the start must be shown to have been unusually sudden and violent. Boston Elev. R. Co. v. Smith, 23: 890, 168 Fed. 628, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

10. Negligence on the part of a street car conductor is not shown by his giving the signal to start the car as soon as a heavy woman passenger is safely inside the vestibule, where there are no extraordinary or exceptional circumstances making it his duty to exercise special care to wait until she is seated before starting. Boston Elev.

R. Co. v. Smith, 23: 890, 168 Fed. 628, — C. C. A. —.

11. A passenger who, having alighted from the train for exercise, attempts to re-enter it, with the aid of the Pullman porter, after it has started, is not per se negligent, although the statute makes it a crime for one not employed on the train to get upon a car while it is in motion, without the consent of the one having the same in charge. Gannon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 23: 1061, 117 N. W. 966, — Iowa, —.

Carriers of freight.

Damages for loss of goods by carrier, see Damages, 5.

Admission of irrelevant evidence in action for negligence in transportation of stock, see Appeal and Error, 24.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury in action for negligence of carrier transporting live stock, see Trial, 1.

12. A local express company to which goods are given for delivery to a carrier, to be by it transported into another state and there delivered to a named consignee, is the sender's agent for delivering the goods for shipment, and for whatever usually and naturally belongs to the doing thereof, including the giving of information necessary to the shipment. Harrington v. Wabash R. Co. 23: 745, 122 N. W. 14, — Minn. —.

13. A neglect on the part of a shipper to disclose the true nature of the contents of a package offered for transportation constitutes a fraud on the carrier, if there be anything in its form, dimensions, or outward appearance which is likely to throw the carrier off its guard, whether so designed or not, an intent to impose upon the carrier not being essential. Harrington v. Wabash R. Co. 23: 745, 122 N. W. 14, — Minn. —.

14. In the absence of more definite information, a carrier has the right to accept the shipper's marks as to the contents of a package offered for transportation, and is not bound to inquire particularly about it, in order to take advantage of a false classification of the contents thereof. Harrington v. Wabash R. Co. 23: 745, 122 N. W. 14, — Minn. —.

15. A common carrier is obliged to furnish reasonably safe and suitable cars for the transportation of horses tendered to it for shipment; and if a car offered a shipper can be made thus safe and suitable, only by the use of bedding, it is the duty of the carrier to furnish that bedding. Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 278, 118 N. W. 655, 82 Neb. 726. (Annotated)

16. A common carrier is not relieved of its duty to furnish the bedding required to make a car reasonably safe and suitable for the transportation of horses tendered for shipment, by the agreement of the shipper to load and unload the horses, and to feed, water, and care for them in transit. Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 278, 118 N. W. 655, 82 Neb. 726.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

17. A common carrier is not relieved of its duty to furnish the bedding required to make a car reasonably safe and suitable for the transportation of horses tendered for shipment, by the fact that the shipper's agent accepted the car without proper bedding. Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 278, 118 N. W. 655, 82 Neb. 726.

Governmental control; discrimination.

Validity of statute making acceptance of free transportation unlawful, see Constitutional Law, 14, 18, 24.

18. Boarding a moving car in good faith to become a passenger thereon is not within the operation of a provision of a statute under a caption, "Riding on Freight Trains," which makes it a misdemeanor to get on any train or car while in motion, for the purpose of obtaining transportation thereon as a passenger. East v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 23: 513, 88 N. E. 751, 195 N. Y. 409. (Annotated)

19. A contract between a railroad company and a physician, by the terms of which he is to receive for professional services to be rendered by him for the company, at its request, $25 per month and an annual pass over its lines, where the physician does not spend a major portion of his time in the employment of the company, is prohibited by a statute making it a penal offense for a railroad to give, or any person not expressly excepted thereby to receive and use, free transportation, when the physician is not within the excepted class; and a physician who accepts and uses such a pass violates the statute. State v. Martyn, 23: 217, 117 N. W. 719, 82 Neb. 225. (Annotated)

20. A pass issued to a physician who contracts to perform certain services for a railroad company in consideration of a certain sum per month and an annual pass is, in contemplation of law, a free pass, if the services do not require a major portion of the physician's time. State v. Martyn, 23: 217, 117 N. W. 719, 82 Neb. 225.

21. A statute prohibiting the issuance, acceptance, and use of free transportation is within the power of the state to regulate the business of common carriers by preventing unjust discriminations. State v. Martyn, 23: 217, 117 N. W. 719, 82 Neb. 225.

CARRYING WEAPONS.

Carrying of concealed weapons, see Concealed Weapons.

CARS.

Duty of carrier to furnish suitable car for transportation of live stock, see Carriers, 15-17.

CERTIFICATE.

As to teachers' certificates, see Schools, 1.

CERTIFIED COPIES.

Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 18.

CHARIVARI.

Members of, as mob for whose acts city is liable, see Municipal Corporations, 15.

CHattel Mortgage.

Right of one wrongfully taking property subject to, and permitting third person to take proceeds of sale where judgment is recovered against him by real owner, see Assumpsit, 2.

Effect of failure to comply with law as to recording of, in case of notes treated as mortgages, see Receivers, 3.

CHECKS.

Larceny of unindorsed check, see Larceny.

Effect of delay in presenting for payment, see Sale, 2; Trial, 3.

CHURCHES.

Exception of, in statute limiting height of buildings, see Constitutional Law, 5.

CIGARETTES.

Sale of tobacco containing coupon for cigarette paper as interstate commerce, see Commerce, 1.

The sale by a retailer of a sealed package of tobacco put up by the manufacturer, which contains a coupon entitling the purchaser to cigarette papers when presented by him to the manufacturer, will support a conviction of the former under a statute forbidding the sale, or giving way, directly or indirectly, of such paper. State v. Sbragia, 23: 697, 119 N. W. 290, 138 Wis. 579.

CLASS LEGISLATION.

See Constitutional Law.

CLEARANCE CARD.

Duty of master to give, see Constitutional Law, 20.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

Multifariousness of bill to clear cloud from title, see Pleading, 4.

CLUBS.

Distribution of intoxicating liquors by, to members, see Intoxicating Liquors, 5, 6.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On judgment, see Judgment, 1, 4.

COMBINATIONS.

As to illegal combinations, see Monopoly and Combinations.

COMITY.

Enforcement, under rule of, of infant's contract to sell land, see Conflict of Laws, 4.

COMMERCE.

1. The sale of a package of tobacco which contains a coupon entitling the purchaser to cigarette papers if sent to the manufacturer in another state does not, by reason of the fact that it must be so sent, become interstate commerce, so as not to be subject to the operation of a state statute forbidding the sale of such paper, directly or indirectly, or upon any pretense, or by any device. State v. Sbragia, 23: 697, 119 N. W. 290, 138 Wis. 579.

2. Intoxicating liquors shipped from another state to fictitious consignees, or to local merchants who did not order and do not claim them, cannot, although they had been placed by the carrier in its warehouse and remained there twenty-four days, be regarded as constructively delivered, so as to lose their character as articles of interstate commerce, and become subject to local seizure. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 23: 702, 72 Atl. 331, 104 Me. 463. (Annotated)

3. A state statute prohibiting the taking of orders for intoxicating liquors or the contracting for the sale thereof within such state, except with persons authorized to sell the same as therein provided, is not repugnant to the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. Crigler v. Shepler, 23: 500, 101 Pac. 619, 79 Kan. 834.

4. The owner of intoxicating liquors in one state cannot, by virtue of the Federal interstate commerce clause, go into another state or send his agent there, and, in defiance of the laws thereof, carry on the business of soliciting orders or proposals for the purchase of such liquors, to be shipped from such other state, without incurring the penalties of such laws. Crigler v. Shepler, 23: 500, 101 Pac. 619, 79 Kan. 834.

COMMISSIONS.

Of broker, see Brokers, 6-8.

Delegation of power to, see Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

Right to recover commissions for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, see Contracts, 12.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

COMPENSATION.

Of broker, see Brokers, 6-8.

Of judges, see Judges, 2.

COMPETITION.

Prohibiting use and sale of one's property for purpose of destroying business of competitor, see Constitutional Law, 15, 17.

CONCEALED WEAPONS.

Carrying in the hand a pair of saddlebags with the lids down, which contain a pistol, which is hidden from common observation, is not a violation of a statute making it an offense to carry a pistol about the person, hidden from common observation. Sutherland v. Com. 23: 172, 65 S. E. 15, 109 Va. 834. (Annotated)

CONCLUSIONS.

See Pleading, 2.

CONDITION.

See Covenants and Conditions.

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS.

Admissibility in evidence, see Evidence, 22.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Insurance matters.

1. The place where a contract of insurance between parties in different jurisdictions is entered into is the place where the last act is done that is necessary to the validity of the contract. McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 23: 968, 122 N. W. 27, — Neb. —.

2. An insurance contract entered into in the state by a foreign insurance company, which does not contain a provision that the laws of the foreign state shall govern, is not subject to a provision of a statute of such foreign state requiring a notice to be mailed to the policy holders in that state as a condition of forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums. McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 23: 968, 122 N. W. 27, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

Contracts of infants.

3. The binding effect under the lex loci contractus of covenants for title in an infant's deed to land situated in another state will not be given effect by the courts of the latter state in contravention to the public policy of that state, which permits infants to disaffirm such covenants upon attaining majority. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

4. The execution by infants in a state which has removed their disability, of a deed conveying title to land in another state, will not, under the rule of comity, render the deed an irrevocable conveyance in the latter state, where its policy is to regard such deeds as revocable upon the infant's attaining full age. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

Torts.

5. A person who is injured in one state as the result of the negligent act of a person in another state is not bound, in the courts of the latter state, by a statute of the former state limiting the amount of recovery in such case. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

Transfers of property generally.

6. The obligation of covenants for title in a deed is governed by the law of the place where the land is situated, and not by the lex loci contractus. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

Wills.

7. The courts of the state where the property is situated, in construing a will made at testator's domicile, in another state, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

will adopt a settled judicial meaning which the courts of the state of domicile have given to technical words therein so that such meaning has become a rule of property in that state, but otherwise the testator's intention as ascertained by the court giving construction to the will, will govern. Ball v. Phelan, 23: 895, 49 So. 956, — Miss. —.

Remedies.

8. In case of breach of an undertaking to transmit a telegram from one state to another, where it is to be promptly delivered to one of its citizens, by failure promptly to deliver it after it has reached the latter state, its laws will govern in an action for the breach, brought either in contract or tort, in its courts, in determining whether or not damages can be allowed for mental suffering caused by the delay, where no negligence is alleged or shown to have occurred in the former state. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill, 23: 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

9. In determining whether or not damages can be allowed for mental anguish caused by failure promptly to deliver a telegram, the courts of the forum are not bound by the decisions of the courts where the contract was made, where the laws of that state do not contain any express declaration upon the subject. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill, 23: 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —.

CONSIDERATION.

Of contract, see Contracts, 1.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 1, 1a.

For renewal of note, see Principal and Surety, 2.

CONSPIRACY.

As to illegal combinations in restraint of trade, see Monopoly and Combinations.

Demands of laborers for increased wages and that wages shall be paid during working hours are properly enforced by a strike. L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Driscoll, 23: 1236, 85 N. E. 897, 200 Mass. 110.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Raising question of constitutionality of law for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Waiver of constitutional question by appealing to intermediate court, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Constitutional provision that all elections shall be free, see Elections.

Requirement of full faith and credit to foreign judgments, see Judgment, 2, 3.

Vested rights.

1. A person who is not a party or privy to an action cannot have a vested right in an erroneous decision made therein. Crigler v. Shepler, 23: 500, 101 Pac. 619, 79 Kan. 834.

Delegation of power.

2. Where matters of local self-government may be intrusted to the inhabitants of towns, the legislature may delegate to a commission to be appointed by it the determination of the heights of buildings to be erected in different places within the city, where the statute provides for a general limitation upon the heights to which buildings can be erected. Welch v. Swasey, 23: 1160, 79 N. E. 745, 193 Mass. 364.

3. The legislature may delegate to a commission the power to determine the boundaries of the sections of a city in which the building of different heights as determined by the legislature shall be erected. Welch v. Swasey, 23: 1160, 79 N. E. 745, 193 Mass. 364.

4. The legislature cannot delegate to a board authority to require a knowledge of embalming as a condition to receiving an undertaker's license. Wyeth v. Thomas, 23: 147, 86 N. E. 925, 200 Mass. 474.

Equal protection and privileges.

5. The exception of churches in a statute limiting the height of buildings in a city does not deprive the owners of private property of the equal protection of the laws. Cochran v. Preston, 23: 1163, 70 Atl. 113, 108 Md. 220.

6. The owners of buildings on the higher ground are not deprived of the equal protection of the laws by a statute limiting the height of buildings to a certain distance above a point located on the high ground of a city, although the buildings on lower ground might exceed theirs in the actual height from the ground. Cochran v. Preston, 23: 1163, 70 Atl. 113, 108 Md. 220.

7. A statute forbidding the pumping of mineral water and gas arising therefrom from a common reservoir is not invalid as contravening the constitutional provision guaranteeing equal protection of laws, because it is applied only to wells bored into rock, where the conditions are such that pumping in the rock wells is less needful than in those sunken in dirt, while it is much more exhaustive and destructive of common rights. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326. (Annotated)

8. A statute prohibiting unfair commercial discriminations between different sections, communities, or localities is not unconstitutional as class legislation. State v. Drayton, 23: 1287, 117 N. W. 768, 82 Neb. 254.

9. Applying to proprietors of railroads a rule of liability with respect to injuries of employees different from that applied to other classes of employers does not deprive them of the equal protection of the laws. Indianapolis Traction & T. Co. v. Kinney, 23: 711, 85 N. E. 954, 171 Ind. 612.

Due process; right to life, liberty, and property.

10. The constitutional right of a citizen to personal liberty is not infringed by an order of the state board of health forbidding him to make use, for drinking purposes, of a polluted water supply. State Bd. of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Health v. St. Johnsbury, 23: 766, 73 Atl. 581, — Vt. — (Annotated)

11. Refusal to permit one to bury the dead body of his relative or friend, except under an unreasonable limitation, unconstitutionally interferes with his private rights. Wyeth v. Thomas, 23: 147, 86 N. E. 925, 200 Mass. 474.

12. A municipal corporation cannot be authorized by the legislature to subdivide a tract of private property within its limits for the purpose of levying a tax for water mains with house connections, under a constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law. Chicago v. Wells, 23: 405, 86 N. E. 197, 236 Ill. 129. (Annotated)

13. Refusal to permit one to engage in the business of an undertaker, without good reason, violates his constitutional rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Wyeth v. Thomas, 23: 147, 86 N. E. 925, 200 Mass. 474.

14. By making acceptance of free transportation unlawful, an anti-pass law is not rendered unconstitutional as depriving of his property without due process of law, a physician who has contracted with a railroad company to render services to it, at its request, in consideration of $25 per month and an annual pass over its lines, which services do not require a major portion of his time. State v. Martyn, 23: 217, 117 N. W. 719, 82 Neb. 225.

15. A statute enacted to prevent unfair commercial discriminations between different sections, communities, or localities, which prohibits the use and sale of one's property for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor, and provides penalties for violation thereof, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it takes from the citizen the right to contract and to control his property, and destroys freedom in trade, as, under the act, the owner or dealer may sell for any price he chooses, or on any terms he may adopt, without reference to the effect his action may have upon the trade or business of others, so long as he does not do so for the purpose of destroying competing businesses. State v. Drayton, 23: 1287, 117 N. W. 768, 82 Neb. 254.

Police power.

Legislature as judge when and how police power shall be exercised, see Statutes, 1.

16. The state may, in the exercise of the police power, limit the height of buildings to be erected in cities when, in its judgment, the public health or public safety so require. Welch v. Swasey, 23: 1160, 79 N. E. 745, 193 Mass. 364. (Annotated)

17. The prevention of discrimination in particular localities, in the price of commodities in general use, for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor by selling such commodities at a lower rate in such locality than is charged for the same elsewhere, is within the police power of the state. State v. Drayton, 23: 1287, 117 N. W. 768, 82 Neb. 254.

18. A statute prohibiting the issuance, acceptance, and use of free transportation is a proper and reasonable exercise of the police power of the state. State v. Martyn, 23: 217, 117 N. W. 719, 82 Neb. 225.

19. The police power does not justify the adoption of a rule requiring a knowledge of embalming as a condition to receiving a license as undertaker, by a board of registration in embalming which has power to adopt rules governing the care and disposition of human dead bodies and the business of embalming. Wyeth v. Thomas, 23: 147, 86 N. E. 925, 200 Mass. 474.

(Annotated)

20. The duty imposed upon an employer by a statute requiring him, upon the request of a discharged employee, to furnish a written statement as to the true cause for the discharge, is not a police regulation, and is an interference with the personal liberty guaranteed to every citizen by the state and Federal Constitutions. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, 23: 247, 102 Pac. 459, — Kan. —.

Freedom of speech and worship.

Partial invalidity of statute invading right of free speech, see Statutes, 3, 4.

21. The "freedom of the press" consists in a right, in the conductor of a newspaper, to print what he chooses, without previous license, but subject to be held responsible therefor as anyone else for a similar publication. Levert v. Daily States Pub. Co. 23: 726, 49 So. 206, 123 La. 594.

22. A statute declaring that candidates for judicial and educational offices shall not be nominated, indorsed, recommended, criticized, or referred to in any manner by any political party, convention, or primary, violates a constitutional provision declaring that every person may freely speak, write, and publish on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

23. A statute which requires an employer of labor, upon request of a discharged employee, to furnish in writing the true cause or reason for such discharge, is repugnant to the provision as to free speech in the Bill of Rights, and is invalid. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, 23: 247, 102 Pac. 459, — Kan. —.

Impairing contract obligations.

24. A constitutional provision requiring the legislature to pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination in all charges of railroad companies enters into all contracts made with such companies; and therefore a statute forbidding the issuance of free passes does not impair the obligation of one who has contracted with the company for such pass before the passage of the statute, but after the adoption of the Constitution. State v. Martyn, 23: 217, 117 N. W. 719, 82 Neb. 225.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

25. The provision of the Federal Constitution forbidding the enactment of laws impairing the obligation of contracts does not apply to a judicial decision overruling a former adjudication, so as to permit a recovery for services performed subsequent to the former decision, by a person not a party or privy thereto, when such services are rendered illegal by the subsequent decision. Crigler v. Shepler, 23: 500, 101 Pac. 619, 79 Kan. 834.
(Annotated)

Guaranty of republican government.

26. The licensing by the legislature of the sale of intoxicating liquors is not invalid under the clause of the Federal Constitution requiring the United States to guarantee to every state a republican form of government. Allyn's Appeal, 23: 630, 71 Atl. 794, 81 Conn. 534.

Rights of assembly and petition.

Partial invalidity of statute invading rights of free assembly, see Statutes, 3, 4.

27. A political convention is an "assemblage" within the meaning of the constitutional provision that the right of the people to assemble to consult for the common good shall never be abridged. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

28. A statute declaring that candidates for judicial and educational offices shall not be nominated, indorsed, recommended, criticized, or referred to in any manner by any political party, convention, or primary, violates a constitutional provision declaring that the right of the people peaceably to assemble to consult for the common good, and to petition the government, or any department thereof, shall never be abridged. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

CONSTRUCTION.

Of contracts, see Contracts, 6.

Of covenant or condition, see Covenants and Conditions, 1.

CONTEMPT.

Contempt proceedings for violation of injunction as criminal proceedings, see Action or Suit, 1.

Review on habeas corpus of irregularities in proceedings, see Habeas Corpus.

What constitutes.

1. The refusal of a witness to answer such improper questions as would constitute abuses of process does not constitute a contempt of court. Ex parte Button, 23: 1173, 120 N. W. 203, 83 Neb. 636.

2. To sustain a decree against a bankrupt for contempt in wilfully refusing to obey an order directing him to turn over funds to the trustee, he must be shown to have had, at some specified time to which the proceedings may refer, so completely under his control funds which he could command that his failure to command them was a wilful contempt of court. Cole v.

First Nat. Bank, 23: 255, 163 Fed. 180, 90 C. C. A. 50. (Annotated)

3. The mere publication in newspapers and posting upon wagons of an injunctive order forbidding interference with teams of a teaming company are not sufficient to charge with knowledge thereof, so as to render guilty of contempt, one not a party to the proceeding who assists in a riot in which such teams are interfered with and those in charge of them assaulted, in opposition to his denial of knowledge and the legal presumption of his innocence. Garrigan v. United States, 23: 1295, 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494. (Annotated)

4. An assault upon a guard of a team, interference with which has been enjoined by the court, after he has been arrested and is in custody of the police, is not directed against a custodian of the team so as to render the act a contempt of the injunction. Garrigan v. United States, 23: 1295, 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494.

5. The mere fact that one not a party to an injunction against interfering with the teams of a teaming association assisted in a riot in which such teams were interfered with and those in charge of them assaulted, is not sufficient to show that he aided and abetted persons named in the bill in violating the injunction, so as to render him guilty of contempt of court. Garrigan v. United States, 23: 1295, 163 Fed. 16, 89 C. C. A. 494.

Procedure.

6. A witness who is brought before a court by attachment for refusal to obey a subpoena need not be then tried and punished for that contempt, but can be punished for refusal to answer proper questions then propounded by the court, as the order of procedure is within the court's discretion. Ex parte Button, 23: 1173, 120 N. W. 203, 83 Neb. 636.

7. The provision of the Federal Constitution entitling an accused to the right to be confronted by the witnesses against him does not apply to a summary proceeding to punish one for contempt in refusing to comply with an order in bankruptcy. Cole v. First Nat. Bank, 23: 255, 163 Fed. 180, 90 C. C. A. 50.

Power as to.

8. Statutes empowering justices of the peace to take depositions and to punish as for contempt persons who refuse to answer proper questions do not violate a constitutional provision that the judicial power of the state shall be vested in a Supreme Court, district court, justice of the peace, police magistrate and such other courts inferior to the district court as may be created by law for cities and incorporated towns, and are authorized by a constitutional provision that justices of the peace shall have and exercise such jurisdiction as may be provided by law. Ex parte Button, 23: 1173, 120 N. W. 203, 83 Neb. 636. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CONTEST.

Of will, see Wills, 2.

CONTRACTORS.

Oral contract to become surety for building contractor, see Contracts, 3.

CONTRACTS.

Assignability of contract to cut and deliver wood, see Assignment, 1.

Assignment of contract for supplies, see Assignment, 2.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws.

Denial of freedom of, see Constitutional Law, 15.

Impairing obligation of, see Constitutional Law, 24, 25.

Damages for breach of, see Damages.

Between husband and wife, see Husband and Wife, 1-3.

Of infants, see Infants, 1-7.

Of municipal corporations, see Municipal Corporations, 4, 5.

Imputed notice of limitation on powers of board of education to one entering into contract with it, see Schools, 2.

Personal liability of members of board of education on contract in excess of authority, see Schools, 3, 4.

Specific performance of, see Specific Performance.

Consideration.

As to consideration for note, see Bills and Notes, 1.

Sufficiency of consideration for renewal of note, see Principal and Surety, 2.

1. A contract by which a man undertakes to convey real estate to his wife upon resumption of illicit relations with his paramour, in case she condones his past offense and discontinues a proceeding for divorce against him, is supported by a valuable consideration. Darcey v. Darcey, 23: 886, 71 Atl. 595, — R. I. —.

Mutuality.

2. A contract for sale of real estate, embodied in a receipt reciting payment of a portion of the purchase money, and the amount and time of payment of the balance, is not unenforceable against the grantor, as lacking in mutuality. Jasper v. Wilson, 23: 982, 94 Pac. 951, — N. M. —.

Statute of frauds.

Reformation of contract invalid under statute of frauds, see Reformation of Instruments.

3. An undertaking to become surety for a building contractor must be in writing, under the statute of frauds. Mead v. Winslow, 23: 1197, 102 Pac. 753, 53 Wash. 638.

4. A parol agreement by which the grantors of land reserve a matured, unsevered crop of corn and hay standing thereon, as a part of the consideration for the conveyance, is valid. Grabow v. McCracken, 23: 1218, 102 Pac. 84, — Okla. (Annotated)

5. The mere indorsement of one's name upon a building contract, under the word surety, is not a sufficient note or memorandum in writing of the obligation of the one so signing to satisfy the statute of frauds and charge him as surety on the contract. Mead v. Winslow, 23: 1197, 102 Pac. 753, 53 Wash. 638. (Annotated)

Construction.

Meaning of words in regulations of railroad relief association, see Railroad Relief Associations.

6. A lessee who undertakes to pay the cost and charge of a conveyance to him of the fee, which is provided for by the terms of the lease, is not bound to pay a counsel fee for the investigation of his right to a conveyance. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

Validity; public policy.

7. A contract founded upon a legal consideration by which the obligor undertakes to furnish the obligee, or one of the latter's near relatives, a burial at death, reasonably worth a fixed sum, is valid. State v. Willett, 23: 197, 86 N. E. 68, 171 Ind. 296. (Annotated)

8. A provision in a contract by persons between whom divorce proceedings are pending because of the husband's misconduct, which is intended to effect a reconciliation and dismissal of the proceedings, to the effect that, in case the husband should so conduct himself as to give the wife a new cause of action for divorce, he would pay her a sum which is less than his yearly net income, in full satisfaction of all claims against his estate, is void as contrary to public policy. Pereira v. Pereira, 23: 880, 103 Pac. 488, — Cal. —. (Annotated)

9. An assignment before judgment of an action for assault and battery and false imprisonment is void, as against public policy. Tyler v. Superior Court, 23: 1045, 73 Atl. 467, — R. I. —.

10. A contract between a layman and a lawyer, by which the former undertakes and agrees, in consideration of a division of the fees received by the latter, to hunt up and bring to the attorney persons having causes of action against railroad companies for personal injuries, is contrary to public policy, and void. Holland v. Sheehan, 23: 510, 122 N. W. 1, — Minn. —.

11. The transferee of stock in a manufacturing company is within the operation of an exception to a statute making illegal agreements not to engage in business, to the effect that the act shall not apply to any contract where the only object of the restraint is to protect the vendee or transferee of a trade or business sold and transferred for a valuable consideration, in good faith, without intent to create a monopoly, and he can enforce such contract against his transferer. Buckhout v. Witwer, 23: 506, 122 N. W. 184, — Mich. —. (Annotated) courts will not enforce payments promised in consideration of services rendered in criminal transactions. Crigler v. Shepler, 23: 500, 101 Pac. 619, 79 Kan. 834.

12. Commissions for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors cannot be recovered, as 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

13. The parties to a contract by which a layman agrees to find cases and a lawyer to conduct them through the courts, in consideration of a division of fees received by the latter, are in pari delicto; and neither should be permitted to assert alleged rights accruing thereunder. Holland v. Sheehan, 23: 510, 122 N. W. 1, — Minn. —.

14. One who has performed public printing under a contract void because the municipality discriminated in favor of union labor in awarding it will not be compelled to return money already received therefor, where the price was not unreasonable and the suit is in equity, not begun until the time arrived for performing the contract, and no preliminary injunction was asked, while the nisi prius court upheld the validity of the contract, so that the performance could not, for a time, have been avoided. Miller v. Des Moines, 23: 815, 122 N. W. 226, — Iowa, —.

Performance; breach.

15. One who purchases from infants, upon their reaching their majority, land which they had conveyed to another during minority, under a contract to repay the latter what he had paid the infants, must comply with his contract before he can secure possession of the property. Beauchamp v. Ber-ting, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

Rescission.

Necessity of tendering back consideration of release before repudiating, see Release.

As to rescission of sale, see Sale, 4.

Rescission of sale of real property, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2, 3.

16. A unilateral mistake in the making of a contract, of which the other contracting party is entirely ignorant, and to which he in no way contributes, will not affect the contract, or afford grounds for its avoidance or rescission, unless it be such a mistake as goes to the substance of the contract itself. Tatum v. Coast Lumber Co. 23: 1109, 101 Pac. 957, — Idaho, —.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See Negligence, 8.

CONVERSION.

See Trover.

COPIES.

Admissibility in evidence of certified copies of deeds, see Evidence, 18.

CORPORATIONS.

Validity of acknowledgment of mortgage executed by, before notary interested in corporation, see Acknowledgment.

Agreement by transferee of stock not to engage in competing business, see Contracts, 11.

Where debt due from one to another may be garnished, see Garnishment, 2.

Appointment of receiver for, see Receivers, 1, 2.

Situs for purpose of taxation of stocks in foreign corporation owned by foreign testator in possession of resident executor, see Taxes, 3.

Service on, see Writ and Process, 1.

Officers and their acts.

1. A secretary and treasurer of a corporation appointed by the board of directors may be removed at the pleasure of the board, although the statute provides that the corporation shall be managed by a president, a board of directors, a secretary, a treasurer, and such other officers as the corporation authorizes. Brindley v. Walker, 23: 1293, 70 Atl. 794, 221 Pa. 287.

(Annotated)

Dissolution.

Injunction against dissolution of corporation at suit of minority stockholders, see Injunction, 7.

Retaining jurisdiction on refusal of injunction against dissolution of, see Equity, 5.

2. The courts will not, save in rare and exceptional instances, interfere at the suit of minority stockholders of a corporation with proceedings of a majority to dissolve it as authorized by statute. White v. Kincaid, 23: 1177, 63 S. E. 109, 149 N. C. 415.

(Annotated)

Foreign corporations.

What constitutes doing business within state for jurisdictional purposes, see Courts, 1.

Situs for purpose of taxation of stocks in foreign corporation owned by foreign testator in possession of resident executor, see Taxes, 3.

3. A foreign corporation which has engaged in mining within the state without complying with its laws, which compliance is a statutory prerequisite of the right to maintain an action in the state courts, cannot secure the right to maintain a suit instituted to restrain interference with its mine by complying with the local law after its institution. Amalgamated Zinc & L. Co. v. Bay State Zinc Min. Co. 23: 492, 120 S. W. 31, 221 Mo. 7.

(Annotated)

4. A foreign corporation which attempts to engage in mining within a state under an assignment of a lease made and to be executed there, without complying with the requirements of the statutes necessary to give it the right to do business there, by reason of which its contracts are void under the statute, cannot validate the assignment so as to maintain an action upon it by complying with the statute several years after it began to do business, and after it had brought an action to protect its rights under the lease. Amalgamated Zinc & L. Co. v. Bay State Zinc Min. Co. 23: 492, 120 S. W. 31, 221 Mo. 7.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CORPSE.

Regulation of burial of, see Constitutional Law, 11.

COSTS.

Power of attorney to bind client for cost of transcript on appeal, see Attorneys, 2.

Liability of lessee agreeing to pay cost of conveyance of fee to him to pay counsel fee for investigation of his right to conveyance, see Contracts, 6.

Costs should not be awarded against a state board of health upon dismissal of the bill against one improperly made a party to a suit to enforce its order. State Bd. of Health v. St. Johnsbury, 23: 766, 73 Atl. 581, — Vt. —.

COTTON.

Destruction of, by fire while in warehouse, see Warehouseman, 1.

COUNTS.

See Pleading, 1.

COUPONS.

Right of bank paying coupons on bonds of depositor under mistaken belief that there are funds to meet them, see Banks.

COURTS.

Power to compel submission to physical examination, see Discovery and Inspection.

Of equity, see Equity.

Judicial notice by, see Evidence, 1, 2.

Enforcement by, of orders of board of health, see Health.

As to judges, see Judges.

Jurisdiction and powers in general.

1. A corporation cannot be said to be doing business within a state from the mere fact that it sells goods there through the efforts of traveling salesmen, so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the state courts. Saxony Mills v. Wagner & Co. 23: 834, 47 So. 899, — Miss. —.

(Annotated)

Jurisdiction over associations, etc.

2. Statutory permission to the court to enforce an order of the state board of health forbidding use of a polluted water supply does not make the order conclusive so as to deprive persons affected thereby of a right to a hearing before the court. State Bd. of Health v. St. Johnsbury, 23: 766, 73 Atl. 581, — Vt. —.

State courts.

3. A state court has jurisdiction of a suit to recover profits made through the infringement of a trademark. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Abatement, by death of grantor, of right to rescind deed for breach of covenant, see Abatement and Revival.

ified period, is for a penalty, and not liquidated damages. Buckhout v. Witwer, 23: 506, 122 N. W. 184, — Mich. —.

In respect to freight.

5. The measure of damages for the negligent loss of a box containing books and other household articles, intrusted to a railroad company for transportation, is the value of the books alone, where the box was marked "books" by the shipper's agent, and was accepted in the belief that it contained only books, and the charge for transportation was the rate for books, although no fraud on the carrier was intended. Harrington v. Wabash R. Co. 23: 745, 122 N. W. 14, — Minn. —. (Annotated)

Libel.

Nominal damages for, see supra, 1.

6. One is entitled to such damages on account of injured feelings from the publication of a libel against him as must unavoidably be inferred from its nature, notwithstanding the intentions of the publisher were good and no special damages are proved. Levert v. Daily States Pub. Co. 23: 726, 49 So. 206, 123 La. 594.

Personal injuries.

7. Five hundred dollars are not excessive damages to award a woman who suffers a miscarriage through the negligence of a carrier. Big Sandy & C. R. Co. v. Blankenship, 23: 345, 118 S. W. 316, — Ky. —.

8. The physical pain and distress of mind suffered by a woman who is caused to miscarry by a bodily injury inflicted by the negligence of another may properly be considered by the jury in awarding damages for the injury. Big Sandy & C. R. Co. v. Blankenship, 23: 345, 118 S. W. 316, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

● 9. A judgment for $6,300 in an action for personal injuries cannot be considered excessive, or the result of passion or prejudice, where before the injury plaintiff had always been well, and had supported herself and two children by washing and running a boarding house, making from $65 to $75 a month, while since the injury—a period of about two and a half years—she has been unable to earn anything, has been compelled to pay out a great deal of money for physician's services, and has suffered intense pains and agony at times as a result of her injuries, which are probably permanent. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 23: 1032, 102 Pac. 92, — Okla. —.

Taking or detention of personal property.

10. The measure of damages where a stock of goods has been wrongfully taken by a creditor, and, on the order of the court, placed in the hands of a receiver, for loss of the goods or depreciation in value, is the difference between the market value thereof at the time of the taking, and their value at the time the receiver comes into possession. Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch, 23: 573, 99 Pac. 1089, — Okla. —. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Injury to real property.

Sufficiency of evidence to show amount of damages for injury to crop of growing corn, see Evidence, 38.

11. The measure of damages for the destruction of a permanent or perennial crop, such as alfalfa, is the difference between the value of the land before and after the destruction of the crop. Thompson v. Chicago. B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 310, 121 N. W. 447, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

Infringement of trademark.

12. In determining the amount of profits for which an infringer of a trademark is liable to account to its owner, sales for which the price cannot be collected should not be considered. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

13. One infringing a trademark in the production and sale of a portion of his product cannot, in accounting with the owner of the trademark, charge against the profits thereon any portion of the general expenses of the business not shown to have been incurred by dealing in the protected product. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

14. A jobber who has acquired a trademark on the goods dealt in by him cannot, in case his manufacturer infringes his trademark, claim from him the manufacturer's profit, but only that which would have come to him as jobber, and which was protected by his trademark. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

15. The absence of evidence that the owner of a trademark has sustained damage because of another's use of it does not make it inequitable to hold the latter liable to him for profits made by its use. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

16. The sum fixed by the parties to be paid annually for the use of a trademark and business name is evidence of the damages to be allowed for their wrongful use after the expiration of the contract right. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

17. That the owner of a trademark aided his licensee in acquiring the reputation of being the manufacturer of the product sold under it does not make it inequitable to require the licensee to account for the profits which he made by continued use of the trademark after the license had been withdrawn. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

18. Failure of infringers of a trademark to keep accurate accounts of the amounts of their expenses and profits after notice to stop the infringement may be taken as evidence against them, in determining the profits for which they are accountable to the owner of the trademark. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

19 In ascertaining the profits of a business for which the infringer of a trademark is liable to account, the master may treat a cost sheet prepared by one of the original firm of the infringers, who was fully acquainted with the business, as evidence of the cost, in the absence of explicit evidence to the contrary. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

Mental anguish.

Conflict of laws as to damages for mental anguish through delay in delivery of telegram, see Conflict of Laws, 8, 9.

When damages for mental suffering are so excessive as to justify setting aside verdict, see Appeal and Error, 34.

20. The influence upon plaintiff's mind of the grief experienced by his wife upon reading a libelous article regarding him is not an element of damage recoverable in an action for the libel. Dennison v. Daily News Pub. Co. 23: 362, 118 N. W. 568, 82 Neb. 675. (Annotated)

Mitigation.

21. The return of property and its acceptance by a debtor after conversion by his creditor, prior to the beginning of an action for the wrongful taking, must be considered in mitigation of any damages recoverable. Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch, 23: 573, 99 Pac. 1089, — Okla. —.

22. The absence of actual malice in the publication of a libelous article on a matter of public concern will be considered in mitigation of damages. Lever v. Daily States Pub. Co. 23: 726, 49 So. 206, 123 La. 594.

DEATH.

Abatement of cause of action by, see Abatement and Revival.

Presumptions and burden of proof in action for, see Evidence, 6.

Evidence in action for damages for wrongful death, see Evidence, 32.

1. In an action for wrongful death under a statute authorizing the action when the intestate could have maintained an action for the same act if death had not ensued, all defenses are available to defendant which would have been available had the action been brought by the person injured. Suell v. Derricott, 23: 996, 49 So. 895, — Ala. —.

2. That the killing was in self-defense or to effect an arrest for felony is a good defense in an action for wrongful death under a statute giving the personal representative a cause of action when the intestate could have maintained an action for the same act had death not ensued. Suell v. Derricott, 23: 996, 49 So. 895, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Rights of creditors of one whose support is made a lien upon property devised, see Creditor's Bill.

Rights of husband's creditors in his earnings, see Husband and Wife, 4.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Deduction of debts from credits in listing property for taxation, see Taxes, 1.

Conversion by creditor, see Trover, 1, 2.

DECLARATION OR COMPLAINT.

See Pleading, 5-12.

DEDICATION.

Admissibility of evidence to show intent of person dedicating land to public use, see Evidence, 25.

Right of one dedicating to testify that he had no intent to dedicate, see Witnesses, 1.

1. Mere failure to list shore property for taxation does not vest title thereto in the public. Poole v. Lake Forest, 23: 809, 87 N. E. 320, 238 Ill. 305.

2. The strip of land between the bluff and the water's edge is not dedicated to the public by leaving it blank when platting into lots, streets, and parks, the land on top of the bluff, and stating in the plat that the lake-front lots extend only to the top of the bluff. Poole v. Lake Forest, 23: 809, 87 N. E. 320, 238 Ill. 305. (Annotated)

3. The filing of a map of a subdivision of a tract of land, with spaces marked thereon for streets, followed by the sale of lots with respect thereto, is an offer to dedicate the streets to public use, which cannot be withdrawn after they have been accepted by ordinance, and it is immaterial that no names are attached to the spaces shown on the plat, or that they are cut off at one end by dotted lines. Los Angeles v. McCollum, 23: 378, 103 Pac. 914, — Cal. —.

4. An ordinance adopting all streets and parks theretofore offered to the public for dedication is sufficient to render spaces marked as streets on a recorded plat public highways. Los Angeles v. McCollum, 23: 378, 103 Pac. 914, — Cal. —.

DEED OF TRUST.

See Mortgage.

DEEDS.

Abatement, by death of grantor, of right to rescind deed, see Abatement and Revival.

Conflict of laws as to infant's contract to deed property, see Conflict of Laws, 3, 4.

Conditions or covenants in, see Covenants and Conditions.

Delivery of, in escrow, see Escrow.

Admissibility in evidence of certified copies of, see Evidence, 18.

Sufficiency of evidence to show delivery of deed, see Evidence, 37.

Parol evidence of condition of delivery of, see Evidence, 20.

Suit by executor to set aside, see Executors and Administrators, 2.

Effect of deed of husband directly to his wife and attempt by her to reconvey directly to him, see Husband and Wife, 3.

By infant, see Infants, 1-7.

Right of owner to maintain trespass for wrongful entry and recover mesne profits after disseisor has abandoned premises, see Trespass, 3.

1. A plaintiff in ejectment cannot recover merely on the strength of a deed to himself, without showing that his grantor had a prima facie right to recover; and a deed, unaccompanied by evidence of the grantor's seisin, is not prima facie evidence of the grantor's title, as title must be traced back either to the ultimate source, or to a grantor in possession at or near the time of grant. Florida Finance Co. v. Sheffield, 23: 1102, 48 So. 42, — Fla. —.

2. A plaintiff in ejectment who wholly fails to prove title or prior possession in himself cannot recover as against one also without title. Florida Finance Co. v. Sheffield, 23: 1102, 48 So. 42, — Fla. —.

3. A party who has recovered possession of land held adversely is entitled to a matured crop of corn standing unsevered on such land at the time of the final judgment of ouster and delivery of possession of the premises to him under a writ of restitution. Hartshorne v. Ingels, 23: 531, 101 Pac. 1045, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

1. The filing by a vendor who has taken notes for the purchase price, reserving title, of a plea of intervention in a suit for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property of the debtor, which asks for the foreclosure of the notes as if they were chattel mortgages, and a sale of the property, but which also sets up all the facts as to the sale and the reservation of title and prays for general relief, does not constitute such an election to treat the notes as chattel mortgages as will preclude him from filing an amended plea asserting his title to the property and right to its possession. Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & S. Co. 23: 1074, 94 Pac. 533, 20 Okla. 427.

2. A vendor who is to retain title until the purchase price is fully paid and a bill of sale given, and who, upon nonpayment of an instalment when due, brings suit against the vendee for the balance due, arresting and holding the body of the debtor until he releases himself by taking the statutory oath, is precluded from subsequently maintaining replevin for the property, although he failed to enter the writ in the first suit. Frisch v. Wells, 23: 144, 86 N. E. 775, 200 Mass. 429. (Annotated)

ELECTIONS.

Statute forbidding nomination, indorsement, or criticism of certain candidates by any political party, see Constitutional Law, 22.

Sufficiency of complaint to contest an election, see Pleading, 11.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Partial invalidity of statute attempting to remove certain offices from domain of party politics, see Statutes, 3, 4.

A statute limiting the printed names of candidates for chief justice or justice of the supreme court on a primary election ballot to nominees by petitions containing not less than 5,000 names each, not more than 500 of which shall be from one county, violates a constitutional provision declaring that all elections shall be free, and that there shall be no hindrance or impediment to the right of a qualified voter to exercise the elective franchise, since thereby all electors except 500 in each county are deprived of the constitutional right to take part in the nomination of a political candidate. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

ELECTRIC RAILROAD.

As to interurban railways, see Interurban Railways.

ELEVATED RAILROADS.

Grant by abutting owner of license to maintain in street, see License, 1.

ELIGIBILITY.

Of officers, see Officers, 1, 2.

EMBEZZLEMENT.

Estoppel of one to deny authority to collect money which he is accused of embezzling, see Estoppel, 3.

A police officer assigned to the position of jailer cannot be convicted under a statute providing that if an officer shall convert to his own use money belonging to the county that may come into his custody by virtue of his office, he shall be punished, where he appropriates to his own use money collected from prisoners as fines, if the statute imposes the duty of collecting such fines upon another officer. Hartnett v. State, 23: 761, 119 S. W. 855, — Tex. Crim. App. —.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

The operation of trains and engines on tracks lawfully constructed for the purpose of switching and making up trains near a church, the effect of which is to interrupt religious services therein and annoy the speakers, singers, and congregation by the noise, is not a damaging of the property within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring compensation to be made in case property is damaged for public use. Twenty-Second Corp., etc. v. Oregon S. L. R. Co. 23: 860, 103 Pac. 243, — Utah, —.

EQUAL PROTECTION AND PRIVILEGES.

See Constitutional Law, 5-9.

EQUITY.

As to injunction, see Injunction.

Effect of remedy at law to bar right to injunction, see Injunction, 3.

As to laches, see Limitation of Actions, 1-7.

Equitable remedies against nuisance, see Nuisance, 5-7.

As to reformation of instruments, see Reformation of Instruments.

1. All relief respecting a purely equitable title must be sought in a court of equity, as such a title cannot be maintained in a court of law. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — W. Va. —.

2. If a charge is of a criminal nature, or an offense against the public, and does not touch the enjoyment of property or health, it is not within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. State v. Ehrlick, 23: 691, 64 S. E. 935, — W. Va. —.

3. Criminal remedies and procedure must be deemed adequate to the maintenance of the public right, in respect to moral and political principles, except in so far as the legislature may have provided others, since that body, having plenary power over such matters, has seen fit to rely upon existing remedies, and courts of equity are powerless to ordain jurisdiction for themselves. State v. Ehrlick, 23: 691, 24 S. E. 935, — W. Va. —.

4. Courts of equity have concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in suits to recover back money lost in gaming contracts, regardless of the question of necessity for discovery, or adequate remedy at law. Berna v. Shaw, 23: 522, 64 S. E. 930, — W. Va. —.

Retaining jurisdiction.
5. An action to enjoin majority stockholders of a corporation from proceeding to wind it up will not be dismissed, even though such relief cannot be granted, if because of disputes as to indebtedness and other matters arising in the action, which are in part incident to the proper winding up and adjustment of the corporate affairs, it is proper for the court under its statutory authority to take charge of the winding up proceedings. White v. Kincaid, 23: 1177, 63 S. E. 109, 149 N. C. 415.

Equity principles.

6. Courts of equity recognize legal titles, and such titles prevail therein over equitable ones. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — W. Va. —.

7. Courts of equity respect title to land acquired by adverse possession. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — W. Va. —.

ERROR.

See Appeal and Error.

ESCROW.

If a deed, absolute and complete on its face, is delivered to the grantee as an escrow, to take effect in any event, the condition is void, the deed is absolute, and title passes to the grantee on delivery thereof. Dorr v. Midelburg, 23: 987, 65 S. E. 97, — W. Va. —.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ESTOPPEL.

To set up original obligee's breach of condition as against assignee of note not protected by law merchant, see Bills and Notes, 3.

Of insurer, see Insurance, 14, 15.

Necessity of pleading facts essential to show, see Pleading, 13.

To maintain trespass, see Trespass, 2.

Of municipality.

1. The approval of the work by the city engineer under whose supervision a contract for public improvement is to be performed will, in the absence of fraud or concealment which prevents a discovery of imperfections, estop the municipality from contesting the contractor's right to the contract price because of failure to perform the work according to the specifications, so far as defects are concerned which were discoverable by reasonable attention to the duties of inspection. City Street Improv. Co. v. Marysville, 23: 317, 101 Pac. 308, — Cal. —.

(Annotated)

By contracts or agreements generally.

2. A release by an abutting property owner who also owns the fee of the street, on behalf of himself and his successors in title, of a corporation operating an elevated railroad therein from any claim for compensation arising from the maintenance and operation of the railroad, estops such successors from claiming compensation for the operation of the road, either in eminent domain proceedings or in an equity suit to enjoin such operation until compensation is paid. Smyth v. Brooklyn U. Elev. R. Co. 23: 433, 85 N. E. 1100, 193 N. Y. 335.

(Annotated)

By conduct or admissions.

3. That one in collecting fines assumes to do so by color of his office does not estop him from denying his authority to do so, in defense of a prosecution against him under a statute providing for punishment of an officer who appropriates to his own use money belonging to the county that has come into his possession by virtue of his office. Hartnett v. State, 23: 761, 119 S. W. 855, — Tex. Crim. App. —.

(Annotated)

4. The filing by the father, who is surety on his son's note, of a claim against the latter's bankrupt estate for a sum due him, and the collection of a pro rata thereon, and its deposit by his attorney in the bank holding the son's note, to be applied thereon under the mistaken belief that the father was still liable on the note as surety, will not estop him from setting up his release by extension of time to the son on the paper. Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank, 23: 141, 113 S. W. 501, — Ky. —.

By silence or acquiescence.

5. One who accepts and retains, for a long period without objection, an account rendered, together with the balance shown to be due thereon, irrevocably assents to the account so that he cannot subsequently take steps to falsify it. Ripley v. Sage Land &

Improv. Co. 23: 727, 119 N. W. 108, 138 Wis. 304.

6. One who fails to object to the formation of a drainage district, or the inclusion of his lands therein, or to the proceedings under which the indebtedness of the district for preliminary expenses is determined, is estopped in a proceeding to enforce an assessment against his property for a share of such expenses, to object to anything but the constitutionality of the law under which the proceedings were had. Northern P. R. Co. v. Pierce County, 23: 286, 97 Pac. 1099, 51 Wash. 12.

7. Estoppel of a wife to contest the validity of a divorce decree absolutely void for lack of jurisdiction, which will prevent persons claiming under her from securing her distributive share of her husband's estate, is not shown by evidence that she left her husband, for cause, and did not seek to have the decree set aside during the sixteen years that elapsed before her death, and testimony of a single person that she once wrote a letter, which was not produced, claiming to have been divorced and still to own property as a feme sole, where it was not shown that she ever signed any deed as a single woman and it appears that she never married again, that she notified persons buying land of the husband that she was still his wife, and that until his death she claimed that she was his wife and insisted that the divorce was a fraud. Sammons v. Pike, 23: 1254, 120 N. W. 540, — Minn. —

8. Owners of land over a subterranean basin, who have been accustomed to use the water therefrom, will not be granted an injunction to restrain the taking of water from the basin by a public-service corporation to supply people beyond its limits, through wells which it sinks to maintain the amount of its original appropriation during periods of drought, where, with full knowledge of the facts, they stand by until large amounts of money have been expended upon the wells, and they have been in operation for at least two years. Barton v. Riverside Water Co. 23: 331, 101 Pac. 790, — Cal. —

By inconsistency in acts or claims.

9. Declarations as to absence of a partnership do not estop the one claiming its existence from asserting it against the other alleged partner if the latter did not know of, or act to his prejudice upon, them. Fryer v. Harken, 23: 477, 121 N. W. 526, — Iowa, —

Receiving benefits.

10. One who gives a new note in renewal of old ones, one of which he claims to be a forgery, will, after he has retained possession of the old note and received the benefit of the renewal for several months, until the bank has become insolvent, be estopped from setting up the forgery in partial defense of a suit on the renewal note. First State Bank v. Williams, 23: 1234, 121 N. W. 702, — Iowa, — (Annotated)
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

EVIDENCE.

Reversible error in admission or exclusion of, see Appeal and Error, 24, 25.

Judicial notice.

1. A court will take judicial notice, in a prosecution for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, of the fact that an appeal has been taken from its former judgment convicting accused of the same offense. Dupree v. State, 23: 596, 120 S. W. 871, — Tex. Crim. App. —

2. The court will take judicial notice that Pullman car porters have authority from the railroad company to assist passengers in entering and leaving the trains. Gannon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 23: 1061, 117 N. W. 966, — Iowa, —

3. The finding of a jury in respect to matters as to which men of ordinary knowledge and observation have some practical knowledge cannot be attacked on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain it because of the lack of expert testimony on the subject, since on such matters jurors are capable of forming their own opinions, though they might be assisted by the opinions of competent experts. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 23: 962, 166 Fed. 663, — C. C. A. —

4. Jurors are not restricted to a consideration of facts directly proved, nor are they expected to lay aside matters of common knowledge, or their own observation and experience of the affairs of life, but, on the contrary, may give effect to such inferences as common knowledge of their personal observation and experience may reasonably draw from the facts directly proved. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 23: 962, 166 Fed. 663, — C. C. A. —

Presumption and burden of proof.

Prima facie evidence of title of grantor of plaintiff in ejectment, see Ejectment, 1.

Presumption of abandonment of cause of action, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

5. The burden of proof to establish the affirmative of an issue involved in an action rests upon the party alleging the facts constituting that issue, and remains there until the end. Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 278, 118 N. W. 655, 82 Neb. 726.

6. In an action for wrongful death by intentionally killing plaintiff's intestate, where self-defense is pleaded, plaintiff must first establish his case by proper and sufficient proof, and defendant then has the burden of establishing his justification or excuse. Suelli v. Derricott, 23: 996, 49 So. 895, — Ala. —

7. A borrower making payments of principal to an agent has the burden of showing that he has either express or apparent authority to receive such payments for the lender. Campbell v. Gowans, 23: 414, 100 Pac. 397, — Utah, —

8. No presumption of intention to preclude the husband's estate by curtesy arises from the mere fact of a direct conveyance by him to his wife. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — W. Va. —.

9. Malice on the part of a publisher of statements selected from other journals, that are injurious to the reputation or character of the parties spoken of, is conclusively inferred if the communications are false. Lever v. Daily States Pub. Co. 23: 726, 49 So. 206, 123 La. 594.

10. In a suit against a street railway company for the death of a pedestrian, struck by a car which left the track because of the splitting of a switch, proof of the accident is sufficient to charge the company with negligence, in the absence of proof to the contrary, and to place upon it the burden of showing that the injuries were not received through any fault on its part. Najarian v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 23: 751, 73 Atl. 527, — N. J. —. (Annotated)

11. The sudden sinking of a sidewalk under the weight of a pedestrian, to his injury, is, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, evidence of negligence on the part of a contractor who, in the execution of public work, took up and relaid the walk. Rockwell v. McGovern, 23: 1022, 88 N. E. 436, 202 Mass. 6. (Annotated)

12. The mere running away of a team does not imply negligence on the part of the owner. Coller v. Knox, 23: 171, 71 Atl. 539, 222 Pa. 362. (Annotated)

13. The burden of proof to establish contributory negligence is upon the defendant. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

14. The presumption of the receipt of a letter properly addressed, stamped, and placed in the mail, may be overcome by testimony of the addressee that he never received it. Campbell v. Gowans, 23: 414, 100 Pac. 397, — Utah, —.

15. The burden of showing abandonment of water which has been brought on land for the purpose of irrigation, which rests upon one claiming a right thereto resting upon the fact of abandonment, is not shifted by the fact that the surplus was allowed to run into a natural water course. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

16. The fact that water which had been brought onto property for purposes of irrigation had been devoted to other uses for a period of eleven years, and had been made the subject of conveyance, rebuts a presumption of abandonment. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

Best and secondary.

17. The general agent of an insurance company cannot, in a suit upon the policy, state whether or not the report of an agent who issued the policy contained anything as to the idleness of the plant on which it was issued, since the report is the best evidence. Home Ins. Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & E. Co. 23: 1201, 111 S. W. 994, 86 Ark. 538.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

18. Certified copies of deeds are not admissible in evidence until the party offering them makes it appear that the originals are not within his custody or control. Florida Finance Co. v. Sheffield, 23: 1102, 48 So. 42, — Fla. —.

Parol.

19. A materialman may show a parol agreement between a conditional vendor and his vendee from which authority to purchase material to improve the property may directly appear or be inferred, and is not bound by the terms of the written agreement between them. Belnap v. Condon, 23: 601, 97 Pac. 111, 34 Utah, 213.

20. A deed which is absolute and complete on its face, and which has been delivered to the grantee, cannot be defeated by parol evidence of a condition of delivery. Dorr v. Middelburg, 23: 987, 65 S. E. 97, — W. Va. —.

Opinions and conclusions.

21. In a civil action to recover damages for the publication of a libelous article, the editor of defendant's paper, in which the alleged libel was published, should not be required, over objection, to testify as to whom he considered and supposed the article referred. Dennison v. Daily News Pub. Co. 23: 362, 118 N. W. 568, 82 Neb. 675.

Hearsay; declarations, res gestæ.

22. Testimony of an attorney for a lessee that a contract with a third person was mentioned and referred to at the time of taking the lease cannot be excluded from evidence in a suit to enforce the provisions of the lease with respect to it, as a confidential communication, since the fact must necessarily have been known to both parties at the time. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368.

23. In the absence of ambiguity in a will, parol evidence of declarations of testator as to his intention is not admissible. Scott v. Scott, 23: 716, 114 N. W. 881, 137 Iowa, 239.

24. Testimony by plaintiff in an action specifically to enforce an alleged contract with a decedent for the sale of land, that decedent promised to consummate the sale in accordance with the alleged contract, is inadmissible under a statute depriving a party to an action against heirs or representatives of a deceased party of the right to testify as to conversations or transactions had with deceased. Larson v. Newman, 23: 849, 121 N. W. 202, — N. D. —.

Relevancy and materiality.

25. Upon the question of the intent of one who has filed a plat of lots to be sold, and dedicated to public use spaces shown thereon as streets, evidence is not admissible of instructions given by him to his surveyor. Los Angeles v. McCollum, 23: 378, 103 Pac. 914, — Cal. —.

26. In a civil action to recover damages for the publication of a libelous article, in a state where punitive damages are not recoverable, neither evidence of defendant's refusal to publish a retraction, nor evidence that others who had also published the alleged libel had published a retraction, is admissible for the purpose of enhancing the plaintiff's recovery. Dennison v. Daily News Pub. Co. 23 : 362, 118 N. W. 568, 82 Neb. 675.

27. In an action to hold a railroad company liable for loss of property through fire set out by its locomotive, evidence is admissible that, at times other than that at which the loss occurred, sparks and cinders had escaped from defendant's locomotives and set fire to logs and grass along the right of way. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hicklin, 23 : 870, 115 S. W. 752, — Ky. —.

28. In an action for damages caused by frightening horses on a public bridge by the blast of a nearby municipal waterworks whistle, evidence that tractable and gentle horses had often been frightened previously by blasts of the same whistle under similar circumstances, was competent as tending to show that the blasts were of a character likely to frighten horses under such circumstances, that their fright and flight were natural and probable consequences of the blowing of the blast, and that these facts were so notorious that they might be considered by the jury to constitute notice to the city of the dangerous character and probable effect of the blowing thereof. Winona v. Botzet, 23 : 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

29. In an action for injury to a pedestrian by the sinking of a sidewalk, against a contractor for public work who had, in the execution of his contract, taken it up and relaid it, evidence is admissible of a previous cave-in, as tending to show the nature of the soil and the degree of care required of defendant in refilling the excavation made by him. Rockwell v. McGovern, 23 : 1022, 88 N. E. 436, 202 Mass. 6.

30. In an action for damages for failure promptly to deliver a telegram, the addressee may show that he had a telephone in his house and that there was also one in the office of the telegraph company. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill, 23 : 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —.

31. In a civil action to recover damages for the publication of a libelous article, evidence showing the relations existing between the plaintiff and the author of the alleged libel is admissible for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff was the person referred to, when his name does not appear in the article, and defendant does not admit that he is the one referred to. Dennison v. Daily News Pub. Co. 23 : 362, 118 N. W. 568, 82 Neb. 675.

32. Upon trial of an action for damages for wrongful death, where the defense is that the killing was in making an arrest for burglary, evidence is admissible that the building into which deceased was attempting to break contained a safe with money in it. Suell v. Derricott, 23 : 996, 49 So. 895, — Ala. —.

33. In an action for damages caused by frightening horses on a public bridge by the blast of a municipal waterworks whistle, a petition of a trade and labor assembly that the whistle be blown at 5 P. M. each day, and the action of the city council in granting such petition, are not rendered inadmissible in evidence by reason of the fact that the water commissioner, who had directed the blowing of the whistle in accordance with the ordinance, had gone out of office before the accident, the power to regulate thereafter being vested in a board of municipal works, where such board never revoked the order, since in such case the acts of the council are material upon the question as to whether or not the city exercised ordinary care in the use of the whistle. Winona v. Botzet, 23 : 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

Weight and sufficiency.

Demurrer to evidence, see Trial, 16, 17.

*34. Evidence that on the day following that on which a railway passenger was injured, while in the railway company's hospital, away from friends and while still suffering from the effects of the injuries, the extent of which she did not know and was apparently not in a position to ascertain, she was visited by a claim agent and physician of the railway company, who, desiring to effect a settlement and to induce plaintiff to sign a release for a grossly inadequate sum, represented that her injuries were slight and temporary, when in fact they were serious and dangerous, as the physician knew, or should have known in the exercise of proper care, which representations, being believed, induced the signing of the release, which would not have been done had the true condition been known to plaintiff,—sufficiently sustained a finding that the release was procured by fraud. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 23 : 1032, 102 Pac. 92, — Okla. —.

35. One seeking an accounting of profits for infringement of his trademark is not barred from claiming that he had not been guilty of fraud which would prevent his recovery by isolated facts brought out on the hearing before the master, avowedly for another purpose, and with no view to raising that issue. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23 : 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

36. Insolvency, or inability of a vendor of realty to pay a mortgage indebtedness or to respond in damages for breach of a covenant against encumbrances, sufficient to warrant recovery against a recorder of deeds for his negligent failure to record such mortgage, as required by law, is not shown where the only evidence is the testimony of a single witness, several years after the transaction in question, that he has been unable to make collections against the covenantor, that she has left the county and has no property there, and that, in his opinion, she is insolvent at the time of trial, as such evidence does not tend to show insolvency at the time of the transaction, but several years afterward. Rising v. Dickinson, 23 : 127, 121 N. W. 616, — N. D. —.

37. Evidence that the owner of a government homestead signed, acknowledged, and registered a deed thereof to his brother is insufficient to show delivery thereof, where there is also evidence that he made the deed for the purpose of apparently divesting himself of title in order to pre-empt a tract of government land, and that he kept the deed in his own hands and did not intend to deliver it, and that he retained possession of the homestead. McGuire v. Clark, 23: 873, 122 N. W. 675, — Neb. —.

38. Evidence as to the value of a matured crop of corn alone is not sufficient upon which to base a verdict for the destruction of a growing crop of corn, since the measure is its value as a growing crop at the time and place of destruction. Thompson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 310, 121 N. W. 447, — Neb. —.

EXECUTION.

Effect of expiration of limitation period for enforcement of judgment on right to issue execution thereon, see Limitation of Actions, 8.

Amount of execution which surety paying judgment against principal may issue, see Subrogation, 1.

Execution cannot be issued in favor of an attorney to whom a cause of action for personal tort was assigned before judgment, to secure his fees for services, where, before the judgment was entered, the client settled the suit and released defendant from further liability. Tyler v. Superior Court, 23: 1045, 73 Atl. 467, — R. I. —.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Situs for purpose of taxation of stocks in foreign corporation owned by foreign testator in possession of resident executor, see Taxes, 3.

1. In case a testator sets apart a certain sum for the erection of a suitable monument to his memory, the executors may spend all or any part of the sum for a monument in their discretion. Fancher v. Fancher, 23: 944, 103 Pac. 206 — Cal. —.

2. An executor may prosecute a suit to set aside, for failure of consideration, a deed conveying land he is authorized by the will to sell. White v. Bailey, 23: 232, 64 S. E. 1019, — W. Va. —.

EXEMPTIONS.

Applicability of general tax exemptions to inheritance or succession taxes, see Taxes, 8, 9.

EXPLOSION.

Proximate cause of, see Proximate Cause, 3.

EXPRESS COMPANIES.

As agent of owner of goods in delivering them to carrier, see Carriers, 12.

EXTENDED INSURANCE.

See Insurance, 4.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

FAIRS.

Liability for injury resulting from street fairs, see Highways, 6, 7.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Liability of carrier for, see Carriers, 2.
Assignment of right of action for, see Contracts, 9.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

See Master and Servant, 15-18.

FELONY.

Civil liability for killing in effecting arrest for, see Death, 2.

FINE.

Paying to wife fine imposed upon husband for abandoning her. see Public Moneys.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

FIRES.

Regulating height of buildings as protection against fire, see Buildings, 1.

Set by railroad locomotives, see Railroads.

Destruction by, of property in warehouse, see Warehouseman.

A railroad company which, in the ordinary course of its business, stops a train between a hydrant and a burning building, without notice of any intention on the part of anyone to run a hose from the hydrant to the fire, owes no duty to the owner of the burning building to move the train before the conductor has received his proper clearance card, for which he stopped, and cannot therefore be held liable for injury to the building because of its failure so to do. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scruggs, 23: 184, 49 So. 399, — Ala. —.

FIXTURES.

Mechanics' lien for fixtures, see Mechanics' Liens, 3.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See Corporations, 3, 4.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

See Judgment, 2-4.

FORFEITURE.

Necessity of notice before forfeiture of insurance policy, see Conflict of Laws, 2.

Necessity of declaration of, to terminate conditional estate, see Covenants and Conditions, 2.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance, 12.

FORGERY.

Effect of, on note given in renewal of forged instrument, see Estoppel, 10.

FORMER JEOPARDY.

See Criminal Law, 3, 4.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

- Of shipper in failing to disclose true nature of contents of package, see Carriers, 13.
- Sufficiency of evidence to establish, see Evidence, 34, 35.
- In obtaining release from liability for injury, see Release, 2.
- False representations by owner of trademark as defense to liability for infringement, see Trademark, 4.
- Of vendor in pointing out boundaries of tract, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

- Limitation of time for suit to set aside, see Limitation of Actions, 11.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT.

- Denial of, see Constitutional Law, 15.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND PRESS.

- See Constitutional Law, 21-23.

FREIGHT CARRIERS.

- See Carriers.

FRIGHT.

- Of horse, see Animals.
- Proximate cause of injuries resulting from, see Proximate Cause, 5.

Damages may be recovered for actual physical injuries resulting from fright and nervous shock caused by wrongful blasting, although there is no direct physical impact against the body of the person injured. Green v. Shoemaker, 23 : 667, 73 Atl. 688, — Md. —.

GAMING.

- Jurisdiction of equity in suits to recover money lost by, see Equity, 4.
- Joint liability of persons engaged in business of gambling, see Joint Creditors and Debtors.
- Abatement of gaming house as nuisance, see Nuisance, 7.
- Partnership in business of, see Partnership, 1.
- Cross bill in suit to recover money lost by, see Pleading, 14.

GARNISHMENT.

1. One indebted to a nonresident cannot place money in a bank to his credit in defiance of his wishes, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction in attachment proceedings upon a court where the bank is located. Saxony Mills v. Wagner & Co. 23 : 834, 47 So. 899, — Miss. —.

2. A debt due from one corporation to another, without any limitation with respect to payment, may be garnished in the hands of such corporation in any state where jurisdiction of the debtor can be secured, although neither debtor nor creditor is located therein. Wiener v. American Ins. Co. 23 : 593, 73 Atl. 443, 224 Pa. 292. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

GAS.

- Statute forbidding injurious pumping of water and gas from common reservoir of mineral waters, see Constitutional Law, 7; Parties, 2; State; Statutes, 2; Waters, 10, 11.
- Negligence in maintaining defective gas main as proximate cause of injury, see Proximate Cause, 3.

GOVERNMENT.

- Guaranty of republican form of, see Constitutional Law, 26.

GOVERNMENTAL CONTROL.

- Of carriers, see Carriers, 18-21.

GUARANTY.

- Of republican form of government, see Constitutional Law, 26.

GUARANTY INSURANCE.

- See Insurance, 21, 22.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Irregularities in proceedings before a justice of the peace committing a recusant witness cannot be reviewed upon habeas corpus, as it is only when the proceedings are void that such writ can be invoked. Ex parte Button, 23 : 1173, 120 N. W. 203, 83 Neb. 636.

HEALTH.

- Regulation of business of undertakers, see Constitutional Law, 4, 13, 19.
- Forbidding use of polluted water supply for drinking purposes, see Constitutional Law, 10; Parties, 4-6.
- Awarding costs against state board of health upon dismissal of bill against one improperly made party, see Costs.
- Review by courts of orders of board of health, see Courts, 2.
- Injunction to restrain board of health from sending person to pest house, see Injunction, 2, 3.

That no method is provided for enforcing an order of a state board of health will not prevent its enforcement by the court, if its order might be of such a character that enforcement of it would result in the enforcement of that of the state board. State Bd. of Health v. St. Johnsbury, 23 : 766, 73 Atl. 581, — Vt. —.

HEARSAY.

- See Evidence, 22-24.

HIGHWAYS.

- Dedication of land for, see Dedication, 3, 4; Evidence, 25.
- Negligence in maintaining leaky gas main in, as proximate cause of injury, see Proximate Cause, 3.

What allowed in street generally.

- Validity of ordinance forbidding use of unlicensed vehicles on street as against nonresidents, see License, 3.

1. The owner of lots abutting on opposite sides of the street may, under a license or permit from the city council, revocable at its pleasure, construct an overhead bridge for the purpose of transporting freight over the street and relieving the street of a serious obstruction to or interference with traffic along the street; the bridge being so constructed that its supports will not be in the street and so that it will not interfere with the light and air of adjoining abutting owners. Kellogg v. Cincinnati Traction Co. 23: 158, 88 N. E. 882, 80 Ohio St. 331. (Annotated)

Use and obstruction by railroads.

Estoppel to claim compensation for operation of railroad in street, see Estoppel, 2.

Grant by abutting owner of license to maintain railroad in street, see License, 1.

2. A railroad company cannot escape liability under a statute providing that it shall not in any case, obstruct, use, or occupy a highway with cars or engines for more than five minutes at one time, by the fact that the cars could not be moved because the valves of the air brakes were maliciously opened by strangers, without defendant's knowledge. Com. v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 23: 350, 88 N. E. 764, 202 Mass. 394. (Annotated)

Liability for injuries on.

Presumption of negligence in construction of sidewalk from sudden sinking thereof, see Evidence, 11.

Evidence of other cave-ins in action for injury to pedestrian by sinking of sidewalk, see Evidence, 29.

Duty of municipality to keep street free from dangers not within limits thereof, see Municipal Corporations, 9, 14.

Fright of horse on highway by discharge of steam, see Negligence, 3, 8.

Negligence of owner of runaway team, see Negligence, 7.

Contributory negligence of person injured on highway, see Trial, 10.

3. A municipal corporation is liable for the wrongful or negligent acts of its agents in performing the duties of making, improving, repairing, keeping in repair and in safe condition its streets and sidewalks, since in performing such duties the city is acting in its private corporate, rather than in its public or governmental, capacity. Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 23: 282, 121 N. W. 994, — Neb. —.

4. A municipal corporation does not fulfil its duty in making its highways safe for the use of horse-drawn vehicles if it is not safe for travel including its use of bicyclists. Molway v. Chicago, 23: 543, 88 N. E. 485, 239 Ill. 486. (Annotated)

5. Ordinary travel includes the use of a street by one riding a bicycle. Molway v. Chicago, 23: 543, 88 N. E. 485, 239 Ill. 486.

6. A municipal corporation which, without authority, permits a fair to be held in one of its streets, with the attendant structures and shows, is liable for injury to a patron who, in attempting to leave a show, passes over an unsafe platform erected in the street to afford access to such show, and is jostled off by the crowd, to his injury. Van Cleef v. Chicago, 23: 636, 88 N. E. 815, 240 Ill. 318. (Annotated)

7. One attempting to use a platform in a street for entrance to a show connected with a street fair is required to use such degree of care and caution for his safety as reasonably prudent persons would use under all the circumstances of the case. Van Cleef v. Chicago, 23: 636, 88 N. E. 815, 240 Ill. 318.

8. Where a sidewalk is rendered temporarily dangerous by the positive, negligent act of a city of the first class, and a person in passing over it, immediately or within less than five days thereafter, and in the absence of contributory negligence, receives a personal injury, a statutory provision requiring five days' notice of the dangerous condition of the walk to be given the city before the accident is inapplicable; and the city is liable for damages sustained by the person injured. Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 23: 282, 121 N. W. 994, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

HOMICIDE.

Sufficiency of indictment for, see Indictment, etc., 3.

Instructions in homicide case, see Trial, 22.

1. One who accompanies another to aid and assist him in assaulting a third cannot escape liability for manslaughter if his companion kills the victim by the use of a deadly weapon, on the theory that he did not know of the intended use of it or consent thereto. State v. Darling, 23: 272, 115 S. W. 1002, 216 Mo. 450. (Annotated)

2. Homicide committed in the perpetration of a robbery is murder in the first degree; in such a case the turpitude of the act supplies the element of deliberate and premeditated malice. Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

HORSES.

See Animals.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

As to courtesy, see Courtesy.

Statute permitting court to require husband, upon conviction of abandonment, to pay weekly sum for wife's support in lieu of fine, or imprisonment, see Criminal Law, 5; Jury, 1.

Statute directing payment to wife of fine imposed upon husband for abandoning her, see Public Moneys. Damages for personal injuries to wife, see Damages, 7, 8.

As to divorce, see Divorce and Separation.

Contracts with, or conveyances to, each other.

Consideration for contract by husband to convey property to wife, see Contracts, 1.

Agreement to convey property to wife in consideration of discontinuance of divorce proceedings, see Damages, 3.

Effect of conveyance by husband to wife to cut off curtesy, see Evidence, 8.

1. Under statutory authority to a married woman to make any contract as though she were single, a husband and wife have power to enter into a contract by which he undertakes to transfer real estate to her in case he resumes illicit relations with a paramour. Darcey v. Darcey, 23: 886, 71 Atl. 595, — R. I. —.

2. The court cannot say that a conveyance of one half of a man's real estate to his wife as compensation for past unfaithfulness to his marriage vows is excessive damages for the wrong done her, when the parties have agreed that such compensation is just; nor that his agreement to convey the other half in case of future misconduct provides more than adequate compensation. Darcey v. Darcey, 23: 886, 71 Atl. 595, — R. I. —.

3. If a husband convey land directly to his wife, and she, in turn, attempt to reconvey it directly to him by executing a deed to him, and after her death he convey it to a third person, and then die, the equitable title is in the heirs of the wife by descent, and the legal title in such third person or his successors in title. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — W. Va. —.

Rights of husband's creditors.

4. Land purchased with money produced by a man's industry and good management of a farm belonging to his wife is subject to his debts, although the title to it is taken in her name. Patton v. Smith, 23: 1124, 114 S. W. 315, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

Actions.

5. A married woman whose property is destroyed and whose health is injured by blasting on adjoining property is the proper one to bring the action to recover compensation therefor. Green v. Shoemaker, 23: 667, 73 Atl. 688, — Md. —.

6. The intention of a music teacher to continue her vocation after marriage is sufficient to give her a right to maintain an action in her own name for personal injuries happening after that event, although, in the few weeks which have elapsed between the marriage and the accident, she has not in fact performed any service as such,—at least, where the husband consents to her maintaining her independent employment. Niemeyer v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 408, 121 N. W. 521, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

7. A mere statutory provision that, when the action is between a married woman and her husband, she may sue and be sued alone, does not give him a right to sue her for a personal tort inflicted upon him by her. Peters v. Peters, 23: 699, 103 Pac. 219, — Cal. —.

8. A husband cannot maintain an action against his wife for injuries inflicted upon him by her act in deliberately wounding him with a gun, either at common law or under statutes giving her the right to separate property, and permitting them to contract with each other. Peters v. Peters, 23: 699, 103 Pac. 219, — Cal. —.

(Annotated)

ICE.

On sidewalk, see Trial, 10.

IDENTITY.

Photographing and measuring accused person for purpose of, see Criminal Law, 1, 2.

Opinion evidence to establish, see Evidence, 21, 31.

IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

See Constitutional Law, 24, 25, 28.

IMPLIED DEVISE.

See Wills, 5, 6.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

See Negligence, 9.

INDEMNITY INSURANCE.

See Insurance, 21, 22.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Liability of master for injury to servant by negligence of, see Master and Servant, 12.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

1. An indictment or information for committing a statutory offense may describe the offense in the general language of the statute, but the description must be accompanied by a statement of the particulars essential to constitute the crime or offense charged, and must acquaint the accused with what he must meet upon the trial. Fletcher v. State, 23: 581, 101 Pac. 599, — Okla. Crim. App. —.

2. An indictment or information for a single sale of intoxicating liquors must allege the name of the person or persons to whom such sale was made, when such name or names are known, but if unknown, that fact must be stated. Fletcher v. State, 23: 581, 101 Pac. 599, — Okla. Crim. App. —. (Annotated)

3. The insertion of the words "wilfully" and "deliberately" in an information charging murder is within the operation of the statute allowing any information to be amended in matter of form or substance at any time before trial by leave of court, and it is therefore not necessary to reverify it after the alteration. State v. Darling, 23: 272, 115 S. W. 1002, 216 Mo. 450.

INFANTS.

Inquiry as to custody of, prior to entry of final decree in divorce proceedings, see Divorce and Separation, 2.
Negligence toward, see Negligence, 6.

Contracts of.

Conflict of laws as to infant's contracts, see Conflict of Laws, 3, 4.

Rights and liabilities of one purchasing from infant after majority land conveyed to another during minority, see Contracts, 15.

Effect of foreign judgment removing infant's disability to convey land, see Judgment, 2.

1. Purchasers of land from an infant cannot defeat a recovery of the property by one to whom the infant deeded it on reaching his majority, on the ground that the later deed was obtained by fraud. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

2. A deed by which persons, on reaching their majority, "grant, bargain, sell, and convey" to a stranger property which they had during infancy deeded to another, for the purpose of disaffirming their former deed, and with knowledge that the later grantee is to institute suit for possession of the property, is a sufficient disaffirmance of the former deed, where the statute permits a conveyance of land held adversely. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

3. One who, after the majority of infants who during minority joined with their mother in a deed of real estate belonging to their father's estate, to one having a lease of the property which has not expired, purchased the property from them during the mother's lifetime, is entitled to rents from the date of his deed upon the property, less those represented by the widow's dower interest. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

4. The disaffirmance by infants, upon reaching their majority, of a deed which they executed jointly with their mother, of property in which she had a dower interest, destroys the merger of such interest, and leaves in the grantee the equitable title to her dower right. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

5. A tenant having the right to remove buildings at the end of his lease, who purchases the realty from the infant owners during their minority, is restored to his rights under the lease upon their disaffirmance of their sale by conveying the property to another after reaching majority. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

6. One who purchases from infants, upon their reaching their majority, land which had deeded to another during infancy, is not bound to reimburse to the latter money he had paid his own agent for conducting the negotiations leading to his purchase. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

7. One who purchases from infants, upon their reaching their majority, land which another had purchased from them during their minority, must restore to the former purchaser the consideration paid by him, including claims against the property which had been satisfied by him as part of the consideration for the conveyance. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

Lease of property.

8. A lease, under authority of court, of minor's property, which is to extend beyond their minority, is valid, where the state has given the court plenary power over such estates. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

INFORMATION.

See Indictment, etc.

INHERITANCE TAX.

See Taxes, 5-9.

INJUNCTION.

Contempt by refusal to obey, see Contempt, 3-5.

Retaining jurisdiction on refusal of injunction, see Equity, 5.

Estoppel to enjoin operation of railroad in street, see Estoppel, 2.

Effect of, to stay running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 16.

Against nuisance, see Nuisance, 3, 6, 7.

Mandatory injunction.

1. An injunction against a discharged servant, the essential nature of which is to terminate continued trespassing, is not subject to the objection that it is mandatory and within the inhibition of Ga. Civ. Code 1895, § 4922, under which an injunction mandatory in its nature cannot be granted, although it includes a restraint against the servant from keeping his goods on the master's premises. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

Illegal or tortious acts; crimes.

1a. If an injunction is necessary and proper for the protection of public rights, Criminality of the injurious acts does not bar the remedy in equity. State v. Ehrlick, 23: 691, 24 S. E. 935, — W. Va. —.

2. A board of health may be enjoined from sending to the pesthouse, which is unfit for her habitation because of want of water supply and heating arrangements and the proximity of the city dumping ground, and because to it are sent persons afflicted with smallpox and other loathsome diseases, an elderly lady of refinement who has a form of leprosy which is very slightly, if at all, contagious, and who has mingled for years with the people without communicating the disease to anyone, while quarantine in her own home would afford complete protection to the public until a comfortable place could be arranged for her elsewhere. Kirk v. Wyman, 23: 1188, 65 S. E. 387, — S. C. —. (Annotated)

3. A remedy by action against members of the board of health for damages for wrongfully sending one to the pesthouse, if it existed, is not adequate to such an extent as to prevent the issuance of an injunction against such act. Kirk v. Wyman, 23: 1188, 65 S. E. 387, — S. C. — Trespass.

See also supra, 1.

4. Injunction is the proper remedy as against an employee whose right to occupy a house upon his employer's premises has been terminated by a lawful discharge, where the employee continues to remain on the premises, is insolvent, and the damages are of such a character as not to be capable of computation or of being satisfied by an ordinary suit at law. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

Water rights.

Refusal of injunction against taking of subterranean waters on ground of estoppel, see Estoppel, 8.

5. A landowner who has tapped, by wells located on his land, a reservoir of mineral water extending under a large area, will be enjoined from drawing it by means of pumps or other apparatus for the purpose of securing for the market a supply of gas arising from the water, thereby wasting great quantities of the water, and destroying or impairing its flow from springs located on the lands of others, and destroying or impairing the valuable character of the water for purposes for which it had been habitually used. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

6. That one has marketed water naturally flowing from springs on his land does not deprive him of the right to equitable relief against the forcible pumping of the water from the common reservoir, and letting it go to waste, for the purpose of securing for sale a gas connected therewith. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

As to corporate matters.

7. The court's will not, at the instance of a minority stockholder of a corporation, restrain the majority from proceeding to dissolve the corporation, although it is solvent, if because of business conditions it has ceased to operate its plant, and there is no capital ready and available to resume operations should such course be determined upon; while the attitude of the parties towards each other does not give promise of mutual co-operation and eventual success. White v. Kincaid, 23: 1177, 63 S. E. 109, 149 N. C. 415.

Legal proceedings.

8. That a judgment was confessedly procured by perjury gives a court of equity no jurisdiction to enjoin its enforcement. South Haven & E. R. Co. v. Culver, 23: 564, 122 N. W. 95, — Mich. — (Annotated)

Preliminary and interlocutory Injunctions.

9. Although some of the facts stated in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a complaint for an injunction are denied by affidavits presented on behalf of defendant, the court may, nevertheless, grant a preliminary injunction, if the questions of fact raised are purely for the consideration of the court. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

INNKEEPERS.

The relationship of innkeeper and guest is not established so as to render the innkeeper liable for injury to the mule of one who claims to have been a guest at the time, where the owner of the mule left it in a stable pointed out by a boy in charge thereof, in which guests were permitted to keep their horses without charge, except for feed if furnished by the innkeeper, and then left the premises without entering the inn or arranging that the innkeeper should furnish any feed for the mule, or doing anything towards becoming a guest, although he stated to the boy that he would return and himself feed the mule at dinner time, and he testified that he intended to take dinner at the inn with another person who accompanied him, but did not do so because before dinner time he learned of the injury to the mule, and at such time was ministering to its sufferings. Brewer v. Caswell, 23: 1107, 64 S. E. 674, — Ga. — (Annotated)

INSOLVENCY.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish, see Evidence, 36.

INSTRUCTIONS.

See Trial, 21-25.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

See Insurance, 2.

INSURANCE.

Conflict of laws as to insurance matters, see Conflict of Laws, 1, 2.

Secondary evidence as to whether report of agent issuing policy contained anything as to idleness of the plaintiff, see Evidence, 17.

1. A mutual benefit certificate, not countersigned as required by its provisions, is not valid in the hands of the beneficiary, in the absence of anything to show a waiver on the part of the association of the defective execution. Caywood v. Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H. 23: 304, 86 N. E. 482, 171 Ind. 410.

Insurable interest.

2. An undertaker designated by a burial association to bury its members for a specified sum each has no insurable interest in such lives, within the meaning of a statute forbidding the taking of an application of insurance in favor of any person who has not a bona fide interest in the life of the insured. State v. Willett, 23: 197, 86 N. E. 68, 171 Ind. 296.

Burial insurance.

See also supra, 2.

3. A contract issued by an association to furnish the holder with burial at death, at a specified cost, the money to be raised by assessments upon members of the association, who are secured by solicitation from the general public, is one of life insurance, within the meaning of a statute regulating such business. State v. Willett, 23: 197, 86 N. E. 68, 171 Ind. 296. (Annotated)

Extended insurance.

4. An insurance company will not, in computing the amount of cash surrender value or the sum applicable to the purchase of extended insurance after default in payment of premiums, be permitted to discriminate against policy holders who have borrowed on their policies, by exacting more than the loan with legal interest, and therefore a method of settlement by which the amount to be deducted from the reserve applicable to the purchase of extended insurance is ascertained by finding the sum which bears the same relation to such reserve as the amount borrowed bears to the cash surrender value, and thereby arbitrarily shortening the time of extended insurance, is invalid. Emig v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 23: 828, 106 S. W. 230, 127 Ky. 588. (Annotated)

Construction of policy generally.

5. Language in the second clause of an insurance policy, the first clause of which insures a building, which covers machinery and all appurtenances and appliances necessary and used in the owner's business, does not imply that the building is a manufacturing establishment. Home Ins. Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & E. Co. 23: 1201, 111 S. W. 994, 86 Ark. 538.

Warranties; representations; conditions.

Review of finding of trial court that hemorrhage did not constitute a serious illness within meaning of policy, see Appeal and Error, 20.

6. A sale of mortgaged property for breach of condition, under a power contained in the mortgage, to the mortgagee, is within the terms of a clause in an insurance policy avoiding it if the property shall be sold without the consent of the insurer, although the policy is made payable to the mortgagee, as his interest may appear. Boston Co-Operative Bank v. American C. Ins. Co. 23: 1147, 87 N. E. 594, 201 Mass. 350. (Annotated)

7. Insurance of a building which is not in operation as a manufactory at the time, as "occupied as an ice factory," does not require its operation as such, to make the policy valid, under a provision that the policy shall be void if on a manufacturing establishment which shall cease to be operated for ten consecutive days. Home Ins. Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & E. Co. 23: 1201, 111 S. W. 994, 86 Ark. 538.

8. A statutory provision requiring applicants for life insurance to pass a satisfactory medical examination by a physician applies to applicants for burial insurance. State v. Willett, 23: 197, 86 N. E. 68, 171 Ind. 296.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

9. If an applicant for a life insurance policy warrants in his application that his answers to the medical examiner, on the reverse side of the application, are "true and accurate," and that they constitute the basis for the covenant, such answers become warranties, where the policy recites that it is executed in consideration of the warranties made in the application, and that the application shall be a part of the covenant; and a false statement made therein by the applicant renders the policy void. Eminent Household of C. W. v. Prater, 23: 917, 103 Pac. 558, — Okla. —.

10. The term "serious illness," as used in an application for a life insurance policy, means such an illness as permanently or materially impairs, or is likely permanently or materially to impair, the health of the applicant. Eminent Household of C. W. v. Prater, 23: 917, 103 Pac. 558, — Okla. —.

11. The phrase "spitting or coughing of blood," as used in a question propounded by a medical examiner to an applicant for a life insurance policy, as to whether she ever had "spitting or coughing of blood," means the disorder so called, whether the blood comes from the lungs or from the stomach. Eminent Household of C. W. v. Prater, 23: 917, 103 Pac. 558, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

Forfeiture.

Waiver of, or estoppel to assert, see infra, 14, 15.

Conflict of laws as to necessity of notice before forfeiture, see Conflict of Laws, 2.

12. The mere fact that a mutual benefit association owes a member for services an amount in excess of an assessment against him for premium on his certificate does not require an application of it upon the assessment, so as to prevent a forfeiture of the certificate for nonpayment of dues. Caywood v. Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H. 23: 304, 86 N. E. 482, 171 Ind. 410. (Annotated)

Premiums and assessments.

Forfeiture of policy for nonpayment of dues, see supra, 12.

Failure of benefit company to apply money due member for services upon assessment of dues, see Pleading, 7, 20.

Computation of days of grace allowed for payment of premium, see Time, 2.

13. The return to an applicant for life insurance by the agent of a part of his commission is not within the operation of a statute forbidding life insurance companies to make discrimination in favor of particular persons in rates charged for insurance and further providing that no company or agent shall pay or allow, as an inducement to insurance, any rebate of premium payable on the policy, or any valuable consideration or inducement whatever not specified in the policy. Interstate L. Assur. Co. v. Dalton, 23: 722, 165 Fed. 176, 91 C. C. A. 210. (Annotated)

Waiver; estoppel.

14. Knowledge of local insurance agents as to the condition of a risk upon which they issue policies, the property belonging to a corporation of which they are directors and large stockholders, which fact was not known to the insurer or its general agent, is not chargeable to the insurer. Home Ins. Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & E. Co. 23: 1201, 111 S. W. 994, 86 Ark. 538.

15. The agent of an insurance company cannot, by oral contract with the assured, waive the express terms of the policy, and extend the time for a premium, where the policy provides that none of its terms can be varied or modified or any forfeiture waived, or premiums in arrears received, except by agreement in writing, signed by the president, vice president, secretary, or assistant secretary, whose authority for that purpose cannot be delegated. McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 23: 968, 122 N. W. 27, — Neb. —.

Risks and causes of loss or injury.

16. To relieve a life insurance company from liability for the death of an insured who came to his death while violating the statute prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons, it must be shown that the offense was being committed, and that it brought about the death of the deceased. Interstate L. Assur. Co. v. Dalton, 23: 722, 165 Fed. 176, 91 C. C. A. 210.

Extent of injury or loss; recovery.

17. An insured who, at all times during an illness characterized by recurring periods of severity, has been unable to resume the ordinary duties or pleasures of life, cannot be said not to have been confined "constantly to the house," within the meaning of an insurance contract for sick benefits because at intervals he has occasionally stepped into the yard, or has made visits to his physician, and other short and unusual trips. Breil v. Claus Groth Plattsdsutschen Vereen, 23: 359, 120 N. W. 905, — Neb. —.

(Annotated)

Interest in proceeds.

18. The beneficiary of a burial insurance contract which provides that, at the death of the insured, a certain sum shall be paid to a certain named undertaker, his heirs or assigns, for burial of the insured, is the undertaker. State v. Willett, 23: 197, 86 N. E. 68, 171 Ind. 296.

Subrogation.

Who must bring action against railroad for loss of insured property destroyed through its negligence, see Parties, 1.

19. An insurance company which is compelled to pay a loss caused by fire set out by the negligence of a railroad company cannot after the owner of the property has collected its value from the railroad company, and it has satisfied its liability under the policy, maintain an action against the railroad company to compel it to make good its loss. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hicklin, 23: 870, 115 S. W. 752, — Ky. —.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Actions; enforcing payment.

Sufficiency of pleading to entitle one to benefit of statute rendering void limitation by foreign insurance company of time for suit on policy, see Pleading, 8.

20. A provision requiring suit on a mutual benefit certificate to be brought within a year from the time of death is valid. Caywood v. Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H. 23: 304, 86 N. E. 482, 171 Ind. 410.

Guaranty policies.

21. The parties to a contract of rent insurance may stipulate for a method of ascertaining and computing the loss, notwithstanding the statute provides that the sole object of insurance is indemnity. Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 23: 123, 101 Pac. 911, — Cal. —.

22. The gross rentals, and not the amount less cost of janitor and other service to which the landlord is subject, are covered by a policy providing that the insurer shall be liable for the actual loss of rent based on rentals in force at the time of fire, and requiring the assured to carry insurance in an amount equal to the annual rents of the premises, in the absence of which the assured shall be held as a coinsurer in the amount of the deficiency. Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. 23: 123, 101 Pac. 911, — Cal. —.
(Annotated)

INTENT.

Admissibility of evidence to show, see Evidence, 25.

Of one infringing trademark, see Trademarks, 5.

To accept goods sold, see Trial, 21.

Right of interested party to testify as to his intent, see Witnesses, 1, 2.

INTEREST.

Right to, on capital of husband invested in his business in division of community property on divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 3, 4.

Right of court to add interest to amount allowed by master in chancery, see Reference.

INTERROGATORIES.

See Trial, 18-20.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Commerce.

INTERURBAN RAILWAYS.

1. One is negligent in assuming that an electric interurban train which he knows to be approaching a crossing is to stop, and in driving upon the track in front of it when his view is obscured by obstructions, without ascertaining its exact location, so as to prevent holding the railroad company liable for injuries, although the company is negligent in running a through train at high speed, off from schedule time, without sounding proper warning at the crossing. Cable v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. 23: 1224, 97 Pac. 744, 50 Wash. 619.

2. One about to cross the track of an interurban electric railway, on which trains are customarily operated at high speed, must stop, look, and listen for approaching trains. Cable v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. 23: 1224, 97 Pac. 744, 60 Wash. 619.

(Annotated)

INTERVENTION.

Right to intervene in attachment proceedings, see Attachment.

As to election by intervener, see Election of Remedies, 1.

1. One who intervenes in an attachment proceeding wherein the service, which was by publication, was so defective as to be void, and claims the real estate attached, may attack such service before the rendition of judgment, by motion to set it aside. Bal-lew v. Young, 23: 1084, 103 Pac. 623, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

2. A party who, under a statute providing that third persons claiming or having an interest in property attached may intervene in an attachment proceeding, intervenes in such a proceeding, and claims the property attached, can make only such objections to the irregularity of the proceedings as could be made in attacking them in an independent collateral action. Ballew v. Young, 23: 1084, 103 Pac. 623, — Okla. —.

INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

As to interstate commerce in, see Commerce, 2-4.

Effect on lease of property for saloon purposes of passage of prohibitory liquor law, see Landlord and Tenant, 5.

1. A city ordinance for the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors, enacted in pursuance of authority conferred by statute, which provides that offenders under such ordinance shall be committed to the city jail, is not void on the ground that the conditions of all city jails are not alike, and that therefore a want of uniformity of punishment exists, in violation of the statute conferring the power upon the city. Wichita v. Murphy, 23: 243, 99 Pac. 272, 78 Kan. 859.

Licenses.

Validity of licensing of sale of, see Constitutional Law, 26.

2. The licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquor is not forbidden by a preamble to a Constitution which acknowledges God as the source of government, on the theory that the Bible is the word of God, and condemns the use and sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage. Allyn's Appeal, 23: 630, 71 Atl. 794, 81 Conn. 534.

3. That a revenue is secured from a license provided by the legislature for the purpose of regulating the traffic in intoxicating liquors, in the interest of the public, does not render the legislation providing therefor invalid. Allyn's Appeal, 23: 630, 71 Atl. 794, 81 Conn. 534.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.);

Unlawful sales.

Right to recover commissions for illegal sale of, see Contracts, 12.

Sufficiency of indictment for wrongful sale of, see Indictment, etc., 2.

Effect of repeal of ordinance as to sale of liquors pending appeal from conviction of unlawful sale, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

4. To secure a conviction under an indictment for maintaining a common nuisance in a place of resort where intoxicating liquors are dispensed between certain dates, it is not necessary for the state to show that the place was used for such purposes during the entire period named in the indictment. State v. Kapickski, 23: 737, 73 Atl. 830, — Me. —.

5. An unlicensed social club which distributes among its members, to be consumed upon the premises, intoxicating liquors from a stock which had been bought in common by them, is a common nuisance under a statute providing that all places of resort where intoxicating liquors are kept, sold, given away, drunk, or dispensed in any manner not provided by law are common nuisances. State v. Kapickski, 23: 737, 73 Atl. 830, — Me. —.

6. The distribution of liquors kept by an unincorporated club to members who pay therefor sums which are used to replenish the supply of liquor, or to defray the expenses of the club, is a sale within the meaning of a prohibition law. Manning v. Canon City, 23: 192, 101 Pac. 978, 45 Colo. 571.

(Annotated)

IRRIGATION.

Appropriation of water for, see Waters, 4.

JAPANESE.

Competency of, as witness, see Witnesses, 3.

JEOPARDY.

See Criminal Law, 3, 4.

JERK.

Negligence in starting street car with, see Carriers, 9.

JOINDER.

Of causes of action, see Action or Suit, 3.

JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS.

Where two or more persons engage in the business of gambling, by whatever arrangement the business is conducted, if all are to share in the profits, and money is lost to them they are all joint tortfeasors, and may be sued jointly or severally by the loser to recover the money lost to them. Berns v. Shaw, 23: 522, 64 S. E. 930, — W. Va. —.

(Annotated)

JOINT TORT FEASORS.

See Joint Creditors and Debtors.

JUDGES.

1. The duties prescribed by a statute requiring the district court judges in certain counties to perform the duties of jury commissioner, and authorizing them to appoint a jury clerk to assist in the performance thereof, are not administrative in character, fall within the scope of the office of district court judge, and do not appertain to another office, within the meaning of a constitutional provision forbidding a judge of the district court to hold any other office. Moore v. Nation, 23: 1115, 103 Pac. 107, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

Compensation.

2. Under a statute requiring the district court judges in certain counties to perform the duties of jury commissioner, and increasing the salaries of judges performing such services, district judges in office when the statute takes effect must render the increased service without the increased compensation for the remainder of their terms, where the Constitution provides that judges of district courts shall receive such compensation for their services as may be provided by law, which shall not be increased during their terms of office, and that they shall receive no fees or perquisites. Moore v. Nation, 23: 1115, 103 Pac. 107, — Kan. —.

JUDGMENT.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 35-37.

Attempt to sustain on appeal on different theory than that relied on at trial, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Inquiry in respect of property rights prior to entry of final decree in divorce proceedings, see Divorce and Separation, 2.

Injunction against enforcement of, see Injunction, 8.

Effect of expiration of limitation period for enforcement of judgment on right to issue execution thereon, see Limitation of Actions, 8.

Limitation of time for action by surety securing assignment of judgment against principal which he satisfies, see Limitation of Actions, 15.

Superiority of receiver's right to property over those of judgment creditor, see Receivers, 2.

Right to subrogation of surety satisfying judgment against principal, see Subrogation, 1.

Effect and conclusiveness; collateral attack.

1. A party against whom a judgment has been obtained by the perjury of the adverse party on the trial cannot, while that judgment remains in force, maintain an action against such adverse party for damages alleged to have been suffered because of such perjury. Horner v. Schinstock, 23: 134, 101 Pac. 996, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

Foreign judgments.

2. The requirement of the Federal Constitution that the judgments of one state shall be given full faith and credit in another, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

other does not render a judgment of one state removing an infant's disability to convey land effective for that purpose in another state. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

3. A deed to land situated in Nebraska, made by a commissioner under a decree of a court of another state in an action of divorce, in which, in determining the equities of the parties conformably to the practice in that state, the land was set apart to the wife as her own separate property, need not be recognized in Nebraska, under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. Fall v. Eastin, 23: 924, 215 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3, 54 L. ed. 65.

(Annotated)

4. A decree of divorce of one state may be impeached collaterally in the courts of another state by proving that the court granting it had no jurisdiction because of plaintiff's want of domicile, even where the record purports to show such jurisdiction. Sammons v. Pike, 23: 1254, 120 N. W. 540, — Minn. —. (Annotated)

Relief against.

5. A divorce will not be vacated on the ground that it was based on perjured testimony knowingly procured by libellant, after a marriage has been entered into on the faith of the decree, and a child born of the marriage. Zeitlin v. Zeitlin, 23: 569, 88 N. E. 762, 202 Mass. 205.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See Evidence, 1-4.

JUDICIAL SALE.

The mistake of the sheriff as to the amount necessary to be tendered to a purchaser at judicial sale to effect a redemption will not defeat the redemption right of one who places in his hands sufficient money to effect the redemption, where the statute provides that the redemption may be effected by paying the necessary amount to the officer. Brown v. Bell, 23: 1096, 103 Pac. 380, — Colo. —.

JURY.

Reversible error in course of selection of jury, see Appeal and Error, 31-32.

Discharge of, in criminal case, see Criminal Law, 4.

Judicial notice by, see Evidence, 3, 4.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to, see Trial, 1.

Questions for, see Trial, 2-11.

1. A statute permitting the court, instead of imposing the fine provided for abandoning one's wife, or in addition thereto to require the husband to pay her a certain sum weekly, deprives him of his constitutional right to trial by jury. Ex parte Smythe, 23: 854, 120 S. W. 200, — Tex. Crim. App. —. (Annotated)

2. A challenge to the array is not necessary to secure the retirement, at a second trial of an accused, of jurors who served at the first trial. State v. Barnes, 13: 932, 103 Pac. 792, — Wash. —.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Power to punish for contempt, see Contempt, 8.

KNOWLEDGE.

Necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it, see Contempt, 3.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Public contract discriminating in favor of union labor, see Contracts, 14; Municipal Corporations, 1, 4, 5; Parties, 3.

A labor union cannot impose fines upon its members to coerce them to join a strike to the injury of one seeking their services. L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Driscoll, 23: 1236, 85 N. E. 897, 200 Mass. 110. (Annotated)

LACHES.

See Limitation of Actions, 1-7.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Liability of lessee agreeing to pay cost of conveyance of fee to him to pay counsel fee for investigation of his right to conveyance, see Contracts, 6.

Damages for breach by lessee of agreement to carry out lessor's contract for supplies, see Damages, 2.

Rights of lessee purchasing realty from infant owners upon their disaffirmance of sale, see Infants, 5.

As to rent insurance, see Insurance, 21, 22.

Power of lessee to subject owner's interest to mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, 6.

1. A servant who occupies a house free of rent, upon the master's premises, in connection with his services and in aid of his performance thereof, does not hold adversely to the master, nor as a tenant; and the house must be treated as in the possession of the master. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

2. One who is entitled to occupy certain unfurnished rooms in a house in consideration of services to be rendered the owner in caring for children and keeping the remainder of the house in repair, which services are in lieu of rent, is a tenant, and not a mere roomer. Green v. Shoemaker, 23: 667, 73 Atl. 688, — Md. —.

Leases.

Re-entry for wrongful assignment of lease, see infra, 8.

Covenant by lessor to convey fee to lessee, his heirs and assigns, see Covenants and Conditions, 5; Perpetuities; Pleading, 6; Specific Performance, 4.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Testimony that at time of making lease contract with third person is referred to, see Evidence, 22.

Lease of infant's property, see Infants, 8.

Lease of railroad, see Railroads, 1, 2.

3. A provision in a lease that the lessee shall not be liable for any debt of the lessor at the date of the contract does not include a liability to pay for supplies subsequently delivered to the lessee under a contract assigned by lessor to lessee. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368.

4. A tenancy at will or by sufferance does not spring up immediately upon the discharge of a servant who has occupied a house free of rent, upon the master's premises, in connection with his services and in aid of his performance thereof; since, to have that effect, the subsequent occupancy, if alone relied on, must be sufficiently long to warrant an inference of consent to a different holding. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

5. A lease of property solely for saloon purposes is not terminated by the taking effect during the term of a prohibitory liquor law, where, by construction of the parties, the right was conferred upon the lessee of selling upon the property nonintoxicating beverages and tobacco, so that the right of the lessee was not totally destroyed. O'Byrne v. Henley, 23: 496, 50 So. 83, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

6. The assent of the lessor to an assignment of the lease is not necessary in the absence of any provision in the lease forbidding such assignment. Cupples v. Level, 23: 519, 103 Pac. 430, — Wash. —.

7. The nonassent of a lessor to an assignment of the lease will not defeat the title of a purchaser of the growing crop from the assignee as against an execution creditor of the tenants, assignor and assignee, if, at the time the question is tried, the crop has been harvested and marketed. Cupples v. Level, 23: 519, 103 Pac. 430, — Wash. —.

Re-entry.

8. Nonaction will waive an implied right to regain leased property for assignment of the lease without the consent of the lessor. Cupples v. Level, 23: 519, 103 Pac. 430, — Wash. —.

LARCENY.

Under a statute making checks the subject of larceny, an unindorsed check payable to order is so subject; and its value, for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime, is its face value. State v. McClellan, 23: 1063, 73 Atl. 993, — Vt. —. (Annotated)

LEASE.

Of infant's property, see Infants, 8.

In general, see Landlord and Tenant, 3-7.

Of railroads, see Railroads, 1, 2.

JUDGES.

1. The duties prescribed by a statute requiring the district court judges in certain counties to perform the duties of jury commissioner, and authorizing them to appoint a jury clerk to assist in the performance thereof, are not administrative in character, fall within the scope of the office of district court judge, and do not appertain to another office, within the meaning of a constitutional provision forbidding a judge of the district court to hold any other office. Moore v. Nation, 23: 1115, 103 Pac. 107, — Kan. — (Annotated)

Compensation.

2. Under a statute requiring the district court judges in certain counties to perform the duties of jury commissioner, and increasing the salaries of judges performing such services, district judges in office when the statute takes effect must render the increased service without the increased compensation for the remainder of their terms, where the Constitution provides that judges of district courts shall receive such compensation for their services as may be provided by law, which shall not be increased during their terms of office, and that they shall receive no fees or perquisites. Moore v. Nation, 23: 1115, 103 Pac. 107, — Kan. —

JUDGMENT.

- On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 35-37.
- Attempt to sustain on appeal on different theory than that relied on at trial, see Appeal and Error, 13.
- Inquiry in respect of property rights prior to entry of final decree in divorce proceedings, see Divorce and Separation, 2.
- Injunction against enforcement of, see Injunction, 8.
- Effect of expiration of limitation period for enforcement of judgment on right to issue execution thereon, see Limitation of Actions, 8.
- Limitation of time for action by surety securing assignment of judgment against principal which he satisfies, see Limitation of Actions, 15.
- Superiority of receiver's right to property over those of judgment creditor, see Receivers, 2.
- Right to subrogation of surety satisfying judgment against principal, see Subrogation, 1.

Effect and conclusiveness; collateral attack.

1. A party against whom a judgment has been obtained by the perjury of the adverse party on the trial cannot, while that judgment remains in force, maintain an action against such adverse party for damages alleged to have been suffered because of such perjury. Horner v. Schinstock, 23: 134, 101 Pac. 996, — Kan. — (Annotated)

Foreign judgments.

2. The requirement of the Federal Constitution that the judgments of one state shall be given full faith and credit in another does not render a judgment of one state removing an infant's disability to convey land effective for that purpose in another state. Beauchamp v. Bertig, 23: 659, 119 S. W. 75, 90 Ark. 351.

3. A deed to land situated in Nebraska, made by a commissioner under a decree of a court of another state in an action of divorce, in which, in determining the equities of the parties conformably to the practice in that state, the land was set apart to the wife as her own separate property, need not be recognized in Nebraska, under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. Fall v. Eastin, 23: 924, 215 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3, 54 L. ed. 65.

(Annotated)

4. A decree of divorce of one state may be impeached collaterally in the courts of another state by proving that the court granting it had no jurisdiction because of plaintiff's want of domicile, even where the record purports to show such jurisdiction. Sammons v. Pike, 23: 1254, 120 N. W. 540, — Minn. — (Annotated)

Relief against.

5. A divorce will not be vacated on the ground that it was based on perjured testimony knowingly procured by libellant, after a marriage has been entered into on the faith of the decree, and a child born of the marriage. Zeitlin v. Zeitlin, 23: 569, 88 N. E. 762, 202 Mass. 205.

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See Evidence, 1-4.

JUDICIAL SALE.

The mistake of the sheriff as to the amount necessary to be tendered to a purchaser at judicial sale to effect a redemption will not defeat the redemption right of one who places in his hands sufficient money to effect the redemption, where the statute provides that the redemption may be effected by paying the necessary amount to the officer. Brown v. Bell, 23: 1096, 103 Pac. 380, — Colo. —

JURY.

Reversible error in course of selection of jury, see Appeal and Error, 30-32.

Discharge of, in criminal case, see Criminal Law, 4.

Judicial notice by, see Evidence, 3, 4.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to, see Trial, 1.

Questions for, see Trial, 2-11.

1. A statute permitting the court, instead of imposing the fine provided for abandoning one's wife, or in addition thereto, to require the husband to pay her a certain sum weekly, deprives him of his constitutional right to trial by jury. Ex parte Smythe, 23: 854, 120 S. W. 200, — Tex. Crim. App. — (Annotated)

2. A challenge to the array is not necessary to secure the retirement, at a second trial of an accused, of jurors who served at the first trial. State v. Barnes, 23: 932, 103 Pac. 792, — Wash. —.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Power to punish for contempt, see Contempt, 8.

KNOWLEDGE.

Necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it, see Contempt, 3.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Public contract discriminating in favor of union labor, see Contracts, 14; Municipal Corporations, 1, 4, 5; Parties, 3.

A labor union cannot impose fines upon its members to coerce them to join a strike to the injury of one seeking their services. L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Driscoll, 23: 1236, 85 N. E. 897, 200 Mass. 110. (Annotated)

LACHES.

See Limitation of Actions, 1-7.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Liability of lessee agreeing to pay cost of conveyance of fee to him to pay counsel fee for investigation of his right to conveyance, see Contracts, 6.

Damages for breach by lessee of agreement to carry out lessor's contract for supplies, see Damages, 2.

Rights of lessee purchasing realty from infant owners upon their disaffirmance of sale, see Infants, 5.

As to rent insurance, see Insurance, 21, 22.

Power of lessee to subject owner's interest to mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, 6.

1. A servant who occupies a house free of rent, upon the master's premises, in connection with his services and in aid of his performance thereof, does not hold adversely to the master, nor as a tenant; and the house must be treated as in the possession of the master. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

2. One who is entitled to occupy certain unfurnished rooms in a house in consideration of services to be rendered the owner in caring for children and keeping the remainder of the house in repair, which services are in lieu of rent, is a tenant, and not a mere roomer. Green v. Shoemaker, 23: 667, 73 Atl. 688, — Md. —.

Leases.

Re-entry for wrongful assignment of lease, see infra, 8.

Covenant by lessor to convey fee to lessee, his heirs and assigns, see Covenants and Conditions, 5; Perpetuities; Pleading, 6; Specific Performance, 4.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Testimony that at time of making lease contract with third person is referred to, see Evidence, 22.

Lease of infant's property, see Infants, 8.

Lease of railroad, see Railroads, 1, 2.

3. A provision in a lease that the lessee shall not be liable for any debt of the lessor at the date of the contract does not include a liability to pay for supplies subsequently delivered to the lessee under a contract assigned by lessor to lessee. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368.

4. A tenancy at will or by sufferance does not spring up immediately upon the discharge of a servant who has occupied a house free of rent, upon the master's premises, in connection with his services and in aid of his performance thereof; since, to have that effect, the subsequent occupancy, if alone relied on, must be sufficiently long to warrant an inference of consent to a different holding. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

5. A lease of property solely for saloon purposes is not terminated by the taking effect during the term of a prohibitory liquor law, where, by construction of the parties, the right was conferred upon the lessee of selling upon the property nonintoxicating beverages and tobacco, so that the right of the lessee was not totally destroyed. O'Byrne v. Henley, 23: 496, 50 So. 83, — Ala. —. (Annotated)

6. The assent of the lessor to an assignment of the lease is not necessary in the absence of any provision in the lease forbidding such assignment. Cupples v. Level, 23: 519, 103 Pac. 430, — Wash. —.

7. The nonassent of a lessor to an assignment of the lease will not defeat the title of a purchaser of the growing crop from the assignee as against an execution creditor of the tenants, assignor and assignee, if, at the time the question is tried, the crop has been harvested and marketed. Cupples v. Level, 23: 519, 103 Pac. 430, — Wash. —.

Re-entry.

8. Nonaction will waive an implied right to regain leased property for assignment of the lease without the consent of the lessor. Cupples v. Level, 23: 519, 103 Pac. 430, — Wash. —.

LARCENY.

Under a statute making checks the subject of larceny, an undorsed check payable to order is so subject; and its value, for the purpose of determining the degree of the crime, is its face value. State v. McClellan, 23: 1063, 73 Atl. 993, — Vt. —. (Annotated)

LEASE.

Of infant's property, see Infants, 8.

In general, see Landlord and Tenant, 3-7.

Of railroads, see Railroads, 1, 2.

sections of the statute of limitations applying to judgments, and not by that relating to implied promises to pay. Patton v. Smith, 23: 1124, 114 S. W. 315, — Ky. —
Interruption of statute.

16. The statutory provision suspending the running of the period of limitation during the time the beginning of an action is stayed by an injunction or other statutory prohibition applies only between parties to the suit, and not where the injunction is granted in a suit to which the debtor is not a party. Lagerman v. Casserly, 23: 673, 120 N. W. 1086, 107 Minn. 491.
 (Annotated)

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

See Damages, 3, 4.

LIVERY STABLE.

Liability of keeper for injury to horse, see Bailment.

LIVE STOCK.

Transportation of, see Carriers, 15-17.

LOAN.

Agency of broker in making, see Principal and Agent, 1.

LOTTERIES.

The distribution by chance among the purchasers of lots of unequal value, which were purchased at a uniform price by citizens of a town, in consideration that the owner of the tract would erect a hotel building which would be of public benefit, is within the statute against lotteries and unenforceable against the purchasers, although such distribution was not part of the original scheme, and the vendor did not direct or make himself a party to the unlawful distribution, if the contracts of sale were with the individual purchasers, and were not to be complied with until the lots were selected, so that the method of selecting the lots was necessarily a part of the contract. Burks v. Harriss, 23: 626, 120 S. W. 979, — Ark. —
 (Annotated)

MALICE.

Presumption of, in libel case, see Evidence, 9.

MANDAMUS.

The question of the constitutionality of a statute limiting the height of buildings may be considered under an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of a building permit which is refused because of the statute. Welch v. Swasey, 23: 1160, 79 N. E. 745, 193 Mass. 364.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

See Injunction, 1.

MANSLAUGHTER.

See Homicide.

MAPS.

Dedication by, see Dedication, 2, 3.
 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MARRIED WOMAN.

See Husband and Wife.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Liability of carrier for wrongful arrest by special police officer, see Carriers, 2.

Validity of strike to enforce demand for increased wages, see Conspiracy.

Applying different rule of liability to proprietors of railroads from that applied to other classes of employers, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Adverse possession by servant, see Landlord and Tenant, 1.

Does servant occupying master's house hold as tenant, see Landlord and Tenant, 1, 4.

As to railroad relief associations, see Railroad Relief Associations.

When relation exists.

1. A special police officer appointed and commissioned by the governor, as provided by the Nebraska statute, at the instance of a railroad company which pays for his services, is prima facie a public officer, for whose wrongful acts the company is not liable. McKain v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 23: 289, 64 S. E. 18, — W. Va. —
 (Annotated)

Termination of relation; discharge.

Statute requiring master to furnish written statement as to true cause for discharge, see Constitutional Law, 20, 23.

Injunction to prevent discharged servant from trespassing and keeping goods on master's premises, see Injunction, 1, 4.

Effect of discharge of servant occupying master's house free of rent to create tenancy at will or by sufferance, see Landlord and Tenant, 4.

Trespass by discharged servant, see Trespass, 1.

2. An employee who enters into a contract with his employer to work a certain length of time if he proves competent and satisfactory, agreeing to perform all the duties of a first-class gardener and manager to "the satisfaction" of the employer, is subject to discharge if the employer is actually dissatisfied, regardless of whether there are reasonable and sufficient grounds for such dissatisfaction. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.
 (Annotated)

3. That an agent, while acting as head gardener and manager of his employer's estate, sold certain articles to himself, and borrowed tools for use on work of his own, affords reasonable grounds for dissatisfaction justifying discharge, where the contract of employment provides that the agent's duties as gardener and manager shall be performed to the satisfaction of the employer. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

Liability to servant generally.

Liability of municipality for injury to servant employed in performance of governmental duties, see Municipal Corporations, 10-13.

Pleading in action for injury to servant because of failure to furnish sufficient help, see Pleading, 9.

Proximate cause of injury to servant, see Proximate Cause.

4. The owner of a camel which is used for purposes of exhibition, and which is known to be vicious, is bound to keep it in such manner as will absolutely prevent the occurrence of injury, through its vicious acts, to servants whose duties require them to be about it. Gooding v. Chutes Co. 23: 1071, 102 Pac. 819, — Cal. —. (Annotated)

Duty to warn or instruct.

5. A master is not required to warn an ordinarily intelligent but inexperienced adult employed about a drop hammer that the pressing down of the treadle when the hammer is uplifted will cause the hammer to fall, and the danger of injury therefrom to his hands should they be under it. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. 23: 296, 118 N. W. 350, 119 N. W. 289, 137 Wis. 506.

6. The duty of a master to warn of the dangers incident to machinery an adult foreigner who has been in the country only a few years, and cannot speak English, and is illiterate, is only such as he owes to any ordinarily intelligent but inexperienced adult servant. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. 23: 296, 118 N. W. 350, 119 N. W. 289, 137 Wis. 506. (Annotated)

Duty as to place and appliances.

Defective drawheads of cars as proximate cause of injury to foot of employee caught between them by negligent starting of train, see Proximate Cause, 4.

7. No liability under the employers' liability act arises for the death of a street car motorman who, having applied to be relieved from duty for the day and been told that he must be on duty during the afternoon, or find a substitute, is killed while in a telephone booth on the carrier's premises, whither he has gone for a purpose not disclosed. Gooch v. Citizens' Electric Street R. Co. 23: 960, 88 N. E. 591, 202 Mass. 254. (Annotated)

8. The relation of master and servant, in so far as involves the obligation of the master to protect his servant while rightfully upon his premises, is not suspended during the noon hour, when the master expects, and expressly or by fair implication invites, the servant to remain upon the premises, in the immediate vicinity of the work. Thomas v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 23: 954, 122, N. W. 456, — Minn. —. (Annotated)

9. The ultimate and controlling test of the exercise of reasonable care by a master in furnishing a safe place for his 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

servant to work is not what has been the practice of others in like situations, but what a reasonably prudent person would ordinarily have done in such a situation; and the practice of others is evidence, but not the sole evidence, of that test. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Moore, 23: 962, 166 Fed. 663, — C. C. A. —.

10. The obligation of the master to provide his servants a safe place extends to the portion of his premises on which they are required to work, and such other places thereon as they are expressly or impliedly invited and permitted to use. Thomas v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 23: 954, 122 N. W. 456, — Minn. —.

11. A belt by which a sewing machine is connected with a shaft by means of which the power is applied to it is not a dangerous instrument which will render the master liable for injury to an employee though getting caught therein, merely because it is put together with hooks. Nelson-Bethel Clothing Co. v. Pitts, 23: 1013, 114 S. W. 331, — Ky. —.

12. A railroad company which places upon its premises, in the immediate vicinity where its servants are constructing a road-bed, an independent contractor for the purpose of sinking a well, still retaining the control of the premises and the conduct of its own business, is required, by the legal obligation to provide its servants with a safe place to work, to exercise reasonable care to protect them from the negligence of the independent contractor. Thomas v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 23: 954, 122 N. W. 456, — Minn. —.

Contributory negligence.

13. A man of mature years employed in a stone quarry for two months, who knows the explosive character of percussion caps, and who, in the absence of his superiors, attempts to remove the lid from a box of such caps by a dangerous method of his own selection, cannot recover for injuries received because of the explosion of the caps, even though he was not warned or instructed as to the danger of handling the caps, and did not know the danger of his method of removing the lid, since, having himself selected the method, without suggestion from anyone, it was his own voluntary act, for the results of which he alone is responsible. Bell v. Cincinnati, 23: 910, 88 N. E. 128, 80 Ohio St. 1.

14. A master is not liable for injury to the operator of a sewing machine whose hair is caught in the belt which she is attempting to connect with the shaft furnishing power to the machine, merely because her superior, to whom she complained that the belt was not fit, told her it was all right, and that there was no danger in her putting it back on the machine, where neither had in mind the danger of her getting caught in it, and she understood such risk as well as he did. Nelson-Bethel Clothing Co. v. Pitts, 23: 1013, 114 S. W. 331, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

Fellow servants.

15. A master is not liable for injury to a vice principal due to the negligence of his subordinate, whom the master has exercised ordinary care in selecting. McGrory v. Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co. 23: 301, 118 S. W. 710, — Ark. — (Annotated)

16. A member of a repair and construction gang on a street railway is not, while engaged in unloading rails from a standing car, exposed to any of the peculiar hazards of using and operating a railroad, so as to come within the protection of a statute by increasing the liability of railroad companies for injuries to their employees. Indianapolis Traction & T. Co. v. Kinney, 23: 711, 85 N. E. 954, 171 Ind. 612.

17. A master is not liable to a member of a repair gang on a street railway for injuries due wholly and entirely to the gang boss, in failing to place skids safely for the unloading of rails from a car. Indianapolis Traction & T. Co. v. Kinney, 23: 711, 85 N. E. 954, 171 Ind. 612.

18. The keepers of a camel in a place of amusement, who know that it is of vicious disposition, are bound to protect from injury fellow servants who are ignorant of that fact, and whose duties require them to be about the animal, by warning them of the danger; and in the performance of this duty they act as the master's representatives, so that their knowledge is imputed to the master. Gooding v. Chutes Co. 23: 1071, 102 Pac. 819, — Cal. —

Liability to third person for servant's acts.

When relation of master and servant exists for purpose of holding master liable for servant's acts, see supra, 1.

19. A railroad company at whose instance a special police officer is appointed by the governor, as provided by the Nebraska statute, is liable to a party who is injured by the wrongful act of such officer while engaged in special service for the company and in its pay, such as guarding its property or enforcing obedience to its rules and regulations, if such wrongful act is within the scope of such service or employment. McKain v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 23: 289, 64 S. E. 18, — W. Va. — (Annotated)

MAXIMS.

1. All penal statutes must be construed strictly against the state and favorably to the liberty of the citizen. Sutherland v. Com. 23: 172, 65 S. E. 15, — Va. —

2. Bona, sed impossibilia non cogit lex. Ziska v. Ziska, 23: 1, 95 Pac. 254, 20 Okla. 634.

3. Damnum absque injuria. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scruggs, 23: 184, 49 So. 399, — Ala. —

4. He who seeks equity must come into court with clean hands. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 182, — Mass. —

5. He who seeks equity must do equity. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 23: 1032, 102 Pac. 92, — Okla. —

6. In order to discourage maintenance, nothing which lies in action, entry, or re-entry can be granted. Moore v. Sharpe, 23: 937, 121 S. W. 341, — Ark. —

7. Nemo ex proprio dolo consequitur actionem. Wright v. Orange & P. V. R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 23: 571, 73 Atl. 517, — N. J. —

8. Nemo tenetur armare adversarium suum contra se. Larson v. Salt Lake City, 23: 462, 97 Pac. 483, 34 Utah, 318.

9. Qui facit per alium facit per se. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368.

10. Res ipsa loquitur. Rockwell v. McGovern, 23: 1022, 88 N. E. 436, 202 Mass. 6.

11. Salus populi est suprema lex. Kirk v. Wyman, 23: 1188, 65 S. E. 387, — S. C. —; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scruggs, 23: 184, 49 So. 399, — Ala. —; State v. Drayton, 23: 1287, 117 N. W. 768, 82 Neb. 254.

12. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non ledas. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scruggs, 23: 184, 49 So. 399, — Ala. —; Kirk v. Wyman, 23: 1188, 65 S. E. 387, — S. C. —; State v. Drayton, 23: 1287, 117 N. W. 768, 82 Neb. 254.

13. Solutio pretii emptionis loco habetur. Third Nat. Bank v. Rice, 23: 1167, 161 Fed. 822, 88 C. C. A. 640.

14. So use your own property as not to injure the rights of others. State Bd. of Health v. St. Johnsbury, 23: 766, 73 Atl. 581, — Vt. —

15. The law will not imply a promise where there was an express promise. Third Nat. Bank v. Rice, 23: 1167, 161 Fed. 822, 88 C. C. A. 640.

16. The practice of the court is the law of the court, Campbell v. Gowans, 23: 414, 100 Pac. 397, — Utah —

17. The reason of the law ceasing, the law itself ceases. Moore v. Sharpe, 23: 937, 121 S. W. 341, — Ark. —

MECHANICS' LIENS.

What may be considered in reviewing correctness of decree establishing, see Appeal and Error, 5.

Objecting to constitutionality of lien law for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Parol evidence of authority to purchase material to improve property, see Evidence, 19.

Credit on bill for items of, as general payment to be credited on non-lienable items, see Payment, 3.

For what work or materials.

1. No mechanics' lien for meals and street car tickets can be charged against a property owner under his agreement to permit his lessee to place improvements on the property. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v.

Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

2. No mechanics' lien can be established against property for the price of carboys which, according to the contract under which they are delivered, are to be returned. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

3. A provision in a mechanics' lien law that the lien shall not be defeated by lack of proof that the material, after delivery thereof, actually enters into the construction of the building, does not apply to fixtures, apparatus, or machinery, for which another section of the statute gives a lien, but it is necessary to show that such things are actually attached to the realty in such a manner as to enhance its value. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

Of subcontractors and materialmen.

4. The mere expectation by a conditional vendor of real estate that the purchaser will make improvements upon it and thereby enhance its value, or permission to do so, is not sufficient to establish the relation of principal and agent between them, so as to give the one furnishing the material a right to a lien on the vendor's interest, under a statute giving liens for materials furnished, whether at the instance of the owner, or of "any other person acting by his authority or under him as agent." Belnap v. Condon, 23: 601, 97 Pac. 111, 34 Utah, 213. (Annotated)

5. One furnishing materials for a building to a conditional vendee of the real estate on which it is to be placed, to whom it is charged, cannot change the account so as to bind the interests of the vendor without his consent, upon ascertaining the true state of the title. Belnap v. Condon, 23: 601, 97 Pac. 111, 34 Utah, 213.

6. A property owner who gives his consent to the lessee's placing improvements on the property which are to become his at the expiration of the lease knowingly permits them to be made, within the meaning of a statute giving a mechanics' lien against the property of one who knowingly permits improvements to be made thereon, and, if he does not limit the character or cost of the improvements, he will not be heard to complain that their cost is excessive or their character undesirable. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

MENTAL ANGUISH.

Damages for, see Damages, 20.

METERS.

Power to require consumer to use water meter and pay for expense thereof, see Waters, 14.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MINES.

Statute forbidding injurious pumping of water and gas from common reservoir of mineral waters, see Injunction, 5, 6; Parties, 2; State; Waters, 10, 11.

Within what time action for injury to surface support must be brought, see Limitation of Actions, 12.

MISCARRIAGE.

Damages for injuries resulting in, see Damages, 7, 8.

MISTAKE.

Rescission of contract for, see Contracts, 16.

Of vendor in submitting price for list of goods, see Sale, 1, 4.

MITIGATION.

Of damages, see Damages, 21, 22.

MOB.

Liability of city for injuries by, see Municipal Corporations, 15.

Instruction as to what constitutes, see Trial, 25.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

See Assumpsit, 2.

MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

Appeal by state in proceeding for violation of anti-trust statute, see Appeal and Error, 1.

In restraint of trade generally.

1. A combination, contract, or understanding, the direct and necessary effect of which is to stifle or restrict competition in trade or business, violates an anti-trust statute prohibiting combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, whatever may have been the intention of the parties. State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 23: 1260, 121 N. W. 395, 107 Minn. 506.

Of manufacturers or dealers.

2. Trade and commerce is monopolized when, as a result of efforts to that end, previously competing businesses are so concentrated in the hands of a single person or corporation, or a few persons or corporations acting together, that they have power practically to control the prices of a commodity and thus practically to suppress competition. State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 23: 1260, 121 N. W. 395, 107 Minn. 506.

3. A combination formed by dealers in articles of a similar nature in a particular locality for the purposes of fairly regulating the methods of conducting business and providing rules for fair dealing among members, but which exercises no improper control over nonmembers and does not control prices or production, is not in contravention of an anti-trust statute prohibiting combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 23: 1260, 121 N. W. 395, 107 Minn. 506.

To control prices for services.

4. A board of trade, the main purpose and effect of which are to foster the trade and increase the business of those who make and operate it, and which only indirectly and remotely restricts competition in such trade by providing that all members thereof shall charge a uniform and determined rate of commission for selling grain for nonmembers, but which itself neither buys nor sells grain,—is not a combination or conspiracy within the meaning of an anti-trust statute prohibiting combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 23: 1260, 121 N. W. 395, 107 Minn. 508.

5. A rule of an incorporated board of trade, which provides that all members of the board shall charge a uniform and determined rate of commission for selling grain for nonmembers, and provides penalties for the violation thereof, is not in violation of an anti-trust statute prohibiting combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, as its direct and necessary tendency is neither to restrain trade by preventing competition in the business of buying and selling grain, nor to limit, fix, control, maintain, or regulate the price or production of any article of trade, manufacture, or use, bought and sold within the state, nor to prevent or limit competition in the purchase and sale thereof. State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 23: 1260, 121 N. W. 395, 107 Minn. 508.

6. Personal services of a physician are not a commodity within the meaning of a statute relating to pools and trusts, and making guilty of a conspiracy persons who combine to regulate or fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity, or to fix or limit the amount or quantity of any article, commodity, or merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced, or sold in the state. Rohlf v. Kasemeier, 23: 1284, 118 N. W. 276, — Iowa, —.

7. An agreement or combination for the purpose of fixing and determining the value of wages or other charges for personal services is not within the purview of an anti-trust statute prohibiting combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade. State v. Duluth Bd. of Trade, 23: 1260, 121 N. W. 395, 107 Minn. 508. (Annotated)

MONUMENT.

Discretion of executors as to amount to be spent for, see Executors and Administrators, 1.

Succession tax on money reserved by testator for erection of monument, see Taxes, 5-7.

Construction of provision for, in will, see Wills, 4.

MORTGAGE.

Sufficiency of acknowledgment of deed of trust, see Acknowledgment.

Liability of recorder for negligent failure to record mortgage, see Evidence, 36.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Acquisition by mortgagee of title to property covered by policy protecting mortgagee's interest as breach of condition against transfer of title, see Insurance, 6.

Liability of registrar of deeds for failure to index, see Officers, 3-5.

Subrogation of surety advancing money to principal to redeem, see Subrogation, 2.

Validity of taxation of mortgages and also of real estate bound by them, see Taxes, 2.

1. A tender before maturity of the amount of principal and interest which will be due at maturity on a mortgage is not sufficient to discharge its lien. Pyross v. Fraser, 23: 403, 64 S. E. 407, 82 S. C. 498. (Annotated)

2. Acceptance before maturity of a partial payment on a mortgage will not waive the right to have the balance of the investment remain until maturity. Pyross v. Fraser, 23: 403, 64 S. E. 407, 82 S. C. 498.

3. A mortgagee who, with the consent of the mortgagor, takes possession of the property after a judgment of foreclosure, without sale, does not, while merely holding and enjoying the property as his own, hold adversely, within the meaning of a statute giving a right to redeem unless the mortgagee has maintained an adverse possession for twenty years. Becker v. McCrea, 23: 754, 86 N. E. 463, 193 N. Y. 423. (Annotated)

MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

Presumption that granted motion to set down for hearing on petition and answer was filed by petitioner, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Motion to dismiss as proper method of raising objection that bill does not show authority of one filing it, see Pleading, 16.

Although a plaintiff in a case has no right to have a petition for dismissal of the action because of invalid service of process set down for hearing on petition and answer, if he does so, it will be assumed that it was with the consent of the petitioner, to whom the right belongs, and the latter, therefore, cannot complain if the petition was properly disposed of on the facts stated in his petition. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

Of pleading, see Pleading, 4.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Authority to levy tax to pay preliminary expenses of organizing drainage district, see Drainage Districts, 1.

Estoppel of, see Estoppel, 1.

Notice to trustees as notice to municipality, see Notice, 2.

As party defendant to bill by board of health to enforce order forbidding use of public water supply, see Parties, 4-6.

Powers generally.

Power to regulate use of water by consumers, see Waters, 13, 14.

1. A municipal corporation has no power to require its work to be performed only by union labor. Miller v. Des Moines, 23: 815, 122 N. W. 226, — Iowa, —.

(Annotated)

2. A municipal corporation has no power to condemn for inaccuracy computing scales in use by merchants. Parker v. Austin, 23: 256, 121 N. W. 322, 156 Mich. 573.

(Annotated)

Ordinances.

Validity of ordinance for suppression of sale of liquors, see Intoxicating Liquors, 1.

Validity of ordinance forbidding use of unlicensed vehicles on street as against nonresidents, see License, 3.

3. The subsequent repeal of a valid city ordinance under which a person has been convicted of the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors and duly sentenced therefor, pending an appeal from such sentence, does not relieve him from punishment thereunder. Wichita v. Murphy, 23: 243, 99 Pac. 272, 78 Kan. 859.

(Annotated)

Contracts.

Rights of one performing void contract with municipality, see Contracts, 14.

Right of taxpayer to maintain action to contest validity of contracts awarded upon bids, see Parties, 3.

4. A municipality, in letting contracts for public printing, cannot discriminate in favor of union labor. Miller v. Des Moines, 23: 815, 122 N. W. 226, — Iowa, —.

(Annotated)

5. That the amount involved in a municipal contract in the letting of which discrimination is made in favor of union labor is insignificant as compared with the city's revenue or its ability to pay does not prevent the granting of relief to complaining taxpayers against performance of the contract. Miller v. Des Moines, 23: 815, 122 N. W. 226, — Iowa, —.

Liability for damages.

Evidence in action against municipality for negligent injuries, see Evidence, 28, 33.

Liability for injuries by defective highway, see Highways, 3-8.

Frightening of horse by blowing of municipal waterworks whistle, see Trial, 9.

Liability of city for injuries by mob, see Trial, 25.

6. The duty of a city to so use its own property as to do no unnecessary injury to others extends to effects produced by the use, beyond the limits of the property. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

7. The blowing of a municipal waterworks whistle by a waterworks employee, by order of the city, at 5 P. M., to give notice to union men and city employees of the end of their day's work, which whistle is also connected with the fire-alarm system and is used to give notice automatically, by its blasts, of fires and their location, upon the sending in of an alarm, is an act in the exercise of the city's private, corporate power to maintain waterworks and to care for its own property, and not in the exercise of its governmental power to protect itself and its inhabitants from fire. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

8. The blowing, by order of the city council, of a municipal waterworks whistle used for fire-alarm purposes, to warn union men and city employees of the time of day, which can be heard for several miles, and which has for years frightened horses in a nearby public bridge, constitutes a failure by the city to discharge its duty to so use its property as to do no unnecessary damage to others, and its duty to use reasonable care to keep its bridge reasonably safe for travelers. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

9. The duty of a city to exercise reasonable care to keep its bridge or street reasonably safe for travelers is not limited to acts of commission and omission within the limits of the bridge or street, but extends to those outside such limits, that render it unsafe for travelers. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

10. Guards employed in a penal workhouse maintained by a city under statutory authority, who by statute have such powers of policemen as may be necessary for the proper performance of their duties, are, while in the discharge of such duties, performing services to the public in aid of the enforcement of law and order, and therefore cannot hold the city liable for injuries received in the performance of their duties. Bell v. Cincinnati, 23: 910, 88 N. E. 128, 80 Ohio St. 1.

11. A city which maintains a workhouse as agent of the state, under statutory authority, also acts in its governmental capacity in operating, as an adjunct of the workhouse, though 2 miles distant therefrom, a stone quarry in which are employed persons condemned to the workhouse who are required by the statutes to be kept employed at hard labor within the workhouse, or elsewhere within the corporate limits, and therefore is not liable to an employee injured while superintending the work in the quarry. Bell v. Cincinnati, 23: 910, 88 N. E. 128, 80 Ohio St. 1.

12. A municipality invested by statute with authority to establish, maintain, and regulate a penal workhouse therein, the directors of public service being invested with the management and control thereof in behalf of the corporation, acts, in so managing and controlling it, in a governmental capacity, and not in a proprietary or business relation, to the inmates or persons in its employ. Bell v. Cincinnati, 23: 910, 88 N. E. 128, 80 Ohio St. 1. (Annotated)

13. A municipal penal workhouse established as an agency of the state for the enforcement of its laws and the ordinances of the municipality, while it is not established and cannot be legally managed and maintained merely for profit, does not cease to be a public or governmental agency, so as to render the municipality liable to an employee injured therein, because some revenue is derived from the labor of the inmates, where such revenue is applied to the payment of the expenses of its maintenance and operation, as in such case the revenue is merely an incident to the main purpose. Bell v. Cincinnati, 23: 910, 88 N. E. 128, 80 Ohio St. 1.

14. Damages sustained by injuries to persons, as well as to property, are recoverable for the breach by a city of its duty so to use its property not within the limits of a bridge and street under its control as to keep the highway within the limits thereof reasonably safe for travelers. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

15. Members of a charivari party who forcibly place a bride and groom in a wagon against their will, and drive them up and down the streets, are engaged in an act of unlawful violence within the meaning of a statute making cities liable for injuries done by mobs, notwithstanding that such persons act in fun, and intend no serious harm to anyone. Cherryville v. Hawman, 23: 645, 101 Pac. 994, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

16. Municipalities are liable for damages caused by the wrongful and negligent acts and omissions of their officers and agents in the maintenance and operation of their waterworks. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563. (Annotated)

MUTUALITY.

Of contract, see Contracts, 2.

NAME.

As to tradename, see Tradename.

NATIONAL BANKS.

See Banks.

NEGLIGENCE.

Of carrier, see Carriers.

Conflict of laws as to amount of recovery in case of negligent injury, see Conflict of Laws, 5.

Damages for negligent injury, see Damages, 7-9.

Presumption of, see Evidence, 10-13.

Right to recover for injuries resulting from fright caused by, see Fright.

Of officers, see Officers.

As to proximate cause, see Proximate Cause.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Release from liability for injuries resulting from, see Release.

Of warehousemen, see Warehouseman.

Liability of manufacturer or seller of dangerous article.

1. A manufacturer of soap who sells only to the trade is not liable in tort for injury to a consumer by a needle which is in some way embedded in a cake of soap without his knowledge, which cake is sold with others in the usual way to the dealer; and it is immaterial that purity of the product is guaranteed. Hasbrouck v. Armour & Co. 23: 876, 121 N. W. 157, — Wis. —.

2. A retail vendor of soap is not liable to a consumer for an injury by a needle embedded in a cake by the manufacturer, where he did not know of its presence, which could not have been ascertained by him in the exercise of ordinary care. Hasbrouck v. Armour & Co. 23: 876, 121 N. W. 157, — Wis. —.

Dangerous premises.

Injury by fright of horse on highway by discharge of steam, see Trial, 19.

3. The owner of a factory who on his own land discharges waste steam in large quantities and with a puffing noise, at a point located near the highway and at about the height from the ground of a horse's head, in such manner as to be calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness, without regard to the presence upon the highway of horses which might be frightened thereby, may be held liable for injury to a traveler whose horse is so frightened. Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 23: 946, 84 N. E. 145, 170 Ind. 585. (Annotated)

4. The maintenance by the proprietor of a store of a well-lighted stairway leading downward from the floor to which customers are invited, guarded on all sides except where the steps meet the floor, is not negligence which will render him liable for injury to a customer who falls down the stairs. F. W. Woolworth & Co. v. Conboy, 23: 743, 170 Fed. 934, — C. C. A. —.

5. A merchant is not liable for injury to a customer who is pushed down a stairway by the violence of a crowd which is attracted to the store by a bargain sale. F. W. Woolworth & Co. v. Conboy, 23: 743, 170 Fed. 934, — C. C. A. —.

6. A coal dealer who maintains near a public street a ladder affording access to the top of a chute is not, although children are accustomed to play on it, liable for the death of a child who climbs it and is killed by a fall down the chute. Hermes v. Hatfield Coal Co. 23: 724, 120 S. W. 351, — Ky. —.

On highway.

7. Negligence on the part of the owner of a runaway team which will render him liable for its injuring a person is not established by evidence that, a few minutes before the accident, it was standing in a private lane, with a man standing at the horses' heads. Coller v. Knox, 23: 171, 71 Atl. 539, 222 Pa. 302.

Contributory.

Contributory negligence of passenger, see Carriers.

Contributory negligence of one injured while attending street fairs, see Highways, 7.

Contributory negligence of one injured by interurban train, see Interurban Railways.

Of servant, see Master and Servant, 13, 14.

Contributory negligence at railroad crossing, see Railroads, 5.

Contributory negligence as question for jury, see Trial, 7-11.

8. That one driving a horse along a highway knew of the existence of a pipe near it from which steam might be discharged in such manner as to frighten a horse does not render him negligent in attempting to drive past it, if, as he approaches it, he sees no steam escaping. Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 23: 946, 84 N. E. 145, 170 Ind. 585.

Imputed.

Contributory negligence at railroad crossing of one riding with another, see Railroads, 5.

9. The negligence of the driver of a vehicle cannot be imputed to one who has asked for and been granted a ride with him without charge or compensation. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 503.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes.

NEW TRIAL.

Nonprejudicial error in denying motion for, see Appeal and Error, 23.

NOISE.

Who may complain of noise attendant on operation of railroad, see Nuisance, 4.

NOMINAL DAMAGES.

See Damages, 1.

NONRESIDENTS.

Validity of ordinance forbidding use of unlicensed vehicles on street as against nonresidents, see License, 3.

Computation of time during which nonresident may operate automobile without license, see Time, 1.

One who has been out of the state for eighteen months, with no intention of returning, or with the intention of returning at some indefinite time in the future, as circumstances may dictate or permit, may be proceeded against as a nonresident, although he may not intend to abandon his domicile in the state. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

NOTICE.

Before forfeiture of insurance policy, see Conflict of Laws, 2.

Necessity and sufficiency of notice of injunction to render one not a party guilty of contempt in disobeying it, see Contempt, 3.

Of dangerous condition of walk as condition precedent to municipality's liability, see Highways, 8.

Notice to insurance agent as notice to company, see Insurance, 14.

Notice of servant as to vicious character of animal as notice to master, see Master and Servant, 18.

From record of deed, see Records and Recording Laws.

Imputed notice of limitation on powers of board of education, see Schools, 2.

Sufficiency of notice to put intending purchaser upon inquiry, see Trial, 4.

Sufficiency of notice in service by publication, see Writ and Process, 4, 5.

1. One who purchases land with knowledge of such facts as would put a prudent man upon inquiry, which, if prosecuted with ordinary diligence, would lead to actual notice of rights claimed adversely to his vendor, is guilty of bad faith if he neglects to make such inquiry, and is chargeable with the actual notice he would have received. Cooper v. Fleener, 23: 1180, 103 Pac. 1016, — Okla. —.

2. Notice of an order to be obeyed by a municipality served upon its trustees is sufficient notice to it. State Bd. of Health v. St. Johnsbury, 23: 766, 73 Atl. 581, — Vt. —.

NUISANCE.

Successive actions for, see Action or Suit, 2.

Place of resort where intoxicating liquors are dispensed as, see Intoxicating Liquors, 4, 5.

Pleading in action for injuries from fright of horse by nuisance near highway, see Pleading, 10.

1. That seepage from an irrigation ditch may be prevented by fluming or cementing the portions where the seepage occurs does not render the ditch, without such protection, a nuisance to neighboring property. Middlekamp v. Bessemer Irrig. Ditch Co. 23: 795, 103 Pac. 280, — Colo. —.

2. Blasting of rocks in the vicinity of another's dwelling is a nuisance rendering the one responsible therefor liable for all injuries which result therefrom. Green v. Shoemaker, 23: 667, 73 Atl. 688, — Md. —.

Remedies; who may have.

3. A private citizen cannot enjoin a prize fight which constitutes a public nuisance, unless he suffers some special injury from it. Louisville Athletic Club v. Nolan, 23: 1019, 119 S. W. 800, — Ky. —.

4. It seems that the noises attendant upon the careful and prudent operation of a railroad switch yard, which affect alike all within hearing distance thereof, cannot him by a foreign lender, so that the loss caused by his default will fall on the lender rather than on the borrower, although he had not possession of the securities when the money was paid, where he acted for the lender in negotiating the loan and collecting the interest, and the lender, with knowledge of his failure to account for collections with reasonable promptness, failed to notify the borrower not to make payments to him, but continued to permit him to make collections without objections, since the person should suffer whose negligence enabled the broker to occasion the loss. Campbell v. Gowans, 23: 414, 100 Pac. 397, — Utah, —.

3. A credit on a bill for the items of which a mechanics' lien is claimed, for the price of material returned, will not be regarded as a general payment, which a court of equity will credit on nonlienable items so as to uphold a lien for the contract price of those which are lienable, which does not exceed in amount the sum unpaid on the contract. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

PENALTY.

Distinction between liquidated damages and penalty, see Damages, 3, 4.

Effect of provision for, in case of breach of contract on right to specific performance, see Specific Performance, 1.

PERJURY.

Judgment obtained by, see Injunction, 8; Judgment, 1, 5.

PERPETUITIES.

A covenant for conveyance of the fee in a lease which runs to the lessee, his heirs and assigns, does not place the property extra commercium, and is therefore not invalidated by the statute against perpetuities, although the covenantor may not be called upon for performance until after the time limited by that statute. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

PEST HOUSE.

Injunction against sending person to, see Injunction, 2, 3.

PETITION.

Right to petition government, see Constitutional Law, 27, 28.

Nomination by petition, see Elections.

PHONOGRAPHS.

Infringement of patent on, by manufacture and sale of unpatented disc for use in, see Patents.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

Photographing and measuring of accused person, see Criminal Law, 1, 2.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION.

See Discovery and Inspection.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Free pass to physician employed by railroad, see Carriers, 19.

Combination of, to regulate prices; see Monopoly and Combinations, 6.

PLAT.

Dedication by, see Dedication, 2, 3.

PLEADING.

As to amendment of indictment, see Indictment, etc., 3.

1. That the indorsement on a renewal note set out in one count of a complaint to recover the amount due proves to be a forgery does not preclude a recovery on the original note, which is set out in another count. Farmers' Sav. Bank v. Arispe Mercantile Co. 23: 889, 117 N. W. 672, 139 Iowa, 246.

Conclusions.

2. An averment of joint placing on the market and guaranteeing the quality of an article by manufacturer and retailer is a conclusion, where the pleader has stated that it was manufactured by the one party, and sold and delivered to the other, from whom the plaintiff purchased. Hasbrouck v. Armour & Co. 23: 876, 121 N. W. 157, — Wis. —.

Amendment.

3. It is not error to permit an amendment at the trial of a complaint, which brings about no radical change of issues, without granting a continuance, and to limit the costs to be paid by the plaintiff as a condition to receiving the relief demanded. Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. 23: 296, 118 N. W. 350, 119 N. W. 289, 137 Wis. 506.

Multifariousness.

4. A bill in equity to cancel deeds to clear title from cloud, and to obtain an accounting for timber taken from the lands, is not bad for multifariousness because two tracts are involved, where the demand as to each is founded upon the same title, and the primary relief sought as to each is the same, and all the defendants are alike interested in the vital questions presented,—title, appropriateness of the remedy, and sufficiency of the bill,—and the only differences relate to the parties defendant and the subsidiary matter of accounting. Depue v. Miller, 23: 775, 64 S. E. 740, — Va. —.

Declaration or complaint.

5. The engineer's certificate of completion of the work need not be pleaded in a suit for the contract price of public work, where the statute provides that, in pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts showing such performance. City Street Improv. Co. v. Marysville, 23: 317, 101 Pac. 308, — Cal. —.

6. To entitle an assignee of a leasehold running to the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to the benefit of a covenant for conveyance of the fee, it is not necessary to set out in the bill all the assignments, from the original lessee to the present holder of the lease. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

7. To show default on the part of a mutual benefit company in failing to apply money due a member for services upon an assessment of dues, it is not sufficient to state merely refusal to make the application, but a direction, request, or other authorization to make it should be alleged. Caywood v. Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H. 23: 304, 86 N. E. 482, 171 Ind. 410.

8. To entitle one suing on a mutual benefit certificate to the benefit of a statute rendering void a provision in a policy issued by a foreign life insurance company which limits the time for bringing action on the policy to less than three years from the time of death, he must plead and prove that the insurer is a foreign company. Caywood v. Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H. 23: 304, 86 N. E. 482, 171 Ind. 410.

9. A complaint of a servant against his master for injuries received in the performance of the work because of negligence in failing to furnish sufficient help to do the work with safety is insufficient which does not allege that any particular number of men were promised or necessary for that purpose. Indianapolis Traction & T. Co. v. Kinney, 23: 711, 85 N. E. 954, 171 Ind. 612.

10. One who states in his complaint against a person operating a nuisance near a highway, for injuries caused by the frightening of his horse thereby, facts showing defendant's omission of duty to him, is not bound to characterize the thing causing the injury as a public nuisance, to render his complaint good. Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 23: 946, 84 N. E. 145, 170 Ind. 585.

11. A complaint to contest an election, under a statute providing that the election of any person to any public office may be contested when the incumbent was not eligible to the office at the time of the election, must allege and show facts which disqualify the incumbent, or person declared elected, at the time of the election. Bradfield v. Avery, 23: 1228, 102 Pac. 687, — Idaho, —.

12. The petition in a creditors' action instituted after judgment, to enforce a lien, acquired by levying an attachment upon real estate as the property of a nonresident defendant, the title to which stood in the name of another, need not aver execution returned nulla bona, it being sufficient to aver insolvency and lack of any other available assets. Ziska v. Ziska, 23: 1, 95 Pac. 254, 20 Okla. 634.

Pleas and answers.

13. All the facts essential to the existence of an estoppel must be pleaded with 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

particularity, in order that the estoppel may constitute a defense, as no intentions, are indulged in favor of such plea. Cooper v. Flesner, 23: 1180, 103 Pac. 1016, — Okla. —.

Cross bill.

14. In a suit in equity by one to recover back money lost by him to another on a gambling contract, the defendant may, by a cross-bill or a cross answer, also recover back money lost by him to plaintiff on such gambling contract. Berns v. Shaw, 23: 522, 64 S. E. 930, — W. Va. —.

Demurrer.

Presumption that decree sustaining demurrer was based on sufficient ground, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Error in sustaining general demurrer to bill in equity, see Appeal and Error, 33.

Demurrer to evidence, see Trial, 16, 17.

15. Grounds of demurrer to a bill for specific performance of a contract, that the complainant does not state such a case as would entitle him to the relief sought, that the contract is void and of no effect, and that the promise is such that it cannot be enforced, are too general to be considered by the court. Darcey v. Darcey, 23: 886, 71 Atl. 595, — R. I. —.

16. A bill in equity on behalf of the state, signed by counsel other than the attorney general, is not demurrable for lack of disclosure on its face of authority or direction from him to file the same, as such an objection must be raised by a motion to dismiss, or by plea in abatement. State v. Ehrlick, 23: 691, 64 S. E. 935, — W. Va. —.

17. The question of the unreasonableness of the amount set aside by a testator for a tomb, compared with the value of his estate, so as to come within the operation of an inheritance tax which does not apply to amounts necessary for funeral expenses, cannot be decided on demurrer, since it involves a mixed question of law and fact. Morrow v. Durant, 23: 474, 118 N. W. 781, — Iowa, —.

18. Collateral questions as to proceedings on appeal and on motions for new trial cannot be raised by demurrer to a bill to set aside a judgment on the ground that it was procured by perjury, which does not set out the facts on which such questions are based. South Haven & E. R. Co. v. Culver, 23: 564, 122 N. W. 95, — Mich. —.

19. The question of measure of damages alone cannot be raised by demurrer. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill, 23: 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —.

20. Demurring to a complaint alleging a duty on the part of a mutual benefit company to apply money due a member for services in satisfaction of an assessment of dues does not admit the duty, in the absence of any allegation of facts showing its existence. Caywood v. Supreme Lodge K. & L. of H. 23: 304, 86 N. E. 482, 171 Ind. 410.

PLUMBING.

Licensing of business of plumbing, see License, 2.

POLICE.

Embezzlement by police officer, see Embezzlement.

Special police officer as servant of railroad, see Master and Servant, 1, 19.

POLICE POWER.

See Constitutional Law, 16-20: Statutes, 1.

POSSESSION.

What sufficient to establish possession of shore property, see Waters, 1.

POSTOFFICE.

Presumption of receipt of letter sent through mail, see Evidence, 14.

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 23-34.

PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION.

See Injunction, 9.

PREMIUMS.

As to insurance premiums, see Insurance, 12, 13.

PRESCRIPTION.

Prescriptive right to water of stream, see Waters, 12.

PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 6, 7.
In general, see Evidence, 5-16.
Of abandonment of cause of action, see Limitation of Actions, 5.

PRICES.

Combination to control, see Monopoly and Combinations, 2, 4-6.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS.

Nomination by petition at, see Elections.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Right to recover from agent money paid him for his principal, see Assumpsit, 1.

As to attorneys, see Attorneys.

As to brokers, see Brokers.

Ratification of broker's contract, see Brokers, 5.

Express company as agent of owner in delivering goods to carrier, see Carriers, 12.

Burden of showing authority of agents to receive payments, see Evidence, 7.

As to insurance agent, see Insurance.
Vendee under conditional sale as agent for vendor in making improvements, see Mechanics' Liens, 4.

Notice to trustees as notice to municipality, see Notice, 2.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Authority of agent to receive payment, see Payment, 1, 2.

Service of process on traveling agent of foreign corporation, see Writ and Process, 1.

A broker may be found to be the agent of the lender in a loan transaction where the matter of attending to the execution and delivery of the securities and paying over the money was committed to him, and he was permitted to collect the interest and deliver the receipts and canceled coupons therefor. Campbell v. Gowans, 23: 414, 100 Pac. 397, — Utah, —.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

As to surety on bail bonds, see Bail and Recognizance.

Liability of sureties on bond of officer, see Bonds.

Necessity that contract of suretyship be in writing, see Contracts, 3, 5.

Estoppel of surety to set up release by extension of time, see Estoppel, 4.

Limitation of time for action by surety securing assignment of judgment against principal which he satisfies, see Limitation of Actions, 15.

Reformation of contract of suretyship, see Reformation of Instruments.

Surety's right to subrogation, see Subrogation.

1. One who signs a note which is to be held as collateral for that of another, with the understanding that he is to sustain the relation of surety to the latter note, will be discharged from liability by the extension of time to the principal debtor, without his knowledge, by a holder with notice of the facts. Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank, 23: 141, 113 S. W. 501, — Ky. —.

2. The acceptance of interest in advance is sufficient consideration for the renewal of a note, to release a surety who does not consent thereto. Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank, 23: 141, 113 S. W. 501, — Ky. —. (Annotated)

PRIOR APPROPRIATION.

See Waters, 2-5, 7.

PRIORITY.

Between receiver and other claimants of property, see Receivers, 2.

PRIZE FIGHT.

Right of private citizen to enjoin, see Nuisance, 3.

PROBATE.

Of will, see Wills, 3.

PROCESS.

See Writ and Process.

PROFITS.

Recovery of, on infringement of trademark, see Damages, 12-15, 17-19.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

1. The proximate cause of an injury is the primary moving cause, without which it would not be inflicted, and which, in the natural and probable sequences of events, without the intervention of any new and independent cause, produces the injury. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

2. The intervening cause which will relieve of liability for an injury is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed, and which could not have been reasonably anticipated. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

3. The negligence of a gas company in maintaining in a public highway a leaky gate valve in its main, inclosed by a cracked and decayed box, and not the act of a four-year-old boy in throwing a match through a crack into the box, is the cause of an explosion of the gas to the injury of a person in the highway. United States Natural Gas Co. v. Hicks, 23: 249, 119 S. W. 166, — Ky. — (Annotated)

Of injury to servant.

4. The negligence of a railroad company in permitting the drawheads of cars to become defective, so as to allow too much space or play between the cars, is not the proximate cause of injury to the foot of an employee which is caught between them by the negligent starting of the train while he is attempting to make his way along it, for which purpose he steps upon the drawheads. McGrory v. Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co. 23: 301, 118 S. W. 710, — Ark. —

Of damage by fright.

5. The blast of a whistle which frightens horses on a public bridge, causing them to run away, during which running the tugs come unhooked, the tongue slips from the yoke, falls, and breaks, the wagon crashes against the railing, and the occupants are thrown to the ground and injured, is the proximate cause of the injuries; and the subsequent events preceding the injuries are dependent upon and caused by it. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

PUBLICATION.

Service by, see Writ and Process, 2-7.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Subdividing private property for purpose of assessment as wrongful taking of property, see Constitutional Law, 12.

Liability for preliminary expenses of organizing drainage districts, see Drainage Districts.

Estoppel to contest contractor's right to contract price, see Estoppel, 1.

Necessity of pleading engineer's certificate of completion of work in suit for contract price, see Pleading, 5.

PUBLIC POLICY.

See Contracts.

PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY.

See Waters, 13, 14.

PUBLIC MONEY.

A statute directing the payment to a wife of a fine imposed upon her husband for abandoning her violates a constitutional provision that no appropriation for private or individual purposes shall be made. Ex parte Smythe, 23: 854, 120 S. W. 200, — Tex. Crim. App. —.

PULLMAN PORTER.

Right of passenger to rely on, for assistance, see Carriers, 4.

Liability of railroad for negligence of, in failing to awake passenger, see Carriers, 7.

Judicial notice of authority of, see Evidence, 2.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

See Damages.

RAILROAD RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

The words "physical inability to work" in the regulations of a railway relief department in which it is provided that "disability shall mean physical inability to work," mean inability to perform such labor as the injured member was engaged in at the time of his injury, or similar labor which will enable him to earn wages equally remunerative. Keith v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 352, 116 N. W. 957, 82 Neb. 12.

RAILROADS.

Disturbing religious meetings by operation of, see Appeal and Error, 13; Eminent Domain.

Statute making it a misdemeanor to get on train or car while in motion, see Carriers, 18.

Applying different rule of liability to proprietors of railroads from that applied to other classes of employers, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Conveyance to, in consideration of agreement to erect and maintain depot on land conveyed, see Covenants and Conditions, 1.

Existence of, in street as breach of covenants in deed conveying to line of street, see Covenants and Conditions, 3, 4.

Evidence of other fires in action for loss by fire set by locomotive, see Evidence, 27.

Liability for interference with extinguishment of fire, see Fires.

Subrogation of insurance company paying loss from fire set out by railroad locomotive, see Insurance, 19.

Obstruction of highway by, see Highways, 2.

As to interurban railroads, see Interurban Railways.

Duty to stop, look, and listen before crossing track of interurban road, see Interurban Railways, 2.

Negligence of person crossing track of interurban road where view is obstructed, see Interurban Railways, 1.

Liability for injury to servant, see Master and Servant.

Special police officer as servant of railroad, see Master and Servant, 1, 19.

Who may complain of operation of, as private nuisance, see Nuisance, 4.

Who must bring action against railroad for loss of insured property destroyed through its negligence, see Parties, 1.

As to railroad relief association, see Railroad Relief Associations.

Lease.

1. A contract to take and pay for wood to be cut and delivered to it passes by a lease by a railroad company which undertakes to demise, let, hire, farm out, and deliver to the lessee the franchise and property of the lessor for a term of years, and which expressly includes all lands, interest in lands, timber, timber rights, and contracts now owned by the lessor, which rights and contracts are necessary to furnish the fuel used in the locomotives on the road. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368.

2. The rule that the lessee of a railroad is not liable on the contracts of the lessor, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect, is not applicable where the lessee has taken the contract by assignment, and thus made itself primarily liable thereon. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. 23: 223, 61 S. E. 185, 147 N. C. 368.

Injury to persons on or near track.

3. One attempting to cross the tracks of a railroad outside of the limits of the highway cannot recover against the railroad company for injuries caused by collision with a train, on the theory that he was a traveler on a highway crossing. Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 23: 633, 83 N. E. 367, 197 Mass. 88.

Noises; frightening animals.

4. A railroad company is liable for the value of a horse which it frightens to death by its wrongful act, although no bodily injury is inflicted upon it. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 23: 183, 47 So. 1024, — Ala. — (Annotated)

Contributory negligence.

Negligence of passenger leaving car in crossing track, see Carriers, 1.

5. A person of years of discretion who is injured at a railroad crossing while riding with another who has full control of the driving cannot escape the charge of contributory negligence, on the theory that the negligence of the driver is not imputable to him, if there is no evidence that he made any effort to protect himself by attempting to secure observation of the rule requiring such travelers to stop, look, and listen. Cable v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co. 23: 1224, 97 Pac. 744, 50 Wash. 619.

RATES.

Statute forbidding discrimination in insurance rates, see Insurance, 13.

RATIFICATION.

Of broker's contract for sale of land, see Brokers, 5.

REAL-ESTATE BROKERS.

See Brokers.

REBATES.

Statute forbidding rebate of insurance premium, see Insurance, 13.

REBUTTAL.

Of presumption, see Evidence, 16.

RECEIVERS.

1. The receiver of an insolvent, nongovernment corporation takes the property of the company for the creditors, subject to such equities, liens, or encumbrances, whether created by operation of law or by act of the corporation, as exist against the property at the time of his appointment. Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & S. Co. 23: 1074, 94 Pac. 533, 20 Okla. 427.

2. A receiver's right and title to the possession of the property of an insolvent, nongovernment corporation vest from the date of the original order for his appointment, although the proceedings may not be perfected until a later date, and are superior to those of a judgment creditor who levies upon the property under his judgment during the interval between such original order and the time of perfecting the appointment. Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & S. Co. 23: 1074, 94 Pac. 533, 20 Okla. 427.

3. Failure to comply with the law as to the recording of chattel mortgages in case of notes reserving title to the property for the purchase price of which they were given, and which it is claimed were treated by the holder as chattel mortgages in proceedings for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property of the debtor, will not postpone the lien of the holder to that of a judgment creditor of the debtor, whose lien is subsequent in time to the notes, but which he claims should be given precedence because by failing to file the notes the holder had lost his place of vantage, where the lien of the judgment creditor came into existence after the property passed into the hands of the receiver; since, admitting that the notes are to be treated as chattel mortgages, an unrecorded chattel mortgage is good between the parties, and the possession of the receiver must be considered as the possession of the creditors, so that the passing of the property into his hands has the same effect as if the holder of the notes had himself taken possession of it. Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & S. Co. 23: 1074, 94 Pac. 533, 20 Okla. 427.

RECOGNIZANCE.

See Bail and Recognizance.

RECORDING LAWS.

See Records and Recording Laws.

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.

Record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 3, 4.

Liability of recorder for negligent failure to record mortgage, see Evidence, 36.

Liability of registrar of deeds for failure to index mortgage, see Officers, 3-5.

Effect of failure to file notes which have been treated as chattel mortgages, see Receivers, 3.

The notice conveyed to subsequent purchasers of real property by the recording of a deed is not rendered ineffectual by the burning or other destruction of the records. Cooper v. Fleener, 23: 1180, 103 Pac. 1016, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

REDEMPTION.

From judicial sale, see Judicial Sale.

From mortgage, see Mortgage.

RE-ENTRY.

Necessity of, to terminate conditional estate, see Covenants and Conditions, 2.

By landlord, see Landlord and Tenant, 8.

REFERENCE.

The court cannot add interest to an amount allowed by a master in chancery upon account, where no exceptions are filed to his findings. R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amusement Park Co. 23: 620, 86 N. E. 248, 236 Ill. 452.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

A contract of suretyship which is invalid under the statute of frauds because of insufficiency of the written memorandum cannot be reformed in equity so as to insert the missing provisions and make it enforceable. Mead v. Winslow, 23: 1197, 102 Pac. 753, 53 Wash. 638.

RELEASE.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 2.

Estoppel of surety to set up, see Estoppel, 4.

Sufficiency of evidence to show fraud in obtaining, see Evidence, 34.

Of right to have mortgage debt run until maturity, see Mortgage, 2.

Of surety on note, see Principal and Surety.

1. Failure to make a preliminary offer to return the amount received under an alleged fraudulent release cannot be insisted upon as a bar to a legal action, where it appears that the tender would have been rejected. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 23: 1032, 102 Pac. 92, — Okla. —.

2. An action for personal injuries may 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

be maintained without first obtaining a decree canceling a release which had been fraudulently obtained for a grossly inadequate sum; and plaintiff is not precluded from attacking the release, when it is set up as a defense, because he has not restored or tendered back the amount received by him thereunder, where the action is between the immediate actors and the rights of third parties have not intervened. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 23: 1032, 102 Pac. 92, — Okla. —.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Operation of railroad trains disturbing religious services, see Appeal and Error, 13; Eminent Domain; Nuisance, 4.

RENEWAL.

Of note, see Bills and Notes, 4; Estoppel, 10.

RENTS.

Insurance of, see Insurance, 21, 22.

REPLEVIN.

For property sold conditionally, see Election of Remedies, 2.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT.

Guaranty of, see Constitutional Law, 26.

RESCISSION.

Of contract, see Contracts, 16.

Of sale for mistake, see Sale, 4.

Of contract for sale of real property, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2, 3.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Contract in restraint of trade, see Contracts, 11.

Combinations in restraint of trade, see Monopoly and Combinations.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 23-34.

ROBBERY.

Homicide committed in perpetration of, see Homicide, 2.

RUNAWAY.

Presumption of negligence from, see Evidence, 12.

Liability for injuries by, see Negligence, 7.

SALE.

Election of remedies by vendor in conditional sale, see Election of Remedies, 2.

Instruction as to what constitutes acceptance of goods, see Trial, 21.

Effect of seller's delay in exercising right to retake property, see Trial, 3.

Rescission of sale of real property, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2, 3.

Right of purchaser to testify as to his intent not to accept goods, see Witnesses, 2.

1. A vendor who has submitted a bid in the aggregate for a list of goods, without setting out the price of each article, on the strength of which the goods were ordered and delivered, cannot recover a greater sum than that called for by the bid, on the ground that he made a mistake in computing the various items, and for that reason submitted his bid greatly below the price for which the goods should have been sold. Tatum v. Coast Lumber Co. 23: 1109, 101 Pac. 957, — Idaho, —. (Annotated)

2. Failure of a farmer residing some miles from town to present a check which he received, after banking hours, in payment of a cash sale of wheat, until his next trip to town, between two and three weeks later, when payment was refused, does not conclusively show an intent by the seller that absolute title to the wheat should pass to the buyer upon delivery thereof, so as to bar his right to reclaim it, where the rights of innocent purchasers have not intervened. People's State Bank v. Brown, 23: 824, 103 Pac. 102, — Kan. —.

3. Where a buyer of wheat who agrees to pay cash therefor secures it without making payment promptly, the seller has a right, as against an attaching creditor, to reclaim the wheat, which is not lost by delay to assert it, unless an intention on his part is shown that the title should pass absolutely. People's State Bank v. Brown, 23: 824, 103 Pac. 102, — Kan. —.

4. The negligence and mistake of the vendor of property in computing the prices of various articles he is selling is no ground for avoidance or rescission of the contract, where the other party acted in good faith, and is free from any knowledge of the mistake and from any fraud or deception in the transaction. Tatum v. Coast Lumber Co. 23: 1109, 101 Pac. 957, — Idaho, —.

SCALES.

Power of municipality to condemn for inaccuracy, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

SCHOOLS.

Eligibility to office of county superintendent of public instruction, see Officers, 1.

1. A teacher's certificate issued under a statute empowering the state board of education to authorize the county superintendents to issue teachers' certificates to graduates of state normal schools, and to graduates of any chartered college or university having the right to grant degrees, provided that applicants for certificates shall have been successfully engaged in teaching not less than twenty-seven months, and shall present to the state board of education a certificate of graduation from a state normal school, or a literary degree from a chartered college or university,—should be issued as of the date of the application and the furnishing of admittedly sufficient proof of compliance with the statute, and relates back to the date applicant so showed himself entitled thereto. Bradfield v. Avery, 23: 1228, 102 Pac. 687, — Idaho, —, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. One entering into a contract with a board of education which attempts to bind the municipality is chargeable with knowledge of the official limitation upon the power of the members. Lawrence v. Toothaker, 23: 428, 71 Atl. 534, 75 N. H. 148.

3. Members of a board of education, who, without authority, attempt to bind the city by a contract for services on a school building, do not render themselves personally liable for the services so rendered if the facts were equally within the cognizance of the other contracting party. Lawrence v. Toothaker, 23: 428, 71 Atl. 534, 75 N. H. 148. (Annotated)

4. Members of a board of education undertaking to contract on behalf of the municipality do not impliedly guarantee that they have the requisite power, where all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case are known to the other contracting party. Lawrence v. Toothaker, 23: 428, 71 Atl. 534, 75 N. H. 148.

SEEPAGE.

From irrigation ditch, see Nuisance, 1.

SELF-DEFENSE.

As defense to civil liability for killing, see Death, 2.

Burden of establishing, see Evidence, 6.

SERVICE.

Of process, see Writ and Process.

SIGNATURE.

To will, see Wills, 1.

SILENCE.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 5-8.

SITUS.

Of debt for purpose of garnishment, see Garnishment.

Of property for purpose of taxation, see Taxes, 3, 4.

SLANDER.

See Libel and Slander.

SLEEPING CARS.

Liability of railroad for negligence of porter in failing to awake passenger, see Carriers, 7.

SOAP.

Liability for injury to purchaser by needle in, see Negligence, 1, 2.

SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

See Trial, 18-20.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Presumption that granted motion to set down for hearing on petition and answer petition to quash proceeding to compel specific performance was filed by petitioner, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Demurrer to bill for, see Pleading, 15.

1. Specific performance of a contract is not defeated by a provision for a penalty in case of its breach. Buckhout v. Witwer, 23: 506, 122 N. W. 184, — Mich. —.

Contracts as to real property.

Mutuality of contract for sale of real estate, see Contracts, 2.

Admissibility of declarations of deceased persons in action specifically to enforce contract, see Evidence, 24.

Sufficiency of service in suit for, see Writ and Process, 2, 3.

2. Persons who purchase real estate, with notice of a binding contract on the part of the grantor to convey to another, may be compelled to honor the former contract. Jasper v. Wilson, 23: 982, 94 Pac. 951, — N. M. —.

3. Although a broker for sale of real estate exceeds his authority in contracting to furnish a warranty deed and abstract of title, the grantee may waive such requirements, and enforce the contract as one providing for a bare transfer of title. Jasper v. Wilson, 23: 982, 94 Pac. 951, — N. M. —.

4. That an assignment of a leasehold running to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, with a covenant at the request of the lessee, his heirs and assigns, to convey the property to the lessee, his heirs and assigns, was made by the administrator of one of the assignees, does not deprive the one claiming under it of the right to enforce the conveyance. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

SPRING.

See Waters, 8.

STATE.

Appeal by, in criminal case, see Appeal and Error, 1.

The people may maintain a suit to restrain violation of a statute forbidding a wasteful pumping of water and a gas connected therewith from mineral wells, to the injury of the public interests. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See Contracts, 3-5.

STATUTES.

Raising question of validity of, for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Right to question validity of, in mandamus proceeding, see Mandamus.

Effect of repeal without saving clause of penal ordinance upon prior conviction under it, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

Validity.

1. Within constitutional limits, the legislature is the sole judge as to what laws shall be enacted for the protection and welfare of the people, and as to when and how the police power of the state is to be exercised. State v. Drayton, 23: 1287, 117 N. W. 768, 82 Neb. 254.

2. Provisions of a statute forbidding a landowner to pump mineral water and a gas arising therefrom from wells on his property, absolutely or to the injury of the owners of springs connected with the common reservoir, or so that the flow or quality of the water in any spring or well is diminished, which are unconstitutional, are so disconnected from a provision forbidding the collecting of the gas from the water for sale by pumping it in unnatural quantities and wasting it, to the injury of the public interests, or those of the owners of neighboring wells, that the latter provision can be upheld although the others fall. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

3. No part of a legislative act, the declared intent of which is to remove judicial and educational offices from the domain of party politics, can be enforced, where the necessary provisions for carrying into effect that purpose invade the constitutional rights of free assembly, free speech, and free election, since after eliminating the void provision, no enforceable provision expressing the legislative will remains. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

4. Where the declared intent of a legislative act is to remove the judicial and educational offices entirely from the domain of party politics, and the leading provision for carrying into effect that purpose invades the constitutional rights of free assembly and free speech by providing that candidates for such offices shall not be nominated, indorsed, recommended, criticized or referred to in any manner by any political party, convention, or primary, the entire act falls, as the necessary inference is that the void part was an inducement for the passage of the act. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

5. A statute complete within itself, providing the procedure for raising the cost of the preliminary expenses of an attempt to organize a drainage district which failed, is not an amendment of the statute authorizing the organization of the district, so as to come within the operation of a constitutional requirement that no statute shall be amended by mere reference to its title. Northern P. R. Co. v. Pierce County, 23: 286, 97 Pac. 1099, 51 Wash. 12.

Repeal; amendment; revision.

Repeal; amendment; revision.
6. A statute complete within itself, providing the procedure for raising the cost of the preliminary expenses of an attempt to organize a drainage district which failed, is not an amendment of the statute authorizing the organization of the district, so as to come within the operation of a constitutional requirement that no statute shall be amended by mere reference to its title. Northern P. R. Co. v. Pierce County, 23: 286, 97 Pac. 1099, 51 Wash. 12.

STORAGE.

Of appropriated water, see Waters, 2.

STREET FAIR.

Liability for injury resulting from, see Highways, 6, 7.

STREET RAILWAYS.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Existence of, in street as breach of covenants in deed conveying to line of street, see Covenants and Conditions, 3, 4.

setting out the price of each article, on the strength of which the goods were ordered and delivered, cannot recover a greater sum than that called for by the bid, on the ground that he made a mistake in computing the various items, and for that reason submitted his bid greatly below the price for which the goods should have been sold. Tatum v. Coast Lumber Co. 25: 1109, 101 Pac. 957, — Idaho, —. (Annotated)

2. Failure of a farmer residing some miles from town to present a check which he received, after banking hours, in payment of a cash sale of wheat, until his next trip to town, between two and three weeks later, when payment was refused, does not conclusively show an intent by the seller that absolute title to the wheat should pass to the buyer upon delivery thereof, so as to bar his right to reclaim it, where the rights of innocent purchasers have not intervened. People's State Bank v. Brown, 23: 824, 103 Pac. 102, — Kan. —.

3. Where a buyer of wheat who agrees to pay cash therefor secures it without making payment promptly, the seller has a right, as against an attaching creditor, to reclaim the wheat, which is not lost by delay to assert it, unless an intention on his part is shown that the title should pass absolutely. People's State Bank v. Brown, 23: 824, 103 Pac. 102, — Kan. —.

4. The negligence and mistake of the vendor of property in computing the prices of various articles he is selling is no ground for avoidance or rescission of the contract, where the other party acted in good faith, and is free from any knowledge of the mistake and from any fraud or deception in the transaction. Tatum v. Coast Lumber Co. 23: 1109, 101 Pac. 957, — Idaho, —.

SCALES.

Power of municipality to condemn for inaccuracy, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

SCHOOLS.

Eligibility to office of county superintendent of public instruction, see Officers, 1.

1. A teacher's certificate issued under a statute empowering the state board of education to authorize the county superintendents to issue teachers' certificates to graduates of state normal schools, and to graduates of any chartered college or university having the right to grant degrees, provided that applicants for certificates shall have been successfully engaged in teaching not less than twenty-seven months, and shall present to the state board of education a certificate of graduation from a state normal school, or a literary degree from a chartered college or university,—should be issued as of the date of the application and the furnishing of admittedly sufficient proof of compliance with the statute, and relates back to the date applicant so showed himself entitled thereto. Bradfield v. Avery, 23: 1228, 102 Pac. 687, — Idaho, —, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. One entering into a contract with a board of education which attempts to bind the municipality is chargeable with knowledge of the official limitation upon the power of the members. Lawrence v. Toothaker, 23: 428, 71 Atl. 534, 75 N. H. 148.

3. Members of a board of education, who, without authority, attempt to bind the city by a contract for services on a school building, do not render themselves personally liable for the services so rendered if the facts were equally within the cognizance of the other contracting party. Lawrence v. Toothaker, 23: 428, 71 Atl. 534, 75 N. H. 148. (Annotated)

4. Members of a board of education undertaking to contract on behalf of the municipality do not impliedly guarantee that they have the requisite power, where all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case are known to the other contracting party. Lawrence v. Toothaker, 23: 428, 71 Atl. 534, 75 N. H. 148.

SEEPAGE.

From irrigation ditch, see Nuisance, 1.

SELF-DEFENSE.

As defense to civil liability for killing, see Death, 2.

Burden of establishing, see Evidence, 6.

SERVICE.

Of process, see Writ and Process.

SIGNATURE.

To will, see Wills, 1.

SILENCE.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 5-8.

SITUS.

Of debt for purpose of garnishment, see Garnishment.

Of property for purpose of taxation, see Taxes, 3, 4.

SLANDER.

See Libel and Slander.

SLEEPING CARS.

Liability of railroad for negligence of porter in failing to awake passenger, see Carriers, 7.

SOAP.

Liability for injury to purchaser by needle in, see Negligence, 1, 2.

SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

See Trial, 18-20.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Presumption that granted motion to set down for hearing on petition and answer petition to quash proceeding to compel specific performance was filed by petitioner, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Demurrer to bill for, see Pleading, 15.

1. Specific performance of a contract is not defeated by a provision for a penalty in case of its breach. Buckhout v. Witwer, 23: 506, 122 N. W. 184, — Mich. —.

Contracts as to real property.

Mutuality of contract for sale of real estate, see Contracts, 2.

Admissibility of declarations of deceased persons in action specifically to enforce contract, see Evidence, 24.

Sufficiency of service in suit for, see Writ and Process, 2, 3.

2. Persons who purchase real estate, with notice of a binding contract on the part of the grantor to convey to another, may be compelled to honor the former contract. Jasper v. Wilson, 23: 982, 94 Pac. 951, — N. M. —.

3. Although a broker for sale of real estate exceeds his authority in contracting to furnish a warranty deed and abstract of title, the grantees may waive such requirements, and enforce the contract as one providing for a bare transfer of title. Jasper v. Wilson, 23: 982, 94 Pac. 951, — N. M. —.

4. That an assignment of a leasehold running to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, with a covenant at the request of the lessee, his heirs and assigns, to convey the property to the lessee, his heirs and assigns, was made by the administrator of one of the assignees, does not deprive the one claiming under it of the right to enforce the conveyance. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

SPRING.

See Waters, 8.

STATE.

Appeal by, in criminal case, see Appeal and Error, 1.

The people may maintain a suit to restrain violation of a statute forbidding a wasteful pumping of water and a gas connected therewith from mineral wells, to the injury of the public interests. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See Contracts, 3-5.

STATUTES.

Raising question of validity of, for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Right to question validity of, in mandamus proceeding, see Mandamus.

Effect of repeal without saving clause of penal ordinance upon prior conviction under it, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

Validity.

1. Within constitutional limits, the legislature is the sole judge as to what laws shall be enacted for the protection and welfare of the people, and as to when and how the police power of the state is to be exercised. State v. Drayton, 23: 1287, 117 N. W. 768, 82 Neb. 254.

2. Provisions of a statute forbidding a landowner to pump mineral water and a gas arising therefrom from wells on his property, absolutely or to the injury of the owners of springs connected with the common reservoir, or so that the flow or quality of the water in any spring or well is diminished, which are unconstitutional, are so disconnected from a provision forbidding the collecting of the gas from the water for sale by pumping it in unnatural quantities and wasting it, to the injury of the public interests, or those of the owners of neighboring wells, that the latter provision can be upheld although the others fall. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

3. No part of a legislative act, the declared intent of which is to remove judicial and educational offices from the domain of party politics, can be enforced, where the necessary provisions for carrying into effect that purpose invade the constitutional rights of free assembly, free speech, and free election, since after eliminating the void provision, no enforceable provision expressing the legislative will remains. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

4. Where the declared intent of a legislative act is to remove the judicial and educational offices entirely from the domain of party politics, and the leading provision for carrying into effect that purpose invades the constitutional rights of free assembly and free speech by providing that candidates for such offices shall not be nominated, indorsed, recommended, criticized or referred to in any manner by any political party, convention, or primary, the entire act falls, as the necessary inference is that the void part was an inducement for the passage of the act. State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin, 23: 839, 122 N. W. 473, — Neb. —.

5. A statute complete within itself, providing the procedure for raising the cost of the preliminary expenses of an attempt to organize a drainage district which failed, is not an amendment of the statute authorizing the organization of the district, so as to come within the operation of a constitutional requirement that no statute shall be amended by mere reference to its title. Northern P. R. Co. v. Pierce County, 23: 286, 97 Pac. 1099, 51 Wash. 12.

Repeal; amendment; revision.

6. A statute complete within itself, providing the procedure for raising the cost of the preliminary expenses of an attempt to organize a drainage district which failed, is not an amendment of the statute authorizing the organization of the district, so as to come within the operation of a constitutional requirement that no statute shall be amended by mere reference to its title. Northern P. R. Co. v. Pierce County, 23: 286, 97 Pac. 1099, 51 Wash. 12.

STORAGE.

Of appropriated water, see Waters, 2.

STREET FAIR.

Liability for injury resulting from, see Highways, 6, 7.

STREET RAILWAYS.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Existence of, in street as breach of covenants in deed conveying to line of street, see Covenants and Conditions, 3, 4.

Presumption of negligence from injury to pedestrian by street car, see Evidence, 10.

As to interurban railways, see Interurban Railways.

Contributory negligence of pedestrian struck by car, see Trial, 11.

STRIKE.

Validity of, see Conspiracy.

Right of labor union to impose fine on members to coerce them to join strike, see Labor Organizations.

SUBROGATION.

Of insurance company, see Insurance, 19.

1. A surety who has satisfied a judgment against his principal may issue execution for the amount so paid, with interest, and is not limited to the amount specified in the judgment, under a statute giving a surety who satisfies a judgment against his principal the right to control the judgment so far as to obtain satisfaction for the whole amount paid by him, with interest. Patton v. Smith, 23: 1124, 114 S. W. 315, — Ky. —.

2. A surety advancing money to his principal to redeem from a statutory foreclosure sale of property deeded in trust to secure the sum for the payment of which he is surety is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditor, where the statute authorizes the mortgagor to redeem the land sold free from the mortgage lien. Handford v. Edwards, 23: 190, 115 S. W. 1143, 89 Ark. 151. (Annotated)

SUBTERRANEAN WATERS.

See Waters, 8-11.

SUCCESSION TAX.

See Taxes, 5-9.

SUNDAY.

Exclusion of, in computation of time, see Time, 2.

SUPPORT.

Rights of creditors of one whose support is made a lien upon property devised, see Creditors' Bill.

Creation by will of trust for, see Trusts.

Effect of reservation of lien for, in deed made in consideration of covenant to support and grantor's right to rescind, see Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

SURFACE SUPPORT.

Limitation of time for bringing action for injury to, see Limitation of Actions, 12.

TALKING MACHINES.

Infringement of patent on, by manufacture and sale of unpatented disc for use in, see Patents.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TAXES.

Adverse possession of land under tax deed based on void assessment, see Adverse Possession, 2.

Dedication to public by failing to list property for taxation, see Dedication, 1.

Authority to levy tax to pay preliminary expenses of organizing drainage district, see Drainage Districts, 1.

Equality; uniformity.

1. The constitutional requirement of uniformity of taxation is not violated by a statute permitting the deduction of debts from credits in listing personal property for taxation. Stumpf v. Storz, 23: 152, 120 N. W. 618, 156 Mich. 228.

Double taxation.

2. The taxation of mortgages and also of the real estate bound by them to its full value is not invalid as double taxation. Stumpf v. Storz, 23: 152, 120 N. W. 618, 156 Mich. 228. (Annotated)

Situs.

3. Stocks in a foreign corporation, owned by a foreign testator, are not taxable in the hands of a resident executor, who was appointed by the courts of testator's domicile, and has not qualified under the laws of his residence, nor physically removed the stocks to his domicile. Com. v. Peebles, 23: 1130, 119 S. W. 774, — Ky. —.

4. A statute requiring an executor to list for taxation property belonging to the estate applies only to an executor who has qualified in the state, and has within it property in his custody which he is investing or using so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the state for purposes of taxation. Com. v. Peebles, 23: 1130, 119 S. W. 774, — Ky. —.

Succession tax.

Question whether money set aside by testator for tomb is subject to, see Pleading, 17.

Applicability of general tax exemptions to inheritance or succession taxes, see Taxes, 8, 9.

5. A statutory provision that an inheritance tax shall be assessed against property of every kind which becomes subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of the state for distribution will not be construed to apply to the property so as to impose the tax on money reserved by testator for the erection of a tomb, since such construction would render the statute unconstitutional; but it will be held to designate the property to which the tax shall apply when passing by will or the inheritance laws. Morrow v. Durant, 23: 474, 118 N. W. 781, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

6. The question whether or not an inheritance tax should be levied upon the amount reserved by testator for a tomb is not, where the estate, as a whole, is above the excepted class, governed by a statutory provision that all property shall be subject to a tax if over the sum of $1,000 after the payment of all debts, and including in the debts a reasonable sum for funeral expenses. Morrow v. Durant, 23: 474, 118 N. W. 781, — Iowa, —.

7. The state cannot, in the absence of fraud or collusion, question the reasonableness of the amount set apart by testator for a tomb for himself, for the purpose of throwing the portion held to be unreasonable into the residuary clause of the will, which will cause it to pass to collateral relatives, and render it subject to the inheritance tax. Morrow v. Durant, 23: 474, 118 N. W. 781, — Iowa, —.

8. A statute enacted for the collection of an inheritance tax, which provides that all property which shall pass by will or the intestate laws shall be subject to a tax, operates upon the interests to which parties succeed upon the death of the former owner, and any statutory tax exemptions to which they are entitled are therefore applicable. Re Macky, 23: 1207, 102 Pac. 1075, — Colo. —. (Annotated)

9. A hospital building and home for poor widows and orphan children who are sick and not able to care for themselves, maintained by a city or county, and a university maintained by the state, are impliedly exempt from taxation, and this exemption extends to inheritance taxes on property received by will. Re Macky, 23: 1207, 102 Pac. 1075, — Colo. —.

TEACHERS.

See Schools.

TELEGRAPHS.

As to excessive damages for mental suffering through delay in delivery of telegram, see Appeal and Error, 34.

Conflict of laws as to liability for failure to transmit telegram, see Conflict of Laws, 8, 9.

Evidence in action for failure promptly to deliver telegram, see Evidence, 30.

Directing verdict in action for delay in delivering telegram, see Trial, 13.

TELEPHONES.

A telephone company which has established no rules as to abuse by patrons of the privileges of the service cannot discontinue the service of a customer two months after he has been warned for using profane and indecent language over the line and interfering with its use by other patrons, where he heeded the warning, and his misconduct ceased from that time. Huffman v. Marcy Mut. Teleph. Co. 23: 1010, 121 N. W. 1033, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

TENDER.

Effect of tender, before maturity, of principal and interest on mortgage, see Mortgage, 1.

Necessity of tendering back consideration of release before repudiating, see Release.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TIMBER.

Assignment of contract to take and pay for wood to be cut and delivered, see Assignment, 1; Railroads, 1.

TIME.

1. In computing the time during which a nonresident is permitted to operate his automobile without a license, on the highways of the state, after entering it, the days on which he runs the machine across the boundary into other states, returning the same day, and those in which the machine is in the repair shop, cannot be excluded. Dudley v. Northampton Street R. Co. 23: 561, 89 N. E. 25, 202 Mass. 443.

2. In computing the days of grace allowed in an insurance policy for payments after the date specified in the policy, in case such date falls on Sunday, so that, by law, payment can be made the following day, the time begins to run on Sunday, and not on the day following. Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Wimberly, 23: 759, 112 S. W. 1038, — Tex. —. (Annotated)

TOBACCO.

Forbidding sale or giving away of cigarette paper, see Cigarettes; Commerce, 1.

TOMB.

Succession tax on money reserved by testator for erection of tomb, see Taxes, 5-7.

TRADEMARK.

Expiration of license to use trademark in connection with name as termination of right to use name, see Tradename.

1. That a seller of shoes is not the manufacturer of them does not prevent his obtaining a valid trademark in connection with them, if he has them manufactured to his order, controlling the design, materials, and workmanship. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —. Infringement.

Jurisdiction of state court of suit for infringement, see Courts, 3.

Damages for infringement of, see Damages, 12-19.

2. One who, by the consent and aid of the owner of a trademark, acquires the reputation of being the maker of goods sold under it, cannot make use of it on his goods without the consent of the owner. Winchell & Co. v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 180, — Mass. —.

Defenses.

Sufficiency of evidence in obtaining, see

3. One who, doing assumed name, acquires a name, may license or use mark in connection with it does not thereby lose it its use again upon termination of the license. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

4. The mere fact that a jobber of shoes who has them manufactured under his direction, for his trade, uses a letter head in which he describes himself as a manufacturer of shoes, is not such fraud as will destroy his right to equitable relief against one who infringes his trademark. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —. (Annotated)

5. One who makes use of another's trademark after notice and warning not to do so cannot be said to be free from wrongful intent, so as to avoid liability for profits, although he acted under advice of counsel, if he did not acquaint the counsel with all the facts material to the question. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

6. A delay of two years in seeking to recover profits due to the infringement of a trademark, which is caused in part by negotiations for a settlement, will not bar a right to maintain the suit, at least, where defendants act under express notice that they would be held accountable for infringement of plaintiff's rights. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

TRADENAME.

The expiration of a license to use a trademark which has been acquired for use in connection with a business name will terminate the right to use the name in connection with which it was used. Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. 23: 1150, 89 N. E. 180, — Mass. —.

TRESPASS.

Injunction against, see Injunction, 1, 4.

1. A servant occupying a house upon his master's premises in connection with his services becomes a trespasser by insisting on retaining possession of the house and entering on the land after a lawful discharge by the master, although he contends that under his contract of employment he cannot be discharged during the term thereof. Mackenzie v. Minis, 23: 1003, 63 S. E. 900, 132 Ga. 323.

2. That the defendant, and not the plaintiff owner, was in actual possession of land when acts of trespass were committed, but for less than the limitation period, does not estop such owner, who has constructive possession, from maintaining trespass quare clausum fregit. Woll v. Voigt, 23: 270, 117 N. W. 608, 105 Minn. 371.

3. Where a disseisor has abandoned premises before suit, the rightful owner in possession may maintain trespass for the wrongful entry, and have damages in the nature of mesne profits. Woll v. Voigt, 23: 270, 117 N. W. 608, 105 Minn. 371. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TRIAL.

Reversible error in admission or exclusion of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 24, 25.

Review of discretion of trial court in refusing to modify findings, see Appeal and Error, 11.

Review on appeal of findings of trial judge, see Appeal and Error, 14-22.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury.

1. In an action for the alleged negligent failure of a carrier properly to load a car so that it would be reasonably safe for transportation of stock, and for alleged unreasonable delay in such transportation, where the evidence tends to establish that the shipment was materially delayed while the stock was in the carrier's possession, and that the stock was in good condition when received by the carrier, and was injured and damaged when delivered to the consignee, it is not error to submit the question of unreasonable delay to the jury. Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 23: 278, 118 N. W. 655, 82 Neb. 726.

Questions of law and fact.

2. The right of a passenger to punitive damages must be submitted to the jury, where, after having been put off the train at the wrong station, the train goes off and leaves him, notwithstanding his notice to train employees and signals from the station agent. Campbell v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co. 23: 1056, 65 S. E. 628, — S. C. —.

3. Whether a seller, by a delay of from two to three weeks in presenting a check given in payment of wheat sold and delivered under an agreement by the buyer to pay cash therefor, has indicated an intention that absolute title should pass to the buyer without payment, is a question for the jury, where it appears that the seller lived several miles from town, that the check was given after banking hours, that it was presented for payment, which was refused, upon the seller's next trip to town after obtaining it, that a short time after learning of the failure of the buyer, which occurred about one week after the giving of the check, the seller claimed ownership of the wheat, and that he continually thereafter, up to the time of bringing suit, about one month later, asserted such right. People's State Bank v. Brown, 23: 824, 103 Pac. 102, — Kan. —.

4. Whether advice to a person contemplating the purchase of certain property, that it had best be left alone, and that its purchase would mean the buying of a lawsuit, as the title of the one in possession would sometime be contested by informant's daughter-in-law, is sufficient to constitute notice under a statute providing that every person who has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to a particular fact, and who omits to make such inquiry with reasonable diligence, is deemed to have constructive notice of the fact itself,—is for the jury.

Cooper v. Flesner, 23: 1180, 103 Pac. 1016, — Okla. —.

5. The question of defendant's negligence should be submitted to the jury, where the occurrence of the accident in question is sufficient to charge him with negligence, and where fair-minded men might honestly differ as to whether he has sustained the burden of showing that the injuries sued for were not received through any fault on his part. Najarian v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 23: 751, 73 Atl. 527, — N. J. —.

6. It is only when the material facts and the rational inferences from them are so clearly established that but one finding would be sustained by the court, that the question of the negligence of the defendant is for the court. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

7. The question of the contributory negligence of an eight-year-old child in playing near a leaky gate valve in a gas main cannot be decided by the court as matter of law, although he had been warned by his parents to keep away from it. United States Natural Gas Co. v. Hicks, 23: 249, 119 S. W. 166, — Ky. —.

8. It is only when the evidence of contributory negligence is so clear that a contrary finding could not be sustained by the court, that the duty arises to instruct that the plaintiff is guilty thereof. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

9. In an action for damages caused by frightening horses on a public bridge by the blast of a municipal waterworks whistle, where the defense is contributory negligence in that plaintiff's team was so loosely hitched up that the tugs came unhooked, allowing the pole to fall to the bridge, where it caught, causing the wagon to strike the railing and the occupants to be thrown to the ground, evidence of a single witness that, several days before the accident, the same team was hitched up so loosely that the witness regarded it as negligence; and the evidence of two witnesses that, if three tugs came unhooked at once, the team could not have been properly hitched up,—is not sufficient to warrant the withdrawal of the question of contributory negligence from the jury, where it also appears by the testimony of the livery man who assisted the driver in hitching up immediately before the accident, that it was properly done, that the straps, etc., were strong, and that the tongues could not then have slipped out of the yoke. Winona v. Botzet, 23: 204, 169 Fed. 321, 94 C. C. A. 563.

10. It cannot be said, as matter of law, that a person who is injured by slipping and falling on a thin, smooth piece of ice on a municipal sidewalk, is guilty of contributory negligence, where the dangerous condition of the walk is due to the positive, negligent act of the city, and the walks elsewhere are dry, and the ice is not noticed by the person injured, even though the injury is sustained in the daytime. Tewks- 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bury v. Lincoln, 23: 282, 121 N. W. 994, — Neb. —.

11. A pedestrian struck by a street car which left the track, was not guilty of contributory negligence, as matter of law, because he was standing in the road way waiting for the car to pass, where he was far enough from the track to have been safe if the car had remained upon the track. Najarian v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 23: 751, 73 Atl. 527, — N. J. —.

Taking case from jury.

Waiver of exception to refusal to take case from jury, see Appeal and Error, 15.

12. The general affirmative charge cannot be given for defendant as to any count in the declaration which there is evidence to support. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill, 23: 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —.

13. The general affirmative charge cannot be given in favor of a telegraph company in an action for damages for failure promptly to deliver a message because the evidence shows that it was delivered for transmission before office hours of the office of destination, where the evidence also tends to show that no objection was made to receiving it at that time, and it was actually transmitted and received at such officer prior to its opening time. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill, 23: 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —.

14. The court should not direct a verdict against an issue which there is evidence to support. Suell v. Derricott, 23: 996, 49 So. 896, — Ala. —.

15. The question for the trial court in considering the direction of a verdict is whether, admitting the truth of all the evidence which has been given in favor of the party against whom the action is contemplated, together with the inferences and conclusions to be reasonably drawn therefrom, and eliminating all conflicting facts and inferences, there is enough competent evidence to sustain a verdict should the jury find in accordance therewith. Cooper v. Flesner, 23: 1180, 103 Pac. 1016, — Okla. —.

Demurrer to evidence.

16. On a demurrer to the evidence the court cannot weight conflicting evidence, but will treat that evidence as withdrawn which is most favorable to the demurrer. Ziska v. Ziska, 23: 1, 95 Pac. 254, 20 Okla. 634.

17. A demurrer to the evidence admits all the facts which the evidence in the slightest degree tends to prove, and all the inferences and conclusions which may be reasonably and logically drawn therefrom. Ziska v. Ziska, 23: 1, 95 Pac. 254, 20 Okla. 634.

Special interrogatories.

18. There is no error in refusing to compel a definite answer to an interrogatory, if the answer most favorable to the losing party that could have been returned would not have controlled the general verdict. Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 23: 946, 84 N. E. 145, 170 Ind. 585.

19. Refusal by the court to require, in an action by one injured while driving along a highway, against a factory owner who discharged steam from a vent in such manner as to frighten the horse, a definite answer to an interrogatory as to whether or not a passenger offered to help hold the horse, is not error, since that fact is immaterial to plaintiff's right to recover. Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 23: 946, 84 N. E. 145, 170 Ind. 585.

20. Interrogatories to the jury which call for evidence, and not material facts, are properly refused. Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page, 23: 946, 84 N. E. 145, 170 Ind. 585.

Instructions.

Reversible error in giving or refusal of instructions, see Appeal and Error, 27.

Reversible error in instructions, see Appeal and Error, 28.

21. When recovery for the purchase price of goods depends upon their having been accepted by the purchaser, and the evidence shows that they were shipped to him, and that he paid the freight both ways, and reshipped them to the seller, he is entitled to have the jury instructed that, to render him liable, he must have intended to receive the goods and accept them as owner. Jarrell v. Young, Smyth, Field Co. 23: 367, 68 Atl. 50, 105 Md. 280.

22. To aid the jury in reaching a conclusion in a murder case, the judge cannot instruct them as to the disposition which will be made of accused if he is found to be insane. State v. Barnes, 23: 932, 103 Pac. 792, — Wash. —.

23. In criminal prosecutions, instructions upon the credibility of witnesses should apply alike to all the witnesses, whether they are for the prosecution or for the defense. Fletcher v. State, 23: 581, 101 Pac. 599, — Okla. Crim. App. —.

24. It is error for a trial judge to single out the defendant personally, and instruct the jury upon the credibility of his evidence. Fletcher v. State, 23: 581, 101 Pac. 599, — Okla. Crim. App. —.

25. In an action under a statute making cities liable for injuries done by mobs, an instruction that "a mob is an unorganized assemblage of many persons intent on unlawful violence, either to persons or property," is not erroneous because it makes no reference to a determination on the part of those composing the assemblage to resist opposition. Cherryvale v. Hawman, 23: 645, 101 Pac. 994, — Kan. —.

Verdict.

Review on appeal of verdict of jury, see Appeal and Error, 16, 17.

When verdict will be set aside because of excessive damages, see Appeal and Error, 34.

26. A verdict is not vitiated by the fact that the jurors agreed among themselves to 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

render a quotient verdict, if they do not in fact arrive at their verdict in that manner. Western U. Tele. Co. v. Hill, 23: 648, 50 So. 248, — Ala. —.

TROVER.

Damages for conversion, see Damages, 10, 21.

1. The sale of a portion of a stock of goods for which, on becoming indebted to a wholesaler, the retailer thereof executed a note secured by a chattel mortgage, with a contemporaneous written agreement under which he and his creditor entered jointly into possession of the stock for the purpose of selling it at retail to liquidate the debt, at prices less than its value, or the negligent use of the unsold portion by such creditor while so in possession, or the unauthorized exclusion of the debtor from the store except during business hours, when he returned and assisted in conducting the business under the contract,—does not constitute a cause of action for conversion, but one for breach of contract. Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch, 23: 573, 99 Pac. 1089, — Okla. —. (Annotated.)

2. A creditor who takes exclusive possession of a stock of goods upon which the debtor has executed a mortgage to secure the debt, with a contemporaneous written agreement for joint possession for the purpose of selling them to liquidate the debt, is guilty of conversion, where the possession is not justified by any contingency provided for in the mortgage, and is taken over the protest of the debtor. Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch, 23: 573, 99 Pac. 1089, — Okla. —.

3. Conversion is any distinct act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property, in denial of or inconsistent with his rights therein. Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch, 23: 573, 99 Pac. 1089, — Okla. —.

TRUST DEED.

See Mortgages.

TRUSTS.

No trust, but merely a personal liability of the children, is created by a will directing them to provide testator's husband with necessities and take good care of him the remainder of his life, and making such support a lien on property devised to them. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Crist, 23: 526, 118 N. W. 394, — Iowa, —.

UNDERTAKERS.

Constitutionality of regulation of business of, see Constitutional Law, 4, 13, 19.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Prohibiting use and sale of one's property for purpose of destroying business of competitor, see Constitutional Law, 15, 17.

UNIFORMITY.

Of taxation, see Taxes, 1.

UNION LABOR.

Discrimination by municipality in favor of, see Contracts, 14; Municipal Corporations, 1, 4, 5; Parties, 3.

USURY.

When limitation period begins to run against right to recover penalty for taking of usury by national bank, see Limitation of Actions, 10.

VEHICLES.

Validity of ordinance forbidding use of unlicensed vehicles on street as against nonresidents, see License, 3.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Sale of property by broker, see Brokers, 1-5.

Sufficiency of evidence to show inability of vendor to respond in damages for breach of covenant, see Evidence, 36.

Power of vendee to subject owner's interest to mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, 4, 5.

Knowledge by vendee of facts sufficient to put on inquiry, see Notice, 1.

Liability of registrar of deeds for failure to index mortgage, see Officers, 3-5.

Specific performance of contract to convey property, see Specific Performance, 2-4.

Sufficiency of notice to put intending purchaser upon inquiry, see Trial, 4.

1. An action for deceit will not lie against one who, when pointing out the true boundaries of a tract of land he is about to sell, fraudulently overstates its area, there being no trust relation between the parties, if he does not dissuade full examination and measurement, and the estate is not so extensive or of such character as to be reasonably incapable of inspection and estimate. Mabardy v. McHugh, 23: 487, 88 N. E. 894, 202 Mass. 148. (Annotated)

2. Equity will not, at the suit of a vendor, set aside or rescind in its entirety an executed contract of sale of several lots of land because the vendor had no title to one of the lots conveyed, where no question of identity of the subject-matter of the contract is involved. Dorr v. Midelburg, 23: 987, 65 S. E. 97, — W. Va. —.

2a. On failure of the vendor's title to one of several lots conveyed, the vendee may elect to affirm the contract as to the lots to which the vendor had title, and sue to recover an equitable proportion of the purchase money on account of the lot to which he had no title. Dorr v. Midelburg, 23: 987, 65 S. E. 97, — W. Va. —.

3. Neither the reservation of a lien for maintenance and support, in a deed of conveyance made in consideration of a covenant to support and maintain the grantor, nor the insertion therein of a clause giving him a right to re-enter and use and occupy 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the land during his life, in case of nonperformance of the covenant, extinguishes, cuts off, or prevents right of rescission in the grantor in the event of failure of the grantee to perform the covenant. White v. Bailey, 23: 232, 64 S. E. 1019, — W. Va. —.

VERDICT.

See Trial, 26.

VERIFICATION.

Of indictment, see Indictment, etc., 3.

VESTED RIGHTS.

See Constitutional Law, 1.

VICE PRINCIPAL.

Injury to vice principal by fellow servant, see Master and Servant, 15.

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE.

Infringement of patent on, by manufacture and sale of unpatented disc for use in, see Patents.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See Elections.

WAGES.

Validity of strike to enforce demand for increase in, see Conspiracy.

WAIVER.

Of constitutional question by appealing to intermediate court, see Appeal and Error, 10.

Of exception to refusal to take case from jury, see Appeal and Error, 15.

By insurer, see Insurance, 14, 15.

Of right to regain leased property, see Landlord and Tenant, 8.

Of real estate broker's agreement to furnish warranty deed and abstract of title, see Specific Performance, 3.

WAREHOUSEMEN.

1. The owner of a warehouse for the storage of cotton, situated adjacent to a railway track, may be found negligent in permitting cracks in the building through which sparks might reach the cotton, and in keeping in the building large quantities of loose cotton, through which fire would spread rapidly, in close proximity to the property of the bailor. Gulf Compress Co. v. Harrington, 23: 1205, 119 S. W. 249, 90 Ark. 256.

2. A provision in receipts issued by a warehouseman for property stored with him, that he is not responsible for loss by fire, does not include fire due to his own negligence. Gulf Compress Co. v. Harrington, 23: 1205, 119 S. W. 249, 90 Ark. 256.

(Annotated)

WARNING.

Duty to warn servant, see Master and Servant, 5, 6.

WARRANTIES.

In insurance policy, see Insurance.

WASTE.

Statute forbidding waste of mineral waters and gas, see Injunction, 5, 6; Parties, 1, 2; Waters, 10, 11.

WATERS.

Successive suits for nuisance caused by seepage from irrigation ditch, see Action or Suit, 2.

Time within which action for injuries to land by seepage from irrigation ditch must be begun, see Limitation of Actions, 13.

Seepage from irrigation ditch as nuisance, see Nuisance, 1.

Rights as between public and individuals.

Adverse use by public of strip of lake shore, see Adverse Possession, 1.

Dedication of shore property, see Dedication, 1.

1. Possession of shore property is established by evidence of the exercise over it of such acts of ownership as might reasonably be expected in view of the nature and situation of the premises. Poole v. Lake Forest, 23: 809, 87 N. E. 320, 238 Ill. 305.

Prior appropriation.

Prescriptive right to water as against prior appropriators, see infra, 12.

Burden of showing abandonment of water, see Evidence, 15, 16.

2. One who brings water into a watershed for his own use, after another has made an appropriation from the stream flowing therein, may impound the overflow or waste upon his own land for use on other land, although it is thereby prevented from finding its way into the stream to the benefit of the prior appropriator. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. — (Annotated)

3. An owner of water may use the bed of an existing water course to convey it to the place where he intends to use it, without losing his right to it. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

4. One who brings water onto his land for purposes of irrigation cannot, in reclaiming the surplus, cut off or dry up any of the original sources and springs tributary to the stream draining the watershed, the waters of which have been appropriated by a prior appropriator. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

5. One who turns water into a stream for purposes of transportation can take no more out than he puts in, making due allowance for loss by natural waste and evaporation. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

6. A public-service corporation which has acquired the right to take water from a common basin for public use, by means of artesian wells, may change the place of diversion within the basin so long as it takes no more water than the amount to which it has acquired the right. Barton v. Riverside Water Co. 23: 331, 101 Pac. 790, — Cal. —.

7. To effect an abandonment of water brought upon a tract of land for purposes of irrigation, intent to abandon, and an actual relinquishment, must concur. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

Subterranean waters; springs.

Refusal of injunction against taking by public service corporation of subterranean waters, see Estoppel, 8.

Statute forbidding pumping of mineral water and gas from common reservoir, see Constitutional Law, 7; Injunction, 5, 6; Parties, 2; State; Statutes, 2.

8. A statutory provision that the person on whose lands spring water first rises shall have a prior right to it, if capable of being used upon his lands, does not apply to springs which form the fountain heads of living water courses. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

9. One who, by long-continued use by means of cuts and trenches, acquires a right to take water from a saturated stratum where the water of a subterranean basin flows therefrom, may, in seasons of drought, as against persons having rights subsequently acquired, sink wells in the stratum, and pump water therefrom, so long as he takes no more than the quantity of water to which he is entitled. Barton v. Riverside Water Co. 23: 331, 101 Pac. 790, — Cal. — (Annotated)

10. A landowner cannot constitutionally be forbidden by the legislature from pumping water or gas arising therefrom from wells located on his property, which reach a common reservoir, absolutely or merely because he thereby interferes with the flow of water from his neighbor's well. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

11. A landowner may constitutionally be forbidden by the legislature to pump from wells located on his property mineral water from a common reservoir reached thereby, for the purpose of securing gas arising therefrom for sale, and to waste the water to the injury of the interests of the public and of the owners of springs on neighboring lands. Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 23: 436, 87 N. E. 504, 194 N. Y. 326.

(Annotated)

Prescription.

12. No prescriptive right to water in a stream can be secured against a prior appropriator so long as the supply is adequate for both uses. Miller v. Wheeler, 23: 1065, 103 Pac. 641, — Wash. —.

Water supply.

Forbidding use of polluted water supply for drinking purposes, see Constitutional Law, 10; Courts, 2; Parties, 4-6.

Liability of municipality for fright of horse by blowing of whistle by waterworks employee, see Municipal Corporations, 7, 8.

Liability of city for negligence of officers in operation of waterworks, see Municipal Corporations, 16.

Right of public service corporation to change point of diversion, see Waters, 6.

13. Under a statute providing for the acquirement and ownership of waterworks by cities, and authorizing the enactment of ordinances necessary for the control, operation, and maintenance thereof, power is delegated to make by ordinance every necessary and reasonable regulation, provided such regulation be not in derogation of the laws of the state or subversive of the property rights of the inhabitants. Cooper v. Goodland, 23: 410, 102 Pac. 244, — Kan. —.

14. An ordinance of a city owning and operating waterworks, which prohibits consumers from taking from its mains any water except such as shall have been measured by means of a water meter, and which provides that meters of the kind and make ordered by the city shall be furnished and installed, or the expense thereof be borne by the consumers individually; and which also reserves to the city the right to stop the supply of water for any violation of the regulations,—is not void for unreasonableness. Cooper v. Goodland, 23: 410, 102 Pac. 244, — Kan. —. (Annotated)

WEAPONS.

Carrying of concealed weapons, see Concealed Weapons.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Power of municipality to condemn for inaccuracy scales in use by merchants, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

WELL.

Right to withdraw subterranean waters by means of, see Waters, 9.

WILLS.

Conflict of laws as to meaning of terms in, see Conflict of Laws, 7.

Evidence of declarations of testator as to intention, see Evidence, 23.

Succession tax on money reserved by testator for erection of tomb, see Pleading, 17; Taxes, 5-7.

Creation of trust by, see Trusts.

1. A will written upon a printed blank form and signed by the testatrix in the space therein provided for that purpose is signed at the end thereof as required by statute, notwithstanding a blank space of about 23½ inches between the last testamentary clause and the testimonium clause. Mader v. Apple, 23: 515, 89 N. E. 37, 80 Ohio St. 691. (Annotated)

Probate; contest.

2. That an unsuccessful contestant of a will had probable cause for his contest will 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

not avoid a provision in the will forfeiting the share of any beneficiary who makes any contest of the will. Re Miller, 23: 868, 103 Pac. 842, — Cal. —.

3. A probate court cannot refuse the probate of a will merely because all the parties interested in it have entered into a stipulation that the testator was of unsound mind. Re Dardis, 23: 783, 115 N. W. 332, 135 Wis. 457. (Annotated)

Devise and legacy.

4. Money set apart by testator for a monument to his memory cannot be expended by the executors in the construction of a memorial building to be devoted to the purpose of a free public library. Fancher v. Fancher, 23: 944, 103 Pac. 206, — Cal. —.

5. A devise by implication in fee in favor of the grandchild, but not in favor of the daughter, exists in a will in which testator creates an estate in favor of his daughter for life, free from the control or debts of her husband, he to have no interest at her death, or by inheritance through their children, and provides that in case the daughter should die without children, or a child should die before marrying or becoming of age, then the property should go to other persons mentioned. Ball v. Phelan, 23: 895, 49 So. 956, — Miss. —.

6. A devise by implication to children on arriving at age or marriage may be maintained, although there is nothing in the will to show any present interest devised to them during minority. Ball v. Phelan, 23: 895, 49 So. 956, — Miss. —.

WITNESSES.

Review of refusal of trial judge to permit witness to testify in narrative form, see Appeal and Error, 12.

Contempt by, see Contempt, 1, 6, 7.

As to depositions, see Depositions.

Review on habeas corpus of irregularities in contempt proceedings against, see Habeas Corpus.

Instructions on credibility of, see Trial, 23, 24.

1. Where the acts of one filing an addition to a municipality manifest an intent to dedicate to public use streets shown on the plat, he will not be permitted to testify that he did not intend to make the dedication. Los Angeles v. McCollum, 23: 378, 103 Pac. 914, — Cal. —. (Annotated)

2. Upon the question whether or not a buyer has received and accepted the goods so as to comply with the statute of frauds in paying the freight and reshipping them, he may be allowed to testify as to his intent. Jarrell v. Young, Smyth, Field Co. 23: 367, 66 Atl. 50, 105 Md. 280. (Annotated)

3. An adult citizen of the Empire of Japan is prima facie competent to take an oath and testify in a criminal prosecution; and if the defendant conceives that such a witness does not understand, or will not give heed to, the oath administered, he must at his peril interrogate the witness before he is sworn, or prove his incompetency by other relevant evidence. Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

(Annotated)

4. The trial judge in a criminal prosecution may, in his discretion, refuse to permit a witness to testify in narrative form, and compel an examination by questions and answers. Pumphrey v. State, 23: 1023, 122 N. W. 19, — Neb. —.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Right to have petition for dismissal because of invalid service set down for hearing on petition and answer, see Motions and Orders.

Service on corporations.

1. A mere traveling agent of a foreign corporation having no office or place of business in the state, who happens to reside there, is not within the provision of a statute that, if the defendant in any suit be a corporation, process may be served on the president, the cashier, secretary, treasurer, clerk or agent of the corporation or upon any one of its directors. Saxony Mills v. Wagner & Co. 23: 834, 47 So. 899, — Miss. —.

Service by publication.

Right of one intervening in attachment proceedings to attack validity of service of process, see Intervention, 1.

2. A notice by publication to nonresidents sufficiently identifies the land a conveyance of which is sought to be enforced where it describes the lease under which it is held by reference to the record, and the interest of the defendant in the same manner, and refers to a deed tendered for execution, and letter requesting that it be executed. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

3. Under a statute authorizing the appointment of a trustee to convey land in an action for specific performance, where the defendants are nonresidents, the proceeding is in rem, and notice may be given the nonresidents by publication. Hollander v. Central Metal & S. Co. 23: 1135, 71 Atl. 442, 109 Md. 131.

(Annotated)

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

4. In an action for attachment against a nonresident defendant whose land has been levied upon, a publication notice which fails to describe the land attached, and fails to state inferentially, or in any other manner, the nature of the judgment which will be taken, as required by a statute providing what publication notices shall contain, is void. Ballew v. Young, 23: 1084, 103 Pac. 623, — Okla. —.

5. A motion to dismiss an attachment proceeding, in which the service was by publication, and the affidavit therefor and the publication notice were so defective as to be absolutely void, made more than sixty days after the filing of the petition in the attachment proceeding, must be sustained for the reason that the action has never been legally commenced, where the statute provides that an attempt to commence an action shall be deemed equivalent to the commencement thereof if the party has faithfully endeavored to procure service, but that such attempt must be followed by the first publication or service of summons within sixty days, since, in order that such first publication shall relate back to the filing of the petition, it must be a legal publication, or one that is voidable merely, and so capable of amendment. Ballew v. Young, 23: 1084, 103 Pac. 623, — Okla. —.

6. An affidavit for service by publication which does not state directly, inferentially, or in any other way that the action brought is one of those enumerated in a statute providing in what cases service by publication may be had, is fatally defective, and service cannot be obtained thereon. Ballew v. Young, 23: 1084, 103 Pac. 623, — Okla. —.

7. An affidavit for service by publication, which states that the defendant is a nonresident of the state, and that service cannot be had upon him within the state, and which is otherwise sufficient, is not void or voidable because not stating facts showing that service could not be made by the use of due diligence. Ballew v. Young, 23: 1084, 103 Pac. 623, — Okla. —.

3 6105 063 244 649

3 6105 063 244 649

